Foure leagues from thence standeth Lunel, a famous Vniuersitie of such as applie themselves to the studie of the Law of the Israelites day and night; where that great Master Messulam of happie memorie was then, with five wise and rich ionnes, Ioseph, Isaac, Jacob, and Aharon, and 40 After the Pharisee, who being separated from the eyes of the world, studieth day and night, fasting, and perpetually abstayning from the eating of Flesh; and hee is greatly conuersant in the opinions and traditions of the ancient, and great Moses Nisus, and old Samuel, and Salomo the Priest, and Master Iudas the Physician, the sonne of Thebon a Spaniard: and there is a Synagogue, there, of three hundred Iewes, almost: but it is two miles distant from the Sea. Foure leagues from thence standeth Pothiaquiers, a great Castle, in the which are fortie Iewes almost, and a great Consistorie with Abraham the sonne of Dauid of happie fame, a friendly man, and very learned, both in disciplinary, and also in the sacred bookes, vnto whom very many resort from remote places for the learning of the Law, and being most curteously entertayned in his house, are taught: and if any want abilitie to defray their charges, hee liberally bestowed his 50 owne money for all vses; for he is very rich. There are also other learned men there, as Ioseph the sonne of Menabhem, and Benbeneseth, and Beniamin, and Abraham, and Isaac the sonne of Moses of commendable memorie. About foure leagues from thence is Nogheres the Towne, called, The Burrough of Saint Egidius, where there is an Vniuersitie of Iewes, consisting almost of an hundred Wise-men, the chiefe whereof are, Isaac the sonne of Jacob, and Abraham the sonne of Iudas, and Eliezer, and Isaac, and Moses, and Jacob the sonne of the great Master Leui of excellent memorie: this Towne is three miles distant from the Sea, and is situated neere vnto a great Riuer, called Rhodano, which runneth through all that Countrey, which is called, Prouincia: but there, is the most noble and honourable Abba the sonne of Isaac of approued memorie, made Gouvernor by the principall Lord. From thence, after I had trauelled foure leagues, 60 I came to the Citie Arelatum, where there are almost two hundred Israelites, among whom the chiefe are, Moses, Tobias, and Isaias, and Selomoh, and honourable Nathan, and Master Abba Meri a famous man. But three dayes journey from thence I was brought to Massilia, a Citie renowned for excellent and wise men, famous for two Colledges of three hundred Iewes almost most One of the Colledges lyeth neer vnto the Sea shore below, about which the other standeth, as it were a certaine Tower, seated in an higher place: and there is a great Consistorie * among them adorned with the Disciples of Wisemen, with Simon the Sonne of Antolin, and his Brother Iacob and Lebaarus, who are accounted the chiefe in the higher Colledge: but in the lower, rich Iacob Pirpsienus, and Abraham, and Mair, and his Son-in-law Isaac, and another Mair. And this Citie, for Trade of Merchandize, is very famous on the Sea shoare, from whence taking ship, in foure dayes sayling you come to Genoa, a Citie standing on the Sea-side, where there were two Iewes who were Brethren, Samuel the Sonne of Calaam, and his Brother of Sephtha a Citie of Africa, good men. But the Citie is compassed with walls, subiect to no King; but gouerned by a Magistrate, who is ordayned by the will and consent of the Citizen.

* For their Synagogue affaires and permitted government among themselves. Genoa.

- At Pisa were Moses, and Hbajm, and Ioseph with almost twentie Iewes. The Citie it selfe is not fortified with walls; and is foure miles distant from the Sea, whereunto they goe in Vessels by the Riuer which runneth through the middest of the Countrey it selfe, and entreteth into the Citie. Foure leagues from thence standeth Luca, a great Citie, where I found almost fortie Iewes; and the principall Masters amongst them, David, Samuel, and Iacob, learned men. It is fixe dayes Iourney from thence to Rome, sometimes a very great Citie, and head of the Empire of the Nations. And there were almost two hundred Iewes there, honest men, paying Tribute to no mortall man; among which, some are the Seruants of Alexander the Pope, the Supreme Prelate of all the Christian Religion. And there were very learned men there, and especially David Magnus, and Iehiel the Popes Seruant, an excellent yong man, and wise, often frequenting his house, as gouernour of the house, and all the Domestick Affaires. And he is the Nephew of Nathan, the Author of the Booke and Commentaries Aaruch: Ioab also the Sonne of Great Solomon, and Menabem are heads of the Assembly, and Iehiel dwelling beyond Tiber, and Beniamen the Sonne of Sabthi, of good memory. But the Citie of Rome it selfe is diuided into two parts, betweene which the Riuer Tiber runneth. And in the former part standeth a very great Temple, called the Romane Capitoll, at the which the house of Great Iulius Caesar stood. Moreouer, there are huge Buildings, and admirable workes, beyond other which may bee found in the whole World. But the Citie it selfe, if you ioine the inhabited part with that which is razed, and without Inhabitant, containeth the space of foure and twentie miles. And in it are eightie Palaces of eightie Kings, from the Reigne of Tarquinius vntill the Reigne of Pipin the Father of that Charles who first vanquished Spaine, possessed by the Ismaelites. But the Palace of Titus is without Rome; who was not receiued by the three hundred Senators, because that in the siege of Hierusalem hee had spent three yeares, that is to say, one yeere beyond his determined time: and there is also part of a Church, to wit, of the Palace of Vespasian, of a very great and most firme building. Besides, there is the Palace of King Malgalbinus, containyng three hundred and sixtie small Palaces according to the number of the dayes of the yeare, and the compass thereof, as farre as we might gather by the ruines, containeth three miles. But in times past a battaile was fought in that Palace, wherein about an hundred thousand men in number were slaine; whose bones gathered together on a heape, are to be seene euen vntill this day. And the Emperour hath ingrauen the resemblance of that fight on all the sides of the houses in Marble stone, with innumerable opposite factions of men, and the representations of Horses, Armes, and warlike furniture, that he might leaue a wonderfull Monument of the ancient Warres vnto Posteritie. In the same place a rewe of building is found lower then the ground of the Earth, where the Emperour and his Wife Augusta are found, orderly seated in Chaires of Estate, and almost an hundred other men Seruants of the Empire, all embalmed by the arte of the Apothecarie, euen vntill this day.

- And in a Church, two Brazen Pillars are found, the worke of King Salomon, with that Inscription ingrauen in Hebrew on either side, Salomon the Sonne of Dauid. And it was told mee by the Iewes liuing at Rome, that euery yeare the ninth day of the moneth Ab, those Pillars distill sweate like water. There is also a Vault, wherein Titus is reported to haue hidden the Vessels of the Sanctuary brought from Hierusalem. There is the representation of an Horse made of Brasse, gilded. Besides, there are buildings and other workes, and Monuments at Rome, which no man is able to reckon.

- Departing from Rome, in two dayes Iourney I came to Capua, sometimes great, built, as they say, by King Capis, a goodly Citie, yet to be disliked for the waters, and therefore very vnwholsome for children especially: wherein there were almost three hundred Iewes, and some among them very wise, and of great renoume: but, the chiefe were Lampassus and Samuel, Brethren, and famous Zaken, and Dauid a renowned man, whom some call our Prince. From thence I went to Puteoli, sometimes called Surrentum, a great Citie, which Sinan Hadar-Ghezzer built, being put to flight through feare of King Dauid, and brought into that place: but by reason of the inundation of the Sea, his people with two parts of the Citie were ouerwhelmed and drowned: and at this day, the Towers, and seats of Iudgement are seene drowned in the waters, which sometimes, were in the middest of the Citie. And in the same place a Fountaine springeth, in the the which * Bitumen is found, commonly called Petroleum, which beeing gathered out of the waters whereon it floateth, is preferred for the vse of Medicine. There are also naturall bathes with most medicinable waters, which are frequented by diuers sicke persons with profitable vse, especially by the Longobardes, who in the Summer time come thither to seeke remedie. Departing from thence, a way of fiteene miles in length is made vnder the Mountaynes; and it is a worke made by Romulus the first King of the Romanes, through feare * of Dauid the King of Israel, and Ioab the chiefe Captaine of Dauids Armie. Hee made the like worke also in the Mountaynes, and vnder the Mountaynes, where Naples now standeth, a famous and most strongly fortified Citie, situated on the Sea, built by the Gracians. Fiue hundred Jewes almost dwelt there, among whom, the most renowned, are Ezechias, and Salum, and Elias the Priest, 10 and Isaac of the Mountayne Hor. One dayes Iourney from thence I was brought to Salernum, a Citie famous for the Schooles of the Physicians, in the which, there were almost sixe hundred Jewes, but among these, Indas the Sonne of Isaac, and Melchisedecke a great man of the Citie Sipontum, and Salom the Priest, and Elias the Greeke, and Abraham Narbonensis, and Thimon, were famous for their Learning. The Citie it selfe on the side of the Continent, is fortified with wals, on the other side it lyeth vpon the Sea-shoare, and hath an exceeding strong Tower vpon the top of an Hill.

Halfe a dayes Iourney from thence is Malfi, in the which were twentie Jewes almost, and the chiefe among these were Hhananeel the Phisician, and Elizeus, and honourable Abuel. All the Inhabitants of this Countrey apply themselues to negotiation and Merchandize, and negle- 20 cting the care of sowing the ground, liue vpon bought Corne, because they dwell in exceeding high Mountaynes on the very tops of the Rockes: yet they abound with other Fruits, Vineyards, places where Oliues grow, Gardens, and Orchards, inuincible of all other men by reason of the situation of the place. But Beneuentum is one dayes Iourney distant from thence, a great Citie, partly seated vpon the Sea-shoare, and partly vpon a Mountayne: and there is an Vniuersitie * there, consisting almost of two hundred Jewes, and the chiefe of these, are Colonymus, and Zerah, and Abraham, famous men. Two dayes Iourney from thence in Malchi, in the Countrey of Apulia, so called of Pul, that is to say, Beanes; there were almost two hundred Jewes; the chiefe whereof were Abhimaghats, and Nathan, and Saddoq. But, from thence in one dayes Iourney only I came to Asculum, where I found about fortie Jewes, and among them, the 30 principall, Contilus, and Tsemabh his Sonne-in-law, and Ioseph. From thence two dayes Iourney to Tarnaa, situated vpon the Sea-shoare, in which place, they who go to Hierusalem for the cause of Religion, vse to assemble together, as into a Haven most commodious for that Nauigation. And there was an Vniuersitie there, consisting of two hundred Israelites or thereabouts, and the most renowned among them, were Elias, and Nathan the Preacher, and Iacob: the Citie it selfe is great and fine. One dayes Iourney from thence standeth Miquoles deuar, which great Citie was destroyed by Gulielmus King of Sicilia: and it is not only without Israelites, but also destitute of the people of their owne Nation, and vtterly wasted. From thence in halfe a dayes Iourney I came to Tarentum, which is the beginning of the Iurisdiction of Calabria, inhabited by the Gracians; a great Citie, where are three hundred Jewes almost, and some of them learned, 40 especially Maali, and Nathan, and Israel. From hence, in one dayes Iourney I went to Baruedis, built vpon the Sea shoare, where are ten Jewes Dyers of Wooll. From whence Ornedo is two dayes Iourney distant, seated vpon the Sea, appertayning to the Countrey of the Gracians, and there are about fiue hundred Jewes there, the chiefe whereof were Menahem, Caleb, Mair, and Maali. Taking ship from thence, in two dayes I was brought to Ocropos, where there was one Jew only, named Ioseph; and hitherto extendeth the Kingdome of Sicilia.

From thence, in two daies sayling I came to the Towne Lebta, which is the beginning of the Kingdome of Emanuel Grecian; and there, I found about an hundred Jewes, whose heads are Se-lubbias and Ercules. From thence in two daies Iourney I came to Achilon, where there were almost ten Jewes, the chiefe whereof is Sabthi. Halfe a daies Iourney from hence standeth Nato- 50 licon, seated in the entrance of the Sea. From hence, in one dayes Iourney by Sea, I came to Patra the Citie of Antipater, one of the foure Kings of the Gracians, among whom the Kingdome of deceased Alexander was diuided: and there, ancient great buildings are to bee seene, in the which there were almost fiftie Jewes, and among them, the chiefe were Isaac, Iacob, and Samuel. From thence, halfe a dayes Iourney by Sea, I came to Lepantum, where, about an hundred Jewes dwell neere vnto the Sea, the principall whereof are Gafarias, and Salum, and Abraham. From thence, in one dayes Iourney and an halfe, I went to Cores, where, almost two hundred Jewes dwell, haning in the Mountayne Paros possessions of their owne, which they inhabit: and among them the chiefe are Selomoh, Hhaijm, and Iedaia. From thence in three dayes Iourney, I 60 came to Corinth, and found three hundred Jewes, the principall whereof are Leo, Iacob, and Ezechias. Three dayes Iourney from thence, I came to Thebes that great Citie, where, there are two thousand Jewes, the most excellent workemen of Purple and Scarlet, in the Countries of Gracia, among whom there are most learned men, and very skilfull in the repetitions, and disciplines, the the chiefe of this age; among whom, were that great Master Aaron Cutans, and his brother Moses, and Hbaiah, and Elias Thurbinnus, and Iectan, with whom, none in all Gracia are comparable, * but onely at Constantinople. From thence in one dayes iourney to Argiopum, seated vpon the Sea, a great Citie, and frequented by a great number of Merchants from all Countries, and there are about an hundred Iewes there, and the chiefe among them are Elias, Passeterius, and Emanuel, and Caleb. From hence to Iabusterisa, is one dayes iourney, and this Citie standeth vpon the Sea coast, in the which there are almost an hundred Iewes, Ioseph, Samuel, and Nethania, being the principall. Robinca is one dayes iourney onely distant from thence, where were an hundred Iewes almost, ouer whom Ioseph, Eliezer, and Isaac had the command.

10 From thence, in one dayes iourney to Simon Patamon, where are almost fiftie Iewes, the chiefe whereof are Salomo, and Iacob. And it is the beginning of Balachia, whose Inhabitants dwell in the Mountaynes called Balachi, comparable with Deare in swiftnesse, who descending from the Mountaynes, driue away booties, and carrie away spoyles from the Gracians, hetherto vanquished by none, by reason of the inaccessible roughnesse of the places and Mountaynes in which they inhabit, easie to bee passed, and knowne onely vnto themselves. Nor are they Christians nor Iewes, although many among them are called by Iewish names; and boast that they were sometimes Iewes, and call the Iewes their Brethren, whom when they finde, they vse surely to spoyle them, but kill them not, as they doe the Gracians: Lastly, I obserued no forme of Religion among them. From thence, in two dayes iourney I went to Gardeghi a defaced and wasted Citie, retayning a few Inhabitants Gracians and Iewes. From hence to Armilon is two dayes iourney, a great Citie seated vpon the Sea, a common Mart Towne for the Venetians, Pisanes, Genueses, and other Nations, with large and spacious Fields; where I found about foure hundred Iewes, and the chiefe of them Siloh, and Ioseph the Gouvernour, and Salomon the principall. From this Citie to Bissina, is one whole dayes iourney, where are an hundred Iewes almost, and great Sabibi, and Selomoh, and Iacob haue the chiefe authoritie among them. From hence in two dayes by Sea, I arriued at Seleuca, built by Seleucus, one of those foure Kings who arose after Alexander: the Citie it selfe is very great, in the which there are about fise hundred Iewes, and the chiefe of these is Semuel made Gouvernour ouer his Nation, by the King of the Citie, together with his sonnes the Disciples of wise men, and Sabibah his sonne in Law, and Elias, and 30 Michael: and those Iewes apply themselves to Handy-crafts whereon they liue. From thence, in two dayes I came to Mitrici, where were almost twentie Iewes, among whom, the principall were Isaias, Machir, and Eliab. From thence, wee made two dayes iourney to Darma, in the which there are about an hundred and fortie Iewes, and the chiefe of them Michael and Ioseph. Canisthol is one dayes iourney onely distant from this Citie, where are almost twentie Iewes.

From thence we travelled three dayes journey to Aabidon, seated vpon the sea shoare: and travelling five dayes journey among the Mountaines, I came to Constantina, an exceeding great Citie, and the head of the Kingdome of Ianan, whom they call Greekes, the principall seate of the Emperour Emanuel, whose command twelue Kings obey: for every one whereof there are severall Palaces at Constantinople, and Towers, and Countries; and vnto these the whole land is subiect. The principall and chiefeft is called the great Aphrippos; the second, Miga Demastocos; the third, Rominos; the fourth, Makdacos; the fifth, Alchafom Magli: the rest haue names like vnto these. The compasse of the Citie of Constantinople containeth eighteene miles, the halfe part whereof standeth vpon the Sea, but the other halfe on the Continent: and it is seated vpon two armes of the Sea, or exceeding great mouthes of Riuer, * into one of the which, the waters flow from out of Russia, but into the other from Spaine. And it is frequented by many Factors, from the Prouinces and Countries of Babylon, Senaar, Media, Persia, and all the Kingdomes of the Land of Egypt, and Canaan, and the Kingdomes of Russia, Vngaria, and Psianki, Buria, Longobardia, and Spaine. The Citie it selfe is common d and without difference, vnto the which Merchants resort out of all Countries, travelling both by Sea and Land: it hath none equall with it in the World, except Bagdat, that mightie Citie of the Ismaelites. Heere is the most famous Temple of Saint Sophia: and the Patriarch of the Gracians dwelleth heere: nor doe they agree with the Doctrine of the Pope of Rome. There are other Temples also, as many in number, as the dayes of the yeare. But it hath that exceeding great Treasure, almost beyond all estimation, by the Offerings and Riches yeerely brought from diuers Countries, Ilands, Castles, Forts, and places, so that no Temple of the whole World may bee compared with the Riches thereof. And in the midst of the Temple there are Pillars of Gold, and Siluer; huge Candlestickes, Lanthornes, Lampes, and other Ornaments of Gold and Siluer, more then any man is able to reckon.

60 Next adioyning to the walls of the Temple, there is a place built for Princely Pastimes, called Hippodromus, where, yeerely vpon the birth day of Iesus of Nazareth, great Spectacles are publikey presented; and there, all sorts of men with all manner of Habits of the whole World, are shewed before the King and Queene. Lions also, and Beares, Leopards, and wild Asses are brought forth into the place where these Spectacles are to bee scene, that they might fight together: and Birds also after the same manner: and I suppose that in no Countrey of the World such Princely Sports are to be seene. But surely King Emanuel, besides that Palace left him by his Ancestors, hath built him another vpon the Sea shoare, which they call Bilberne: the Pillars, and walls whereof, he hath ouer-layed with beaten Gold and Siluer; whereon hee hath ingrauen all the Warres made by him and his Ancestors. And hee hath prepared a Throne there for himselfe, of Gold and Precious Stones; and hath adorned it with a Golden Crowne hanging on high by Golden Chaines; the compasse whereof is equall with the Throne it selfe, beset with Precious Stones and Pearles, the price whereof no man is able to value; of so great a lustre, that putting no Torch vnto them, they shine and may be seene in the night. Moreover, there are other innumerable things in the same place, and incredible to bee told; and Tributes are yeerely brought into that Palace, wherewith the Towers are filled with Scarlet and Purple Garments and Gold; so that the like example of building and riches, can no where else bee found in the World. And it is affirmed that the Reuenue only of the Citie it selfe, gathered of the Markets, Hauens, and Tribute of Merchants, amounteth to twentie thousand Crownes a day. Furthermore, the Gracians themselves, Inhabitants of the Countrey, are exceeding rich in Gold and Precious Stones, and are attyred with most sumptuous Apparell, their Garments beeing made of Crimson, intermingled with Gold, or embroydered with Needle-worke, and are all-carried ypon Horses much like vnto the Children of Kings. The Countrey it selfe being very large, aboundeth with all sorts of Fruits, and hath also great plentie of Corne, Flesh, and Wine; nor the like Riches in the whole World are to be found. They are also learned, and skilfull in the Discipline of the Gracians, and giuing themselves wholly to pleasure, they eate and drinke every one vnder their Vine, and vnder their Figge-tree: and of all Tongues of the Nations, which they call Barbarians, they hyre Souldiers to fight with the Soldan King of the Children of Thogarma, who are commonly called Turkes, because they themselves through idlenesse, and delights are made vnapt and vnmanly for the Warres, and seemed vnto mee very like vnto women through a certaine impotencie of delights.

But no Iewes dwell within the Citie, for they are excluded from them by an arme of waters, and being inclosed betweene that and another arme of the Sea of Sophia, they are not so much as permitted to come into the Citie but by Boate, and that for the cause of Traffique and Commerce. And there are about two thousand Iewes, who are assembled with the Masters, that is, the Disciples of Wisemen, among whom, Abtalion the Great, and Abdias, and Aaron Cuspus, and Ioseph Sarginus, and Eliakim the Gouverneur, haue the chiefe authoritie: certaine of them are Artificers of Silken Garments, but very many are Merchants, and they very rich. No Iew is there permitted to bee carryed on Horse-backe, except Solomon the Egyptian, the Kings Physician, through whose seruice the Iewes are comforted, and ease their captiuitie, which they feele to be grievous.

For all the Iewes are very much hated of the Gracians, without any difference of the good and euill; by reason of the Tanners, who while they dresse skinnes, powre out the filchy water into the Streets before their owne doores: and therefore they are all oppressed together with a grievous yoke, and are beaten in the Streets, and violently compelled to serue. But the Iewes themselves are rich, as I haue said, and good men, and mercifull, and obseruers of the Commandements, who patiently endure the misery of Captiuitie. The place wherein they dwell is called Pera.

furnished with a most commodious Hauen, which it containeth within it selfe, and receiueth in ships, betweene two Towers built on both sides: so that a Brazen Chaine beeing extended from one Tower vnto the other by the Publicans, * seruing for the gathering of the Custome, all entrance and going out of ships by night, may be entred, and no man can possibly conuay any thing taken out of the ships. Nor doe I thinke, any Hauen in the World, to bee found like vnto this. The Citie it selfe, as I haue said, is goodly, and in it there are about foure hundred Iewes, among whom some are very skilfull in Disciplinary * Readings, and especially Ephraim the Egyptian Iudge, and Main, and Carchasona; and Abraham the head of the Vniuersitie. Some of the Iewes liuing there haue ships at Sea for the cause of gaine. There are artificiall Workemen in Glasse there, who make Glasse, called Tyrian Glasse, the most excellent, and of the greatest estimation in all Countries. The best and most approoued Sugar also is found there. Ascending the walls of new Tyrus, old Tyrus is seene ouerwhelmed, in time past and couered with the Sea, distant a stones cast out of a Sling, from the new: but if any please to take Sea in a Skiffe or Boate, hee seeth the Tower, Market places, Streetes, and Palaces in the bottome. But new Tyrus is famous for publike Traffique, whereto they resort from all places.

In one dayes iourney from thence I came to Akadi, which was sometimes Ghaco, the bound of the Tribe of Affer, and the beginning of the Land of Israel, seated vpon the great Sea, famous for the Hauen, where all Christians going by ship to Hierusalem are receiued into the which the Riuer running through the Citie it selfe, floweth a Riuer called Cadumin. And there are almost two hundred Iewes there, and the Chiefe among them, are Sadok, and Iapheth, and Iona. From thence three leagues to Niphas, which selfe-same Citie is hidden Gad, bordering vpon the Sea shoare, nigh vnto which on the one side standeth Carmel the Mountayne, and at the foot of the Mountayne are the Sepulchers of very many Israelites, and in the Mountayne it selfe the Caue of the Prophet Elias is to be seene, neere vnto which the Christians haue built a Chappell, called Saint Elias. But on the top of the ridge of the Mountayne there remayneth the signe of the Altar broken downe and burned in the dayes of Achab, whereof notable mention is made in the Historie of Elias. And the place of that Altar is Circular, beeing almost foure Cubits ouer, in the Diameter; vnder the Mountayne it selfe, on the side thereof, the Riuer Chifon descendeth. Capbar-Nabbum is foure leagues distant from thence, retayning the ancient name, a very high place which exceedeth Carmel in prospect.

But hauing passed sixe leagues from thence, I came to Casarea, which the Inhabitants call Siferia, the ancient name thereof was Gad of the Palaestines, in the which there were tenne Iewes; and two hundred Cuthai, that is to say, Samarite Iewes, whome they commonly call Samaritanes. And it is a very faire and goodly Citie seated on the Sea, re-edified and amplified by the Emperour Cesar, and called by his name, Casarea. From whence, departing in halfe a dayes iourney I came to Cacos, which sometimes was Ceila, or Keghila, in the which there are no Iewes.

Againe from hence, in halfe a dayes iourney I went to Sargoreg, which by the Ancient was called Luz, where there is one Iew only, and he a Dyer of Woolles. Trauelling one dayes iourney from thence, I came to Sebaste, which selfe-same Citie is Samaria, wherein the Palace of Achab the King of Israel is yet discerned. But it hath beene a very strong and well fortified Citie, seated on a Mountayne, delightfull through the Fountaynes, and Riuers of Water, Gardens, Orchards, Vineyards, and places where Oliues grow: and hath no Iew inhabiting. Two leagues distant from hence is Nebilus, in time past called Sichem, in the Mountayne of Ephraim; where no Iewes are: and the Citie lyeth in a deepe Valley betweene the Mountaynes Gerizim and Ebal, or Hebal, in which there are about an hundred Cuthai, Obseruers only of the Law of Moses alone (these, as I said, they call Samaritanes.) But they haue Priests, of the Posteritie of Aaron, the Priest resting in peace, who intermarry with none other, but with the women or men of their owne Family, that they may preserue their Race and Kindred without mixture: and there they are commonly called Aharonites: notwithstanding they are Ministers and Priests of the Law of those Samaritanes. But they offer Sacrifices, and burne burnt Offerings in the Synagogue which they haue in the Mountayne Garizim, alleaging that which is written in the Law. And thou shalt giue a blessing vpon Mount Garizim. But they say, that it is the very house of the Sanctuary: and they lay the burnt Offering in the Feast of Easter, and other Festiual dayes vpon the Altar, built in the Mountayne Garizim, of the stones taken out of Jordan by the Children of Israel, and they vaunt that they are of the Tribe of Ephraim. Among them is the Sepulcher of Ioseph the Iust, the Sonne of Iacob our Father, resting in peace, as hath beene said. And the bones of Ioseph carryed out of Egypt by the Children of Israel, are buried in Sichem. But they want three Letters V. H. R. H E, of the name of Abraham, Heth, of the name of Ishbac, and Ghain, of the name of Iaghabac, in stead whereof they put Aleph, that is, Spiritus tennis. By this manifest token they are conuicted not to be of the Posteritie and Seed of Israel, seeing they acknowledge the Law of Moses, excepting these three Letters, which they know not. But they keepe themselves from the defiling of the dead, and of bones, and also of the flaine, and of the Graue.

They

- They haue also this custome, to put off the garments which they daily weare, when they are to goe into the Synagogue, and to wash their bodies with water, and put on other garments provided onely for this vse. And this is their daily custome. But, the Mountaine Garizim is pleasant with Fountaines, and Gardens: and contrarily, Ghebal is drie, full of Rockes and Stones, and betweene both, as wee haue said, the Citie Sichem: it selfe is seated. Foure leagues from thence is Mount Gilboagh, which the Christians call Mount Gilbor, consisting of a most barren and dry soyle. From whence, after foure leagues, you come to the Valley of Aialon, which the Christian Inhabitants of the Countrey call, Val de Luna; from whence, hauing trauelled the length of one league, I came vnto the Mountaine Moria, to Garaan, called the Towne of David, a Citie in time past called, Gibghon or Gabaon, where no Iewes are. Hauing passed three leagues from thence, I entred into Hierusalem, a little Citie, fortified with three walls, wherein there are many sorts of men, Iacobites, Armenians, Grecians, and Gorgeri, or Georgij, and Franks, of all the Languages of the Gentiles. And there is an house prepared there, for the dying of Woolls and Cloaths, which the Iewes hyre euery yeere, of the Kings, vpon that condition, that they onely might exercise that Art. And there are Iewes dwelling in an angle of the Citie, vnder the Tower of Dauid, in which Tower, the walls of the old building are yet remayning, built by our Ancestors, to the heighth of ten cubits, almost, from the very foundation. But that which remayneth beside these, is the building of the Ismaelites. And there is no building in the whole Citie, comparable with that Tower of Dauid in strength. There are also two houses there, called Hospitals, the Inhabitants whereof being Christians are, called Hospitalers: and they are Horse-men; out of whose two Colledges, foure hundred men, almost, goe forth furnished to the Battell: and in those houses, all sicke persons comming thither, are receiued, and cured, all plentie of necessarie things for the maintenance of life, as well to the sicke, that are liuing, and recouering, as to the dead, for their funerall, being abundantly and sufficiently ministered. But that second house is called, The Hospitall of Salomon: for, it standeth in the place of the Palace, sometimes built by Salomon. Foure hundred of them therefore doe daily goe forth to the battell: and all these associates are sworne, and bound by an Oath, besides many other more, who assemble thither, out of the Land of the Franches and Italians: voluntary making a Vow, which, remayning there a yeere or two, they performe. Moreouer, there is a very great Temple there, which they call, The Sepulchre, the Sepulchre of Iesus of Nazareth, for the visiting whereof the Pilgrims assemble. Hierusalem hath foure gates, the one is named, The Sleepe of Abraham; the other, The gate of Dauid; the third, The gate of Sion; and the fourth, The gate of Iehosaphat. But this is before the holy House, which sometimes stood, in the which now, there is a Church called, The Temple of the Lord, situated in the very place of the ancient Sanctuarie: but the very Temple of the Lord, now so called, is a certaine huge and goodly Arch, built by Ghemar Ben Alchetab, now frequented by the Christians, who haue no Image or Picture in that place, but onely resort thither to pray.
- Right ouer against this place there is a wall built, of the walls which were in the Sanctuarie, which they now call, The gate of Mercy: and vnto this gate, the Iewes come to pray, before the wall, in the Court. There also, I meane, at Hierusalem, in the house which was Salomons, are the Stalls of Horses seene, built by Salomon, a very strong building, and consisting of very great stones: of which manner of building the like example is not to be seene in all the Land. The Fish-pool also is yet remayning, wherein the ancient killed their Sacrifices: and euery one of the Iewes write their name there in the wall. Going out at the gate of Iehosaphat, they goe into the Desart, called The Wildernesse of the people, in the which there is the Monument of the Hand (or Pillar of Absalon, and the Sepulchre of Uzia the King, and a great Fountaine of the waters of Siloabb running into the Brooke Kedron: and nigh vnto the Fountaine, a great building from the dayes of our Ancestors. But little store of water is found in the Fountaine, and the greatest part of men liuing at Hierusalem, drinke raine-water, gathered in priuate Cisternes. But, from the Valley of Iehosaphat, vnto the Mountaine of Oliues, they continually ascend: for nothing lieth betweene the Citie and that Mountaine, but this Valley. And from the Mountaine it selfe the Sodomitical Sea is seene: but from that Sea vnto the heape of Salt, into the which Lots wife was turned, are two leagues. For that heape continueth still, which, being diminished by the flockes, sometimes by licking, encreaseth againe to the accustomed greatnesse: from the Mountaine of Oliues alio, all that plaine Countrey is seene, through which the Riuer Stim runneth euen vnto the Mountaine Nebo.
- Right ouer against this new Hierusalem standeth the Mount Sion, on the which no entire and whole building is seene, except one Temple of the Christians. Before Hierusalem also, three houses, as it were, of buriall are seene, wherein the Israelites were sometimes buried, and the forme of the Graues is yet decent and conspicuous, but it is daily diminished by the Christians, who digge vp the stones for the building of their priuate houses. That space and length of Ierusalem is compassed with great Mountaines. But, in the Mountaine Sion, are the Sepulchres of the Familie of Dauid, and of those Kings who arose after Dauid; but the place it selfe is commonly vnknowne. For, it hapned fifteene yeeres since, that one wall of the Temple, which I said to be in the Mount Sion, fell downe, which when, at the commandement of the Patriarch, the Priest of the Temple determined to repaire; he appointed about twentie stones in number to be digged out of the ancient foundations of the walls of Mount Sion, for the repairing of the worke of the Temple. And among them, there were two men confederates, and friends; whereof the one, on a certaine day early in the morning brought the other home with him vnto a priuate Banquet, and after they had taken their breakfast together, when they came to their worke, being demanded by the Ouer-seer of the worke, why they came so late, they answered, that they would make amends for that houre with continued labour.

In the meane space, while all the rest went to dinner, and while they performed that which they had promised, hauing taken away a certaine stone, and finding the mouth of a Caue, they 10 said one vnto the other: Let vs enter in, to see whether any Treasure lye hidden heere. Going therefore in, they proceeded so long, vntill they came vnto a certaine Palace supported with Marble Pillars, ouer-layed with Gold and Siluer, before which, there was a Table, and there vpon a Scepter, and a golden Crowne: and this was the Sepulchre of Dauid the King of Israel, on whose left hand was the Sepulchre of Salomon, with the like gorgeous adorning, and many other, of the other Kings of Iuda of the Family of Dauid, who had beene buried there: and there were Chests locked vp, but what they contayned, is yet to men vnknowne. But, when those men determined to enter into the Palace, being stricken with the blast of a whirle-wind, they fell downe dead vpon the Earth out of the mouth of the Caue. And they lay in the same place vntill the euening: when being raised againe with another blast, they heard a voice like 20 vnto the voice of a man, saying vnto them: Arise, and goe forth of this place. Wherevpon being much moued, and stricken with an exceeding great feare, they went forth trembling, and reported the whole matter to the Patriarch, which, calling vnto Abraham surnamed Pius, a Constantinopolitan Pharisee liuing at Hierusalem, he caused to be declared by the same two men; who being demanded what he thought, he said, that it was the place of the Sepulchres of the house of Dauid, appointed for the Kings of Iuda. But, the next day after, both those men lying in their beds, were found grievously sicke at home through feare, who said, that they would neuer, vpon any conditions, enter in thither againe, affirming, that it was vtterly vnlawfull for any man to desire to goe thether, where God forbade him. Wherefore, by the commandement of the Patriarch, the place was shut vp, and concealed from the eyes of men vntill this day, by 30 the labour of men: but Abraham Pius, of whom I haue spoken, declared the whole matter vnto mee.

Bethlehem Iuda is two leagues distant from thence, next vnto which, within halfe a mile, almost, there is the Sepulchre of Rachael, in a place where two wayes meete: and the Graue is made with twelue stones, according to the number of the Sonnes of Iacob; and ouer the Tombe there is an Arch supported by foure Pillars. Moreouer, the stones of the Tombe are ingrauen with many diuers names of the Iewes passing by that way. But, in Bethlehem there are twelue Iewes, Dyers of Wools. The Fields of the Towne haue Riuers of waters, Welles and Fountaynes.

Trauelling fixe leagues from hence, I came to Hebron, seated in a Plaine: for Hebron the an- 40 cient Metropolitan Citie stood vpon an hill, but it is now desolate. But in the Valley there is a field, wherein there is a duplictie, that is, as it were two little Valleyes, and there the Citie is placed, and there is an huge Temple there, called Saint Abraham: and that place was the Synagogue of the Iewes, at what time the Countrey was possessed by the Ismaelites. But, the Gen- tiles, who afterward obtayned, and held the same, built fixe Sepulchres in the Temple by the names of Abraham, Sara, Isaac, Rebecca, Iacob, & Lia. And the Inhabitants now tel the Pilgrims, that they are the Monuments of the Patriarkes: and great summes of money are offered there. But surely to any Iew comming thither, and offering the Porters a reward, the Caue is shewed with the Iron Gate opened, which from Antiquitie, remayneth yet there. And a man goeth downe with a Lampe light into the first Caue, where nothing is found, nor also in the second, 50 vntill he enter into the third, in the which there are the fixe Monuments of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, Sara, Rebecca, and Lia; the one right ouer against the other: and each of them are ingrauen with Characters, and distinguished by the names of euery one of them, after this manner, Sepulchrum Abraham patris nostri, super quem pax sit, and so the rest, after the same example. And a Lampe perpetually burneth in the Caue, day and night, the Officers of the Temple continually ministring Oyle for the maintenance thereof. Also in the selfe-same Caue, there are tuns full of the bones of the ancient Israelites, brought thither by the Families of Israel, which euen vntill this day, remayne in that selfe-same place. But in the very field of Duplictie, the Monuments of the ancient house of our Father Abraham, are yet extant and to be seene, and a Fountayn springeth out before it, and no man may build an house there, for the reuerence of Abraham. 60

Beth-Gebarin is two leagues distant from thence, which was sometimes called Maressa, where there were only three Iewes. Fiue leagues Iourney from hence I came to Torondolos Gabaleris, which was sometimes called Sunam, where are three hundred Iewes. Three leagues from thence, is Saint Samuel of Silo, to wit, a Towne in time past called Siloh, two leagues distant stant from Hiernsalem, where there is a great Temple, and therein the Sepulchre of the Prophet Samuel, translated by the Christians from Ramath, which is Rama, after that the Ismaelites were expelled thence, and the Towne taken, where before the bodie of Samuel was preserved, buried in the Synagogue of the Jewes. And now, as I haue said, there is a goodly and great Temple in Silo, named by them S. Samuel of Silo: and it remayneth euen vntill this day.

Departing from thence, and hauing trauelled three leagues towards the Mountayne Moria, I came to Pesipua, which is Gibgha, the Countrey of Saul, otherwise called Gibgha of Benjamin, where are no Jewes. Beth-Nobi is three leagues distant from hence, the same beeing also called Nob, a Citie belonging to the Priests, where were two Jewes, Dyers, and in the middle of that way, are those two Rockes, famous through the memory of Ionathan, whereof the one is named Bolsen, and the other Sina. Departing from thence, after three leagues I came to Ramas, which, in time past, was Harama; part of the walls and buildings whereof remayneth, euen from ancient times, and it is confirmed by the Inscriptions of stones yet continuing, and the marks, ruines, and situation are shewed, of a very great Citie, sometimes, where now there are only three Jewes. And there is yet seene a field of the Israelites, two miles long, furnished with many Sepulchres of the Israelites. Fiue leagues from hence standeth Gapha, in time past Iapho, called Iope by others, seated on the Sea; where there is only one Jew, and he, a Dyer of Wooll. From hence, I trauelled three leagues to Ebalin, it is the same Citie which was sometimes called Iebna, wherein the site of an ancient Schoole is yet seene, and there is no Jew there. And this is the furthest bound of the Tribe of Ephraim. From whence, hauing passed three leagues, I went to Palmis, sometimes called Asdod or Asotus, in time past, the most famous Citie of the Palastines, but now destroyed: and in it there is no Jew. From whence Ascalon is two leagues distant. This is Ascalon surnamed the new, built by Esdra the Priest, vpon the Sea shoare, which in the beginning, was called Benibera. This is foure leagues distant from the ancient Ascalon of the Palastines, long since wasted. But, this new one is a very great and goodly Citie frequented by many men resorting thither from all places for the cause of their Affaires, for that it is seated in part of the bounds of Egypt. And in it there are almost two hundred learned Jewes, among whom Tsamabb, and Aharon, and Salomo, haue the preeminence. There are also about fortie of those Students, who are called Literall, that is, conuersant in the simple meaning of the sacred Books, and about three hundred Cuthei, or followers of the Doctrine of the Samaritanes. And in the middle of the Citie there is a Well, which in the Language of the Ismaelites, the Inhabitants call Bir Abraham Alchelil, that is to say, the Well of Great Abraham, opened by Abraham in the dayes of the Palastines. From hence I passed to Seguras, the ancient name whereof was Lud, from whence in one dayes Iourney and an halfe, I came to Zarezin, which is Iesreghel, where there is a certayne great Church: and there is only, one Jew there, a Dyer of Woolles. Foure leagues from hence is Sipuria, sometimes called Tsipori, where are the Sepulchres of that great Master called Hakados, and Hhaijab, who came vp out of Babylon, and of Ionas, the Sonne of Amuhay the Prophet, who are buried in the Mountayne: and beside these, there are also many other ancient Sepulchers. Three leagues from hence, is Tiberia, neere vnto Jordan at the Lake, called the Sea of Kinereth, or Genezareth, into the which Jordan floweth, and runneth out towards the Salt Sea into the Land of the Plaine: and this place is called Asdath-hapisga, and going forth from thence, it falleth into the Sea of Sodom, which is called the Sea of Salt. But, at Tiberia, there are almost fiftie Jewes: and the chiefe among these, are Abraham the Seer, and Muchtar, and Isaac. And in that place there are hot waters springing out of the ground, which they call the Bathes of Tiberia; and the Synagogue of Caleb the Sonne of Iephune is there, not farre from the Bathes. There are also very many Sepulchres of the Israelites there, and the most famous, those especially of Iohn the Sonne of Zachai, and of Ionathan the Sonne of Leni: all these are in the lower Galiley. From hence, in two dayes Iourney I came to Timin, which in time past was called Tammatha, famous for the Sepulchre of Samuel the Iust, which is yet to be seene, furnished also with other Sepulchers of the Israelites. From thence, after one whole dayes Iourney, standeth Ghasth, sometimes called Gus Hhaleb, where there are about twentie Jewes. Trauelling fixe leagues from hence, I went to Maran, the ancient name whereof was Maron. In it are the Sepulchers of Hilel and Samai in a Caue, with twentie Sepulchers of both their Disciples, and other Monuments also, as of Benjamin the Sonne of Iephat, and Iebuda the Sonne of Bathira. Sixe leagues from thence is Galmah famous for the great buildings of the Sepulchers of the Israelites, where there are fiftie Jewes. Kadis is halfe a dayes Iourney distant from hence, called also Kades Nephthalim, vpon the banke of Jordan, where are the Sepulchers of the Ancient, of Eliezer the Sonne of Gharoch, and Eliezer the Sonne of Azarias, and Hunus surnamed Rotundus, and Rasbac, and Iose of Galiley. And the Monument of Barak the Sonne of Abinogham, is yet remayning there. Departing from this place one whole dayes Iourney, I came to Balijus in time past called Dan, nigh vnto which there is a Caue whence Jordan issueth, which hauing run three miles, receiue the waters of Arnon, comming out of the borders of Moab. Before the Caue it selfe, the markes of the Altar or Statue appeared, which one Micheas dedicated, adored by the children of Dan in those dayes; not farre also from thence, the place of the Altar is seene, erected by Ieroboam the Sonne of Nabat, whereon that Golden Calfe was dedicated. And hitherto the bound of Israel extendeth on the side of the furthest Sea. From whence I made two dayes journey to the Citie of Damascus, the beginning of the Kingdom of Noradinus, King of the children of Thogarma, who are commonly called Turkes. The Citie it selfe is exceeding great and very faire, compassed with walls, but the whole Countrey is wonderfully beautified with Gardens and Paradises, contayning fifteene miles on euery side. There is no Citie, elsewhere, in all the fruitfull Countrey, seene like vnto this: which the two Riuers, Amna and Pharphar, falling downe from the Mountayne Hermon doe enrich. For the Citie standeth vnder the Mountayne Hermon. The Riuer Amna runneth into the Citie it selfe the waters whereof are conueyed through Pipes, into all the houses of the Nobilitie, and also into the Market places and streets. And the Countrey it selfe is much frequented through the Affaires of all Countries. But Pharphar running by the Citie it selfe, doth water all the Gardens and pleasant places. And there is a Synagogue of the Ismaelites in the Citie, which they call Gumagh Dumesq, that is, the * Mosche of Damascus, the like building whereof is no where seene in the World: and the Inhabitents say, that it was the Princely Palace of Ben-Hadad. And there is a wall of Glasse built by the workmanship of the Magicians, distinguished with holes equall in number with the dayes of the Sun, so that euery day the Sun entring in at euery hole goeth thorow the twelue degrees fitted to the houres of the day, and so sheweth the time of the yeare and day. But within the Palace it selfe there are houses or little Bathes made of Gold and Siluer, wherein there is a Throne of the same matter, like vnto a great Vessell, so that it may receiue three men bathing together. Within the Palace I saw the rib of a man hanging, of one of the Enakims, which was nine Spanish handfuls long, and two handfuls broad: and it is reported, that he descended from the most ancient Kings of Enak, named Abchamaz, as by the ingrauen stone of his Sepulchre is declared; whereon it is also written that he reigned ouer the whole World. But at Damascus there are about three thousand Israelites, among whom there are the Disciples of wisemen, and such as are rich. And the Head^m of the Assembly of the Land of Israel dwelleth there, whose name is Esdra, and his Brother Sar Salom the chiefe Iudge, and Ioseph the fift of the Assembly, and Masliabh the head of the order of the Readers, and Mair the Crowne and glory of the wise men, and Sadik the Physician. There are also, almost, two hundred of the Literall Expositors, but of the Cuthai, almost foure hundred: among all whom there is great concord and peace, yet notwithstanding, these diuers Factions inter-marry not each with other.

Departing from Damascus, in one whole dayes journey I went to Galgad, which was sometimes called, Gilead, a large Countrey, flowing with Riuers and Fountaines of water, replenished with Gardens and Orchards, in the which there are about threescore Israelites. Halfe a dayes journey from hence standeth Salcata, which Citie was sometime called, Saleca. From whence the other Baghal-Beik is halfe a dayes journey distant, the ancient name whereof was Baghala, seated in the Valley vnder Libanus, built by Salomon, for the sake and vse of Pharaos Daughter. And part of the building of the Palace yet remayneth, the stones whereof are iust twentie Spanish handfuls in length, and twelue in bredth, among which there is not one at all, that is not worne: and it is commonly reported, that that building was not made by the hand of man, but of * Asmodey. And in the very entrance of the Citie, a great Fountaine bursteth forth, and runneth through the middest of the Citie. There is also Thadmur seated in the Desart, built likewise by the commandement of Salomon, after the same manner of building and greatnesse of the stones: and it is compassed with a wall, solitary, as I said, and remoued from other Habitation, and some dayes journey distant from Baghala. But, in this Citie Thadmur, there are foure thousand Jewes, valiant, and ready and prepared for the battel: who make warre with the Children of Edom, and with the Children of Garab, or the Arabians, commonly called, subiect vnto the Kingdome of Noradinus: and they helpe the bordering Ismaelites. Among these, Isaac, surnamed Gracus, and Nathan, and Uziel, haue the pre-eminence. Halfe a dayes journey from thence I came to Kiriathin, called Kiriathaim in time past, in the which there are no Jewes, except one Dyer of woolls. From whence departing one whole dayes journey, I entred into Hamath, retayning the ancient name, seated vnder the Mountaine Libanus, nigh vnto the Riuer Iabok. But, in those dayes it hapned, that the Citie being shaken with a great Earthquake, aboue fifteene thousand men perished in one day: and no more then seuentie men were remayning aliue, the chiefe is, Ghola the Priest, and old Father Galeb, and Muchtar. Siba is halfe a dayes journey distant from hence, sometimes called, Hhatfor: from the which, Lamdin is no further remoued then three leagues. In two dayes journey from thence I went to Hhaleb, the ancient name of which Citie and Countrey was Aram Tsoba: and it is the Princely seat of King Noradinus, within the which there is a very great Palace, compassed with a wall, and there is no Fountaine, Well, or Riuer in the whole Citie: but they drinke raine-water gathered in Cisternes, which in the Ismaelitish Language they call, Algub. There are about one thousand five hundred Israelites here, whose Heads are, Moses the Constantinopolitan, and Israel, and Seth. But traouelling two dayes journey from hence, I came to Baalits, in time past Pethoran, and nigh nigh vnto the Riuer Euphrates, where euen vntill this day, the Tower of Balaam, the sonne of Beghor, remayneth (let the name of the wicked be abolished) built according to the number of the houres of the day: and in that Citie there are few Iewes. From thence, it is halfe a dayes journey to Kelagh Geber, which the Ancients called, Selagh Midbera, the Latines, Petra Deserti. The Arabians onely retayned this, after they fled into the Desarts, being violently expelled by the Turkes, from their habitations and Cities. But here there are almost two thousand Iewes, and the chiefe of these, Sedekias, Hbajja, and Salomo.

20 Nehor, and Ioseph, haue the pre-eminence. And in this place standeth the Synagogue built by Esdra, returning from Babylon to Hierusalem. Two dayes journey from thence is ancient Hharan, in the which there is also a Synagogue of the like building, made by the commandement of the same Esdra: but that place, where the house of our Father Abraham was, containeth no building; yet is it religiously respected by the Ismaelites, and frequented by them for the offering vp of their supplications. Departing from thence, we trauelled two dayes journey to the place where a Riuer issueth forth, called by the Inhabitants Alchabor, the same also in time past being called, Habor, which runneth forth into the Prouince Madai or Media, and falleth into the Mountaine Gozen. And there are about two thousand Iewes there. From hence, after two dayes journey, is Neisibin or Nisibis, a great Citie, abounding with Riuers of water, where are, almost, a thousand Iewes. From whence, traueilling two dayes journey, we came to Gezir Ben-Ghamar, which Citie is containd within the bankes of the Riuer Hidkel, which the people of the West call Tygris, at the foot of the Mountaines Ararat or Taurus, foure miles, almost, distant from the place where the Arke of Noe rested: but Ghamar-Ben-Alchetab hauing taken that Arke from the ridge of the Mountaine, being remoued, fitted it for the vse of the Ismaelites Mosche, neere vnto which, standeth the Synagogue of Esdra, euen vnto this day, whereunto, the Iewes going out of the Citie, assemble on festiuall dayes, to pray. And in that Metropolitan Citie of Gezira Gamar Ben-Alchetab, there are, almost, foure thousand Iewes, Mubbhar, and Ioseph, and Hbajja, being the chiefe.

Two dayes journey distant from thence is Al-Musfal, the name whereof was sometime, 40 Great Assur, where are seuen thousand Iewes: the principall whereof are, Zachai ha d Nassi, of the posteritie of King Dauid; and Ioseph, surnamed Barhan al pelech, Counsellor of King Zinaldin, Brother of Noraldinus the King of Damascus. And this Citie is the beginning of the Kingdome of Persia, and retayneth that ancient largenesse and greatnesse, seated vpon the Riuer Hidkel, betweene which and the ancient Niniue, there is onely a Bridge: but Niniue is vtterly destroyed: yet there are Streets, and many Castles within the space of the ancient circuit, from which vnto the Citie Adbael, is one leagues distance. But Niniue was built vpon the banke of Hidkel. And in the Citie Assur there are now three Synagogues of three Prophets, of Abdia, of Ionas the sonne of Amithai, and Nabhum the Sonne of Elcussens. Departing from thence, and traueilling three dayes journey, I came to Rababa, by the Antient, called Rebboboth, seated nigh vnto the Riuer Euphrates, in the which, there are almost two thousand Iewes, whereof Ezechias, Abud, and Isaac, are accounted the chiefe. And it is a very great and goodly Citie, compassed about with walls, and very well fortified, and furnished with goodly Suburbs of Gardens, and places of delight. Vpon the banke of the same Riuer standeth Karkefia, sometime called Charchamis, one dayes journey onely, distant from Rababa; in the which, there dwell about five hundred Iewes, Isaac, and Elhana being the chiefe. Two dayes journey from hence, we went to Al-Iobar, the ancient name whereof, was Pumbeditha, seated in Nahardugha: in the which, there are about two thousand Iewes, among whom there are many Disciples of the Wise-men, and the chiefe of these are, Great Hen, and Moses, and Eliakim. The Sepulchres of the Masters, Iuda, and Samuel, are there accounted memorable. Before each Sepulchre stand two Synagogues, built by them before their death. There also remayneth the Sepulchre of Bestenai 60 Hanassi, who was Head of the Transmigration, and Nathan, and Neheman the sonne of Papha. Departing from hence, I trauelled five dayes journey to Hbarda, in the which, there are about fifteene thousand Iewes, among whom Zachen, and Ioseph, and Nathanael, are the chiefe. From this Citie, it is two dayes journey to Ghukbera, the chiefe Citie, built by Iechonias the King of Juda, in the which there are almost ten thousand Iewes, Iehosuah and Nathan being the principall.

Two dayes iourney distant from hence standeth Bagdad, a great Citie, the beginning of the Kingdome of Calipha, named * Amir Almumanin Alghabassi, of the Progenie of him, whom the Ismaelites call their Prophet, who hath the chiefe authoritie ouer the whole Doctrine and Sect of the Ismaelites: and for this cause he is accounted reuerent and honorable, to all the rest of the Kings of the Ismaelites: for hee ruleth ouer them all, as a certaine high Priest of them all. And within the Citie of Bagdad it selfe he hath a Palace, built in a plat of ground of three miles, and within the Palace, there is a Wood furnished with all kinds of Trees of the whole world, not onely with fruitfull Trees, but also barren, replenished also with all sorts of Beasts, and in the midst of the Wood, an huge standing Poole of water, conueyed from the Riuer Tigris. But the Calipha walking or supping in that Wood for recreation, his seruants exercise Hawking and Filhing, and hee goeth vnto this place accompanied with the traine of his Counsellors and Princes. And the proper name of this great King is * Al-Ghabassi Hbaphesi, who loueth the Israelites very well, being skilfull in the tongues, studious in reading the Law of Moses, who being expert in the Hebrew Language, both readeth, and also writeth learnedly. But hee hath made this Religious vow vnto himselfe, that he would receiue the vse neither of meate, drinke, nor apparell, but through the labour of his owne hands: for he is an artificiall maker of the most excellent fine Mats and Couerlets, which, being marked with his owne Seale, he deliuereth to his principall seruants, to be sold in the Market, but the Noble-men of the Countrey buy them, and with the money of that trade, he procureth maintenance for himselfe: and hee is a man of an honest behauiour, and faithfull, and religious after his manner, and most curteously saluteth, and speaketh vnto all men. But the Ismaelites may not lawfully behold him. But the Pilgrims who goe vnto that famous house, called Meka, seated in the Countrey of Eliman, from the most remote Countries, trauell this way through an earnest desire they haue to salute Calipha; and hauing entred into the Palace, they crie out, O our Lord, the light of the Ismaelites, and the Sunne-beame of our Law, shew vs the brightnesse of thy face: to whose words hee inclineth not his minde. But then, the Princes his familiar friends and seruants speake vnto him with these words: Our Lord, spread abroad thy peace vpon these men comming from remote Countries, whom an admirable desire hath enforced to flye vnto the shadow of thy glory. In the selfe same houre therefore, taking vp the wing of his garment, hee letteth it downe out of the Window, which, the Pilgrims comming vnto it, religiously kisse. And hauing heard this answer from one of those familiar Princes, Goe in peace, for now our Lord, the light of the Ismaelites hath receiued, and giuen you peace: for he is supposed by them to be, as it were, he whom they call their Prophet. They therefore most ioyfully returne euery one into their Countrey, after they haue beene dismissed in this manner with such speech of the Prince, and returning home, are receiued by their brethren, kinsfolke, and familiar and inward friends, with the kissing of their garments. And euery one of those Princes who serue the Calipha, haue their feuerall Palaces within that huge Palace, yet they goe all bound with Iron Chaines, and ouer all their houses there are watchfull keepers set, lest any one should attempt any sudden inuouation against that mightie King. For it happened once, that his brethren conspiring against him, made a certaine other, one of their number, ruler ouer them; wherefore he established it by decree, that all the children of his whole stocke and familie, should be bound with Iron Chaines, lest they should againe enterprize the like attempt against the mightie King. But euery one liueth in a priuate Court, reuerenced with great honour, and hath Cities, Townes, and Countries, from the which he yeerely receiueh tributes and reuenues, brought vnto him by the Tresurers: and they feast, and giue themselues to pleasure all their whole life. But in that Palace of the mightie King, there are buildings of an admirable greatnesse, the Pillars whereof are of siluer and gold, and the inner parts of the houses are ouer-laide with these metals, and beautified with all kind of Precious stones and Pearles: out of the which Palace he goeth forth once only in the yeere, on that festiual day or Easter, which they call Ramadan. And on that day, great multitudes of men from diuers and remote Countries, flocke together to see his face. And he is carried vpon a Mule, attired in princely garments, intermingled with gold and siluer, hauing his head adorned with a Myter, shining with stones of incomparable price: but he weareth a blacke Handkerchiefe vpon the Myter, by carrying whereof, he openly confesseth the shamefacednesse of this world; as if he should haue said: This great Maiestie which yee behold, darkenesse will obscure in the day of death. Moreouer, all the Nobilitie of the Ismaelites accompanie him, attired with very goodly and costly garments, and sitting vpon Horses, the Princes of Arabia, the Princes of Media, and Persia, and the Princes of the Countrey of Tuboth, which is three moneths iourney distant from Arabia. But he commeth forth of his Palace to the great house (as they call it) of Prayer, built in the gate Bosra: for that is accounted their greatest house of Prayer. Moreouer, as well the men as women, all who celebrate that day are cloathed with Purple and silken garments. You may also finde through all the wayes and streets, all kindes of Instruments, Songs, and Dances, playing when he passeth by: and Calipha himselfe the mightie King is saluted by all, in these words: Peace bee vpon thee our Lord the the King, He, I say, kisseth his owne garment, wherewith sometimes, but sometimes only with his hand stretched forth, he signifieth peace and salutation vnto them. And thus hee goeth vnto the Court of prayer, where ascending into a wooden Turret, he interpreteth his Law in a Sermon, from an higher place. But then the wise men of the Ismaelites arising, hauing wished all happinesse vnto him, congratulate his greatnesse and excellent pietie, evidently knowne by many examples, which they desire to be perpetuall. And surely, all enlarge this gratulation, answering, Amen. And afterward he blesseth them all. Then presently a Camell being brought, is killed by him, for this is accounted their Paschall feast, of the flesh whereof he commandeth small pieces to be distributed to those Princes his seruants, who are to taste of the beast slaine by their sacred King, at which present they greatly reioyce. And these things being performed after their manner, they depart from that house of Prayer. But the King returneth another way: then hee came, by the banke of the Riuer Tigris, himselfe alone. For the rest of the Princes and seruants returne by the Riuer, being carried in Boates before him, vntill hee enter into the Palace. And that way is diligently kept: all the yeere by Watchmen, lest peraduenture any one enter into that place, which is sacred, through the steps of his feete. All that whole yeere after he is coneyned within the Palace, neuer to goe forth to any other place. But he is of a faire behauiour, and according to that sect of his, iust and godly. And hee hath built a Palace beyond the Riuer, on the very banke of a certaine Arme of the Riuer Euphrates, which floweth from the other side of the Citie, in the which he hath built great houses and Market-places, and also Hospitals, fit for the curing of poore sicke men, and almost threescore Physicians Store-houses are reckoned there, being all abundantly furnished with all necessary kindes of Spices, Medicines, and other fit things brought from the Kings house: whatsoever therefore is thought commodious for Medicine, and food, and for the whole cure, is giuen to all the sicke brought thither, at the Kings cost; vntill they happen to bee recovered. Besides, there is another Palace in the same place, which is called Dar Almaraphan, that is, the house of Mercie, for the including of all mad persons found in the Countrey; euery one whereof are bound with Iron Chaines, vntill they returne to their wits: for then they are euery one permitted to depart vnto their houses; the men to whom that charge is committed, looking vnto it, and examining the same euery moneth. All these things are ordained by that King, for the bestowing of almes and benefit commonly, to all comming thither, who are either mad, or troubled with any other disease. For, as we haue said, he is of a mercifull and kind disposition, and of a good minde.

And in the same Citie, called Bagdad, there are about a thousand Iewes, liuing in great quietnesse and peace, and very honestly vied vnder the dominion of that King, surnamed, the Great, among whom there are some very learned men, the chiefe of the Assemblies, greatly conuersant in the studie of the Law of Moses. But there are ten Assemblies there, the head of the greatest whereof, is Samuel the sonne of Heli: next, the heads of the other Assemblies are, Gaon Sagan the Leuite, of the second: but of the third, Daniel Sod: of the fourth, Eliezer Habbaber: and Eliezer Ben Tsamabb, head of the Order, who is descended from the Prophet Samuel, and with his Brethren playeth cunningly vpon muscall Instruments, that is, vpon the Psalteries, with the same skill which was then vied when the house of the Sanctuarie was yet standing: hee is head of the fift Assembly: and of the sixt Hhasadai, the flower of his Companions: Haggai Hanaassi ruleth the seuenth Assembly: Esdra the eight: Abraham, surnamed Abutabar the ninth: the tenth and last, Zachau Ben Basathnai. All these are called Vacant, because they doe no other thing but gouerne the Societie. But they exercise iudgements, and execute iustice to all the Iewes of that Countrey all the dayes of the weeke, except the second day wherein they all assemble before Great Samuel, the head of the Assembly, and honor of the Iacobides, who, together with those ten Vacants, the heads of the Assemblies, doe iustice to euery one requiring the same. Notwithstanding the greatest of all these, is Daniel the sonne of Hhasdai, called the head of the Captiuitie, who hath a booke of his Genealogie, deriued euen from Dauid. The Iewes call him our Lord, and the head of the Captiuitie. And the Ismaelites call him Sidna Ben Dauid, that is, our Lord, the sonne of Dauid. And he hath great authoritie ouer all the Congregations of the Israelites, vnder the hand of Amir Almonin, Lord of the Ismaelites: whose decree was this, pertaining euen vnto his Posteritie, adding and deliuering also a Seale of authoritie ouer all the Colledges of the Israelites, whatsoever contayned within the iurisdiction of his Law, to whom for the cause of honor, he hath commanded all men, as well Ismaelites as Iewes, to arise vp and salute, and Nations also of whatsoever faction; he that shall doe otherwise, let him be punished with an hundred stripes. But when he commeth forth to visit the Great King, he is guarded with a great number of Horse-men, Iewes and Gentiles accompanying him, a Cryer going before him, proclayming these words: Prepare yee the way for the Lord the sonne of Dauid, as it is meete; and they proclaime it in their Language. But he is carried vpon an Horse, cloathed with lilken and embroydered garments, he adorneth his head with a Miter, vpon the Miter he weareth a white Shash, and vpon the Shash a Chaine. And all the Colledges of the Israelites of the Countrey of Senaar, Persia, Gharfan, and Seba, which is now called Aliman, and Diarbeich, and of all the Countrey of Mesopotamia, and the Prouince Rut, whose Inhabitants dwell in the Mountaynes

Colledges of all these Countries, through the authoritie and power of this man, Prince of the Captiuitie, chuse euery one their Head and Minister, who being chosen, come vnto him to receiue authoritie, and imposition of hands: and vnto him, Gifts and Presents are brought from all the borders of the Land. And he hath publike houses, let for aduantage, which they call Fondaci, and hath also Orchards and Gardens in Babylon, and very many possessions receiued from his Ancestors by the right of Inheritance, but no man dare violently take or carrie away any thing from him. He hath also houses to be let, and of Merchandizing, for the vse of the Jewes. He receiueh also a certaine tribute yeerely out of the Markets, and from the Merchants of the Land, besides that which he receiueh, brought vnto him from remote Countries. Therefore he is exceeding rich, and diligently conuersant and learned, as well in the sacred as in other bookes of humane knowledge: and he feedeth many of the Israelites by his daily hospitalitie. But, at what time any man of this Familie is made Head of the Captiuitie, hee bring-geth forth great summes of money, and giueth first vnto the King himselfe, and next vnto the Princes and Magistrates. And the same day wherein the King layeth his hand vpon him, to grant him authoritie and principalitie, the second Chariot of the King is prepared and couered for him to ascend into it, and to be brought from the Palace vnto his owne house with great pompe and singing, and with the striking vp of Drums, and sound of the Fluits. But he himselfe exer-ciseth the imposition of hands towards the men of the Assemblie. And the Jewes Inhabitants of that Metropolitan Citie are the Disciples of b Wise-men, and very rich: and eight and twentie Synagogues are numbred in the Citie of Bagdat it selfe, and in Parech, or the Suburbs which are beyond Tigris. For the Riuer runneth through the Metropolitan Citie it selfe. But that great Synagogue, which appertayneth to that man who is the Head of the Captiuitie, is built with marble stones, diuers and most excellent, of all colours, garnished with Gold and Siluer: and in the very Pillars, Verses of the Psalmes are read, ingrauen in golden letters. Moreouer, before the Arke, the ranks of ten seats are there distinguished with marble steps; in the highest whereof, the Head of the Captiuitie sitteth with the chieft of the Familie of David. But the Metropolitan Citie it selfe is great, in the which also a Citie, like a Castle is contayned, fortified with a wall of three miles circuit about. The Countrey aboundeth with the most excellent Palme-trees, Gardens and Orchards, of all the Land of Senaar, and is frequented by the most gallant Merchants and Factors of all Countries, and maintayneth learned men and Philosophers, and Students of all the Mathematicall Artes, Diuinations, and Inchantments.

Departing two dayes iourney from thence I came to Gehiaga, the ancient name whereof was Resen, sometimes a great and very famous Citie, in the which there are almost fise thousand Israelites; and they haue a great Synagogue, with a place of buriall next vnto the Synagogue: 40 and in the burying place a Caue, famous for the Sepulchres of certaine ancient learned men.
One dayes iourney distant from hence, standeth that ancient Babel, contayning thirtie miles in compasse, but now vtterly destroyed, where the ruines of Nabuchodonosors Palace are yet seene, inaccessible to men, by reason of the diuers and noysome kinds of Serpents and Dragons liuing there. Not aboue twentie miles distant from these ruines, twentie thousand Israelites dwell, who powre forth their prayers in the Synagogues; the chiefe whereof is that vppermost ancient Floore of Daniel, built with square stones and Bricks, and the Temple and Palace of Na-buchodonosor of the same matter, and the Fornace of burning fire, into the which, Hananias, Misael, and Azarias were cast. And all these things are seene in the Valley well knowne to all. From thence we passed fise miles to Hbilan, where are almost ten thousand Israelites, diuided 50 into foure Synagogues, whereof one was the Synagogue of MAar, who lieth buried there:
next vnto whom also, are the Sepulchres of Great Zegbarm the sonne of Hama, and of Great MAar: and the Jewes daily assemble thither to pray. From thence, are foure miles vnto the Tower which the Children of the diuision began to build, which was made of that kinde of Bricke, which in the Arabian Language is called, Lagzar. The length of the Foundation con-teyneth almost two miles, but the bredth of the walls is two hundred and fortie cubits: and where it is broadest, it contayneth an hundred Canes. Betweene the space of ten Canes, there are wayes made out at length throughout the whole building in the forme of a wreathed rundle; ascending which from the highest place, the fields are beheld twentie miles off: for the Coun-trei it selfe is very broad and plaine. But this building was sometimes stricken with lightning 60 from Heauen, and destroyed euen vnto the lowest part.

Halfe a dayes iourney from hence is Naphabb, where are almost two hundred Jewes: and the Synagogue of that Great Isaac, surnamed Naphbans, is there, who lieth buried right ouer against it. Three leagues from thence is the Synagogue of Ezechiel the Prophet, nigh vnto the Riuer

- Riuer Euphrates; and in the same place right ouer against the Synagogue, are threescore Towers in number, and betwene euery Tower also, there are seuerall Synagogues, and in the Court of the Synagogue there is an Arke; and behind the Synagogue, the Monument of Ezechiel the sonne of Buz the Priest, vnder a great and very goodly Vault, built by Iechonias King of Iuda, together with fve and thirtie thousand Iewes, who followed him by Euilmerodak deliuered out of Prison. And this place is betwene the Riuer Cobar, and the Riuer Euphrates. And Iechonias, and they who came with him, are engrauen in the very walls; Iechonias first, but Ezechiel last. And this place is holy, euen vnto this day. And vnto that place at a certaine time, many assemble for the cause of prayer, from the beginning of the yeere vnto the feast of Jewish Pilgrimage yeerely.
- 10 Expiations: and there they liue most pleasant dayes. And that principall man, whom they call the Head of the Captiuitie, with the other Heads of the Assemblies, come hither also from Bagdat, and abide all in that field for two and twentie miles together, pitching their Tents in diuers places. Moreover, the Arabian Merchants come thither, and the greatest and most frequented Faires are kept there. But at this time, a great Booke, renowned for authoritie and antiquitie, written by Ezechiel the Prophet, is brought forth, wherein they reade on the day of Expiation. And vpon the Sepulchre of Ezechiel, a Lampe continually burneth day and night, since it was first lighted by the same Prophet, for the which, Oyle and Thread are ordinarily distributed and tempered. There is also a certaine great sacred Temple there, full of bookes kept as well from the time of the first house, as of the second: and it is and was the
- 20 some, that they who had no children, should consecrate their Bookes in that place. Moreover, Vowes are made in that place, to be performed by the Iewes dwelling in Media, and Persia. The principall men also of the Ismaelites resort hither to pray, among whom the authoritie and reuerence of the Prophet Ezechiel is great, the name of which place in their Language is, Darmelibha, that is, The house of the Congregation: and thither all the Arabians come for cause of prayer. About halfe a mile distant from this place, the Sepulchres of Hananias, Misael, and Azarias, are seene, with each of their great and goodly Arches. And although warre happen in those Countries, there is no mortall man that dare violate or touch these places; neither of the Iewes nor Ismaelites, for the reuerence of the Prophet Ezechiel. From thence you trauell three miles to the Citie Alkotsonath, in the which there are almost three hundred Iewes, and
- 30 there also are the Sepulchres of Great Papha, and Huna, and Master Ioseph Suenus, and of Ioseph the sonne of Hhama. And right ouer against euery one of them, there are seuerall Synagogues, in the which the Iewes daily assemble for the cause of prayer. From hence to Ghein Sapha are three leagues, where is the Sepulchre of Nahum the sonne of Elcusans the Prophet. It is one dayes iourney from thence to Caphar le Paras, a famous place for the Sepulchres of Hhassidai, and Ghakiba, and Dusa. Capharmehamidbar is halfe a dayes iourney distant from thence, where Master David, and Iehuda, and Kuberia, and Sehora, and Abba lie buried. One dayes iourney from thence is the Riuer Liga, where the Sepulchre of King Sedechia is, beautified with a great Arch. One dayes iourney from hence standeth the Citie Kupha, famous for the monument of King Iechonias, of great workmanship, right ouer against which, a Synagogue is built; and in
- 40 this place there are almost seuen thousand Iewes. One dayes iourney and an halfe from thence standeth Suria, which the Ancient called, Matha Mahbasia, in the which the Heads of the Captiuitie, and the chiefe of the Assemblies, were in the beginning: and great men are buried there, Sarica, and his sonne Haai, and Saadias the sonne of Pjumas, and Semuel the sonne of Hhophin the Priest, and Sephanias the sonne of Chussi the sonne of Gedolia the Prophet, and very many other of the Heads of the Captiuitie, Princes of the Familie of David, and principall men of the Assemblies, who abode here in the beginning, before the destruction thereof. You trauell two dayes iourney from hence to Sephithib, situated in Nabardagha. But from thence to Elnachar, is one dayes iourney and an halfe, called also Pebeditha, seated vpon the banke of Euphrates, where his Synagogue is seene, who by the figure Antonomasia, is called Rab, and of
- 50 Samuel, nigh vnto the which also are their Monuments.

Strange reports, if true, of the Aliman Iewes. Of Persia, and DAVID EL ROI.
Of the Nisbor Iewes, and some places of India.

- 60 From thence traueiling through the Defart, you goe vnto the Countrey Seba, which is now called, the Land of Aliman, bordering vpon the Countrey Senaar on the North, the length whereof containeth one and twentie dayes iourneys to be made through the Defarts: and in this Countrey those Iewes dwell, who are called, the Sonnes of Recab, otherwise, the men of Theima. For Theima is the beginning of their Dominion, whom now Hanan Hanassi gouerneth. And the Citie of Theima it selfe is great, and populous. Their Countrey is extended sixteene dayes iourney, betwene the Mountaines which Vertomannus mentioneth Arabian Iewes potent and cruell, secured more by Desarts and Hills, then any greatnesse of their owne: as also in Abassia some Iewes liue in manner free, on steep Hills. But this freedome is a continual slavery, and siege; the Arabians alwaies endangering the one, and as it were, besieging them, as the Abassines the other. Neither yet doe I thinke but their Countrey is here enlarged far, by the Iewish relations to our Author. For, Cities and Townes in Arabia seeme not to be so frequent and populous.

All the Iewes also desire the same; to wit, the men of the Countrey of Theima, and Telimaas, in the which there are almost an hundred thousand Iewes: among whom Selomoh Hanassi, that is the chiefe, and his brother Hhanan Hanassi, are of the Progenie of Dauid the King: which the Booke of the Familie from age to age deriued, plainly declareth. And all these goe with their garments rent, and fast fortie daies, for all the Iewes sakes liuing in Captiuitie. But that Prouince hath about fortie Cities, two hundred Townes, and an hundred Castles. But the Metropolis and Head is Thenai, and the surname of the Iewes inhabiting in all those Cities, containeth almost three hundred thousand men. Moreouer, that chiefe Citie is largely compassed with very wide and ample walls, so that it hath fields within it, and affoordeth the abilitie and commoditie of sowing and reaping Corne. For, it containeth fiftene miles in length, and as many also in bredth. And the Palace of Salomon Hanassi is there: and the Citie it selfe is very faire, and furnished with most pleasant Gardens and Orchards. Tilmaas also is no lesse goodly and great a Citie, which about an hundred thousand Iewes inhabit, seated betweene two very high Mountaines, and very strongly fenced, full of learned and wise men, of the which, many are rich. Chibar is three dayes journey distant from Tilmaas: and they report, that they are Reuben, and Gad, and the Tribe of Manasse, taken by Salmanasar the King of the Assyrians and sent hither, and that they built these great and well fortified Cities, and going forth of these places they made warres, and yet warre with all the bordering Kingdomes; and that no man is able to come vnto them, by reason of the vast and huge Desarts, voyd of all succour for eightene dayes journey together. And Chibar is also a great Citie, where fiftie thousand Israelites dwell, whereof many are learned men, and very many most valiant, who make warre with the children of Senaar, and with the Northerne Countries, and the bordering Inhabitants of Eliman. But this is Hodu, that is pertaining to India, from which you are to trauell fise and twentie dayes journey vnto the Riuer Vira, which runneth through the Countrey of Eliman, where three thousand Israelites dwell. Trauelling seuen dayes journey from hence, you come to Neasat, where are seuen thousand Israelites, among whom, Nedaiar is accounted a great man. But, from thence you trauell fise dayes journey to Bosra, seated on the Riuer Tigris, in which, there are a thousand Israelites, of the which very many are the Disciples of the Wise-men, and many are accounted rich.

Two dayes journey distant from hence, is the Riuer Samara, the beginning of the Countrey of Persia, with a Citie of the same name, wherein a thousand and fise hundred Iewes dwell. And that place is famous for the Sepulchre of Esdra, the Scribe & Priest, who comming Embassador from Hierusalem to Artaxerxes the King, dyed there. But before his Sepulchre a great Synagogue is built by the ancient Fathers, and on the other side, the Ismaelites haue built an House of Prayer, for the great affection they bare towards that man: which also is the cause, that the Ismaelites loue the Iewes resorting vnto that place to pray. Foure miles distant from thence standeth Chuzsethan; called Elam in former time, the Countrey of the Elamites, a very great Citie, but for the most part, now destroyed, wasted, and without Inhabitants: among the ruins wherof, Susan Habira is yet to be seene, the huge Palace of K. Assuerus, built with very goodly workmanship, many parts and examples of Art yet remayning of that Princely and admirable building. In this Citie there are seuen thousand Iewes, who are assembled in fourteene Synagogues; and before one of them standeth the Sepulchre of Daniel: and the Riuer Tigris runneth through the Citie it selfe, and also diuideth the habitation of the Iewes: and on the one side of the Riuer, they are all very rich whosoever dwell there, and they haue Market places very well furnished with Merchandizes and Trading: but on the other dwell all the meaner and poorer fort, who haue no Markets, no Trading, nor Gardens or Orchards, so that vpon a certaine time they conceiued enuie against the other, and supposed that the riches and fertilitie happened vnto them, through the Neighbour-hood of Daniel the Prophet buried there: wherefore they required of them, that the Sepulchre of Daniel might bee permitted to bee translated vnto their Quarter. Which when it was constantly denied, they first fell to brawling, and afterward to battell and fight, with great slaughter on both sides for many dayes together, vntill at length being both weary, they agreed vpon Couenants and conditions, that euery other yeere, the Tombe stone of Daniel should be carried ouer vnto the other side: and that for some little while was done and renued, but in the meane space it happened, that Senigar Saa the Sonne of Saa the mightie Emperour of all the Kings of the Persians came thither, whose command fise and forty Kingdomes obay.

Myrrhe or Muske.

He is called in the Arabian Language Sultan alporas alkabir, that is, The Great King of Persia: and his Dominion is extended from the mouth of the Riuer Samra, euen vnto the Citie Samarboth, and vnto the Riuer Gozen, and vnto the Countrey Ghisbor, and the Cities of Media, and the Montaynes Haphthon, and vnto those excellent Countries, where beasts are maintayned, from which dissolued Myrrhe cometh. And all the Dominion of this Emperour containeth foure monethes and foure dayes iourney. When therefore hauing sometime staid in this City, he had seene the Tombe stone of Daniel to bee carried ouer from one quarter of the Citie vnto the other, and that very many of the Iewes and Ismaelites went with it, demanding and vnderstanding the cause, he thought it a shamefull thing, that such irreuerence towards Daniel should bee tolerated: but hauing diligently measured the space betweene both parts, hee hung vp the Tombe stone of Daniel put into an Arke of Glasse, in that middle place, fastened to an huge Beame with Brazen Chaines, and commanded a great Temple to be built, dedicated to the vse of a Synagogue, and open for all men of the whole World, and denied to no mortall man, whether Iew or Aramite purposing to enter into the same to pray. And that Arke hangeth vpon the Beame euen vntill this day. Moreouer, that Emperour forbade by an expresse Edict, that no man should take fishes out of the Riuer for one mile downe the Riuer, and for another mile vp the Riuer, for the reuerence and honour of Daniel.

From hence to Robad-Bar are three dayes iourneyes, where also, almost twentie thousand Israelites dwell: among whom there are very many Disciples of the Wisemen, and also rich; but these liue as Captiues vnder the power and authoritie of a strange Prince. In two dayes iourney from thence you come to the Riuer Vaanath, where are foure thousand Iewes, almost. But foure dayes iourney from that Riuer, lyeth the Countrey Molbhaath, the Inhabitants whereof beleue not the Doctrine of the Ismaelites. But they dwell in very great Mountaynes and they obey an Elder, whose seate is in the Countrey Alchefsifin: and among these, there are two Colledges ^a of the Israelites, and they goe forth to the warres together with them. Nor are they subiect to the Dominion of the King of Persia, who liue in very high Mountaynes, from whence descending they inuade the bordering Countries, and driue away booties; and returne againe into their Mountaynes. They feare the force and violence of no man. But the Iewes who dwell among them, are the Disciples of the Wise-men, and obay the Head of the Captiuitie of Babylon. You trauell fise dayes iourney from hence to Ghaaria, where are fise and twentie thousand Israelites. And it is the beginning of the Vniuersities ^b of the Inhabitants of the Mountaynes Haphthon, which it is certainly knowne, to be more then an hundred in number. And in these places, the Countrey of Media beginneth. And these are of the first Captiuitie carryed away by King Salmanasar. But they speake the Chalday Language, and among them are the Disciples of Wise-men. And the chiefe Citie Ghamaria pertayning to the Kingdome of Persia is neere vnto them within one dayes iourney. But they are vnder the power and dominion of the King of Persia, to whom they pay Tribute. And the Tribute appointed in all the Kingdome of the Ismaelites, is, that all the Males aboue fiftene yeares old, should pay yeerely, one Golden Amircus apiece. And the Golden piece of Money called Amircus, valueth one Spanish Morabetine piece of Gold and an halfe.

It is now twelue yeeres since a certayne man, named Dauid Elroi, arose out of the Citie Ghamaria, who was the Disciple of Hhasdai, the Head of that Captiuitie, and of Iacob the honourable, Head of the Assembly of Leui, in the Metropolitan Citie of Baghdad, and became very learned in the Law of Moses, and in the Bookes of Doctrine, and also in all externall wisdom, and in the Language and Writing of the Ismaelites, and in the Bookes of the Magicians and Inchanters. He therefore put on this minde, that he would rayse Armes against the King of Persia, and gathering together those Iewes, who dwelt in the Mountaynes Haphthon, making warre with all Nations, hee would goe vnto Hierusalem to winne it by assault. And that hee might perswade the Iewes thereunto, he vsed lying and deceitfull signes, affirming, that hee was sent from God to vanquish Hierusalem, and to free them from the yoke of the Nations; so that with many of the Iewes, he procured credit vnto himselfe, and obtayned the name of their Messias. The King of the Persians hearing the fame of this matter, sent for him to talke with him, vnto whom hee went without any feare at all; and being demanded whether he were the King of the Iewes, hee boldly answered, that it was so; and forth-with he was commanded to be apprehended, and cast in Prison: in the which who so are included by the Kings sentence, are kept there all their life. But that Prison is in the Citie Dabasthan, nigh adioyning to the great Riuer Gozen: Now after three dayes, a Councell of the Princes and Ministers being gathered together by the King, in the

which they determined to consult and treat concerning this attempt of Innouation begunne by the Iewes, suddenly that Dauid was present there, looked out of Prison of his owne accord, no man knowing thereof; whom when the King saw, wondring he demanded: who hath brought thee hither, or deliuered thee out of Prison? to whom hee answering: Mine owne wisdom, saith he, and my industry. For I am nothing afraid of thee, or of thy seruants. Then the King crying out, Apprehend him, saith he. To whom the Princes and seruants answered, that surely, his voice was heard of all, but that his shape was seene of no man. Wherefore the King vehemently wondering at his wisdom, was astonished. But, hee saith against the King: Behold, I make my way, and hee beganne to goe before, the King following him: but all the Nobilitie and Seruants followed the King. And when they came to the banke of the Riuer, Dauid spreading abroad the Napkin which he carried vpon the waters, leaping in, passed ouer; and at that time he was seene of all, wondring at the Spectacle of his passing ouer, whom to pursue and take with little Boates, they attempted in vaine, and all proclaimed, that no Inchanter in the World might be compared vnto him: but hauing trauelled the same day ten dayes journey, comming to Elghamarai, through the vertue of an vninterpretable name, hee declared vnto the Iewes what had hapned vnto him, they wondring at the wisdom of the man. But the King of the Persians sending Messengers vnto Bagdad, certified Almirus Almunadinus the great Calpha of the Ismaelites, of this matter, & requested that he would cause Dauid Elroi to be with-held from such Enterprizes by the principal head of the captiuitie, and the chief Rulers of the Assemblies; otherwise vnlesse they took order for this matter, he threatned publike destruction to al the Iews living in the Kingdome of Persia. All the Vniuersities of the Countrey of Persia stricken with exceeding great feare of the matter, sent letters vnto that principal man, who was accounted the head of the captiuitie & to the heads of all the Assemblies, whatsoeuer they were remayning in Bagdad, to this purpose: Why shall we dye in your eyes, as well we as all the Vniuersities subiect vnto this Kingdom? restrayne this man, we beseech you, least innocent blood be shed. Therefore the Head of the Captiuitie, and the Chiefe Rulers of the Assemblies wrote these or the like Letters vnto Dauid: We will giue you to understand, that the time of our deliuey is not yet come, and that our signes haue not yet beene seene; for a man is not made strong through the wind. Wherefore, foretelling, wee enioyne you altogether to abstayne from such determinations, enterprizes, and attempts; if otherwise, be reiectd of all Israel. They also by Messengers aduertized Zachai Hanassi, who was in the Countrey Assur, and Ioseph surnamed the Seer, Burhan Alpelech, living there, that Dauid Elroi might be repressed by Letters written from them; which was diligently regarded by them, but all in vaine: for he would not forsake that wicked way, wherein he persisted, vntill a certaine King of the Togarmim arose called Zinaldin, who is subiect vnto the King of Persia, and hee sending ten thousand pieces of Gold vnto the Father in Law of Dauid Elroi, perswaded him to end these troubles, by killing his Sonne in Law priuily: which when hee had vndertaken to performe, he thrust Dauid thorow with a Sword, lying in bed at his house; and this was the end of his determinations, and vaine subtiltie. Nor yet, he being dead, was the anger of the King of the Persians appeased towards those people of the Mountaynes, and other Iewes subiect to his Dominion: wherefore the Iewes, by Messengers, required helpe of the Head of the Captiuitie. He therefore going vnto the King himselfe, appeased him with mild and wise speeches, and hauing presented and giuen many Talents of Gold, he so confirmed him, that afterward great quietnesse happened to the whole Countrey.

But from this Mountayne, which wee haue described, you trauell ten dayes journey to great Hbamdau, and the principall Citie of the Countrey of Media, in the which there are about fiftie thousand Iewes: and in that Citie, right ouer against one of the Synagogues, are the Sepulchres of Mardocheus, and Esther. Debarzethaan is foure dayes journey distant from hence, where foure thousand Iewes dwell nigh vnto the Riuer Gozen. But from thence you trauell seuen dayes journey to Asbahan a very great Metropolitan Citie, contayning twelue miles space, in the which there are about fiftene thousand Israelites, ouer whom Great Salom ruleth, made Go- uernour, by the Head of the Captiuitie, ouer this Vniuersitie, and all the rest of the Israelites, who dwell in the Castles of Persia.

Departing from hence, I trauelled foure dayes journey to Siaphaz, the Metropolitan Citie of Persia, and also the most ancient, called Persidis, from whence the name was giuen to the whole Countrey, in the which there are almost ten thousand Iewes. From Siaphaz in seuen dayes journey you come to the Citie Gimah, seated in a very large place nigh vnto the banke of the Riuer Gozen, frequented with the most famous Trading of all Nations and Languages, in a Plaine and very ample soyle, where are about eight thousand Iewes. The furthest Citie of this Kingdome, great and famous Samarcheneth, standeth fide dayes journey from Gimah, where are fiftie thousand Israelites, ouer whom Master Abdias Hanassi ruleth, and among them, there are many wise and rich men. In foure dayes journey from hence you come to Tubot a Metropolitan Citie, in the Woods whereof sweet swelling Mosse * is found. Trauelling continually eight and twentie dayes journey from thence, I came vnto the Mountaynes Nisbon, which hang ouer the Riuer Gozen flowing from them, and are ascribed vnto the Kingdome of Persia, where are many Israelites.

- raelites*. And they say, * that in those Cities of the Mountaynes Nisbor, foure Tribes of the Israelites inhabit, carried away in the first Captiuitie by Salmanasar the King of the Assyrians, to wit, Dan, Zabulon, Affer, and Nephthali: as it is written. And he carryed them away into Lahh-lahh and Habor, the Mountaynes Gozen. Mountaynes of Media. Their Countrey is extended twentie dayes iourney in length, with many Cities and Castles inhabited; all Mountaynous; almost by which the River Gozen runneth on the one side. But the Inhabitants themselves are vnder the subiection of no Nation, but are ruled by a certaine Gouernour; whose name is now, Ioseph Amarcala a Leuite: and among them are the Disciples of Wise-men. They till grounds and make warre with the Borderers, the Children of Chus, and trauell on warfare through the

They haue amitie with Copher Althorech, worshippers of the winds, a people who leade their liues in the Desarts, These neither eat bread, nor drinke wine: but eat the raw flesh of beasts, as well cleane as vncleane, and those either new killed, and yet trembling through the life blood, or also dry, but vnboyled, and also deuoure the members taken from liuing beasts. They want a Nose, but in stead thereof they haue two holes in their faces, wherewith they breathe: They are friends to the Israelites. But, it happened fifteene yeares since, that inuading the Countrey of Persia with a great Armie, they vanquished the Metropolitan Citie Rai, and hauing made a mightie slaughter vtterly wasted it, and spoyling the houses and fields, carried away a great bootie, returning through the Desarts, the like example whereof, for many Ages, was neuer seene or heard in Persia. Wherefore the King of the Persians being vehemently enraged, determined vtterly to abolish from the Earth, the name of that Nation, first, hatefull to
- 20 him alone, not daring to attempt any such matter in the times of his Ancestors. Leuying therefore an Armie for warfare, and seeking some Guide, to whom the places of that Nation were knowne, a certaine man voluntarily offered himselfe, who affirmed, that hee was of the same Nation, and knew their dwellings. But being demanded what was needfull for the performing of the Voyage, he answered, that they had need of prouision of bread and water for fifteene dayes iourney: which of necessitie should be spent in a very great Wildernesse: following whose counsell, when they had ended fifteene dayes iourney, beeing destitute of necessarie food and drinke for men and beasts, yet notwithstanding, they neither saw the place whether they intended to goe, nor any tokens of habitation. The Guide therefore being called for by the King,
- 30 when he was demanded, where is your word, whereby you vndertooke to shew vs the Enemies; answered, that he had gone out of the way: wherefore, at the commandement of the angry King he was put to death.
- And now, part of the men and beasts began to perish through famine. But by the Kings Decree it was publikely commanded, that whatsoeuer prouision of victuall was found with any man, should be imparted to the company, and that the beasts should also bee diuided. After this manner, therefore they wandered thirteene dayes more through the Wildernesse, and at length came vnto the Mountaynes Nisbor, in which the Iewes inhabit. The Armies therefore of the Persians rested themselves in the Gardens and Orchards, whereof there were very many in that place, and nigh vnto the Fountaynes: for it was the season of the yeare when fruits are ripe.
- 40 They therefore ate and spoyled, and saw no man comming forth vnto them: but beheld very many Cities and Towers in the Mountaynes afarre off.
- Therefore the King sent two of his Seruants to demand, what Nation dwelled in those Mountaynes, and that they should passe ouer vnto them, going ouer the River either by Boat or swimming. But they found a great Bridge fortified with Towers furnished, and with a doore shut; but beyond the Bridge, there was a great Citie. The Spyes therefore crying out before the Bridge, a certaine man came forth, by whom being demanded, what doe you seeke, or of what Country are you, they vnderstood them not, vntil a certaine Interpreter came, who vnderstood the Persian Language: to whom demanding, they answered, we are the Seruants of the King of the Persians, sent to demand who you are, and whom you serue. To whom he answered, we
- 50 are Iewes, and serue no King or Prince of the Gentiles, but a certaine principall man of the Iewes. And being demanded concerning the worshippers of the winds, the children of Chus of Cophar Althorech, they answered; they are a Nation ioyned in league with vs: and whosoever goeth about to hurt them, wee suppose hee would harne vs. The Spyes therefore returning vnto the King, reported the whole matter vnto him; who was vehemently afraid. But the next day after, the Iewes denounced warre against the King of Persia, who said, that hee came not to make warre against them, but against his Enemies of Cophar Althorech. And if they would fight with him, he would reuenge that iniurie, by killing all the Iewes who dwelt in the Kingdome of Persia: for he was very well assured, that they were stronger then hee in that place; besides, hee intreated that they would not assaile him with battell, but would suffer him to fight it out by dint of Sword against Copher Althorech, and that they would sell him prouision of victuall and food conuenient for his Armie. Consulting therefore together, it pleased the Iewes to consent vnto the King of Persia, for all the Israelites sakes dwelling in his Kingdome. The King therefore being admitted with all his Armie, spent fifteene dayes there, beeing most honourably entertayned among them: but in the meane space, the Iewes declared the whole matter by Messengers and Letters, vnto their Confederates Copbar Althorech: which being knowne, gathering their forces together, they expected the enemy at the passage of the Mountaynes; and in a conuenient place for their purpose, they gaue the Persian so mightie an ouerthrow, comming vnto them, that being vanquished and put to flight, they compelled him to returne into his own Countrey with a very small number. But it happened, that one Iew of this Prouince named Moses, deceitfully seduced by a certaine Persian Horseman, followed the King of Persia, and when they came into Persia, being brought into seruitude, hee was possessed by the same Horseman. But, when at a certaine time, they who exercised their Bowes, sported in presence of the King, one Moses was shewed vnto him, who was most excellent in the dexteritie of shooting: who being demanded of the King by an Interpreter, openly declared the manner of his condition: and was presently enfranchised, clothed with Purple and Silken Garments, and enriched with Kingly Gifts: and was required, that he should receiue their Religion, the hope and condition of great Riches being propounded, and also the gouernment of the Kings House promised: which when he courteously denyed to doe, yet was he placed by the King, with great Salom the Prince of the Vniuersitie of Achphahan; whose Daughter also he married by consent of the Father, and the selte-same Moses told me all this Historie.

And when I departed out of these Countries, I went into the Countrey Chenazthian, nigh vnto which the Riuer Tigris runneth, which falling from thence runneth downe into Hodu, that is, the Indian Sea, and compasseth the Iland Nekrokis about the mouth thereof, contayning the space of sixe dayes iourney, in the which there is only one Fountaine, and they drinke no other water then what is gathered from the showres; for it wanteth Riuers, and that Land is neither sowed, nor tilled: yet is it very famous through the Trading of the Indians, and Ilands seated in the Indian Sea, and Merchants of the Countrey of Senaar, and Eliman, and Persia, bringing thither all sorts of Silken and Purple Garments, Hempe and Cotton, Flaxe, and Indian Cloth, which they call Moch, Wheate, Barley, Millet, and Oats great plentie, also all sorts of Meates and Pulse, which they barter and sell among themselves. But the Indian Merchants bring exceeding great plentie of Spices thither. And the Ilanders execute the office of Factors and Interpreters among the rest, and by this art only they liue. But in that place there are about five hundred Iewes.

Taking Ship from hence, sayling with a prosperous winde, in ten dayes I was brought to Kathipha, where are five thousand Iewes: in these places the stone called Bdellius is found, made by the wonderfull workmanship of Nature. For on the foure and twentieth day of the Moneth Nisan, a certaine dew falleth downe into the waters, which being gathered, the Inhabitants wrap vp together, and being fast closed, they cast it into the Sea, that it may sinke of it owne accord into the bottome of the Sea, and in the middle of the moneth Tisri, two men being let downe into the Sea by ropes, vnto the bottome, bring vp certaine creeping * Wormes which they haue gathered, into the open Ayre, out of the which (being broken and cleft) those stones are taken. In seuen dayes iourney from thence I came to Haaulam, which is the beginning of their Kingdome who worship the Sunne in stead of God; to wit, a Starre-gazing Nation descended from the Children of Chus. They are men of a blacke colour, sincere, and of very great fidelitie both in promises and receits, and also in gifts. They haue this custome, that such as come vnto them from other remote Countries, hauing receiued them into the Hauen, they cause their names to be set downe in writing, by three Scribes, and so carry their names vnto the King; and afterward bring the parties themselves also vnto him, whose Merchandises being receiued into his protection, the King commandeth to be left landed in the fields, without setting any watchman to keepe them. Moreouer, one Gouverner sitteth in a publike house, vnto whom, whatsoever any man in the whole Countrey hapneth to leese, is brought, and is easily receiued by the owner thereof, being there required, so that the certaine tokens be shewed, wherby the lost thing may be knowne. And this fidelitie and honest dealing is common and publike in all that Kingdome. All this country from Easter vnto the beginning of the yeere, through all the Spring time and Summer, burneth with outrageous heate: wherefore, from the third houre of the day vntill the Euening, all men lye close shut vp in their houses. But afterward, Candles and Lampes being lighted, and orderly set throughout all the streetes and markets, they worke and exercise their Arts and Professions all the night; for they cannot at all doe it in the day time by reason of the exceeding heate. And in this Countrey Pepper groweth vpon Trees planted by the Inhabitants in the fields of euery particular Citie. And euery one of them haue their proper Gardens, are assigned and knowne. The shrub it selfe is very little, and bringeth forth a white seede, which being being gathered by them, is put into Basons, and being steeped in hot water is set forth in the Sunne, that it might bee dried, and being hardned, may be preserved; and so it getteth a blacke colour. Cinamon and Ginger are found there, and very many other kindes of Spices. The Inhabitants of this Countrey burie not their dead, but being embalmed with diuers Drugs and Spices, they place them in seates, and cloathe them with Nets, set in a certaine order according to their seuerall families, but their flesh dryeth with the bones, and becommeth so stiffe that they seeme euen like vnto the liuing. And euery one of the liuing know their Ancestors from many yeeres descents. But they worship the * Sunne, with many and great Altars euery where built, about halfe a mile without the Citie. Commonly therefore, early in the morning they run forth and goe vnto the Sunne, vnto which vpon all the Altars there are Images consecrated, made by the Magicke Arts, according to the similitude of the circle of the Sunne; and when the Sunne ariseth, those Orbes seeme to be inflamed, and sound with a great crackling or rustling noyse. And they haue euery one their seuerall Box in their hands, as well the women as the men, and all together offer Incense to the Sunne. This way of theirs is folly vnto them. But among this Nation, in all places, the Jewes whose summe at the most amounteth to a thousand houses in all, are of no lesse blacke a colour then the Inhabitants themselues, yet are they good and honest men, and embracers of the Commandements, who obserue the Law of Moses, and are not accounted altogether vnskilfull in the bookes of Doctrine and Customes.

How they em-

Departing out of their Countrey, in two and twentie dayes I sayled vnto the Ilands Cheuerag, the Inhabitants whereof worship the Fire, and are called Dugbyn; but among them thirtie thousand Jewes dwell. And the Dugbyn haue their Priests in euery place, consecrated to the superstition of their Temples: But the Priests are the most skilful Sorcerers and Inchanters of the whole world, in euery kinde of this vanitie. And before euery Temple there is a great and large field, in the which a mightie fire burneth euery day, which they call Elhotha, and they vse to make their Children passe through this fire to purge them; and also cast their dead into the midst of the fire to be burned. Moreouer, there are some of the Nobilitie of the Land, who solemnely bequeathe or vow themselues to the fire aliue. But when any man of these declareth such his intended deuotion to his familiars, acquaintance, and kindred, presently with the great reioycing of all, and with the common voyce, hee heareth these words: Blessed art thou, and it shall be well with thee. On what day therefore the vow is to bee performed, being first entertained with a great Banquet, if he be rich, he is carried on Horse-backe, but if hee be poore, hee is brought on foote, accompanied with a multitude of his friends and others, vnto the entrance of the field, from whence beginning his race, he leapeth into the fire; but then all his familiars, cousins and kindred, reioyce with exceeding great ioy, striking vp the Drum, and dancing vntill he be wholly burned. But three dayes after, two of the chiefe Priests going vnto his house, command the whole family to prepare the house of their Father, who would be present with them the same day, and declare vnto them what they were to doe. Calling therefore vnto them certaine witnesses of the Citie, behold, Satan taking vpon him his shape, is present, of whom the wife and children demand how it fareth with him in that other world: to whom he answering, I came, saith he, vnto my companions, by whom I am not receiued, vntill I pay those things which I owe to my familiar friends and kindred: so presently, hee distributeth his goods to the children, and commandeth all the debts to be paid to the Creditors, and whatsoever is owing by the debtors, to be demanded, the witnesses receiuing and setting downe in writing all his words and commandes, of whom notwithstanding he is not seene: but then saying that he will goe his way againe, he vanisheth.

From these Ilands it is fortie dayes sayling to the Countrey of * Sin, which is in the East, they sayle three dayes iourney to Gingala, which is performed in fiftene daies dayes by Sea, where are almost a thousand Israelites. From hence in seuen dayes sayling I came to Cholan, where none of the Israelites are. But from thence in twelue dayes I went to Zebid, in which Countrey there are few Jewes.

From hence in eight dayes I came to the Midland Hodu, that is, Ethiopian India, which by the name of their owne Nation is called Baghdan, the same is Gheden, which Countrey is ascribed to the Countrey of Thelassar, in which Countrey there are huge Mountaines and very well knowne; and in these, many of the Israelites dwell, subiect to the yoke of none of the Gentiles: and they haue Cities and Towers built on the ridges of the Mountaynes, from whence descending with armed forces, they invade the Countrey Hamaghtam, with warre, which selfe same Countrey is Lubia, belonging to the dominion of Edom, the Inhabitants whereof are called Lubij, or Lybies: which being often robbed and spoyled, the Israelites returne backe againe vnto their Mountaynes, where they are not afraide, that any mortall man would make warre against them. But of those Israelites who dwell in this Countrey of Ghadan, very many trauell into Persia, and Egypt for the cause of trafficke. From thence vnto the Country called Azzuan, you trauell twentie dayes iourney through the Wildernesse of Seba, nigh vnto the Riuer Pisson, which descendeth from the Mountaynes of Chus, that is, Ethiopia. And these Azzuanes haue a King, who in the Ismaeliticke Language is called Sultan Alhabas. Some part of these men liue after the manner of bruit Beasts, and feede vpon Herbes found nigh vnto the bankes of the Riuer Pisson, they wander naked through the fields, so that they seeme to be voyde of the sense and minde of other men. They vse the Act of Generation without difference, and with whomsoever they meete, hauing no regard of kindred, acquaintance or familiaritie, age or qualitie of degree: they inhabit an exceeding hot Countrey. When the rest of the Azzuanei assaile these to make a prey of them, setting wheaten Bread, Rayfins, and dry Figs in the field, they take them running to the meate; and carrying them away, they sell them in Egypt, and other bordering Kingdomes. And these bee those blacke Slaues very well knowne to all, of the Posteritie of Cham. From Azzuuan you trauell twelue dayes iourney vnto Hhalaun, where are three hundred Jewes. But from thence traueilling in troopes you goe fiftie dayes iourney through the Wildernes, called Al Tfabbara, into the Countrey Zeuilan, which selfe same is Hhauila, to wit, that which is vpon the Coast of Geena, or Ginea. But in that Wildernes there are many Mountaynes of Sand, which being sometimes mooued and scattered through the violence of the Windes, ouerwhelmeth and killeth the whole troopes of traueilling men: but such as could auoide or escape such danger, returne laden with many things, as Iron, Brasse, and diuers kindes of Fruites, and Pulse, and also Salt: besides, they carrie Gold, and most precious Pearles. And this Countrey is in the Land of Chus, named Alhhabas, lying towards the West. From Hhalaun in thirteene dayes iourney, you come to the Metropolitan Citie Kits, which is the head of the beginning of Egypt; in it there are about thirtie thousand Jewes. From thence to Pium, is five dayes iourney: this in time past was called Pithon, where there are twentie Jewes, and yet at this day no small Monuments are seene, of the workes made by our Fathers, in the building of that Citie. From thence you trauell foure dayes iourney to Misraim, a great Citie, seated nigh vnto the bankes of Nilus, from which the name is giuen to all the Countrey, where are two thousand Jewes, diuided into two * Synagogues; the one of the Israelites, called the Synagogue Saamijn; and the other of the Babylonians, called the Synagogue Gbirbhakym. The one and the other obserue diuers rites and customes in the distribution of the annuall readings. For the Babylonians vse euery weeke to reade one Parassa, after the same manner which is common throughout all Spaine; and therefore euery yeere they finish the Law. But the Israelites diuide euery Parassa into three orders or degrees, and so they reade ouer the Law in three yeeres. And both these after a solemne manner, twice in the yeere powre forth their prayers together, to wit, vpon the day of the reioycing of the Law, and on the Festiuall day of the Law giuen. Among all these Nathaniel hath the chiefe authoritie, being the greatest of the Nobilitie, and head of the Assembly; who ruleth all the Vniuersities of Egypt, and appointeth Masters and Church-wardens. * And he is among the chiefe and most familiar seruants of the great King, in the Palace and throne of the Princely seate Soan, settled in the Citie Misraim, which Citie is the Metropolitan Citie to the children of Ghereb, that is, to all the Arabians: but the Kings name is Amir Almumanin Eli the sonne of Abitaaleb: all the Inhabitants of which Countrey are called Moredim, that is, Rebels, who haue estranged themselves from Amir Almumanin Alhhabazzi, remayning in Bagdad: wherefore there is great and perpetuall dissension betweene both the Kings. But he hath a Throne in the Palace Soan, dedicated vnto him. And he commeth forth twice in the yeere, once at the time of their feast of Easter, and againe in those dayes when the Riuer Nilus ouerfloweth. And Soan it selfe is compassed, and fortified with walls, but Misraim hath no walls, but is environed with Nilus on the one side. And this is a very great citie, furnished with many market places & publike houses, and hath many rich Jewes. The Country it selfe neuer saw either Raine, Ice, or Snow, but burneth with outrageous heate. It is watered with Nilus, which once euery yeere vehemently swelling in the Moneth Elul, couereth and ouer-floweth all the Land for fiftene dayes iourney; the Waters continuing all Elul and Tisri, and making the earth fruitfull. And the policie and diligence of the ancient was such, that in an Iland which the Riuer maketh, a Pillar should be erected, &c. And the Fishes of that Riuer are very fat, the Trane wherof being molten, is preferred for the vse of Candles. But whosoever being abundantly glutted with those Fishes, drinketh the water of the same Riuer, feeleth or suffereth no harme at all. For that water is both drinke and also medicine against such repletions. And there hath beene a perpetuall question, and a diuers opinion among men, concerning the ouerflowing of Nilus, but the Egyptians suppose, that at the same time when this Riuer ouer-floweth, it vehemently raineth in the higher Countries, that is, in the Land of Hhabas, which we said to be named Hhauila. At what time the Riuer doth not ouer-flow, nothing is sowed in Egypt; and hereupon sterilitie and famine follow. The fields are sowed in the Moneth * Marbbesuan, Nilus being now receiued into his Chanell: but Barley is reaped in the Moneth a Adar, and Wheate the next Moneth after, that is, b Nisan, and in the same Moneth Cherries are ripe, and Almonds, and Cucumbers, Gourdes, Pease-cods, and Beanes, Lentiles, Ruches and c Spelt, and diuers kindes of Pot-hearbs, as Purslane, Asparagus, and Lettice, Corianders, Succorie, Coleworts, and Grapes. the Mountaine Sinai, and is a Bay of the Indian Ocean bending towards Damiata; in the which Bay sayling one dayes journey by Sea, you come to the Iland called Tunis, and the same is otherwise called Hhanas, where are almost fortie Israelites. And hitherto extendeth the Kingdome of Egypt. Departing from thence, in twentie dayes journey by Sea, I was brought to Messana, which is the beginning of the Iland of Sicilia. But Messaana, or Messina, as it is now called, standeth vpon a Straight of the Sea, named Lunid, lying betweene Calabria and the Iland of Cicilia it selfe: and two hundred Jewes are there. The soyle of the Iland is most fruitfull, and replenished with all good things, and beautified with Gardens, and Orchards. In this place the Pilgrims assemble who determine to goe to Hierusalem; for, from hence is the best and most commodious passage into Syria. From hence I trauelled two dayes journey to Panormus, a great Citie, contayning two miles in bredth, and as many in length. In this Citie a princely house is excellently built by King Guilielmus. One thousand five hundred Jewes, or thereabouts, re-mayne in that place: and very many besides of the *Idumeans, and Ismaelites.

All the Colledges of the Jewes of Germanie are seated nigh vnto the great Riuer Rohenus, from the Citie Colonia, which is the beginning of the Kingdome, vnto the Citie called, Kesamburk, in the borders of Germanie: which space is fiftene dayes journey long. This Countrey, in time past, was called, Aschenaz. These are the Countries in Germanie, in the which the Col-ledges of the Israelites are, who are all accounted worthie men, by the Riuer Mosella, and Kon-phelinas, and Odranchab, and Kuna, and Kotania, and Binga, and Garmezza, and Mastheran.
Therefore all the Israelites remayne disperfed throughout all Countries. But whosoever shall hinder Israel that it may not be gathered together, shall neuer see the good signe, nor liue with Israel. But at what time God shall visite our Captiuitie, and exalt the Horne of his Christ, then euery one shall say: I will bring forth the Jewes, and gather them together. And in these Cities are the Colledges and Schollers of Wise-men, and they loue their brethren, and speake peace vnto all that are neere and farre remoued, and ioyfully and with reioycing receiue Guests comming vnto them, and celebrating a feast for their entertaynement, say: O our Brethren re-ioyce, for the Diuine saluation shall come very speedily*, as it were, in the twinkling of an eye.
And except, fearing, we doubted that the end was not yet come, surely, we had been already gathered together: but notwithstanding we cannot yet, vntill the time of the song, and the voyce of the Turtle be heard, and the Embassadors come, and say: Let God alwaies be magnified. They use to write Letters one vnto another, whereby they confirme each other in the Doctrine of Moses. And bewayling Sion, and lamenting Hierusalem, they aske mercy at the hands of God, and giue themselues to prayer, cloathed in mourning attire, and earnestly bent to abstinence.
These Metropolitan Cities therefore which wee haue mentioned, are in Germanie, furnished with Colledges of the Israelites. Besides, there are Astranburk, and Danirasburk, Mandatrach, Pessinghes, Bamburk, Sar, and Rasenburk, which is also the end of the Kingdome; in which Metropolitan Cities, many of the Israelites are, Disciples of the Wise-men, and rich. From thence and beyond, is the Kingdome of Bohemia, now called Praga, and it is the beginning of the Land of Sclauonia, the Inhabitants whereof are called Cananites, by the Jewes dwelling there.
These people sell their sonnes and daughters to all those Nations: and the Russes doe the like.
But that Countrey is farre extended, from the gate of Praga vnto the gate of the great Citie Pin, which standeth in the furthest end of the Kingdome. The whole Countrey is mountaynous, and very full of Woods, in the which those Beasts are found, named Veergares, and the same are called Sables. The weather is so cold in the Winter, that for that season, no man may safely come forth out of the house. And hitherto extendeth the Kingdome of Prussia. Returning from hence, I came into the Kingdome of France, which Countrey was called, Sarphat, by the Ancient. Trauelling sixe dayes journey from the Citie AL-Sanad, I came to Paris, the greatest Citie of the whole Kingdome of King Lodonicius, seated nigh vnto the Riuer Saban: in which there are Disciples of Wise-men, the most learned of all those who at this day remayne in all the Countrey, who applie themselues day and night vnto the studie of the Law, hospitall men, and curteous towards all the Brethren that passe that way, and companions of all their Brethren the Jewes. The mercifull God bee mercifull vnto them and vs, and confirme vpon vs and them, that which is written: And he shall bring backe, and gather thee together from all the Nations, among whom the Lord thy God hath disperfed thee. Amen, Amen.

A Relation of a Voyage to the Easterne India. Obserued by EDWARD TERRY, Master of Arts and Student of Christ-Church in Oxford.

TO THE READER.

10 MAfter Terry had found a fitter roome, if he had not come late, and as in India, so here also had attended that Honorable Embassadour, Sir T. Roe. But his tardy comming hath made vs entertayne him, not with lesse welcome in substance, but with lesse conuenience in Seat-ceremonie; being forced to place him as he comes, in a lower messe, but with equall cheere. Yea himselfe makes good cheere by his presence, and presents his whole messe, and all the Table and Attendants with rich Cates of Sea and Land varieties farre fetched and deere bought by him, and here imparted gratis; whether wee understand it of the Author, or (as I undertake) of the Readers. How many Eare-rings and Breast-brooches giue (that which they take, the) place to Saint Georges Garter worne neere the utmost and lowest confines of our 20 Microcosme. Take this as a good fare-well draught of English-Indian liquor. And as contraries set neere their contraries make the best lustre, so this our Scholer-Christian-Preacher-Traveller, hauing (as Travellers wont) lighted into companie of a few before; a halfe-turkised Christian, with diuers Turkes following immediatly after; shineth as a Gemme in the darke, and as a Precious-stone amongst a heape of itones. Thus here although some of his rayes are by the Attrier taken away to preuent reiterations of things deliuered in the former relations of Sir Tho. Roe, or others; Neither doth our Author come here altogether unfitly to guide vs from Persia, (where wee haue made long stay) by the way of India and Arabia, and lastly, with a Portugall Vice-roy wee meane to ship our selues homewards, taking some Religious in companie for some better knowledge of Africa, and the Christianitie there.

Those that goe downe to the Sea in ships: that doe businesse in great waters: These see the workes of the Lord, and his wonders in the deepe. Ps. 107. Qui nescit orare, discat nauigare.

Things remarkable obserued in his Voyage to the Indies. Sea-fight with the Portugals.

40 APologies very often call Truth into question. Hauing therefore nothing for to countenance these my rude Relations but the certaintie of them; I omit all vnnesessarie introductions: vsing no further Preface then this, that the Reader would vndoubtedly beleue, what the Relator doth most faithfully deliuer.

So to make an entrie vpon the first beginning of our Voyage, the third of Februarie, 1615. our Fleete (consisting of fixe goodly ships, the Charles, Vnicorne, Iames, Globe, Swan, and Rose, all vnder the command of Captaine Benjamin Ioseph) fell downe from Gravesend into Tilburie Hope.

50 The ninth of March (after a long and tiring expectation) it pleased God to send vs what we desired, a North-east wind: which day wee left that weary Road, and set sayle for East India. The wind was fauourable to vs till the sixteenth day at night, at which time a most fearefull storme ouertooke vs, we being then in the Bay of Portugall. In this storme wee lost sight both of the Globe, and Rose. The Globe came againe into our Companie, the two and twentieth following; but the Rose was no more heard of, till her arriue at Bantam, about fixe Moneths after. This storme continued violent till the one and twentieth.

The eight and twentieth, we had sight of the Grand Canaries, and that Mountaine which threatens the Skie, in the Iland of Teneriffa, commonly called, The Peake, which by reason of its immense height, in a cleere day may be seene more then fortie leagues at Sea, (as the Mariners report.) These Ilands lie in eight and twentie degrees of North latitude.

60 The one and thirtieth, being Easter day, we passed vnder the Tropick of Cancer; and the seuenth of Aprill, the Sunne was our Zenith. From that day vntill the fourteene, wee were becalmed induring extreme heate. The sixteenth, we met with winds which the Mariners call, The Turnadoes, so variable and vncertaine, that sometime within the space of one houre, all the two and thirtie seuerall winds will blow. These winds were accompanied with much thunder and lightning, and with extreme rayne, so noysome that it makes mens clothes presently to stinke vpon their backes. The water likewise of these slimy vnwholsome showres, wheresoever it stands, will in short time bring forth many offensive creatures. These Turnadoes met with vs when we were about twelue degrees of North latitude, and kept vs companie ere they quitted ted vs, till wee were two degrees South-ward of the Equinoctiall, vnder which wee passed the eight and twentieth of Aprill. The nineteenth of May being Whitsunday, wee passed the Tropicke of Capricorne. So that we were seuen weekes compleat vnder the Torrid Zone.

Whales.
Dolphins.

Betweene the Tropickes we saw almost euery day different kindes of fishes in greater abundance then else-where. As the great Leuiathan, whom God hath made to take his pastime in the Seas. Dolphins, Boneetooes, Albicores, Flying fishes, and many others. Some Whales we saw of an exceeding greatnesse, who in calme weather often arise and shew themselves about the water, where they appeare like to great Rockes, in their rising spowting vp into the Ayre with noyse a great quantitie of water, which falls downe againe about them like a showre. The Dolphin is a fish called for his swiftnesse the arrow of the Sea, differing from many other in that hee hath teeth vpon the top of his tongue, he is pleasing to the Eye, smell, and taste, of a changeable colour, fin'd like a Roach, couered with very small scales, hauing a fresh delightsome sent a-boue other fishes, and in taste as good as any. These Dolphins are wont often to follow our ships, not so much (I thinke) for the loue they beare vnto man as some write) as to feed themselves with what they find cast ouer-board. Whence it comes to passe, that many times they feed vs, for when they swimme close to our ships, we strike them with a broad Instrument, full of Barbes, called an Harping Iron fastened to a Rope by which we hale them in. This beautifull Dolphin may bee a fit Embleme of a Race of men, who vnder sweet countenances carrie sharpe tongues. Boneetooes and Albicores are in colour, shape, and taste much like to Mackerils, but grow to be very large. The Flying fishes of all other liue the most miserable liues, for beeing in the water, the Dolphins, Boneetooes, and Albicores persecute them, and when they would escape by their flight, are oftentimes taken by rauinous fowles, somewhat like our Kites which houer ouer the water. These flying fishes are like men, professing two trades, and thrue of neither.

But to proceed in our passage, the twelfth of Iune early in the morning, wee espyed our long wished for Harbour, the Bay of Soldania, about twelue leagues short of the Cape of Good Hope, wherein we came happily to an Anchor that fore-noone. Heere wee found one of the Companies ships, called the Lion, come from Surat, and bound for England, who hauing a faire gale put to Sea the fourteenth day at night.

Soldania.

We made our abode in this Harbour till the eight and twentieth following, on which day we being well watered and refreshed, departed, when the Swan our fift ship tooke her way for Bantam. The nine and twentieth, we doubled the Cape of Good Hope, whose latitude is in thirtie five degrees South. Off this Cape there setteth continually a most violent Current Westward, whence it comes to passe, that when a strong contrarie wind meets it, their impetuous opposition makes the Sea so to rage, that some shippes haue beene swallowed, but many endangered in those Mountaynes of water. Few ships passe that way without a storme. The two and twentieth of Iuly, we discovered the great Iland of Madagascar, commonly called Saint Laurence, we being then betwixt it and the Mayne: we touched not at it, but proceeding in our course, the fift of August following, came neere to the little Ilands of Mobilia, Gazidia, Saint Iohn de Castro, called in generall the Ilands of Comora, lying about twelue degrees Southward of the Equator.

Iles of Comora.

The sixt early in the morning, our men looking out for Land, espyed a Sayle about three or foure leagues off, which stood in our course directly before vs. About noone, the Globe our least ship (by reason of her nimblenesse, sayling better then her fellowes) came vp with her on the broad side to wind-ward, and according to the custome of the Sea hailed her, asking whence she was; She * answered indirectly, of the Sea, calling our men Rogues, Theeues, Heretickes, Deuils, and the conclusion of her rude complement was in loud Canon Language, discharging seuen great Peeces of Artillerie at our Globe, whereof fixe pierced her through the Hull, maiming some of her men, but killing none. Our Globe replied in the same voyce, and after that fell off.

* Fight with a Portugall Carracke, mentioned before in Sir T. Roe, and M. Child: but here more fully deliuered, and therefore againe expressed, that it might appeare who were true causes of the quarrell, as also that it was a priuate quarrell and not of State, or Princes, but of Meneles and Ioseph the Captaines, with the persons vnder their commands: one offering the other vindicating wrong. So may the Reader obserue of former fights with Beast, Downton, &c. not the Spanish King warring with his Maiestie of England, but the Portugall Merchants and Commanders in the Indies, enuying to others that Trade, which might lessen their gaines there: as in Magellans Voyage they did to the Spaniards, which also you haue seene in the Dutch, and may obserue of men of the same Trade in euery street of London. The old Verse of Hesiod, Kai nepemēs nepemēs, &c. shewes this Nature sue the first Brother which Nature had seene. If Portugals hereby led, haue offered wrong to the English, and suffered right from them, it is but as in cases twixt English Gentlemen or Merchants at home, sauing that this bodie is more Giantly, and of greater consequence, as the concurrence of more priuate purses and persons, and yet no State-warre: with which except in our Prayer, we haue nothing to doe. In like case of Trade, I suppose the Portugals would now quarrell with the Spaniards in their East, and these with them in their West. I am sure that in the Indies, Dutch haue taken Dutch, and English other English (not of that East-Indian Company) notwithstanding subiection to one and the same Crowne or State.

About three of the clocke in the after-noone, the Charles our Admirall came vp with her so neere, that we were within Pistoll shot. Our Commander Captaine Ioseph proceeded religiously, offering Treatie before hee thought of reuenge. So we saluted her with our Trumpets, shee vs with her wind Instruments, then we shewed our men on both sides aloft; this done, Captaine Ioseph called to them that their principall Commander might come aborad, to giue an account for the iniurie they had lately before offered vs; their answer was, they had neuer a Boat, our Commander replied, he would send them one, and immediately caused his Barge to be manned, and sent off to them, which brought backe one of their Officers, and two other meane fellowes with this bold message from their Captaine; that he had promised not to leaue his ship, and therefore forced he might, but neuer would be commanded out of her.

Captaine Ioseph receiued the Message, and vsed them which brought it ciuilly, commanding that they should be shewed, how we were prepared for to vindicate our selues; which made the poore Portugals to shake more then an Ague, and vpon it desired our Commander to write a few words to theirs, which with their perswasion happily might make him come. Captaine Ioseph willing to preferue his honour, and to preuent blood, consented, and forth-with caused a few 10 words to this effect to be written vnto him. That, Whereas he the Commander of the Carrack, had offered violence to our ship, they sailed peaceably by him, he willed him to come speedily, and giue reason for that wrong; or else at his perill, &c. So he discharged those Portugals, sending one of our Masters Mates backe with them, with those few words and this Message; that if hee refused to come, he would sinke by his side, but that hee would force him before hee left him. (Morientium verba sunt Prophetica, his words came to passe, for he himselfe before he stird, fell by a great shot that came not long after from the Carracke side.) The Captaine of the Carracke (notwithstanding all this) was still peremptorie in his first answer. So our men returning, Captaine Ioseph himselfe made the three first shot, which surely, did them great mischiefe, as we imagined by the loud out-
 20 cry we heard from them, after they were discharged. This done, the Bullets began to flye on both sides. Our Captaine cheering his company, ascended the halfe Decke, where hee had not beene the eight part of an houre, but a great shot from the Carrackes Quarter, depriued him of life in the twinkling of an Eye; it hit him on the brest, beating out of his bodie his heart, and other of his vitals, which lay round about him scattered in his diffused blood. After Captaine Ioseph was slaine, the Master of our ship continued the fight about halfe an houre: then knowing that there was another to be admitted into that prime place of command, the night approaching, for that time gaue ouer; putting out a Flagge of Councill to call the Captaine of the Vice-Admirall (Captaine Henry Pepwell) who was to succeed, and the other Masters aboard, for to consult about the prosecution of this Encounter. The night beeing come, wee now proceeded no farther. The Carracke stood still on her course, putting forth a light at her Poole for vs to fol-
 30 low her, and about midnight came to an Anchor vnder the Iland of Mohilia, which when wee perceiued, we let fall our Anchors too.

The seuenth, early before it began to dawne, we prepared for a new assault, first commending our selues to God by Prayer.

The morning come, we found the Carracke so close to the shoare, and the neereft of our ships at the least a league off, that we held our hands for that day, expecting when shee would weigh her Anchors and stand off to Sea (a fitter place to deale with her.) In the after-noon we cheested our late slaine Commander, and without any ceremonie of shot, vsuall vpon such occasions (because our Enemies should take no notice) cast him ouer-board against the Iland of Mohilia.

A little before night the Carracke departed to Sea, wee all loosed our Anchors, opened our 40 Sayles, and followed. The day now left vs, and our proud Enemy (vnwilling as it should seeme to escape) put forth a light as before, for vs to follow him (as afterward we did to purpose) the night well nigh spent, we commended againe our selues and cause to God. This done, the day appeared in a red Mantle, which proued bloudie vnto many that beheld it. And now you may conceiue that our foure ships are resolu'd to take their turnes one after the other, that they may force this proud Portugall, either to bend or breake. Our Charles playes her part first, and ere shee had beene at defiance with her Aduersary halfe an houre, there came another shot from the Enemy, which hitting against one of our Iron Peeces, that lay on the halfe Decke, brake into shiuers, dangerously wounding our new Commander, the Master of our ship, and three other of the Mariners which stood by. Captaine Pepwells left Eye was beaten all to pieces; two other 50 wounds he receiued in his head; a third in his legge, a ragged piece of this broken shot sticking fast in the bone thereof, which seemed by his complayning to afflict him more then all the rest. The Master had a great piece of the brawne of his arme strooke off, which made him likewise vnseruiceable for a time. Thus was our new Commander welcommed to his authoritie, wee all thought his wounds mortall, but hee liued till about fourteene moneths after, when hee dyed peaceably on his bed, in his returne for England.

The Captaine and Master both thus disabled, deputed their authoritie to the chiefe Masters Mate, who behaued himselfe resolutely, and wisely. So we continued, alternis vicibus, shooting at our Aduersary as at a Butte; and by three of the cloke in the after-noon had beat downe her mayn-mast, her Mizen-mast, her foretop-mast; and moreouer, had made such wounds in her thick 60 sides, that her case was so desperate, shee must either yeeld or perish. Her Captaine (called Don Emanuel Meneses, a braue resolute man) thus distressed, stood in for the shoare, being not farre from the Iland of Gazidia. We pursued as farre as we durst without hazard of shipwracke; then we sent off our Barge with a Flagge of Truce to speake with him; he waied vs with another; so Master Connocke (our chiefe Merchant) employed in that businesse, boldly entred his ship, and and deliuered theſe words to him, and his company; that he had brought them life and peace if they would accept it, with all telling Don Emanuel, hee had deſerued ſo well by his vndaunted valour, that if he would put himſelfe into our hands, he ſhould be entertayned with as much honour and reſpect as euer any Captiue was. But (Duris vt Ilex tota bipennibus -- ducit opes animumq; ferro) Hee as an Oke gathered ſtrength from his wounds, contemning the miſerie hee could not preuent, anſwering Maſter Connocke thus, that no infelicities ſhould make him alter his firſt reſolution; how that hee would ſtand off to Sea, if poſſibly he could, and encounter with vs againe, and then if fire and Sword forced him, he might unhappily be taken, but he would neuer yeeld, and if we tooke him aliue, he hoped that he ſhould find the reſpect of a Gentleman, and till then we had our Anſwere.

So our Meſſenger was diſcharged, and ſhortly after this diſtreſſed ſhip wanting her wings, 10 was forced by the wind and waues vpon the adiacent Iland Gazidia, where ſhe ſtuck faſt between two Rocks: thoſe that were left aliue in her by their Boats gat vpon the ſhoare, which when they had all recouered, willing (it ſhould ſeeme) to conſume what they could not keepe, they ſet her on fire to make her a coale; rather then we ſhould make her a Prize. The poore Portugals after they had left their ſhip, were moſt inhumanely vſed by the barbarous Ilanders, who ſpoyled them of all they brought aſhoare for their ſuccour; ſome of them beeing ſlaine in the oppoſition, and doubtleſſe, had made hauocke of them all, had they not beene relieved by two ſmall Arabian ſhips there in Trade, which in hope (I ſuppoſe) of ſome great reward, tooke them in, and conueyed them ſafely to their owne Citie Goa.

In this combate we loſt out of our foure ſhips but five men (too many by that number) three 20 out of our Admirall, and two out of the Iames; beſides we had ſome twentie in our whole fleet hurt, which afterward recouered. But of ſeuene hundred which ſayled in the Carracke, there came not aboue two hundred and fiftie to Goa, as afterward we were credibly informed. In this fearefull oppoſition, our Charles made at her Aduerſarie three hundred ſeuentie and five great ſhot (as our Gunners reported) to theſe wee had one hundred Muſquetiers, that played their parts all the while. Neither was our enemy idle, for our ſhip receiued at the leaſt one hundred great ſhot from him, and many of them dangerous ones through the Hull. Our Fore-maſt was pierced through the middeſt; our mayne-maſt hurt, our mayne-ſtay, and many of our mayne Shrouds cut in ſunder. But I haue dwelt too long vpon a ſad Diſcourſe, I make haſte to reſreſh my ſelfe vpon the pleaſant Iland.

After we ſaw the Carracke fired which was about mid-night, wee ſtood off and on till mor- 30 ning, to ſee if we might find any thing in her aſhes; of which when wee deſpayred, wee ſought about for ſuccour to comfort our wounded and ſicke men on the ſhoare. The Land was very high, againſt which the Sea is alwayes deepe, ſo that it was the tenth day following ere wee could be poſſeſſed of a good Harbour; which enioyed, we found the Iland very pleaſant, full of goodly Trees, couered all ouer with a greene Veſture and exceeding fruitfull, abounding in Beeues, Kids, Poultry, Sugar-canes, Rice, Plantens, Oranges, Coquer-nuts, and many other wholeſome things; of all which wee had ſufficient to releue our whole company, for a ſmall quantitie of white Paper, and few glaſſe Beades, and Penie Knives. For inſtance wee bought as many good Oranges as would fill an Hat, for halfe a quarter of a ſheet of white Paper, and ſo 40 in proportion all other prouiſion. Much of their Fruites the Ilanders brought vnto vs in their little Canoes (which are long narrow Boates cut like Troughes out of firme Trees) but their cat-tell we bought on ſhoare; where I obſerued the people to bee ſtreight, well limmed, able men, their colour very tawnie, moſt of the men but all the women (I ſaw) vnclothed hauing nothing about them but to hide their ſhame. Such as were couered had long Garments like to the Arabians, whoſe Language they ſpeake, and of whoſe Religion they are, Mahometans, very ſtriſt as it ſhould ſeeme, for they would not endure vs to come nigh their Churches. They haue good conuenient houſes for their liuing, and faire Sepulchres for their dead. They ſeeme to liue ſtriſt-ly vnder the obedience of a King, whoſe place of reſidence was ſome few miles vp in the Coun-trei. His leaue by Meſſengers they firſt craued, before wee had libertie to buy any prouiſion. 50
Their King aduertized of our arriual, bade our Commander welcome with a Preſent of Beeues, and Goats, and choiſe Fruites of his Countrey, and was recompensed, and well contented againe with Paper, and ſome other Engliſh Toyes. Wee ſaw ſome Spaniſh money amongſt them, of which they made ſo little reckoning, that ſome of our men had Rials of Eight in exchange for a little Paper or a few Beades. What they did with our Paper, we could not gheſſe.

The Coquer-nuts (of which this Iland hath abundance) of all the Trees in the Forreſt (in my opinion) may haue preeminence, for meereſly with it, without the leaſt helpe from any other, a man may build, and furniſh a ſhip to Sea; for the heart of this Tree will make Plankes, Timbers, and Maſts, a Gumme that growes thereon, will ſerue to calke our ſhip. The Rind of the ſame Tree will make Cordage and Sailes, and the large Nut thereof beeing full of kernell, and plea- 60 ſant liquor, will for a need ſerue for thoſe that ſayle in this ſhippe for meate and drinke, and the ſtore of theſe Nuts for Merchandize.

Now, well ſtored with theſe Nuts, and other good prouiſion, after fixe dayes abode there, the breaches our ſhip receiued in fight being repayed, and our men well reſreſhed, wee put againe

gaine to Sea toward East India the sixteenth, and a prosperous winde following vs, passed happily vnder the Line without the least heate to offend vs, the foure and twentieth day ensuing. Our course was for the Iland of Succotora, neere to the mouth of the Red Sea, from whence comes our Aloes Succotrina, but an aduerse gale from the Arabian shoare kept vs off, that wee could by no meanes recover it. We passed by it the first of September. The immediate yeere before our English fleet touching at this Iland, learned this Apothegme from the petie King thereof, who coming to the water side, and hearing some of our winde Instruments, asked if they played Dauids Psalmes (of which, being a Mahometan, he had heard.) Hee was answered by one that stood by, they did; He replied thus, That it was an ill inuention of him that first mingled Musicke with Religion; for before (said he) God was worshipped in heart, but by this in sound. I insert not this relation to condemne musick in Churches, Let him that bids vs prayse the Lord with stringed Instruments and Organs, plead the Cause.

Precise Mahometan Apothegme.

But to returne to my discourse. Missing our Port at Succotora, wee proceeded on our voyage, and the fourth of September kept a solemne funerall, in memorie of our slaine Commander, when after a Sermon, the small shot and great Ordnance, made a loud peale to his remembrance. The sixt of September at night, to our admiration and feare, the water of the Sea seemed as white as milke, others of our Nation, since passing on that course, haue obserued the like, but I am yet to learne what should be the true cause thereof, it being farre from any shoare, and so deepe, that wee could fetch no ground. The twentieth one, wee discovered the mayne Land of East India; and the twentieth two, had sight of Diu and Damon, Cities lying in the skirts thereof, well fortified and inhabited by Portugals. The twentieth fve, we came happily to an Anchor in Swally Road, within the Bay of Cambaya, the harbour for our fleet while they make their stay in the Easterne India. And thus in a tedious Passage haue I brought my Reader as far as East India, let him now bee pleased for a while to repose himselfe vpon the Shoare, there to take a view of the populous Court, and the no lesse fruitful, then spacious Territories of the great Mogol.

Funerall for Capt. Joseph.

Water of the Sea in this place alway white, as in former voyages is seene.

§. II.

30 Description of the Mogols Empire, and the most remarkable things of Nature and Art therein.

Although yee haue this description before, pag. 578. with the Map also; yet for the differing method, and clearing of some things there more doubtfull, I haue here added this also, abbreviating it in some such things as are the same with the former, to which it may be in diuers things a kind of Glosse, as Sir T. Roes Map to both. The former seemed imperfectly written in the number of the corles or miles which here seeme more exactly. The differing names may also helpe to further knowledge; of which I had sought better instruction before the presse if I might, as I

THe large Empire of the great Mogol is bounded on the East with the Kingdome of Mang: West with Persia, and the mayne Ocean Southerly: North with the Mountaynes of Caucasus, and Tartaria. South with Decan and the Gulfe of Bengala. Decan lying in the skirts of Asia, is diuided between three Mahometan Kings, and some other Indian Rhaiaes. This spacious Monarchie, called by the Inhabitants Indostan, diuiding it selfe into thirtie and seuen seuerall and large Prouinces, which anciently were particular Kingdomes; whose names with their principall Cities, and Riuer, their Situation, and Borders, their extent in length and breadth, I first set downe beginning at the North-west.

40 First, Candahor, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyes from the heart of all his Territorie North-west; it confines with the King of Persia, and was a Prouince belonging to him. 2. Cabul, the chiefe Citie so called, the extreamest North-west part of this Emperours Dominions: it confineth with Tartaria; the Riuer Nilab hath its beginning in it, whose Current is Southerly, till it discharge it selfe in Indus. 3. Multan, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyes South from Cabul, and Candahor, and to the West ioynes with Persia. 4. Haiacan, the Kingdome of the Baloches (a stout warlike people) it hath no renowned Citie. The famous Riuer Indus (called by the Inhabitants Skind) borders it on the East; and Lar (a Prouince belonging to Shah-Abas, the present King of Persia) meetes it on the West. 5. Buckor, the chiefe Citie called Buckor succor. The Riuer Indus makes a way through it, greatly enriching it. 6. Tatta, the chiefe Citie so called. The Riuer Indus makes many Ilands in it, exceeding fruitfull and pleasant. The chiefe Arme meetes with the Sea at Synde, a place very famous for curious handi-crafts. 7. Soret, the chiefe Citie is called Ianagar. It is a little Prouince but rich, lyes West from Guzarat, and hath the Ocean to the South. 8. Ieselmeeere, the chiefe Citie so called, it joyneth with Soret, Buckor, and Tatta, lying to the West of it. 9. Attack, the chiefe Citie so called: it lyeth on the East side of Indus, which parts it from Haiacan. 10. Peniab, which signifieth fve Waters, for that it is seated among fve Riuer, all tributaries to Indus, which somewhat South of Lahor make but one Current: it is a great Kingdome, and most fruitfull, &c. Lahor the chiefe Citie is well built, very large, populous, and rich; the chiefe Citie of Trade in all India. 11. Chishmeere, the chiefe Citie is called Siranakar, the Riuer Phat passeth through it, and so creeping about many Ilands slides to Indus. 12. Banchish, the chiefe Citie is called Bishur: it lyeth East, Southerly from Chishmeere, from which it is diuided by the Riuer Indus. 13. Iengapor, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyeth vpon the Riuer Kaul, one of the fve Riuer that water Peniab. 14. Ienba, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyeth East of Peniab. 15. De lli, there signific.

15. Delli, the chiefe Citie so called, it lyeth twixt Ienba and Agra, the River Iemni (which runneth through Agra, and falleth into Ganges) begins in it. Delli is an ancient great Citie, the seate of the Mogols Ancestors, where most of them lye interred. 16. Bando, the chiefe Citie so called, it confineth Agra on the West. 17. Malway, a very fruitfull Prouince, Rantipore is the chiefe Citie. 18. Chitor, an ancient and great Kingdome, the chiefe Citie so called. 19. Guzarat, a goodly Kingdome, and exceeding rich, inclosing the Bay of Cambaya. The River Tapte watereth Surat, it trades to the Red Sea, to Achin, and to diuers other places. 20. Chandis, the chiefe Citie called Brampoch, which is large and populous. Adioyning to this Prouince, is a pe-tie Prince, called Partapsha, tributarie to the Mogol, and this is the Southermost part of all his Territories. 21. Berar, the chiefe Citie is called Shapore, the Southermost part whereof doth likewise bound this Empire. 22. Narnar, the chiefe Citie called Gebud, it is watered by a faire River, which emptieth it selfe in Ganges. 23. Gwalior, the chiefe Citie so called, where the King hath a great treasury of Bullion. In this Citie likewise there is an exceeding strong Cakle wherein the Kings prisoners are kept. 24. Agra, a principall and great Prouince, the chiefe Citie so called. From Agra to Labor (the two choise Cities of this Empire) is about foure hundred English miles, the Countrey in all that distance euen without a Hill, and the high way planted on both sides with Trees, like to a delicate walke. 25. Sanbal, the chiefe Citie so called, the River Iemni parts it from Narnar, and after at the Citie Helabass falls into Ganges, called by the Inhabitants Ganga. 26. Bakar, the chiefe Citie called Bikaneer, it lyeth on the West side of Ganges. 27. Nagracutt, the chiefe Citie so called, in which there is a Chappel most richly set forth, both seled and paued with plate of pure gold. In this place they keepe an Idoll, which they call Matta, visited yeerly by many thousands of the Indians, who out of deuotion cut off part of their tongues, to make a sacrifice for it. In this Prouince there is likewise another famous Pilgrimage, to a place called Lallamaka, where out of cold Springs and hard Rocks, there are daily to be seene incessant eruptions of fire, before which the Idolatrous people fall downe and worship. 28. Syba, the chiefe Citie is called Hardwair, where the famous River Ganges seemed to begin, issuing out of a Rocke, which the superstitious Gentiles imagine to bee like a Cowes head, which of all sensible Creatures they loue best. Thither they likewise goe in troopes daily for to wash their bodies. 29. Kakares, the principall Cities are called Dankalee and Purbola, it is very large and exceeding mountaynous, diuided from Tartaria by the Mountaynes of Caucases: it is the farthest part North, vnder the Mogols subiection. 30. Gor, the chiefe Citie so called, it is full of Mountaynes. The River Persilis which dischargeth it selfe in Ganges, beginnes in it. 31. Pitan, the chiefe Citie so called; the River Kanda waters it, and falls into Ganges in the Confinnes thereof. 32. Kanduan, the chiefe Citie is called Karbakatenka, the River Sersily parts it from Pitan; that and Gor are the North-east bounds of this great Monarchie. 33. Patna, the chiefe Citie so called; the River Ganges bounds it on the West, Sersily on the East; it is a very fertile Prouince. 34. Ieshal, the chiefe Citie called Raiapore, it lyeth East of Patna. 35. Meuat, the chiefe Citie called Narnol; it is very mountaynous. 36. Vdessa, the chiefe Citie called Iokanat; it is the most remote part East of all this Kingdome. 37. Bengala, a most spacious and fruitfull Kingdome, limited by the Gulfe of the same name, wherein the River Ganges diuided in foure great Currents, loseth it selfe.

And here a great errour in our Geographers must not escape mee, who in their Globes and Maps, make India and China Neighbours, when many large Countries are interpoied betwixt them, which great distance will appeare by the long trauell of the Indian Merchants, who are vsually in their iourney and returne, more then two yeeres from Agra to the walls of China. The length of those forenamed Prouinces is North-west to South-east, at the least one thousand Courses, euery Indian Course being two English miles. North and South, the Extent thereof, is about fourteene hundred miles, the Southermost part lying in twentie degrees; the Northermost in fortie three of North latitude. The breadth of this Empire is North-east to South-west, about fiftene hundred miles.

Now, to giue an exact account of all those forenamed Prouinces, were more then I am able to vnder-take, yet out of that I haue obserued in some few, I will aduenture to ghesse at all, and thinke for my particular, that the great Mogol, considering his Territories, his Wealth, and his rich Commodities, is the greatest knowne King of the East, if not of the World. To make my owne coniecture more apparent to others. This wide Monarchie is very rich and fertile, so much abounding in all necessities for the vse of man, as that it is able to subsist and flourish of it selfe, without the least helpe from any Neighbour.

To speake first of that which Nature requires most, Food; this Land abounds in singular good Wheate, Rice, Barley, and diuers other kindes of Graine to make bread (the staffe of life) their Wheate growes like ours, but the Graine of it is somewhat bigger and more white, of which the Inhabitants make such pure well-relished bread, that I may speake that of it, which one said of the bread in the Bishoprick of Leige, it is, Panis, pane melior. The common people make their bread vp in Cakes, and bake it on small Iron hearths, which they carry with them when as they iourney, making vse of them in their Tents, it should seeme an ancient custome, as may appeare by that president of Sarah; when shee entertayned the Angels, Genes. 18. To their Bread they haue great abundance of other good prouision, as Butter, and Cheefe, by reason of their great number of Kine, Sheepe, and Goats. Besides, they haue a beast very large, hauing a smooth thicke skinne without haire, called a Buffelo, which giues good Milke: the flesh of them is like Beefe, but not so wholesome. They haue no want of Venison of diuers kinds, as red Deare, fallow Deare, Elkes, and Antelops; but no where imparked: the whole Kingdome is as it were a Forrest, for a man can trauell no way but he shall see them, and (except it bee within a small distance off the King) they are euery mans Game. To these they haue great store of Hares, and further to furnish out their feasts, varietie of Fish and Fowle; it were as infinite as needlesse to relate particulars. To write of their Geese, Duckes, Pigeons, Partridges, Quails, Peacocks, and many other singular good Fowle, all which are bought at such easie rates, as that I haue seene a good Mutton sold for the value of one shilling, foure couple of Hennes at the same price, one Hare for the value of a penie, three Partridges for as little, and so in proportion all the rest. There are no Capons amongst them but men.

The Beeues of that Countrey differ from ours, in that they haue each of them a great Bunch of grisselly flesh which growes vpon the meeting of their shoulders. Their Sheepe exceed ours in great bob-tayles, which cut off are very ponderous, their wooll is generally very course, but the flesh of them both is altogether as good as ours.

Now, to season this good prouision, there is great store of Salt: and to sweeten all, abundance of Sugar growing in the Countrey, which after it is well refined, may be bought for two pence the pound, or vnder.

Salt and Sugar

Their Fruits are very answerable to the rest, the Countrey full of Musk-melons, Water-melons, Pomegranats, Pome-citrons, Limons, Oranges, Dates, Figs, Grapes, Plantans (a long round yellow fruit, in taste like to a Norwich Pearre) Mangoes, in shape and colour like to our Apricocks, but more luscious, and (to conclude with the best of all) the Ananas or Pine which seemes to the tast to be a pleasing compound, made of Strawberries, Claret-wine, Rose-water, and Sugar, well tempered together. In the Northermost parts of this Empire they haue varietie of Apples and Peares. Euery where good roots, as Carrets, Potatoes, and others like them as pleasant. They haue Onions and Garlicke, and choyce herbs for Salads. And in the Southermost parts, Ginger growing almost in euery place. And here I cannot choose but take notice of a pleasant cleere liquor called Taddy, issuing from a spongie tree that growes straight and tall, without boughs to the top, and there spreads out in branches (somewhat like to an English Colewort) where they make incisions: vnder which they hang small earthen Pots to preferue the influence. That which distills forth in the night, is as pleasing to the taste as any white Wine, if drunke betimes in the morning. But in the heat of the day the Sunne alters it so, as that it becomes heady, ill relished, and vnwholsome. It is a piercing medicinable drinke, if taken early, and moderately, as some haue found by happie experience, thereby eased from their torture inflicted by that shame of Physicians, and Tyrant of all maladies, the Stone.

Taddy.

At Sarat, and to Agra and beyond, it neuer raines but one season of the yeere, which begins neere the time that the Sunne comes to the Northerne Tropicke, and so continues till his returne backe to the Line. These violent Raines are vshered in, and take their leaue with most fearefull tempests of Thunder and Lightning, more terrible then I can expresse, yet seldome doe harme. The reason in Nature may be the subtiltie of the Aire, wherein there are fewer Thunder-stones made, then in such Climates where the Aire is grosse, and cloudy. In those three moneths it raines euery day more or lesse, sometimes one whole quarter of the Moone scarce with any intermission, which abundance of Raine with the heat of the Sunne doth so enrich the ground: (which they neuer force) as that like Egypt by the inundation of Nile, it makes it fruitfull all the yeere after. But when this time of Raine is passed ouer, the Skie is so cleere, as that scarcely one Cloud is seene in their Hemisphere, the nine moneths after.

Raines and Thunders.

And here the goodnesse of the soyle must not escape my Pen, most apparent in this, for when the ground hath bene destitute of Raine nine moneths, and lookes like to barren Sands, within seuen dayes after the Raine begins to fall, it puts on a greene Coate. And further to confirme this, amongst many hundred acres of Corne I haue beheld in those Parts, I neuer saw any but came vp as thicke as the Land could well beare it. They till their ground with Oxen, and foot-Ploughs. Their Seed-time is in May, and the beginning of Iune: their Haruest in Nouember, and December, the most temperate moneths in all their yeere. Their ground is not enclosed vnlesse it be neere Townes and Villages, which (though not expressed in the Map for want of their true names) stand very thicke. They mowe not their Grasse (as we) to make Hay, but cut it either greene or withered on the ground as they haue occasion to vse it. They sowe Tobacco in abundance, but know not how to cure and make it strong, as those in the Westerne India.

The Countrey is beautified with many Woods and great varietie of faire goodly trees, but I neuer saw any there of those kinds which England affords. Their Trees in generall are sappie, which I ascribe to the fatnesse of the soyle: some of them haue Leaues as broad as Bucklers, others are parted small as Ferne, as the Tamarine trees which beare a sowre fruit that growes

- somewhat like our Beanes, most wholesome for to coole and cleanse the bloud. There is one Tree amongst them of speciall obseruation, out of whose branches grow little sprigs downeward till they take root, and so at length proue strong supporters vnto the Armes that yeeld them, whence it comes to passe that these Trees in time grow vnto a great height, and extend themselues to an incredible bredth. All the Trees in those Southerne parts of India still keepe on their greene Mantles. For their Flowres they rather delight the Eye then affect the Sense, in colour admirable, but few of them, vnlesse Roses, and one or two kinds more, that are any whit fragrant.
- This Region is watered with many goodly Riuers, the two principall are Indus and Ganges, where this thing remarkable must not passe, that one pinte of the Water of Ganges weigheth 10 lesse by an ounce, then any in the whole Kingdome, and therefore the Mogol wheresoeuer hee is, hath it brought to him that he may drinke it. Besides their Riuers, they haue store of Wells fed with Springs, vpon which in many places they bestow great cost in stone-worke: to these they haue many Ponds, which they call Tankes, some of them more then a mile or two in compasse, made round or square, girt about with faire stone-walls, within which are steps of well-squared stone which encompassse the water, for men euery way to goe downe and take it. These Tankes are filled when that abundance of Raine falls, and keepe water to relieue the Inhabitants that dwell farre from Springs or Riuers, till that wet season come againe.
- This ancient drinke of the World is the common drinke of India, it is more sweet and pleasant then ours, and in those hot Countries, agreeth better with mens bodies, then any other Liquor. Some small quantitie of Wine, but not common is made among them, they call it Raack, distilled from Sugar and a Spicie rinde of a Tree called Iagra. It is very wholesome if taken moderately. Many of the people who are strict in their Religion drinke no Wine at all. They vse a Liquor more healthfull then pleasant, they call Cohha; a blacke seed boyled in water, which doth little alter the taste of the water. Notwithstanding, it is very good to helpe digestion, to quicken the spirits, and to cleanse the bloud. There is yet another helpe to comfort the stomacke for such as forbear Wine, an herbe called Beetele or Paune; it is in shape somewhat like an Iuie leafe but more tender; they chew it with an hard Nut some-what like a Nut-megge, and a little pure white Lime among the leaues, and when they haue sucked out the Iuyce, put forth the rest. It hath many rare qualities, for it preserues the teeth, comforts the braine, strengthens the stomacke, and cures or prevents a tainted breath.
- Their buildings are generally base, except it be in their Cities, wherein I haue obserued many faire Piles. Many of their houses are built high and flat on the toppe, from whence in the coole seasons of the day they take in fresh ayre. They haue no Chimnies to their houses, for they neuer vse fire but to dresse their meate. In their vpper roomes they haue many lights and doores to let in the Ayre, but vse no Glasse. The materials of their best buildings are bricke or stone, well squared and composed, which I haue obserued in Amadaur (that one instance may stand for all) which is a most spacious and rich Citie, entred by twelue faire Gates, and compassed about with a firme stone wall. Both in their Villages and Cities, are vsually many faire Trees among their houses, which are a great defence against the violence of the Sunne. They commonly stand so thicke that if a man behold a Citie or Towne from some conspicuous place, it will seeme a Wood rather then a Citie.
- The Staple Commodities of this Kingdome are Indico and Cotton-wooll. For Cotton-wooll they plant seedes which grow vp into shrubs like vnto our Rose-bushes. It blowes first into a yellow blossome, which falling off, there remaynes a cod about the bignesse of a mans thumb, in which the substance is moyst and yellow, but as it ripens, it swels bigger till it breake the couering, and so in short time becomes white as Snow, and then they gather it. These shrubs beare three or foure yeares ere they supplant them. Of this Wooll they make diuers sorts of pure white cloth, some of which I haue seene as fine, if not purer then our best Lawne. Some of the courser sort of it they dye into Colours, or elle stayne in it varietie of curious Figures.
- The ship that vsually goeth from Surat to Moha, is of an exceeding great burthen. Some of them I beleue at the least fourteene or sixteene hundred tunnes, but ill built, and though they haue good Ordnance cannot well defend themselues. In these ships are yeerely abundance of Passengers: for instance in one ship returning thence, that yeere we left India, came seuentene hundred, the most of which number goe not for profit, but out of Deuotion to visite the Sepulchre of Mahomet at Medina, neere Meche, about one hundred and fiftie leagues from Moha. Those which haue beene there, are euer after called Hoggers, or holy Men. The ship bound from Surat to the Red Sea, beginnes her Voyage about the twentieth of March, and finisheth it towards the end of September following, the Voyage is but short, and might easily bee made in two moneths, but in the long season of raine, and a little before, and after it, the winds are commonly so violent, that there is no comming, but with great hazard into the Indian Sea. The ship returning, is vsually worth two hundred thousand pounds sterling, most of it in Gold and Siluer. Besides, for what quantitie of Monies comes out of Europe, by other meanes into India I cannot answere, this I am sure of, that many Siluer streames runne thither as all Riuers to the the Sea, and there stay, it being lawfull for any Nation to bring in Siluer and fetch commodities, but a Crime not lesse then Capitall, to carry any great summe thence. The Coyne or Bullion brought thither is presently melted, and refined, and then the Mogols stampe (which is his Name and Title in Persian Letters) put vpon it. This Coyne is more pure then any I know made of perfect Siluer without any allay, so that in the Spanish Riall (the purest money of Europe) there is some losse.

They call their Pieces of Money Roopees, of which there are some of diuers values, the meanest worth two shillings, and the best about two shillings and nine pence sterling. By these they account their Estates and Payments. There is a Coyne of inferiour value in Guzarat, called Mamoodies, about twelue pence sterling, both the former and these are made likewise in halves and quarters, so that three pence is the least piece of siluer currant in the Countrey. That which passeth vp and downe, for exchange vnder this rate is brasse money, which they call Pices, whereof three or thereabouts counteruaile a Penny. They are made so massie, as that the Brasse in them put to other vses, is well worth the Siluer they are rated at. Their Siluer Coyne is made either round or square, but so thicke, that it neuer breakes nor weares out.

Now farther for commodities, the Countrey yeelds good store of Silke, which they weaue curiously, sometimes mingled with Siluer or Gold. They make Veluets, Sattins, and Taffataes, but not so rich as those of Italy. Many Drugs and Gummes are found amongst them, especially Gum-lac, with which they make their hard Wax. The earth yeelds good Minerals of Lead, Iron, Copper, and Brasse, and they say of Siluer, which, if true, they neede not open, being so enriched by other Nations. The Spices they haue come from other places, from the Ilands of Sumatra, Iana, and the Moluccoes. For places of pleasure they haue curious Gardens, planted with fruitfull Trees and delightfull Flowers, to which Nature daily lends such a supply as that they seeme neuer to fade. In these places they haue pleasant Fountaynes to bathe in, and other delights by sundrie conueyances of water, whose silent murmure helps to lay their senses with the bonds of sleepe in the hot seasons of the day.

But lest this remote Countrey should seeme like an earthly Paradise without any discommodities: I must needes take notice there of many Lions, Tygres, Wolves, Iackals (which seeme to be wild Dogs) and many other harmefull beasts. In their Riuer are many Crocodiles, and on the Land ouer-growne Snakes, with other venomous and pernicious Creatures. In our houses there we often meete with Scorpions, whose stinging is most sensible and deadly, if the patient haue not presently some Oyle that is made of them, to anoint the part affected, which is a present cure. The abundance of Flyes in those parts doe likewise much annoy vs, for in the heate of the day their numberlesse number is such as that we can be quiet in no place for them, they are ready to couer our meate as soone as it is placed on the Table, and therefore wee haue men that stand on purpose with Napkins to fright them away when as wee are eating: in the night likewise we are much disquieted with Musquatoes, like our Gnats, but somewhat lesse: and in their great Cities, there are such abundance of bigge hungrie Rats, that they often bite a man as he lyeth on his bed.

The Windes in those parts, which they call the Monson, blow constantly; altering but few Points, sixe moneths Southerly, the other sixe Northerly. The moneths of Aprill and May, and the beginning of Iune till the Rayne fall, are so extreme hot, as that the Winde blowing but gently receiues such heate from the parched ground, that it much offends those that receiue the breath of it. But God doth so prouide for those parts that most commonly he sends such a strong gale as well tempers the hot ayre. Sometimes the winde blowes very high in those hot and drie seasons, rayising vp thick clouds of dust and sand, which appeare like darke clouds full of Rayne, they greatly annoy the people when they fall amongst them. But there is no Countrey without some discommodities, for therefore the wise Disposer of all things hath tempered bitter things with sweet, to teach man that there is no true and perfect content to be found in any Kingdom, but that of God.

But I will retorne againe (whence I digressed) and looke farther into the qualitie of the Countrey, that affords very good Horses, which the Inhabitants know well to manage. Besides their owne, they haue many of the Persian, Tartarian, and Arabian breede, which haue the name to be the choise ones of the world: they are about the bignesse of ours, and valued amongst them as deare, if not at a higher rate then we vsually esteeme ours. They are kept daintily, euery good Horse being allowed a man to dresse and feede him. Their Prouender a kind of graine, called Donna, somewhat like our Pease, which they boyle, and when it is cold giue them mingled with course Sugar, and twise or thrise in the weeke Butter to scoure their bodies. Here are likewise a great number of Camels, Dromedaries, Mules, Asses, and some Rhynocerots, which are large beasts as bigge as the fayrest Oxen England affords, their skins lye platted, or as it were in wrinkles vpon their backs. They haue many Elephants, the King for his owne particular being Master of fourteene thousand, and his Nobles and all men of Qualitie in the Countrey, haue more or lesse of them, some to the number of one hundred. The Elephants, though they bee the largest of all Creatures the Earth brings forth, yet are so tractable (vnlesse at times when they are mad) that a little Boy is able to rule the biggest of them. Some of them I haue seenie thirteene foot high, but there are amongst them (as I haue beene often told) fiftene at the least. The colour of them all is black, their skins thick and smooth without haire, they take much delight to bathe themselves in water, and swim better then any beast I know; they lye downe and arise againe at pleasure, as other beasts doe. Their pace is not swift, about three mile an houre, but of all Beasts in the world are most sure of foot, for they neuer fall nor stumble to endanger their Rider. They are most docile Creatures, and of all those we account meereley sensible, come nearest vnto Reason, Lippius in his Epistles, 1. Cent. Epist. 50. out of his obseruations from others writes more of them then I can confirme, or any (I perswade my selfe) beleue; yet many things remarkable, which seeme indeed acts of reason, rather then sence, I haue obserued in them. For instance, an Elephant will doe any thing almost, that his Keeper commands him: as if he would haue him affright a man, he will make towards him as if hee would tread him in pieces, and when he is come at him, doe him no hurt: if he would haue him to abuse or disgrace a man, he will take dirt, or kennell water in his trunk, and dash it in his face. Their Trunks are long grisselly snouts hanging downe twixt their teeth, by some called, their Hand, which they make vse of vpon all occasions.

An English Merchant of good credit, vpon his owne knowledge reported this of a great Elephant in Adsmere (the place then of the Mogols residence) who being brought often through the Bazar or Market place; a woman who fate there to sell herbs, was wont vsually to giue him a handfull, as he passed by. This Elephant afterward being mad, brake his fetters, and tooke his way through the Market place; the people all affrighted made haste to secure themselves, amongst whom was this herbe-woman, who for feare and haste, forgot her little child. The Elephant come to the place where shee vsually fate, stopt, and seeing a child lie about her herbs, tooke it vp gently with his trunk, not doing it the least harme, and layed it vpon a stall vnder a house not farre off, and then proceeded in his furious course. Acosta (a traueilling Iesuite) relates the like of an Elephant in Goa, from his owne experience. Some Elephants the King keeps for execution of Malefactors, who being brought to suffer death by that mightie beast, if his Keeper bid him dispatch the Offender speedily, will presently with his foot pash him in to pieces, if otherwise he would haue him tortured, this vast creature will breake his ioynts by degrees one after the other, as men are broken vpon the wheele.

The Mogol takes much delight in those stately creatures, and therefore oft when hee sits forth in his Maiestie calls for them, especially the fairest, who are taught to bend to him as it were in reuerence, when they first come into his presence. They often fight before him, beginning their combat like Rams, by running fiercely one at the other; after, as Boares with their tusks, they fight with their teeth and trunks: in this violent opposition they are each so carefull to preserve his Rider, as that very few of them at those times receiue hurt. They are gouerned with an hook of Steele, made like the Iron end of a Boat-hook with which their keepers sitting on their neckes put them backe, or pricke them forward at their pleasure.

The King traines vp many of his Elephants for the warre, who carrie each of them one Iron Gunne about sixe foot long, lying vpon a square strong frame of wood, fastned with girts or ropes vpon him, which like an Harquebuse is let into the timber with a loop of Iron; at the foure corners of this frame are Banners of Silke put vpon short Poles, within sits a Gunner to make his shot according to his occasion. The Peece carrieth a Bullet about the bignesse of a little Tennis-ball. When the King trauels he hath many Elephants thus appointed for guard. Hee keeps many of them for State to goe before him, who are adorned with bosses of Brass, and some of them are made of masse Siluer or Gold, hauing likewise diuers Bells about them in which they delight. They haue faire coverings either of Cloth, or Veluet, or Cloth of siluer or gold, and for greater state, Banners of Silke carried before them in which is the Ensigne of their great King (a Lion in the Sunne) imprinted. These are allowed each three or foure men at the least, to waite vpon them. Hee makes vse of others to carrie himselfe or his women, who sit in pretie conuenient receptacles fastned on their backes, which our Painters describe like to Castles, made of slight turn'd Pillars richly couered, that will hold foure sitters. Others he employes for carriage of his necessities. Onely he hath one faire Elephant which is content to be fettered, but would neuer indure man or other burthen on his backe.

These vast beasts though the Countrey be very fruitfull and all prouision cheape, yet by reason of their huge bulke are very chargeable in keeping, for such as are well fed, stand their Masters in foure or five shillings, each of them the day. They are kept without doores, whereby a sollid Chaine vpon one of their hind legges, they fasten them to a Tree or some strong post. As they stand in the Sunne the Flyes often vex them, wherefore with their feete they make dust, the ground being very dry, and with their Trunks cast it about their bodies to driue away the Flyes. Whenas they are mad (as vsually the Males are once a yeare for their Females, when they are lustie, but in few dayes after, come againe in temper) they are so mischieuous, that they will strike any thing but their Keeper that comes in their way, and their strength is such, as that they will beate an Horse or Camell dead with their Truncke at one blow. At these times to preuent mischief, they are kept apart from company, fettered with Chaines. But if by chance in their phrensie they get loose, they will make after euery thing they see stirre, in which case there is no meanes to stop them in their violent course, but by lighting of wild-fire, prepared for that purpose, whose sparkling and cracking makes them stand still and tremble. The King allowes euery one of his great Elephants foure Females, which in their Language they call Wiues, the Males Testicles lye about his fore-head, the Females Teates are betwixt her fore-legges. Shee carrieth her young one whole yeare ere she bring it forth. Thirtie yeares expire ere they come to their full growth, and they fulfill the accustomed age of man ere they dye. Notwithstanding, the great plentie of them, they are valued there at exceeding great rates, some of them prized at 10 one thousand pounds sterling and more.

§. III.

Of the people of Indostan, their Stature, Colour, Habit, Dyet, Women, Language, Learning, Arts, Riding, Games, Markets, Armes, Valour, Mahometane Mesquits, Burials, Opinions, and Rites of Religion.

NOW, for the Inhabitants of Indostan, they were anciently Gentiles, or notorious Idolaters, called in generall Hindoos, but euer since they were subdued by Tamberlaine, haue beene mixed with Mahometans. There are besides many Persians and Tartars, many Abissines, and Armenians, and some few almost of euery people in Asia, if not of Europe, that haue residence here. Amongst them are some Jewes, but not beloued, for their very name is a Prouerbe, or word of reproch. For the stature of these Easterne Indians, they are like vs, but generally very streight, for I neuer beheld any in those parts crooked. They are of a taw-30 nie or Oliue colour, their haire blacke as a Raven, but not curl'd. They loue not a man or woman, that is very white or faire, because that (as they say) is the colour of Lepers common amongst them. Most of the Mahometans, but the Moolaes (which are their Priests) or those that are very old and retyred, keepe their chinnes bare, but suffer the haire on their vpper lip to grow as long as Nature will feed it. They vsually shau off all the haire from their heads, reseruing onely a Locke on the Crowne for Mahomet, to pull them into Heauen. Both among the Mahometans and Gentiles are excellent Barbers. The people often wash their bodies, and anoint themselves with sweet Oyles.

Jewes hated.

White in bad estimation.

The Habits both of the men and women are little different, made for the most part of white Cotton-cloth. For the fashion they are close, streight to the middle, hanging loose downward below the knee, they weare long Breeches vnderneath, made close to their bodies that reach to their ankles, ruffling like boots on the smal of their legs. Their feet are bare in their shooes, which 40 most commonly they weare like slippers, that they may the more readily put them off when they come into their houses, whose floores are couered with excellent Carpets (made in that Kingdom, good as any in Turke or Persia) or somewhat else (according to the qualitie of the man) more base, vpon which they sit, when as they conferre or eate like Taylors on their shop-boards. The mens heads are couered with a long thinne wreath of Cloth, white or coloured, which goes many times about them, they call it a Shash. They vncover not their heads when as they doe reuerence to their Superiours, but in stead of that bow their bodies, putting their right hands to the top of their heads, after that they haue touched the Earth with them, as much as to say, the partie they salute, shall if he please tread vpon them. Those that bee equals take one the other by the Chinne or Beard, as Ioab did Amasa, 2. Sam. 20. but salute in Loue, not Treacherie. They 50 haue good words to expresse their wel-wishes, as this, Greeb-a Nemoas, that is, I wish the Prayers of the Poore, and many other like these most significant.

Attire.

Salutations.

Their women.

The Mahometan women, except they bee dishonest or poore, come not abroad. They are very well fauoured, though not faire, their heads couered with Veiles, their haire hangs downe behind them twisted with Silke. Those of qualitie are bedecked with many Jewels, about their neckes and wrists, round about their Eares are holes made for Pendants, and euery woman hath one of her Nostrils pierced, that there, when as shee please, shee may weare a Ring (it should seeme an ancient ornament, Es. 3. 21.)

The women in those parts haue a great happinesse about all I know, in their easie bringing forth of Children, for it is a thing common there for women great with Childe, one day 60 to ride carrying their Infants in their bodies; the next day to ride againe, carrying them in birth their armes.

For

Language and writing.

For the Language of this Empire, I meane the vulgar, it is called Indostan, a smooth tongue, and easie to be pronounced, which they write as wee to the right hand. The Learned Tongues are Persian and Arabian, which they write backward, as the Hebrewes to the left. There is little Learning among them, a reason whereof may be their penury of Bookes, which are but few, and they, Manuscripts: but doubtlesse, they are men of strong capacities; and were there literature among them, would be the Authors of many excellent Workes.

Aristotle and Avicenna.

They haue heard of Aristotle, whom they call Aplis, and haue some of his Bookes translated into Arabian. Auicenna, that noble Physician was borne in Samarcandia, the Countrey of Tamerlaine, in whose Science they haue good skill. The common Diseases of the Countrey are bloudie Fluxes, hot Feuers and Calentures, in all which they prescribe fasting as a principall remedie: that filthy Disease the consequence of Incontinencie is common amongst them. The people in generall liue about our Ages, but they haue more old men. They delight much in Musick, and haue many stringed and wind Instruments, which neuer seemed in my eare to bee any thing but discord. They write many wittie Poems, and compose Stories or Annals of their owne Countrey; and professe themselves to haue good skill in Astrologie, and in men of that Profession, the King puts so much confidence, that hee will not vndertake a Iourney, nor yet doe any thing of the least consequence, vnlesse his Wizards tell him tis a good and prosperous houre.

The Gentiles beginne their yeare the first of March, [The Mahometans theirs at the very instant (as the Astrologers ghesse) that the Sunne enters into Aries, from which time the King keepes a Feast called the Noocos, signifying nine dayes, which time it continues (like that Abasuerus made in the third yeare of his Raigne, Ester the first) where all his Nobles assemble in their greatest pompe, presenting him with Gifts, hee repaying them againe with Princely Rewards, at which time being in his presence, I beheld most immense and incredible Riches to my amazement in Gold, Pearles, Precious Stones, Iewels, and many other glittering vanities.

Of this see before in Sir T. Roe.

This Feast I tooke notice of at Mandoa, where the Mogol hath a most spacious house larger then any I haue seene, in which many excellent Arches and Vaults, speake for the exquisite skill of his Subiects in Architecture. At Agra hee hath a Palace, wherein two large Towers, the least ten foot square, are couered with plate of the purest Gold.

Hangings.

There are no Hangings on the walls of his houses, by reason of the heate; the wals are either painted or else beautified with a purer white Lime, then that we call Spanish. The floores paved with stone, or else made with Lime and Sand like our Playster of Paris, are spred with rich Carpets. There lodge none in the Kings house but his women and Eunuches, and some little Boyes which hee keepes about him for a wicked vse. Hee alwayes eates in priuate among his women vpon great varietie of excellent Dishes, which dressed and prooued by the Taster are serued in in private among his women, vpon great varietie of excellent Dishes, which dressed and proued by the Taster, are serued in Vessels of Gold (as they say) couered and sealed vp, and so by Eunuchs brought to the King. He hath meate ready at all houres, and calls for it at pleasure. They feede not freely on full dishes of Beeffe and Mutton (as we) but much on Rice boyled with pieces of flesh, or dressed many other wayes. They haue not many roast or baked meats, but stew most of their flesh. Among many Dishes of this kinde, Ile take notice but of one they call Deu Pario, made of Venison cut in slices, to which they put Onions and Herbs, some Rootes with a little Spice, and Butter, the most sanorie meate I euer tasted, and doe almost thinke it that very Dish which Jacob made ready for his Father, when he got the blessing.

- 10 In this Kingdome there are no Innes to entertaine Strangers, onely in great Townes and Cities are faire houses built for their receit, which they call Sarray, not inhabited, where any Passengers may haue roome freely, but must bring with him his Bedding, his Cooke, and other necessities wherein to dresse his meate, which are vsually carried on Camels, or else in Carts drawne with Oxen, wherein they haue Tents to pitch when they meete with no Sarray.

Innes.

- The inferiour sort of people ride on Oxen, Horses, Mules, Camels, or Dromedaries; the women like the men, or else in light Coaches with two Wheelles, couered on the top, and backe, but the fore-part and sides open, vnlesse they carrie women. They will conueniently hold two persons, beside the Driuer, they are drawne by Oxen, one yoke in a Coach, suited for colour, but many of them are white, not very large: they are guided with Cords, which goe through the parting of their Nostrils, and so twist their Hornes into the Coach-mens hand. They dresse and keepe them clothed as their Horses. They are naturally nimble, to which vse makes them so fitting to performe that labour, as that they will goe twentie miles a day, or more with good speed. The better sort ride on Elephants, or else are carried vpon mens shoulders alone, in a light thing they call a Palanke, which is like a Couch, or standing Pallat, but couered with a Cannopie: This should seeme an ancient effeminacie sometimes vsed in Rome, Iuuenal thus describing a fat Lawyer that fil'd one of them: Causidici noua cum veniat lectica Mathonis Plena ipso—

Riding.

- For Pastimes they delight in Hawking, hunting of Hares, Deere, or wilde Beasts: their Dogs for Chase are made somewhat like our Gray-hounds, but much lesse, they open not in the pursue of the game. They hunt likewise with Leopards, which by leaping seale on that they pursue. They haue a cunning deuice to take wild-fowle, where a fellow goes into the water with a Fowle of that kinde he desires to catch, whose skinn is stuffed so artificially, as that it appeares aliuely: He keepes all his body but the face vnder water, on which he layes this Counterfeit; thus comming among them, plucks them by the legs vnder water. They shoote for pastime much in Bowes, which are made curiously in the Countrey of Buffeloes hornes, glewed together, to which they haue Arrowes made of little Canes, excellently headed and feathered; in these they are so skilfull, that they will kill Birds flying. Others take delight in managing their Horses on which they ride, or else are otherwise carried though they haue not one quarter of a mile to goe, the men of qualitie holding it dishonorable to goe on foote.

Pastimes.

- 40 In their houses they play much at that most ingenious game we call Chesse, or else at Tables. They haue Cardes, but quite different from ours. Sometimes they make themselves merry with cunning Iugglers, or Mountebankes, who will suffer Snakes they keepe in Baskets, to bite them and presently cure the swelling with Powders; or else they see the trickes of Apes and Monkeyes.

Slie Fowling.

Shooting.

Chesse, Tables, Cardes, Mountebankes

In the Southerne parts of Indostan, are great store of large white Apes, some I dare boldly say, as tall as our biggest Gray-hounds: They are fearefull as it should seeme to Birds that make their Nests in Trees, wherefore nature hath taught them this subtiltie to secure themselves, by building their little houses on the twigs of the vtmost boughs, there hanging like Parle-nets, to which the Apes cannot possibly come.

Large Apes.

Cunning

Birdes.

- 50 Euery great Towne or Citie of India, hath Markets twice a day, in the coole season presently after the Sunne is risen, and a little before his setting. They sell almost euery thing by weight. In the heate of the day they keepe their houses, where the men of better fashion lying on Couches, or sitting on their Carpets, haue seruants stand about them, who beating the Ayre with broad Fannes of stiffe Leather, or the like, make winde to coole them: And taking thus their ease, they often call their Barbers, who tenderly gripe and smite their Armes and other parts of their bodies, in stead of exercise, to stirre the bloud. It is a pleasing wantonnesse, and much vsed in those hot Climes.

Markets twice a day.

- I must needs commend the Mahumetans, and Gentiles, for their good and faithfull Seruice, amongst whom a stranger may trauell alone with a great charge of money or goods, quite through the Countrey, and take them for his guard, yet neuer bee neglected or iniured by them. They follow their Masters on foote, carrying swords and Bucklers, or Bowes and Arrowes for their defence: and by reason of great plentie of Prouision in that Kingdome, a man may hire them vpon easie conditions, for they will not desire aboue fise shillings the Moone, paid the next day after the change, Quibus hinc toga, calcens hinc est, Et panis, fumusq; domi.— to prouide themselves all necessities, and for it doe most diligent seruice. Such is their Pietie to their parents, that those those which haue no greater meanes, will impart halfe of it, at the least, to releue their necessities, choosing rather for to famish themselves, then to see them want.

some.

There are both among the Mahometans and Gentiles, men of vndaunted courage: those of note among the Mahometans are called Baloches, inhabiting Haiacan, adioyning to the Kingdome of Persia, or else Patans, taking their denomination from a Prouince in the Kingdome of Bengala. These will looke an enemy boldly in the face, and maintaine with their liues their reputation of valour. Among the many sects of Gentiles, there is but one race of Fighters called Rashbootes, a number of which liue by spoyle, who in troopes surprize poore Passengers, cruelly butchering those they get vnder their power. Those excepted, all the rest in the Countrey are in generall Philanimous, and had rather quarrell then fight, hauing such poore spirits in respect of vs Christians, that the Mogol is pleased often to vse this Prouerbe, that one Portugal will beate three of them, and one English-man three Portugals.

Munition.

Vertoman tells of Portugal fugitues, which at the Portugals first coming, ran to the Indians, and taught them this Art.

Touching their Munition for the warre, they haue good Ordnance, made (for ought I could gather) very anciently in those parts. Iron Peeces carried vpon Elephants, before described, and lesser Gunnes made for Foot-men, who are somewhat long in taking their ayme, but come as neere the marke as any I euer saw. They fire all their Peeces with Match, as for Gun-powder they make very good. They vse Lances, and Swords, and Targets, Bowes and Arrowes. Their Swords are made crooked like a Faulchion, very sharpe, but for want of skill in those that temper them, will breake rather then bend, and therefore wee often sell our Sword-blades at high prices that will bow, and become streight againe. I haue seene Horse-men there, who haue carried whole Armories about them thus appointed; at their sides good Swords, vnder them Sheues of Arrowes, on their shoulders Bucklers, and vpon their backs Guns fastned with Belts, at the left side Bowes hanging in Cases, and Lances about two yards and a halfe long, hauing excellent Steele heads, which they carrie in their hands: yet for all this Harnesse, the most of them dare not resist a man of courage, though he haue for his defence but the worst of those weapons. The Armies in those Easterne warres, oftentimes consist of incredible multitudes: they talke of some which haue exceeded that mightie Host which Zerah King of Ethiopia, brought against Asa, 2. Chron. 14. The musicke they haue when they goe to battell, is from Kettle-drums, and long winde Instruments. The Armies on both sides vually beginne with most furious onsets, but in short time, for want of good Discipline, one side is routed, and the Controuersie not without much slaughter decided.

Mesquits.

The Mahometans haue faire Churches, which they call Mesquits, built of stone, the broad side towards the West is made vp close like a Wall; that towards the East is erected on Pillars, so that the length of them is North and South, which way they burie their dead: At the corners of their great Churches which stand in Cities are high Pinacles, to whose tops the Moolaas ascend certaine times of the day, and proclaime their Prophet Mahomet thus in Arabian: La Alla, illa Alla, Mahomet Resul-Alla: that is, No God but one God, and Mahomet the Ambassador of God. This in stead of Bells (which they endure not in their Temples) put the most religious in minde of their deuotion. Which words Master Coryat often hearing in Agra, vpon a certaine time got vp into a Turret, ouer against the Priest, and contradicted him thus in a loude voyce: La Alla, illa Alla, Hazaret-Eesa Ebn-Alla, No God but one God, and Christ the Sonne of God; and further added, that Mahomet was an Impostor: which bold attempt in many other places of Asia, where Mahomet is more zealously professed, had forfeited his life with as much torture as Tyrannie could inuent. But here euery man hath libertie to professe his owne Religion freely, and for any restriction I euer obserued, to dispute against theirs with impunitie.

Burials neere Tankes.

Now concerning their burials: euery Mahometan of Qualitie in his life time, provides a faire Sepulcher for himselfe and kindred, encompassing with a firme wall a good circuit of ground, neere some Tanke (about which they delight for to burie their dead) or else in a place nigh Springs of Water, that may make pleasant Fountaynes, neere which hee erects a Tombe round or square, vaulted vpon Pillars, or else made close, to be entred with Doores, vnder which are the bodies of the dead interred. The rest of the ground they plant with Trees and Flowers, as if they would make Elysian fields, such as the Poets dreamed of, wherein their soules might take their repose. They burie not within their Churches. There are many goodly Monuments of this kinde richly adorned, built to the memorie of such as they haue esteemed Saints, of which they haue a large Kalender. In these are Lamps continually burning, whither men transported with blinde deuotion daily resort, there to contemplate the happines these Peires (for so they call them) enioy. But among many faire Piles there dedicated to this vse, the most excellent is at Secandra, a Village three miles from Agra. It was beganne by Achabar-sha, this Kings Father, who there lyes buried, and finished by this present King, who meanes to lye beside him.

Moolaas or Priests.

Religious.

Their Moolas imploy much of their time like Scriueners, to doe businesse for others, they haue libertie to marrie as well as the people, from whom they are not distinguished in habite. Some liue retyred, that spend their dayes in Meditation, or else in giuing good morall Precepts vnto others: these are of high esteeme, and so are another sort called Seayds, who deriue themselves from Mahomet. The Priests doe neither reade nor preach in their Churches, but there is a set forme forme of prayer in the Arabian tongue, not vnderstood by most of the common people, yet repeated by them as well as by the Moolaas. They likewise rehearse the Names of God and Mahomet certayne times every day vpon Beads, like the misse-led Papist, who seemes to regard the number, rather then the weight of Prayers. Before they goe into their Churches they wash their feete, and entring in put off their shooes. As they beginne their deuotions they stop their Eares and fixe their Eyes, that nothing may diuert their Thoughts; then in a soft and still voyce they vtter their prayers, wherein are many words, most significantly expressing the Omnipotence, Greatnesse, Eternitie, and other attributes of God. Many words full of humiliation, confessing with diuers submissiue gestures their owne vnworthinesse: when they pray casting themselves low vpon their faces sundrie times, and then acknowledge that they are Burthens to the Earth, and Poison to the Aire, and the like, and therefore dare not so much as looke vp to heauen, but at last comfort themselves in the Mercies of God through the mediation of Mahomet; and many amongst them, to the shame of vs Christians, what impediment soeuer they haue either by pleasure or profit, pray fise times every day, at six, nine, twelue, three and six of the clock. But by the way, they distinguish their time in a different manner from vs, diuiding the day into foure, and the night into as many parts, which they call Pores, these are againe subdiuided each into eight parts, which they call Grees, measured according to the ancient custome by water dropping out of one little vessell into another, by which there alwayes stand seruants appointed for that purpose, smiting with an hammer a Concaue piece of pure metall, like the inner part of an ordinarie platter, hanging by the brim on a wyre, the number of Grees and Pores as they passe. For the temperance of many both among the Mahometans and Gentiles, it is such, as that they will rather die, like the Mother and her seuen sonnes, 2. Mac. 7. then eate or drinke any thing their Law forbids. Such meate and drinke as their Law allowes they vse onely to satisfie Nature, not Appetite; hating Gluttonie, and esteeming Drunkenesse (as indeed it is) a second Madnesse, and therefore haue but one word in their language (Mest) for a Drunkard and a Mad-man.

They keepe a solemne Lent, which they call the Ram-Ian, about the moneth of August, which continues one whole Moone; during which time, those that bee strict in their Religion forbear their women, and will take neither meate nor drinke so long as the Sunne is aboue their Horizon, but after He is set, eate at pleasure. Towards the end of this Lent they consecrate a day of Mourning, to the memorie of their dead friends, when I haue beheld diuers of the meaner sort make bitter lamentation. (Beside this common sadnesse, there are many foolish women who often in the yeere, so long as they suruiue, moysten the graues of their husbands or children, with affectionate teares.) But when the Night begins to couer the Day of generall mourning, they fire an innumerable companie of Lamps and Lights, which they set on the sides and tops of their houses, and all other most conspicuous places, and when these are extinguished, take foode. The Ram-Ian fully ended, the most deuout Mahometans assemble to some famous Misquit, where by a Moola, some part of the Alcoran (which they will not touch without reuerence) is publikely read. They keepe a Feast in Nouember, called Buccaree, signifying the Ram-feast, when they solemnely kill a Ram, and roast him in memorie of that Ram which redeemed Ishmael (as they say) when Abraham was readie to make him a sacrifice. Many other feasts they haue in memorie of Mahomet and their Pieres.

They haue the bookes of Moses, whom they call Moosa Carym-Alla, Moses the righteous of God. Ibrahim Calim-Alla, Abraham the faithfull of God. So Ishmael, the true sacrifice of God. Dahood, Dauid the Prophet of God. Selimon, Salomon the wisdom of God, all expressed as the former in short Arabian words; to whose particular remembrances they daily sing Ditties: and moreouer, there is not a man amongst them, but those of the ruder sort, that at any time mentions the Name of our blessed Sauour, called there Hazaret-Eesa, the Lord Christ, without reuerence and respect, saying, that he was a good man and a iust, liued without sinne, did greater miracles then euer any before or since him; Nay farther, they call him Rhahow-Alla, the breath of God, but how he should be the Sonne of God cannot conceiue, and therefore will not beleue. Notwithstanding this, the Mahometans in generall thinke vs Christians so vncleane, they will not eate with vs, nor yet of any thing is dressed in our vessels.

Among the Mahometans are many called Deruises, which relinquish the World, and spend their dayes in solitude, expecting a recompence in a better life; whose sharpe and strict penances they voluntarily vnder-take, farre exceede all those the Romanists boast of. For instance, there are some that liue alone vpon the tops of Hills remote from companie, there passing their time in contemplation, and will rather famish then moue from these retyred Cells, wherefore the people that dwell neereft to them, out of deuotion releue them. Some againe, impose long times of fasting vpon themselves til nature be almost quite decayed. There are many other among them they call religious men, who weare nothing about them but to hide their shame, and these like the Mendicant Friars begge for all they eate. Vsually they liue in the Suburbs of great Cities or Townes, and are like the Man our blessed Sauour mentions, about the Citie of the Gadarens, which had Deuils, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house but in the Tombes. They make little fires in the day, sleeping at night in the warme ashes, with which they be-smear their bodies. These Ashmen suffer not the Rasor at any time to come vpon their heads, and some of them let their nayles grow like Birds clawes, as it is written of Nabuchadnezzar, when hee was driuen out from the societie of men. And there are a sort among them, called Mendee, who like the Priests of Baal, often cut their flesh with Knives and Launcers. Others I haue seene who out of deuotion put such massie Fetters of Iron vpon their Legs, as that they can scarce stirre with them, and so as fast as they are able, goe many miles in pilgrimage barefoote vpon the parching ground, to visit the Sepulchres of their deluding Saints, thus taking more paines to goe to Hell (Tantum Religio potuit suadere malorum) then any Christian I know doth to goe to Heauen. These marry not, such as doe, Mahomet allowes foure wiues, besides they take libertie to keepe as many women as they are able, only the Priests content themselves with one. 10

Notwithstanding this Polygamie, the hot ieaiousies of the lustfull Mahometans are such, that they will scarce endure the Brothers or Fathers of their beloued Wiues or Women, to haue speech with them, except in their presence: and Time, by this restraint, hath made it odious for such Women as haue the reputation of honestie, to be seene at any time by strangers. But if they dishonour their Husbands beds, or being vnmarried are found incontinent professing chastitie, rather then they shall want punishment, their owne Brothers will bee their Executioners, who for such vnnaturall acts shall be commended, rather then questioned. Yet there is toleration for impudent Harlots, who are as little ashamed to entertayne, as others, openly to frequent their houses. The Women of better fashion haue Eunuchs in stead of men, to wait vpon them, who in their minoritie are deprived of all that may prouoke ieaousie. 20

Their Marriages are solemnized in great pompe, for after the Moola hath ioyned their hands with some other Ceremonie and Words of Benediction, the first watch of the night they begin their jollitie, the Man on horse-backe be he poore or rich, with his friends about him, many Cresset lightly before him, with Drums and wind Instruments and other pastimes: the Woman followes with her friends in Coaches couered, and after they haue thus passed the most eminent places of the Citie or Towne they liue in, returne home and there part with a Banquet, the men and women separated. They marry for the most part at the ages of twelue or thirteene, their Mothers most commonly making the matches. 30

§. IIII.

Of the Gentiles Sects, Opinions, Rites, Priests, and other obseruations of Religion and State in those parts.

Gentiles, eighty and foure Sects.

Those I suppose which our stories call Brachmanes. Pagodes. Opinions.

Tradition of Adam.

Marrying in the same Tribe and Trade.

NOW more particularly of the Gentiles, which are there distracted in fourscore and foure seuerall Sects, all differing mainly in opinion, which had oftentimes fild me with wonder, but that I know Satan (the father of diuision) to be the Seducer of them all. Their illiterate Priests are called Bramins, who for ought I could euer gather, are so sottish and inconstant in their grounds, that they scarce know what they hold. They haue little Churches, which they call Pagodes, built round, in which are Images for worship made in monstrous shapes. Some of them dreame of Elysian fields, to which their soules must passe over a Styx or Asharon, and there take new bodies. Others hold, that ere long the World shall haue a period, after which they shall liue here againe on a new Earth. Some Bramins haue told me how that they acknowledge one God, whom they describe with a thousand hands, with a thousand feere, and as many eyes, thereby expressing his power. They talke of foure books, which about six thousand yeeres since were sent them from God by their Prophet Ram, whereof two were sealed vp and might not be opened; the other to be read onely by themselves. They say that there are seuen Orbes, aboue which is the Seate of God; that God knowes not petie things, or if he doe regards them not. They circumscribe God vnto Place, saying, that he may be seene, but as in a Mist as farre off, not neere. They beleue that there are Deuils, but so bound in chaines that they cannot hurt them. They call a man Adam, from our first father Adam, whose wife tempted with the forbidden fruit, tooke it as they say and eate it downe, but as her husband swallowed it, the Hand of God stopped it in his throat, whence man hath a Bunch there, which women haue not, called by them Adams Apple. As anciently among the Iewes, their Priesthood is hereditarie; for euery Bramins sonne is a Priest, and marries a Bramins daughter; and so among all the Gentiles, the men take the daughters of those to bee their wiues which are of their Fathers Tribe, Sect, and Occupation. For instance, a Merchants sonne marries a Merchants daughter. And euery mans sonne that liues by his labour, marries the daughter of him that is of his owne profession, by which meanes they neuer aduance themselves. These Gentiles take but one wife, of which they are not so fearefull as the Mahometans of their multitude, for they suffer them to goe abroad. They are married yong, at six or seuen yeeres old (their Parents making the Contracts) and about twelue come together. Their Nuptials, as thole of the Mahometans, are performed with much pompe and jollitie. 60

- For their Habit it differs little from the Mahometans, but many of the women weare Rings vpon their Toes, and therefore goe barefoote. They haue likewise broad Rings of brasfe (or better Metall according to the qualitie of the woman) about the small of the legges to take off and on, haply such as the Prophet meant by the tinkling ornaments about the feete, or the ornaments of the legs, which the Iewish women were wont to put on, Esay 3. And such as these they haue about their armes. The flaps or nether part of their eares are boared, when they are yong, which hole daily stretched and made wider by things kept in it for that purpose, at last becomes so large, that it will hold a Ring (I dare boldly say, as large as a little Sawcer) made hollow on the sides for the flesh to rest in. Both men and women wash their bodies euery day before they eate, which done, they keepe off their clothes but the couering of modestie, till they haue fed. This outward washing appertaines, as they thinke, to their cleansing from sinne, not vnlike the Pharisees, who would not eate with vnwashed hands, Mar. 7. Hence they ascribe a certaine Diuinitie to Riuer, but about all, to Ganges, daily flocking thither in Troopes, and there throw in pieces of gold, or siluer, according to their deuotion and abilitie, after which they wash their bodies. Both men and women paint on their fore-heads or other parts of their faces red or yellow spots.
- Now farther for their grosse opinions, they beleue not the resurrection of flesh, and therefore burne the bodies of their dead neere some Riuer, if they may with conueniencie, wherein they sowe the Ashes. Their Widowes marrie not, but after the losse of their Husbands, cut their haire, and spend all their life following, as neglected Creatures, whence to bee free from shame. Many yong women are ambitious to die with honor (as they esteeme it) when their fiery loue brings them to the flames, as they thinke, of Martyrdome, most willingly: Following their dead Husbands vnto the fire, and there imbracing are burnt with them; but this they doe voluntary, not compelled. The parents and friends of those women will most ioyfully accompanie them, and when the wood is fitted for this hellish Sacrifice, and begins to burne, all the people assembled shoute and make a noyse, that the screeches of this tortured creature may not bee heard. Not much vnlike the custome of the Ammonites, who when they made their children passe through the fire to Moloch, caused certaine Tabret, or Drums to sound, that their cry might not be heard, whence the place was called Tophet, a Tabret, 2. Kings 23. 10. There is one sect among the Gentiles, which neither burne nor interre their dead (they are called Parcees) who incircle pieces of ground with high stone walls, remote from houses or Roade-ways, and therein lay their Carkasses wrapped in Sheetes, thus hauing no other Tombes but the gorges of rauinous Fowles.
- The Gentiles for the most part are very industrious: They till the ground or else spend their time otherwaies diligently in their vocations. There are amongst them most curious Artificers, who are the best Apes for imitation in the world, for they will make any new thing by patterne. The Mahometans are generally idle, who are all for to morrow (a word common in their mouthes) they liue vpon the labours of the Gentiles. Some of which poore seduced Infidels, will eate of nothing that hath life, and these liue vpon Herbs, and Milke, and Butter, and Cheefe, and Sweet-meates, of which they make diuers kindes, whereof the most wholesome is Greene Ginger, as well preserved there as in any part of the world. Others will eate Fish, and no liuing thing else. The Rashbootes eate Swines-flesh, most hateful to the Mahometans. Some will eate of one kinde of flesh, some of another; but all the Gentiles abstaine from Beefe, out of the excellent esteeme they haue of Kine, and therefore giue the King yearly (beside his other exactions) great summes of money as a ranome for those Creatures. Whence among other good prouision, we meete there but with little Beefe.
- Those most tender hearted Idolaters are called Bantans, who hold Pithagoras his μὴ φάγετε κτήνη, as a prime Article of their Fath. They thinke that the soules of the best men and women, when their bodies let them out of Prison, take their repose in Kine, which in their opinion are the best of all Creatures. So the soules of the wicked goe into viler beasts, as the soules of Gluttons and Drunkards into Swine; the soules of the voluptuous and incontinent into Monkeys, and Apes; the soules of the furious, cruell, and reuengefull, into Lyons, Tygers, and Wolves; the soules of the enuious, into Serpents; and so into other Creatures according to their qualitie and disposition, successiuelly from one to another of the same kinde, ad infinitum; by consequence, beleueing the immortalitie of the world. So that there is not a silly Flie, but if they may bee credited, carries about some soules (haply they thinke of light women) and will not be perswaded out of these grosse opinions, so incorrigible are their sottish errors. And therefore will not deprive the most offensive creatures of their life, not Snakes that will kill them, saying, it is their nature to doe harme, how that they haue reason to shunne, not libertie to destroy them.
- For their workes of Charitie, many rich men build Sarraas, or make Wells, or Tankes neere to High-ways that are much trauelled, where passengers may drinke, or else allow Pensions vnto poore men, that they may sit by the High-way sides and offer water vnto those that passe.
- Their day of rest is * Thursday, as the Mahometans Friday. Many Festiuals they haue which they keepe solemne, and Pilgrimages whereof the most famous are specified in the briefe descriptions of Negracut and Cyba, where people out of deuotion cut off part of their tongues, which (if Master Coryat who strictly obserued it, may be beleeued) in a few daies became whole againe. It were easie to enlarge, but I will not cast away Inke and Paper in a farther description of their stupid Idolatries, the summe is, that both Mahometans and Gentiles ground their opinions vpon Tradition, not Reason, and are content to perish with their Fore-fathers, out of a preposterous zeale, and louing peruersenesse neuer ruminating on that they maintayne, like to vncleane beasts which chew not the Cud.

Now both these Mahometans and Gentiles are vnder the subiection of the Great Mogoll, whose name signifieth a circumcised man, and therefore he is called the Great Mogoll, as much to say, the Chiefe of the Circumcision. He is lineally descended by the Father from that famous Conquerour of the East, called in our Stories Tamberlaine, in theirs Temar, who towards his end by an unhappie fall from his Horse, which made him halt to his Graue, was called Temar-lang, or Temar the lame. The present King is the ninth in a direct Line from that his great Ancestors.

The Emperour stiles himselfe, The King of Iustice, the light of the Law of Mahomet, the Conquerour of the World. Himselfe moderates in all matters of consequence which happen neere his Court, for the most part iudging, secundum allegata & probata. Tryals are quicke and so are Executions, hangings, beheading, impaling, killing with Dogges, by Elephants, Serpents, and other like according to the nature of the Fact. The execution is commonly done in the Market place. The Gouvernours in Cities and Prouinces proceed in like forme of Iustice. I could neuer heare of Law written amongst them: the King and his Substitutes will is Law. His Vice-gerents continue not long in a place, but to preuent popularitie receiue vsually a remouue yearly. They receiue his Letters with great respect: They looke for Presents from all which haue occasion to vse them; and if they be not often visited will aske for them; yea, send them backe for better exchange. The Cadee will imprison Debtors and Sureties, bound with hand and Seale: and men of power for payment will sell their persons, wiues, and children, which the custome of the Land will warrant.

The King shewes himselfe thrice a day; first at Sun-rising at a Bay-window toward the East, many being there assembled to giue him the Salam, and crying, Padsha Salamant, that is, Line, O King: At noone he sees his Elephants fight or other pastimes. A little before Sun-set, he shewes himselfe at a window to the West, and the Sunne being set, returneth in with Drums and wind Instruments, the peoples acclamations adding to the consort. At any of these three times, any Sutor holding vp his Petition to be seene, shall be heard. Betwixt seuen and nine he sits priuately attended with his Nobles.

No Subiect in this Empire hath Land of Inheritance, nor haue other title but the Kings will, which makes some of the Grandes to liue at the height of their meanes; Merchants also to conceale their Riches lest they should be made Spunges. Some meane meanes the King allowes the Children of those great Ones, which they exceed not, except they happily succeed in their fathers fauours. His Pensions are reckoned by Horse, of which hee payeth a Million in his Empire, for euery Horse allowing five and twentie pound yearly, raised from Lands thereunto designed. There are some twentie in his Court which haue pay of five thousand Horse, others of foure thousand or three thousand, and so downward. Hee which hath pay of five thousand, is bound to haue two thousand at command, and so in like proportion others. This absolute dependance makes them dissolute Parasites. When he giueth aduancement, he addeth a new name, as Pharao did to Ioseph, and those pithily significant, as Mahober Chan, the beloued Lord; Chan Iahann, the Lord of my Heart; Chan Allan, the Lord of the World, &c.

The Chiefe Officers of State are his Treasurer, the Master of his Eunnuches (who is Steward and Comptroller of his House) his Secretarie, the Master of his Elephants, the Tent-master, and Keeper of his Wardrobe. These are subordinate Titles of Honour, as Chan, Mirza, Vmbra, or Captaine, Haddee (a Souldier or Horseman.) Gorgeous Apparell is prohibited by the Sunnes heate, the King himselfe being commonly vested with a Garment, as before described, of pure white Calico Lawne. Blue may not be worne in his presence (the colour of Mourners) nor the name of death sounded in his eares; but such casually is mollified by tearmes to this purpose; Such an one hath made himselfe a Sacrifice at your Maiesties feet. That heate of the Countrey makes little sale for English cloth, most vsed there for coverings of Elephants, Horses, Coaches. Yet may this King be thought to exceed any other in glorious Thrones and rich Iewels. Hee hath a Throne in his Palace at Agra, ascended by degrees, on the top whereof are foure Lions made of massie Siluer, gilded, set with Precious Stones, supporting a Canopie of massie Gold. By the way I may mention, a tame Lion liuing in his Court while I was there, going vp and downe without hurt like a Dogge. His Iewels wherewith hee is daily adorned about his head, necke, wrists, and hilts of his Sword and Dagger, are inualluable. He is on his Birth-day the first of September, (now sixtie times renewed) yearly weighed, and account kept thereof by his Physicians, thereby ghesing at his bodily estate. Part of two Letters to his Maiestie (one you haue before) is here translated out of Persian, sent by Sir Thomas Roe, but written, one a yeare before the other.

When

When your Maiestie shall open this Letter, let your Royall heart be as fresh, as a sweet Garden; let all people make reuerence at your Gate; let your Throne be advanced higher amongst the greatnesse of Kings of the Prophet Iesus; let your Maiestie be the greatest of all Monarches, who may deriue their counsell and wisdom from your brest as from a Fountayne, that the Law of the Maiestie of Iesus may reuiue and flourish vnder your protection. The Letters of Loue and Friendship which you sent me, and the Presents (tokens of your good affection toward mee) I haue receiued by the hands of your Embassadour Sir Thomas Roe, who well deserueth to be your trusted Seruant; deliuered to me in an acceptable and happie houre. Vpon which mine eyes were so fixed, that I could not easily remooue them to any other Object, and haue accepted them with great ioy, &c. The last Letter hath this beginning.

Mogols Letters to his Maiesty.

How gracious is your Maiestie, whose greatnesse God preserve? As vpon a Rose in a Garden, so are mine eyes fixed vpon you. God maintayne your Estate, that your Monarchie may prosper and be augmented, and that you may obtayne all your desires, worthy the greatnesse of your Renowne. And as your heart is noble and upright, so let God giue you a glorious Raigue, because you strongly defend the Maiestie of Iesus, which God yet made more flourishing, because it was confirmed by Miracles, &c.

That which followeth in both Letters, is to testifie his care and loue toward the English. These Letters being written, their Copies were sent to the Lord Embassadour, and the originals rolled vp and couered with cloth of Gold, and sealed vp at both ends; which is the Letter-fashion of those parts.

Sealing Letters.

20 We trauelled two yeares with the Great Mogoll in progresse, in the temperate moneths twixt October and April, there being no lesse then two hundred thousand men, women, and children in this Leskar, or Campe (I am hereof confident) besides Elephants, Horses, and other beasts that eate Corne: all which notwithstanding, wee neuer felt want of any provision, no not in our nineteene dayes trauell from Mandao to Amadanar, thorow a Wildernesse; the Road being cut for vs in the mayne Woods. The Tents were of diuers colours, and represented a spacious and specious Citie: The Kings Tents red, reared on poles very high, and placed in the midst of the Campe, couering a large compasse, incircled with Canats (made of red Calico stiffened with Canes at euery breadth, standing vpright about nine foot high) guarded round euery night with Souldiers. He remooued ten or twelue miles a day more or lesse according to the conuenience of water. His Wiues and Women of all sorts (which are one thousand at least, provided for in his Tents) are carryed in Palankas, or vpon Elephants, or else in Cradles, hanging on the sides of Dromedaries, couered close and attended by Eunuches. In wiuing, he respects fancie more then honour, not seeking affinitie with Neighbour Princes, but to please his eye at home. Noore-Mahal (the name of his best Beloued) signifieth the Light of the Court: Shee hath much aduanced her friends, before meane, and in manner commands the Commander of that Empire by engrossing his affections. The King and his Great men maintayne their women, but little affect them after thirtie yeares of their age.

40 This multitude of women notwithstanding, the Mogoll hath but fixe Children, five Sonnes and a Daughter. All his Sonnes are called Sultans, or Princes, the eldest Sultan Carsero, the second, Sultan Parneis, Sultan Caroon the third, Sultan Shabar the fourth, the last is Sultan Tanch, which word in the Persian signifieth, A Throne: so named by the King, who the first houre of his quiet possessing the Throne, had newes of his birth, about nineteene yeares since. The first Sonne by any of his married Wiues, by prerogatiue of birth inherits: the elder Brother beeing there called the Great Brother. Although the younger be not put to death, as with the Turkes, yet it is obserued, that they suruiue not long their Father, employed commonly in some dangerous expedition. Achabar-sha had threatned to dis-herit the present King for abuse of Anar-kalee, (that is, Pomegranate kernell) his most beloued Wife, but on his death-bed repealed it. This Achabars death is thus reported. He was wont vpon displeasure to giue Pills to his Grandes, to purge their soules from their bodies; which intending against One, and hauing another Cordiall Pill for himselfe, whiles hee entertayned the other with faire flatteries, by a happie-vnhappie mistake hee tooke the Poyson himselfe, which with a mortall Fluxe of blood in few dayes skiled him: Neque enim lex in istior vlla est. Quam necis artifices arte perire sua.

50 This Kings disposition seemes composed of extreames, very cruell, and otherwhiles very milde; often ouercome with Wine, but seuerely punishing that fault in others. His Subiects know not to disobey, Nature forgetting her priuate bonds twixt Father and Sonne to fulfill that publike. He daily relieues many poore, and will in pietie helpe to carrie sometimes his Mother in a Palanka on his shoulders. He speakes respectfully of our Sauour, but is offended at his Crosse and pouertie, thinking them incompetent to such Maiestie, though told that his humilitie was to subdue the Worlds pride.

The Mogolls disposition.

60 All Religions are tolerated, and their Priests in good esteeme. My selfe often receiued from the Mogoll himselfe, the appellation of Father, with other many gracious words, with place amongst his best Nobles. The Iesuites haue not only admittance into his presence, but incouragements from him by many gifts, with libertie of conuerting to them; and to the subiect, to be without losse of fauour conuerted. He made tryall of one Conuert with many threats to de-terre him from his new profession, and finding him vndauntedly resolute, he assayed by flatteries and promises to re-gaine him, but therein also failing, hee bade him continue, and with a Reward discharged him; hauing told him, that if he could haue frayed or brought him from his Religion, he would haue made him an example for all Wauerers. The chiefe Iesuite was Francis Vaine Braggcs. cus Corsi a Florentine by birth, liuing at the Mogolls Court, Agent for the Portugals, I would I were able to confirme the Reports of their Conuersions. The truth is, they haue spilt the water of Baptisme vpon some faces working on the necessities of poore men, who for want of meanes, which they giue them, are content to weare Crucifixes, but for want of instruction are only in name Christians. (I obserued that of the poore there, fise haue begged in the name of Marie, for one in the Name of Christ) I also desired to put my hand to this holy Worke, but found it difficult, both by Mahumetane libertie for women, and the debauched liues of some Christian-vnchristian men amongst them, Per quorum latera patitur Euangelium. Hee which hath the Key of Dauid, open their eyes, and in his good time send Labourers into this Vineyard. Amen. Because you haue the transcripts of Letters from the Great Mogoll, I haue added here part of a Letter from the Great Turke, to his Maiestie, that the Reader may delight himselfe with the strangeness of the stile.

TO the most glorious of the great Lords that fellow, Iesus, elected by the great and mightie of the Christian Faith: Corrector of the things of all the Nations of the Nazaritanes; endued with the brightnesse of Lordship, Honour, Maiestie, and Glorie, King Iames of the Kingdome of England, &c. whose end be with all happinesse and felicitie.

At the comming of this our Imperiall Letter to your Maiesties hands, with our Imperiall signe, you shall vnderstand of the arrivall at our Port (which Port is indeed the refuge of Iustice, and the Gate of Honourable succour, yea, the principall place of all the Kings of the World) of one of your Maiesties Honourable and acceptable Gentlemen, Thomas Glouer, with your Maiesties most friendly and most sincere Letter; the tenour whereof is, That by the good will and pleasure of the sole Creator of the World, your Maiestie hath not only taken in possession the Kingdom of England, but also as heretofore the deceased Queene of England hath bene in sincere and mutuall Friendship and Peace with our Sublime and most happie Port; so your Maiestie also consequently vouchsafeth to manifest and approue the same. Moreover, your Maiestie hath giuen vs to vnderstand, that your will and pleasure is, that the Subiects of your Maiesties Countries, in manner as heretofore they were wont, should come and traffique in these our guarded Dominions, and so to the end accordingly at their pleasures might continue in the same. Finally, all those things that were by it certified vnto our Imperiall Greatnesse, we haue sufficiently comprehended and vnderstood. Now your Maiestie shall vnderstand, that it being from the time of our Father and Grand-father, of most happie Memories, alwaies the custome and vse, and most excellent order, to hold our most high and sublime Port open, now also in conformitie thereof, especially we being by the Diuine grace and fauour seated in the Throne of Iustice, it is not any way prohibited nor forbidden to any person to enter, and to depart from the same. Especially the Queene of England of good Memorie, being in friendship, from the time of our Father and Grand-father of most happie Memorie, it hath bene alwaies the vse and custome to shew vnto her Subiects, who trade and traffique within our Musulmanicall guarded Dominions, all extraordinary fauour, grace, and aide. Now by the great fauour of the Omnipotent God, we being come and established with honour, felicitie, prosperitie and greatnesse in the Seate and Throne of happinesse, in conformitie of the aboue said fauours, before it was on your Maiesties behalfe requested for the renouation of the peace and entercourse, which is betwixt vs, wee haue not only caused to renew the Capitulations for the securitie of the traffique of the Merchants, giuing the same into the hands of your Maiesties Ambassadour, but also, &c.

Written the last day of the Moone, called Giemasillenel, and of the Moones of the yeare of the transmigration of our Prophet, on whom the grace and peace of the highest God continue. 1013.

CHAP. VII.

The Trauels of LEWIS BARTHEMA or VERTOMAN into Egypt, Syria, Arabia, Persia, and India, heretofore published in English by R. EDEN, and here corrected according to R. AMYSIOS Copie, and contracted.

§. I.

His Trauell thorow the Desarts of Medina and Mecha, and their profane Holies.

DEparting from Venice with prosperous winds, in few dayes wee arrived at the Citie of Alexandria in Egypt: where the desire wee had to know things more strange and further off, would not permit vs to tarrie long. And therefore departing from thence, and sayling vp the Riuer of Nilus, we came to the Citie of new Babylon, commonly called, Cayro. It seemed to mee much inferiour to the report and fame that was thereof: for the greatnesse thereof seemed nothing agreeable to the bruit, and appeared no more in circuit then the citie of Rome, although much more peopled, and better inhabited. But the large fields of the Suburbs haue deceiued many, being disperfed with in manner innumerable Villages, which some haue thought to haue beene part of the Citie, which is nothing so. For those Villages and disperfed houses, are two or three miles from the Citie, and round about it on euery side.

Departing from Babylon, and returning to Alexandria, where we againe entred into our Sea, we came to Barutti, a Citie on the Sea-coast of Syria. From hence wee sayled to Tripoli. From thence we came to Aleppo. Departing from thence, we came to Damasco, in ten dayes iourney.

It is in manner incredible, and passeth all beliefe, to thinke how faire the Citie of Damasco is, and how fertile is the soyle. And therefore allured by the maruellous beautie of the Citie, I remayned there many dayes, that learning their Language, I might know the manners of the People. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans, and Mamalukes, with many Christians, living after the manner of the Greekes. When it pleaseth the Sultan to extort a certaine summe of Gold of his Noblemen or Merchants (for they vse great robberies and murders (for the Moores are vnder the Mamalukes, as Lambs to the Wolfe) he sends two Letters to the Captaine of the Castle. In the one is contayned, that with an Oration he innite to the Castle such as pleaseth him. In the other is declared the minde of the Soldan, what hee demandeth of his Subiects. When the Letters bee read, with all expedition they accomplish his commandement, bee it right or wrong, without respect. This meanes the Soldan inuented to extort money. Yet sometimes it commeth to passe, that the Noblemen are of such strength, that they will not come when they are commanded, knowing that the Tyrant will offer them violence. And therefore oftentimes when they know that the Captaine of the Castle will call them, they flee into the Dominions of the Turke. This haue we gathered as touching their manners; wee haue also obserued, that the Watchmen in the Towers, doe not giue warning to the Guard with liuely voyce, but with Drummes, the one answering the other by course. But if any of the Watchmen be so sleepeie, that in a Pater noster while he answereth not to the sound of the watch, hee is immediatly committed to prison for one whole yeere. In euery house are seene Fountaines of curious worke embossed and grauen. Their houses outwardly are not beautifull, but inwardly maruelously adorned with variable workes of Marble and Porphyre. Within the Towne are many Temples or Churches, which they call, Moscheas. But that which is most beautifull of all other, is builded after the manner of Saint Peters Church in Rome, if you respect the greatnesse, excepting this, that in the middle is no rooffe or couerture, but is all open: but about the rest of the Temple, it is altogether vaulted. There they obserue religiously the bodie of the holy Prophet Zacharie. The Temple hath also foure great double gates of metall, very faire, and many goodly Fountaines within it.

The Mamalukes are that kind of men, which haue forsaken our Faith, and as slaues are bought by the Gouvernour. They are very actiue, and brought vp both in learning and warlike discipline, vntill they come to great perfection. As well the little as the great, without respect, receiue stipend of the Gouvernour: which for euery moneth amounteth to six of those pieces of Gold which they call Saraphos, beside the meat and drinke for himselfe and his seruant, and also prouision for his Horse. And the more expert they be, and of greater actiuitie, they haue the greater wages. They walke not in the Citie but by two or three together, for it is counted dishonour for any of them to walke without a companion. And if by the way they chance to meet meet with two or three women (for they lay waite to tarrie for them about such houses whether they know the women resort) licence is granted them , as they by chance first meet with them, to bring them into certaine Tauernes, where they abuse them. When the Mamalukes attempt to discover their faces (for they goe with their faces couered) they strue with them, because they will not be knowne : but when the Mamalukes persist wantonly to discover them, they say thus vnto them, Is it not enough for you, that you haue abused our bodies as pleaseth you, but that you will also discover our faces? Then the Mamalukes suffer them to depart. But sometime it chanceth, that when they thinke to prostitute the daughter of some Gentlemen or Noblemen, they commit the fact with their owne wiues : which thing chanced whilst I was there. The women beautifie and garnish themselves as much as any. They vse silken apparell, and couer them with cloth of Gossampine, in maner as fine as Silke. They weare white Buskins, and Shooes of red or purple colour. They garnish their heads with many Iewels and Eare-rings, and weare Rings and Bracelets. They marrie as often as them listeth: for when they are wearie of their first marriage, they goe to the Cady, and make request to him to bee diuorced from

The Mahumetans vse long Vestures and loose, both of Silke and Cloth. The most part vse Hose of Gossampine cloth, and white Shooes. The iourney from Damasco to Mecha, and of the manners of the Arabians

In the yeere of our Lord 1503. the eighth day of the moneth of Aprill, the Carauan being readie to goe to Mecha, I entred familiaritie and friendship with a certaine Captaine Mamaluke, of them that had forsaken our Faith, with whom being agreed of the price, hee prepared me apparell like vnto that which the Mamalukes vse to weare, and giuing me also a good Horse, accompanied me with the other Mamalukes. This (as I haue said) I obtayned with great cost, and many gifts which I gaue him. Thus entring to the iourney, after the space of three dayes,

we came to a certaine place named Mezerick, where we remayned three dayes, that the Merchants which were in our companie might prouide things necessarie, as specially Camels, and diuers other things. There is a certaine Prince whom they call Zambei, of great power in the Countrie of Arabia: he had three brethren, and foure children. He nourisheth fortie thousand Horses, ten thousand Mares, and foure thousand Camels. The Countrie where he keepeth the herds of these beasts, is large, of two dayes iourney. This Prince Zambei, is of so great power, that he keepeth warre with the Soltan of Babylon, the Gouernours of Damasco, and of Ierusalem. In the time of Haruest & gathering of fruits, hee is giuen wholly to prey and robbing, and with great subtiltie deceiue the Arabians: for, when they thinke him to bee a mile or two off, hee is with them suddenly betimes in the morning : and inuading their Lands, carrieth away their fruits, Wheat, and Barley, euen as hee findeth it in the sackes : and so liueth continually day and night with such incursions. When his Mares bee wearied with continuall running, hee resteth a while : and to refresh them, giueth them Camels Milke to drinke, to coole them after their great labour. Those Mares are of such maruellous swiftnesse, that when I presently saw them, they seemed rather to flye then to runne. Note also, that these Arabians ride on Horses without Saddles, and weare none other vesture then onely an inward Coat, or Peticoat, except some chiefe men ; for weapon, they vse a certaine long Dart of Reeds, of the length of ten or twelue cubits, pointed with Iron (after the manner of Iauelins) and fringed with Silke. When they attempt any incursions, they march in such order, that they seeme to goe in troups: they are of despicable and little stature, and of colour betweene yellow and blacke. They haue the voyces of women, and the haire of their head long and blacke, and laid out at large. They are of greater multitude then a man would beleue, and are among themselves at continuall strife and warre. They inhabite the Mountaines, and haue certaine times appointed to robbetrie: for this purpose they obserue especially the time, when they are certaine of the passage of the Pilgrims, and other that iourney that way to Mecha, then like Theeuës they lie in the way and robbe them. When they make these theeuish inuasions, they bring with them their Wiues, Children, Families, and all the goods they haue. Their Houses they put vpon the Camels:

Camels: for other Houses haue they none, but liue onely in Tents and Paulions, as doe our Souldiers.

Tents and Paulions.

Such Tabernacles are made of blacke wooll, and that rough and filthie. But to returne to our Voyage. The eleuenth day of Aprill, departed from Mezaribe the companie of Camels (which they call the Carauan) to the number of five and thirtie thousand, with fortie thousand men. But wee were no more then threescore Mamelukes, which had taken the charge to guide and guard the Carauan; which was diuided into three parts, some in the front, other in the midst of the Armie, and other in the reare. Damasco is from Mecha fortie dayes and fortie nights iourney. Departing therefore from Mezaribe, we continued our iourney that day, vntill the two 10 and twentieth houre of the day. Then our Captaine, after hee had giuen the watch-word and signe, commanded that euery man should rest and remayne in the place where the signe should be giuen them. Therefore as soone as they heard the signe, by the sound of a Trumpet, they stayed, and after they had vnburdened their Camels, spent there two houres to victuall themselves and their beasts: then the Captaine giuing a new signe, charging their Camels againe, they departed speedily from thence. Euery Camell hath at one feeding five Barley loaues, raw and not baked, as big as a Pomgranate. Taking horse, they continued that iourney the day and night following, vntill two and twentie houres of the day, and at that houre they obserue the order which we haue spoken off here before. Euery eighth day they draw water by digging the ground or sand: by the way neuerthelesse somewhere are found Wells and Cisternies. After euery 20 eighth day, they rest their Camels one or two dayes to recouer their strength. The Camels are laden with incredible burdens, and double charge: that is to meane, the burden of two great Mules. They drinke but once in three dayes. They giue them to eat five Barley loaues as big as a Pomgranate.

This for feare of the Arabians

Water.

The burden of the Camels:

When they tarrie and rest them at the waters aforesaid, they are euer enforced to conflict with a great multitude of the Arabians: but the battell is for the most part without bloudshed: for although we haue oftentimes fought with them, yet was there onely one man slaine on our part; for these Arabians are so weake and feeble, that threescore Mamelukes, haue often put to the worst, fortie or fiftie thousand Arabians. For no Pagans are in strength or force of Armes to be compared to the Mamelukes, of whose actiuitie I haue seene great experience: among 30 the which this is one. A certaine Mameluke layed an Apple vpon the head of his seruant, and at the distance of about twelue or fourteene paces, strooke it off from his head. I saw likewise another, who riding on a saddled Horse with full course (for they vse Saddles as we doe) tooke off the Saddle from the Horse still running, and for a space bearing it on his head, put it againe on the Horse still continuing in his full course.

Passing the iourney of twelue dayes, we came to the Valley of Sodoma and Gomorrha, where we found it to be true, that is written in holy Scripture: for there is yet to be seene, how they were destroyed by Miracle. I affirme that there are three Cities. There is yet seene, I wot not what, like Bloud, or rather like red Waxe mixt with Earth, three or foure yards deepe. It is easie to beleue that those men were infected with most horrible vices, as testifieth the barren 40 Region, vtterly without water. Those people were once fed with Manna: but when they abused the gift of God, they were sore plagued. Departing twentie miles from these Cities, about thirtie of our companie perished of thirst, and diuers other were buried in the sand, not yet fully dead. Going somewhat further forward, wee found a little Mountaine, at the foot whereof we found water, and therefore made our abode there. The day following early in the morning, came vnto vs foure and twentie thousand Arabians, asking money for the water which wee had taken. Wee answered, that wee would pay nothing, because it was giuen vs by the goodnesse of God. Immediately we came to hand-strokes. Wee gathering our selues together on the said Mountaine, as in the safest place, vsed our Camels in the stead of a Bulwarke, and placed the Merchants in the midst of the Armie (that is) in the midst of the Camels, while we fought manfully on euery side. The battell continued so long, that water fayled both vs and 50 our Enemies in the space of two dayes. The Arabians compassed about the Mountaine, crying and threatening that they would breake in among the Camels: at the length, to make an end of the conflict, our Captaine assembling the Merchants, commanded a thousand and two hundred pieces of Gold to be giuen to the Arabians: who when they had receiued the money, said, that the summe of ten thousand pieces of Gold should not satisfie them for the water which we had drawne. Whereby we perceiued that they began further to quarrell with vs, and to demand some other thing then money. Whereupon incontinent our Captaine gaue commandement, that whosoever in all our companie were able to beare Armes, should not mount vpon the Camels, but should with all expedition prepare themselves to fight. The day following in the 60 morning, sending the Camels before, and enclosing our Armie, being about three hundred in number, we met with the Enemies, and gaue the onset. In this conflict, we lost onely a man and a woman, and had none other damage: we slue of the Arabians a thousand and five hundred. Whereof you need not maruel, if you consider that they are vnarmed, and weare only a thin loose vesture, and are beside almost naked: their Horses also being as euill furnished, and without Saddles, or other furniture.

A conceit of Manna, contrarie to Scripture.

Iewes Pigmei.

In the space of eight dayes, wee came to a Mountayne which containeth in circuit ten or twelue miles. This is inhabited with Iewes, to the number of five thousand, or thereabout. They are of very little stature, as of the height of five or six spannes, and some much lesse. They haue small voyces like women, and of blacke colour, yet some blacker then other: They feede of none other meate then Mutton. They are circumcised, and deny not themselues to be Iewes. If by chance any Mahumetan come into their hands, they slay him aliue. At the foote of the Mountayne, we found a certaine hole, wherein the Raine water was receiued. By finding this opportunitie, we laded sixteene thousand Camels, which thing greatly offended the Iewes. They wandred in that Mountayne, scattered like wilde Goates or Prickets, yet durst they not come downe, partly for feare, and partly for hatred against the Mahumetans. Beneath the Mountayne are seene seuen or eight Thorne trees, very faire, and in them wee found a paire of Turtle Doues, which seemed to vs in manner a miracle, hauing before iournied fifteen dayes and nights, and saw neither Beast nor Fowle. Then proceeding two dayes iourney, wee came to a certaine Citie named Medina Talnabi: foure miles from the said Citie, we found a Well. And remayning here one day, we washed our selues, and changed our Shirts, the more freshly to enter into the Citie: it is well peopled, and containeth about three hundred houses, the Walls are like Bulwarkes of earth, and the houses both of stone and bricke. The soyle about the Citie is cursed of God, and is vtterly barren, except that about two stones cast from the Citie, are seene about fiftie or sixtie Palme trees that beare Dates. There, by a certaine Garden, runneth a course of water, falling into a lower Plaine, where also passengers are accustomed to water their Camels. And here opportunitie now serueth to confute the opinion of them which thinke that the Arke or Tombe of wicked Mahumet in Mecha, to hang in the Ayre, not borne vp with any thing. I affirme this neither to be true, nor to haue any likenesse of truth, I presently beheld these things, and saw the place where Mahumet is buried, in the said Citie of Medina Talnabi: for we tarryed there three daies, to come to the true knowledge of all these things. When we were desirous to enter into their Temple, wee could not be suffered to enter, without a companion, little or great, of those Moores. They taking vs by the hand, brought vs to the place where, they say, Mahumet is buried.

The Deuill he was.

His Temple is square, and is a hundred Paces in length, and fourescore in breadth; the entrie into it, is by two Gates; from the sides it is couered with three Vaults, it is borne vp with foure hundred Columnnes, or Pillars of white Bricke, there are seene hanging Lampes about the number of three thousand. From the other part of the Temple, in the first place of the Meschita, is seene a Tower of the circuit of five Paces, vaulted on euery side, and couered with a cloth of silke, and is borne vp with a grate of Copper, curiously wrought, and distant from it two Paces; and of them that goe thither, is seene, as it were, through a Lettice. Toward the left hand, is the way to the Tower, and when you come thither, you must enter by a narrower Gate. On euery side of those Gates or Doores, are seene many bookes, in manner of a Librarie, on the one side twentie, and on the other side five and twentie, which are of Mahumet and is fellowes: within the said Gate is seene a Sepulchre, that is, a graue vnder the earth, where Mahumet was buried. There are also his two sonnes in law, Hali and Othman; Hali was his brothers sonne, and tooke to wife Fatina, the daughter of Mahumet. There are also his two fathers in law, Bubecher and Homer. These foure were chiefe Captaines of the Armie of Mahumet. Euery of these haue their proper bookes of their facts and traditions. And hereof proceedeth the great dissention and discord of Religion and manners among this kind of filthie men, while some confirme one Doctrine, and some another, by reason of their diuers sects of Patrons, Doctors, and Saints, as they call them. By this meanes are they maruellously diuided among themselues, and like beasts kill themselues, for such quarrels of diuers opinions, and all false.

For declaration of the sect of Mahumet, vnderstand that in the highest part of the Tower aforesaid, is an open round place. Now shall you vnderstand what craft they vsed to deceiue our Carauan. The first Euening that we came thither, our Captaine sent for the chiefe Priest of the Temple, to come to him: and bid him shew him the body of Nabi, that is, the Prophet, and that he would giue three thousand Seraphins of gold. Also that hee had no Parents, neither Brothers, Sisters, Kinsfolke, Children, or Wiues, neither that he came thither to buy Merchandize, as Spices, or any manner of precious Iewels: but onely for very zeale of Religion, and saluation of his soule, and was therefore greatly desirous to see the bodie of the Prophet. To whom the Priest of the Temple, with proude countenance, made answer in this manner: Darest thou with those eyes with the which thou hast committed so many horrible sinnes, desire to see him by whose sight God hath created Heauen and Earth? To whom againe our Captaine answered, thus: My Lord, you haue said truly; neuertheless I pray you that I may finde so much fauour with you, that I may see the Prophet: whom when I haue seene, I will immediately thrust out mine eyes. The Side answered: O Sir, I will open all things vnto thee. So it is, that no man can denie but that our Prophet dyed here, who if he would, might haue dyed at Mecha: But to shew in himselfe a token of humilitie, and thereby to giue vs example to follow him, he was willing rather here then elsewhere to depart out of this world, and was incontinent of Angels borne into Heauen, and abides in the presence of God. Then our Captaine said to him: Where is Iesus Christ

the Sonne of Marie? To whom the Side answered: At the feet of Mahomet. Then said our Captaine againe: It sufficeth, it sufficeth, I will know no more. After this, our Captaine comming out of the Temple, and turning him to vs, said: See (I pray you) for what goodly stuffe I would haue paide three thousand Seraphs of gold? The same day at Euening, at almost three a clocke of the night, ten or twelue of the Elders of that Sect of Mahomet, entred into our Carauan, which remained not past a stones cast from the Gate of the Citie. These ran hither and thither crying like mad men, with these words, Mahomet the messenger of God shall rise againe. O Prophet, O God, haue mercie on vs. Our Captaine and wee all raised with this crie, tooke weapon with all expedition, suspecting that the Arabians were come to rob our Carauan: We asked 10 what was the cause of that exclamation, and what they cryed? for they cryed as doe the Christians, when suddenly any maruellous thing chanceth. The Elders answered: Saw you not the lightning which shone out of the Sepulchre of the Prophet Mahomet. Our Captaine answered, that he saw nothing; and we also being demanded, answered in like manner. Then said one of the old men, Are yee slaues? that is to say, bought men: meaning thereby Mamalukes. Then said our Captaine, We are indeed Mamalukes. Then againe the old man said, You my Lords, cannot see heauenly things, as being not yet confirmed in our Religion. To this our Captaine answered againe, O yee mad and insensate beasts, I had thought to haue giuen you three thousand pieces of gold, but now, O you Dogs, and progenie of Dogs, I will giue you nothing. It is therefore to be vnderstood, that none other shining came out of the Sepulchre, then a certaine flame
 20 which the Priests caused to come out of the open place of the Tower spoken of here before, whereby they would haue deceived vs. And therefore our Captaine commanded that thereafter none of vs should enter into the Temple. Of this also we haue most true experience, and most certainly assure you, that there is neither Iron or Steele, or the Magnes stone that should so make the Tombe of Mahomet to hang in the Ayre, as some haue falsely imagined: neither is there any Mountayne neerer then foure miles: we remayned here three dayes to refresh our companie. To this Citie victuals and all kind of Corne is brought from Arabia Felix, and Babylon, or Alcayr, and also from Ethiopia, by the Red Sea, which is from this Citie but foure daies iourney.

After that we were wearied with the trumperies of the Religion of Mahomet, we determined to goe forward on our iourney: and that by guiding of a Pilot, who directed our course 30 with the Mariners Box, or Compasse and Card, euen as is vsed in sayling on the Sea. And thus bending our iourney by the South, wee found a very faire Well or Fountayne, from the which flowed abundance of water. The Inhabitants affirme that Saint Marke the Euangelist was the Author of this Fountaine, by a miracle of God, when that Region was in manner burned with incredible drinesse. Here wee and our Beasts were satisfied with drinke. I may not here omit to speake of the Sea of Sand, and of the dangers thereof. This was found of vs before we came to the Mountayne of the Lewes. In this Sea of Sand we trauelled the iourney of five daies, and five nights: this is a great broad Plaine, all couered with white Sand, in manner as small as Floure: If the winde had blowne from the South (as it came to vs from the North) we had beene all ouerwhelmed with Sand. And although wee had prosperous winde, yet wee could scarcely 40 see the one the other ten Paces off. And therefore the Inhabitants traelling this way, are inclosed in Cages of wood, borne with Camels, and liue in them, so passing the iourney, guided by Pilots with Mariners Compasse and Card, euen as on the Sea, as we haue said. In this iourney also many perish for thirst, and many by drinking too much, when they find such good waters. In these Sands is found Momia, which is the flesh of such men as are drowned in these Sands, and there dried by the heate of the Sunne: So that those bodies are preserved from putrifaction by the drinesse of the Sand: and therefore that dry flesh is esteemed medicinable. When the wind bloweth from the North, then the Sand riseth, and is driuen against a certaine Mountayne, which is an arme of the Mount Sinai. There we found certaine Pillars artificially wrought. On the left hand of the said Mountayne, in the top or ridge thereof is a Den, and the entrie into it is by an 50 Iron Gate. Some saie that in that place Mahomet liued in contemplation. Here wee heard a certaine horrible noyse and crye: for passing the said Mountayne, wee were in so great danger, that we thought neuer to haue escaped. Departing therefore from the Fountayne, we continued our iourney for the space of ten dayes: And twice in the way fought with fiftie thousand Arabians, and so at the length came to the Citie of Mecha, where all things were troubled by reason of the warres betweene two brethren, contending which of them should possesse the Lordship of Mecha.

nuall warre with him. The eighteenth day of May, we entred into the Citie by the North side: then by a declining way, we came into a Plaine. On the South side are two Mountaynes, the one very neere the other, distant onely by a little Valley, which is the way that leadeth to the Gate of Mecha. On the East side, is an open place betweene two Mountaynes, like vnto a Vally, and is the way to the Mountayne where they sacrifice to the Patriarkes Abraham and Isaac. This Mountayne is from the Citie about eight or ten miles, and of the height of three stones cast: it is of stone as hard as Marble, yet no Marble. In the top of the Mountayne, is a Temple or Meschita, made after their fashion, and hath three wayes to enter into it. At the foot of the Mountayne are two Cisternes, which conferue waters without corruption: of these, the one is reserued to minister water to the Camels of the Carauan of Babylon, or Al-cayr; and the other, for them of Damasco. It is raine water, and is deriued farre off. 10

But to returne to speake of the Citie: for as touching the manner of sacrifice, which they vse at the foote of the Mountayne, we will speake hereafter. Enttring therefore into the Citie, we found there the Carauan of Cayro, which preuented vs eight daies, and came not the way that we came. This Carauan contained threescore and foure thousand Camels, and a hundred Mamalucks to guide them. And here ought you to consider, that by the opinion of all men, this Citie is greatly cursed of God, as appeareth by the great barrenesse thereof, for it is destitute of all manner of Fruits and Corne. It is scorched with drynesse for lacke of water, and therefore the water is there growne to such price, that you cannot for foure Quatrini buy as much water as will satisfie your thirst for one day. Now therefore, I will declare what prouision they haue for victuals. The most part is brought them from the Citie of Cayros; There is brought by the Red Sea, from a certaine Port, named Ziden, distant from Mecha fortie miles. The rest of their prouisions, is brought from Arabia Felix (that is) the happy or blessed Arabia: so named for the fruitfulness thereof, in respect of the other two Arabiaes, called Petrea, and Deserta, that is, Stonie and Desart. They haue also much Corne from Ethiopia. Here we found a maruellous number of strangers, and Peregrines or Pilgrims: Of the which, some came from Syria, some from Persia, some from Ethiopia, and other from both the East Indies, the greater and the lesser. I neuer saw in any place greater abundance and frequentation of people, forasmuch as I could perceiue by tarrying there the space of twentie daies. These people resort thither for diuers causes, as some for Merchandize, some to obserue their vow of Pilgrimage, and other to haue pardon for their sinnes: as touching the which, wee will speake more hereafter. 30

In the midst of the Citie is a Temple, in fashion like vnto the Colossus of Rome, the Amphitheatrum I meane, like vnto a Stage, yet not of Marble or hewed stones, but of burnt Bricks: For this Temple, like vnto an Amphitheater, hath fourescore and ten or an hundred Gates, and is vaulted. The entrance is by a discent of twelue stayres or degrees on euery part, in the Church porch are sold onely Iewels and precious stones. When you are past the entrance it is close aboue, and the gilded walls shine on euery side with incomparable splendour. In the lower part of the Temple (that is vnder the vaulted places) is seene a marvellous multitude of men: for there are five or six thousand men that sell none other thing then sweet Ointments, and especially a cer- 40

taine odoriferous and most sweet Powder, wherewith dead bodies are embalmed. And from hence, all manner of sweet saours are carried in manner, into the Countries of all the Mahumetans. It passeth all beliefe to thinke of the exceeding sweetnesse of the saours, farre surmounting the shops of the Apothecaries. The three and twentieth day of May, the Pardons began to be granted in the Temple, and in what manner, we will now declare. The Temple in the midst is open, without any inclosing, and in the midst also thereof is a Turret, of the largenesse of six paces in circuit, and inuolued or hanged with cloth or Tapestry of silke, and passeth not the height of a man. They enter into the Turret by a Gate of Siluer, and is on euery side beset with vessels full of Balme. On the day of Pentecost, licence is granted to all men to see these things. The Inhabitants affirme that Balme or Balsam, to bee part of the treasure of the Sultan, that is Lord of Mecha. At euery Vault of the Turret, are fastned grates of Iron, to let in light. The three and twentieth day of May, a great multitude of people began early in the morning before day, seuen times to walke about the Turret, kissing euery corner thereof, oftentimes feeling and handling them. From this Turret about ten or twelue paces, is another Turret, like a Chappell, builded after our manner. This hath three or foure entries: in the midst thereof is a Well of threescore and ten Cubits deepe: the water of this Well is infected with salt Peter. 50

Eight men are thereunto appointed to draw water for all the people: and when a multitude of people haue seuen times gone round about the first Turret, they come to this Well; and touching the mouth or brim thereof, they say thus: Be it in the honor of God, God pardon me, and forgie me my sinnes. When these words are said, they that draw the water, powre three Buckets of water on the heads of euery one of them that stand neere about the Well, and wash them all wet from the head to the foot, although they be apparelled with silke. Then the doting fooles dreame that they are cleane from all their sinnes, and that their sinnes are forgiven them. They say furthermore, that the first Turret, whereof we haue spoken, was the first house that euer Abraham 60

ham builded : and therefore, while they are yet all wet of the said washing, they goe to the Mountaine, where (as we haue said before) they are accustomed to sacrifice to Abraham. And remaining there two daies, they make the said Sacrifice to Abraham at the foot of the Mountain. When they intend to sacrifice, some of them kill three sheepe, some foure, and some ten : So that the Butcherie sometime so floweth with bloud, that in one day are slaine aboute thirtie thousand sheepe. They are slaine toward the rising of the Sunne, and shortly after are distributed to the poore for Gods sake : for I saw there of poore people, to the number of thirtie or fortie thousand. These make many and long Ditches in the Fields, where they keepe fire with Camels dung, and roast or seethe the flesh that is giuen them, and eat it euen there. I beleue that these poore people come thither rather for hunger then for deuotion : which I thinke by this coniecture, that great abundance of Cucumbers are brought thither from Arabia Felix, which they eate, casting away the parings without their Houses or Tabernacles, where a multitude of the said poore people gather them euen out of the mire and sand, and eate them, and are so greedie of these parings, that they fight who may gather most. The day following, their Cadi (which are in place with them as with vs the Preachers of Gods Word) ascended into a high Mountaine, to preach to the people that remayned beneath : and preached to them in their Language the space of an houre. The summe of his Sermon was, that with teares they should bewaile their sinnes, and beate their breasts, with sighes and lamentation. And the Preacher himselfe with loud voyce, spake these words, O Abraham beloued of God, O Isaac chosen of God, and his Friend, pray to God for the people of Nabi. When these words were said, suddenly were heard lamenting voices. When the Sermon was done, a rumour was spred that a great Armie of Arabians, to the number of twentie thousand, were comming. With which newes, they that kept the Carauans being greatly feared, with all speed, like mad men, fled into the Citie of Mecha, and we againe hearing newes of the Arabians approach, fled also into the Citie. But while wee were in the mid-way betweene the Mountaine and Mecha, we came by a despicable wall, of the breadth of foure Cubits : The people passing by this wall, had couered the way with stones, the cause whereof, they say to be this : When Abraham was commanded to sacrifice his Sonne, he willed his Sonne Isaac to follow him to the place where he should execute the commandement of God. As Isaac went to follow his Father, there appeared to him in the way a Deuill, in likenesse of a faire and friendly person, not farre from the said wall, and asked him friendly whether he went. Isaac answered, that he went to his Father who tarried for him. To this the Enemie of Mankind answered, that it was best for him to tarrie, and if that he went any further, his Father would sacrifice him. But Isaac nothing fearing this aduertisement of the Deuill, went forward, that his Father on him might execute the commandement of God : and with this answer (as they say) the Deuill departed. Yet as Isaac went forward, the Deuill appeared to him againe in the likenesse of another friendly person, and forbade him as before. Then Isaac taking vp a stone in that place, hurde it at the Deuill, and wounded him in the fore-head : In witnesse and remembrance whereof, the people passing that way, when they come neere the wall, are accustomed to cast stones against it, and from thence goe into the Citie. As we went this way, the Aire was in manner darkened with a multitude of stocke Doves. They say that these Doves, are of the Progenie of the Dove that spake in the eare of Mahumet, in likenesse of the Holy Ghost. These are seene euery where, as in the Villages, Houses, Tauernes, and Graniers of Corne and Rice, and are so tame, that one can scarcely driue them away. To take them or kill them, is esteemed a thing worthy death : and therefore a certaine Pension is giuen to nourish them in the Temple.

Two Vnicornes. His passage by the Red Sea to Aden. Imprisonment and counterfeiting himselfe madde. Escape and visiting other parts of Arabia, Zeila, Cambaia.

IN the other part of the Temple are Parkes or places inclosed, where are seene two Vnicornes, and are there shewed to the people for a wonder. The one of them, which is much higher then the other, yet not much vnlke to a Colt of thirtie moneths of age; in the fore-head groweth only one Horne, in manner right forth, of the length of three Cubits. The other is much younger, and like a young Colt : of the age of one yeare; the horne of this, is of the length of foure spannes. This beast is of the colour of a Horse of Weesell colour, and hath the head like an Hart, but no long necke, a thinne mane hanging only on the one side : their legs are thinne and slender, like a Fawne or Hind : the hooves of the fore-feet are diuided in two, much like the feet of a Goat, the outward part of the hinder feet is very full of haire. This beast doubtlesse seemeth wild and fierce, yet tempereth that fiercenesse with a certaine comelinesse. These Vnicornes one gaue to the Sultan of Mecha, as a most precious and rare gift. They were sent him out of Ethiopia by a King of that Countrey, who desired by that present to gratifie the Sultan of Mecha.

The only report that I haue found in any credible Author of Vnicornes: neither in 120. yeares which haue passed since, haue I found one Relation to second it. Some mention Vnicornes, but vnderstand the Rhinoceros. Brassia.

Whereas my Captaine gaue me charge to buy certaine things, as I was in the Market place, a certaine Mamaluke knew me to be a Christian. And therefore in his owne Language, spake vnto me these words, Intemename: That is, whence art thou? To whom I answered that I was a Mahumetan. But he said, Thou sayest not truly. I said againe, By the head of Mahumet, I am a Mahumetan. Then he said againe, Come home to my house. I followed him willingly. When we were there, he began to speake to me in the Italian Tongue, and asked me againe from whence I was, affirming that he knew me, and that I was no Mahumetan: Alſo that he had bin sometime in Genua and Venice. And that his words might be the better beleued, rehearsed many things which testified that he said truth. When I vnderstood this, I confessed freely that I was a Romane, but professed to the Faith of Mahumet in the Citie of Babylon, and there made one of the Mamalukes. Whereof he seemed greatly to reioyce, and therefore vsed me honourably. But because my desire was yet to goe further, I asked the Mahumetan whether that Citie of Mecha was so famous as all the World spake of it: and inquired of him where was the great abundance of Pearles, Precious Stones, Spices, and other rich Merchandise that the bruit went of to be in that Citie. Then he began with more attentiu minde, in order to declare vnto me the cause why that Mart was not so greatly frequented as it had beene before, and laid the only fault thereof on the King of Portugall. When I was well instructed in all things, I spake vnto him friendly these words in the Mahumets Language, Menaha Menalhaba: That is to say, I pray you assist me. He asked me wherein. To helpe mee (said I) how I may secretly depart hence to those Kings that were most enemies to the Christians: Affirming furthermore, that I would giue place to no man in making of all manner of Gunnes and Artillerie. Then said hee, Praysed be Mahumet who sent thee hither, to doe him and his *Moore*s good seruice: and willed me to remayne secretly in his house with his wife, and required mee earnestly to obtayne leaue of our Captaine, that vnder his name hee might leade from Mecha fiftene Camels laden with Spices, without paying any custome: for they ordinarily pay to the Sultan thirtie Saraphes of Gold, for transporting of such Merchandises for the charge of so many Camels. I put him in good hope of his request, although he would aske for a hundred, affirming that that might easily be obtayned by the Priuiledges of the Mamalukes and therefore desired him that I might safely remayne in his house. Then nothing doubting to obtaine his request, hee greatly reioyced, and talking with me yet more freely, gaue me further instructions, and counselled me to repaire to a certaine King of the greater India, in the Kingdome and Realme of Dechan. Therefore the day before the Carauan departed from Mecha, he willed me to lye hid in the most seeret part of his house. The day following, early in the morning, the Trumpetter of the Carauan gaue warning to all the Mamalukes to make readie their Horses, to direct their journey toward Syria, with Proclamation of death to all that should refuse so to doe. When I heard the sound of the Trumpet, and was aduertized of the streight commandement, I was maruellously troubled in minde, and with heauie countenance desired the Mahumetans wife not to bewray mee, and committed my selfe to the mercie of God. On the Tuesday following, our Carauan departed from Mecha, and I remayned in the Mahumetans house with his wife, but he followed the Carauan. Yet before he departed, he gaue commandement to his wife to bring mee to the Carauan, which should depart from Ziden the Port of Mecha, to goe into India. This Port is distant from Mecha fortie miles. Whilest I lay thus hid in the Mahumetans house, I cannot expresse how friendly his wife vsed mee. This also furthered my good entertainment, that there was in the house a faire young Maide, the Niece of the Mahumetan, who was greatly in loue with me. But at that time, in the middest of those troubles and feares, the fire of Venus was almost extinct in me: and therefore with dalliance of faire words and promises, I still kept my selfe in her fauour. Therefore the Friday following, about noon-tyde I departed, following the Carauan of India. And about mid-night, we came to a certaine Village of the Arabians, and there remayned the rest of that night, and the next day till noone.

From hence we went forward on our iourney toward Ziden, and came thither in the silence of the night. This Citie hath no walls, yet faire houses, some-what after the building of Italie. Heere is great abundance of all kind of Merchandises, by reason of resort in manner of all Nations thither, except Iewes and Christians, to whom it is not lawfull to come thither. Asloone as I entered into the Citie, I went to their Temple, or Meschita, where I saw a great multitude of poore people, about the number of fise and twentie thousand, attending a certaine Pilot who should bring them into their Countrey. Here I suffered much trouble and affliction, being enforced to hide my selfe among these poore folkes, faining my selfe very sicke, to the end that none should be inquisitiue what I was, whence I came, or whither I would. The Lord of this Citie is the Sultan of Babylon, Brother to the Sultan of Mecha, who are subiect to the great Soldan of Cairo. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans. The soyle is vnfruitfull, and lacketh fresh water. The Sea beateth against the Towne. There is neuerthelesse abundance of all things: but brought thither from other places, as from Cairo, Arabia Felix, and diuers other places. The heate is here so great, that men are in manner dried vp therewith. And therefore there is euer a great number of sicke folkes. This Citie contayneth about fise hundred houes.

After

After fifteene dayes were past, I couenanted with a Pilot, who was ready to depart from thence into Persia, and agreed on the price, to goe with him. There lay at Anchor in the Hauē almost a hundred Brigantines and Foyfts, with diuers Boates and Barkes of sundry sorts, both with Oares and without Oares. Therefore after three dayes, giuing wind to our sayles, we sailed in the Red Sea.

After sixe dayes sayling, we came to a Citie named Gezan. It hath a commodious Port, and very faire, where we found about forty five Brigantines and Foyfts of diuers Regions. The Citie is hard by the Sea-side, and the Prince thereof, is a Mahumetan. The soyle is fruitfull, like vnto Italie: It beareth Pomegranates, Quinces, Peaches, Apples of Assyria, Pepons, Melons, Oranges, Gourds, and diuers other Fruits: Also Roses, and sundry sorts of Flowers, the fairest that euer I saw: It seemeth an earthly Paradise. The most part of the Inhabitants goe naked. In other things, they liue after the manner of the Mahumetans. There is also great abundance of Flesh, Wheate, Barley, the Graine of white Millet or Hirse (which they call Dora) whereof they make very sweet Bread. Departing from the Citie of Gezan, the space of five dayes, sayling toward the left hand, hauing euer the Coast of the Land in sight, wee came to the sight of certayne houses, where about fourteene of vs went a-land, hoping to haue had some victuals of the Inhabitants. But we lost our labour, for in the stead of victuals, they cast stones at vs with Slings. They were about a hundred that fought with our men for the space of an houre. Of them were slaine foure and twenty. The rest were driuen to flight, they were naked, and had none other Weapons then Slings. After their flight, we brought away with vs certayne Hennes and Calues very good. Shortly after, a great multitude of the Inhabitants shewed themselves to the number of five or sixe hundred: but we departed with our prey, and returned to the ships.

The same day sayling forward, we came to an Iland named Camaran, which containeth ten miles in circuit. In it is a Towne of two hundred houses, the Inhabitants are Mahumetans: it hath abundance of fresh water and flesh, and the fairest Salt that euer I saw. The Port is eight miles from the Continent, it is subiect to the Sultan of Arabia Felix. After wee had remayned here two dayes, we tooke our way toward the mouth of the Red Sea in the space of two dayes sayling.

The day after our arriuing at Aden, the Mahumetans took me, and put shackles on my legs, which came by occasion of a certayn Idolater who cryed after me, saying, O Christian Dog, borne of Dogs. When the Mahumetans heard the name of a Christian, incontinent they layd hands on mee, and brought me to the Lieutenant of the Sultan of that place, who assembling his Councel, asked their opinion if I should be put to death as a Spye of the Christians. The Sultan himselfe was out of the Citie, and therefore his Lieutenant, who had yet neuer adiudged any man to death, thought it not good to giue sentence against me, before the Sultan should bee aduertized hereof. And therefore I escaped this present danger, and remayned in custodie fiftie and five dayes, with an Iron of eightene pound weight hanging at my feet. The second day after I was taken, many Mahumetans in great rage resorted to him, whose Office was to make Inquisition of Treason. These a few dayes before, by swimming hardly escaped the hands of the Portugals, with the losse of their Foyfts and Barkes, and therefore desired greatly to bee reuenged of the Christians: affirming, with outragious cry, that I was a Spye of the Portugals. But God sayled not to assist me. For the Master of the Prison perceiuing the outrage of the Mahumetans, and fearing that they would offer me violence, made fast the gates of the Prison. After that five and fiftie dayes were past, the Sultan commanded that I should be brought before him: and so set vpon a Camell with my shackles, I came in eight dayes iourney to the place where the Sultan lay, and was brought to his presence in a Citie named Rhada: for there the Sultan had assembled an Armie of thirtie thousand men, to make warre against the Sultan of the Citie of Sana, which is three dayes iourney from Rhada, and situate partly on the declining of a Hill, and partly in a Plaine, very faire to be seene, well peopled, and hauing plentie of all things. When I came before the Sultan, he began to aske me what I was. I answered that I was a Romane, professed a Mamaluks in Babylon of Alcayr, and that of Religious minde to discharge my conscience of a Vow which I had made, I came to the Citie of Medinathalhabi, where Nabi (or the Prophet) is buried and after to Mecca. And that in all Cities and Countries by the way, I heard honourable report of his greatnesse, wisdome, and singular vertue, and therefore ceased not vntill I entred his Dominions, most desirous to see his face, yeelding thanks to God and Nabi, that it was now my chance to be presented before him: trusting that the equitie of his wisdome, would thereby consider that I was no Spye of the Christians, but a true Mahumetan, and his seruant and slaue. Then said the Sultan, Say Leila illala Mahumet resullala: which words I could neuer well pronounce, eyther that it pleased not God, or that for feare and scruple of conscience, I durst not. Therefore when he saw me hold my peace, he committed me againe to Prison, commanding that I should be straightly looked vnto, where sixteene men of the Citie were appointed, euery day foure, to watch me by course. So that for the space of three moneths, I had not the fruition of Heauen, during which miserable time, my Dyet was euery day a Loafe of Millet, so little that seuen of them would not haue satisfied my hunger for one day: But if I might haue had my fill of water, I would haue thought my selfe happy. Within three dayes after the Sultan marched with his Armie, in which were foure thousand Horsemen, to besiege the Citie of Sana. These Horsemen were borne of Christian Parents, and blacke like the Ethiopians, and while they were yet very young, were bought in the Kingdome of Prestor Iohn, at eight or nine yeares old. They are brought vp in Discipline of Warre. This Sultan hath them in great estimation, for they are the guard of his owne person, and are more valued then foure score thousand of the other; they couer their body with a findon, like vnto a cloke or cape, putting out onely one arme, and are beside naked without any other apparell. In the Warres they vse round Targets made of Buffels Hydes, with certayne little barres of Iron to strengthen them. These Targets are painted very faire with sundry colours, and very commodious to resist Darts, and are in largenesse as 10 much as the mouth of a Barrell: the handle is made of wood, as bigge as they may well hold in their hands, and made fast with nayles. They vse Darts and short broad Swords. At other times, they vse also Vestures of Linnen cloth of sundry colours. In the Warres euery man beareth with him a Sling, which he casteth, first shaking it often about his head. When they come to forty or fifty yeares of age, they make them hornes, by wreathing the haire of their heads, so bearing two hornes like young Goates. When they proceed to the Warres, fise thousand Camels follow the Army, all laden with Ropes of Bombasine.

madnesse.

Hard by the Prison was a long entry in manner of a Cloyster, where sometime we were permitted to walke. Yee shall further vnderstand, that in the Sultans place remayned one of his three Wiues, with twelue young Maids to waite vpon her, very faire and comely, after their 20 manner, and of colour inclining to blacke. The fauour that they bore me, helped me very much: for I with two other, being in the same Prison, agreed that one of vs should counterfeit himselfe to be mad, that by this deuice, one of vs might helpe an other. In fine, it was my lot to take vpon me the mad mans part, and therefore it stood me in hand to doe such follies as pertayne to madnesse. Also the opinion which they haue of mad folkes, made greatly for my purpose: for they take mad men to be holy, and therefore suffered me to runne more at large, vntill the Eremites had giuen iudgement whether I were holy, or raging mad, as appeareth hereafter. But the first three dayes in which I began to shew my madnesse, wearied mee so much, that I was neuer so tyred with labour or grieued with paine, for the Boyes and Rascall people sometime to the number of fortie or fiftie, hurled stones at me almost without ceasing, while in the meane time 30 againe I paid some of them home with like wages. The Boyes cryed euer after me, calling mee mad man. And to shew it the more, I carryed alwayes stones with mee in my shirt, for other apparell had I none. The Queene hearing of my follies, looked oftentimes out of the windowes to see me, more for a secret loue she bore me, then for the pleasure she tooke in my follies, as afterward appeared.

Therefore on a time, when some of them, much madder then I, played the Knaues with me in the sight of the Queene (whose secret fauour towards mee I somewhat perceiued) that my madnesse might seeme more manifest, I cast off my shirt, and went to the place before the windowes, where the Queene might see me all naked: wherein I perceiued she tooke great pleasure. For she euer found some occasion that I might not goe out of her sight: and would sometimes, 40 with all her Damofels wayting on her, spend almost the whole day in beholding me: and in the meane season diuers times sent me secretly much good meate by her Maidens, and when she saw the Boyes or other doe me any hurt, she bad me kill them, and spare not, reuiling them also, and calling them dogges and beasts. In the Palace was nourished a great fat sheepe: whose tayle weighed fortie pound weight. Vnder the colour of madnesse, I laid hand on this sheepe, saying, Leila illala Mahumet resullala: which words the Sultan before, when I was brought to his presence, willed me to say, to prooue whether I were a Mahumetan, or a professed Mamaluke. But the beast answering nothing, I asked him if he were a Mahumetan, Jew, or Christian. And willing to make him a Mahumetan, I rehearsed againe the said words, Leila illala Mahumet resullala (that is to say) there is one God, and Mahumet his chiefe Prophet: which are the words 50 which they speake in professing their Faith. But when the beast yet answered nothing, I broke his legges with a staffe. The Queene tooke great pleasure in these my mad follies, and commanded the flesh of the sheepe to bee giuen mee to eate: I neuer ate meate with more pleasure, or better appetite. Also three dayes after, I likewise killed an Asse, that was wont to bring water into the Palace, because he refused to be a Mahumetan, and to say those words. The same time also I handled a Jew so euill, that I had almost killed him, one in the meane time calling mee Christian Dogge, Dogge borne. With which words beeing very angry, I cast many stones at him: but he againe hurling at me, gaue me a stroke on the brest, and an other on the side, which grieued me very sore.

And because I could not follow him by reason of my shackles, I returned to the Prison, and 60 stopped the doore with a heape of stones, and there liued in great paine for the space of two dayes without meate or drinke: And therefore the Queene and other thought me to be dead, but the doore was opened by the Queenes Commandement. Then these Dogges deriding me, gaue me stones in the stead of bread, and pieces of white Marble, saying, that it was Sugar: other gaue gaue me clusters of Grapes full of sand. But partly, that they should not suspect that I counterfeited madnesse, I ate the Grapes as they gaue me them. When the brute was sired that I liued two dayes and nights without meate and drinke: some beganne to suspect that I was a holy man, and some that I was starke mad. And thus being diuided into diuers opinions, they consulted to send for certaine men, of whom they haue such opinion of holinesse, as wee haue of Heremites: these dwell in the Mountaynes, and lead a contemplatiue life. When they came vnto me, to giue their iudgement what manner of man I was, certaine Merchants asked them if I were a holy man, or a mad man. These were also of diuers opinions, some affirming one thing, and some another. While they were yet debating this matter, for the space of an houre, I pissed 10 in my hands, and hurld it in their faces: whereby they agreed that I was no Saint, but a madde man. The Queene seeing all this at the window, laughed well thereat among her Maidens, and said thus to them, By the goodnesse of God, and by the head of Mahumet, this is a good man. The day following, when in the morning I found him asleepe that had so sore hurt mee with stones, I tooke him by the haire of the head with both hands, and with my knee so punched him on the stomacke, and battered his face, that I left him all bloudie, and halfe dead. Which thing the Queene seeing, cryed vnto me, saying, kill the Beast, kill the Dogge: whereupon, hee ranne his way, and came no more in sight. When the President of the Citie heard that the Queene fauoured me, and tooke pleasure in my mad sport, thinking also that I was not madde, 20 commanded that I should goe at libertie within the Palace, only wearing my shackles: Yet euery night was I put in another Prison in the lower part of the Palace, and so remayned still in the Court for the space of twentie dayes. In the meane time, the Queene willed mee to goe a hunting with her, which I refused not, and at my returne, I fained me to be sicke for wearinesse. So continuing for the space of eight dayes, vnder the colour of sicknesse, the Queene often sent to me to know how I did. After this, finding oportunitie, I declared to the Queene that I had made a Vow to God and Mahumet, to visit a certaine holy man in the Citie of Aden, and desired her to giue me leaue to goe thither. Whereunto she consented: and commanded immediately a Camell and twentie five Sarraphes of Gold to be deliuered me. Therefore the day following, I tooke my iourney, and in the space of eight dayes, came to the Citie of Aden: and shortly after my comming, visited the man of whom was so great report of holinesse, and whom the 30 people honoured for a Saint. And this onely, because he had euery liued in great pouertie, and without the company of women. When I had performed my Vow, I fained that I had recovered health by miracle of that holy man, and certified the Queene thereof, desiring that I might tarrie ther a while, to visit likewise certaine other men in that Countrey, of whom was the like fame of holinesse: which excuse I deuised, because the fleet of India would not yet depart from thence for the space of a moneth. In the meane time, I secretly agreed with a certaine Captaine of that Nauie to goe with him into India, and made him many faire promises to reward him largely. Hee answered, that hee would not goe into India, before hee had first beene in Persia: whereunto I agreed.

The day following, mounting vpon a Camell, and making a iourney of five and twentie 40 miles, I came to a certaine Citie named Lagi, situate in a great Plaine, well peopled, hauing abundance of Oliues, and flesh, with also great plentie of Corne, after our manner: but no Vines, great scarcenesse of wood. The Inhabitants are vnciuill and rusticall people of the Nation of Vagabond and field Arabians, and therefore but poore. Departing from hence one dayes iourney, I came to another Citie named Aiaz, situate vpon two hills, with a great Plaine betweene them, and hath in it a notable Fountayne, and therefore diuers Nations resort thither as to a famous Mart. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans, and yet greatly differing in opinion of their Religion: insomuch that therefore they bee at great enmitie one against the other, and keepe forewarre. The cause whereof they say to be this: That the people of the North Mountayne, maintayne the Faith and Sect of Mahumet and his fellowes, of whom we haue spoken before: but 50 the other of the South Mountayne affirme, that Faith should be giuen onely to Mahumet Holy, saying, the other to be false Prophets.

I departed hence to Dante, from thence to Almacharan, where the Aire is maruellous temperate and holesome, and the Citie second to none in all respects: the colour of the Inhabitants is rather inclining to white, then any other colour. And to speake that I haue seene, the Sultan reserueth here as much Gold as will lade a hundred Camels.

Reame is distant two dayes iourney from Almacharan. The colour of the Inhabitants is inclining to blacke: and they are great Merchants. The soyle is fruitfull of all things sauing wood: it containeth in the circuit two thousand houses: on the one side is a Mountayne hauing on it a very strong Fortresse. Here I saw a certaine kind of sheepe hauing their tailes of fortie and foure 60 pound weight, and are without hornes, and also so marvellous fat, that they can scarcely goe for fatnesse. There belikewise certaine Grapes without Graines, the sweetest that euer I eate, and all manner of such Fruits, as I haue spoken of before. It is of marvellous temperatenesse, as witnesseth the long life of men, for I haue spoken with many of them that haue passed the age of a hundred five and twentie yeares, and yet verie lustie and well complexioned. They goe for the Strong walls.

- Departing from thence three dayes iourney, I came to a Citie named Sana, situate vpon a very high Mountayne, verie strong by Art and Nature. The Sultan besieged this, with a great Armie of fourescore thousand men for the space of three moneths, but could neuer win it. Yet it was at the last rendred by composition. The wals are of eightene cubits height, and twentie in bredth, insomuch that eight Camels in order may well march vpon them. The Region is very fruitfull and much like vnto ours, and hath plentie of water. A Sultan is Lord of the Citie: hee hath twelue Sonnes, of the which one is named Mahumet, who by a certaine naturall tyrannie and madnesse, delighteth to eate mans flesh, and therefore secretly killeth many to eate them. He is of large and strong bodie of foure Cubits high, and of the colour inclining to ashes. The soyle beareth certayne Spices not farre from the Citie. It contayneth about foure thousand houses. The houses are of faire building, and giue no place to ours. The Citie is so large, that it contayneth within the wals, Fields, Gardens, and Medowes.

Roses.
- After three daies iourney, I came to a Citie named Taesfa, situate vpon a Mountaine, and very faire to sight: it hath plentie of all delices, and especially of marvellous faire Roses, whereof they make Rose-water. It is an ancient Citie, and hath in it a Temple built after the fashion of Santa Maria Rotunda in Rome. The houses are very faire, and shew yet the Monuments of antiquitie: innumerable Merchants resort hither for the trafficke of sundrie Merchandize. In apparell they are like vnto other, and of darkish Ashe colour of skinne, enclining to blacke. Three daies iourney from thence, I came to another Citie named Zibite, very faire and goodly, distant from the Red Sea onely halfe a daies iourney: there is great abundance of Merchandize, by reason of the neernesse of the Sea. It aboundeth with many goodly things, and especially with most white Sugar, and sundry kindes of pleasant fruits. It is situate in a very large Plaine within two Mountaynes: it lacketh walls, and is one of the chiefeft Marts for all sorts of Spices. The Inhabitants are of the colour of them aforesaid. From hence in one daies iourney, I came to the Citie of Damar: It is a fruitfull soyle, and hath great exercise of Merchandize. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans, in apparel and colour like vnto the other.
- Sugar.
- These Cities whereof we haue spoken here a little before, are subiect to a Sultan of Arabia Felix, named Sechamir: Secha (by interpretation) signifieth Holy, and Amir, a Prince, named the holy Prince, because he abhorreth shedding of mans blood. At the time of my being there in Prison, hee nourished sixteene thousand poore men and Captiues in Prison condemned to death, allowing to euery of them daily for their diet, fixe of their pence of the smallest valure, and at home in his Palace entertayneth as many blacke slaues.

- Departing from hence, I returned to the Citie of Aden in three dayes iourney: in the mid-way, I found an exceeding high and large Mountaine, where is great plentie of wilde beasts, and especially of Monkeyes, which runne about the Mountaine euery where. There are also many Lions, very noysome to men: and therefore it is not safe to iourney that way, but when a multitude of men goe together, at the least, to the number of a hundred. I passed this way with a great companie, and yet were we in danger of the Lions, and other wilde beasts which followed vs: for we were sometimes constrained to fight with them with Darts, Slings, and Bowes, vsing also the helpe of Dogs, and yet escaped hardly. When I came to the Citie, I fained my selfe sicke: and in the day time lurked in the Temple, and went forth onely in the night to speake with the Pilot of the ship (of whom I haue made mention before) and obtayned of him a Foist or Barke to depart thence secretly.

- Danger of wilde beasts.
- Committing our selues to the Sea, we were by inconstant fortune and sundry tempests, deterred from that Voyage: for whereas we were now fixe dayes sayling on our way to Persia, a sudden contrary tempest droue vs out of our way, and cast vs on the coast of Ethiophe. Our Barks were laden with Rubricke (that is, a certaine red earth) which is vsed to dye Cloth: for yeerely from the Citie of Aden, depart fifteene or twentie ships laden with Rubricke, which is brought out of Arabia Felix. Being therefore thus tossed with stormes, we were driven into a Port, named Zeila: where we remayned fve dayes to see the Citie, and tarried vntill the Sea were more quiet.

- In this Citie is great frequentation of Merchandise, as in a most famous Mart. There is marvellous abundance of Gold and Iuorie, and an innumerable number of blacke Slaues, sold for a small price: these are taken in Warre by the Mahumetan Moores, out of Ethiopia, of the Kingdome of Presbyter Iohannes. In this Citie Iustice and good Lawes are obserued: the soyle beareth Wheat, and hath abundance of Flesh, and diuers other commodious things. It hath also Oyle, not of Oliues but of some other thing, I know not what. There is also plentie of Honey and Waxe: there are likewise certaine Sheepe, hauing their tayles of the weight of sixteene pound, and exceeding fat; the head and necke are blacke, and all the rest white. There are also Sheepe altogether white, hauing tayles of a cubit long, hanging downe like a cluster of Grapes: and haue also great laps of skin hanging from their throats, as haue Bulls and Oxen, hanging downe downe almost to the ground. There are also certaine Kine with hornes like vnto Harts hornes, these are wilde: and when they be taken, are giuen to the Sultan of that Citie as a Kingly present. I saw there also certaine Kine, hauing onely one horne in the middlest of the forehead, about a span and halfe of length, but the horne bendeth backward: they are of bright-shining red colour. But they that haue Harts hornes, are enclining to blacke colour. Coney is there good cheape. The Citie hath an innumerable multitude of Merchants: the Walls are greatly decayed, and the Hauen rude and despicable. The King or Sultan of the Citie is a Mahometan, and entertayneth in wages a great multitude of Foot-men and Horse-men. They are greatly giuen to warres, and weare onely one loose single vesture, as wee haue said before of other. 10 They are of darke albie colour, enclining to blacke. In the warres, they are vnarmed: and are of the Sect of Adahumet.

After that the tempests were appeased, we gaue wind to our Sayles, and in short time arriued at the Iland named Barbara, the Prince whereof is a Mahometan. The Iland is not great, but fruitfull, and well peopled: it hath abundance of flesh. The Inhabitants are of colour enclining to blacke. All their riches is in herds of Cattell. Wee remayned here but one day, and departing from hence, sayled into Persia: and thence to Cambaia.

The Sultan of Cambaia, at my being there, was named Macamur, and had reigned fortie yeers, after he had expulsed the King of Guzerat. They thinke it not lawfull to kill any living beast to eate, or to eate flesh. They are no Mahometans, neither Idolaters. As touching their apparel, 20 some of them goe naked, and other couer onely their priuities. On their heads they weare fillets of purple colour. They themselues are of darke yellow colour, commonly called Leonell colour. This Sultan maintayneth an Armie of twentie thousand Horse-men. Euery morning resort to his Palace, fiftie men, sitting on Elephants. Their office is, with all reuerence to salute the King or Sultan, the Elephants also kneeling downe. In the morning as soone as the King waketh, is heard a great noyse of Drummes, Tambarts, Timbrels, Waits, and also Trumpets, with diuers other Muscical Instruments, in reioycing that the King liueth. The like doe they while he is at dinner: & then also the men sitting on the Elephants, make him the like reuerence as before. Wee will in due place speake of the wit, customes, and docilitie of these beasts. The Sultan of this Citie, hath his Mustachos so long that he beareth them vp with a fillet, as women 30 doe the haire of their heads: his beard is white and long, euen vnto the nauell. He is so accustomed to poyson from his infancy, that he daily eateth some to keepe it in vse. And although he himselfe feeles no hurt thereof by reason of custome, yet doth hee thereby so impoyson himselfe, that he is poyson to other: for when he is disposed to put any of his Noblemen to death, he causeth him to be brought to his presence, and to stand naked before him. Incontinent hee eateth certaine fruits (which they call Chofolos) like vnto Nutmegs: and eateth also the leaues of herbs, which they call Tambolos, adding also thereto the powder of beaten Oyster shells. And a while chawing all these together in his mouth, he spitteth it vpon him whom he desireth to kill, who being sparkled therewith, dieth by force of the poyson within the space of halfe an 40 houre. He entertayneth about foure thousand Concubines: for whensoever he hath lyen with any of them, shee with whom hee hath lyen, is dead in the morning. And when hee changeth his shirt or other apparell, no man dare weare it: and for this cause he hath great change of apparell. My companion enquired diligently of the Merchants, by what meanes hee was of so venomous nature? They answered, that the Sultan his father brought him so vp of a child with poyson by little and little, with preseruatiues so accustoming him thereto.

But wee will follow our Author no further into India, hauing entertayned him for an Arabian guide: But for our Readers satisfaction will adde this little of Arabia, taken from an Author which liued long since, and was in those parts better trauelled: to which wee will adde Collections out of Arabike Authors, for more full understanding of their unholy Holies.

CHAP. VIII.

Collections of Asia, especially of Arabia, gathered out of an Arabike Booke of Geographie, written by a Nubian, foure hundred and seuentie yeeres agoe, and translated into Latine by GABRIEL SIONITA, and IOHANNES HESRONITA, Maronites of Mount Libanus, the one Professor, and both Interpreters to the French King, of the Arabike, and Syriake Tongues.

THis Author is unknowne; by some passages of his Booke esteemed by the Translators a Nubian and a Christian; by learned Casaubon thought to be an Egyptian and Mahometan, to which later opinion I should rather subscribe, by reason of his weaker Relations of Nubia, and the next Westerne parts of Africa, (erring in the course of Nilus it selfe) then of others: and though he calls Christ Lord;

Lord; and the Blessed Virgin, Ladie, yet his phrase and stile deuotion is after the Mahumetan manner, and his Geographie best in those parts, where was then no safe trauell for Christians, as in Arabia, Spaine, &c. His method is by the Climates. This which we haue translated, is out of the first, second, and third Climate. The Mahumetans also call Christ, Lord; (Nazaret Eesa) as is obserued before in Master Terry.

Praise be to God the Lord of the Creatures.

a Iaman is South or Happie Arabia.

He Aloe of Socotra exceedeth in goodnesse that which is gathered in Hadbramut of the Land of Iaman, in Seger, or any where else. This Iland is reckoned amongst the Regions of Iaman^a, and belongs to it.ouer against it are Melinda, and Monbasa. Alexander hauing conquered the Indians, returned by the Indian Sea to the Sea of Iaman, and ouercomming those Ilands, came to Socotra, and wrote to Aristotle his Master thereof, who aduised him to people it with Grecians. Thus (according to the Moores Tradition) were the Natiues remoued, and Greekes there planted, which is the reason (in our Authors conceit) that the then Inhabitants were for the most part Christians.

i Merbat and Frankincense. Sarandib.

The Iles Chartan and Martan are in Giun Alhasisco (berbe Sinn, the weedy or grassy Bay) ouer against the Land of Seger, in which Frankincense groweth. In both these liue a People of Arabs, which speake a Language vnkowne to the Moderne. Of the Regions of Iaman is the Castle Alberda, the Inhabitants whereof liue a hard life. From hence to the Castle Galafesa are foure stations^b by land. It is neere the Hauen Zabid, fiftie miles distant. That Citie^c Zabid is great and rich, frequented by Merchants of Hagiaz, Habascia, and Mefr (or Egypt) which passe by the ships of Giocda. The Ethiopians bring thither their Merchandises, and thence carrie Spices, and China Dishes. It is situate neere a small Riuer, distant one hundred thirtie two miles from the Citie Sanaa, by the way which goeth to the Land of Iaman. From Zabid to Gilan is fixe and thirtie miles; thence to Alban, two and fortie; to Albolf, thirtie; and then to Sanaa, foure and twentie. Those are small Villages and Castles, but populous. Sanaa is rich, stored with buildings, and in all the Land of Iaman, the most ancient, large, and populous; temperate and fertile. Thence to Dhamar a small Citie, is eight and fortie miles; to Aden from Sanaa is foure and twentie miles; by the way which leads to Dair-Dabes^e. Aden^f is a small Citie, yet of note as a Port of both Seas; from whence the ships of Sinda, India, and China set forth, and thither are brought (Vasa Sinica) the China Dishes.

From Aden to Mahgem^g is eight Stations; this is a small populous Citie, the border twixt the Gouverment of Tahama and Iaman, and is from Sanaa seuen stations. From Mahen to Habran are foure stations. From Habran to Saada are eight and fortie miles. From Aden to Abin are twelue miles Eastward alongst the shoare; the Inhabitants are famous Magicians. It is distant from Laasa, a day and nights sayling. Betwixt Laasa and Sciorama (two dayes sayling by the shoare distant) is a great Towne, and therein a medicinable hot Bath. These two Cities are in the Land of Hadbramut: in it are Scjabam and Tarim, and Mareb now ruined, which was Saba^h, whence was Belqis the wife of Salomon sonne of David. From Hadbramut to Saada are two hundred and fortie miles. Hadbramut is Eastward from Aden five stations. In it are wide fields of Sands, called Abcaf. In Saba dwell the People of Iaman and Oman; and there was that famous wall of the Arabians, before they were dispersed thence. From Sciorama to the Citie Merbat are fixe dayes sayling. Betwixt them is Ghobbo-Scamar. In the Hills of Merbatⁱ grow Trees of Frankincense, which is thence carried to the East and West. Merbat is foure dayes journey by Land from Hasec (and two by Sea) against which are Chartan and Martan.

I am loth to follow our Author, as he followeth his Climate into the Indian Sea, called Harchend, where he findeth the famous Iland Sarandib (which I take to be that which is now called Zeilan, fourescore leagues long, and as much broad, with a high Hill, called Rahon, where are many precious stones and Spices, and in the shoares fishing for Pearles; the King whereof hath fixeene Counsellors, foure of that Nation, foure Christians, foure Muslemans or Mahumetans, and foure Iewes, to which all of those professions resort for iustice. Thence to the Iland Alrami, is three daies saile, which is said to be seuen hundred leagues in length. (This seemeth Sumatra) But I will not by Moorish and now obsolete names lose my selfe in these Indian Seas, better knowne to our English Sailers, then this vnkowne Geographer. Yet in Arabia we will ascend with him more Northerly in that part of Arabia, placed in his Second Climate. He reckoneth on the Red Sea Adhab, whereto adioyneth the Desart, trauelled by the course of the Sunne and Starres: the Red Sea with many Ilands inhabited, and Desart; and chiefe Ports Ser- rain, Soquia, Giocda, Giobfa, and Algian the Mid-land Regions, Sanacan, and Mecca, Taief, Cordaid, Medina, and Adhab. The Mount Mocatta extends from Mefr by Sabra, that is, the Desart, to Asuan: Adhab is at the top of the Desart by the Sea, from whence they goe to Gidda. Adhab is victualled by the Gouverneur vnder the King of Egypt, and by another vnder the King of of Bega, out of Habascia, which two diuide the Reuenues thereof betwixt them. In our time they there exact tributes of the Pilgrims Moslemans, which come from the West, of each Poll eight pence weight of gold. Nor may any passe ouer to Giodda, without this payment, or else the Ship-master which lets him ouer shall pay for him. They therefore shew to the Master this their tribute before hee admits them. This tribute goeth to Alhasemi, the Lord of Mecca. This Sea is full of Sholds and Rocks, and some Ilands thereof in winter are desolate. Neaman is the greatest in this part. Sameri is inhabited by Samaritan Jewes, whose word is Lamesas, if they haue offended any, by which they are knowne to descend of Samer, * the author of the Calfe in the time of Moses, to whom bee peace. On the East side of this Sea is the Tower of Hali, a little Citie whence are two short stations to the Citie Sancar. Fiue daies from Hali, is Serrain on the shoare: three stations from Serrain in the Port of Socquia, and as farre from Socquia to Giodda. This is one of the Ports of Mecca, and fortie miles distant from it.

Mosleman is a right Orthodox beleuer, so the Mahometans call themselves. * This is but Mahometan ignorance, for the Samaritans, or Cutheans are another sect: of which see my Pilg. l. 2. c. 8.

From Mecca to Medina, that is, the Citie (the name of it is Iathreb) in the right way are ten stations: from Mecca to Batn-Marri, a certaine Inne or Cane, in which is a Spring of water, enuironed with Palme trees sixteene miles: thence to Offan thirtie, to Codaïd foure and twentie: thence to Gioffa (a station of the Pilgrims of Damasco) six and twentie: thence to Alabua seuen and twentie: as many thence to Socquia, thence to Rouaitbam six and thirtie, to Sabala foure and thirtie, to Malal seuentene, to Sogera twelue, to Medina six. Hee expresseth another way from Mecca to Medina, by the Mountaines, which I omit. Medina is compassed with Palme trees, the Dates whereof sustaine the Inhabitants, wanting both Corne and Cattell. Their drinke is out of a small Riuer which Omar brought thither from a great Spring. It is halfe as big as Mecca. Betwixt Medina and the Sea is three daies iourney, and Algair is the Port thereof, a Towne well inhabited: one station from Medina to Choseiob, a second to Ghoraib, the third to Algair. From Algair to Giodda, is about ten daies iourney by land neere the Coast: the wayes hidden by Sands moued by the winds.

Medina.

On the East of Mecca sixtie miles distant is Taief, the way by Badid-almortafe, which is populous, and there are wandring Arabians, then to Carn-almanazel, thence to Taief. This is the habitation of * Thacqifi: and is celebrated for Raisins, and most part of the fruits of Mecca are brought thence. Taief is seated on Mount Ghazuan, the coldest Mountaine in all Hagiar, * where water sometime freezeth in Summer. To Mecca belongs the Castles Naged-Altaief, Nageran, Carnalmanazel, Acqis, Ocadz, Lia, Tarba, Maisa, Caifa, Gioras, and Sarat; and in Tehama, Sancan, Serain, Socquia, Ghasin, Bais, and Aac. The Castles of Medina, are Taima, Daumat-Algiandel, Alfere, Dhu-linornat, Vadi-ligora, Madian, Chaibar, Fadac, Cqere-Arina, Vabida, Saia-ra, Robba, Saiala, Sabana, Rahett, Adbab, Achhal, and Hamia. The way from Mecca to Sanaa, is to Serrain Carn-almanazel, then to Sofr, Caze, Rouaitba (a great Towne) Tabala, Baisat, Iactan, Giasda, Niab (a very great Towne frequented with people and Palmes) Singia, Cassa, Negem, Sedum, Rab. This is a great towne stored with Vineyards, whence Gioras is eight miles, a Towne as big as Nageran, and in them both are shops for dressing Skinnes: From Sadum also to Mahgera is as farre; there is a deepe Well, and a very great Tree, called Talbat-almalec, the border betwixt the iurisdiccions of Mecca and Iaman. Thence to Adhia, then to Saada, where are dressed the best Pelts, carryed to many places of Iaman and Hagian, and distant one hundred and eightie miles from Sanaa; thence to Amasia, to the Citie Gionua, where grow huge Grapes, which are dryed, and carried to other parts farre and neere: seuentie two miles from Sanaa (to the west hereof, is the land of the Abadhites, well fortified and peopled) thence to Anafeth, to Rabda encompassed with Vineyards, Fields, and Fountaynes; the Inhabitants of which possesse Droues and Camels. This hath a deepe Well, and that strong house or Temple memorable amongst writers: and is one station from Sanaa. The whole iourney is made by Carauans in twentie stations. The way from Mecca to Dhi-Sohaim of the land of Chanlan, is first to Maleca, then to Ialamla, to Caina, to Darca, and Olbob, to Habascia, to Canona, to Baisat-Haran, to Hali vpon the Sea, to the Riuer Sancan, to Baisat-Iartan, to Haran-Alcarin, and then to Chanlan-Dhi-Sohaim. All these Regions are in the Land of Tehama (which is a portion of Iaman) the limits of which are the Red Sea on the West, Mountaynes on the East which runne from the North to the South, on which East side are Saada, Haus, and Nagera: On the North Mecca, and Giodda. In Tehama are wandring Arabs of all families. Mecca is the Centre of all Arabia, betwixt the Seas. For from Mecca to Sanaa is twentie stations, as much to Sobaid, to Iaman twentie one, to Damascus thirtie, to Baharain * from Mecca fiue and twentie.

The Regions and Prouinces of note in the sixt part of the second Climate, are Gioras and Baisa, Tabala, Ocadh, Nagera, Olu-Iahseb, Tehafar, Mareb, Seger, Sofi-Iahseb, Sceba, Hadbramut, Sur, Calhat, Mascat, Sohar, Ofor, Soal, Manea, Sorooman, Bathrun, Hogera, Hadbrama, Cariatain, Vagera, Varema, Maaden, Alnocra, Salamia, Barca, Afsheb, Hagiar, Barman, Hobal, and Giloffar. And on the part of the Persian Sea, the Iles Abron, Heber, Kis, Ben-Caïan, and Dordur; and two Mountaynes, Cosair, and Oüair. In this part also are of the Land of Kerman, Senaiian, and the Mountaynes Mascan. Betwixt Gioras and Honiia are foure stations, and sixe twixt Honiia and Nagera. Tabala is foure stations from Mecca. From Tabala to Ocadh are three: Here here are Faïres euery Sunday of diuers Merchandizes. Tdafar is the cheefe Citie Iahseb: from whence to Dhamar, are fixe and thirtie miles, and fortie from Dhamar to Sanaa: from Choud to Sanaa, one hundred and fortie: from Tdafar to Mareb, three stations. In this Towne is Salmans Tower, the Sonne of David, to whom bee peace, called Seruab, now nothing but ruines. In the same Mareb, is the Tower Cascib, which was the Tower of Belquis, the Wife of Salomon, to whom be health. There was also the Fortresse famous amongst all people, called Aarent. The Inhabitants of Mareb were a certaine Sect of the Hemaratte Arabians, very proud; they had a strong defence against the course of the water of admirable structure, and each Family had their Conduit pipes for their fields and houses; but God sent a great flood whiles they were asleepe, which ouerthrew that building (hanging ouer the Citie as a Mountaine) and carried away the whole Citie and Suburbe with the people.

In Hadbramut are Teria, and Sceba foure stations from Mareb, a strong Tower on the descent of Mount Sceba, a steepe hill, whereon you shall see many habitations, fields and water-courses. Eastward is the Land of Seger, from the furthest end whereof to Aden, are three hundred miles. To the North of Seger is Oman, in which are two Cities, Tsur, and a station thence is Cgelhat, situate on the Persian Sea. Betwixt Tsur and the Promontorie Almahgiam, is fiftene daies by Land, two courses (or fortie eight houres) sayling. Neere to that Promontorie they fish for Pearles. From Cgelhat to Sabar, are two hundred miles: neere it is Dhamar. From Maschat to Sohar, are foure hundred and fiftie miles. Sohar is the ancientest Citie of Oman, on the Persian Sea, somtime the Port for the China Ships: which now is ceased, because in the midst of the Persian Sea lyeth the Iland Kis, of square forme twelue miles ouer, two courses from Sohar, and on the Kerman shoare Tairuset is ouer against it. Two daies from Sohar, is Soal and Ofor, two small Cities, made Ports by the Riuer Falg. Halfe a daies iourney thence is Mang, at the foote of Mount Sciorum, from whence west-ward to Sorooman, are two stations. Falg hath on it many Townes, and runneth into the Sea neere Gioloffar. Most of the Inhabitants of the Region Oman are Schismatickes. Betwixt Naged and Oman, are great Desarts. From Sohar to Bahrain, are about twentie stations. The way from Oman to Mecca, is very difficult, for often Desarts, and therefore they goe by Sea to Aden. Like difficulties are in the way thence to Albahrain North-wards, for the inuasions of Arabs. North-west to Oman, confineth the Land Iamama, Cities whereof are Hagiar, (now ruined) and Barca and Salamia. The way from Iamama to Mecca, is to * Aardh, to Chodaia, to Thania, to Sofra, to Soda, to Cariatain, to Dama, to Tangia, to Sarfa, to Giadila, to Falcha, to Rotaiba, to Coba, to Maran, to Vagera, to Autas, to Dhatere, each a station, to Benamer, and thence to Mecca another station. Madden-almocra is a great Towne, where the families of Basra and Cufa meete, when they goe on Pilgrimage to Mecca. The Persian Sea is annexed to the Indians, and on the shoare of Iaman hath two Mountaines, Cosair and Ouair, against which is Dordur, where the Sea is called Ghazera. Dordur is a whirlepoole which swalloweth ships, on the South of the Ile Ben-Caian, which is from Kis fiftie two miles. The length of Ben-Caian is fiftie two miles, the breadth nine, the Inhabitants schismaticall Abatdhite. Neere it is Dordur, a narrow place nigh to the Mountaines Cosair and Ouair, which are hidden with waters, but the waters breake on their tops. Three such whirlepooles are found, this, another not farre from the Iland Comar, the third in the end of Sin betwixt Siraff, and the Promontorie called Mascat Saif.

But to returne to the Red Sea, and the most Northerly parts thereof. In Calzem are made the flat bottomed ships, broad and shallow, fit for great burthen and the Sholds of that Sea. From Calzem to Faran-Abron, are fortie miles; this is in the bottome of a Bay, whence they goe to Mount Tur, trending along by the Sea. That Mountaine is high, and is ascended by steps, and hath an Oratorie on the top, with a pit of Spring-water. From Tur to Masdaf, a pleasant place where they fish for pearles: from Masdaf to Sciarm-Albair, hence to Sciarm-Albir, thence to Cape Abi-Mohammed, three Ports without water: and here beginneth the ascent of Ayla, a small Citie of Arabs. Then to Aumed a watery Port, ouer against the Ile Noman, tenne miles from the Continent: thence to Tanna, to Atuf, to Haura, where they make Pots, transported farre and neere. Not farre thence on the South, is Mount Radhua, where grow the Whetstones hence carried East and West: thence to the faire Port and Riuer Tsafra, then to Cauaiaa, to Giar, to Giobfa, Codaia, Aasfan, Giotta. On the shoare of the Red Sea, is the Citie Madian, and the Well where Moses, to whom peace, watered the flocke of Scioab: from Madian to Ayla, are fise stations, from Ayla to Giar about twentie. From Madian to Tabuc by Land Eastward, fixe stations; it is seated betwixt Hagiar and the beginning of Damascus. Hagiar is from Vadialigora, one station: they haue houses in the Rockes. But the waies are difficult, and will leade vs backe to the hatefull Mecca and Medina, I will therefore commiserate my Reader (such as are more studious, may resort to the Author) and hauing giuen you that face of Arabia, which no Christian (to my knowledge) doth so well, or almost at all, could to any purpose describe, we will stay and intertaine our selues with some more pleasing spectacle, the Actors being other Mahometans, produced on this stage by the Maronites our Translators.

CHAP. IX.

Collections out of diuers Mahometan Authors in their Arabicke Bookes, by the said Maronites, GABRIEL and JOHN, touching the most remarkable things in the East, especially of the Mosleman superstitions and rites, and the places of chiefe note.

Rabia hath not her name of I know not what Arabus, sonne of Apollo and Babylonia, but of the Region Araba, not farre from Medina, where Ismael Sonne of Abraham dwelt: and that of Iaarob, sonne of Cabbrian or Iectan, sonne of Heber (and not as Iusef Ben-Abdillatif saith, the great grand-child of Abel) who (as Mohamed Ben-Iacub Sirazita, Author of the Arabick Dictionarie, affirmeth) was first Inuentor of the Arabicke tongue; which Ismael after did bring to more elegance and perfection, and is therefore called, the Father of Arabicke eloquence. Some of the Arabians dwell in Cities, some in the Desarts; those better ciuillized, and fit for Arts: these which inhabite the Desarts, are called Bedanya, or Bednois, that is, the people of the Desart; exceed in numbers, and wander without houses, vsing Tents made of Cotton Wooll, or of Goats and Camels haire, alway mouing and remouing, as water and pasture moue them, carrying their Wiues, Children, and Vtensils on their Camels. Their Horses are leane, little, swift, laborious, bold; and the Horsemen actiue beyond beliefe, darting and catching with their hand, the same Dart in the Horses swiftest race before it commeth at the ground; and auoiding a Dart throwne at them, by sleightie winding vnder the Horses sides or belly: also taking vp Weapons lying on the ground whiles the Horse is running, & in like swift race hit the smallest mark with Arrow or sling. Their armes are arrowes, Iauelings with Iron heads, Swords (which they vse not to thrusts but strokes) Daggers, Slings, and vse the same in aduerser fight, or in auerse flight. They lye in waite for Carauans, pray vpon Trauellers, liue on rapine and spoile, and often make themselues the great Turks Receiuers and Treasurers, and raise new Imposits on all such as they can enforce, whether Trauellers or Cities; obeying neither the Ottoman, nor any other Soueraigne, but being divided in innumerable families, obey the heads of their owne Families or Tribes. These Tribes are distinguished by the names of their first Parents, as Abi-belal, Abi-Risce, Abi-Zaid, and fixe hundred others, all esteemed and saluted Gentle, and equall in rights. Their food is browne Bread, new and sowre Milke, Cheese, Goats and Camels flesh, Pulse, Hony, Oyle and Butter. Rice is esteemed a great delicacie, by reason of their Tradition, that it came of Mahomet's sweat. For, say they, when Mahomet compassed the Throne of God in Paradise, God turned and looked on him, which made the modest Prophet sweate, and wiping it off with his finger, fixe drops fell out of Paradise: one whereof produced the Rose; the second, Rice; the other foure, his foure Associats. They vse a certaine Hodge-podge, or Frumentie of boyled Wheat, laid after a drying in the Sun, then beaten and boyled with fat flesh, till the flesh be consumed. This they call Herise, and say that Gabriel the Angell taught it Mahomet for strengthening his reines; whereby one night he fought against fortie men, and in another had fortie times carnall dealing with Women. These might seeme calumnies deuised by some Mahometan aduersarie, if the former Author (both learned in, and zealous of the Law of Mohamed) had not related the same in a Chapter of the choise of meats. Mohamed or Mahomet, commended also the eating of Gourds, and of the Melongena, affirming, that he had seene this Plant in Paradise, and measured the quantitie of mens wits, by their eating store hereof. When he was once in prison (saith Ben-sidi Aali) the Angell Gabriel came downe from heauen, and carried him into Gennet Elena-am, or the Garden of pleasures, where amongst others he saw this shrub, and he asking why it grew there, the Angell answered, because it hath confessed the Vnitie of God, and that thou art a true Prophet. garment of Wooll, wouen with white and blacke lines of Goats or Camels haire; their feet are bare. Their Nobler sort go better cloathed, and vse shooes, a red leather girdle, a white Tulipan of Cotton or Linnen of few folds. Their Women go almost naked, in a blew smock of Cotton, Linnen head-tire, and face veiled. They vse Eare-rings, Chaines, Brooches, and Rings of Glasse, or other base matter, and Dye or Paint with blew markes made with a needle, their cheekes, armes and lips. Thus much of the Beduines.

Baghdad (which is also called Dar-assalam, that is, The Citie of peace *) received that name of a Monke called Baghdad, who as Ben-Casen writeth, serued a Church builded in that Medow. But Abu-Giaphar Almanfur the second Abassian Chalifa, who wanne it, A. Heg. 150. named it Dar-assalam. It is the Citie Royall of Mesopotamia, now called Diarbecr, which the said Almanfur, placed in a large Plaine vpon Tigris, and diuided by the River into two Cities, ioyned by a Bridge of Boats. This Citie built in this place, Almanfur ruled many yeeres, and after him other Chalifas till the 339. yeere of the Hegira, in which King Aadbd-eddaule and Saif-eddaule took it, who with their Successors enioyed it till Solyman the Ottoman Emperour subdued, and is now ruled by a Bascia, with many Ianizaries. But hereof Ahmad Abi Bacr of Baghdad, in his Annals, will shew you more. This Citie is famous for Schooles of all Sciences, both in former and the present time. Here Ahmad Affalami a famous Poet wrote his Verses. Here Alpharabius the renowned Philosopher and Physician, borne at Farab in Turcomannia, professed these studies publicly with great applause, and leauing many of his Scholers in this Citie, went to Harran of Mesopotamia, where finding Aristotles Booke, De Auditu, hee read it fortie times, and wrote vpon the Booke, that hee was willing againe to reade it. Hence hee went to Damascus, and there died, A. H. * 339. Thus Ben-Casem in his Booke, De viridario Electorum.

Bochara is an ancient Citie vpon Euphrates, in a Village belonging whereto Honain Ali Ben-sina (whom the Latines call, Auicenna) was borne, A. H. 370. Hee gaue himselfe to Physicke very young, and was the first which became Physician to Kings and Princes, who before in that Countrey vsed y no Physicians. He published neere an hundred books, many of Physick, some of Philosophie, a Dictionary of Herbs and Stones, Verses of the Soule, &c. He liued eight and fiftie yeeres, and died in Hamadan. Hee had runne thorow all Arts, at eightene. Thus Ben-Casem. But others affirme, that a certaine Physician flourishing of great note, vpon whom no praying nor paying could fasten a Disciple, lest the secrets of his Art should bee made common: the mother of Auicenna offers her sonne to doe him seruice in decoctions, and other meane offices, which he could not doe himselfe; nor was there feare of danger from him whom nature had made deafe, and therefore dumbe. He made trials, and found Auicenna deafe, as he thought, and entertayned him, who watched his times, and transcribed his bookes and notes, sending 20 them closely to his mother, which after his mothers death he published in his owne name.

Damascus is called of the Arabians, Sciama, and Demasc, of the Syrians Darmsuc. It is luxurious in fruits of all kinds, rich in Oliues and Iron of excellent temper by nature, and so bettered by arte, that no Helme or Shield can withstand it. It is seated in a large Plaine at the roots of Libanus, there called Hermon, sixe miles in compasse, double walled, with a strong square Tower in the midst, built by a Florentine, beautified with Springs, Market places, Publike buildings, Meskits, Bathes, Canes, and all sorts of silke-weauing, and in all ancient times with learning and learned men. Here flourished Saint Damascen: and here Almotannabbi excelled in Arts and Armes, emulous of Mahomet, but not with like successe. He was called Nabion, that is, The Prophet; this Motannabbi, that is, Prophecyng: he wrote the Alcoran elegantly and eloquently; this excelled in Prose and Verse: both had Followers, but this mans Disciples after his death were disperst, which happened, A. H. 354. Ben-Casem also relates, that Mohamed Abi Abdillab professed Philosophie in this Citie, and to dispute with all commers, and wrote a huge Booke, De unitate existendi principiorum. He died there, A. H. 638.

Aleppo is called of the Inhabitants, Haleb, the chiefe Mart of all the East, frequented by Persians, Indians, Armenians, and all Europeans. The Port is Scanderone, called by the Inhabitants Escanderuneh. The soyle is very fertile, and nourisheth abundance of Silke-wormes. A. H. 922. Sultan Selim tooke it, and found therein infinite wealth. Sciarfeddin which wrote the Victories of the Othomans in two Tomes, sayth, that it had of Gold and siluer coyned 1150000. and a mightie masse vncoynd; Vests of cloth of Gold, tissued or wrought with Gold, Silke, and Scarlet about 300000. besides abundance of Gems and Pearles. And besides other wealth innumerable, it had eight Armories well furnished. It now flourisheth in the next place to Constantinople and Cairo, and may be called, Queene of the East: Here are store of Gems, Ambar, Bengeoin, Lignum Aloes, and Muske, which is taken from a little reddish beast, beaten with many blowes on one place that the blood may all come thither. Then is the skin so swolne and full of blood bound straight that the blood may not issue: and put into one or more bladders, is dried on a beasts backe till the bladder fall off of it selfe, and that blood after a moneth becomes excellent Muske. At Aleppo was borne that great Grammarian Othoman Abu Homar, surnamed Ben-ellbhageb, which wrote Casia and Sciastia of Grammer, and died, A. H. 672.

Libanus is called by the Arabians Lobnan, Lebnon by the Syrians, so called of the Syriake word Lbunto, which signifieth, Frankincense. It containeth about sixe hundred miles compasse, rich in Soyle, Waters, Groues, Vines (the Wine whereof is very wholesome, not windie; and here in a Village, called Sardania, they say, Noa planted a Vineyard) and hence runne Pharphar, Abana, and the Riuer of Tripolis. On this Mountaine grow Cypresses, Pines, Boxes, and other trees plentie: especially Cedars; the forme whereof from our owne eyes wee will here relate. It groweth on the top of the Mount, higher then the Pine, so thicke as foure or fve men can ioyntly fadome: the boughs not eleuated vpwards, but stretched out acrossse largely diffused and striking on each other, thickly enfolded as is were by wonderfull Art, insomuch as we haue scene many both sit and lie along on the boughs. The leaues are thicke and frequent, narrow and hard, prickly and alway greene. The wood is knotty and somewhat wreathed, hard, incorruptible and sweet-smelling. The fruit like the Cones of Cypresse, gummie and marvellous fragrant. On this Mountaine dwell the Maronites, deriued from Saint Maron the holy Abbot, and his Disciples, or as others thinke from the Land Maronia: vncertaine whether, but most certaine, from no Heretike so called, as some will haue it. These possesse all the Mountaine, and and besides other ordinary tributes, pay great summes yeerely to the Lord of the Land, that no man of other Religion be permitted to dwell with them, and that no tribute children (as amongst the Greekes) be taken from them. They onely vse Bells, which are prohibited other Nations, because in the beginning of Mahometisme, by the sound of a Bell, the Christians had assembled and done the Moslemans great mischief. The Patriarch of the Maronites (which is also of Antiochia) is much reuerenced of the people, and with his Clergie acknowledgeth the Roman Bishop. Their Liturgie is in the Syriake Tongue.

Mecca chiefe Citie of Arabia Deserta, is called also in the Alcoran, Becaa, the holy Citie of the Moslemans, both for Mahomed's reuelations there had, and for the Temple especially, called by them Kabe, or, The square House, which they fable, was first built by Angels, and often visited by Adam himselfe: and lest it should be destroyed by the Flood, was lifted up to the sixth Heauen, called Dar-assalam (The habitation of peace) after the Flood Abraham built another house like to the former, by the shadow thereof sent from heauen to him. Thus writeth Iacob Ben-Sidi Aali. This is a Chappell, not very large, of square figure, open, with foure Gates, by one of which the Ministers haue access; the other are opened but once in the yeere. It glittereth all with Gold, and is couered with vests of Gold, and end compassed with elegant Iron-worke to keepe off neere commers. No man may enter it but certaine Elders, which haue long beards to their breasts, and remayne there night and day. Neere to this Chapell is a large marble Floore adorned about with eight huge Lights, and fixe and thirtie Lamps of Gold, perpetually burning. Three pathes leade thereto whereon men and women goe bare-foot to the Chapell, which they compasse seuen times with great reuerence, mumbling their deuotions; kisse the corners, sigh and implore the ayde of Abraham and Mohamed. Round about all this space is a stately building of very elegant structure, as it were a wall; in which are pumbred sixteen principall Gates to goe in and out, where hang innumerable Lamps and Lights of incredible greatnesse. Within this space betwixt the rowes of Pillars are shops of Sellers of Gemmes, Spices, Silkes, in incredible store from India, Arabia, Ethiopia: that it seemes rather the Mart of the World then a Temple. Here doe men kisse and embrace with great zeale a certaine stone which they call Hagiar Alasuad, or, The blacke stone, which they say, is a Margarite of Paradise, the light whereof gaue lustre to all the Territorie of Mecca. Before this, sayth Iacob Ben-Sidi Aali, Mohamed commanded to weepe, to aske God pardon for sinnes, and to crye with sighs and teares for ayde against their enemies. After they haue visited that Chappell and the stone, they goe to another large Chappell within the Temple, where is the Well, called Zam Zam; which is (sayth the said Author) the Well which flowed from the feet of Ismael when he was thirte and wept: which Hagar first seeing, cried out Zam Zam, in the Coptice or old Egyptian Tongue; that is, Stay, stay. There are many which draw water thence and giue to the Pilgrims, who are commanded to wash therewith their bodie and head three times, to drinke thereof, and if they can, to carrie some of it with them, and to pray God for health and pardon of sinnes. To this building is added a Noble Schoole or Vniuersitie, A. H. 949. by Solyman who adorned it by his costs by marvellous structure, and endowed it with reuenues.

After these visitations, all the Pilgrims goe to a certaine Temple on a Hill, ten miles from the Citie, and flocking in great numbers buy according to their abilitie, one or more Rammes for sacrifice. And because some are of opinion, that the Mohamedans haue no sacrifices, we will relate what Iacob Ben-Sidi Aali hath written of their Ceremonies. Dhabbia (so the Arabs call a Sacrifice) is a killing of beasts in the worship, and for the offering of God, and they are Lambs of sixe or seuen moneths at least; Camels of five yeeres, Bullockes of two yeeres. The males are to be chosen before females, and those cleane, white, infected by no naturall or violent defect, fat, corpulent, horned. Every man must kill his owne Sacrifices, and rippe them with his owne hands, except in urgent necessities, and then he may substitute others to doe it for him. For euery one before they eat any thing, are bound to eat some piece of the Sacrifices; the rest, if they can, to giue cheerfully to the poore. They which are admitted to these Oblations, let them offer one Ramme for themselves, another for the soules of the Dead, another for Mohamed, that in the day of Iudgement he deliuer them from calamities. These Sacrifices are offered to God in imitation of Abraham, which would haue offered his sonne Ismael to God, going out of the Citie with him to a certaine Hill, called Mena, where he would haue offered him to God; but when the sword could not cut his necke, a white Ramme appeared betwixt his hands, fat, and horned, which he sacrificed to God in stead of his sonne.

Whiles the Pilgrims are here busied in their sacrifices, Beduine Arabs assault the Carauans, and robbing them, flee to the Hills, and inaccessible refuges, so swift as if they did flie. And although all armes are forbidden in the territorie of Mecca (which containeth on the East six miles, on the North twelue, on the West eightene, on the South foure and twentie, in which respect Mecca and Medina are called Atharamain) yet they cease not to infest, and Pilgrims are here often forced to armes. This Territorie is barren for want of water, and raine, hath very few Herbs and Plants, or other pleasures of Groues, Gardens, Vines, or greene objects; but is roasted with the Sunne, both land and people. And this haply is the cause that no man may breake a bough if they find any Tree. Onely the shrubs of Balsam, brought hither from Cairo thrive well, and are now so propagated, that all the sweet liquor of Balsam is carried onely from this Citie, thorow all Regions in great plentie. Here are store of Pigeons, which because they are of the stocke of that which came to Mohameds eare (as the Moslemans fable) no man may take or scarre them. A certaine Scerif enioyeth the dominion of this Citie, and all the Land of Medina by inheritance, called Alamam-Alhascemi, that is, the Captaine or chiefe Hasceme, descended of Hascem great Grandfather of Mohamed; Who were neuer deprived of their dominion by the Ottoman or Soldan. Yea, the Ottoman calls not himselfe the Lord of Mecca and Medina, but the humble seruant. Yet this Scerif notwithstanding his reuenues and gifts by Pilgrims and Princes, through the Beduines spoiles, and his kindreds quarrels seeking the Soueraigntie, is alway poore. Therefore doth the Ottoman bestow the third part of the reuenues of Egypt, and to 10 protect the Pilgrims from the inuasions of the Arabs.

Medina is called the Citie by Antonomasia, and Medina Alnabi, that is, the Citie of the prophet: because Mohamed, when he was forced to forsake his Countrey Mecca, betooke himselfe to this Citie, then called Iathreb, and was made Lord thereof. It is an error that he was borne here, for he was borne and brought vp at Mecca; and in the fourth yeere of his age, and as Ben-Casem hath, in the nine hundred thirtie three of Alexander the Great, he began to vtter his Doctrine, first primily, after that publikely; whereupon he was banished the Citie in the two and fiftieth of his life; or according to Abdilatif Ben-Isuf, the three and fiftieth, and fled to Iathreb, from which flight, which they call Hegeraton or Hegera, which happened, An. Dom. 622. or thereabouts. And although this yeere 1623. be to them 1032. Yet because they reckon according to 20 the yeeres of the Moone, which they say, consist of three hundred fiftie foure daies, the Moones course hath in this space exceeded that of the Sunne, some Moneths aboue one and thirtie yeers. Whereupon their Moneths are vncertaine. In this Citie by subtil hypocrisies, Mohamed became Politicall and Ecclesiasticall Prince; and began to procure the friendship of many, and to promulgate his Lawes by degrees. In the second yeere of his flight, he enacted his Lawes of fasting; in the third, forbad Wine and Swines-flesh; and so proceeded with the rest, that within eight yeeres, he brought into subiection Mecca (whence hee had beene expelled) and Muna, and went forward with his Law and Conquest. As concerning his Wiues, Ben-Casem saith, hee had foure: he is also reported to haue many Harlots and Concubines: and in his Chapter, Surato- lbagra or de vacca, he bids them marry one, two, three, or foure wiues a man, and to take as many 30 Concubines as they are able to keepe. Ben-Side Aali saith, that he gloried that he had the power of ten Prophets in copulation giuen him by God: Yea, he ascribed all his villanies to God, by ministerie of the Angel Gabriel. His first wife was named Codaige, by whom he had two sonnes, and foure daughters, Zainab, Fatema, (whom Aali married) Om Kalthum the third, and Rakia the fourth (both which Abu-beer married.) His second wife was Aisce Daughter of Abu-Bacr, the first Califa, which was but six yeeres old (Ben-Casem is our author) when Mohamed tooke her to wife: the Moslemans call her the mother of the faithfull: who besides the knowledge of tongues, perused diligently the Arabiike Histories, loued exceedingly and alway praised Mohamed. The third was named Mary, which brought forth to Mohamed, Ebrahim, surnamed Casem (whence Mohamed is often called Abulcasem) though Ban-Abdilatif will haue Ebrahim to be one, and Ca- 40 sem another; but Ben-Casem saith, he had but three sons, of which Ebrahim Casem dyed at eigh- teene Moneths, and Taiheb and Taher his sonnes by Codaige, dyed both in their Cradles. Mohameds last wife was Zainab, whom also they call the mother of the faithfull, before the wife of Zaidi Ben-Harteh, Mohameds Master, who diuorced her, whereupon Mohamed gladly tooke her to wife.

He had foure Counsellors or Companions; the first, Abdollah, or Abu-Bacr, his sincerest and most in ward friend, a man very rich and releuer of Mohameds necessities, his successor after his death. He dyed the thirteenth yeere of the Hegira, and sixtie three of his age, and was buried in the same graue with Mohamed. The second was Homar the sonne of Chattab, surnamed Faruq, who succeeded Abi-Bacr, and ruled ten yeeres and six moneths. He was the first 50 which was called King of the faithfull, and writ the Annals of the Moslemans, and brought the Alcoran into a Volume, and caused the Ramadam fast to be obserued. He was slaine the three and twentieth of the Hegira, and buried by Abi-Bacr. The third was Othman, who in his twelue yeeres raigne subdued Cyprus, Naisabur, Maru, Sarchas, and Maritania, and died A.H. 35. and was buried in the buriall place of the Citie. Aali was the fourth, who is called also Emir El-mumenin, that is, King of the faithfull; he was slaine A. H. 40. in the three and sixtieth of his age, and was buried in the Citie Kerbela. He was his Vncles sonne, or Cousin-german to Mohamed and his sonne in law, and deare familiar from his youth, and receiued the Mosleman Law together with Mohamed; whereupon he was wont to say, I am the first Mosleman. And therefore the Persians detest the other three Chalifas, as Heretikes; burne their Writings wherefo- 60 euer they finde them, and persecute their Followers, because forsooth they were so impudent, to preferre themselves before Aali, and spoyled him of the right due by Testament. Hence are Warres and hostile cruelties betwixt them and the Turkes, and Arabs. Mohamed the false Prophet, in the eleuenth yeere after his Hegira or flight, and the three and sixtieth of his age, dyed at at Medina and was buried there in the Graue of Aissee his wife. Heere is a stately Temple and huge, erected with elegant and munificent structure, daily increased and adorned by the costs of the Othomans, and gifts of other Princes. Within this building is a Chappell not perfectly square, couered with a goodly Roofe, vnder which is the Vrne of stone, called Hagiar Monaiar, sometimes belonging to Aissee aforesaid. This is all couered with Gold and Silke, and compassed about with Iron grates gilded. Within this, which shineth with Gold and Gemmes, Mohameds carkasse was placed, and not lifted vp by force of Load-stone or other Art; but that stone-Vrne lyeth on the ground.

10 The Moslem Pilgrimes after their returne from Mecca, visit this Temple, because Mohamed yet liuing was wont to say, that he would for him which should visit his Tombe, as well as if he had visited him liuing, intercede with God for a life full of pleasures. Therefore doe they throng hither, and with great Veneration kisse and embrace the grates (for none haue access to the Vrne of stone) and many for loue of this place leaue their Countrey, yea, some madly put out their eyes to see no worldly thing after, and there spend the rest of their dayes.

The compasse of Medina is twomiles, and is the circuit of the wall, which Adhd Addaule King of Baghdad built, A. H. 364. The Territorie is barren scorched Sands, bringing forth nothing but a few Dates and Herbs.

20 Metfr is the name of Cairo, and all Egypt, so called of Mesram the Sonne of Noa; as saith Mohamed Sarazita. This Citie is gouerned by a Bascha, and five and twentie thousand Spahies and Ianizaries. It is rich in Cassia Trees, Sugar-canes and Corne, many Lands adioyning yeelding Haruest twice a yeare, Hay foure times, Herbs and Pulse in manner alway greene. Adde store of Salt very white, the water of Nilus inclosed in Pits and by the only heate of the Sunne in three dayes beeing turned into it. In former times it was famous for Balsam Plants now remooued to Mecca by command of the Othomans; and none are found in all Egypt, but seuen shrubs * in the Bassas Garden, kept with great diligence. The leaues are like to wild Marioram, the iuyce is taken by a little incision in the trunke or branch.

30 Abu-Chalil-Ben-Aali writes, that from the fifteenth to the two & twentieth of Raby Athani (Iune) there falls a dew which leaues no token thereof in the earth, yet by vulgar * experience is found by weighing the sand or earth of Nilus bankes, and is an euident token of the increase of Nilus. The Aire also is then made more wholesome; Plagues and Feuers cease, and those which were sicke * of them recouer.

40 Touching the Easterne Customes. Bensidi Aali hath written of the structure of Mesquites. Before them is a large floore paved with Marble, in the midst is a square Lauer, where they which come to pray vse to wash themselves. After this is a great Hall without Images or Pictures, the Walls bare, not shining with Gold or Gemmes: the Pauement matted, on which the vulgar sit; the Rich vse Carpets spred for them by their Slaues. From the Roofe hang many Lampes, which are lighted in Prayer time, and that beeing ended, are put out. These Churches are for the most part round and couered with lead; and haue adioyned high Towers which serue for Steeples with foure Windowes open to the foure winds; whereon the Priests at set-times ascend, and with a strong voyce call men to Prayers. Which being ended, and their Legall washing being done, all of them leauing their Shooes on a rew at the threshold of the Gate or Porch, they enter with great silence. The Priest beginneth the Prayer and all follow, and whiles hee kneeleth they doe so, and rise when hee stands vp, and imitate him in the elevation or depression of the voyce. None yanneth, cougheth, walketh or talketh, but in great silence after Prayers they resume their Shooes and depart. No women may come to the Mesquites at these set houres, if there bee any men, nor may haue any societie of men except the Priest, which directeth and goeth before them with his voyce in their manner of praying, as saith the said Author.

50 They are permitted, not to enter the Mesquites, but to stand at the doore, and must bee gone quickly before the men haue done their Prayers. Hee addes that the womens Church is the inner part of their owne house. Such is their dis-respect of women, notwithstanding Mohameds promises in his Alcoran, that many say they enter not Paradise but may stand at the doore with Christians, and see the glorie of the men.

60 The Garments of the East are commonly long, some slit on the right and left hand, some whole. The vpper Garment hath wide sleeues. Their head-tire is a Tulipant but differing, of Princes white and fine, artificially wreathen, rather long then round: of their Cadies and Mu-fis very large of fiftie or sixtie els of Calico round and wreathed; of Citizens lesse, of Serifs or Mohameds posteritie greene: of Souldiers and Seruants long and white. Christians vse not white nor round ones: the Maronite Patriarke and his Suffragan Bishops weare a huge Tulipant, round and blue, with a blacke hood vnder it: other Priests lesse and no hood. The women are pompous, but comming abroad weare a couering made of Horse-haire before their face, that they may see and not be knowne, not if their owne Husbands meete them; neither if they did know, would they salute, it being a shame for a woman to be seene speaking with a man. Brooches and other Ornaments and Paintings of their eyes, browes, and fingers ends, I omit. Both men and women are so addicted to neatnesse, that they are very carefull lest any drop of vrine spot their clothes in making water or going to stoole, and would then thinke themselves vnclane. They therefore then sit downe (like women) and wash; or if no water may be had, wipe with three stones, or a three cornered stone, as Ben-Sidi Aali in his Chapter of washing warneth. They thinke it vnlawfull to spit or pisse on a brute creature. In food they abstaine from strangled and bloud; and Moslemans, from Swines flesh. They loue Iunctets: they breake bread and cut it not. Their Table is a round piece of Leather, to which they come with washing and Prayers promised. They vse not Forkes but Spooones of wood of diuers coulours, and where they need not them, three fingers as Ben-Sidi Aali warneth. Pewter and Porcelane is in much vse, but other Vessels of plate or Gold, saith hee, Mohamed forbade, saying, the Deuill vsed such, the common drinke is water; the better sort adde Sugar, sometimes Amber and Muske, &c.

There are in the East eight principall Languages, the Arabike, Persian, Turkish, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriake (which little differs from Chaldee) Greeke, and Armenian. The Arabike is most noble and vsuall, and is extended as farre as Mohameds name as their sacred Language, knowne to all Moslemans of better fashion. In this is their Alcoran and their publike Prayers, and most of their Lawes. Yea, saith Zaheri, the blessed in Paradise vse it. In this also are written their Bookes of Physicke, Astrologie, Rhetorike. The Persian hath little but Poets and Historians, the Turkish almost nothing; the Chaldee and Syriake are nigh lost, as the Greeke. But Auerroes, Algazeles, Abu-Becer, Alfarabius (called of the Moslemans the second Philosopher) Mohamed Ben-Isaac, and Mohamed Ben-Abdullah adorned the Arabike: besides very many Astrologers, Mathematicians, Physicians, and Historians. Ben-Sidi Aali reckons one hundred and fiftie, which haue written on their Law; Ben-Casem, innumerable Grammarians and Rhetoricians.

Now for the Moslemans Religion, Ben-Sidi Aali expresseth it to consist herein, that they beleene all the speeches made by Gabriel the Angell to our Prophet, when hee questioned him of the things to be beleued and done: which are these, to beleue in one God to whom none is equall (this against Christians) and that the Angels are the Seruants of God, to beleue in the Scripture sent to the Apostles, diuined in their opinion into one hundred and foure Bookes, of which ten were sent to Adam, fiftie to Set, thirtie to Enoc (called Edris) ten to Abraham, the Law to Moles, the Psalmes to Dauid, the Gospell to Isa, or Iesus Christ; lastly, the Alcoran to Mohamed. That they hold these sent for mens good, and beleue in the Resurrection after death, and that some are predestinate to fire, some to Paradise according to the will of God (for it is said in the Alcoran; there is none of you which hath not his place in Paradise, and a place determined in Hell) that they beleue also the reward of the good and punishment of the bad; and the intercession of the Saints. Also this is of the things to be holden, that they firmly beleue in the Diuine Pen, which was created by the finger of God. This Pen was made of Pearles, of that length and space that a swift Horse could scarcely passe in five hundred yeares. It performeth that office, that it writes all things past, present and to come: the Inke with which it writes is of light; the tongue by which it writes none understandeth but the Archangell Seraphael. That they beleue also the punishment of the Sepulchres; for the dead are used often to be punished in their Graves, as happened in a certaine Sepulcher betwixt Mecca and Medina.

The Precepts of the Moslemans are, first Circumcision, not on the eight day as to the Iewes, but at the eight, ninth, tenth, eleuenth, twelfth yeare that they may know what they doe, and may professe their Faith with vnderstanding. And although most hold women free therefrom, yet in Egypt they circumcise women at thirteene, fourteene, or fiftene yeares old (many of them till then goe starke naked) and Sidi-Ben Aali saith, that it was commanded to men, but is vsed to women for honour.

The second Commandement is Prayers houely, which in the Church, at home, or abroad, they are bound to perform, five times in the day and night: first at break of day; the second about noon; the third in the afternoon; the fourth after Sun-set, when the stars begin to appeare: the last in the first watch, or before mid-night (for after, it is vnlawfull saith Ben-Sidi Aali) neither may any transgresse these houres without sinne; yea, saith hee, if one were cast into the Sea and knew the houre of Prayer, if he be able he ought to doe it; as also women in trauell must hide the Infants head as they can and doe it. Trauellers when they perceiue that houre is come, goe out of the way and wash; or if they haue no water, lightly digge the Earth and make shew of washing, and goe not thence till they haue finished their Deuotion. Thirdly Almes is also commanded; and they which are so poore that they cannot giue to Orphans and the poore, must helpe in Hospitals, and high-wayes, by such seruice to satisfie God. Fourthly, Ramadhan Fast of thirtie dayes is commanded from morning to Sun-set and the Starres appearing: for then after euening Prayer they eate any food (except Wine) with Bacchanall cheere and tumults. Fifthly, Pilgrimage once in their liues to Mecca and Medina is also commended; and sixtly, to fight against the enemies of their Faith is no lesse commanded; not to preach by the Word and Meeknesse, as Christ, but by the Sword and Warre, to inuade and reuenge. And if by their persons and bloud they cannot, they must (saith our Author) by their purse and goods helpe the Prince herein. And if

if they die in Warre, the sensuall pleasures of Paradise, Riuers of Milke and Honey, beautifull women and the like are their present purchase. Therefore doe they giue to Apostataes, which become Moslemans, an Arrow borne vp by their fore-finger; the Arrow signifying Warre, and that one Finger the Vnitie of the Deitie. Their last Commandement is washing with water, which is three-fold, one before Prayers, handled in three Chapiters by Ben-Sidi Aali, thus performed; the armes stripped naked to the elbow, they wash the right hand and arme, then the left, after the Nose, Eares, Face, Necke, Crowne, Feet to the ioynts, if they be bare, or else their shoos-tops, lastly their Priuities; mean-while mumbling their Deuotions. These washings they thinke to wash away their Veniall and lighter sinnes; for their greater they vse Bathes, and say all the bodie must be washed to wash away Crimes. The third washing is of their secrets by themselves or their Seruants after the Offices of Nature, deliuered by him in two Chapiters, too foolish and filthy to be related. Adde the prohibition of Images painted or carued, Thefts, Homicides, Robberies, Adulteries, Swines flesh, Wine, strangled bloud, and things dying of themselves, and all vncleane Creatures.

Hee also instructs at large of their Testaments and Funerals. The Moslemans beeing sicke presently send for an Abed, Religious man or Santone to strengthen them in the Faith and propound heauenly things to him, reciting somewhat out of the Alcoran. And if the Disease bee very dangerous, they wash and make their Testament; and are bound to restore all ill-gotten goods, giuing the Creditors a Bill of their hand. And if they know not to whom to restore, they must bequeath a summe of money to publike vses, Hospitals, Mesquits, Bathes, the poore and Religious persons: yea, for that respect they set Captiues at libertie, as is read that Anicenna did; some giue Bookes to publike vses; some, other things. Ben-Sidi Aali saith, it is Mohameds precept that the third part of mens goods be bestowed on publike vses. And if a man die intestate, they say other dead men will chide him. When they are dead, the bodie is washed, the Nose, Eyes, Mouth, and Eares stopped with Cotton; better apparell is put on, white shirts and Tulipants. Then is the bodie carryed to the buriall place without the Citie with a great troupe; the Santones or Religious going before then the men promiscuously, after the Corps; followed by women howling, lamenting, shrieking, till they come to the Graue. There are those Garments taken away, and the Corps shrowded in a white sheet, and put into the Graue with the face to the South. After the couering with Earth, many Prayers are made, and much Almes is giuen to the poore to doe the same.

The Christians in those part in like case take the Sacrament, hauing before confessed and made their wils. The Priest ceaseth not to exort them to hopes of a better life by Faith in Christ. Being dead Perfumes are burned in the Chamber, the Corps is wrapped in a white sheet, and on a Herse carried by foure to the buriall place, men accompanying and women following. The neerer Kindred lament, cast ashes on their head and face, rent their Garments, pull off their haire, smite their cheekes, and lift vp horrible cries to Heauen without ceasing. When they are come to the Graue, they bury them with their faces to the East. But Priests and specially Bishops are attyred in their Priestly Habits, set in a Chaire, and the mouthes of the Sepulchers closed with a stone. Then vpon the Graues they burne Frankincense and make many Prayers. After this the women goe round about the Graue in a ranke with mournfull laments, strikes, plaints, and piteous Songs in prayse of the dead partie. Seruice is after celebrated for the dead; which ended, the Priests, many Clerkes and Lay-men by the Heires are invited to Dinner. Whiles they are set, the neere Kinsman often warnes them to pray for rest to the deceased, and they with a loud voice answere, God haue mercy on him, for whose sake we eate these meates. After Dinner they comfort the Heires, and praying for rest to the deceased, depart.

As concerning the Moslemans Beliefe of God and Christ, the Reader may read the Dialogue, published by my learned Friend Master Bedwell, called Mohameds imposture, as also my Pilgrimage and the quotations there, out of the Alcoran.

*Of this name Meneses or Meneses, Friar Iohn Santos reckoned four Vice-royes: two of which were Duarte or Edwards. One An. 1521. This was Earle of Tarouca, and sent into India, An. 1584. and ruled there more then four yeares. Note also, that Don Iohn de Castro, whose Rutter of the Red Sea ye haue in the seuenth Booke, was Vice-roy of India, An. 1545. famous for arts and Armes, which I mention that the Reader may obserue our care in forreine Authors to chuse the best.

DON DVART* DE MENESES the Vice-roy, his tractate of the Portugall Indies, containing the Lawes, Customes, Reuenues, Expenses, and other matters remarkable therein: beere abbreviated.

§. I.

A Register or Collection of the Vses, Lawes, and Customes of the Canarins, or Inhabitants of this Iland of Goa, and of the Townes thereunto belonging.

DOn Iohn by the Grace of God, King of Portugall and of the Algarues, of this side and beyond the Seas, Lord of Guinea, and of the Conquest, Navigation, and Commerce or Trafficke of Aethiopia, Arabia, Persia, and India, &c. To all those that shall see this our Bill of Rites and Customes, giuen to the Gouvernors, Farmers and Inhabiters of the Townes and Ilands of our Citie of Goa, greeting. We let you vnderstand, that by the good ordering, diligences, and examinations, which were to bee done by Iustification, and Declaration of that which the said Farmers were bound to pay vnto vs, and did pay vnto the Kings and Lords of the Countrey before it was ours, of their inheritances, duties, rights, and other charges: and also the rights, vses and customes which they had, and we ought to command, should be kept vnto them, and wee found by the Declaration of the said diligences, that they are bound to pay vnto vs that which is contained in this our other Bill of Customes of the said payments of duties. And also wee finde that they ought to vse these vses, rights and customes, in manner and forme following.

It was found, that euery Towne of the said Ilands haue certaine Gouvernors; some more, some lesse, according to their custome, and as the Ilands and the Townes are in bignesse, and that the said name Gançares is as much to say, as Gouvernor, Ruler, or Benefactor, & it was thus ordained. In old time there went foure men to make profit of an Iland, and of another vnprofitable waste place, the which they manured and fortified in such manner, and so well, that in processe of time it came to such increase, that it became very populous. And these Beginners, for their good gouernment, rule and trafficke, were called Gançares; and afterward there came Lords and Conquerors vpon them, which did make them for to pay tribute, and custome for to let them dwell quietly in their Lands or Inheritances and Customes, but I could not know the beginning of this.

In this Iland of Tisoare, where the Citie of Goa stands situated, there are two and thirtie Townes and Villages, as followeth. Neura the great, Gancin, the old Goa, Cogin, Hella, A. Iosin, Carambolin, Batin, Teleigaon, Bamolin, Curqua, Calapor, Morabrin the great, Talanlin, Galmola, Neura the lesse, Corlin, Sirdaon, Dugnari, Murura, Morabrin the lesse, Chumbel, Pannelin, Solecer, Mandur, Murcundin, Agacarin, Horar, Gandalin, Renoari, Banganin, Foleiros.

The Townes or Villages of Choram, and of Iuan, and of Dinar, are these that follow: Choran, Catarin, Iuan, the Pescadores, or Fishers of Dabarin, Malar, Nanelin, Goltin, Dina.

And euery one of the said Townes, is bound to pay vnto vs certaine rent, contained and declared in the said Register. Heretofore the said Gouvernors of euery Towne or Village, with the Notarie of the same, doth diuide and ceasse vpon the Farmers or persons, that within the bounds of euery Towne hath Lands or Inheritance, and this according to the condition wherewith it is giuen them for their vses and customes: and the said are bound to leuie, gather, and pay the said rent, whither it increase or decrease, and the losse or encrease shall remaine with them of the Towne, that the persons to whom it doth appertaine by their custome, may pay the losse, or take the increase, as here vnder it shall be declared, except the losse should chance to come by warre, for then they shall be quit of that which shall be by the meanes thereof lost.

The said increase or losse of euery yeare, shall bee diuided according to euery ones substance equally, so that euery one doe pay the rent of the Lands or Rice-grounds that he doth occupie.

Some Gardens and Palme-tree Groues, and Rice-grounds, are bound to pay euery yeare certaine Tangas: and although they doe sustaine losses, there be in the said Ilands other Palme-tree Groues, and Rice-grounds, which doe not pay but a certaine custome; and besides, they are bound to a contribution of the losses when there be any. And there be other Lands or Inheritances which the said Gouvernours may giue gratis to any person or persons, whom they shall thinke good, without custome or Obligation, to pay any thing to the contribution of the losses.

Which are 75. Reys euery one, and two pence farthing English.

If any Towne or Village be so decayed, that they cannot pay their custome and rent that appertaineth to vs, the Gouvernors and Inhabiters of it, shall giue intelligence of it to the chiefe Master of the Ports, and to the Notarie of the Iland, and they shall goe to see the said losse, and finding it for good truth that it hath such a losse; the said chiefe Master of the Ports shall command the chiefe Gouvernours of the eight principall Townes aboue rehearsed, and then there may come to this other Gouvernours, which soeuer they shall thinke good, although the matters of the Iland must be done by order with them of the eight principall Townes, and altogether with the said chiefe Master of the Ports, and the Notarie, the Inhabitants of the decayed towne may engage or morgage their Towne vnto the Gouvernours, because they are bound vnto it: and 10 they may also make sale of it in the presence of the said Officers, and it shall be deliuered or surrendered to him that will giue most for it, and that which is wanting of the rent and custome which it is bound to pay, in that which is giuen for the Towne, shall bee diuided and leuiued of the eight principall Townes, or of all the Iland, vpon those Lands which are bound to the contribution of the losses, in such sort, that we may haue full payment of the Custome of the said Towne, and that the said Hirer or Hirers shall be bound to increase better, and profit the Towne or Village: and with this condition it shall be let or set vnto them. And the said Hirers or Farmers of the said Towne, shall haue the voyces of Gouvernours during the time of their Lease or Farme.

The Gouvernours of the Towne decayed, doe not lose their Offices by that which is spoken.
 20 And at all times that they shall aske, or demand, the Towne paying the whole rent or custome, it shall be deliuered vnto them, and the said Towne shall be no more of the Farmers, hauing ended their time or lease.

The Gouvernours by authoritie of their Offices, and because they were Beginners, and also because the said Offices or charge doth come to them by descent, they doe not lose them (to wit, the Gouvernours euery one in the Towne in person for any error he doth commit: nor the Clerke of Common Councell, which also commeth to him by inheritance or descent: and this order was made by the Gouvernours themselues, onely the one and the other shall haue for the errors and hurts that they doe commit, the penaltie that they doe deserue, in their goods and bodie. Notwithstanding, such an error they may doe, that they may dye for it: or it shall be conuenient that they shall not serue in their Offices, and in such case it shall remaine to their Sonnes or 30 Heires; and if the case be not great, the chiefe Master of the Ports shall iudge it, counselling himselfe with some of the Gouvernours. And if the facts bee greater, the said chiefe Master of the Ports shall giue knowledge of it to our Captaine Generall, and Gouvernour of India, or to the Captaine of our Citie of Goa, or to the ouer-seer of our goods, if the matter bee thereunto attaining, for to provide in it what shall bee conuenient and right: And also the Gouvernours of the said Towne haue the said Offices by inheritance or descent. And if they doe commit any error, they shall be punished as these other, and so their Offices shall remaine to their Sonnes, or to their Heires.

The Gouvernors may giue such fields as within euery Towne are waste or vnprofitable, to such 40 as shall aske or demand them, for to make them profitable in Gardens, or Palme-tree Groues, or to other good vles, with condition that they shall pay a certaine rent, or custome, as shall seeme good vnto them, and this so giuen, shall bee for the space of five and twentie yeeres; for, from that time forward, they shall pay according to the order and custome, which is euery Field or Plaine, of twelue Paces in length (which is the space betweene Palme-tree and Palme-tree, reckoning one hundred Palme-trees to the field) some of them to pay five Tangas, worth foure Barganis euery Tanga. And after this rate, the greater or lesser field so giuen shall pay. And the said Gouvernours may giue the waste Fields and Plaines, for to be profited in Palme-tree Groues, and Gardens, for lesse then five Tangas, and they shall passe their Warrant for this, according to their custome, notwithstanding they may not exceed aboue.

When they shall giue Fields or Plaines, to make Rice grounds, they shall be giuen in this manner, to wit, five Cubits in length, and five in breadth, which is the space betweene one row and another, reckoning in this manner one hundred rewes to euery Field. And any Field or Plaine of them, being watered with Well water, they shall giue it for foure Barganis, euery yeeres rent; and if they be watered with running water, their rent shall be six Barganis euery yeere; and after the said Gardens bee so giuen vnto them by the Gouvernours, they cannot bee taken away from them, for they remaine to their Sonnes, Grand-children, and Heires, and this is the generall custome. Notwithstanding, if any other custome be vsed besides this in any Towne, or Village, it shall be fulfilled.

The Clerke of the Councell must be present at all the bargaines, and agreements (which amongst themselues they call Nemes) that shall be made by the principall Gouvernours of all the 60 Iland with the Officers of it, the chiefe Master of the Ports, a Portugal Notarie with him, or a Bramane, and without him or the Clerke of the Councell, no bargaines nor agreements can be made, because they doe write the Cases, for to notifie and declare the debts that might arise in time to come. And in the abovesaid manner, the Scriueners of the Townes must be with the Gouvernours uernours of them, in all matters that shall passe in any one of the said Townes. And the Townes of all this Iland of Tifoare, and the other Townes of Duar, and Choran, and Iunba, are guided by their writings.

The Gouvernours every one in his owne Towne, may giue Fields, or Plaines, freely or gratis, for to profit them: or if be profitable being voide, to the Officers of the said Townes, to wit, to the * Priest of the * Pagode, or Church of the Idoll, and to the Scriuener, and to the Porter, and to the Rent-gatherer, and to the Magnato (which is a washer of Cloth, or a Laundresse) and to the Shoemaker, and Carpenter, and to the Smith, and to the Faras (which is a seruant to the Pagode, or Church) and to the women of the world (which are common women or Curtesans) and to the Iester. And to those persons abouenamed, the Plaines, or Fields, and Gardens, are giuen gratis, for to serue continually in the said Townes: And after they be giuen vnto them, they may not be taken away, nor other persons be set in their place, because they are giuen vnto them for their Sonnes, Grand-children, and Heires. And every Towne may haue no more Officers then abouenamed, to whom they may giue the said Lands gratis. Neither may they giue them any more Lands without Heires, and they being willing to leaue them, they shall bee giuen to other Officers of their Facultie, and the Heires of the same Officers are bound to serue in the said Offices also.

* Which is called Bramane.

* Which is their Temple.

The Gouvernour of any Towne, may not giue any Field, or Garden, to any one that is not of the Towne, gratis, but paying tribute; except they haue an order for it.

When the chiefe Master of the Ports shall send for the Gouvernours of all the Iland, or of one Towne, they are bound for to come, or to make an assemblie, for to choose in every Towne any one whom they thinke meete, for to send to the said calling; and when they make the said assemblie (which among them is called Gançaria, or an assemblie of Gouvernours) if any Gouvernour be wanting of them, which are ordained in the said Towne, there can nothing be done, except they be all together, and if there be any Heire of that Gouvernour that is wanting, it is sufficient for the said Assemblie or meeting to be made with him. And if other people doe not come, they shall incur the penaltie that among themselues they haue ordained.

If any Gouvernour or any other person is willing to sell any lands in any of the said Townes, they may not doe it without license of all the Gouvernours of the said Towne, and also no person may buy without the said license. And if any person shall make any sale, or buy any land without the license, it shall be in it selfe of no effect, and at any time when the Gouvernour will, it shall be voide for the benefit of the duties which they are bound to pay vnto vs, and because they also that doe buy, may bee contented and acquainted with the said rights, and may haue their Letters with a declaration of these duties which they are to pay.

When any Bill of sale shall be made of any Land or Inheritance, it shall not be sufficient to be signed by the Letter, but also it must bee signed by all the Heires, and although some of the Heires be vnder age, declaration shall be made, that some other person that did appertaine vnto him, did signe for him, and if any one of the Heires remaine that hath not signed, the said sale shall at any time be of no effect, taking the quantitie that it was sold for, and if the buyer shall be at any cost or charges vpon the said Land, he shall lose it.

If any Gouvernour shall goe or runne away because he will not, or is not able to pay vs the rent that he is bound to pay, the other Gouvernours of the said Towne shall meete, and call a Court about this matter, and shall prefixe a time wherein he may come, and if within the said time he doth not come, they shall require the Heires of the said Gouvernour so fled, to take the said Lands, and Gouvernement, so as they be bound to pay vnto vs our right, and the debts that he doth owe: and if he will not accept it, it shall remaine to the said Gouvernours, for the Obligation that they haue to pay the said right or custome, and they may giue them to whom they shall thinke best, paying besides our right all the debts that he doth owe.

If a Gouvernour or any other person shall runne away for debt, or any other matter, no man shall take away his Lands, and his Heires shall bee demanded, if they will remaine in the said Lands, and be bound to pay his debts, and our right, and if there be no Heires, or being any, if they will not accept it, then the said Lands shall remaine to the said Gouvernours, for want of an owner, and they shall pay for it the right and debts that they doe owe vnto vs, and they shall take the ouerplus of that which is remayning, and if any thing be wanting, they shall pay that which it amounteth vnto, and as touching the moueable goods, they shall remaine vnto vs, whensoever the Heires shall not accept of the Inheritance or Lands.

If any person, Gouvernour, or other, doth chance to die, or goeth out of the Countrey, and hath no Heires, the Lands that they haue which are not bound to any tribute or custome, shall be ours, euen as the mouables, and if the Lands doe owe any debts or legacies, or if they doe not owe any thing, after we are paid ours, of the remainder shall be done according to right.

The Rice-lands in every Towne shall be let every yeere by the voice of a Crier, to them that will giue most for them, according to their custome, because they are not proper of any one man, as the other lands are, and therefore they must be giuen to such men as will giue most for them, being Inhabitants or dwellers of the Townes, and if any Towne hath, of, or by custome of old time time to giue the said lands, or let them to any person or persons out of the Towne, which shall giue more for them then the men of the said Towne, it shall be accomplished according to their custome.

The Gouvernours of this Iland of Tisoare, and of the other Ilands of Diuar, and Choran, and Iunha, are bound to giue among the Inhabiters of the Towne certaine * labourers, at their owne cost and charges euery yeere for to cleanse the wall, and the bottome of the trenches of this Citie, of the Weedes and Bushes that grow in them, or also for other needfull or hastie seruices, which sometimes doe chance as neede doth require.

If there chance to bee any demand or controuersie in any of the said Townes, touching any 10 Lands or Tenements, they may not demand them by any witnesses, but onely by writings, or bonds, or by the Townes Register, and if there be no writings, nor bonds, and the Register of the Towne should chance to be lost, there shall another bee taken of the demander of the said lands, that by it he shall declare that which shall seeme conuenient for to know the truth. And concerning such cases, and other of like importance, they shall sweare vpon a Pagode * (which is an image of the Deuill) which swearing is called Vfe or Custome.

* Called Bi-garina.

If any person shall lend another money vpon a bond, and by negligence he did not demand it, or it was not paide vnto him within the time prefixed in the said bond, in such manner that when he goeth to demand the said money, the debtor doth denie it, in such a case there shall bee an oath taken of him that hath the bond or obligation, that hee tell truth of the case how it standeth, and he shall sweare vpon the said Pagode (which is an image of the Deuill.)

* See my Pitt
l. 5. c. 9. §. 2.

There may not be lent to any man aboue fiftie Tangas, without an obligation or bond, and for one person or persons to demand another or others, to the quantitie of fiftie Tangas, the demander shall shew an obligation or witnesses, and aboue the summe of fiftie Tangas, one cannot demand of another without an obligation, onely the parties may come to an agreement, putting it in arbitration of two such sworne men as they shall like, the which shall sweare after they haue heard them, that which they shall find to be equitie and right.

They may giue money at interest in this manner, that for euery six Tangas, they may receiue euery moneth one Bargani, and no more, and if any person shall giue money at interest, and doth not demand the interest, and so much time doth passe without demanding it, that the 30 interest doth amount to so much or more then the principall, although long time bee past, the Debtor shall not be bound to pay to the Creditor but the principall with the double.

The persons that can bee witnesse are these, to wit, a youth vnder the age of sixteene yeares, nor a Drunkard, nor a Blinde man, nor a Dumbeman, nor a Moore, nor a Deafe man, nor a Russian, nor a Iourney-man, nor a Gardiner, nor a Gamster, nor the Daughter of a Whore, nor an infamous person by Record, nor a man that is in hatred with another, cannot beare witnesse against him. Notwithstanding, these may beare witnesse in matters of small importance.

If a man doe chance to dye without a Sonne, although he hath a Father, or other heires ascendant, the Inheritance commeth to vs, except the said Father and Sonne deceased hath their Inheritance commixt, or both in one Title or Custome: for then the Father doth inherit of the 40 Sonne: and if any man hath foure Sonnes, or more or lesse, they may diuide the Inheritance in his life time, except it be by his owne good will, and the Father contented with it, they shall diuide it brotherly as well in his life time, as after his death; and diuiding it in his life time, the Sonnes shall be bound to maintaine the Father with all things necessary, and any of these Brothers dying without Heires descendant, the diuision of the brethren shall be viewed, either at the death, or in the life time of their Father, if it be written in the Towne-booke; and being written in the said Booke, then the inheritance of euery Brother so dying without an Heire descendant commeth to vs, and if he dyeth before the said diuision was made or written, then the Inheritance commeth to the Brethren, if they haue no Father: and if the said Inheritance be not of forreine Lands, and bound to the rent of the Towne, then the Inheritance of a man so deceased shall remaine vnto vs, as well as the moueable without any contradiction. And if any of 50 these Brethren become a Turke, a Moore, or a Iogue (which is like to the Gypsies in our Kingdomes) in such manner, that he doth alienate himselfe from the custome of his house, and if the goods be diuided among them, his moueable goods shall remaine vnto vs, and his Land also, except it be forreine Lands, for then it shall be sold by Obligation to pay the custome due, and the remainder (the debts being first paid) shall remaine vnto vs, as here is contained.

Of men deceased, and how they inherit one after another.

* Which is a Gypcian.

At the time of the decease of such a man, whose inheritance appertaineth to vs in such manner as is declared already, the Gouvernours of the Towne shall bee bound, before they doe burie them, or burne them (according to their custome) they shall make it knowne to our Officers, for to goe thither to take notice of the goods, and to set them downe in an Inuentorie, and 60 make sale of them by the voyce of a Cryer, the Gouvernours of the Towne being present: and they shall be giuen to the Gouvernours of the Towne, or to any of their kinred that shall giue most for them, and not to any person out of the Towne, or to any of their kinred, notwithstanding if the neereft Kinsman of the man deceased, or any other of his Kinsmen will haue the said Inheritance, with the customes belonging to it, which the Gouvernours doe pay, it shall be giuen him.

How the goods of men deceased, must bee sold in the Towne to the Gouvernours, and they shall pay the debts, being due and lawfull.

him. And suppose it should happen that the Kinsmen of the deceased did not come at the selling of the said goods, and within five daies after they shall know of it, shall request the said Inheritance to be giuen them for the quantitie it was sold for, it shall bee giuen vnto them for the said price. And the said five daies being past, they not requiring it, it shall not after bee deliuered vnto them; but they that most shall giue for it, shall possesse it; and the duties that doe arise of the said goods, shall be for vs, and it shall bee charged vpon our Factor, and there shall passe a Certificate in Farme vnto the Gouvernours for their discharge, how it is charged vpon his account, and thence forward may they not bee constrained, or oppressed for it, and therefore the lawfull and due debts that the said deceased doth owe, shall of the said goods first be paid, and the rest that remaineth, shall be for vs, as aforesaid.

The moueables of any one deceased hauing no heires ascendant, or descendant, (as is already said) are without any difference to remaine to our vse, and they shall bee sold to them that will giue most for them, either be he Kinsman or not, of the Towne, or out of it, notwithstanding the debts shall first be paid, as already is specified.

The Inheritance is in this manner; from the Father it commeth to the Sonne, and to the Grand-child, &c. and to the Father and Grand-father: so that there bee heires ascendant and descendant, to whom the Inheritance doth appertaine, so that the said Inheritance come by the Male, and by the Female no person doth inherit, no not the Daughter, but the Brother shall possesse her goods in such manner, as is already specified.

If any Thiefe shall goe to steale any Money, or any other thing, and is taken with the said stealth, in such case it shall be provided according to our Ordinances and Lawes; and if the said thing so stollen hath an Owner, it shall bee giuen him, although by their vses and customes it belongeth vnto vs, and this, because so it is our pleasure, and wee thinke it good to shew them fauour, as we doe vnto them that well and faithfully doe vs service, as we hope they will doe.

If any treasure or goods be found or discovered, it belongeth and appertaineth to vs.

If any man be married with two Wiues, and haue foure Sonnes of the one and of the other, or more or lesse, although that they bee not in number equall, whensoever the said Sonnes shall diuide the said goods of the Father, they shall diuide it in the midst, and the one Sonne shall haue as much as the other foure, and the goods of the Father and of the Mother, shall not bee inherited in the Daughter, as is aboue rehearsed.

The Officers placed by vs, and by our Gouvernours and Captaines, and ouer-seers of our goods, shall not take any bribes, nor Lands, of, or at the hands of the Gouvernours and Townes, neither may they vse any Merchandize within the compasse of their Office. And I command, that if at any time they or he shall be attainted with the same fault, that which shall be found he hath taken, or by his meanes any losse was sustained, hee shall repay it againe, and the said quantitie so paid, shall remaine vnto vs.

Or a Cassock: Pachorins a kind of Linnen cloth.

If the Gouvernours shall lay, or exact any demands in the Townes for Cabaga, Pachorins, or whatsoever profits or commodities for themselues, or for to giue to the Captaines, or chiefe Master of the Ports, or to any other Officers, or persons whatsoever, every Gouvernour of a Towne so conuicted, shall pay the whole summe of that, which they haue leuied through all the Townes; the one halfe for them that shall accuse them, and the other halfe for redemption of Captiues and the Scriueners, or Notaries of the Townes, shall be contributaries with them, if the said tribute, subsidie, or tyrannie was raised, or leuied with their consent.

He that shall conuay, or purloine any Merchandize, of whatsoever sort it be, without paying to our Officers the duties belonging to vs as they are bound: they shall pay after the rate of eleuen for one, of that which he hath so conuayed and purloined, being thereof conuicted.

At what time soeuer that the chiefe Master of the Ports, with the Clerkes or Clerke of his charge together, or euery one of himselfe, shall goe to the Iland about matters concerning our affaires, or any one whom they shall send to the said Iland, or to the Townes of the same, they shall giue them their meat according to their vse and custome.

And also to our Factor, or Officer of that office when they shall goe thither, to provide in any matters concerning our affaires, or the Towne of the Iland.

Whatsoever Foot-man shall goe with any message pertaining to our seruice, or to the recouerie of our rents, they shall giue him euery day that he shall be there without dispatching, two measures of Rice for his meat, and one Leal for Betre, which is an hearb that they vse to eat.

A piece of Money of three farthings.
Betre, an herbe that they vse to eat.

If any Gouvernours of the Iland of Choran, or of the other Ilanders annexed to the same of Tisoare shall runne away to the Turkes out of the Land, because they would not pay the rent, as it is aforesaid already, it hath beene done, the which from hence-forward wee hope they will not doe, they shall lose their moueable goods, and they shall fall vnto vs, and their Lands and Offices shall bee giuen vnto them they doe appertaine to, and will giue most for them, being bound to pay the rights and customes that the said Lands are bound to pay, and that which they shall giue ouer-plus for the said Lands and Gouvernourship, their custome reserued, shall bee to our vse.

When they doe make any feast or assembly, wherein they are to take Betre, (which is an Herbe)

Herbe) or Pachorins, the principall Gouvernour of every Towne shall take first the said Betre, Pachorins, or Jewell, and after him the other Gouvernours by degrees, according to their authorities and customes.

Which is a piece of linnen cloath.

When any assembly or conuocation is to be made, and the names of the Gouvernours to be named in writing; first shall begin the name of the principall in honour, and consequently one after another in their degrees.

When in the end of any Councell that they make, there is any difference or doubt in setting downe that which they haue agreed vpon, it shall bee written by the Scriuener, or Notarie of the Towne; and hauing written it, he shall say with an high voyce, which is called Nemo, that which they haue agreed vpon, and if there be no bodie to gaine-say that which he hath said, and declared with an high voyce, it shall remaine in full force and power.

When the Gouvernours of the Iland do meete for any councell, agreement, or decree, the said decree shall be set downe by the Clerke of the Common Councell of all the Iland, and the voyce that shall be giuen at the end of the said decree, called Nemo (as aforesaid) shall bee spoken by the most principall Gouvernour that will be accepted, the said Nemo shall be made by the Scriuener or Notarie that writ it.

The Towne of Telegaon hath the preheminance, for it must bee the first that beginneth to share their Rice, and the Gouvernours of it must come euery yeare with a sheafe of Rice, to present it before the high Altar of the Church, and the Vicar with them must go to the Storehouse where our Factor is, and he shall haue bestowed foure Pardons in Pachorins, and hee shall cast them about the neckes of the Gouvernours, ordained among them, that they may receiue honour, and from thence forward the other Townes may reape, or share their Rice as hereafter shall be declared.

In the time of Tillage, the first Rice-ground that shall be ploughed, and in the time of Harvest that first shall be reaped, must be the chiefe Gouvernours field of euery Towne, and after him any one that will may reape his; and the same order shall be vsed in the couering, or thatching of their houses euery yeare, the which Gouvernour of the Towne shall couer his house first with Palme-tree leaues, and after him all the other people of the same.

The Men or Women Dancers, that shall come to feast to a Towne, they shall goe first to feast at the house of the principall Gouvernour; and when there be two in like honour, it stands in the choyce of the Dancers, to goe to which of them they thinke best: and these Gouvernours so in one degree of honour, shall rise together to the Betre, or to any other honour, when they are to receiue estate, with their armes a crosse, the right arme vnder the left, because that he that goeth on the right hand, doth take it for more honour, and because another Gouvernour might say, that he which did take the present with the left hand had the preheminance, because it came ouer the right hand.

The Gouvernours that are in Common; to wit, which is to take Betre, (which is an Herbe) or any other honour, haue no preheminance the one of the other; and they may sell the said honour of the Betre, or Pachorins, which are certaine Linnen cloaths) to any of the said Gouvernours of the said Towne, euery time that the said honour chanceth to bee giuen, and this for a certaine price, and it must be diuided in the Towne: and when there is no obiection to the contrary, then the Scriuener of the Towne receiue the said honour.

No man may carrie Tocha, Andor, or Sombreiro, without our liccense, or of our Gouvernour, except it come to him by Inheritance from his Fathers, and those to whom we or our said Gouvernour shall giue the said liccense for desert of his seruices, it shall bee giuen in two sorts; the one, that they may carrie the said Sombreiro and Andor with his Foot-men, and Tocha with the Oyle at their owne charge; and the other is, that hee doe receiue of vs the said Sombreiro with the said Foot-men, and the Oyle paid at our charges, and the said light also may bee giuen without the shadow, and the shadow without the said light or Tocha, euery thing by it selte, or altogether in any of the manners aboue specified. Therefore also we notifie it, as well to our Captaine Generall, and Gouvernour of these parts of India, which now is, or hereafter shall bee: and also to the Captaines of this Citie, Iudges, Iustices, and Officers of the same, and to euery other person or persons, to whom this our Letter shall be shewen, and the knowledge of it doth appertaine: We command, that in all things they keepe and fulfill the same, and cause it to bee kept and fulfilled, as in it is contained, for our meaning is the same. Giuen in the Citie of Goa, the sixteenth of September, the King commanded it by Alonso Mexia, Ouer-seer of the goods in these parts of India, and Antonie de Campo did write it, in the yeare of 1526. Alonso Mexia.

Be it knowne to you, that I seeing how much the good government, and preferuing of my Estates in those parts of India, doth import, and Iustice to be truly administred in them to my Subiects and Vassals, and desiring that in my time it may bee done with that integritie, libertie and breuitie that thereunto belongeth; I thought meete to send send or provide after I had succeeded in the Crowne of those Kingdoms, Persons of conscience and learning, to the most of the Fortresses of those parts, that should administer it, to the which we gave power and authority according to their governments or charges. And being now informed that in the Citie of Goa, principall and head of the said Estates, the Kings my Predecessors of glorious memory, did ordayne there should be an house of Iustice, or place of hearing, wherein some Officers by them chosen (as in a supreme Tribunall) should determine the Causes, giving them for that purpose at sundry times divers charges, the which for the varietie of matters ought to be reformed, and I being willing in dutie to continue with the same intent, and command to provide in those Causes, which at this present were most necessarie for the good of the said House, commanded for that effect, learned men of my Counsell, and of experience that they should determine what might be done in that case, as well in the ordering and governing of the said House, as in the multiplying of the Ministers belonging to it, that matters of Iustice might with more ease and facilitie be prosecuted, and having heard their opinions, and necessary diligences being used, and having given mee relation of all things and account, I thought good to provide for them in manner and forme following.

II.

A Copie of the order that the Vice-roy of the Estate of India shall hold in matters of Iustice, as also of the other Magistrates, in the divers places holden by the Portugals in India.

He Vice-roy shall goe to the house of Iustice, the times that he thinketh good, and shall give no voyce, nor assigne or pronounce any sentences, but he shall onely use the offices that the chiefe Iudge doth use in the Court of Requests, and of the rest which in extraordinary matters is granted vnto him in all things whereunto his charge may be applied.

Or a Preferrer of Bills and Supplications.

There shall be in the said House or Court ten Officers, to wit, one Chancellour, the which shall also serve for a Iudge of the Chancerie: one chiefe Iudge of facts and causes Criminall: one chiefe Iudge of matters or causes Ciuill, the which notwithstanding shall serve for Iudges in matters of complaint, wherein any Iudge of our estate, goods, or reuenues hath not given sentence, one Attorney for causes touching the Crowne goods, or reuenues: and one Promotor of Iustice, the which shall serve also for a Iudge of complaints, and wrongs in those cases wherein he is not Attorney: one chiefe Iudge for Wills and Testaments, the which shall serve also for a Iudge of Complaints, in such cases as he hath not given sentence.

Also there shall be in the said house three extraordinarie Iudges, the which shall serve in absence, and for any hindrance of the said Iudges of complaints aboue named, and for the other Offices. And this by commission of the Vice-roy, and in his absence of the Chancellor, or of the most ancient Iudge, which doth serve himselfe as Chancellor, when the Chancellor himselfe is absent, and they shall helpe the Iudges that sit on the Bench to dispatch the causes then depending, and not in any matter aforesaid past, &c.

Every day before they sit or dispatch any matters, there shall a Masse be said by a Chaplaine, which the Vice-roy shall choose for that purpose, and he shall be paid at the charges and expenses of the said house, and the Masse being ended, they shall beginne to dispatch such matters as shall be brought vnto them, and they shall be foure houres at the least in dispatching matters, by an houre-glasse, which shall stand vpon the Table where the Vice-roy doth sit.

The Iudges, as well in cases Ciuill as Criminall, shall haue the same authority, and shall keepe the same order that is given vnto them, whereof the Iudges of the Court of Requests doe also use, and of those sentences which by mine Ordinances I command account be given vnto mee before they be put in execution, the said account shall be given to the Vice-roy, if hee haue not bene present at iudgment, or if he be not absent from the Citie of Goa: for if he be absent, the account shall be given vnto him that ruleth in his stead, and when there is any iudgement Criminall of Importance, as is to put some person of qualitie to death, or other iudgement of importance in Ciuill cases, execution shall not be made without giving account to the Vice-roy thereof, although he be absent, or out of the Citie.

The Vice-roy and Iudges may in the house of Iustice supply the defects, and annihilating of the acts, when he shall thinke that the cause doth require it, for the performing of Iustice.

And the said Iudges, while they are in the said house executing their Offices with the Vice-roy, shall be set in plaine Chayres, and the Vice-roy shall presently command them to be covered, and not to sit bare-headed.

The said Iudges shall not enter into the said house with any weapons, neither shall they weare any garments of colour, but they shall be apparelled in long blacke garments, in such manner as it may represent the Authority they haue.

The

The Vice-roy shall have a particular to command the Pensions to be payd to the said Iudges at their due times, in such manner as they may bee effectually payd euery quarter, without any delay to the contrarie, and their payment shall be giuen or payd vnto them in the said house, at the end of euery quarter.

The Bills of pardons, Bills of assurance, legitimations, and suppliances of ages, shall be giuen to the Vice-roy being in the said house, and he with the said Iudges shall dispatch them, and they shall be such as he for that purpose shall chioose, alwayes the Chancellor being one of them, if he be present, with the Iudge of the cause, and to the dispatches of the said Petitions, the said Iudges with the Vice-roy shall set their hands, and the Bills shall passe in my name, with the 10 accustomed causes, and they shall be signed by the Vice-roy, and no Bill of pardon shall be taken without pardon of the party offended, and in the dispatches of the said causes they shall alwayes haue a due regard and consideration.

And because of the easie granting of pardons, which the Vice-roy in those parts doth ordinarily grant, hath sprung that the faults are not punished, and the boldnesse to commit new hath encreased; Wee thought it meet and conuenient, that no pardons should bee granted in matters of Apostacy, Sodomie, false coynning, treacherous murder, falshood in the crime of any of the Heads, Lasa Maiestatis, wounding, or killing of any Iudge or Iustice, or of a Captaine of any Fortresse, the slaughter of a Maior, or Baylisfe, or any other Officer of Iustice, except any cause so vrgent doth concur, that the granting of the said pardon of the said cases, doth 20 concerne the preseruacion of the estate of India: then the causes shall be communicated with the said Iudges, as is already declared, and when any of these cases so excepted shall happen, the Vice-roy shall take the said cases particularly in memorie, and shall giue me account of them in his Letters, by the first Fleet after the pardon were granted, with the causes that moued them to pardon such a fault.

The said Vice-roy from hence forward shall not grant any Warrant, that the money of Orphans shall be giuen to any Gentleman, or Captaine of any Fortresse, nor to any other persons which are not Merchants, for the many inconueniences that thereof doe proceed.

The Vice-roy of India in the prouiding of publike Offices of Iustice in those parts, shall haue a great care to prouide in my seruants or any other persons, bene meritos, and apt for the 30 said Offices, preferring alwayes my seruants, when they haue equall deserts with the other, and he shall passe no Warrant for any Captaine of a Fortresse, that he may prouide the said Offices that are voyde, for the great inconueniences that thereof doth arise, and because it is provided in mine Ordinances, how the Offices of the said charges must be prouided by the Iustices, and Commissioners of those Countries, in whose place being absent, the Learned men that I haue sent for Iudges of the Fortresses to those parts doe remayne.

The said Vice-roy in the Warrants of Iustice, or of goods that he passeth, shall not command in an Edict, that they may not passe by the Chancerie, for the many inconueniences that thereof doth arise, and being passed in any other forme, they shall be of no force, and the persons to whom they shall be directed, shall not keepe nor conceale them, except the Warrants
40 be of secreisie, or of matters of importance, the which passing by the Chancerie would take no effect; and if any Warrant that the Vice-roy doth grant, doe come with restraint or seizure whatsoever, the said restraint or seizure shall be dispatched ordinarily in the house of Iustice, or Hall aboue named, by the Iudges to whom it doth appertaine.

All the Warrants or Letters that the Vice-roy maketh, shall be written or subscribed by the Secretarie of the estate of India, to whom it pertayneth, and not to any other person except he supply the place of a Secretarie, because there is none prouided by me for that effect.

The Vice-roy shall command an * account to bee taken of the Captaines, and of the other Officers which shall deserue in them, as soone as their time is expired, the which shall be done by the Iudges of the Hall or Court aboue named, which he shall chioose for that purpose, or by 50 any other trusty persons notwithstanding the accounts, or regidencias of Ormus, Malaqua, and Mosambique shall be taken by the Iudges themselves, because of the importance of them, and the acts or examinations of the said accounts or regidencias shall be dispatched in the said House or Court of Relation, and the sentences which vpon them shall be giuen, with the copie of the said acts and examinations, the Vice-roy shall cause them to bee to the Realme the same yeere that they are taken, and they shall be deliuered to the Iudge of India, and of the Myne, that he may deliuer vnto me relation of them, and I may command them to be set in that place that I shall thinke to be most meet.

The condemnations of money that shall be made in the House or Court of Relation, shall be applied for the expences of the said House, and the Iudges of the said House or Court may not 60 apply them to any other vse, of the which forfeitures, or condemnations there shall bee a Receiver, and a Scriuener of the receit, and expences of them, and the said expences shall be made by order of the Vice-roy, for the which there shall be a Booke assigned and kept, by one of the said Iudges, to whom the Vice-roy shall commit it in keeping.

And because I may haue knowledge of all causes as well Criminall as Ciuill, which shall be

dispatched in the said House or Court of Relation in euery yeere, the Vice-roy shall command a Roll or Register of all the said cases that so shall bee dispatched to bee made, and also of those which remayned to be dispatched, the which Register he shall send vnto vs euery yeere.

The Vice-roy shall nominate euery three yeeres, one Iudge of great confidence and trust, that may take the Examinations in the Citie of Goa, of the Scriueners, Aduocates, Rulers, Bayliffes, Tellers, Inquisitors, and of all the other Ministers of Iustice, and of the Reuenues, excepting the Iustices of the House or Court of Relation, and also besides the Examinations that the chiefe Iustice of Criminall causes, and the other Officers of Iustice in the said Citie are bound to make euery yeere according to their Offices or Authoritie, and the said Iudge shall proceed against the faulty according to Iustice, and finally, he shall dispatch them in the said Court of relation, with the Iudges that the Vice-roy shall nominate vnto him.

And the Vice-roy not being present in the House or Court of relation, or being absent from the Citie of Goa, the Chancellor shall serue in his place, according to the order of our Decree.

A note or copy of the authoritie that the Chancellor of the House or Court of Relation of India hath.

The Chancellor shall peruse or ouer-see all the Bills & Sentences, that are given by the Iudges of the said Court or House of relation, and in the passing and ingrossing of them, he shall keepe the same order that the Chancellor of the Court of Requests doth keepe, by authoritie of my Ordinances and Warrants.

He shall take notice of the suspicions that are to the Iudges of the said House or Court of relation of India, and to the other Officers of the said House, the which he shall dispatch in the said House or Court of relation.

For the is a Chancerie belonging to the Court of Requests.

He shall take notice of the cases and errours of the Notaries and Scriueners, and other Officers, whereof the Iudge of Chancerie pertayning to the Court of Requests may take Notice, and he shall passe Bills of assurance vpon the said cases being of such qualitie that it may bee done, and no other Iudge shall passe them, and he also shall take notice of the appeales of errours committed by these Officers of the estate of India, and of the wrongs past before the Tellers of the costs, vsing in all that is aboue named that authoritie, that is given to the Iudge of the Chancerie belonging to the Court of requests.

And for so much as in the said parts there is no other Chancellor but he of the house or Court of relation, it is my will and pleasure, that all those matters that in whatsoever manner be dispatcht by the Vice-roy, by Letters, Bills, or Warrants, which by authoritie of my Ordinances should passe by the chiefe Chancellor, doe passe by him, and in the passing and engrossing of the said matters, he shall vse the authoritie of the chiefe Chancellor, and the Debts that are due in the engrossing of the Warrants, which the Vice-roy shall passe, he shall determine vpon them with three of the said Iudges, which the Vice-roy shall nominate vnto him.

And hee shall also take notice of the suspicions layd to the Ouerscers of our Reuenues, or Exchequer, and to the Officers thereof, and hee shall dispatch them according to the authoritie of the chiefe Chancellor.

And touching the valuation of the Garrisons, and other Offices of what ought to bee payd in the Chancerie, the said Chancellor shall vse the same order containd in the Orders of the estate of India, whereof hitherto hath beene vsed, the which he shall vse onely in this behalfe.

The Chancellor shall keepe the Courts that the Iudge of the Chancerie is bound to doe, in the dayes ordayned for that purpose, and the Sentences that the said Chancellor doth giue, shall passe by the Chancerie, or by the ancientest Iudge of the Appeales.

And when the Chancellor chanceth to bee absent, or busie about other affaires, in such sort that thereby he cannot be present, the Seales shall remayne with the ancientest Iudge of Appeales in that Office, he which shall take notice of all such matters as the said Chancellor might take notice of.

And in all the rest that in this Register is not declared, the said Chancellor shall vse the same order that is given to the high Chancellor, or to the Chancellor of the Court of Requests, by our Ordinances and Decrees, and this shall be vsed in such cases as they well may be applyed vnto.

A note or copy of the authoritie that belongeth to the Iudges of the Appeales.

There appertayneth to the Iudges of the Appeales, to take notice of the Appeales of the Sentences definitiue, that the chiefe Iudge of the Ciuill cases, and the chiefe Commissioner of the deceased shall pronounce in such Ciuill cases as are not containd in their Prerogative or Authoritie.

There appertayneth also vnto them, the deciding of the Appeales of Ciuill cases that doth passe before the Iudge of the Citie of Goa, and before the ordinarie Iudges, and before the Iudges of Orphants, and whatsoever Iudges of the said Citie, and also of the Iudges of the Fortresses, or Garrisons of India, and of the Towneships thereof, and of those Captaines that haue no Iudges, the which doth not appertayne to any other Iudgement by authoritie of my Ordinances or Decrees.

All the cases which by authoritie of the same Decree doth appertaine vnto them, they shall dispatch them by a pretence, and in the dispatching of them, they shall keepe the order that I haue given by mine Ordinances and Decrees to the Iudges of the Complaints, and Appeales of the Court of Requests, and they shall as well in the dispatching of the Sentences definitiues, as

- And because I am enformed that some persons dying, to whom there is no certaine knowne, the Vice-Royes doe giue the goods of the said men deceased to some persons, whereof there doth arise many inconueniences, and I being willing to prouide in the said case, doe thinke it meete, and doe command that from hence-forward the said Vice-Royes shall not giue the said goods to any person with assurance or without, and that they shall command them to be kept in good safeguard, according to the order of mine owne goods, sending them to the Kingdome directed to the Treasurer of the Receit of the Captiues, according to the order giuen in this Case, that from his hand it may bee giuen to whom it doth appertaine, or to remayne in the House of

The said chiefe Commissioner shall haue a particular care to know when the shippes of this Realme shall come to the Citie of Goa, and also of the other ships, that come to the said Citie from other parts of the Estate of India, and if there dyed in them any persons, and the order that was kept and obserued in the making of the Inuentory of their goods, causing it all to be set in good safeguard according to his authoritie, and the dutie of his Office.

- And likewise in the same manner, he shall haue a particular care to send euery yeare by Letter of Exchange in the said ships of this Kingdome, all the money of the said deceased men, that is in his Office directed to the Officers to whom it appertayneth to bee deliuered by vertue of my Decrees, that in this Citie it may be giuen, and deliuered to the persons to whom of right

And also he shall haue a speciall care to make a discharge of the generall Register of India, of the wages that the said men so deceased did receiue, because that also there may bee a note set in their Toll, or Register, how they are dead, and of the day wherein they dyed, that they may receiue no more wages for them of my goods from that day, and to doe this, hee shall peruse the said Register some dayes, that he shall thinke conuenient for to doe the said diligences, because they doe import very much to my seruice, and for this cause I command the Scriueners or Clerkes of the said generall Check-roll of India, to bee very diligent, and to make all these Discharges, and to set Notes in the Check-rolls of the said men deceased, as by the order of the said Register it is commanded them.

- The said chiefe Commissioner shall take no notice of the Appeales that doe come from the Iudges of the Orphans of the Citie of Goa, and of the other Fortresses of the Estate of India, and from the other Commissioners, but they shall goe directly to the Court of Relation, to the Iudges of Appeales, where they shall be dispatched according to the order of the said Iudges of Appeales. Neither shall he take notice of the Appeales, which by Bills, or Letters of Testimoniall shall come from the Fortresses of India, but they shall goe directly to the Iudges of Appeales, to whom the Iudgement doth appertaine, as in their Title is declared.

- Of the Interlocutorie Sentences, whereof by my Ordinances may bee appealed by Petition, or by a Bill of Complaint, the parties may according to the forme of my Ordinances and Decrees appeale to the Court of Relation, and the Appeales that doe passe before the Iudges of the 60 Orphans of the Citie of Goa, and five leagues round about the same, shall goe directly to the Court of Relation, according to the Commandement that I commanded in the new reformation of Iustice, and the said Commissioner shall euery three yeares giue and yeeld an account for the importance that belongeth to the knowing how they doe serue and proceed in their Offices, and charges according to Equitie and Iustice.

The said Iudges shall take notice in the places of their Iurisdiction by Ausson noua, of all the Causes, Ciuill and Criminall, and the Ciuill Causes which are proceessed in their Court or Office, they shall iudge definitiue by themselves alone, giuing Appeales in those Cases which are not contayned in their authoritie to the Court of Relation, and the Bills of complaint, or Bills of testimony that shall passe before them, of the Interlocutorie Sentences, whereof by authoritie of my Ordinances may bee appealed, shall bee past in the Court of Relation, and not before any⁵⁰ chiefe Iudge as hitherto it hath bene vsed.

And the said Iudges shall processe the Criminall Cases, till they doe conclude them by themselves alone, and when they are concluded, they shall giue knowledge to the Captaines, for to appoint a day or houre certaine, wherein they may meete in the Chamber-house of the Citie, that they may giue a dispatch in them, and in those places where there is no such Chamber, the Iudges shall meete the Captaines in the Fortresses, or Castles, and the said Captaine being agreed with the Iudge, the Sentence shall be written by the Iudge, whereunto both shall set their hands, in the which shall be vsed due execution, if it be contayned within his authoritie, and being of sundry opinions, the sentence shall not passe, and they shal take a third man vnto them, the which shall be the Ouer-seer of the Kings goods, and if hee be not in place, then the Factor of the said⁶⁰ Fortresse. And if it chance that the Ouer-seer of the goods, nor the Factor for some hinderance cannot be present, then shall serue in their place, the eldest ordinary Iudge that doth serue that yeare, and according to that which two persons shall agree vpon, the Sentence shall be written, whereat all three shall set their hands, that due execution shall bee vied according to the Order aboue rehearsed.

And

And the Criminall Cases that are not contayned within the compasse of the authoritie of the said ordinary Iudges, they shall dispatch them by themselves alone, giuing an Appeale, according to the tenour of my Ordinances to the Court of Relation, where the chiefe Iudge of Criminall Cases shall dispatch them according to Iustice.

And the said Iudges shall take notice of the Appeales that doe passe before the ordinary Iudges, of Cities and Fortresses where they are Iudges, and shall dispatch them by themselves alone, whereof they shall giue an Appeale to the Court of Relation, in such Cases as doe not contayne within their authoritie.

And the said Iudges shall take knowledge of the Appeales of the ordinary Iudges, as the Iustices of the Borders may doe, and they may also plead such Cases, as the said Iustices by the authoritie of their Offices may plead, and in all the rest, they shall vse the Orders that the Iustices of the Borders doe vse, in Cases wherein they may be applied.

Also they may passe Letters of Protection, in such cases, as the Iustices of the Borders may passe them, and the Captaines of the Fortresses may not passe or grant them, neither may they intermeddle in the same by no manner of meanes, and the said Iudges shall not grant any Letter of Protection in cases of death, nor in other cases which are reserued for the chiefe Iudge of Criminall cases, which vseth the authoritie of the Corrigidor of the Court, except the Iudges of Mosambique, Ormuz, Malaca, Moluco, and Macao, for these may passe Schedules, or Bills of Securitie, a Protection in all cases, and in those wherein the Corrigidor of the Court doth passe, or grant them in the Court of Relation according to his authoritie, the said Iudges shall passe them with the opinion of the Captayne, and the Ouer-seer of the Kings goods together, and if there be no Ouer-seer of the goods, they shall dispatch them with the Factor, and if it chanceth so that neither the Ouer-seer nor the Factor can be there, by some let or hinderance, then the most ancient ordinary Iudge that doth serue that yeare, shall be in their stead, and it shall be sufficient that two of them doe agree in the granting or denying the said Letters of Protection, and the Bills of Controuersie, of those persons to whom they doe passe or grant the said Letters of Protection shall passe before the said Iudges, the which thus to bee done, I thinke it meete and convenient, hauing a respect to the distance, that is, from these parts, to the Citie of Goa, where the Court of Relation is, and the great vexation that the parties would receiue in going to demand Iustice to places so distant and farre.

The said Iudges shall haue authoritie in Criminall cases, to the quantitie of fortie thousand Reys in moueable goods, and in Landed goods to the quantitie of thirtie thousand Reys, and the Iudges of the Fortresses of Mosambique, Ormuz, Malaca, Moluco, and Macao, shall haue authoritie in the said Cases to the quantitie of eightie thousand Reys in moueable goods, and Landed goods, seuentie thousand Reys, and of those cases which shall surmount the said summe, they shall appeale to the Court of Relation, because they are not contayned within their authoritie.

And the said Iudges with the Captaines shall haue that authoritie in Criminall cases, which the Captaynes of my Townes or Castles, on the other side the Sea haue, as is declared in the order of the twentieth Booke tituled 27. aswell ouer the Portugals, as ouer the men of that Countrey, and the Sentences that they shall giue in those cases which are contayned within their authoritie, according to this Decree, and the said Ordinance shall bee executed effectually according to Iustice.

And if any case contayned in the said Ordinance do happen or chance, so that by the authority of the same, the said Iudges haue commission to prosecute it vnto death, they shall not execute those Sentences, which in any of the said cases they do pronounce, if the parties so condemned be Esquires, or Gentlemem of my household, or of greater qualitie: for before they doe execute the said Sentences, they shall make it knowne to the Vice-Roy, that with his opinion execution may be giuen to the said Sentences.

And the said Iudges shall not apprehend any person for any complaints of whatsoever qualitie they be of, without Information of Witnesses, according to the new Law of Reformation of Iustice, the which Law they shall in this and in all other matters accomplish according to the tenure thereof.

They shall keepe the Court dayes that the Iustices of the Borders are bound to keepe, and this in the publike accustomed places, where the Iustices are wont to keepe them, and they shall not keepe them in their houses.

And the said Iudges shall examine all such matters, as the Iustices of the Borders are bound to examine, by the authoritie of my Ordinances, Lawes, and Decrees of these Kingdomes vnder the penalties in them declared, in such cases as they may be applied vnto.

They may also provide the places for the Officers belonging to the Iustices which are void, according to the order of the Decree, vntill the Vice-Royes doe provide them, and the Captaynes may in no wise provide them, the which Seruices or Places shall bee provided to my Seruants, or to other well deseruing persons, and their deserts beeing equall, my Seruants shall be preferred.

Which is twentie
pound sterling.
Which is sixteene
pound sterling.
Which is fiftie
pound sterling.
Which is forty three pound fifteene shillings sterling.

And the said Iudges shall bee bound to command euery one of the Scriueners, or Clerkes of their Court to make a Booke wherein they may write all the cases as well Ciuill as Criminall, and other Bills of Appeale or Complaint, and all other Matters whereof the said Iudges doth take notice, and euery one of them setting downe that which is committed to his charge only, as well of those things which they shall write in proceffe for the obseruing of Iustice, as of these Matters that are betweene partie and partie.

And euery one of the said Iudges shall haue a Booke noted and signed by them, wherein they may cause all the forfeitures of money that are applyed to the expences of Iustice, or to any other place according to the order of the Decree in that case provided.

And the said Iudges may set penalties, and condemne in them to the quantitie of two thousand Reys, for the charges of the said Iustice, without any Appeale or Complaint of the said Sentence. The which expences shall bee made by the commandement of the said Iudges, and not of the Captaynes, and in the Accounts or Residencies that the Iudges doe giue, there shall an Account bee taken of them of the said money, and of the expences of the said Forfeitures, that notice may be had, if they haue commanded the said Forfeitures to be deliuered to those places or parties whereunto they were applyed, and the expences which by their commandement were made, if they were well and lawfully commanded.

And the said Iudges may not bee imprisoned nor arrested during the time of their charges, for any Matter whatsoever, Criminall or Ciuill, except it bee by the commandement of the Vice-Roy, or the Court of Relation.

And because it importeth much to the keeping of good Iustice, and the Administration thereof, that the said Iudges haue the Authoritie, that belongeth to the charges whereof wee haue giuen them Commission, and because that they beeing subiect to the Captaynes, did arise many inconueniences, and they were oppressed in such manner, that they could not performe their Duties with that Integrity, and libertie that belongeth to the Seruice of God, and mine; And I beeing willing to provide in this Case, doe thinke it meete, and doe command that the said Captaynes may haue no Iurisdiction, nor any Superioritie ouer the said Iudges, and that they doe not intermeddle with any thing pertayning to their Offices or charges, any thing to the contrarie notwithstanding.

And if the said Iudges doe commit any crimes or excesses, so that it seemes to the Captaynes that they ought to aduertize the Vice-Roy thereof, they shall doe it by their Letters, the which the Vice-Roy shall command to be perused in the Court of Relation, that they may proceed against them according to Iustice.

And the said Iudges shall take such Fees for their Assignments as the Iustices of the Borders may take, by the Authoritie of their Offices, and according to my Ordinances.

And when the said Iudges shall bee absent, or hindered, so that by themselves they cannot serue, they may nominate a person to serue in their place, and if hee chance to dye, after hee hath nominated, the person so nominated shall serue vntill the Vice-Roy doe provide another, and if hee dyeth without nominating any person to serue in his place, the Factor of the Kings Reuenues shall serue the place, the which persons shall serue the same place, all the time that the Vice-Roy doth not nominate or provide, as it is already declared, and the Vice-Roy shall provide a man of Learning and Qualitie, in whom the said charge may well bee employed, the which persons in all things shall vse the Order of this Decree.

And it is my will and pleasure that touching the Suspitions that shall bee layd to the said Iudges in such Cases as by reason of their Offices they may take notice of, they shall keepe this Order following, to wit, when any Suspicion shall bee intended against them by any partie of what Degree or Qualitie soeuer he be, the Iudge not yeelding himselfe guiltie of the Suspicion, the Acts thereof shall be committed to the ancientest ordinary Iudge that serued the yeare before, the which Iudge shall determine of the same, according to Iustice, and the said Iudge shall proceed alwayes in the cause wherein the said Suspicion was layd against him, vntill it be finally determined, taking to himselfe for an Adiunct, one of the Iustices of that present yeare, which doe serue in the said Fortresse or Garrison where hee is Iudge, not beeing suspected, but if hee bee, hee shall take another Iustice, and beeing both suspected, hee shall take the ancientest Alderman, and the same beeing so, hee shall take the second, and if hee bee suspected, hee shall take the third, to the which no suspicion can bee layd, and the Acts that they two shall make, It is my will and pleasure that they bee in force and power, as if the suspicion had not beene layd vnto the said Iudge, and beeing iudged that hee is not suspectiue, hee alone shall proceed in the Case, as hee should haue done it, if the suspicion had not beene intended against him. And being iudged to bee suspectiue, in such a Case hee shall proceed no further, and there shall be a Iudge set in his place, that may take notice of the said Case according to the forme of my Ordinances.

And it is also my will and pleasure, that when a suspicion is thus laid to the said Iudges, in whatsoever cases, as well Criminall as Ciuill; and the partie that doth lay the said suspicion, is not not contented with his owne deposition, but is willing to giue other prooffe; hee shall deposite foure Cruzados before any hearing be giuen to the prooffe, the which he shall forfeit to the poore Prisoners of the Iayle of that Garrison where he serueth, if it be iudged that the said Iudge is not guiltie of the said suspicion.

The said Iudges shall haue 200000. Reys ordinarie euery yeare paid, in the Factorships of the Garrisons where they doe serue by the Factors thereof, at euery quarter of the yeare, the which the Factors shall pay them of the first Money they receiue, in such sort, that they alwaies bee well paid, and this with a Certificate of the Scriuener or Clerke of his charge, how he hath serued the time of the quarter, and with the said Certificate, and the Acquittance of euery one of the Iudges, the Money for the said quarteredges, shall be receiued in account of the said Factors that shall pay it them, and the Copy of this Chapter shall be registred in the Office of the said Factors, by the Clerke of the said Office, the which Ordinarie the learned Iudges shall onely receiue.

Which is 125. pounds sterling

And the said Iudges shall receiue allowance of victuals for two men that doth accompany them, and doth serue with them in matters of Iustice, the which shall bee paid vnto them at their quarters, at the charges of my reuenues, as hitherto it hath beene done by a Certificate of the said Clerkes of the Factorshippes, wherein they shall declare how the said Iudges haue the said men, and how they doe serue with them in the manner aboue rehearsed. There follow like Rules for the Iudge of Macao, and the Kingdome of China, which for breuitie I haue omitted.

Here followed a Collection of the Warrants made in the Viceroyes name to the Captaines of all the seuerall Forts and Places of command in all the Portugall Indies, whereby they had commission to execute their charges, and to receiue their Wages, Priuiledges and Rights, in manner there by seuerall Warrants for each particular, to each Captaine expressed: but it is a pretie large Volume, and here for the length omitted, there being no lesse then three and twentie seuerall Warrants to George Menezes, Captaine of Mosambique and Sofala, touching his charge, power, and priuiledges; and likewise for the rest.

restraine our zeale, and without feare of Inquisition, march like good Fellowes together: yea, with Iesuites after, without feare of Treason. Onely first I will present vnto you a Letter of a Spanish Embassador, relating the Antiquities of Persepolis, and some things by him obserued in Persia.

CHAP. XI.

10 A Letter from Don GARCIA SILVA FIGUEROA Embassador from PHILIP the Third King of Spaine to the Persian, written at Spahan, or Hispahan, Anno 1619. to the Marquesse of Bedmar, touching matters of Persia.

20 Wearied with travelling both by Sea and Land, but otherwise well, I came at length from Ormuz into Persia. Which hauing wandred ouer; at the Kings appointment, I went to Hispahan: where I endure a tedious irksome delay, being euen tyred with so vnpleasant a life, as I here leade. For whatsoeuer Writers report of that great and ancient Monarchie of the Achæmenides, this is mine opinion; That there is nothing in all this Countrey to be found so good, but that it comes short of the least commoditie in our Europe. And besides that enery thing here is so crosse to our fashions, that I am without all conuerse with men; here are not so much as any booke (the reading whereof might somewhat refresh a mans minde in so great solitarinesse) except a few Pamphlets intreating of holy Confession, and Navarr's Summes, which the Monkes of Saint Augustine vse.

Hispahan is the noblest Citie of this Kingdome: and, though it lye but in one and thirtie degrees and a halfe of Northerly latitude; yet, by reason of the subtile piercing ayre, the cold is sharper, then by the climate or situation one would imagine. Now, in all this Kingdome you can scarce see any print of Antiquitie: all the houses being built of unburned bricke, or earth rammed up betweene two boards; too slight stuffe to last many dayes, much lesse many yeeres.

Hispahan.

No antiquities

30 Notwithstanding, there are yet remayning most of those huge wilde buildings of the Castle and Palace of Persepolis, so much celebrated in the monuments of ancient Writers. These frames doe the Arabians and Persians in their owne language, call Chilminara: which is as much as if you should say in Spanish, Quarenta columnas, or Alcoranes: for so they call those high narrow round steeples, which the Arabians haue in their Mesquites. This rare, yea and onely monument of the World (which farre exceedeth all the rest of the Worlds miracles, that we haue seene or heard off) sheweth it selfe to them that come to this Citie from the Towne of Xiria, and standeth about a league from the River Bradamir, in times past called Araxis (not that, that parteth Media from the greater Armenia) whereof often mention is made by Quintus Curtius, Diodorus and Plutarch: which Authors doe point vs out the situation of Persepolis, and doe almost leade vs vnto it by the hand. The largenesse, fairnesse, and long-lasting Matter of those Pillars, appeareth by the twentie which are yet left, of alike fashion; which with other remaynders of those stately Piles, doe moue admiration in the minde of beholders, and cannot, but with much labour, and at leisure, be layed open. But since it is your Lordships hap to liue now at Venice, where you may see some resemblance of the things, which I am about to write of, I will briefly tell you, that most of the Pictures of men, that, ingrauen in marble, doe seele the front, the sides, and statelier parts of this building, are deckt with a very comely cloathing, and clad in the same fashion, which the Venetian Magnifico's goe in; that is, in Gownes downe to the heeles, with wide sleeves; with round flat caps, their haire spread to the shoulders, and notable long beards. Yee may see in these Tables some men sitting, with great maiestie, in certayne loftier chayres, such as vse to bee with vs in the Quires and Chapter-houses of Cathedrall Churches, appointed for the seates of the chiefe Prelates: the feete being

40 supported with a little foote-stoole neatly made, about a hand high. And, which is very worthy of wonder, in so diuers dresse of so many men; as are ingrauen in these Tables, none commeth neere the fashion which is at this day, or hath beene these many Ages past in vse through all Alia. For though out of all Antiquitie we can gather no such Arguments of the cloathing of Assyrians, Medes and Persians, as we finde many of the Greekes and Romanes: yet it appeareth sufficiently, that they used garments of a middle size for length, like the Punike vest, used by the Turkes and Persians at this day, which they call Aljuba, and these, Cauaia: and Shashes wound about their heads, distinguished yet both by fashion and colour from the Cidaris, which is the Royall Diademe. Yet verily in all this sculpture (which though it be ancient, yet shineth as neatly, as if it were but new-done) you can see no picture, that is like or in the workmanship resembleth any other, which the memorie of man could yet attayne to the knowledge of, from any part of the World: so that this worke may seeme to exceede all Antiquitie. Now, nothing more confirmeth this, then one notable inscription cut in a Iasper-table, with Characters still so

50 fresh and faire, that one would wonder, how it could scape so many Ages without touch of the least blissh. The Letters themselves are neither Chaldean, nor Hebrew, nor Greeke, nor Arabike, nor of any other Nation, which was euer found of old, or at this day, to be extant. They are all three-cornered, but somewhat long, of the forme of a Pyramide, or such a little Obeliske, as I have set in the margine: so that in nothing doe they differ one from another, but in their placing and situation, yet so conformed that they are wondrous plaine distinct and perspicuous. What kinde of building the whole was (whether Corinthian, Ionick, Dorick, or mixt) cannot bee gathered from the remaynder of these ruines: which is otherwise in the old broken walls at Rome, by which that may easily be discerned. Notwithstanding, the wondrous and artificiall exactnesse of the worke, the beautie and elegancy of it, shining out of the proportion and symmetrie, doth dazle the eyes of the beholders. But nothing amazed me more, then the hardnesse and durablenesse of these Marbles and Iaspers: for in many places there are Tables so solide, and so curiously wrought and polished, that yee may see your face in them, as in a glasse. Besides the Authors, by me already commended; Arrianus and Iustine make speciall mention of this Palace: 10 and they report, that Alexander the Great (at the instigation of Thais, a famous Whore of Athens) did burne it downe. But most delicately of all doth Diodorus deliver this storie.

Castle.
Sepulcher.

The whole Castle was encompassed with a threefold circle of walls, the greater part whereof hath yeelded to the violence of time and weather. There stand also the Sepulchres of their Kings, placed on the side of that Hill, at the foote whereof the Castle it selfe is built: and the monuments stand iust so farre one from another, as Diodorus reporteth. In a word, all doth so agree with his discourse of it, that he that hath seene this, and read that, cannot possibly be deceived. More then this, there remayne not any markes of so huge a Citie: but that nigh about halfe a league from the Castle, there stands up another Pillar, as bigge as the rest: and two other shorter ones too, set a little farther off: and in them did my Servants see some horses of Marble, large like a Colossus, and some men also of Giantly stature. To 20 tell you true (as neere as it was, and easily done, yet) I was loath to goe thither; both, because all that Plaine was cut full of little Brookes, Ditches, and Sluses drawne out of the River Araxis: and also, because I would be held there no longer, having already spent two dayes in beholding the things which I have described. Now, though that Plaine be very fruitfull, and (as I said) all watered with Water-courses; though it lye open every way above ten leagues, that it might well maintayne so great a Citie, as Persepolis sometime was: yet now it is taken up onely with one small Towne of some foure hundred houses; compassed about with fat pastures, fruitfull Fields, and most fertile and pleasant Orchards and Closes, and furnished with all manner of foode, and such pure wholesome water to drinke, that I doe not remember that ever I tasted the like any where else. This Towne is called Margatean, and is a little distant from the Castle. As for the King himselfe, I had beene with him at Casbin, before I came 30 hither.

Margatean.

Casbin.

Casbin is a towne some three hundred leagues distant from Ormuz; and from hence one hundred long ones. There had the King leuied a mightie armie of Horse and Foot to meete the Turkes forces, who, as enemies, invaded the frontiers of the Persian Empire. There I abode therefore but fortie daies, being by the King royally entertained, with cheerefull expressions of a louing minde. But when he was to goe to Soltania (some fiftene leagues from thence) to muster his companies, which were there met; he let me plainely understand, that before his departure he would dispatch mee for my returne to Ormuz. Soone after, having suddenly changed his mind, hee commanded mee to retire my selfe hither: whither he promised, so soone as the warre was ouer, to come himselfe, and to send me away. But when the warre was quickly ended (which I foresaw by vndoubted signes at Casbin) the King withdrew himselfe to Fa- 40 rabat: which is a Towne of Hercania, by the Caspian Sea, which hee loues and delights in much. Hee presently sent me a messenger to signifie that he would certainly come hither in the spring, to celebrate his birth-day. This unwelcome newes troubled mee more then all the toyle and trouble of the whole voyage. I resolved therefore to dispatch to him one of my Gentlemen, with the Abbot of Saint Augustines: who if they should perceine that his coming were likely to be delayed long, might procure my dispatch; though at a most unseasonable time for sailing, and at my great perill to venter upon the heate at Ormuz, in summer insupportable.

Soltania.

Fabat.

Concerning the peace or truce agreed upon by these Princes, after a bloody field fought betweene Tauris and Ardequill, it is to no purpose to report, since it is publike and divulged, though their covenants and conditions be yet kept close. If the State were at more quiet in Moscouie, I would (goe by Astracan 50 and) make a iourney through that Countrey, in my returne. But it is strange, what miseries and calamities afflict that Nation: which in ancient time hath so flourished and preuailed, that it scattered and put downe the Tartarians of the East, who were dreadfull to the whole world. Of which miseries and destructions the ground and author was that counterfeit Demetrius, who having by plaine couensage usurped once the empire of the Russians, left it in a continued line to six other false tyrants of his name after him.

The conclusion of these my letters shall be the relation of two Comets, which during this time wee be- held, the one, on the tenth of Nouember, began to shine two houres before Sunne-rising; whose appearing was obserued betweene East and South. The colour was like to the fume which ariseth from the flame 60 of the finest Gunpowder. The head of it seemed to me to be in Scorpio: the bignesse, as much as would containe a sixt part of the Zodiacke: the forme (as some imagined) like a Cimier; which sort the Grecians call Xiphias, boding * horrible euents. This Comet (me thought) resembled rather a yeere-old spring of Palme, which being not yet spread is a little bowed at the top: it moved toward the South. Twelve or thirteene daies after the rising of this Comet, another appeared with bayrie rayes, of an ordinarie ordinarie fashion, coloured like the Planet Venus, and much about that bignesse, or a little bigger. It arose directly East. And though at first it were farre lesse then the former, yet increasing daily more and more, it grew almost as big as the other. By the proper motion it moved it selfe with the Primum Mobile, not farre from the verticall Line. Moreover, three or foure daies after the arising of this, that other vanished. Sure they had both of them a very short period, insomuch as the latter scarce shewed it selfe about ten daies. It was obserued, that toward the end, it looked more red. Howsoeuer it be, if these Comets portend mischiese, the mischiese (sure) cannot be long-lasting, like others, whereof wee may see store in the world.

He said Friar went with a Fleet from Lisbon in Aprill 1586. Iuly the first, they came before the Cape of good hope, and had such faire weather, that they tooke great store of Fish, till a faire gale set them onwards for Mozambique. Being against Terra do Natal (which trends betwixt thirtie two and thirtie foure degrees South) they were encountred with a great storme, the Windes and Waues bellowing and billowing (in a seeming) conspiracie to their ruine. The second night of this tempest, the ninth of Iuly, they saw on their maine tops a Corpo santo in figure of a flame of fire bright and shining, from thence remouing to the Mizen-mast; and the Pilot saluted it, saying, Salue Corpo santo, salue; Boa viagem, boa viagem: Haile Corpo sancto, haile, a good voyage, a good voyage. And most of the people with many teares of ioy made the same answer, Boa viagem, boa viagem: the light hauing there long continued, vanished. The Mariners beleue that this light is S. Pero Gonçalves Telmo Naturall of Palencia a Citie in Castile, a Dominican, vpon whom they ordinarily call being endangered in tempests, and either call it Saint Peter Gonçalves, or S. Telmo, or Corpo Santo. Many times it appeareth, and so long they hold themselves secure, and ordinarily the stormes are moderated when it commeth, as it happened to vs in this voyage; and therefore they held it in much deuotion, albee it be but naturall, caused by exhalations: which the Mariners denie, saying, that sometimes in the place where that light appeares, they haue found Greene Wax, like that of a Wax-candle. And in the life of that Saint is rehearsed, that hee sometimes appeares visible to Mariners when they call vpon him in tempests, and deliueers them from Sea dangers. Whiles this light appeared, a Souldier kneeling downe in the ship before it, smote his breast, saying, with many teares. Adorouos meu Sñor S. Pero Gonçalves, vos me saluay neste perigo por vossa misericordia; repeating it many times. I adore thee my Lord Saint Peter Gonçalves, O saue me in this danger for thy mercie. I and another father told him, this adoration was due only to God, and that the Saints should be prayed to in another manner. He answered worse to the purpose. My God shall he be now which shall deliuer me from this danger. We then left him, but the next day the storme being past he confessed his fault.

On the seuen and twentieth they came to Baixos da Iuãa in two and twentie South, and the thirteenth of August came to Mozambique: from thence by the Vicar Generals appointment, I and another Dominican were sent for Sofala, one hundred and sixtie leagues distant, for the seruice of Christianitie in those parts in Nouember following. In the yeere 1588. the Saint Thomas hauing passed the Cape, was wracked neere Terra do Natal, and some of the companie escaping, went on shoare in Terra dos Fumos, & hapned on more humane Cafres then the most are in those parts, which had neuer seene white man before, called them Children of the Sunne, and gaue them to eate and drinke. Stephen Veyga the Captaine, and some others aduentured on a iourney thence by land (about eightie leagues) to Sofala, where they gaue great thanks to God and our Ladie for their deliuerie.

Ouer against the Fortresse of Sofala, is an Iland on the other side of the River called Inbanzato, of which in former times was Lord a Moore, called Muynbe Mafamede, so friendly to the Por-

Portugals, and so luke-warme in his Religion, that with them he would both eate Swines flesh and drinke Wine. Yet was hee so honoured, that after his death, the Moores of Sofala erected a Mesquit in the place of his buriall, and before the Mariners made their voyage, would make prayers to him (as a Saint) for their successe. I set this Mesquit on fire, to the discontent of those Moores. Fryar Iohn Madeira and I, remained foure yeeres in Sofala, labouring the conuer-sion of the Moores and Gentiles, of which we baptized 1694. persons. After that time the Vicar Generall caused vs to returne to Mosambique. In the way the Casars sent vs victuals and Musicians with their vnmusicall voices and Tabers all night, entertaining vs with a feast worse then a fast. Hauing thus passed the Lordship of an Encosse vnder the Quitenes dominion, we came into the Countrey of Manamotapa, where in the night passing a delart, wee heard terrible voices, 10 like as if they had beene of men, which we supposed to be Casar. theues, and durst not speake one to the other, lest we might so betray our liues. The next Casars told vs they were birds bigger then Cocks, which in the day time hide themselves, and in the night flie, chase and prey on other fowles, which terrified with their voices, leaue their roosts and so become a prey.

They came to the Riuer of Luabo after eighteene daies. In this Riuer are many great Ilands, where we lay in the nights, and sayled by day because of the Currents and Shelues. The two and twentieth of August we came to the Fort of Sena, where the two Churches of those Riuers had neuer a Priest, and therefore wee spent two and thirtie dayes in confessing, baptizing, massing: and thence were inuited to Tete, for like cause, sixtie leagues distant. I went and baptized there one hundred and seuentene. Madeira at Sena baptized aboue two hundred persons: 20 and from the first entrie of Dominicans, they had in that Riuer Cuama baptized aboue twentie thousand. In the Port of Quilmane were foure Pangayas of the Captayne of Mosambique, then Don Iorge de Menezes, in one of which wee embarked, in which was a Chest with 100000. Cruzados of gold, of powder, and peeces, which hee had made in those Riuers with Sonso Coutinho the Gouvernour of India: which gold is ordinarily gathered euery six moneths by the Portugals and Captayne. In the yeere 1592. I was sent to Quirimba. There I staid two yeeres, and made six hundred nintie foure Christians, and vntill that yeere 1593. the Dominicans had baptized aboue sixteene thousand in those Iles. After which I was recalled to Sofala, and in 1595. to Mosambique. In the yeere 1597. two English ships came in sight of Mosambique; as also two others had done in the yeere 1591. The two and twentieth of August 1597. he embarked himselfe for India, and on the twentieth of September entred the Barre of Goa. But let vs take view of Sofala, and the parts adioyning, as he hath described them in the first part of his workes.

The Fortresse of Sofala stands in 20. 30' Southerne degrees, situate on the Coast of Ea-sterne Ethiopia, neere the Sea, and iust by a Riuer a league in the mouth, little more or lesse, which riseth higher aboue one hundred leagues, arising in the Countrey called Mocarangua, and passing by the Citie Zimbaue where the Quitene resides, who is King of those parts, and of all the Riuer of Sofala. Vp that Riuer the Portugals trade to Manica, a land of much gold, seated within the land aboue sixtie leagues. Within the Port of Sofala is a Church, to which belong six hundred Communicants. The Inhabitants vsually are Merchants, some to Manica for gold, which they barter for Stuffles and Beades, both to the Captayne and themselves; others to the Riuer of Sabia, and the Iles das Bocicas, and other neere Riuers, for Iuorie, Gergelim-spice, Pulse, Amber, and many Slaues. There is another habitation of Moores two Caluer shot from the Castle, poore and miserable, which liue by seruing the Portugals. The women performe there the offices of Tillage and Husbandry; as also doe the Moores. They pay their Tithes to the Do- minicans Church. The Fortresse was built An. 1505. by Pero da Nhaya, with consent of the Moorish King Zuse, a man blinde of both his eyes (in both senses, externall and internall, religious and politike) who too late repenting, thought to supplant it with trecherie, which they returned vpon himselfe and slew him. In old times they had many such petty Moorish Kings on the Coast, few of which now remaine by reason of the Portugall Captaynes succeeding in their places, and in their amitie and commerce with the Quitene King of those Countries.

In those Countries of Sofala are many fruits, as Pomegranat trees which beare all the yeere, some greene, some ripe, some in flowers; they haue also Fig-trees, which yeeld blacke Figs all the yeere most excellent; Oranges, Limes, Vines which beare twice a yeere, in Ianuarie and Iuly; Ananas, Indian Figs, which yeeld great branches of Figs as great as Cucumbers, yellow when they are ripe, and sweet of sent, sometimes seuentie Figges are seene on one cluster, like a bunch of Grapes, and a man can scarcely lift them from the ground. They haue great grounds of Sugar-canes alongst the Riuer, husbanded by the Casars, not for Sugar, but to eate (for they want Ingenios) and are a great part of their sustenance. They haue many and great Palme- trees which yeeld infinite Cocos and Wine. They haue store of Guinnie Wheat, and Rice; many Inhames (a very great roote yeelding broade leaues, and better in taste then Potatoes) Fitches, and other Pulse in much varietie. In the fields and wild vntilled places grow store of Iasmins, and Mangericones (very sweet plants) and they make oyle of Gergelim, which they beate in woodden Morters, as big as will reach to a mans girdle, and then straine out the Oyles, and eate the rest with their Wheate instead of Butter. Innumerable Hens very good and cheape; Hogs,

Hogs, Goats, Kine, wild Beasts, Deere, and wild Swine are there. Ten Hens are sold for two Testons (2 s. 6d.) and y^e in the Countrey eightene at the price. They make Oile of Gooses which burnes cleerer then that of the Olive. In the Realme of Manica grow little Trees on the tops of Hills and Rocks, which the most part of the yeere are drie, without leafe and greenesse; but have this propertie, that if one cut off a bough & put it into water, in the space of ten houres it springs and flourisheth with greene leaves; but draw it out of the water, as soone as it is drie, it remaines againe as it was before. The Cafres say, that though this wood bee gathered ten yeeres, yet after all that time put into water, it will flourish and continue greene. This wood being ground, and giuen to drinke in water, is good to stanch fluxes of blood. The Cafres call it 30 Mungodao. Another wood they call Matuni, which signifieth the Dung of a Man, having the name of that sent, so noysome that none can endure it. The same is in India; the Tree like a Thorne tree. They say, it hath vertues against the Ayre (or Blasting) and therefore many persons weare it in strings like Beades, tyed to the arme next the skin, specially children. Alongst the River of Sofala in two places wilde and desert, grow Oranges and Limons, which every one may gather that will: wherewith they lade Boats and sell them for almost nothing to the Inhabitants of the Fortresse, which fill Barrells and Pots with the iuyce, and the same Limons salted, and send them for India, where they are much esteemed, and eaten with Rice. The bread ordinarily in Sofala is of their Wheate and Rice mixt together, whereof they make Cakes which they call Mocates: tollerable whiles they are hot, but cold, insufferable. The Portugals drinke commonly Palme wine, the Cafres Wine of their Wheate (or Mays) which they make strong and tipple.

of QVITEVE King of that Countrey, with the strange customes observed in these parts, in Court, Citie and Countrey.

30 He King of these parts is of curled haire, a Gentile, which worships nothing, nor hath any knowledge of God; yea, rather hee carries himselfe as God of his Countries, and so is holden and reuerenced of his Vassals. Hee is called Quitene, a title royall and no proper name, which they exchange for this so soone as they become Kings. The Quitene hath more then one hundred women all within doores, amongst which one or two are as his Queenes, the rest as Concubines: many of them are his owne Aunts, Cousins, Sisters and Daughters, which he no lesse yeth, saying, that his sonnes by them are true heires of the Kingdome without mixture of other blood. When the Quitene dyeth, his Queenes must die with him to doe him seruice in the other world, who accordingly at the instant of his death take a poyson (which they call Lucasse) and die therewith. The successor succeedeth as well to the women as the state. None else but the King may vpon paine of death marry his Sister or 40 Daughter. This Successor is commonly one of the eldest Sonnes of the deceased King, and of his great Women or Queenes; and if the eldest be not sufficient, then the next, or if none of them be fit, his Brother of whole blood. The King commonly whiles hee liueth maketh the choise, and traines vp him to affaires of State, to whom he destines the succession. While I liued there, saith Sanctos, the King had about thirtie Sonnes, and yet shewed more respect to his Brother a wise man, then to any of them, all honoring him as apparent heire.

The Quitene Manner of succession and coronation.

The same day the King dies, he is carried to a Hill where all the Kings are interred, and early the next morning, hee whom the deceased had named his Successor, goeth to the Kings house where the Kings Women abide in expectation, and by their consent hee enters the house, and seates himselfe with the principall of them in a publike Hall, where the King was wont to sit to heare Causes, in a place drawne with curtens or couered with a cloth, that none may see the 50 King nor the Women with him. And thence he sends his Officers, which goe thorow the Citie and proclayme Festiuals to the New King, who is now quietly possessed of the Kings House, with the Women of the King deceased, and that all should goe and acknowledge him for their King: which is done by all the great Men then in Court, and the Nobles of the Citie, who goe to the Palace now solemnely guarded, and enter into the Hall by licence of the Officers, where the new King abides with his Women; entring some, and some, creeping on the ground till they come to the middle of the Hall, and thence speake to the New King, giuing him due obeysance, without seeing him or his Women. The King makes answere from within, and accepts their seruice: and after that drawes the Curtens, and shewes himselfe to them; wherat all of them clap their hands, and then turne behind the Curtens, and goe forth creeping on the ground as they came 60 in; and when they are gone, others enter and doe in like sort. In this ceremonie the greatest part of the day is spent with feasting, musick and dancing thorow the Citie. The next day, the King sends his Officers thorow the Kingdome to declare this his succession, and that all should come to the Court to see him breake the Bowe. Sometimes there are many Comperitors, and then

Women-Electors.

Hee succeeds whom the Women admit into the Kings House: for none may enter by Law without their leaue, nor can bee King without peaceable entrance; forceable entrie forfeiting his Right and Title. By bribes therefore and other wayes, they seeke to make the Women on their side.

The Sedanda like customes.

Neere the Kingdome of Quitene is another of Lawes and Customes like thereto, where the Sedanda raignes: both which were sometimes but one Kingdome. Whiles I was in Sofala, the Sedanda being incurably sick of a leprosie, declared his Successor, and poysoned himselfe: which also is the custome there, if any King haue any deformitie in his person. The named Successor sought admittance of the Women, but they much distasting him, had secretly sent by night for another Prince whom they better liked, as more valiant and better beloued; whom they admitted, and assembled themselves with him in the publike Hall, and caused Proclamation to be made to the people of his succession. The other, whom they had reiected, fled for feare of his life, and being mightie assembled a great power, and by force entred the Kings House. But this was strange to all, who therefore forsooke him, and stuck to him whom the Women had chosen; whereupon the other fled, and no more lifted vp his head.

Ceremonie of breaking the Bowe. Cruell seruice.

Before the New King begins to gouerne, he sends for all the chiefe in the Kingdome, to come to the Court and see him breake the Kings Bowe, which is all one with taking possession of the Kingdome. In those Courts is a custome then also to kill some of those Lords or great Men, saying, that they are necessarie for the seruice of the deceased King: whereupon they kill those of whom they stand in feare or doubt, or whom they hate, in stead of whom they make and erect new Lords. This custome causeth such as feare themselves to flee the Land. Anciently the Kings were wont to drinke poyson in any grieuous disasters, as in a contagious disease, or naturall impotencie, lamenesse, the losse of their fore-teeth, or other deformitie; saying, that Kings ought to haue no defect; which if it happened, it was honour for him to die, and goe to better himselfe in that better life, in which he should be wholly perfect. But the Quitene which raigned whiles I was there, would not follow his predecessors herein; but hauing lost one of his fore-teeth, sent to proclaime thorow his whole Kingdome that one of his teeth were fallen out, and that if (that they might not be ignorant when they saw him want it) his predecessors were such fooles, for such causes to kill themselves, he would not doe so, but awaite his naturall death, holding his life necessary to conserue his estate against his enemies, which example hee would commend to posteritie.

Great obseruance: the like is vsed in Iapan, to lye prostrate and not looke on him.

If the Casars haue a suit, and seeke to speake with the King, they creepe to the place where hee is, hauing prostrated themselves at the entrance, and looke not on him all the while they speake, but lying on one side clap their hands all the time (a rite of obsequiousnesse in those parts) and then hauing finished, they creepe out of the doores as they came in. For no Casar may enter on foot to speake to the King, nor eye him in speaking, except the familiars and particular friends of the King. The Portugals enter on their feet, but vnshod, and being neere the King, prostrate themselves lying on one side almost sitting, and without looking on him speake to him, at euery fourth word clapping their hands according to the custome. Both Casars and Portugals are entertained by him with wine of Mays, or their wheate, called Pombe, which they must drinke, although against stomacke, not to contemne the Kings bountie; whence the Portugals haue had some trouble, and are forced to stay in the Towne without leaue to returne home, with great expence of time and charges.

Exequies to the dead Kings.

Pemberer, somewhat resembling that which Æneas performed to Anchises.

Euery September the Quitene at the change of the Moone, goeth from Zimbarbe his Citie to a high Hill to performe Obits or Exequies to his predecessors there buried, with great troope both of the Citie and other parts of the Kingdomes called vp therefore. As soone as they are ascended, they eate and drinke their Pombe, the King beginning, till they be all drunke; continuing that eating and drinking eight dayes, one of which they call Pemberer of a kind of Tiltting exercise then vsed. In this feast the King and his Nobles clothe themselves in their best Silkes and Cotten clothes, which they haue with many thrummes, like Carpet fringes, wrought therein, hanging downe on the eyes and face as a horses foretop; they tie about the head a large Ribband; and diuided into two parts, they runne one against another on foot with Bowes and Arrowes in their hands, which they shoote vpwards that none be hurt; and thus make a thousand careeres and feates till they be tyred and cannot stirre, and they which hold out longest are accounted the properest valiantest men, and are therefore rewarded with the prize propounded. Gaspar de Mello Captayne of Sofala in my time, caused to make a large Ribband with great fringes of silke and gold, and sent it with other pieces of price to the Quitene, who most esteemed that Ribband for this pembering purpose.

Deuils tyranny and Oracles.

After this eight dayes festiuall, they spend two dayes or three in mourning; and then the Deuill enters into one of the company, saying, he is the soule of the deceased King, father of the present, to whom those Exequies are performed; and that he comes to speake to his sonne. The Casar thus possessed falls downe on the ground in an ill plight and is distracted, the Deuill speaking by his mouth all the strange tongues of all the Casar Nations about them, many of which some of the men present vnderstand. And after this hee beginneth to behaue himselfe, and to speake speake like the King pretended, by which signes the Casars acknowledge the comming of the deceased Kings soule. The King is now made acquainted herewith, and comes with his Gfandes to the place where the Demoniacke is, and doe him great reuerence. Then all the rest goe aside, and the King remaynes with him alone, speaking friendly as with his father departed, and enquireth if hee be to make warres, whether hee shall ouercome his enemies, touching dearth, or troubles in his kingdom, and whatsoever else he desireth to know: And the Deuill answereth his questions, and aduiseeth him what to doe, not without lies altogether, as he which is the enemy of mankind, and thinks it enough to hold his credit with them, and yeerely to be consulted. After all this the Deuill departeth from that bodie, leaving it weary, and ever after ill apayd. The King returneth home with great applause, so graced with the conference of the deceased Kings, whom they hold to be mighty in the other World, and able to grant him whatsoever hee desireth. Some Portugals haue bene eye-witnesses hereof. The like manner the Deuill vseth with other Gentiles in China, and the Philippinas, as some report.

I beleue for certaine that this Caphar Nation is the most brutish and barbarous in the world, neither worshipping God, nor any Idoll, nor haue Image, Church, or Sacrifice, or persons dedicated to Religion, and are hard to be conuerted, either to Christians or Moors. They hold the immortalitie of the soule, and haue a confused knowledge that there is a Great God, whom they call Molungo, but they pray not to him, nor doe commend themselves to him. When they suffer any necessitie or sterilitie, they haue recourse to their King, strongly beleeuing that hee is able to giue them all things which they desire, and that he can obtaine all things of the dead, his predecessors with whom he seemeth to haue conference. Whereupon they sue to the King for raine, if they want it, and for seasonable harvest times: and alway when they thus petition him, they bring him great Presents, which he receiueth; and bids them returne home in a good houre; for hee will haue care of their request to satisfie the same. And though they see themselves often frustrated, yet continue they to spend time and costs in such petitions, till raine or other their suits happen, thinking that though he granted not at first, yet by their importunitie (as he also for gaine tells them) that he hath done it at last.

They obserue certaine festivals, resting from labour (except dances) appointed by the King, they not knowing when, or why. They call such dayes Musimos, that is, Soules of Saints departed, in whose honour they keepe them. On one of these dayes a Portugall in that Citie Zim-baobe (which was passing to Manicas where the gold Mines are) caused a Cow to bee killed at his house for food to his slaues, and the people which hee had with him; whereof the Quitene hearing by one of his Officers (many of which are dispersed in the Citie, and thorow the Kingdome) he commanded the Portugall to suffer it to abide, and not meddle any more withall, for violating his Musimos. And the Portugall had no remedie, but must either suffer the beast to stinke and putrefie there, or pay Empesia, that is, The Fine, which was no lesse then fiftie Clothes, after he had in stead of eating, endured much stinke many dayes; which to auoide, hee would haue gone forth of his house, and haue taken another, but the Quitene would not suffer him to enforce him to his Empesia.

These Casars know nothing of the Creation of the World, of Man, nor of Hell for the bad, or Heauen for the good: onely they beleue the soules immortalitie in another World, and that they shall liue with their women a better life then this, but they cannot tell where, in some earthly Paradises of pleasure. They confesse that there is a Deuill, which they call, Musica, and that he doth much harme to men. Euery new Moone is a Festiuall day: they say the Sunne when he can, goeth to sleepe. They neither write nor reade, nor haue bookes, but all their historie is Tradition. They hold that Monkees in times past were men and women, and call them in their language, The old people.

The Quitene hath two or three hundred men for his Guard, which are his Officers and Executioners, called Inficis, and goe crying, Inbama, Inbama, that is, Flesh, Flesh. Hee hath another sort, called Marombes, Iesters, which haue their Songs and Prose in praise of the King, whom they call, Lord of the Sunne and Moone, King of the Land and of Rivers, Conqueror of his Enemies, in euery thing Great, great Theefe, great Witch, great Lion; and all other names of greatnesse which they can inuent, whether they signifie good or bad, they attribute to him. When the King goeth out of doores, these Marombes goe round about him with great cries of this argument. Hee hath others which are Mulicians in his Hall, and at the Court gates, with diuers Instruments resounding his praises. Their best Muscical Instrument is called Ambira, much like to our Organs, made of Pompions, some bigge, some slender, for difference of sounds, with a mouth in the side nigh the bottome, which hath a hole bigger then a shilling, with a glasse in the bottome, made of certaine Copwebs slender and strong. On the mouthes (which are equall, set in a rew) is a rew of keyes of wood, slender, sustained with cords, on the tops whereof they play with stickes like drum stickes, which haue buttons or balls as big as a nut in the points, which mouing the Keyes, make a sweet sound, which may be heard as farre as Virginals. Another Instrument they haue, called also Ambira, all of Iron wedges, flat and narrow, a span long, tempered in the fire to differing sounds. They are but nine set in a rew, with the ends in a piece of wood as in the necke if a viole, and hollow, on which they play with their thumbe nailes, which they weare long therefore, as lightly as men with vs on the Virginals, and is better Musicke then the former. They haue Cornets of a wilde beasts horne, called Paraparas, ha- uing a terrible sound, and Drummes diuersified in sounds. When the Quitene sends Embas- sadours, hee sends these three sorts of men, crying, playing, dancing; which receiue, or else take their prouision by force.

Oathes dread- full and terri- ble. See before in A. Battell, l. 7. c. 3. of the like in Loango, &c.

They vse three kinds of Oathes in Iudgement most terrible, in accusations wanting iust eui- dence. The first is called, Lucasse, which is a vessell full of poison, which they giue the suspe- cted, with words importing his destruction, and present death if he be guilty; his escape, if in- nocent: the terrour whereof makes the conscious confesse the crime: but the innocent drinke it confidently without harme, and thereby are acquitted of the crime; and the plaintiffe is con- demned to him whom he falsly had accused; his wife, children, and goods being forfeited, one moitie to the King, and the other to the defendant. The second Oath they call, Xoqua, which is made by iron heated red hot in the fire, causing the accused to lick it being so hot with his tongue, saying, that the fire shall not hurt him if hee bee innocent; otherwise it shall burne his tongue and his mouth. This is more common, and is vsed by the Cafres and the *Moore*s in those parts; yea, (which worse is) some Christians giue the same Oath to their slaues suspected of stealth; which one in Sofala caused, on suspicion of a stolen garment, a slaue to doe three times without hurt. The third Oath they call, Calano, which is a vessell of water made bitter with certaine herbs, which they put into it, whereof they giue the accused to drinke, saying, that if he be in- nocent, he shall drinke it all off at one gulp without any stay, and cast it all vp againe at once without any harme: if guilty, he shall not be able to get downe one drop without gargling and choaking. There haue beene seene many experiments of all these, the guilty suffering death by the poison, or burning, &c. the innocent freed; hauing some resemblance by Deuillish apish imitation to the cursed water of ieaousie mentioned in Moses. Once, they are notorious and well knowne in Sofala.

Haire-fashion in hornes.

The Cafres are blacke as Pitch, curled, and weare their head full of hornes made of the same haire, which stand vp like a Distaffe, wearing slender pieces of wood within their lockes to vp- hold them without bending: without, they tye them with a ribband made of the barke of an herbe, which whiles it is fresh sticketh like glue, and dried is like a sticke: with this they binde their haire in bundles from the bottome to the top; of each bundle making a horne, holding herein great pride and gallantrie; straining to excell each others; and mocking them which want them, saying, they are like women. For, as the male wilde beasts haue hornes which the females want; so doe these sauage beasts also.

Occupations.

The Quitene hath herein a fashion which none may imitate, of foure hornes, one of a spanne long on the mould of the head, like an Vnicorne, and three of halfe a spanne, one on the necke, at each eare another, all vpright to the top. For their hornes sakes they haue no hats, nor head- coverings amongst them. The apparell of the King and chiefe men is fine Cotton, or Silke, girt to them, and hanging almost to the knees, and another greater, called Machiras, which the Cafres weaue, cast ouer the shoulders like a Cloke, wherewith they goe muffled, letting it hang on the left hand to the ground, esteeming great Grauitie and Maiestie in a long traine. The rest of the bodie is naked; they goe all bare-foot: and the vulgar goe naked both men and women without shame; the better sort of them wearing a Monkees skinn, hanging downe from the girdle like a Smiths Apron; and the women likewise. But the Cafres which trade with the Portugals weare a couering to the knees. They haue no Occupations but Smiths, which make A- zagays, Spades, Hatchets, Halfe-swords: Weauers which make Cotton clothes for Machiras. The women make them, but improperly, their office being ordinarily to digge, and weed, and sowe, men more louing their lubberly ease, few helping their wiues: a Spade being as vsuall with their women, as a Rocke with our Spinsters; the men now and then hunting for wilde beasts, other whiles dancing and singing, and therefore poore.

The Tartars do the like: and the Scots also, as I haue heard, in the furthest North of this Iland.

* As Bacon & Martinmas Beefe in Eng- land. Houses of Cafres, household, and food.

The Quitene makes some Royall huntings, with three or foure thousand men, in the Desarts neere the Citie; encircling all the beasts in that compasse, Tigres, Lions, Ounces, Elephants, Buffals, Deere, wilde Swine, and the rest, driuing them together, and then setting on their Dogs, with cries, Arrowes, and Azagayes, pursue and kill what they can. Then may they kill the Lion, which at other times by the Quitenes prohibition is a deadly offence, because hee is entituled, great Lion. After this they eat in the same place with great iollitie; but the most they carrie home, and * hang it for the King, and for themselves.

Their houses are round, of vnheuwne timber couered with straw, like a thatched Countrey house, which they remoue at pleasure. Their goods is a Panne in which they boyle their Wheat, two Spades to digge, one Bowe and Arrowes, a Mat whereon they lie, which they make of Rushes, and commonly they sleepe on the ground: if it be cold, they make a fire in the midst of the house, lying all about it like Cats. So beggarly and brutish is the life (if that be life) of the Cafres. Their food is commonly Mais, Pulse, Fruits, Sugar-canes, Fish, and all kinds of Beasts which they kill in the Desarts, as Monkees, Dogs, Cats, Rats, Snakes, Lizards, Croco- diles, diles, all flesh; Rice they sowe rather to sell the Portugals then to eat, preferring their Mais. They steepe two dayes in water a pecke or thereabouts, which in that space growes forth: and then the water being put out, they let it drie two or three houres, and being well dried they stampe it till it settle into a masse: which they doe in a great Morter as high as a mans middle, called Cani, by them, by the Portugals, Pilano. After this they set a great earthen vessell on the fire halfe full of water, whereon when it seeths, they put in aboue halfe the pecke of Mais-meale by little and little, still stirring it, as when men make pottage: and after it seeths a little, they take the vessell off the fire, and put in the rest of the said masse, stirring them together till their Pombe be made; which is let stand two dayes, and then they drinke it, many of them neither eating nor drinking ought else, but liuing onely hereof. If it stand foure or five dayes it becomes Vinegar; and the sower, the more tiplie; they say that it makes them strong.

how made

In some places grow certaine Reeds, which euery second or third yeere haue great eares like Rie, of which they gather store, and is good sustenance.

In all Casraria there growes a certaine herbe which they sowe, called Bangue, the straw and leaues whereof they cut, and being well dried, stampe them to powder. And hereof they eate a handfull, and then drinke water, and so sustaine themselues many dayes; and if they eate much, it makes them drunken, like to Wine.

All these Casres before they goe about any businesse of import, as iourneying, merchandise, or sowing, they cast lots to diuine of the successe; a thing vsed likewise to enquire of things stolne or lost, and in all doubtfull cases, and thereto giue credit as we doe to the Gospell. These lots are little round stickes, flat, and bored thorow the midst, lesse then Table-men, called Charatas, alway carried about them, filed on a string, to vse vpon any occasion of doubt, casting them like Dice so many times. For want of them, they diuine by strokes or lines which they draw on the ground. Some are great Witches, and consult with the Deuill; so prone to it, that they are prohibited by the King, that none should vse this witch-craft without his licence, in paine of death, and confiscation of wife, children, and goods, halfe to the King, and halfe to the Informer: and yet many are such secretly, and all would be if they could. The same penaltie is to theeues and to adulterers: it being lawfull for any man to slay any of these three sorts taken in the fact: or if any list not to kill him which by witch-craft, adulterie, or robbetrie hath wronged him, he may sell him, or doe with him what he pleaseth as his owne chattels, and they call the condemned, such a mans Witch, Theefe, or Adulterer. The losse of goods to the King is common for any fault amongst them.

Lots and diuinations.

Witches.

Punishments.

The Casres buy of the parents their wiues, for Kine, Clothes, or otherwise according to their abilitie. And therefore they which haue many daughters are rich. If any mislike his wife, hee may returne her to him that sold her, but with losse of the price payde; and the parent may sell her againe to another husband. The wife hath no libertie to forsake her husband. The ceremonies of marriage are dances, and feasting of the neighbours; euery inuited guest bringing his present of Meale, Mais, Inhames, Fitches, or other victuall for that dayes expenses. Hee which is able, may haue two wiues, but few are able to maintayne them, except the great men which haue many, but one is principall, the rest as hand-maids. Some of them liuelike wilde beasts, and when they are neere time of trauell, they goe to the wildernesse or vntilled places, and there goe vp and downe receiuing the sauour of that wilde place, which causeth to them quicker deliury. They after their deliury wash themselues and their children in a Lake or Riuer, and then returne to their houses with them in their armes without swadling them. Neither haue they there wherewithall to doe it, or such custome: nor haue any Bed to lie on, but a Mat, or locke of straw.

Marriages.

Brutish trauell.

When any of them die, the kindred, friends, and neighbours assemble, and bewaile him all that day in which he dieth, and the same day lay him on a Mat, or Seat where hee died; and if he had any cloth or garment, bury him therein, otherwise, naked. They make a hole in the Desert (or wilde vntilled place) and set by him a vessell of water and a little Mais, to eate and drinke (they say) in his iourney to the other life; and without more ceremonies couer him with earth, and lay on the hole the Mat, or the Chaire in which he was brought to buriall, where they consume without any more respect, although they be new. For they hold it ominous to touch that Mat or Seat in which one died, as boding death or some ill. The kindred and friends lament him eight dayes from morning to noone, and an houre at Sunne-set: which mourning they performe with dances and drerie songs, and speeches, all together on foot in a round circle; and now and then one of the standers by enters into the middle of the circle, and makes a turne or two, and then takes his place againe: and after the mourning finished, they all sit in a round and eate and drinke for the soule of the deceased whom they mourne for, and then returne home.

Lamentations.

The next kindred are at this cost. These Casars are cruell and inhumane to one another. If any of them bee sicke, and haue no wife, kindred, or friends to looke to him, no other Casar will giue him any thing, but let him starue; and die forlorne without taking on him any compassion, although he see him readie to perish with hunger; of which sicknesse most of them die, through miserable pouertie and im-prouident and prodigality. And when they doe the most, some friend takes the forlorne man, carries him to the wilde vncultiuated place, and layes him at some bush, or at the foot of a tree, with a little Vessell of water to drinke and a little Mais to eat if he can; and so leaues him till he dyes without more care of him: And although some Casfar passe by, and see him groane or lament, yet will hee giue him no helpe. And this brutishnesse is so naturall to them, that some, when they feeble themselues deadly sicke, take order to bee so carryed to the Wildernesse, and laid at the foote of a Bush, and their dye like beasts.

White Cafres.

In Mocaranga some Parents as blacke as Pitch, haue white Goldi-locked children like Flemmings. Whiles I was in the Countrey, the Quitene nourished one white childe in the Court, as a strange Prodigie. The Manamotapa kept two other white Cafres with like admiration. The Cafres say such are the Children of the Deuill, begotten of blacke women by him when they are asleepe. I saw at Goa a white Casfar Wench in Dom. Hieronimo Continho his House, giuen him by the Vice-Roy Dom. Francisco da Gama, and after (he returning Captayne Maio of the ships) at Saint Helena: and although both her Parents were Negroes, shee was so white that her Eye-lids were also of that colour.

In the Riuer Inhaguea betwixt Sofala and Luabo, a Negro of sixtie yeares brought forth and suckled a Child. Many Cafres haue two or three children at a Birth. One Peter a Christan Casfar at Sofala, his Wife dying after trauell of a Daughter, nourished the same with Milke of his owne breasts a whole yeare, at the end whereof it dyed of Wormes, and then the Milke dried vp in his breasts. He told mee, that pitie of the Motherlesse crying Infant, which his pouertie could not otherwise releue, caused him to seeke to still it with laying it to his brest, and then gaue it somewhat to drinke, which hauing continued two or three dayes his brest began to yeeld Milke. Persons of credit in India told me the like of a poore Jew of Ormuz, which nourished his Sonne with his breasts, the Mother dying when it was young, in the Castle. A Casfar in the Riuer Quilimane had breasts great, and bearing out like a woman which giues suck, but had no Milke therein. Aft r my returne to Portugall, I heard by eye-witnesses of a poore man in Moura, which being sixtie yeares old, had as much Milke as a woman Nurse, and gaue sucke to two children.

Barrets inuasio.

King Sebastian sent Francis Barret, with title of Gouernour and Captayne Generall of a great Armada, to goe to Sofala, to conquer the Golden Mines in the Kingdome of Mocaranga, and particularly those of Manica. In the Conquest whereof he made great Warres with the Quitene; who reigneth ouer the Countrey in the way from Sofala to Manica, the Mines beeing in the Neighbour Kingdome of Chicanga. In these passages by Land or Riuer, the Quitene opposed himselfe with many Battels; who notwithstanding pierced the Countrey to Zimbaobe, and made the Quitene flie to the Mountaynes, with his women and people. Hee fired the Citie and passed two dayes further without opposition. Then the Chicanga sent him prouision (whereof he had great want) intimating his ioy to see him in his Kingdome; which hee requited with a Present, and came to his Citie, where he was kindly entertayned, a peace concluded with grant of free Merchandising. The Portugals had conceited themselues of so much Gold, that they thought they might fill sackes, and take as much as they listed; but when they saw the trouble, difficultie, and danger of life which the Cafres sustayned to get it forth of the earth and stones, their minds were altered. They get it three wayes, one by making Mines (which sometime fall on them) and following the veines which they know, take thence the Earth; washing the same in bolls. Another, after Raines, searching the Brookes of the fields and hills where they find pieces of Gold: the third, out of certayne stones in particular Mines, which haue veines of Gold, which they breake into poulder, and wash the same in bolls, where the rest runneth away with the water, the Gold remayning in the bottome. This third they call Matuca, and is the basest, the other Dababo.

Strange Em-
bassage.

Barret at his returne thought of reuenge vpon the Quitene, which he preuented with courtesies and presents: and agreement was made betwixt them, that the Captayne of Sofala should yearly giue the Quitene two hundred Clothes for free and secure passage thorow his Countrey to Chicanga, which are worth at Sofala more then one hundred Cruzados, and amongst the Cafres, aboue one hundred thousand Reys. For this tribute which they call Curua, the Quitene sends foure Embassadors yearly, called Mutumes; one of which represents his Person, and he alone is holden in like respect and reuerence in that Iourney; the second is called the Kings Mouth, whose Office is to deliuer the Kings Message; the third they call the Kings Eye, who is appointed Ouer-seer of all hee sees done, to relate the same to him at their returne; the fourth is called the Kings Eare, and is to heare all that is spoken on both parts. They are all Lords, and sometimes the Kings Sonnes, he especially which represents his person; and are presented by the Cafres in the way; and bring aboue one hundred others with them in company to carrie the Curua and their Gifts. When they are neere Sofala, the Captayne sends principall Moors to conduct them to the Castle. Before them goe Labourers, and Dancers in great brauery, their heads adorned with plumes of Cockes tayles: next follow Cafres, in a ranke or file, and after them the Mutumes in their order, he being last which represents the Quitenes person, and with him him the Xequ or Principall Moore. The Captayne entertaynes them in the Hall, accompanied with all the Portugals in the Towne, and after lodgeth them in the *Moore*s houses, and furnisheth them with prouision seuen or eight dayes. The Captayne sometimes dischargeth the Ordnance of the Castle to honour them; but they desired the Quitene, being afraid of that Thunder, to send to the Portugalls to hide their Inbuites or Gunnes, when they came to demand the Curua; which he did accordingly. The Cafres pay their Tribute to the Quitene, in euery Village or Towne making one great heape of Mais for the King; and euery Inhabitant being further bound to labour in the Kings Workes certayne dayes of the yeare, in digging, sowing, &c. The Merchants pay besides three of twentie of their Merchandise. The Portugals which trade to Manica pay one cloth of twentie, and so of other wares.

The *Moore*s of Sofala haue customes no lesse barbarous. If one of them marrie, he seekes out another lustie Moore which may carrie him on his backe on the Marriage day from his owne house to the Brides, albeit it bee halfe a league off, without resting by the way: for if hee rests, that day is held vnluckie, and hee must seeke a stronger to performe it without resting on another day, or else the Marriage is marred and broken off. They are also very poore, yet will haue a fine cloth to be buried in; which buriall is like that before of the Cafres, in the wild vntilled fields or woods; and in the Graue they set Rice, Mais, and Water. Vpon the Graue they set two stones one at the head, the other at the feet, which they anoynt with Sanders ground and smelling: the kindred after continuing to anoynt the stones and set Rice on the Graue. The Christians there were as scrupulous of the Mats or Chaires of their slaues deceased: but I bestowed them on the fire or water, and they besought me of Charitie to forbear, lest some euils should befall them from the dead. Both *Moore*s, Cafres, and Christians of Sofala are much addicted to Dreames, and giue much credit to them, notwithstanding they often find them false, and are otherwise very superstitious.

Moore of Sofala their customes.

In the Riuer of Sofala, foure leagues from the Fort is the Iland Maroupe, eight leagues long and a league and halfe broad. The Quitene gaue the better part of it to Roderigo Lobo, and also the title of his Wife, a fashion of courtesie by him vsed to the Portugals, which he loues, intimating his respect no lesse to them then to his Wife, and the Cafres do much honour to those whom hee honoureth with that Title. That Iland hath excellent game for fishing and hunting of diuers beasts which they take diuers wayes; by digging pits three yards long, halfe that breadth at the top and straighter at the bottome of a mans height in deepnesse couered with stickes, and on them boughes or straw: another way is with multitudes to encompassse a place like a halfe Moone; and then put in Dogges which by barking scarre the beasts to the Riuer, where they are prouided with Boats and Assagayes for that purpose: a third way is when the Riuer overfloweth, and all the beasts betake them to some higher places of the Iland, where they are easily assailed with Arrowes and Assagayes in Boats. And there stand Elephants, Lions, Tygres, Eunuches, Deere, wild Kine, Swine, and other wild beasts together, without hurting one another, as they did in Noahs Arke, all awed with the feare of the waters. It hapned that the said Lobo once with other beasts killed a Lion, which might haue endangered him the losse of the Ile, and of his life, had hee beene a Cafre; neither dare or will the Cafres bee silent. Whereupon hee sent the Quitene a Present of twentie Clothes and the Lion, saying, that he the Kings Wife was sowing for his Husband, and that Lion came and assayed him, whereupon hee stricke him with the end of his Spade for his Husbonds honor, and hath now sent him dead to take reuenge on him for the discourtesie done to his Wife. His Presents and present wit excused him. The Cafres most of them haue bad and broken teeth, which (they say) comes by the wet and fennie soile, and of eating parched Pulse hote. Most of them also haue Ruptures, some so much that thereby they cannot goe.

An honorable title to be called the Kings Wife.

Riuer of Sofala

§. III.

Of the Riuer Cuama, and the adiacent Countrey; the Beasts, Fowles, Fishes of those parts: the Hills of Lupata; of the Mongas, Rufumba, Sena, Tete, Massapa, and of the Kingdome of Manamotapa; Also of Ophir, and of the Golden Mines of Fura.

The Riuer Cuama is by them called Zambeze; the head whereof is so farre within Land that none of them know it, but by tradition of their Progenitors say it comes from a Lake in the midst of the Continent, which yeelds also other great Riuer, diuers wayes visiting the Sea. They call it Zambeze, of a Nation of Cafres dwelling neere that Lake, which are so called. It hath a strong current, and is in diuers places more then a league broad.

Cuama or Zambeze a great riuer described.

Twen-

- Twentie leagues before it enters the Sea, it diuides it selfe into two armes, each Daughter as great as the Mother, which thirtie leagues distant pay their Tribute to the Father of waters. The principall of them is called Luabo, which also diuides it selfe into two branches, one called Old Luabo, the other Old Cuama. The other lesse principall Arme is named Quilimane, (the River Des Bons Sinaes by Vasco di Gama, when hee discouered India) for the good newes which there he receiued of Mosambique, and therefore he there set vp a stone Pillar with a Crosse, and the Armes of Portugall, and named the Countrey Terra de sancta Raphael. This River hath also another great arme issuing from it, called the River of Linde: so that Zambeze enters the Sea with five mouthes or Armes very great.
- Luabo* is sailed all the yeere long, but Quilimane only in the Winter. They saile vp this River 10
- Sacumbe Falls.* West North-west about two hundred leagues, to the Kingdome of Sacumbe, where it makes a great Fall from Rockes, beyond which they goe vp the River twentie leagues to the Kingdome of Chiconia, in which are Mines of Siluer, which cannot be sailed by reason of the strong current: but from Chinoca vpwards it is Nauigable, but how farre they know not. Luabo hath its name of an Iland so called in the Barre thereof in nineteene degrees, which Iland diuides old Luabo on the South from Old Cuama, on the North; and in the East each salutes the other by entercourse of a streame five leagues long, which is the length and breadth of the Iland, peopled with Moors and Cafres. The Pangayos or great Barkes of Mosambique here discharge, being too great to passe higher, and carrie their goods in a Fleet of small Boates to the Fort of Sena, which is sixty leagues. The Land on the North-side is called Bororo, on the South Botonga. In the midst of 20
- Chingoma.* the River are many Ilands, some very great; the biggest and best is called Chingoma; at the end whereof Zambeze diuides it selfe into Luabo and Quilimane.
- The second Ile of Note is Inhangoma, neere the Fort of Sena, tenne leagues long, and in some places a league and a halfe broad. The Portugals saile here by day, and fasten themselves to the Ilands by nights, by reason of the Currents and Shallowes. The Cafres inhabiting by the way, come with their Boats and sell them victuals, whereof the ouerflowing of the River makes the Countrey plentifull. In March and Aprill the fields are ouer-flowne and other Rivers filled from hence; and yet haue they there in those Moneths no raines, nor melting of any Snowes, whereby it appeares that those Inundations come from farre Countries. In this time the Countrey is sickly, and many Cafres dye of Diseases, then bred by the grosse Ayres, caused by the 30 - waters.
- In these Rivers are many Zouo or Zoo, so they call the River-horses, greater then two of our Horses together, with thick and short hinder-legs, hauing five clawes on each fore-foot, and foure on the hinder-foot; the footing large as it were of an Elephant; the mouth wide and full of teeth, foure of which are remarkable, each about two palmes (or spans) long, the two lower straight vp, and those about turned like a Bores tusks, all foure being about a great spanne eminent from the mouth. The head is as big as of three Oxen. I saw a Skull of one of them at a Cafres doore so great that he made his Sonne (a Boy of seuen or eight yeares of age) to sit downe in the mouth vpon the nether jaw, closing the jawes together. They liue commonly in the waters, but feed on the Land on grasse and boughes, and doe much hurt to sowed fields of Mais and Rice, both with feed- 40
- ing and treading. They are like to our Horses only in face, eyes, eares, and after a sort in neighing. They are ialous, and two Males goe not together; if two meete, they fight and sometimes kill each other: A droue or company of the Females haue but one Male, as a Cocke amongst Hens, the lesse fleeing from the greater: and when the Female hath a Male Colt, she keeps alone with her yongling, lest the Sire should kill it. They bring forth their yong on Land, and hauing licked them well, returne to the River, and there nourish them with Milke of their teats like our Mares. Their Hides are much thicker then an Oxe-hide, all of one colour, ash-coloured gray, most of them with a white strake on the face all quite downe, and a starre in the fore-head, haire rough; mane little and short. They are much subiect to the falling sicknesse, in which they beate their breasts with their left fore-feet very strongly bending the same back, and falling there- 50
- on, and in that fit are often seene and sometimes slaine by the Cafres. They are very bold in the water, and very fearefull by Land, as I haue seene by experience. The Cafres take them in pits which they digge and couer with boughes and grasse, betwixt the River and the Corne-fields, where being false they are easily killed: likewise they lay in their Corne grounds, halfe couered with earth, thicke boards of a yard long full of sharpe Harping Irons; whereon the Horse treading cannot free his foot, nor goe away, nor breake the boards, and so are exposed to slaughter. They also strike them in their Boats with Harping Irons fastned to the Boate by a Cord, which he drawes after him, and after with Assagays and Arrowes, being tyred, they dispatch him, and share this their Venison amongst the Hunters. In my Iourney vp the River Luabo, to Sena, I saw ten or twelue Boats in this Horse-chase. The Cafres report that a Lion pursued a 60
- Deere to the River, where he without, and a Crocodile in the water, leaped on her, as two Champions of the two Elements, in so equall force that neither preuayled, and at last many Cafres came, and with noyse parted the Fray first, and then the prey.
- Alongst the Bankes runne many wilde Beasts, Lions, Tygres, Ounces, Rhinocerotes, Elephants,

- phants, Buffals very fierce, wilde Kine (like to our tame) wilde Horses, in Mane and Neighing like ours, of cleere Chesnut colour, somewhat dunne, they haue smoothe streight hornes like a Deare without snags, and clouen hooves like an Oxe. The Casres call it Empophos. They haue wilde Asses of Russetish colour, with hornes and clouen feete, which they call Merus, the flesh as good as of Kine. They haue great varietie of Wormes, and many Zebras made like Mules, and like them holding their heads toward their fore-legs when they runne, clouen footed, with strakes ouer all their body of white and blacke two fingers broad, the haire soft and smoothe. They haue many Nondos which are like Galician Hobbies, of darke Chesnut colour, the haire soft and short, the backe as if it were broken, the hinder legs shorter then the former. They haue
- 10 Deeres, Hares, many Ciuet Cats; great Apes and Monkeys; the female Monkeys haue their monethly purgation like Women. There is a kind of Dogs, called Impumpes, which goe a companie of them together to seeke their prey, swift Runners, and sure Biters, a middle kinde of Curre which barke not, red on the backe and white belied, running away from men. They bite on the Legs and Rumpes, plucking out each morsell, till with weaknesse and wearinesse the prey be their owne. They haue a kinde of Worme, called Inhazaras, as great as Hogs and fashioned somewhat like, with thin and blacke haire, five fingers like the fingers of a man on each hinder foot, and foure on the fore-foot, and long nailes thereon. They liue in holes vnder the ground like Conie-berries, with two or three entrances. They liue vpon Ants, putting their tongues (two spans and a halfe long, like a wax candle) into the Ant-holes (which they scrape
- 20 with their clawes) whereon the Ants running they pull it in, and so feed and fill themselves. One of our Slaues killed one of them and brought it home; opened it and found no dung in the belly but winde, and some haue thought that they liued onely on Aire, and they are often found gaping against the winde. The flesh of them is good to eate, tastes like Porke, especially the inwards; but without fat. The snout is very long and slender, long eares like a Mule, without haire, the taile thick and strait of a spanne long, fashioned at the end like a Distaffe. They haue great Lizards, of which I haue seene one dead a yard and a halfe long, as bigge as a mans thigh: they haue great and sharpe teeth, a blacke tongue, harped in the end. They bite venomously, but their poyson is not deadly. There are Snakes of eightene or twentie spannes, as bigge as a mans legge; they kill Sheepe, Goats, Swine, Hens, and are very poysonfull. In the Kingdome of
- 30 Biri neere Manica, are small Snakes, called Ruca Inhanga, so poysonfull that Trees or Herbs which they bite, wither: and if they bite a quick thing, it swels like a Bottle, and in foure and twentie houres, the haire, hooves, hornes and teeth fall away and it dyeth, except counter-poyson bee applyed. Of these Snakes that King Biri makes a confection to poyson Arrowes, which drawing bloud cause the effects aforesaid: no Subiect is permitted to vie the same. A certayne Casre bitten by one of these Snakes, got it in his hands, and bit it againe so angerly, that they both dyed the same day. Their Lions are dreadfull, of a darke gray or durtie ash-colour, not spotted. The Ounce is spotted, bigger then a Gray-hound and longer, made much like our Cats, and prey on Cats, and Dogs, and Cattell, which they therefore shut vp euery night. There are innumerable Wormes like Beetles, whose tailes shine in the night like burning coales, and
- 40 are so many that they enlighten all the ayre. There are Rats whose biting is venomous, and their smell very sweet of Muske. Great Bats they haue as bigge as Pigeons, which the Casres kill, flay, and eate as sauourly as Hens. They haue in the wilde fields blacke Tortoises, as bigge as Bucklers, fleshy and fat, which they boyle and rost for dainties. They haue many Zangaons, Flies of a strange mixture. They make a Ball of Clay, which they fasten on the Walls or Tiles made full of holes like a Bee-hiue; in each hole they put a little Worme, such as breed in holes, some white, some blacke, some Greene, or gray, of diuers kindes, whatsoeuer they finde; and then stop the mouth of the Ball or Hiue with new Clay. These inclosed Wormes beget Zangaons with legs and wings, which eate thorow the Clay, and flie out and breede, so that of diuers kindes there is made one kinde very wonderfull. They haue diuers kindes of Birds, some of faire Colours and Notes, brought vp in Cages; Doues, some with golden wings very faire;
- 50 Geese of three sorts, one greater then those of Portugal, blacke on the backe, and white on the belly, with a red Crest on the head, hard and sharpe like a horne; many Cranes; Pelicans as bigge as Turkey-cocks, whitish, with feet very thick and short, liuing in the Riuer on Fish: Ravens as bigge as Peahens, and of that fashion, but the wings blackish, without feathers on the necke and head, couered there with a white ragged skin full of Dandrow; they frequent the Coast and Dung-hill for Carrion, and for mens dung. They haue one kinde of Fowles, called Curuanes, as bigge as Cranes, but more beautifull, the back like black Sattin, exceeding white on the belly and breast: the neck two spannes and a halfe long, couered with fine white feathers like silke, which are excellent for plumes: vpon the head it hath a Cap of blacke feathers, very faire (as our gold Finches haue red) and in the midst thereof a crest or plume almost a span long,
- 60 of white, fine, strait feathers, equall on the top, and there spreading themselves into a round forme, like a very white Mushroom with a white stalke, and resembling a Sombrero de Sol (or Indian Canopee to keepe off the Sunne.) The Casars call this the King of Birds, because their Kings haue such a Sombreiro, and for the greatnesse and beautie of them.

- A Portugall in Sofala told mee, that going to traffique for iuorie in the firme land of Mam-bone, ouer against the Iles of Boçicas, hee had a Monkie in a chaine fastened to a Blocke or Clog (which weighed ten or twelue pounds) who one day being abroad, there came a bird of prey of a huge bignesse, and seising on him with his talons, carried him away together with his Clog, and not very farre off did eate him, the Chaine and Clog being after found. In those parts, hee said, are many of them which doe much hurt, carrying away Kids, and Pigs, and Hens. There is a kind of birds like Canarie birds, but with long tailes, which liue on wax, and search in the wild vntilled places for Bee-hiues, whereof there are many in holes in the ground, and in hollow trees, and finding any, they goe to the waies to shew it to some people which passe by (which they doe by going before them crying and beating their wings from bough to bough, till they finde the Hiue or Bee-hole) and the people knowing their fashion follow them, where the one shares the Honie, the other the Wax, and the dead Bees therein. They call these birds Sazu. I haue seene them often enter into our Church to eate the Wax, where the boyes haue caught some of them. There is another sort which liues on the fruit of their owne labours: for they with their hard bills pecke holes on the tops of trees, where the armes begin to spread, and therein put a stone of a fruit which they eate, which springs within, and glues it selfe like a new graffe of that Tree (so that there are many Trees of two kindes, by reason of this foster-plant of another leafe and fruit) and of the fruit thereof the Birds sustayne themselves: they are of the bignesse and fashion of Iack-dawes, but grayish. There is a Bird, called Minga, greene and yellow very faire, like in forme to Pigeons, which neuer tread on the ground, their feet being so short that they can scarce be discerned. They settle on Trees of the fruits whereof they liue; and when they will flie, they fall downe with their wings closed, which they open in the ayre: when they drinke they flie on the tops of the waters; and if they fall on the ground they cannot rise; they are fat and sauorie. There are said to be of those Cincoes there, which liue on Dew, like those in Mexico, of whose fine curious feathers they make pictures.
- In the Riuer of Sofala is store of Fish fat and sauorie, as Mulletts, Needles, Dolphins, &c. One strange fish in qualitie is common in those Riuers, which the Portugals call Tremedar, and the Cafres, Thinta, of such nature that no man can take it in his hand whiles it is alieue, for it filleteth the hand and arme with paine, as if euery ioynt would goe asunder; but being dead is as another fish, and much esteemed for good meate. The Naturals say, that the skin of this fish is vsed to forceries. It is medicinable against the Cholick, roasted and ground to powder and drunke in Wine. The biggest of them is two spannes and halfe long, the skin blackish, rough and thick.
- There is another fish bred in Lakes, called Macone, somewhat like a Lamprey with holes in the neck and in shape, spotted like a water Snake. In Summer when the Lakes are drie, he lyes a spanne deepe in the earth with his taile in his mouth, which he sucketh for his sustenance till the raynes come, aboue three moneths. In this manner he eates most of his taile, which growes againe as before, at the returne of the waters. The Cafres hunt them, digging the earth of the Lakes for them, and there finde them in this sort. I haue often eaten of them. The Lakes in Winter are so filled, and stored from the Riuer with one kinde, called Enxanos, that the Hogs feed themselves therewith. The Memune is of so strong a sent that none can endure it, but the Cafres; and they eate it, getting great store in the Winter, and smoke them for the whole yeeres prouision.
- Fiue leagues from Sofala are the Iles Boçicas towards the South, in which Sea are many Women fishes, which the people take with great hookes and lines, with chaines of Iron made for that purpose; and of the flesh thereof they hang, and smoke it as it were Bacon. The flesh is good and fat, of which we haue oft eaten, sodden with Cabbages and dressed with its owne sawce. From the belly to the neck it is very like a Woman; the Female nourisheth her young with her breasts which are like a Womans. From the belly downward it hath a thick and long taile with finnes like a Dolphin; the skin white on the belly, on the backe rougher then a Dolphins. It hath armes ending from the elbowes in finnes, and hath no hands. The face is plaine, round, deformed, bigger then a mans, without humane semblance, wide mouthed, thick hanging lips as a Hound, foure teeth hanging out almost a span, like the tuskes of a Beare (which are accounted very good for the Piles, and against fluxe of bloud) their Nostrils are like a Calfe. There are many Oysters which breede the Pearle, which they take with diuing, fastning a Cord to their middle, and holding stones in their hands (which when they are at the bottome they let goe) and fill a Basket, which is let downe from the Boat with a Cord, hauing a stone in it to make it sinke, which being full is drawne vp; and then to it againe. They are so vsed to it that they will continue halfe a quarter of an houre vnder the water.
- Ambargrife is said to grow in the bottome of the Sea, and with the mouing of the Sea to bee broken and rise to the top; wherefore after great Stormes and Tempests the Cafres goe seeking for it by the Shoares, and find many peeces which they sell to the Moores and Portugals. They haue three sorts of Ambar, one very white, called Ambar gris; the second gray, called Mexueyra; the third blacke as pitch, which is often found soft, of ill smell, which Whales and other Fishes eate. The Whales doe not breede it and vomit it, as some say, for peeces haue there beene found found of twentie pound. And 1596. a piece of excellent white Ambar was found neere to Brama, so great and high that set in the midst they could not see one another, which were on the opposite sides.

The Crocodile is five and twentie spans long, and thicker then a man; they are cowardly on Land, cruell in the water, greene with darke yellow spots, and gray, and blacke; they haue many reues of Teeth, no Tongue. The Cafres call them Goma. They lay many Egges in a hole in the Sand, which the Sunne hatcheth. The Cafres oft find their Egges. They first drowne and then eate their prey, wetting euery bit in water, which otherwise they cannot swallow. Their Liuers are Poyson: and the Quineu prohibits for this cause to kil any vnder paine of death. Some 10 Cafres say, that one Lobe of the Liuer is Poyson, and the other Counterpoyson. They lye Morning and Euening on the Sands, a little out of the water with their mouthes open against the Sunne to catch Flyes, who invited thither by the ill sent, sucke away the filth, which stickes on their eyes and nostrils, and deuoured for their labour at last betweene their teeth. The old ones haue mosse on their heads. The Cafres catch them with flesh bayted on a bigge piece of wood two spans long and strait, hidden in the flesh, and cast into the water, where the Crocodile deuoures both: the Casar seeing his line stirre, drawes him to the banke with his mouth open, not able by reason of the wood crossing his throat to shut his mouth, or byte asunder the Cord; the water entring into his mouth chokes him; which done, they draw him to Land and eate him.

* This stinke is a Muskie sent: see Iobson.

Gabriell Rebello in his Tract of the Maluccos, writes that there are some with foure eies, two in the Front, and two in the Throat. Miciriri a strange herbe.

20 They stinke * most abominably; insomuch, that I and some others passing the Riuer from Maroupe to Sofala, were faine to stop our Noses, the Casars laughing, and saying it was the ventositie or wind-breaking of the Crocodile which came from forth the waters, and yeelded such vn-sufferable stinke thorow all that part of the Riuer. Alongst the Riuer of Sofala growes a certayne herbe which they call Miciriri, wherewith the Cafres anoynt themselves when they go a fishing, by vertue whereof the Crocodiles cannot hurt them; it taking away from the teeth their power and dulling them as if they were of Waxe. And for prooffe before they vse it, they put some of it on their owne heads, and if it disables them to chew any thing, they account it good, and vse the iuyce, not daring otherwise to enter the Riuer for feare of Crocodiles.

30 Alongst the Riuer grow Cottons and Sugar-canes, which they sow for backe and belly. In the Countrey grow many medicinable Plants, especially on the Hills of Lupata, where grow wild Donradinha, or guilt Wood, wilde Aguila, very sweet, Cannafistola, and another Plant with which the Cafres purge themselves, another to stanch bloud, another to cure wounds very effectually, another to prouoke mirth and jollitie.

These hills of Lupata are mid-way from Sena, to Tete, which are sixtie leagues distant vp the Riuer, ninetie leagues from Sea, very high, craggie, of large extension, therefore by the Cafres called, The Backe-bone of the World. The Riuer Zambeze forceth their stonie heart to yeeld him passage; in some places as affrighted lifting themselves steepe vp right in the Ayre, in others with beetle ouer-hanging browes expressing their frowning indignation, as if they would fall vpon that pressing and piercing Enemy, which yet swiftly flyeth and lightly escapeth, euer continuing that breach in which it neuer continueth. Thus with menacing looks, they face & threaten the waters, and with strait gripes offer in vaine to stay their course; which hereby indangered, haste away euer to auoyde that which they euer haste to obtrayne; this mutuall strife causing a dangerous Current-combate, not so much to each other, as the Boates and Merchants which passe this way, often feeling the furie of both till they can feele neither; both men and goods confiscated to their furie.

40 These Hills trauerse the Kingdome of a King called Mongas, which hath this Riuer on the South, and reach to the Lands of Manamotapa. These Mongas are the most warlike Cafres, which confine on this Riuer, and haue often fought with the Portugals. In one battell they had an old Witch which came before them, and being betwixt both Campes, tooke certayne powders out of a Pompion rinde which shee had brought and threw them into the Ayre against the

Mongas

50 Portugals, but in the midst of her Sorceries she was flaine with a Falcon shot, which successe followed the other Cafres which trusted in her, and peace not long after was concluded on both parts.

Beneath these Hills is a goodly Lake called Rufumba, of three leagues circuit, with an Iland in the midst very high, in which is a great Tamarind or Date * tree, of the bignesse and fashion of a Pine; the leaues whereof open with the rising, and close with the going downe of the Sunne. In it is a Groue called Chipanga, accounted sacred, in which the Neighbour Cafres bury their dead, conceiuing that the soules departed enter into the Crocodiles (whereof there are great store) and therefore also often set them meate. There is in this Lake a Spring which swelleth out in five heads a yard distant from each other, of differing heate, and one vn-sufferable. The like is in a place about Tete, neere the Riuer called Empongo. A small Riuer neere Tete is of Salt water like the Sea, from which it is one hundred and twentie leagues distant. In Mocaranga are many such Salt Lakes and Riuers. In the great Riuer Mangania, is a Salt Spring two hundred leagues from Sea, which turnes also all the Wood throwne in, into hard stones.

Rufumba * Tamarinheiro.

Crocodile-Purgatory.

Strange Springs.

In Alenteio a Prouince of Portugall at Exuedall, is a spring which runs with store of water all Summer, mer, making a good streame which waters many Gardens, and drives many Mills from Aprill to September; and is dry in Winter; and with another greater wonder, the same water where it stands, turnes into stone like Pumice, which euer so continueth, and puts on a stonie Coate on euery piece of wood, which is throwne into the Spring-head or running streame, and makes it like a Cane of stone: as it doth also the grasse; and euery yeare they must cleere the passages from stone.

Sena.

Sena is a Fort of Lime and Stone, furnished with Artillery; the Captayne is placed by the Captayne of Mosambique. There were in my time eight hundred Christians, of which, fiftie Portugalls. Seuen or eight leagues from hence on the other side of the Riuer, is the high Hill Chiri, which may be seene twentie leagues off, the Hill and Valleys exceeding fertile. To this Factory of Sena, they come from Tete, to buy Merchandize with their Gold.

Tete.

Tete is a stone Fort sixtie leagues further vp the Riuer in the Kingdome of Inhabazgynder the Manamotapa, the Captayne is placed by the Captayne of Mosambique. In this place were in my time sixe hundred Christians, of them fortie Portugalls. These one hundred and twentie leagues the Portugalls goe vp the Riuer, and from thence goe by Land with their Merchandize. The Countrey is very fertile, and Portugall wares are here sold at great prizes. From Tete they goe with their wares thorow a great part of Manamotapa to three Marts, Massapa, Luanze, Manzono, in which the Inhabitants of Sena, and Tete haue houses and Factories, thence to store all the Countrey.

Massapa.

Massapa is the chiefe, where resides a Portugall Captayne, presented by the Portugalls, and confirmed by the Manamotapa, which calls him his Great Wife, a name of honour, as before is obserued. This Captayne holds jurisdiction ouer all the Cafres without Appeale, as also ouer the Portugalls in that Kingdome, granted by the Vice-Royes, as all other Captaynes of those parts haue. This Captayne of Massapa treats all businesse with the Manamotapa, whose Customer he is also, taking one cloth of twentie, in which respect the Countrey is free to them. But beyond Massapa, neerer the Manamotapa, one may goe without license from the King or the Captayne. The Captayne hath an Azagay of blacke Wood pointed with Gold, for his Ensigne or Rod of Authoritie. The Captayne of Mosambique payes at his entrance to the Manamotapa, three thousand Cruzados in goods for the three yeares of his Captayne-ship, for free Trade in his Countreyes, which they may trauell securely laden with Gold; it beeing neuer knowne that Theeues assaile them, or any without the Kings Anthoritie. He sends his Mutumes to Sena for his Curua, in the same manner and order that the Quiteue vseth at Sofala; but at Sena the Captayne deliueres it to a Portugall (whom he sends as Embassador to the Manamotapa, in the name of the Captayne of Mosambique) in the presence of the Mutumes.

The Kingdom of Manamotapa.

This Kingdome of Manamotapa, is scituate in Mocaranga, which in times past was wholly of the Manamotapan Empire, but now is diuided into foure Kingdomes, to wit, this of Manamotapa, that of Quiteue, the third of Sedanda, and the fourth of Checanga. This diuision was made by a Manamotapan Emperour, who not willing or not able to gouerne so remote Countreyes, sent his Sonne Quiteue to gouerne that part which runnes along the Riuer of Sofala, and Sedanda another Sonne, to that which Sabia washeth, a Riuer which visits the Sea before the Bogica; and Chicanga a third Sonne to the Lands of Manica. These three after their Fathers death would neuer acknowledge their Brother his Successor: and the same not without yeerely warring with each other, continues to their Posteritie. Yet is the Kingdome of the Manamotapa, bigger then the other three together. The Cafres call them all Mocarangas, because they speake the Mocaranga Tongue.

Manamotapa 200. leagues square.

This Kingdome of Manamotapa is aboue two hundred leagues long, and as much broad. On the North-west he confines with the Kingdome of Abutua (the King and Kingdome haue the same name) which they say, stretcheth thorow the Continent to the borders of Angola. I haue seene in Sofala a Commoditie bought by a Portugall in Manica, brought thither by the Cafres of Abutua, which had come from Portugall by the way of Angola. In this Kingdome of Abutua is much fine Gold, but the Naturals being farre from the Portugals, doe not much seeke after it, but rather to multiply their cattle of which they haue abundance. On the East Manamotapa confineth with the Riuer Zambeze, which the Manamotapans call Empando, which signifieth Rebelling against his King: for say they, were it not for the Riuer, the Manamotapa would bee Lord of the Countrey on the other-side, to which he cannot passe his Armie for want of Boats. On the South-west this Kingdome extendeth to the Ocean, into which it enters with a point of Land of ten or twelue leagues large, from the Riuer Luabo, to that of Tendanculo. The rest of the Lands Southwards to the Riuer Inhabane, and deuided betwixt the three Kings, which rebelled as is said: from Tendanculo to Sofala, the Quiteue reigneth: thence to the South is the Kingdome of Sabia, vnder the Sedanda, who is Lord also of Btonga to the Region Inhambane: within Land at the head of both these Kingdomes is Manica vnder the Chicanga, who is on the North-west, some hundreths of leagues remote from the Sea. On the North-side of Manica, is Abutua, and on the North-east is the Manamotapa, and to the South is a King called Biri. Those three Kings which rebelled are great, but the Quiteue is the greatest, and richest by Trade with the Portugals for Stuffles and Beades (which is the Cafres wealch) and his people are the strongest of the Mocarangas, and the best Archers, and most expert at the Azagay.

Trade from the Atlantike to the East Sea.

Manica, how bounded and rounded.

Neere

- Neere to Massapa is a great high Hill, called Fura, whence may bee discerned a great part of the Kingdome of Manamotapa: for which cause he will not suffer the Portugalls to goe thither, that they should not couet his great Countrey and hidden Mines. On the toppe of that Hill are yet standing pieces of old wals, and ancient ruines of lime and stone, which testifie that there haue beene strong buildings: a thing not seene in all Cafraria. For the Kings houses are of wood, daubed with clay, and couered with straw. The Natiues, and specially the *Moore*s haue a Tradition from their Ancestors, that those houses belonged to the Queene of Saba, which carryed much Gold thence downe the Cuama to the Sea, and so along the Coast of Ethiopia to the Red Sea. Others say that those Ruines were Salomons Factorie, and that this Fura or Afura is no other then Ophir, the name not much altered in so long time. This is certayne, that round about that hill, there is much and fine Gold. The Nauigation might in those times be longer, for want of so good ships and Pilots as now are to be had, and by reason of much time spent in trucking with the Cafars, wherein euen at this time the Merchants alway spend a yeare and more in that businesse, although the Cafars be growne more couetous of our Wares, and the Mines better knowne. They are so lazie to gather the Gold that they will not doe it till necessitie constrayne them. Much time is also spent in the Voyage by the Riuer, and by that Sea which hath differing Monsoons, and can be sayled but by two winds, which blow fixe moneths from the East, and as many from the West. Salomons fleet had besides those mentioned, this let, that the Red Sea is not safely Nauigable, but in the day, by reason of many Iles and shoalds; likewise it was necessary often to put to harbour for fresh water and other provisions, and to take in new Pilots and Mariners, and to make reparations: which considered (with their creeping by shoare for want of the *Compass*e and experience in those Seas, and their Sabbath rests, and their trucke with the Cafres) might extend the whole Voyage in going, staying, and returning, to three yeares. Further the Iuory, Apes, Gemmes, and precious woods (which grow in the wild places of Tebe, within Sofala) whence they make Almadias or Canoas twentie yards long of one Timber; and much fine blacke wood (Ebonie) growes in that Coast, and is thence carryed to India and Portugall: all these may make the matter probable. As for Peacocks ^b I saw none there, but there must needs bee some within Land; for I haue seene some Cafers weare their Plumes on their heads. And as there is store of fine Gold, so also is there fine silver in Chiconia where are rich Mines.
- 30 In all the Regions of Manamotapa, or the greatest part thereof, are many Mines of Gold; and particularly in Chiroro, where is the most and most fine. They gather it as is said before of Quiteue. It is paine of death for any Moore which discouers a Mine to take away any, besides his goods forfeited to the King. And if by chance any find a Mine, he is bound to cry out aloud, that some other Casar may come to testifie that he takes none: and both are then to couer the place with Earth, and set a great bough thereon, to giue warning to other Cafars to auoyde the place. For if they should come there, it would cost them their liues, although there be no prooffe that he tooke any thing. This feueritie is vsed to keep the Mines from the knowledge of the Portugals, lest couetous desire thereof might cause them to take away their Countrey. It is found inoulder like sand; in graines like beads; in pieces some smooth as they were melted, others branched with snags, others mixed so with Earth, that the Earth being well washed from them, they remaine like Honiecombes; those holes before full of red Earth, seeming as though they were also to be turned into Gold. As for that in stone, we haue already spoken.
- 40 In the Lands confining with Manamotapa, on the North-west is the Kingdome of Chiconia, famous for silver Mines. It runs alongst the Riuer Zambeze. After that Francis Barret was at Sofala to conquer the Mines of Manica, as before is said, he passed thence with his company to Cuama, to conquer the Mines of Chiconia, and beneath the hills of Lupata, conquered the Monagas; whereupon other Cafres fled into the Desarts and hid themselves. Thus partly by the Riuer, and partly by Land, he came to Chiconia, and set downe his Campe, and much desired to discouer some Mines. But no Casar durst shew him for feare of losing their Countrey, which now they had abandoned to them; neither could they take any whom they might constrain by force, or induce any by promises to that designe. Yet one cheating fellow hauing gotten two stones out of a Mine, buried them in another place, and came one Evening to the Gouernour to make shew of this Mine, to whom hauing made that shew, and receiued a Reward, with promise to returne the next Morning, hee left the Portugals in the lurch, and neuer came againe. Thus after much triumph, for false hope of a Mine, hee was forced to leaue the Countrey for want of Victuals, and returned downe the Riuer to Sena, leauing there Antonio Cardoso d' Almeida, and two hundred men with provisions, fortified in a Trench of wood to procure that Discouerie. The Cafres fained a peace with him (by Treacherie to betray him) and after a League confirmed pretending to discouer the Mine, brought them into an Ambush, where the most were slaine, the rest forced to their Fort, and there besieged and slaine euery Mothers Sonne. The Gouernour melted those two stones, and found them to hold three parts silver, and but one of drosse. They haue also Mines of Copper, and of very good Iron, of this making Instruments of Warre and Husbandry; of that Bracelets and Braueries for their armes and legs.

a This by reason their ships were small, as that intancie of Nauigation required: and besides they must carry the timber from one Sea to the other ouer land to build them: Neither were Hittims men expert in that Sea: and haply two Nations did not well agree to hasten the Voyage.

Silver Mines. Barrets Conquest.

I will adde out of Barrius, Dec. 1. 1. 10. this of the buildings above-said. There are in the Province Toroa (called also Butua) the oldest Mines in those parts. In the midst is a square stone Fort well wrought of great stones; the wall is five and twentie spannes large, the height not answerable. Over the Gate are seene strange Letters which some Learned Moores saw; but could not tell what Letters they were. And about the same building are some others somewhat like it. The Natives call them Simbaoni, that is, the Court: of which Palace all other the Kings Houses tooke name: within it is the Simbacaio, a great man which there keepes some of the Manamotapas women. The people are barbarous and know not who was the Author of those Buildings, saying, it was the worke of the Denill; for (iudging other men by themselves) they thinke them impossible to Men. The Moores said that our Fort of Sofala was no way comparable. It is from Sofala five hundred and ten miles, betwixt twentie and one and twentie degrees of South latitude. In all that Countrey is no such building, and it seemed to the Moores very ancient. We may coniecture (saith Barrius) that this is Ptolemeys Agyimba, as the names Simbaoni and Simbacaio, seeme to import, &c.

§. II. III.

Of the Manamotapa his customes and of his Vassals; and of the adioyning Kingdomes, (wherein other Authours haue erred) Of Mosambique, Quiloa, Mombaza, Melinde, Magadoxo: of the Mombos and Zimbascruelties. Of Quilimane, the Islands on the Coast; the Macuas, and other African Obseruations.

Although the Manamotapa be greater then those three mentioned, yet hath he not other Kings Vassals or Tributaries to him: only some of his subiects called Encosses or Fumos, are great Lords, and haue Tenants subiect to them. Botero therefore in his Relations, Gusman, and Oforius, were deceiued by false information, giuing to the Manamotapa, so large a Sea-coast with tributary Kings; which, I doubt, whether euer there was any such thing; at lest there is now no memory thereof. Philip Pigafetta * also from the Relations of Lopez, hath falsly described these Coasts and Kingdomes, and hath told a long Tale of Amazons in these parts, where neither are such, nor any memoriall of them. They tell also of the Royall Ensignes, a Spade of Gold with an Iuorie head to intimate his Husbandry; and two Arrowes, the notes of his Iustice; and that he alwayes is accompanied with Souldiers; but in all they deceiue and are deceiued. As for Bow and Arrowes, it is as ordinary with the Cafres as with the Portugalls, to weare a Sword in their Cities; none of them going out of doores without them. And in like manner when the Manamotapa goeth forth, hee carries in his hand his Bow and Arrowes, as likewise doe the Cafres which accompany him, as a custome and not as Warriours. Before him goeth a Cafre beating with his hand on a * great Cushion, to giue notice that the King is at hand. When the Manamotapa will not carry his Bow, an Officer called Mascorira (which is as a Page of the Chamber) carries it; and the King carrieth in his hand an Azagay, or Iauelin of blacke wood with the point of pure Gold, like the Iron head of a Lance, or three pieces of wood, called Fimbos, of two spannes and a halfe, wrought and slender. And when hee speakes with a Cafre, whom he will haue dye, he lets fall one of these Fimbos, and his Insiges (Executioners) take and kill him with an Azagay; and so dye condemned persons.

He hath many women, and the principall, which is most respected, called Mazarira, is his entire sister a great friend of the Portugals, to whom when they giue the King his Curna, they giue a Present of Clothes. No man speakes with the King or with this Wife, but hee brings a Present; the Portugals giue Beades, the Cafres Kine, or Goats, or Clothes: and when they are able to giue nothing else, they bring a Sacke of Earth to acknowledge subiection, or a bundle of straw to thatch the Kings Houses; for all the Houses in Casraria are thatched. The Manamotapa which now reignes, is called Mambo, and his subiects vse to sweare by his life, saying, Xè Mambo; and when they speake with him, they say Xè dico, as we, Please your Maiestie. The Kings Children are called Manambo. Hee hath giuen leaue to our Religious men in his Kingdomes, to conuert and to build Churches; of which they haue built three, to wit, at Massapa, Luanze, Bucutu, where liue many Portugals.

They speake the Mocaranga Tongue, the best Language of all the Cafres; and whereas the Moores of Africa and Arabia, draw their words out of the throat as if they would vomite; these pronounce their words with the end of the tongue and the lips, that they speake many words in a whistling accent, wherein they place great Elegance, as I haue heard the Courtiers of Quitene, and Manamotapa speake. Their stile of speaking is by Metaphors; and Similitudes very proper, and fitted to their purpose. The Manamotapa and his subiects, weare a white Periwinkle in the fore-head for a Jewell, fastned in the haire, and the King hath another great one on the brest.

* See sup. pag. 1022. in Lopez, the description of those Coasts after his forme. Let the Reader take this generall rule to beleeue our Authors in that which they saw; in other things receiued by Relations (as this of Lopez) to examine them with eye-witnesses, as here. For this cause, and sometime for want of eye-witnesses, we haue briefly inserted such Relations.

Their speech and phrase.

breſt. They call them Andoros, and they are odious to the Quitene, as a deuice of the Manamotapan diſtinction. None of them cut the haire of the head or beard; yet are there very few long beards, for their haire growes little, neither doth it turne white till they are very old. They liue commonly ninetie or an hundred yeares. They vſe Auguries and Diuinations by lots, and haue often conference with the Deuill, who after his wont, lyeth often, and yet holds his credit with them. They ſay that the Manamotapa hath a houſe, wherein are hanged condemned perſons, from whom the moiſture drops downe in a Veſſell, till they ceaſe dropping, and then they are buried. Herewith they ſay is made an Oyntment, which he vſeth againſt Witchcrafts and for long life. They haue many other Superſtitious. Dom. George Meneses, ſent to the Manamotapa a faire Grey-hound; which he much loued and kept about him, and when hee dyed, (as it were by Teſtament) he commanded that as ſoone as they ſaw his breath departed, they ſhould kill the Grey-hound, and a Coſſet Ramme which he had brought vp by hand, to doe him ſeruiſe in the other World: which was done accordingly, his Queene alſo drinking poyſon (after the cuſtome) for like purpoſe. The moſt of the Manamotapan cuſtomes are the ſame that are mentioned before of the Quitene, and therefore need no further Repetition.

About Tete are eleuen Townes of Cafres which haue each their Encoffe, or Cafar Captayne, all Vaffals, and ſubieſt to the Iuriſdiction of the Captayne of Tete. The Manamotapa hauing conquered thoſe parts, diſtributed to diuerſe diuers gouernments, and theſe to the Captayne of Tete and his Succeſſors, to whom they are ſubieſt as to their King, aſking his licence when they will ſow their grounds; the Encoffe coming accompanied with ſome of his Cafres, and a Preſent, when they petition him. Before Tete, on the otherſide of the Riuer within Land to the Eaſt and North-eaſt, are two kinds of Man-eating Cafres, the Mumbos and Zimbos or Muzimbos, who eat thoſe they take in warre, and their ſlaues alſo when they are paſt labour, and ſell it as Beeſe or Mutton. The Captayne of Tete with his eleuen Encoffes, and their Companies ſlue fixe hundred of the Mumbos in a Battell, not leauing one aliue, and carried away their Wiues and Children Captiues. This was at Chicoronga a Mumbos Towne, in which was a ſlaughterhouſe, where euery day they butchered their Captiues; neere which the Portugals found many Negroes, men and women, bound hand and foot, deſtined to the ſlaughter for the next dayes food, whom with many others they freed. They vndertooke this Expedition in behalfe of a friend of theirs, againſt whom theſe Mumbos led by their Captayne Quizura made warre. All the ground before Quizuras Gate was paved with mens Skulles, which he had killed in that war, vpon which they muſt paſſe which went in or out; a thing in his conceit of great Maieſtie. But now he loſt himſelfe and all his. Theſe Cafres about Tete are prone to warres, ſaying, If they dye their troubles are ended; if they liue, they ſhall enioy ſpoyles. Whiles I was there, the Captayne Pero Fernandez de Chaves, wanting Timber for a Church Doores and Porch, pretended warre, and ſummoned theſe eleuen Encoffes, which came willingly, but were diuerted to this Timber buſineſſe.

Tete Iuriſdiction.

Mumbos and Zimbos, Man-eaters. Quizura, whether theſe Zimbos bee not the Agimbo. Butcheries of mans fleſh.

Whiles I was at Sena, the Muzimbos warred on ſome of the Portugals friends, and did eat many of them, who beſought helpe of Andre de Santiago Captayne of Sena, who went and ſet vpon them in their Fort, which they had fortified round with a wall of Wood, with wings (reuezes) and port-holes, and a deepe wide ditch, inſomuch, that he was forced to ſend to Chaves for his beſt helpe, who came with aboue one hundred Portugals and Miſticos, and thoſe eleuen Encoffes. The Muzimbos by their Eſpials had Intelligence of their coming on the otherſide the Riuer without order, and therefore ſtole out of the Fort by night, and Embuſcaded themſelues, and ſet vpon the Portugals (which marched halfe a league before the Cafres) ſuddenly and furioſly; killed them euery one, and cut off their armes and legges, which with their armes they carried priuily to their Fortreſſe. The Cafres arriuing at the Wood, and ſeeing the ſlaughter returned home to Tete, and related the late Tragedie. Theſe Zimbos worſhip no God, nor Idol, but their King, who (they ſay) is God of the Earth: and if it raines when hee would not, they ſhoot their Arrowes at the Skie for not obeying him; and he only eates not mans fleſh. Theſe are tall, bigge, ſtrong; and haue for Armes, ſmall Hatchets, Arrowes, Azagades, great Bucklers, with which they couer their whole bodies of light wood, lined with wild beaſts ſkinnes. They eat thoſe which they kill in warred an drink, in their ſkulles. If any of their owne Cafres be ſicke or wounded, to ſaue labour of cure they kill and eat them.

Religion.

They feaſted with great iollitie that day of their Victory, and the night following; and the next morning early ſallied out of their Fortreſſe, the Captayne arrayed in a Dominicans, Cafula, or Maſſing Veſtment (Nicolas de Roſario, whom they had taken with the Portugals and carried with them, and put to a cruell death) with a gilt Chalice in his left hand, and an Azagay in his right; and all the other Zimbos with the quarters of the Portugals at their backes, and the Captaynes head on the point of a long Lance; and drumming on the Drumme which they had taken, they preſented themſelues with great cryes to Santiago, and the Portugals, and after this muſter returned to their Fort, ſaying, they muſt goe eat their Tete friends, Santiago and his Portugals (which ſtayed wayting for Chaves, and knew nothing) now terrified with this Spectacle, reſolued (if feare be capable of that word) to haſte away alſoone as night came, and paſſing ouer

the Riuer was perceiued by the Muzimbabes, who issued out vpon them with great force and slue many on the banke, and amongst others Santiago. Thus of Tete and Sena were one hundred and thirtie Portugals and Mistigos, with their two valiant Captaines slayne, with little losse on their part, comming on them with sudden aduantage: this was done An. 1592. Don Pedro de Sousa Captaine of Mozambique the next yeere, with two hundred Portugals, and fiftene hundred Cafres passed the Riuer Zambeze, pitched his Tents where Santiago had done, battered the walls of their Fort with his Artillery; but to no purpose, because they were of grosse wood, hauiug on the inside much earth of that which was taken out of the ditch. Whereupon he resolved to stop vp part of the ditch, which with much labour and perill, and some losse, he effected; some passed with hatchets to the foot of the trench, and began to cut; but the Zimbabes from the walls scalded them with hot water and Oyle, specially the naked Cafres, so that none durst approach againe, as well for scalding, as for long Iron hookes which they put out of the port-holes, wherewith they wounded the assaylants, and held them fast, pulling them to the holes, and killing them: so that they were forced to retire to their Tents. The next day hee caused rods to be gathered, and great baskets thereof to be made as high as their trenches, which were carried thither, and filled with earth, for the Souldiours to stand and fight vpon them, that the Zimbabes might not issue with their scalding liquors. Two moneths were spent in this warre, when some of the Inhabitants of that Riuer (which liked their liuing by wares better then to endanger dying by warres) fained Letters from Sena, written from their wiues, pretending great danger from a Caser, which came to robbe them in the Portugals absence; which Sousa beleeuing to bee true, brake vp the siege, and passing the Riuer by night was perceiued by the Zimbabes; who sallied forth with a great crie, assayled the Campe, killed some which were behind, tooke the most of the spoiles with the Artillerie. Thus returned the Portugals with disgrace, and the Zimbabes grew prouder, and after made peace with them notwithstanding.

Reward of Traitors, Treason loued, the Traitor hated.

One of these Zimbabes ambitious of that honour, which they place in killing and eating of men, to get himselfe a name, adioyned others of his Nation to him, and went Eastward, killing and eating euery liuing thing, Men, Women, Children, Dogs, Cats, Rats, Snakes, Lizards, sparing nothing but such Cafres as adioyned themselves to their companie in that designe. And thus fise thousand of them were assembled, and went before the Ile of Quiloa; where the Sea prohibiting their passage, a traitorous Moore came and offered his seruice to guide them ouer at the low ebbes of spring tides, vpon condition to spare his kindred, and to diuide the spoiles with him. The Zimba accepted it, and effected his cruell purpose, slaying and taking (for future dainties to eate at leasure) three thousand Moores, and tooke the Citie Quiloa, with great riches, the people escaping by hiding themselves in the wildernesse till the Zimbabes were gone; then returning to their Citie (antiently the royall Seat of the Kings of that Coast) and to this day are seene the ruines of their sumptuous Mezquites and Houses. Now, for reward of the Traitor, he sentenced him with all his kindred to be cast into the Sea, bound hand and foot, to bee food for the fishes; saying, it was not meet that one should remayne of so wicked a generation, nor would he eate their flesh, which could not but be venomous.

Mombaza destroyed.

After this he passed along the Coast, till he came against the Ile of Mombaza; which foure Turkish Galleyes of the Red Sea defended, and slue many of them with their Artillery: but Thome de Sousa arriuing with a fleet from India tooke the Turkes, and withall destroyed Mombaza in the sight of the Muzimbabes. The Captaine said that the Portugals were Gods of the Sea, and hee of the Land; and sent an Embassadour to Sousa, professing friendship to them, and requesting that seeing they had honourably ended their enterprise, he might beginne his, namely, to kill and eate euery liuing thing in the Iland, which by their consent he did accordingly, burning the Palme-trees and Woods where many men were hidden, whom hee tooke and eate with all hee could get.

Port of Quilimane.

Macuas Cafres.

Thence he returned to the Coast, and went to Melinde, where Matthew Mendez with thirty Portugals ayded the King, and three thousand warlike Cafres, called Mossequeios, came also to his succour, which came suddenly on their backes when they had gotten vp the wall, and were almost possessed of the Bulwarke, and chased them with such a furie, that only the Captaine with about one hundred others escaped; hauing found none in three hundred leagues march, which durst encounter them. And thus much of the Zimbabes (of whom wee haue written more in our Pilgrimage out of the Iesuites.)

Quilimane is an arme of Zambeze, shallow, a league wide in the mouth, but three fathomes deepe in the barre, which was the reason of the losse of the great ship, Saint Luis. The Land adioyning is playne without any hill. Within the barre about two leagues is a Port of good refreshing, where they rest themselves from the heats which are in those parts extreme. Neere it is a Towne of Cafres, and poore Moores, subiect to the Portugals which dwell at the Port. All the Countrey within is inhabited by Macuas, Cafres subiect to King Gallo, a poore Prince, whose brother becomming a Moore, was therefore odious to the Cafres, which thinke basely of the Moores, and more easily turne Christians, holding of them a more honourable conceit. They are blacke blacke and curled, and worship not Idols. Next neighbours to these are the Inhabitants on the River Loranga, the mouth of which is five leagues from Quilimane Eastward; a pleasant River Loranga River, with a turning in, and a good barre, stored with fish. Many of these Cafres paint or rase their Gallants fa- bodies with Iron, and bore holes in their cheekes for a gallantry, as doe those of Mozambique. bions Bano a Cafre is Lord of these parts. They worship onely one God in Heauen, beleue the im-mortalitie of the Soule, the Diuine prouidence, that all good comes of God, that there are De-uils, and that they are euill; and all this notwithstanding are great blasphemers, speaking euill of God when things crosse them. They haue two wiues (and some of them haue also Concubines, but their children doe not inherite) on the Marriage day two or three women in the morning come and drumme, sing, dance before the Brides doore, and others follow, till all the guests come with their offerings of Mais, Panike, Meale, &c. which they offer to the Bride, first giuing a handfull to the dancers, and lay Meale on one cheek and the left eye. Thus they spend the day, and at night the Bridegroome takes home his Bride, and this is the Wedding ceremonie.

They haue Fasts, all day eating nothing, but drinke all the next day and night of their Mais-wine, and of the Wine of a fruit called Puto, very sweet, like Bacchus seruitors. They are much addicted to sorcerie, and when they will enquire of things lost, they meet and dance, vsing certaine Charmes till some of the companie seeme mad and possessed, the Deuill entring into them and reuealing the thing lost. They are exceeding full of complements, in which they spend much time before they will talke of the businesse they come about to their neighbour. They vse pitifull lamentation for the dead, who is wound (almost after our fashion) in a blacke cloth, tyed with many lists of the same, and buried with his Armes and Victuals: his Mat or Bed, and Stoole set ouer the Graue, and his House burned with all his mouables (no great losse) for if any but touch any thing which belonged to the dead, he may not enter into his house till he haue first purified or washed himselfe in the River. The ashes and brands left of that burning they lay on the Graue. They mourne eight dayes, beginning at midnight for an houre or two, one beginning, and the rest following. In the day they goe to the Graue, and lay Meale on one cheek and eye, and set Mais and Victuals thereon, saying certaine words, till the Meale be quite gone, neuer washing their face; so commending their tillage (forsooth) to the dead, which they thinke can send them good haruests.

From Cuama to Mozambique (which are one hundred and thirtie leagues) there is in all the Coast no King potent, howsoever so stiled (as are also some poore Moores) in and of the places where they dwell. But within Land are great Kings of curled Cafres, most of them Machas by Nation. One of these not farre from Mozambique is the Mauruca. These Machas are theeuers, the most barbarous and ill disposed Cafres of all that Coast. Their speech is rough and high, as if they fought. They file their teeth aboue and below as sharpe as Needles. They cut and rase their flesh, bore holes in both their cheekes, from the tips of their eares almost to the mouth, with three or foure holes on each side, each bigge enough to hold a finger, thorow which their gummes are seene with their teeth, the spittle slauering forth. For which, and for the more gallantry they weare bungs of Wood, one in each hole; and he which can haue them of Lead is a complete Gallant, for that metall is much esteemed. They haue also two holes in the lips; in the vpper of which they put little pegs of wood as big as a Hens quill, of a finger long, sticking right out like a Naile; in the lower lip they weare a Leaden bung, so close and heavy that the lip falls to the beard, shewing the gummes and filed teeth, that they seeme Deuils. They weare their eares also bored round with many holes, in which they haue pegs of wood, slender like knitting needles, a finger long, which makes them looke like Hedge-hogs. This their gallantry; for if they are sad, or crossed with any disaster, they leaue all these holes open.

They are strong, and able to indure labour. They goe naked both men and women; and when they are apparelled, it is with a Monkeys skinn, or of some other beast, from the waste to the knees. Their customes are like those Cafres of Loranga. Of the Machas of the River Qui-zungo, when a Maide is to be married, shee goeth into the wilderness * a whole Moone to be-wayle her virginie, visited of her friends, and returning home euery night: betimes in the morning going to her wilde taske againe. As soone as the new Moone appeares, a great feast is made, and the next day shee is deliuered to her husband without any more ceremonie.

This Mauruca vsed such cruelty in warring vpon, and eating those they killed or tooke in those parts, that they easily chased away the antient Machas, and enioyed their Countrey: and giuing themselves onely to rob, and not to till the grounds (for they were lazie lubbers though strong robbers) about An. 1585. they grew iniurious to the Portugals, cutting downe their Palme trees, stealing, begging, burning, killing, eating, as they saw occasion. Insomuch that Nuno Velho Pereira sent from the Ile fortie Portugals and others to the number of foure hundred, which came suddenly on the Towne of Mauruca three or foure leagues distant, destroyed and burnt it. But the Machas, which escaped, ioyned head, and lay in ambush for the Portu-gals in their returne, which was secure and disordered, and slue them all, two or three Portugals, and a few Cafres excepted, which hiding themselves, two or three dayes after escaped to *Mo-

çambique, and told of their fellowes disastre, whom the Macúas had slaine and eaten. Many such chances betide the Portugals in those parts, through their selfe-confidence, and little account of the Cafres. The warres continued long, till Maurúca seeing the necessitie, made peace with the Portugals, forbade eating of mans flesh, and enioyned his people to till the ground; which rather for feare of him they obserued, then any wayes thereto enclined, still in secret vsing that forbidden food, as I haue knowne particular instances, of some, which when they had stollen, and could not sell at their price, they haue killed and eaten.

The Ile of Moçambique is in fifteene degrees to the South; aboue halfe a league long, and but a quarter broad. At the point and entrie of the Barre is the Fort with a Portugall Captaine and Garrison. It hath foure Bulwarkes, two to the Sea, and two to the Ile, with faire Peeeces of Artillery. Within is a Cisterne which holds two thousand Pipes of water, into which the raine runneth from the tiles and walls by Conduit-pipes. In the midst is a Church. This is one of the chiefe Forts of India; built by a good Architect, An. 1558. There is also an Hospitall, two Hermitages, a Couent of Dominicans, a poore Towne of Moors. The Iland is drye, and without wood; the water they fetch three miles without the Barre from a Spring in a Bay called Titangone, which serues to water all the Indian ships. Their wood they fetch from the Mayneland, in which they haue Gardens of variety of fruits. It was at first sickly, but now by Gods goodnesse is proued healthfull.

Two Elements wanting.

Quirimba, and other Ilands.

The Ile of Quirimba is sixty leagues distant along the Coast on the Indian side. It is halfe a league wide, and a league long, plaine, without hill, all sowed with Mais and other grayne, whereof the Iland is fertile. It hath a walled Fort, and a faire Church of the Dominicans, which serues for a Parish Church to the Ile, and all the Coast as farre as Cape Delgado, who are bound there to confesse and communicate. In this Coast are the Iles of Cabras, Fumbo, Quirimba, Ibo, Matemo, which still sheweth the ruines of the former Moore-Inhabitants. Foure leagues thence is Macaloe, and from hence as farre is Xanga, and aboue two leagues from it is Malinde, betwixt which and that of Cabo delgado are two little ones. Others there are, but not so inhabited, one of which is called, Rolas, for the store of those birds which yeerely breed therein, very hurtfull to the Corne-grounds; and therefore the Ilanders of other Iles goe thither to destroy their egges and young. These Ilands are very wholsome and of subtile aire, and therefore subiect to the disease, called The aire, which they cure with Elephants dung, Mustard, Garlecke, and a seed called Ingo, fuming him therewith three or foure times a day, &c. Their Kine haue a bunch on the shoulder as a great Pumpion, which falls on the necke, the flesh whereof eats like a Cowes vdder, very fat. There are store of Swine, Goats which haue young twice a yeere, two or three at each burthen, Palme trees for Wine and Cocos, with other fruits, fowles, and prouisions. There growes also Anil or Indico, which the Moors vse to dye their clothes, of which they weaue store in these Ilands. In the wildernesses of the Ile Cabo delgado is store of Manna, procreated of the dew of Heaven falling on certaine trees, on which it hardens as it were Sugar candide, sticking to the wood like Rozin, and hanging on the leaues, gathered and sold in iarres by the Inhabitants. It tastes sweet as Sugar; in India they vse to purge with it. I haue often been in the place, and gathered it with my hand. It growes only on one kind, although there be many other trees in the Iland. In that Coast also blacke Corral growes in the bottome of the Sea with small roots or beards, whereby it seemeth fastned. A Mariner gaue mee a piece two spans and a halfe long. When it comes out of the Sea it is soft and pliable, but by the aire hardned. In those Iles they finde Cocos which are said to grow in the Maldinas on short trees in the Sea alway couered with water, falling off when they are ripe, and rising to the top, carried by the windes and currents to some Coast. All the Continent is peopled with curled Cafres, some Macúas, others not vsing rasing, holes, or hornes, but all shauen on the head. In the Countrey within the Kingdome of Mongallo, a Lord of fertile Countries, and of many Vassals. The Ile of Saint Lawrence lyes ouer against this Coast, three hundred leagues long, and ninety broad: a Straight of sixtie leagues running betwixt.

Foure scourges

In Ethiopia foure generall plagues haue beene obserued in our time, the Warre of the Zimbas, An. 1589. the Graf-hoppers, which couered the earth, and inuolued the aire in a cloude when they arose, which ate vp all their labours in the fields and gardens, leauing them as if they had beene burned, the trees not able to beare fruit till two yeeres after, whence many died of Famine; and this was the third plague which caused them to sell themselves onely for sustenance; and one of their children for a pecke of Mais: The fourth plague was the Small poxe, which killed many; a disease in those parts like the plague, killing all in the house where it came; their readiest cure being to let bloud, without bleeding, or in much bleeding, none escaping. The plague is vnknowne and vnheard of amongst them. The Negro women may be accounted another plague, specially the Portugall slaues, which conceiuing will cause abortion with a certaine herbe, so poysonfull that it consumes and rots them, except they by copulation bestow this disease on some man, who is presently payned in his secrets, and hardly escapes death. The remedie to this Entaca (so they call the disease) is the iuyce of a counterpoyson herbe taken the same day; both which herbes are plentiful and well knowne in those parts. Another infirmitie, but without without payne, befalls both Portugals and Cafres in Mozambique, which is blindnesse by night, beginning at Sunne-set, and ceasing with the Sunne-rising, in which time they which are thus taken, see nothing though the Moone shine bright. If the belly or head ake, the Cafres bind the part affected hard with a Cord.

Night-blind-
nesse.

The Cafres will take Elephants both in pits (before described) covered with boughes and grasse; and watching where he sleepes (specially by Moone light) as he lyes on the ground, and thrusting into his belly by the genitories an Aflagay, made purposely with the Iron halfe a span broad and two spans long. They may steale vpon them napping, because they steale not their naps, but make such a noyse that they at once bewray and betray themselues to the Hunters, which hauing wounded the Beast, fled away, and next day search by the bloud what is become of their prey. They kill them for the teeth and to eat the flesh. Iuory is the principall commoditie of this Coast, aboue three thousand Arrobas being yearly carried to the Indies. I saw in Sofala two teeth of one Elephant which weighed sixteene Arrobas, eight a peece.

The shipping from Cabo das Correntes to the Straight of Mecca, is made by Moores of wood, which they cleaue and shaue, neuer making but two Boards of one Timber, when if they could sawe they might make many. They sew them with threed of Cairo and fasten them with nayles of wood: their Cordage and Cables are of Cairo. The greatest they call Ships, the middle fort, Pangayas; the least Almadias, which are of one Timber (as the Canoas.) The Sayles are made of the leaues of Palme or wilde Date Trees. The Mariners are Moores, blacke, barbarous, wine bibbers, hauing nothing of Moores but the name and circumcision, not knowing nor keeping the Law of Mahomet. They celebrate each new Moone with a drunken feast; are giuen to Diuinations; will cast out nothing in a storme although the Vessell be surcharged, saying, the Sea is insatiable; when they want Winde they whip the Ship with Cordes on the Poop and Sides, with crying and chafing, as if the Ships had as much sense as themselues, or as themselues were senselesse, saying, they are lazie and therefore the Winde leaues them; and they mocked me for reprobating this their foolerie. Their Wares are blacke Clothes, and earthen glazed Beades of all colours. The Cafres steale children, and coozen the elder, enticing them to the Shoares, and there sell them to the Moores and Portugals. The iurisdiction of the Captaine of Mozambique is from Cape Correntes to Cape Delgado, three hundred leagues of Coast.

From this last Cape to the Line is the Coast of Melinde, which is of the iurisdiction of the Captaine of Mombaca. The firme Land is inhabited by Cafres, differing in Language and Customs, agreeing in barbarousnesse. Along the Kingdome of Mongallo runnes to the North the Kingdome of Munimugi, a great Cafre which confines on the South with the Lands of Mauruca and of Embeoe, and on the North with the Abyssine. The principall Island of this Coast, Quiloa, hath beene in times past the Seat Royall, the King of the whole Coast residing there, who is now a pety Prince; and Mombaca is the chiefe Ile and Citie, where the Portugals haue a Fort, the residence of the Captaine of the Coast of Melinde. Pemba is an Island about eight leagues from the Shoare, and ten long, plentifull of Rice and Kine, Fruits and Wood: sometimes subiect to the Portugals till the pride and lazinesse of some made the people rebell, and could neuer after be regayned. In the Ile of Pate are Pate, Sio and Ampaza, three Cities gouerned by so many Kings, tributarie to Portugal. Ampaza hath beene best builded of any Citie in those parts, but destroyed by the Portugals, the Citie sacked and burnt with eight thousand Palme-trees, which grew about it, cut downe. The Ile of Lamo hath great Asses, but of little seruice. This Island was chastised when Ampaza was destroyed, and Mombaca also, by Martin Alfonso de Mello. The King of Ampaza was slaine, and his head carried on a Pole at Goa in triumph. When he was gone, Mirale Beque the Turke came with foure Galleys out of the Red Sea, and infested that Coast, till the Zimbas and the Portugals ended the businesse with a new Armada, the Portugals captiuing and spoiling, the Zimbas eating the Turkes and Inhabitants. The King of Lamo for betraying the Portugals to the Turkes were beheaded. The Ile and Citie of Mandra which had denyed the Portugals to land, saying, the Sunne onely might enter there, was sacked and two thousand Palme-trees cut downe. In the Coast of Melinde they are great Witches. The Mossequeyos liue of their Kine, which they oft let bloud both to preuent the garget, and to make therewith a kinde of pottage with milke and fresh dung of the same Kine, which mixed together and heat at the fire they drinke, saying, it makes them strong. The Boyes of seuen or eight yeeres weare Clay fastned on the hayre of the head, and still renewed with new Clay, weighing sometimes five or six pounds. Nor may they be free hereof till in Warre or lawfull fight hee hath killed a man, and shew to the Captaine some tokens of that fact; which only makes them free and Knights of their cast. Hereupon they grow audacious, and proue dreadfull to others.

Maragatos.

Brava is a small Citie but strong, inhabited with Moores, Friends and Vassals to the Portugals. It is in one Degree North, and very hot. Magadoxo is in 3. 30'. Within the Land are the Maragatos, which haue a custome to sew vp their Females, specially their Slaues being yong to make them vnable for conception, which makes these Slaues sell dearer both for their chastitie, and for better confidence which their Masters put in them. They cut also their Boyes and make them Eunuches.

In Zanzibar.

Deuillish sor-ceries.

In the Ile of Zanzibar dwelt one Chande a great Sorcerer, which caused his Pangayo, which the Factor had taken against his will, to stand still as it were in defiance of the Winde, till the Factor had satisfied him, and then to flye forth the Riuer after her fellowes at his words. Hee made that a Portugall which had angered him, could neuer open his mouth to speake, but a Cock crowed in his belly, till he had reconciled himselfe: with other like odious sorceries.

Sea Monster.

From Mayatoxo to Sacotora one hundred and fiftie leagues is a desert Coast, and dishabited without Riuers. In which Desarts breed the great birds, called Emas, which breed on the Sands, and haue but two young ones, as Pigeons. Their stomachs will consume Iron and Stones, and flye not but touch the ground with their feet, running with their wings spread, as lightly as other Birds flye. They are white, ash-coloured; their egges white, holding almost three pints. Here I may mention also a Sea monster, which we saw neere the Riuer Tendanculo, killed by the Cafres, found by Fisher-men on the Shoalds. Hee was ash-coloured on the backe, and white on the belly, hayrie like an Oxe but rougher: his head and mouth like a Tygre, with great teeth, white Mustachos a span long, as bigge as bristles which Shoo-makers vse. He was ten spans long, thicker then a man; his tayle thick, a span long, eares of a Dog, armes like a Man without haire, and at the elbowes great Finnes like a fish; two short feet nigh his tayle, plaine like a great Apes, without legs, with five fingers a span long on each foot and hand, couered with a skin like a Goose foot, the hinder feet hauing clawes like a Tygres; neere his tayle were the signes of a Male, his Liuer, Lights and Guts like a Hogs. The Cafres seeing our Slaues slay him, fell vpon him and eate him; which they which spare nothing had not done before, because they thought him (they said) the sonne of the Deuill (hauing neuer seene the like) the rather, because hee made a noyse which might be heard halfe a league off.

A nest of great Birds.

In the same journey comming to the Riuer Luâbo in August 1590, the Mariners going ashore for wood, brought two Birds new feathered, whitish, found in the nest, like to Eagles in the eyes, bill and talons, but much greater then great Eagles, contayning nine spans from the end of one wing to the end of the other (I caused them to be measured) wherby it appeares that int heir full maturitie they are of huge greatnesse. They killed them, for feare the old ones should come.

* Santos hath told you that hee hath no
name giuen,

That the Iesuites haue done for the aduancing of Christian Religion with the Abassinos, yee haue heard. In the yeere 1560. Consalvus Sylueria a Portugall Iesuite with two companions, went from Goa for Manamotapa, a Region abounding with gold, but deare bought by reason of the Ayres vnwholsomnesse, and the want of necessities for food and health. They came first to Inhambane, and there fell sicke, but recovering proceeded to Tonge, and there baptised the King, his Wife, Sister, Children, Kindred, and great Men, with most of the People in few dayes. Thence Consalvus went to Manamotapa, leauing his Fellowes with the King, which built the Church of the Assumption: one of them by want of health was forced backe to India, the other stayed there two yeeres. Consalvus passed by Mozambique, and came to the Riuer Mafuta ninetie leagues from thence, where escaping a dreadfull tempest, hee went on shoare with his folding Altar, and said Masse on the Strand, the heate being so vehement that the Portugals could scarce indure to tread on the ground, and Consalvus his head brake out with pushes as he was in his Holies: which when they would haue medicined, *praclaro sui ipsius * odio incensus*, hee refused all, and permitted himselfe to the cure of Nature and Time. Thence they went to the Riuer Colimane, and were well entertayned by Mingoaxanes, King of Giloa a Moore, little caring for his Mahumetrie, and giuing them leaue to preach in his Kingdom. But they halted to Manamotapa, and so passed to Cuama, and then gaue himselfe to priuate deuotions eight dayes, onely once a day eating a handfull of parched Corne and drinking a draught of Water.

From Sena he sent to the Manamotapa; meane while the King of * Inhanior offered himselfe to Christianitie, but he comforted him, and refused till he had first beene with the Manamotapa. Antonie Caiado was sent for him, who trussed vp his Holies, carrying them on his shoulders. When he was comne, the Manamotapa sent him Presents, Gold, Kine and Seruants, which all he thankfully refused. When he came, he entertayned him as neuer any man, and bringing him into his inner roome, caused him to sit on the Carpet by his Mother. Hee offered him his choise of Grounds, Kine, Gold, Women; Consalvus answered, that hee would haue nothing but himselfe; the King thereat wondring and friendly with promises dismissing him. One had seene on the Altar a fayre picture of our Lady, and told the King that Consalvus had brought with him a tributarie Kings; this was but an Encosse (as it seemeth) which yet as *Cesar*s foure Kings in a piece of Kent had that beautifull beautifull Lasse, for which the King sent, and he carried it wrapped in a precious cloth, and tels him it is the picture of the Mother of God, the King of Kings. He worships it and begs it; Consalvus grants, and placeth it in the Kings house, and trimmes vp as it were a Chappell for it. Five nights, say the Portugals, the blessed Virgin appeared to the King in that forme in his sleepe; and five and twentie dayes after his comming, the King was baptised by the name of Sebastian, the Queene his Mother by the name of Marie. The same day he sent one hundred Kine to Consalvo, which were distributed by Caiado to the poore. Three hundred of his chiefe men followed his example. Much victuall was sent into Consalvus, but he ate no flesh, liuing only on wild fruits, herbs, and boyled Corne in small quantitie.

- 10 But foure Moores enuying these proceedings, and being gracious with the King, perswade him that Consalvus was sent from India to betray him, and to make way for the Portugals to take away his State; adding, that Consalvus was a Sorcerer, and whomsoever hee walked on the head with his forme of words, he made to become his. And if Consalvus went away in safetie, his Subjects would kill one another like mad men. By their perswasions the King caused Consalvus to be murthered, his strangled body being throwne into the Riuer, and fiftie others were slaine, which on that last day of his life he had baptised. Two dayes after repenting of this fact he slue two of the Moores, the other two being fled. Long after, no Iesuites (saith Iarric) were sent hither, because the Dominicans had vnderaken the Conuerfion of those parts, of whose labours yee haue heard somewhat before in Santos, which was one of them. Iarric hath since told vs of Petrus Toarius and Ludonicus Goex (in respect of these better hopes) sent An. 1562. and to them was ioyned Andrew Fernandez the companion of Consalvus, who had stayed at In-ambane. These three went to the Manamotapa, and stayed there certayne yeeres, till they were sent for back to India, King Sebastian intending to warre on the Manamotapa, for the said Consalvus Syluerius his death (being the sonne of the Count Sortellane) and for other causes. Thus after their returne An. 1570. Francis Barret was sent with a strong Fleet; who being dead of poyson (with others) Fernand Monroy succeeded, who dying soone after, the Iesuites then in the Campe could doe nothing. An. 1608. the people rebelling, the Manamotapa fled to the parts neere Tete a Portugall Fort, and by helpe of the Portugals subdued the Rebels. Whereupon he gaue the King of Portugall the siluer Mines of Achicoua, Iacobus Simonefius taking possession in his name. Hee gaue them leaue also to build Forts where they pleased. The Portugals thinke meete not to forget the Iesuites in this occasion, and Francis Gonsalues with Paulus Alexius are destined to that designe, the whole Kingdome seeming a field white to the Christian Haruest, and onely wanting Labourers.

Of Barret acts in those parts;
you read before in Santos.

- Of Angola and Congo you heard before: the state of Angola (for of Congo we haue no later intelligence then that of Lopez) after the death of Paul Diaz receiued some alteration. It is the manner in those parts that the Soba or Gouernours are as Princes of their Prouinces, and in the Kings Court, whom they acknowledge their supreme Lord, haue one of his Grandes, to whom they haue recourse in all difficulties (like the Protectors amongst the Cardinals) who in some manner disposeth them and their states. Thus Diaz appointed ouer the Angolan Soba by him subdued, some of his Portugall Gentlemen, sometimes some Iesuite at the request of the subdued, seeing in what respect they were beld with the Generall. But some Courtiers in Spaine perswaded the Catholike King, that this dependance of mediate Patrons should bee taken away from them all: whereupon ensued commotions, and contempt of the Portugall name; that in the yeere 1600. John Rhoderick Cotinius being sent Gouernour, of one hundred and fiftie Soba stipendaries before to the Portugall Crowne, not one continued his allegiance. Hee reduced some, but (with many others running like Fates) the vnwholsomnesse of the ayre killed him; the Successor being named in a Boxe (the key whereof was kept by George Pererius a Iesuite) Emmanuel Pererius. Hee ouerthrew Cafuchens the chiefe Soba with the Cambamban, whose Countrey is rich in Mines, in which he built a Fort neere the Riuer Coaxa seuentie leagues from Sea (all nauigable from Loanda thither in five dayes) and placed therein two hundred and fiftie men, being but thirteene leagues from Dongo the seate of the King of Angola, who confirmed to him that his Conquest. This Conquest of Mines make hope of the conquest of Mindes to the Christian Faith (how many are by these Thornes choked, and reconquered from it?) and the Iesuites are said to study the language that they may preach the Gospell to them. In the Ile of Loanda are said to bee twentie thousand Christians of the Natiues, besides the Inhabitants of Saint Paul and Massangaro.

- Anno 1606. Francis Gois, Edward Vaz, and Antonie Barrius Iesuites, were sent thither; their Ship was taken in the way by the Hollanders, who set them in the Boat which brought them to Loanda, being terrified by two Whales which rising neere the Boat, yet passed without hurt. Now were new missions of Iesuites; one of which comming to the next Soba, taught their children their prayers, helping their memories with knots tyed in cords. There were in that Town two thousand baptised, persons all ignorant of the Faith. There was an Idoll Temple with Images of Men and Women; with the heads of Goats and Snailles, and the feet of Elephants, and other wilde Beasts, which the Iesuite caused to be burned, the people being before made beleue that that if any touched them, they should die suddenly. He baptised thirtie and taught the rest their Catechise, and proceeded to the next Soba, Lord of foure other Sobas, who had beene before baptised of Secular Priests, yet onely had the bare name of a Christian. This Soba had three hundred wiues for ostentation of his greatnesse. No man could make the signe of the Crosse. And when the Priest would build a Church there, the Soba said he would consult about it, but gaue no answer. He found two Idoll Oratories, but no Idols in them, the people hauing before hidden them in the Woods, lest they should haue like fiery fortune with the former. Hee found here also certayne Chibadi, which are Men attyred like Women, and behaue themselves womanly, ashamed to be called men; are also married to men, and esteeme that vnnaturall damnation an honor.

Cacongo.

About the same time, an Embassador from the King of Cacongo came to Loanda, with a Present to the Bishop and Request from the King, to send some Iesuites to baptise him, and all his Kingdome. The Captaine therefore with the Bishop, goe to the Rector of our Colledge, and obtayne Gaspar Azuered, and Francis Gois to bee sent thither. Cacongo is adioyning to Congo, and to the great Macoco King of the Anziqui, hauing also the Kings of Angola, Bungo and Bian-go Neighbours. It is a large Kingdome, and by the Towne of Pinda eightie leagues distant from Saint Thome, is entrance vp the Riuer Zaire in foure dayes vnto it. The King of Loango hath also sent for Iesuites, to bee by them instructed and baptised: but what is done in both these Kingdomes, I haue not (saith Iarrie) receiued intelligence.

Guinea, described and diuided.

Now concerning Guinea, that name is given to all the Atlantike Coast of Africa, from Senega, called by the Ancients Stachiris, in sixteen degrees of North latitude, to Angola in thirteen degrees South: and is diuided into the Higher from Senega to Congo, and the lower, containing Congo and Angola. Over against the higher Guinea are the Ilands of Cape Verd (Ptoleme calls it Ar-finarisium) snarium) which An. 1446. the Portugals first inhabited, twelue in number, the chiefe that of Saint Iames, in which is a fortified Citie, chiefe ouer those Forts and Habitations which the Portugals hold in that higher Guinea; the Bishop thereof subiect to the Archbishop of Lisbon. It is in fiftene degrees Mountaynous, hauing no rayne but in August, September and October, fertile of fruits, hath store of Pompons (euery moneth) Sugar Canes, Horses.

Saint Thome is of vnwholsome ayre, and Praia vn safe against theemie. In all the Coast of Guinea are Tangos maos, or Lancados, of Portugall originall, but degenerated into barbarous rites and customes, which trade in all those parts for Hides, Iuory, Wax, Gold, Gumme, Ambat-grise: in some places they are also naked and raced like the Sauages.

10 King Philip the third procured by Letters to Aquauira, the Generall of the Iesuites A. 1604. that of that Order should be sent into this Guinea, Balthasar Barerius, Emmanuel Barrius, Emmanuel Fernandus. These came to Saint Iames, and remedied the custome of visiting Wisards and Sorcerers, which was there common, and the wicked abuse of Baptisme, in which three or foure hundred sometimes, seuen hundred of their Slaues were at once washed without any Doctrine of Christian dutie premised, and presently transported to Brasile or India, ignorant of all things. Likewise they procured libertie to many Free-men, which had beene by the Tangos maos or Guineans stollen, and vniustly sold, they intending and attending such preyes, no lesse then Hunters and Hawkers their game. One of them dyed of the sicknesse of the Countrey: Barerius was sent to the Continent, and writ thence to Barrin that in Ianuarie hee came to 20 Bissan, where the Kings eldest sonne professed his willingnesse to be a Christian, but that he must then leaue off his gainfull man-stealing. Thence they sayled to Guinala, where the King was sick and dyed. The manner is to kill Wiues and Seruants, and a Royall Horse for his seruice in the other World, which Barerius did what he could to hinder. Thence they set sayle to Biguba a very healthfull place; but some Ethiopiens professing Mahomet were hinderance to him.

Iuly thirteene, 1605. he came to Sierra Leona, and arriuing at Pagono, the petty King thereof tributarie to Fatema, imitated in all things the Christian Rites, but durst not be such (hee said) except he saw Fatema first. The Portugals in these parts liued liker Ethnikes then Christians, neither hauing Sacraments nor Word of God in many yeeres past, so that they had almost quite forgotten them. Passing by the Ile Tamarena, he came to the Kingdome of Buran, the King whereof is also subiect to Fatema: he would be present also at Masse, and name Iesus, was desirous of Baptisme, but I thought fittest to begin with Fatema. I Confessed some Portugals here, which in ten, twentie, thirtie yeeres had neuer beene Confessed, the Christians there little differing from Ethnikes.

The King of Sierra Leona desired my stay there, which I doing, contrary to my former purpose, he sent all the people of the Towne to cut timber for a Church, was wonderfull desirous also of Baptisme, whereto I told him the multiplicite of wiues was impediment. Hee yeelded to this, but wished he had knowne it sooner, for then would he haue had none of these, but another which he sent for. I hindred not, because their marriages for the most part are by the law of Nature vnlawfull. When the maide came, her friends refused the conditions of our Baptisme and rites: and vpon his importunitie, the King was baptised, and clothed now like a Portugal. Hee was named Philip, and is called Philip Leonis, for his Countrey. I baptised also the daughter of another King, and ioyned her in marriage to him. His brethren also and children were baptised. The Kings Aunt is of great authoritie, and in manner ruleth all: and should but for her sexe haue reigned. Shee leads the reare when they goe to warres, carrying a Bowe, Quier, and military Club, and compells them to keepe their rankes. Philips father being dead, when they would haue obserued the Rite of killing some of his wiues and seruants, Philip interceded, and tooke away those infernall Exequies: The King of Toras sonne was present at Masse, Baptisme, and Sermon, and relating the same to his father; this (said he) is a Father indeed, and not those (Priests) which hitherto haue comne into these parts no lesse following the merchandising of Slaues and other things then the other Portugals. This King is one hundred yeeres old, originally of the Cumba (called also Manes) which conquered these parts; as fresh as if hee were but fortie. At Christmas he was present at our solemnitie, the Altar adorned with faire clothes, the image of our Lady with the Child Iesus on one side, the Crucifixe on the other, foure Candlestickes with Tapers, the wall and pauement trimmed with boughes. Moued with admiration he desired Baptisme, and a place was designed for building a Church. Their building of houses and Churches is to fasten posts in the ground close together, fastning them with timbers layde ouerthwart, couered with clay, and then laying on a plaister of earth white as milke; the rooffe is thatch and leaues of Palmes. I haue two of his sonnes, and two of Philips my perpetuall companions, whom besides the Catechisme I teach to reade. The old King cleaues only to one of his wiues the sister of Philip; and at Easter he is to be baptised.

40 The King of Beni, the Lord of seuen Kingdomes hath written to mee for Baptisme: but I cannot forsake these two Kings till I haue other helpe. This Countrey is as healthfull as any I euer came in, and Sierra Leona would be a fit place for a plantation of the Society: for which King Philip wrote to the Catholike King, offering a place to erect a Fort, and commending the largenesse nesse, wholsomnesse, and fertilitie of his Countrey. An. 1607. Emanuel Aluares and his Brother went to Guinea, to Bissan, and perswaded the King to forsake his Chima, (so they call God, and whatsoever is pretious to them) to wit, a Fagot of stickes bound together, which they worship: likewise to leaue those infernall inferies of killing at the Graue of the deceased, Wiues, Friends, Seruants, cutting their fingers and toes in pieces, and stamping the bones in a Morter; leauing the bodies meane while in torture, and when they were at the point of death thrusting a stake thorow their neckes, others looking on with vndaunted countenance, which were to vndergoe the same butchery. The Kings of Bigub and Besegui also desired Baptisme, which both (as hee of Guinala) are Beafares. Bigub hath three Kings vassals, Besegui hie, and the Guinala seuen, although the Byagi haue taken sixe Kingdomes from him. These Byagi are fierce people, in seuentene Ilands ouer against these Kingdomes, alway warring with the Beafares and the Portugals; with their boats entring the frequent Riuers, and spoyling all. These Ilands are rich and fertile, pleasant with Trees and Riuers, fruitfull in Palmes, Wine, Oyle; stored with Cattell great and small, Iuorie, Fish, Rice, Waxe, Iron, and on the shoare Ambergrise, but to them uncouth and unkissed; long Pepper enough to lade yeerely two ships.

The King of Beni hearing of Philip and Peter (the King of Tora) that they were baptised, sent his best beloued sonne to be instructed and baptised. Hee is the chiefe King of all that Coast. To him Barerius trauelled, hardly escaping the treachery of another King in the way; the way was wooddy Mountaines, pleasant Vallies, an Iron-coloured earth, the Iron exceeding that of Europe. The King entertayned him ioyfully; and first at his perswasion commanded by publike Edict, that marriageable Virgins should hide Natures secrets. Hee was present (but entreated to stay without the Church) when Masse was celebrated, and heard the Sermon (for he vnderstood the Portugall tongue) made great shewes of Christianitie, promised to burne his Idols; yea, perswaded his Vassall-kings to Christianitie; but all on a sudden by a Mahumetan was altered, pretended to feare the Concha (chiefe Emperour of the Souza) and the great Bexerine would incite him to warre against him. The King is said to haue receiued of him certaine Charms, whereby to bewitch any that offended him. Barerius also saw him stroking a Serpent as big as a mans thigh, rolled vp in diuers gyres, so beautified with various colours, as hee neuer had seene any creature: this he stroked and dalled with. They call this the King of Serpents, and make much account of it: but Barerius thought it was the Deuill in this forme. Thus were the blossoms of his hopes blasted; and he hastened away to his former friends.

It will not be amisse to relate the funerall mournings (worthie mournings and funerall) amongst the Manes. Farma the King of the Logui, had seuentie two sons and fiftie daughters, so that his progenie (most suruiuing) was aboue three thousand. The old Grandfire being dead, newes is sent to all the kindred in their seuerell habitations, euery Village mourning, and the kindred visit the corps with presents, Gold, Clothes, and what they can, accomplishing all with lamentable lamentations. Part of the presents is put in the Graue, another part goeth to the King of the place, the third to the Heire: but the Kings themselves are buried secretly by night, with a few friends attending, hauing all their life heaped treasure to that funerall purpose, and are therefore buried in vknowne places, as in the bottoms of Riuers, turning meane while the streame on the other side. They lose much Gold this way, and if they die suddenly, no man knowes where they haue prepared and treasured that treasure. That the wines and seruants are added to the Exequies, we need not repeat. They hope to finde all ready to serue them in the next life. Some great men haue Houses set ouer their Graue couered with Cloth, and other things there left to waste with time, and hither the kindred make recourse to consult with the dead, and acquaint them with their affaires. The funerall ended, they returne with so many stalkes of straw as there remayne moneths to the yeeres end: against which time they provide store of Rice, Wine, Hennes, and (if the deceased were rich) of Kine, and then assemble to a funerall feast, lasting day and night with all excesse in eating, drinking, dancing, and such a noise, that none in the Village can sleepe. For which cause the Iesuites which haue their Churches in the Villages, haue their houses out of them. Their greatest glorie is the number of Meats beyond mouthes, and of Drunkards beyond tale. King Peter was inuited to one of these riots, yet rioted not, but by his modest example wanne good opinion to his Religion. They had sacrificed a maide, and certaine Kine with Diabolicall rites to their Ancestors, in a Wood closely before hee came.

Barerius went to Fatema the King of the Boulons, and was lighted to him by night with Torches of straw, which they vse, and not wax, though the Countrey haue store. Hee sent after him a gold Chaine which he refused. An Ethnike Doctor, and King Peters sonne were conuerted soone after. They doe not beleue any Hell, but thinke that the deceased goe to Gods house, and there liue and vse the same things they did here, and in the same ranke and reputation.

This King Peter was of the Manes or Cumba, which are the same (sayth the Iesuite) which in Congo were called Giacha (Iagges,) in Angola, Ginda; that they were the same with the Imbia or Zimba, of which you reade in Santos, or with the Galla amongst the Abissines, he sayth, without my subscription. These left their Countries, about An. 1550. and pierced to these parts parts of Sierra Leona: of which Man-eating Nation none there remayned but this Peter, who now became a Zealous Christian, and procured the commission of others. They which are to be baptised bring first their Idols, and cast them in the fire. Besides which Statues, they haue Chinas, which are Pyramides with Cells within, wherein are kept white Ants; of so religious esteeme with those Guineans, that when they buy a slaue, they set him before a China-pyramide, hauing offered thereto Wine and other things, praying that if hee runne away Tigres and Serpents may deuoure him. Which threats fasten them to the cruellest masters. In euery Countrey they haue a place sacred to the Deuill. That which King Philip had, was in an Iland, where they offered Rice, Oyle, or what they carried, casting it into the Sea. No man durst venture on the Iland for feare of Camassono, the Deuill-Idoll. Once a yeere the King went and sacrificed Hennes, and Goats, (which there liued securely) on a Rocke. The cruell spectacle of the Selfe-whippers on Mandy thursday was terrible to the Ethnikes; thinking them (not without cause) mad so to rage against their owne flesh; and Christopher sonne of King Peter would not be behinde the rest herein. Another thought the blood had beene onely the red ioyce of a certaine Tree. These are the Iesuiticall Relations till the yeere 1610. with other like, which I omit.

§. VI.

Relations of the Christianitie of Africa, and especially of Barbarie, and Algier;
written by I. B. GRAMAYE.

Thus much haue I related of the Iesuites and Dominicans later labours in Africa. Gramaye hath lately published ten Bookes or Tractates of Africa: he sayth that there are some Relikes of the antient Christians after so many inundations of Heresie and Mahometisme, both in Marocco, Tunes, and Lybia, which vse the Masse of the Mozarabes translated into Arabike: there are also Greekes, and Abassines, and of diuers Nations Merchants with free vse of their conscience. At Tunes, and Tripolis, Priests in Gownes, Monkes in their Cowles, are permitted publike supplications and funerals. In the Kingdome of Fesse their libertie is greater. But in all the Coast of Barbaria there is no securitie of the publike exercise of Christian Religion, nor any Monasteries: but at Oran & in the places subiect or confederat to the Spaniards. In the places subiect to the Moors & Turks, there is publike permitted, not secured, both exercise, Churches, & places of buriall in towns; somtimes eclipsed or disturbed by the Morabutes, in times of drought, at which times, as it were, to appease the angry Deitie, they spoile Churches, inhibit Christian Holies, ouerthrow Tauernes (for none else may sell Wine) which after a few dayes are againe permitted. The Christian Church-yard, or rather Buriall-place, is a piece of ground without the Towne, neere the Iewish Buriall-place, not inclosed, yea (in places) bearing Corne. But the sandy soyle scarcely secures the Corpse from Dogs. Prayers and other Rites are vsed at the Graues, but not at Algier, without scoffes and iniuries, specially from Boyes. Priests administer Sacraments without speciall Cure, or certaine Stipend, or Order; yea, some without Orders. Baptisme is often administered by the Lay-people, and without the Ecclesiasticall Ceremonies; and whatsoever requires Episcopall benediction of long time hath there wanted. Seldom is there Sermon, neuer Catechising, Vespers, or Lauds, till our Author procured.

In the Kingdome of Argire are supposed to be two hundred thousand Christians, of which the most are Renegados or Apostatas, which professe Mahometisme: some, but very few, of their owne accord; some by force, as Boyes which they take, and Infants (neither is it lawfull for any to be freed thence till hee bee fifteene yeeres old) some dissembling, yet hardly escaping, by reason of certaine death, if taken in the attempt; some by rewards of riches and honour; others by feare of torture, and despaire of libertie. Of such as continue Romish Christians are in that Kingdome supposed to be two and thirty thousand, besides those of the Reformed or other professions. And although in ten yeeres last past (till An. 1619.) 1200. Spaniards haue beene freed, yet in that space eight thousand haue succeeded in seruitude, besides sixe hundred dead. Some of which are in the Countrey or Gardens, and haue publike Service onely when they come to the Citie, where at this time were eight captiued Priests, not at all Graduates, and two onely which haue addicted themselues to Diuinitie. There are foure Churches in the Prisons, in the Citie and Diocesse of Hippon two, in that of Cirth and Teslen two. They haue an Oratory in the house of the French Consull.

Supplications are performed in their times with deuotion and store of Candles. But there is no Font, nor holy Oyle, Chrisme; nor are the Sacraments (giue me leaue to vse our Authours words) of marriage, Extreme vnction, Orders, or Confirmation administered; Baptisme is done with simple water, Penance by any Priest: the buriall place not consecrated. The Authour being there captiued, did reforme things by a Visitation, with consent and request of those Christians, and subiection to the Pope and all which might challenge any right provided.

There are in Barbary, in the Kingdoms of Argier, Tunes, Tripoli, Fesse, one hundred and twenty thousand Christian captiues; there are eightie six Families in those parts of Christian Merchants, Freemen; Of Greeke Christians, one hundred seuentie nine Families; Of Jewes which haue trade with the French, are one hundred fiftie six thousand Families. Romish Priests Captiues sixtie two. Churches permitted to Christian Holies sixteene. In seuen and twentie yeares past (1619.) there hath beene no Bishop, but the Greeke Patriarch: neither is there any Ecclesiasticall Discipline, that not one of a hundred liues like a Christian, the Priests liuing of Almes, contenting themselues with their Masse without cure of soules; their paritie also making them carelesse each of other; scarcely any thing Christian-like celebrated but the Masse.

Gramaye is confident that Argier is that Iol, which was the Seat Royall of Iuba, by his Sonne new built, and called Casarea; a Coyne of Claudius is in inscribed IOL CAESAREA IUBAE REGIA. After his death Caligula brought this Kingdome of Mauritania, (which containd those of Argier, Fesse, Marocco, and part of Tunes) into two Prouinces, Tingitana and Casariensis. Claudius made this Casarea a Colonie, some few Antiquities and Inscriptions yet remaining. Thirty miles from the Citie is Sarsella where is infinite Rubbish, as the Graue, with Reliques of Fabrickes, and Aqueducts, as the bones of the Carkasses, and Inscriptions, as Epitaphs, ancient Coyne as Memorials (of which many were giuen him) for feare of suspition hee durst not make search. And although Alger, Argel, Algiers, or Argier (the very name breeds confusion) be described before out of * Nicolay; seeing we haue met with later Intelligence by almost seuentie yeares then the former (since that was printed in our sixth Booke) we haue thought good to adde out of him some better light of this Hel-mouth, the Centre of Earthly darknesse.

It is seated on the mid-land Sea, on the side of a hill, whereby one house hinders not the prospect of the next. Cheridim Barborossa, fortified it with the Iland, which yet Tempests sometime assault with great hurt to the ships as happened this yeare 1619. five and twentie shippes broken in the Port. The forme of the Citie is almost Bow-fashion. The circumference of the old Towne is three thousand foure hundred paces: Barbarossa began and after 1573. Arabamet finished a Wall about the Iland, except that part which is open to the Port and Citie. Lately they haue founded a five cornered Towre to secure both. The Turrets, Fortresses, Bulwarkes, I omit. The houses within are close to the Wall; without, is a Ditch of sixteene paces, scowred by Arabamet, but now in some places mired vp, and scarce halfe of it is cleare. Without the Towne are three Castles: two of which were built, Anno 1568. 1569. the third before, was finished 1580. Except one the streets are very narrow, and in Winter very durty. Out of their Rate or Taxe-bookes, I find of late yeares, by the destroying of the Suburbs, for feare of Don Iohn of Austria 1573. and since the Moorees were expelled last from Spaine, it is very much increased in buildings, not like the descriptions anciently published, which leaue therein open and vacant places. And although the Houses to the street side are darke, yet being inwardly built with square Cloisters as it were, the light is supplied, as the Roofes serue them for Galleries and Prospects; in the midst is a Well, but the water brackish. They vse no Chimneyes, but make fires of coales in Earthen Pannes in their Porches or Roofes. They white the out-side of their Houses against great Feasts. The Kings Palace and great mens Houses haue Courts spacious, with specious Pillers about, and many by-rooms spread with Mats or Carpets; their custome beeing to put off their shooes when they enter. Their House-hold Furniture is otherwise meane, the vulgar hauing nothing but a Mat, Carpet, Mattresse, two Vests hanging, Pots and Dishes of Earth, and long wooden Spooones, with a wooden Chest: two or three staues fastned to the Wals covered with boards serue for a Bed, sitting and lying more commonly on the floore on a Mat or Carpet. Their Garments hang on lines ouer the Bed, Pelts are their Naperie, Water their Drinke, Rice their Meate with Pulse, Meale, a little Flesh, and some fruits, whence Victuals are cheape. There are no Conduits, Sewers, nor Wels of sweet water; five Cisternes from without, supplying that want, together with that which is fetched on mens shoulders out of the fields, by about one thousand Slaues and Moorees. Their are seuen faire Mosquets, specially the greatest; five Colledges of Ianizaries, where some sixe hundred of them liue together in a Houle; one Hospitall built by Affan Bassa, foure faire Bathes, being Prisons for slaues; two for washing with hote or cold, paved with Marble, and furnished with Chambers; and Conduits for Arte-brought waters, vsed by the Moorees and Turkes of both Sexes almost euery day; and the two Royall Porches, one of thirtie sixe foote square with Columnes, where the Duana of the Ianizaries is kept, the other before the Palace.

Within the Wals are neere thirteene thousand Houses, many of which are inhabited by thirtie Families; the Houle of Iacob Abum in the lower Iewrie hath three hundred, of Abraham Ratbin, two hundred and sixtie Families, and others likewise. There are about one hundred Mosquets, each hauing three Morabutes Curats, and some thirtie or fortie, besides the Oratories of Heremites and Sepulchres; sixty two Bathes, eighty sixe Schooles for Children to learne to reade and write, and a few others for the Alcoran; Suburb-gardens fourteene thousand sixe hundred ninetie eight, each hauing one or more Christians, some sixe or eight to keepe them. Nor is there scarce a Family in the Citie, which hath not one or more Christian slaues of both hand to the brest and bow the head) with a Turbant, or a coloured cap with Linnen foure or five times wreathed about. They all weare Rings of diuers matter. The womens habit differs little from the mens; nor could a woman going in the streets be knowne but by her woman-slaue attending. They sit at home on Mats or Carpets prating (few except) all day long, except when they goe to the Bathes, Heremites, Wizards, Sepulchres, Gardens, Feasts, which are common with them. They delight in blacke haire which they procure with Medicines. They haue little care of their Children, none of their Familie; too much of Superstitions and Lusts.

These Algierians haue the foolish conceits of other Mahumetans, some also more proper, that Fooles and Dwarfes are Saints, their Morabutes to be inspired and to consult with God, the Vindictas set on Sepulchres weekly to be eaten by the foules; and if sicke persons offer there any thing which a beast eateth, that the disease is deriued to it; that the head-ach is lessened with rolling a Goats or sheeps head on the Roofe; that it is not lawfull to buy in May, nor to bring in at doore Garlecke or Broomes, but (if there be need of them) at the Roofe; that it is a meritorious worke to prostitute their Wiues to the Morabutes, and that the same men bugger with beasts; that shewing pitie to beasts, shauing, washing (though in the Sea) clenseth sinnes; that (Sodomiticall) sinnes against Nature are vertues. But to bedew the Garment in making vrine, to let paper lye on the ground, the Alcoran to be touched or seene of one not Mahumetan, to fast in Sala (or Prayer) time, or then to defend a mans selfe (as Mulei Abdelummi assaulted by his Brother and wounded in the Church 1577. would not stirre till Sala was done) or to bleed, or neeze, or spit, to wipe the buttockes except with the left finger, to drinke out of a smacking narrow mouthed pot, to locke the Bed-chamber by night, to stampe on the Earth when they play at ball, to write with a Pen (for they vse Reeds) to eat Snailles taken out of the fields (reputed holy) to touch money before they haue said their Morning Prayers, to hold the Alcoran beneath the girdle, to haue printed Bookes, or Pictures of men or beasts; to admit Christians or women to their Mesquits, to vse Bels, to exchange a Christian Captiue for a Turke, to breech children with Rods (they whip the sole of the foot with a Whip) these are all sinnes and enormities at Algier. They beleue that on their Easter mid-night all waters are asleepe, and hee which can get that sleepe shall be a happie man. With their Morabutes you are safe in the midst of Theeues. It is vnlawfull to goe into a new house, vndertake a Iourney or begin any great businesse without Sacrifice of a sheepe: vnluckie to sayle without consulting the Fortune-booke. They play not at Dice and Cards, nor sweare, nor fight one with another. The King and great men let their beards grow, others shauie all but the Mustachos and Crowne; they wash before worke, Prayer, and Meales; and haue a certayne Ceremonie to take water in the hollow of the hand, powring it to the elbow.

Here and in all the East they vse with Christians the Franke Tongue, composed of French, Italian, Spanish, and thereby vnderstand them all. They eat not bloud, or a beast killed by another man; and kill turning the head to the Sunne, and cutting the throate. No testament is available vnlesse acknowledged forty dayes before the Testators death before the Cadi. All the Sonnes and Daughters inherit equally; if they be *Moore*s the King hath a childes part, and if all Daughters, he hath all of a Moore, and halfe of a Turke. When any is sicke, women assist women, and men the men, praying Eastward; wash the dead Corps with hote water and Sope, clothe it and carrie it (hauing obtayned the Alcayds leave) with the head forward to buriall: if hee depart on Friday, it stayeth the Prayer time in the Mesquit: they set a stone at the head of the Graue, and another at the feet with an Epitaph and Sentence out of the Alcoran. They weare no mourning, saue that the women are a few dayes veiled in blacke, and the men shauie not for a monethes space, and for three dayes space they haue no fire in their house, nor eat any thing boyled; in that space they visit the Sepulchre, giue Almes, and gathering stones on the shoare, tosse them from the right hand to the left, and throw them into the Graue, saying, Selan Ala. They begin the Spring on the fourteene of February, and end it on the eighteene of May; they call the raine which fells from Aprill the five and twentieth, to May the fift: blessed of God, and keepe it religiously. Their Summer continues to August the sixteenth, and is very hote, and sometimes hath pestilent raines which kill thousands. Autumne to the sixteenth of Nouember, and Winter is neuer so cold that they need a fire.

The Kings Reuenues are summed by Harega at foure hundred thousand Duckets, by Hardo foure hundred and fiftie thousand: and payeth nothing to the Turke, but a few Boyes and gifts of no value, with some feeling to the Port Bassas. Yet would his Reuenue be short of expences on Officers and otherwise, if spoile helped not. Much Gold is carryed out of Christendome, for redemption of slaues threescore thousand Duckets yearly, as much perhaps to buy spoyles, of which little or none returneth to Christendome, they taking to Sea, Bisket, Water, Tobacco, Oyle and Dates, and laughing at our Excesse. The treasure of the Duana is administred by three, two of which haue beene Agas, the third is the Haga or Secretary, who if the King payeth not the Ianizaries, by the authority of the Duana they will imprison him and sequester his Rents; as it lately hapned to Osein Bassa two yeares together.

The Sepulchre of Morabute Cid Butica, is saluted with a Peece going out and comming in, by by whose holy prayers they say, Charles preuayled not against them An. 1541. In a hill neere, lieth Caba the daughter of Earle Iulian which Rodericus King of Spaine rauished, reuenged by her wicked father, with treacherous bringing the Moors into Spaine. The Cids Sepulchres and Chappels are visited some on Munday, some on Thursday, or on Friday, by the deuout superstitious fooles, specially (perhaps not-deuout) women. Algier is enuironed with goodly hills and dales, attended with plentie of fruits better then European. Three dayes iourney towards Bugia, is the Hill Couke, the King whereof Barbarossa flue An. 1515. and sometimes he is tributary, sometimes enclining to the Spaniard.

Algier were altogether vnworthy so long discourse, were not the vnworthinesse most worthy our consideration, I meane the cruell abuse of the Christian name, which let vs for inciting our Zeale, and exciting our Charitie, and Thankfulnes more deeply weigh, to releue those there in miseries (as we may) with our paynes, prayers, purses, and all the best mediations. Thus writes he which saw and felt his part in those miseries. Barbarie and chiefly therein Algier, the whip of the Christian World, the wall of the Barbarian, terror of Europe, the bridle of both Hesperias (Italy and Spaine) Scourge of the Ilands, Den of Pyrates, Theatre of all crueltie, and Sanctuarie of Iniquitie, holdeth captiue in miserable seruitude, one hundred and twentie thousand Christians, almost all subjects of the King of Spaine: of which, partly by the Turkes riches, the Pyrates fortunes, the Ianisaries honors, their fellowes flatteries seduced; partly ouercome with despaire of libertie and irksomnesse of daily calamities, euery yeere about five hundred become Mahumetan Apostataes; besides, about fiftie Boyes yeerly circumcised against their wills. To the Redemption of Captiues by the Orders of the Trinitie, and of Saint Marie de Mercede in Spaine and Italy, are yeerly gathered about one hundred and fiftie thousand Duckets. There is no generall * ordinarie course for Redemption of Captiues of England, France, Poland, Hungarie, Germanie, and the Low Countries; whereby men of those parts vtterly disconsolate, to the losse and shame of Christians, Apostatise. And to stirre vp compassion, behold Algier captiuitie; represented from his eyes to ours.

Epithets of Algier.

* The Author saith, Nullus per eleemosinam ereptus est, but we know by priuate friends by publike mediation of Embassadors, by collection in Churches, diuers English men are redeemed: but not in the sense he speaks: which yet were to be wished; or that Hell-centre to be by publike charge of christendome demolished. Tortures of friends to force from feare a confession of what is not.

First, if any Ship comes into their hands, it is with huge clamors presently inuaded by the Pyrates, and if it be an Enemie, spoyled; if Confederate, they take away their Armes, fill the Poop and strongest Places with Souldiers, search the lading, take meat and drinke as it were free, send the Gouvernours aboard their owne ship, and in a Pyratie counsell examine them, whether they haue any Spanish Wares or Men; nor content with words or letters, they force the Boyes and elder Persons by infinite beatings to confesse that which is not, and to promise what they haue not; and one mans confession is enough to make prey. Sometimes gaping after the ships wealth, they throw the men ouer-board, and so possesse the ship, saying, her men had forsaken her. Otherwhiles not satisfied with Truncheons, and Ropes to haue tortured the Wretches backs, binding their hands and feet, they draw them vp and whip them, almost strayne out their braynes with a knotty Rope plucked about the head, thrust Needles in their fingers, rost their feet with the shooes on at the fire, powre forceably salt water into their mouthes to fill the body, and then treading on the belly with their feet, force them to belch it vp; with smoke of Brimstone fill the mouth and eyes, hang them vp racked with weights at their feet, or with a Rope draw them thorow the Sea vnder the ship. The end of these torments is captiuitie, if there be any Enemie in the ship, and hee laden with Irons and Fetters, is thrust into the worst part of the ship, and scarcely hath moldy Bisket and Water to sustayne life. If they receiue not satisfaction touching the Men and Wares, they reiterate the tortures daily; Boyes are flattered and threatned, and often compelled to turne, and without delay presently are circumcised. And such is the course with them which they take in the Shoare and Ilands, chayned together or heapes, and thrust vp like Herrings in the bottome of the ship, to be kept for the Butcherie or Market.

When they come home to the Hauen, with infinite scoffings, the wretches are led forth in triumph, and three dayes set * to sale, and lastly sold to him which will giue most. If any bee Sea-sicke, or otherwise wounded, or ill at ease, for bemonings and medicines hee heareth blasphemies and reuilings; and sooner would a Turke releue a Dogge that is sicke, then a Christian: and if his sicknesse continue, without hope of recouerie, they throw him into the Sea, or by Land expose him to the Beasts. In the Market you may see them goe vp and downe naked, and with whips compelled to runne or leape, for augmenting the price. After that three dayes ended, may be seene a miserable spectacle, Infants and Children plucked from their Parents sight, the Husbands violently diuorced from their Wiues, Friends separated, with infinite howlings and lamentations: some sold to Moors to doe their drudgeries, and vially agree with them by the day to earne so much; some sold to the Numidians and Arabians to basest seruitude, greased with fat, made to draw the plow with Asses, drawing forth with back and belly beating a miserable life; some employed to the Gallies and Ships, there kept with chaynes, stripes, a little moldy Bisket and stinking Water: When they come on shoare, chayned in rewes, laid vp in prisons, sleeping on the ground, called onely Dogs. If winde fayle, or crosse them, they will appease it with branding crosses on the Christians feet, in detestation of the Christian name; sometimes they will burne Arabiike Characters on the cheekes, or cut off the Nose and Eares; and

* The price set on them; see sup. 890.

* Set in the earth to the neck, and then stoned: the ganchied hang on the hooke diuers dayes till they take them downe and stone them.

1609. to 1619. since they haue beene much worse, specially to English.

sometimes death is inflicted for slight suspicions. Except of basest labours, reuilings, stripes, injuries, they are in nothing liberall to them; in sleepe, meate, drinke, clothing more then penurious. When they carry dung to their Gardens, water from the Springs, and goe by the way, euery third word they must crie, Balec sidi, that is, Out of the way, or by your leaue, Sir, to euery Barbarian, or there he shall meet with new Devils, by spittings, stones, stauers, boxes, thrustings, throwings downe, scornes, tormented. If a Christian commits a small fault, he is burned aliue, or stamped in the earth * as in a Mortar, or gaunched (throwne from the wall on a hooke) or crucified, or flayed aliue: to the execution of which tortures they take vp any Christian they meet, to make them their brethrens tormentors; nor doe any performe baser offices but Christians. Now for the Sodomiticall lusts to Boyes, and their damnable seruices, and sending them for Presents to the Turke or his Bassas, I abhorre to mention. 10

If any Master be milde and gentle, he incurreth suspicion of fauouring the Christians, a most odious crime in Mahometisme; whereas to breake couenant with Christians, yea leagues (vpon aduantage) is Mahumetan. They cast their Country-men Embassadors of Tunes into bands against publike faith, the French Consuls into prison many moneths condemned them to the Gallies, beat them with fise hundred stripes, and burnt them aliue: they imprisoned many yeeres in a lothsome prison the Spanish Redeemers, and reduced to slavery one hundred and fortie redeemed by one of them. They suborne false witnesses to testifie a man is otherwise then hee speaks, making a Souldier a Captaine, a Mercenarie a Merchant, to heighten the price. And when the price is agreed on, they will vpon hope of more gayne flee from it. Modestie forbids 20 to speake of the Female sexe abused to naturall, to vnnaturall lusts, their children soone circumcised, their infancy trayned vp in Turkish blasphemie, their childhood in lusts passie, and youth in actiue, their riper age rotten in all damnations.

Thus wee maruell not that in ten yeeres past, the vpper and lower Germanie haue yeelded 857. Apostates, besides 300. English, Hamburgers 138. Danes and Easterlings 160. Poles, Hungarians and Muscoutes 250. Low Country men 130. besides French and others. Take it into your mercifull consideration, Kings and Princes, Magistrates and People, and helpe, Helpe the Lord against the mightie.

If a circumcised man would returne to Christ, and is thereof conuicted, hee is carried about oynted, naked, and proclamation made before him, chayned after to a poste and burned, often 30 beaten or dismembred first. Delinquents at Sea, are shot, dismembred, pulled apees by diuers ships going diuers wayes, to which they are tyed, set vpon the mouthes of the Ordnance, cut in peeces; to be sewed vp in Sacks and throwne into the Sea, is a fauour. To lay hand on a Ianissarie, imitate his habit in wearing a fringe on the necke, or to haue to doe with a Mahumetan Woman, is death: though this last bee negligently executed, all Lust, Sodomie and Adulterie being expiated in their Bathes, which are therefore so frequented. Of these, of other kindes of terrible executions our Author hath diuers examples, which I for tediousnesse forbear: God make vs thankfull for our selues, charitable to our Brethren.

An. 1607. three Townes in Calabria were spoyled by the Algier Pyrates, one thousand and foure hundred carried away captiues: An. 1608. they brought two and fortie ships to Algier, 40 and eight hundred and sixtie captiues, besides those which they sold elsewhere: the next yeere six and thirtie ships, men six hundred thirtie and two: the next, twentie three ships, three hundred and eightie foure men: the yeere 1611. twentie ships, men foure hundred and sixtie foure. 1612. they entred Spaine, and carried away three thousand eight hundred and foure, in one moneth. 1613. they tooke sixteene ships and two hundred and thirtie men of Italy onely. 1614. ships thirtie foue, captiues foure hundred and sixtie seuen. 1616. ships thirtie foue, men seuen hundred sixtie seuen. 1617. six and twentie ships, men one thousand seuen hundred sixtie three; out of Porto Santo six hundred sixtie and three. 1618. nineteene ships, men one thousand foure hundred sixtie and eight, robbing Lancerotta and Cays. (And since mens deficit, vox silet: O our English Ships and Mariners! Cura lenes loquuntur, ingentes stupent.) As for our Author, a Prouost 50 Deane, Archdeacon, Counsellor to the Archdukes, and the Popes Protonotarie, hee was taken in a ship of Marfiles, notwithstanding the peace and league, and therefore without fight the ninth of May 1619. and both aboard and on shoare felt his part of the premisses for six moneths space, informing himselfe further from others miserable experience. Two Boyes were forced to confesse lyes, a Portugall condemned to three hundred blowes to make him confesse; himselfe charged to be Spaniard, threatned to be taught to speake Spanish; then said to bee a Iew, robbed of his clothes vnder colour of search whether he were circumcised, at last they detayning some, sent the ship to Algier, where hoping better things, they will needs haue Gramay a Spaniard and imprison him; after that, they affirme him a Knight of Malta. After that, the detayned Portugall is brought, who by tortures forced made a false confession, that some of the goods were his, and that Gramay was a Bishop, and had brought with him a Knight of Malta and a Spaniard; 60 and he therefore with blowes and hard vsage almost killed, his meate eaten vp by the Bringers; he at last bribed the Keeper to let him come into the light, and haue Paper and Inke to write to the Consul, so that at a deare rate he obtayned vpon caution of fortie thousand Duckets, to goe 10 to the Consuls house. Some of the prisoners lay in Ditches in Water vp to the middle, and otherwise vsed as before is spoken.

He hath written a Diarie of occurrences whiles he was at Algier, out of which a word or two. In Iune Cid Bud a Morabute, at noone day before the Church, buggered a Mule, all applauding it, and crying out that it might be luckie, which often at other times wee haue sighted to see in Boyes. In the end of August. On the eight a ship of Spaine laden with Sugars, and fortie Captiues, was brought in. Iohn Peers a Belgian Boy refusing to turne Turke, was beaten by Mami his Master till he dyed. And two Spanish ships more brought in from the sight of Lisbon. In Iuly Letters came in my behalfe from Marsiles, but they would not read them: A Holland ship was taken and a French. In August two pledges of the Catholike King taken in Cuko (whose King was lately dead) after other villanies, were condemned, one flayed aliue, the flesh cut at the small of the leg first, and blowne, and so flayed all off, and the bodie lying on the ground, the skin stuffed with haire, sewed vp, and layd on the backe of a Christian which they met, and carried in pompe thorow the Towne, and set on the gate; the other was tyed to the Crosse by the middle, and with foure nailes thorow his hands and feet, crucified naked (saue his priuities) and liued till the euening the next day. Seuentie and two Captiues were brought out of Gallicia. Two Holland ships complayned of breach of League, the men of one of their ships, and three French cast into the Sea. But I am loth to drowne or torture the Reader any longer in these Tragicall spectacles; of takings, spoylings, sellings, killings which follow in our Authour. I will recreate you with more pleasing spectacles from English eyes, and send you home in an English bottoms.

CHAP. XIII.

Larger Obseruations of Master RICHARD IOBSON, touching the Riuer Gambia, with the People, Merchandise, and Creatures of those parts, then in his Iournall is containd, gathered out of his larger Notes.

§. I.

Of the Riuer Gambia, the Raines, and Land-floods, the cause and time of their contagion: the Beasts, Fish, and Fowle of the Riuer; of the Portugals, Mandingos, and Fulbies there liuing.

THe Riuer Gamba, Gambia, or Gambra, is in 13. degrees 30. minutes. The Inhabitants (as farre as I could learne in my trauell vp the same three hundred and twenty leagues, or nine hundred and sixtie miles) call it by no other name but Gee, a generall name in their language to all Riuers and waters. It hath one sole entrance, which in the mouth is about foure leagues wide, and three fathome water in the channell without any barre. Foure leagues inward it spreads it selfe into so many Riuers, Bayes, and Creekes, that for thirtie leagues vnto Tancronally it is very intricate; the maine Channell may easily be discerned except in that limite. With a faire streame from the mouth it floweth to Baraconda, or some little aboue, which is nigh two hundred leagues in the lowest season. The Land-floods abridge this tide, raising the water thirty foot vpright, repelling the Seas force, and couering the flats which in the low season cause impediment. These Raines alwaies proceed from the South-east, beginning within Land, where wee abode in the later end of May, and at the Riuers mouth in the end of Iune: continuing three moneths with great violence, with great windes, most terrible thunders and lightnings, in sudden gusts and stormes; which violence being ouerpassed, the people continue their labour of tillage. They begin, and goe out with more gentlenesse, the extremitie being from the middle of Iuly to the middle of August; in September equinoctiall the Sunne clearing: and thence till May they haue no raine, whereby the ground is hard and vncapable of tillage. In this rainy (vnseasonable) season are they forced therefore to exercise their husbandry; as also to prepare their habitations secured from the ouerflowings of the Riuer, where the bankes cannot discipline it.

And hence may the vnwholsomnesse be caused; whatsoever venome commeth from Trees, Plants, Serpents (whereof are many kinds) Toads and Scorpions, containd and continued all that time of drought in the dust and on the earth, and washed in the first raines, yeelding venomous vapours to the Sunnes strong exhaling facultie, which it vomits againe, crude and vndigested in the next raines; and so the former raines are worse then the later, blistring the naked bodies.

bodies whereon they fall, breeding wormes in garments, therewith wetted and layd by. It were therefore fit to be prouided of water to drinke or dresse meat before these seasons fall; and to preuent the hurt by keeping the Wells couered, and not to water in the open Riuer, as the Saint Iohns men did in the first Voyage (thereby the last to the most of them) our mens remayning there three yeeres, and returning sound, freeing the Countrey of the imputation. The Riuer encreased, when no raine is seene where we abode, whereby the raines falling aboue, and further passableness of the Riuer appeares. The shoald which stayd vs might in another season bee preuented; yea, with fit men and instruments cut thorow, continuing so small a space; promising fairely beyond, so farre as we had occasion to looke, the Sea-horses and store of Crocodiles proclayming deep waters vpwards. And if it ioyne aboue to Senaga (as it is vsually described) it cannot be farre aboue that place where we were, but promiseth a farre farther streame, whose branches are so great. The higher we went, the more healthfull we found our bodies.

dile.

Feare of the Crocodile.

From Baraconda forward wee saw no Towne or Plantation; onely wee found two or three bundles of Palmita leaues bound vp, which our Negros said some people had vsed to passe the Riuer. There abound in this Riuer Sea-horses and Crocodiles, or Alegators. This they call Bumbo, whose length we haue measured in the impression made in the sand, whence we haue driuen him, three and thirty foot, so feared of the Natiues that they dare not wash their hands, wade, or swimme in the great Riuer, telling of many their friends by this enemy deuoured. Neither dare they passe ouer their Cattell; but when they passe ouer a Beefe, a Canoe goeth before, where to one holds him close with a rope fastned to his hornes, another holds vp his tayle, the Priest or Marybuck in the midst praying ouer the beast, and spitting on him, by whom stands another with Bowe and Arrowes ready; and thus they passe them one by one. And when wee were forced in a shallow place to enter the water, and force the Boat against the current, the Blacks would not be perswaded, saying, Bumbo would haue them; till at last on better consideration, at a third straight, they bethought themselues that a white man was more conspicuous in the water, and therefore aduentured. Yet did I neuer finde them to assault vs in all this way, but when many of them lay on the sands, they would auoide vs, as Snakes vse the noise and sight of men with vs; boldest in deepe waters. Their musky sent made vs oft to stop our nostrils. It made both the water and fish also in some places to taste and relish of them, that wee could not eate the one, nor drinke the other. The noise of them in that place, whereby they call one to another (resembling the sound of a deepe well) might be heard a league.

Santos c. 12. a larger description. Where our men may learne to take this Horse, Elephant, Crocodile, &c.

The Riuer-horse is in fashion of body a compleat Horse; hath round buttocks, short eares, wagged to his mouth, two teeth standing right before on his lower chap great & dangerous, neighing directly like a Horse, foure legs, short, the foot diuided, some so great that I haue measured a print twenty inches ouer. Hee doth hurt in the Rice-grounds, but generally feeds on low marish grounds, where the Sedge is Greene in herds by night; bold in the water, snorting, neighing, and tossing the water within Pistoll shot, very fearefull of fire, as might appeare by a Candles end (we could not spare them any shot) set on a piece of wood, and let downe the streame on them. They were most dangerous when they had their young with them, which sometimes they leaue on the shoare, carried in the water by the female on her backe. I haue seene the Sea-horse and Crocodile to swimme together without disagreement.

Torpedo, Tremedor, or Thinta.

There is store of Mullet and other fish: amongst others, with a net we tooke one like an English Breme, but of great thicknesse, which one of our Saylers putting his hand to, presently cried out that he had lost the vse of his hands and armes; another bare-legged, putting thereto his foot, lost the sense of his leg; their sense being seene to returne, the Cooke was called vp, and bidden to dresse it; who laying both his hands thereon, sunke presently on his hinder parts, making grievous moane that he felt not his hands. Sandy a Blacke comming with his Canoe laughed, and told vs that they much feared this fish in the water; for he benumbed whatsoever hee touched, which he vsed to doe, stroking himselfe on other fish, and then deuouring them: but being dead he was good meat. At that place (neere Cassan) the people would come boldly into the water, some great Marybuck hauing secured them from the Bumbo by his blessing. And wee might see many on the other side, but neuer any on this. One little fish there is which may bee called the Running fish, like our Roach, with a red tayle, enforced to runne a great way on the top of the water, lightly touching it, by his aduersary which is like a Trout, whom to auoide he hath run sometimes into our Canoe.

Embleme of a flatterer.

Running fish,

Riuer fowle.

There is store of fowle, which we see sit on the bankes, but neuer in the mayne Riuer swimming (it seemes, for feare of the Crocodile) and feeding on the Marishes and Ponds; Geese rather bigger then our tame Goose, with a spur on each pinion, large, sharpe, and if they be not killed dead, ready for offence: Ducke, Mallard, Hernes, Curlews, Storkes, Plouer, and the like.

Natiues fishing.

The people fish their Lakes, and Ponds (which are many, broad, shallow) going a whole Towne or Plantation together, onely the men, each with a kinde of Basket holding the open mouth downward, close one by another ouerspreading the Pond, clapping downe their Baskets before them, and so returne most of them laden.

To speake of the Inhabitants, I will beginne at the mouth of the Riuer, where dwell the Blacks,

Blacks, called Mandingos, which speake the same language, fearfull of any shipping, because many haue beene surpris'd and carried away, except they know them: they brought to vs abundance of Bonanos (which in the West Indies they call Plantanos) with Beeces, Goats, Hens, Graine, and some Hides. Amongst these dwell, or lurke rather, a certaine way vp the Riuer, certaine Portugals, some of that colour, other Molates, but the most blacke, scattered two or three in a place, begetting children of the Blacke women; but haue neither Church, nor Frier, nor any other Religious Order. It appeareth that they are Fugitiues or Exiles from Portugall, or the Iles of that gouernment, which employ themselves in buying Commodities, especially Slaues. A few of them haue vsed one time of the yeere to goe vp the Riuer in a small Barke as farre as Setico to trade, whence they haue returned much Gold, and haue not attempted further, which is not halfe the way we haue gone vp. They say that those * which committed the treachery against our men are banished, as detested for that fact; how euer, it is not safe to trust them too farre. Their condition vnder the blacke Kings is base, who after their death seize on all without respect to wife, childe, or seruant, except they haue before provided; as wee haue seene of their poore posteritie, retayning the language of Portugall, and name of Christians loth so bee called Negros, though neuer so blacke. The better sort for feare of reuenge haue remoued their dwellings thence; the Blackes banishing them the Towne where it was done, and so much compassionating others of our people which were about in the Riuer in trade, that at their returne they fed them, and conuayed them to the next with their commendations, giuing them safe conduct and guides till they came to Cape Verd, where the French haue continuall trade, which might ship them home: their commendation from one King to another, being the losse of their ship by the treachery of Portugals, and their entertaynement good in all places. What Ferambra did, when the King of Nany was perswaded by the Portugals to destroy them is said before. Others did animate our men, and promised assistance to their reuenge, which their paucity refusing, still these Natiues beare a sullen disaffection to the Portugall notwithstanding.

There is another People dwelling amongst the Mandingos, called Fulbies, a tawny People much like to those vagrants amongst vs, called Egyptians; the women well featured, with a long blacke haire, more loose then that of the Blacke women, neatly apparelled in the habite of the Natiues. The men are not so handsome, by reason they liue of and with their Cattell, some Goats, but herds of Beeces in abundance, the keeping of which is their profession. In some places they haue settled Townes, mostly wandring, vniting themselves in Kindreds, and dringing their herds together: where they finde good pastures they agree with the King, and build houses as the season serues, during the raines betaking themselves to the Mountaines and higher grounds, and then succeding the Riuer, euen to his seuerer bankes. Their toyle is continuall, keeping their Cattell in the day from straying, and from the Crocodiles hants; in the night bringing them neere their houies, and parting them in seuerall herds, make fires about them; and likewise in the midst, about which they lie themselves, ready against the roaring assaillants. Thus is the poore Fulby almost growne beashtial, and when we haue gone to them to buy a Beefe, he hath come forth from his beasts with his face and hands couered with flies, as thicke as here they vse to sit on Horses in Summer, and the same kinde of flies; but those Fulbies seeme more senselesse; not remouing them, as we were fayne with a bough in conference to doe, and as our beasts vse whisking of their tayles and other motions.

They liue in great subiection to the Mandingos, who will share with them if they know of their killing of a Beete, and in their Commodities: that when they traded with vs, they would draw vs couertly to see it, lest the Negro participate in his returne. Of these the Countrey is full, euery where disperfed; and higher vp they are in one part principall, holding domination, excluding the Blackes, but for the most part in warre. Their language is different from the Blackes. Their women would daily bring vs Milke, Curds, two sorts of Butter (one new, soft and white, the other hard and of an excellent colour, as good as any we haue here, but for a little freshnesse) brought in Goards like Dishes, neate and cleanly within and without, therein much vnlike the Irish Calios, how euer otherwise resembling their course of life. Their returne was swall Beads and Knives of sixteene pence the dozen, with other trifles. But after they had once tasted Ramdam (so they call our Salt) nothing else could so well please them, were this neuer so little. If wee denied trade one day, wee should not haue their companie in a weeke; so that we were willing to please them, the Blacke not applying himselfe to Cattell.

The Mandingos themselves, which are the Naturall Inhabitants, are perfectly blacke, liuing a most idle life, except two moneths of the yeare, in their Seed-time and haruest; wandering vp and downe at other times from one to another, hauing little knowledge, to hunt, fish, or fowle, how much soeuer both Woods and Waters abound in Game, the Beasts and Fowles (as Guinnie Hens and Partridges) resorting to their very doores. In the heate of the day they passe the time in companies chatting vnder the shady Trees, hauing one Game with some thirtie stones and holes cut in a piece of Wood, performed by a kind of counting. They ordinarily make but one meale a day, specially the vulgar and younger sort; or rather none, their boure of meale being after the day light is in; and then with fires of Reeds, without the doore, they sit round and

They may be of the Tangos maos before mentioned.

* Hester Nunez, &c. which vnder colour of trade waited their time to kill the English, and take their ship, Tomson and others being in their trade in the Countrey, or tincts on shore, and diuers sick: after much loue and pretended kindness.

The Fulbies. These being tawny, and the others blacke, sheweth that this colour comes from the seed which takes hold on the Portugals borne of Negro women, and not of the Sunne-burn'd Fulby, in the same place. Beashtly life.

and fall to their Viands; which for the most part are, Rice or some other Graine boyled, which being brought vnto them in Goards by the women hot, they put in their hands, roll it vp in Bals, and cast into their mouthes. Flesh, or fish their want of skill to get, hath made Rarities; their Cockes, and Hennes are plentifull; but spared to barter with vs for small pieces of Iron, Beads, and such Commodities. They hold it vnwholsome to eate in the heate of the day, the heate and moysture then exhaled to the exterior parts, and the inward cooler and more disabled for concoction: whereby we can in that heate easily drinke, yea and desire it, that quantitie of Aquainta, or hote Drinkes, which here would kill vs; and there wee drinke with more Temperance and satisfaction in lesse quantitie both Morning and Euening. And in my opinion it were fitter for vs to eate early, and againe, after the heate is past, in those parts.

Their Houses.

Their vsuall drinke is water, yet haue both Wine of Trees, as also their Dullo, of Graine, like our Ale. They place their Habitations round together, and for the most part haue a Wall of Reed made vp together some sixe foot high, (fortifying them against rauinous beasts, which yet cause often alarmes and mighty cryes) compassing their Towne, with doores of the same shut in the night. Some of the houses within are made of the same Reeds, but the better sort of Lome, reddish and remayning very hard, likely to yeeld the best Brick in the World, the whole Countrey but the Mountaynes, yeelding the same Earth. The Ant-hills are remarkable, cast vp in those parts by Pismires, some of them twentie foot in height, of compasse to contayne a dozen men, with the heate of the Sunne baked into that hardnesse, that we vse to hide our selues in the ragged coppes of them, when we tooke vp stands to shoot at Deere or wild beasts. The forme of their Houses is round, and couered with Reeds tyed fast to Rafts that they may endure the outrageous gusts and raines. Such are their meaner Townes and Villages; others they haue of force futable to their Warres, fortified and entrenched, of which the In-land hath store, and Cassan (against which the betrayed ship did ride) is such. It is the seat of the King, seated on the Riuer, enclosed round with Hurdles like those which our Shepherds vse, but about tenne foote high, fastened to strong Poles which are higher then the Hurdles. On the in-side in diuers places they haue buildings made like Turrets whence to shoote Arrowes and cast Darts against the Assailants; on the out-side is a Ditch or Trench of great breadth, beyond which againe the Towne is circled with posts and pieces of Trees set close and fast into the ground some fve foot high, so thicke that except in stiles and places made purposely, a single man cannot get thorow; and in like manner a small distance off is the like defence, which they say is to keepe off the force of Horse.

Fortifications.

Their Armes are an Azegay or Iauelin, with which in their hands they walke, beeing a Reed of sixe foot, with an Iron-pike artificially made and dangerous; they haue others to cast like Darts with barbed heads. About the necke a Bandelier of redde or yellow cloth with a Sword hanging of some two foot long and an open handle; the better sort carry a Bow in their hand, and at their backe a Case with many holes holding some foure and twentie Arrowes of Reed, as bigge as a Swans Quill, two foot long, headed with Iron poysoned, without nocke or feather: the Bow also made of a Reed, with a flat string or stick smoothed and fastened, of the same Wood, and to a Basse Jerkin or any sleight Garment of defence is little offense, the danger being in the Poyson. We haue seene them likewise on Horse-backe, their Horses small, bridled and saddled after the Spanish fashion, each man hauing an Assegie, and a broad Buckler hanging on the right side of his Horse. The Kings House is in the middle of the Towne enclosed by it selfe, with his Wines seuerall Houses about, to which you cannot come, but by a Court of Guard, passing thorow an open House where stands his Chaire emptye, in which none but himselfe may sit; by which hangs his Drummes, which euery night they vse to drumme on, hooping, singing, and making a wild confused noyse till day breake, with fires in the House and Yard: which noyse they vse in meaner Townes also to scarre away wild beasts.

Their Kings.

I saw and did eate and drinke with sixe of their Kings or Mansas, which haue reference to greater Kings liuing further; all the South-side of the Riuer as wee went, beeing subject to the King of Cantore, of the North-side halfe subject to the King of Bursale, the rest to the King of Woolley. These wee saw not, and they say, that they shew not themselues abroad but in pompe, hunting with great numbers of Horse, as our men saw the King of Bursale (when they passed to Cape Verde) and there are warres betwixt one side of the Riuer and the other, which were it not, Bursale would soone with his Horse subdue a great part of the Countrey, or if he had meanes of transportation. Before these which we saw, the people present themselues kneeling, and comming neerer layes his hand first on the ground, and then on his owne head couered, some laying dust thereon; which Ceremonie he vseth twice or thrice before he comes at him, then with much submission laying his hand on the Kings thigh, and so retyreth backe. And if a Marybuck be present in any company which thus come to him, after their salutation they all kneele downe, and he fals to praying for him and blessing him; to which he crossing his armes (the right hand ouer the left shoulder, and the left to the right) often answers, Amena, Amena, which is as Amen, with vs. When the common people meet, which haue not seene each other in long time, if there be a Marybucke amongst them, before salutation they put themselves in a Ring and kneele to Prayer. The King answers the people with nodding his head. His habit is little differing from theirs, the Countrey yeelding only Cotton to both, whereof they plant great fields, where it growts like Rose Bushes, yeelding a Cod which being ripe breakes and is white.

other parts are greater Cotton trees.

Their apparell.

Their apparell is a shirt and a paire of breeches: the shirt downe to the knees, wide like a Surplice, with great sleeues, which he rolleth vp and fastens to his shoulder when hee vseth his armes: the breeches made with so much stufte gathered iust on his buttockes, that hee seemeth to carry a Cushion, and they make him straddle. His legs are bare; some few wearing a piece of Leather vnder the foot, buttoned about the great Toe, and againe at the in-step. They are for 10 the most part bare-headed, saue that they are bedecked with Gregories, which are things of great esteeme, vsually made of Leather of seuerall fashions wondrous neatly, seeming hollow, with Writings in them receiued from their Marybuckes, reputed so holy that no euill can betyde them whiles they weare them. On their heads they weare them in manner of a Crosse from the fore-head to the necke, and from eare to eare: about their neckes, shoulders, bodies, armes aboue and below the elbow, round their middles, seeming laden with blessings for each member, both men and women, and most of all the King. Yea, if they haue any Maladie or Sore, they apply thereto these Gregories; neyther could I perceiue amongst them any other Physicke.
Their Horses also are thus blessed, wearing them about their neckes, and their Bowes.

Gregories.

Their women.

The King for greater state hath many times two of his Wines sit by him, laying their hands 20 on his naked skinne about the waste, stroking, and gently pulling the same. He hath an orderly allowance of seuen Wines, acknowledged with set Ceremonie, besides Concubines; sometimes yet of so many Wines not hauing one fit for carnall knowledge. The cause whereof is their membrous Monstrosity, the woman after she perceiueh conception not admitting further knowledge, lest she or it be destroyed. Custome also forbids it after deliuey till the Child be weyned, each Mother being herein complete, and her Childes Nurse. Adultery is seuerely punished, the man and woman being both sold (which is the punishment for great offences, none being put to death) the Portugals buying and transporting them to the West Indies. Other men may haue if they are able to buy, their pluralitie also, first compounding with the King or Gouvernour with some gratification, and then with the womans friends: which money, they say, remaynes in 30 banke if he dyes, for her better mayntenance, or if shee please to buy a Husband. For as the Mayde is bought, the Widow buyeth.

The Wines liue in great seruitude; they beate their Graine in Morters with staues like Cowle-staues; and dresse it and all manner of victuall, and bring and set it on the Mat before them, neuer admitted to sit and eate with them; neyther could I euer intreat that fauour of any for the best accounted Wife (which vsually they haue one most conuersant with the Husband, whom we called the Hand-wife) but euen she also how euer priuiledged from some other labours, may not eate in sight, but in another house. One shall not see kissing or any dalliance vsed betwixt the Husband and Wife, nor euer heare of brawling or falling out (which in this plurality and equality is strange) amongst themselves. Each woman hath her priuate Lodging and seue-40 rall House for the night. When they appeare in the morning, they salute him kneeling, laying their hands on his thighe. Her apparell is loose, parti-coloured, blue and white Cotton Cloth, from the waste vpwards bare, the rather to shew their printed rased bodies, whereof they are not a little proud, turning themselves to shew it, and pleased with the handling, seeming to vs as the printed lids of our baked meates. Sometimes they cast on their shoulders such another Cloth as they weare below. Most of them are nice in shewing Natures Secrets.

Admirable
subiection.

The Marriage Solemnitie is this; the man gets his friends with whom, and the younger sort he comes to the Towne where the Mayde is dwelling, in the beginning of a Moone-shine night.
These by violence, as it were, carrie her away shriking with a great noyse, seconded by the young Maydes of the same place; whereupon the young men of the Towne assemble in rescue, 50 the other notwithstanding, with great shouts and jubilees, carrying her away to the Bride-groomes abode: where she remayneth for a certayne time vnseene; after which for some Moones she shewes not her open face, but with a cloth couers all but one Eye.

Marriage-rites.

Their Kings and Grandes stand much on their Generositie and Antiquitie, whereof wee had experience in a quarrell betwixt Bo Iohn and the Kings Sonne, in whose Land wee then resided.
Succession is not to the Sonne of the deceased, but to his Brethren in course, and then to the Son of the eldest, the other Brethren holding some place, gouerned meane-while. Bo Iohn is the title of the yongest, Ferambara of the third, Ferran of the second, and the eldest is stiled Mansa, or King, which here was the King of Cantore, whom we saw not. Their greatest riches is the number of slaues, and from the King to the slaue they would all begge of vs; but small matters might serue, 60 except Aquanita, for which they would sell all, the Kings also drinking drunke: and the Kings life with them is to eate, drinke, sleepe, and company with their women, thus consuming their time till time consumes them. Our salutation to the King, he sitting on his Mat, was without moouing the Hat, to lay the hand on the brest bending the bodie (as hee also did) and then time ioyned full hand and shake hands: then sitting downe by him, after a little parley touching the cause of our comming (the King for state still speaking by another) out goeth our Bottle of Aquanita and Sacke, and calling for a small gourd which is their richest Plate, I beginne and drinke off a Cup, then presenting both Cup and Bottle to the King, after whom it passeth to the rest, no vnkindnesse taken if wee refuse to drinke any more. Before hee drinke, hee wets therewith one of his Gregories. They leaue not till all be out.

Marybucks trauellers.

Heir Marybucks or Bassareas, are their Priests or Religious persons, separated from others in their habitations and course of life. They tell of Adam, Eue, Noah, with other things mentioned in Scripture; like the Leuiticall Tribes, they haue their Townes and Lands proper to themselves, wherein dwell none of the Secular but their Slaues, whose Issue is their Inheritance; they marry also in their owne Tribe, breeding all their Children to their owne profession; haue as many Wiues and Women as the rest according to their degree. In every Marybucke Towne they haue a principall; they will put their hands to worke, and may be hired to doe seruice as well as others; wee agreed with them by the Moone. Their habit is as that of the vulgar. I visited Fodee Bram, the principall in his sicknesse, who sate on his Mat or Bed supported by three of his Wiues, to each of which I gaue a Pewter Ring, which hee tooke kindly, and caused a Dinner to be provided, and sent mee a Hide and an Elephants Tooth in recompense of a Present which I had giuen him, which here cost eightene pence. They worship one God and call him Alle, acknowledge Mahomet, are circumcised; obserue Friday Sabbath, but haue no Meskits or Mahumetan Churches or other Religious place, where they celebrate the same, following therein their occasions without intermission. They haue open round Houses not decently swept, in which they teach their Children to write and reade; Paper is of great esteeme with them; their Pen is a kind of Penfill; their Law is written in a Language differing from their vulgar. None of the Temporall people haue any vse of Bookes or Letters. We thought they made vse of some shade tree in the fields for their Assemblies: and one day saw a Marybucke comming with his Slaue to the Riuer-side close by our Wall, hee first with a Gourd full of water washed his members, without any nicety of our seeing him; then washing the empty Gourd, his slaue brought him other water wherewith he washed his hands, and after that a third for his face; after all which making a low reuerence with his body, and laying his hand on his brest, his face directed toward the East, * kneeled downe and in decent forme seemed to vtter certayne Prayers; which ended he kissed the ground, rose vp, turned his face to the West, and performed like Ceremonies, and then returned to his Lodging.

When Fodee Bram was dead, hee was laid in a house where a Graue was digged, and a great Pot of water set in the Roome, and after the Irish manner much crying (rather then mourning) being made, he was laid into the ground; the women running about in a Lunaticke fashion, with their armes spread made a terrible Spectacle of sorrow. The Marybucks assembled themselves in a conuenient place to receiue the multitude, neere the Graue, where the people sitting downe in a Ring, a Marybucke came forth in the midst, who betwixt saying and singing, seemed to rehearse certayne Verses in the prayse of the deceased, the people interjecting their applauses, clapping hands and running in to gratifie their Vates, (Poet or Prophet) with a Present. Thus one after another, euery Marybucke had his speech, but the most popular Orator carryed only the Presents. The principall might also take of the Graue, Earth, and Water in the Pot to make a Relike-ball thereof. Some dayes being thus spent, a great Solemnitie was made for the installing of his Sonne in the Succession.

They haue great Bookes, Manuscripts, with which we haue seene some of them laden. As the vulgar is insatiate with hote Drinkes, these are abstentious, strictly deuoted to poore pure water, as also their Wiues and Children; nor would endure the least Infant or playing Boy to tast of our liquor, or Raisins, Sugar, Fruits, or any sweet thing. Nor can the greatest Reasons in their sickness perswade a taste; insomuch that my Marybucke almost drowned once in a Whirle-pool, after twice sinking recovered, scarcely had any sense and yet shut his mouth to our Rosa-solis, whereby we sought to reuiue him, benefited no doubt by the sent; and being come to himselfe, he asked whether any had entred, saying, hee had rather haue dyed then any should haue come within him. Hereby they are easily discerned from the vulgar, and this sobriety makes them vsfull in their seruice and credible in their reports.

They dispose themselves generally to trauell, together with their Families, Bookes, and Boyes; the Countrey being open to them; renewing (it seemes) their provision when they come to some principall place: of vs it is most certayne they will begge, and a Quire of Paper is a great gift to a whole Company, which they vse to write their Gregories; and when wee send any of the people any whither, he will looke to haue a sheet or two of Paper about his couenant, to buy him sustenance in the way. These Mary-buckes by their travels are experienced in diuers Countries: and how euer the Countries agree or haue Warres, the Mary-bucke is alway a priuiledged person, with both sides; Yet doe they vse Armes as well as others, but rather I thinke for defence against Mankinde-beasts, then beastly vnkinde Men. Two Mary-buckes gaue vs much intelligence of Gold; one of which, when I came to take leaue of him, tooke my right hand betwixt his, vttering ouer the same certayne vnknowne words, and would euer and anon sparingly spetle vpon it; and the like he did ouer my right shoulder.

Cause why Paper is so esteemed, See Sup. pag. 1466.

10 The Inhabitants of Setico are all Mary-buckes, and haue continuall Trade to the King of Bur-fall, and carry Slaues to buy Salt which is there by the Sea side, a durtie kind: like Sea-coale ashes. This they make little vse of among themselves, but carrie it vp farre into the Countrey; their returne is Gold and Cola Nuts. The Gold is sayd to bee buried with them, or by themselves hidden secretly in the ground: for their vse in the next world. They buy also Bloud-stones long and square of the Portugals, which their Women weare about their middles, to preserue them from bloudie issues, the Mens membroitie seeming to giue thereto much occasion. They follow this Trade with great numbers of Asses. Bucker-sano is sayd to keepe three hundred Asses. They goe in Companies together, driving their slow-paced Asses before them, beginning their dayes journey with the Sunne: and trauell three houres, the heat then enforcing their rest; two houres before Sun-set setting forth againe, and holding on till Night, when the wilde Beasts forbid further trauell. At some good Townes they will stay and make shew of their Wares, in a kinde of Market; they carry their mattes for Beds with them.

20 Bucker-sanos Sword and Wiues Bracelets: seeming to come from these parts, I asked whence hee had them? He answered, of the Arabecks, which he described to bee tawnie Moors, coming in Companies with Camels, by which I perceiued they were of Barbarie. Some Women which had neuer seene white Men, were fearefull of vs, till the gift of Beads made them more daring; and they requited vs with neate Tabacco-pipe Canes: they were the deepest printed that euer I saw. Their Husbands in gallantrie weare Beasts skinnes, the tayles hanging to them as to the Beast, betwixt their buttockes. The Women weare golden Eare-rings; the Language was differing, yet the better sort could speake the Mandingo. Wee obserued some with three strakes vnder the Eyes, a distinction of the Subjects, of a certayne King further vp the River. A Mary-bucke told vs, that the Salt was sold to a people not farre from Iaye, which were deformed, their nether Lippe hanging downe toward the breast and putrifying, against which they vse Salt for a remedie: but conscious of this Deformitie, trade without sight or conference: a Day being set, on which the Merchants bring and lay downe their Commodities, which they leaue there one whole Day; and then returning, finde so much Gold layed by them as the Deformed will giue. If hee likes the price, he takes the Gold and leaues the Wares; or else them, and leaues the Gold, when the price contents him not. This is reported to bee the Arabeckes

40 Trade with that people.

No people is more adicted to Musicke, the Kings or principall persons being accompanied with their Iuddies or Fiddlers. The most common Instrument is made of a great Gourd, and a Necke therto fastened, in some sort resembling our Bandora, the strings meane, and vnfit, without frets, yet with Pinnes wound and fitted to some Harmonie. With this they haue a little Drum, whereon with a crooked sticke in the right hand, and the Fingers on the left, they play wringing the mouth and gaping very Deformedly. Their Ballards are a foot about ground, hollow vnder, with some seuentene Keyes on the top, on which the Player strikes sitting on the ground, with two stickes a foot long, with Balls fastened on the end: the sound may bee heard an English mile. This Instrument is one of their most ingenious Artifices. To euery one of these Keyes belongs a small Iron a foot long, as bigge as a Quill, vpon which hangs two Gourds vnder the hollow like

50 bottles, which cause the sound. There are few of them, but not a few which resort to them, and spend whole nights in Dancing, each person Male or Female single: giuing to the Musicians, whereby they are esteemed Rich, and their Wiues more adorned then the Kings with Bloud-stone: but these, if any licentious, as their carriage imports, These men are denyed Buriall, being set dead in a Tree, as conceiued to haue most familiaritie with their Ho-re Deuill, and are accounted Diuiners. Their greatest assembly is at the Circumcision, which is a set time yeerely. The youths which are Circumcised haue Licence permitted to flich Hennes, and from the Fulbies a Beefe, or young Cattle, to make merry with in the time of their sorenesse. It is done without religious Ceremonie, and hath no name but cutting of Prickes, the partie stripped naked and sitting on the ground, and the Butcher pulling the skinne off very farre, and cutting it, not without 60 terrour to the beholder. This is done in the greater Townes, to which the smaller send their Youth for this purpose, they being all kept in a House together: some Knaue neuer fayling to play the Ho-re at this meeting, by the Mary-buckes pollicie, as I found by experience. Thus the Deuill may bee belyed, who yet is an Oracle to them, as appeared by one of their Iuddies, Musicke and Musicians.

Their Ballards see before pag. 925. and Sup. 12. the like in Casaria.

Circumcision a seale of righteounesse without Faith.

- which had told one at Pompetane how many of vs, and at what houre wee should arrive, which was vncertayne to our selues, yet fell out accordingly.
- Their Trades. There are amongst them three principall Trades, the Smith which of Iron brought to them (for else they haue none) makes their Swords, Assagay heads, Darts and Arrow heads barbed; and Instruments of Husbandry, without which they could not liue. Hee hath his Bellows, small Anuill, and Cole of a red wood, which alone will giue the true heat to our Iron; who thus cut out Iron for vs, eight inches going aboue as well as twelue inches below, at ten for one gaine. The Smith if he be not looked too, will steale.
- Gregorie maker The next Trade is the Sepatero, or Gregorie maker, made artificially in all shapes, round and square and triangle, so as Our men would acknowledge Art. They make also Bridles and Saddles, of which I haue seene some very neat, hardly to be bettered heere: whereby it seemes they haue skill to dresse and dye their Deeres skins and Goats skins.
- Potters. A third Profession is of those which temper the Earth for their wals and pots in which they boyle meats, vsing for other seruices the gourd. Their Tabacco Pipes also (without which few or none, either men or women walke, and cannot of all things want) haue their bowles and neckes about two inches long of Earth, neatly glased, able commonly to hold halfe an ounce of Tabacco: they put a cane about a yard long into the necke, and so draw the smoake. These are peculiar Trades; other things are common to all, Mats to eate, sit, sleepe on, are their Staple commodity, as at Mangegar Market, we saw things bought and sold, without nominating any other price but Mats (How many Mats shall I giue you?) for Coyne they haue none.
- Tabacco pipes
- Mats.
- Husbandry. But the generall Trade from which none but the Kings and principall persons are exempted, is Husbandry whereto the Marybucke-priest, the people of all sises after their abilitie are subject: God hauing not giuen them wisdome to serue themselves of the beasts to that purpose. They make furrowes as decently as we doe, but with handie labour, hauing a short sticke about a yard long, on the end of which is a broad Iron like to that of our Paddle-staues; with which Iron set into the ground, one leades the way cutting the Earth before him, others following in the same tract with their seuerall Irons, so many as will make a sufficient furrow thorow the length of a spacious field: and when they are at the end, they begin againe, many hands making lighter riddance. They haue fixe seuerall graines for food, of which we know none here by name but Rice: the other seeme Seeds rather then Corne, being very small. Neither do they make any bread, but boyling the graine, roll it vp in Bals, as before is said: in like sort they boyle their Rice and eate it warme. This they set first in low Marish grounds, and after remooue them to places prepared for it, where it yeelds great increase: the other seeds they sow, and spaddle ouer the ground with their Irons, and so leaue it. They obserue their seasons for Tabacco, which they set about their houses, and for Cotton-seeds with which they set whole fields. The terriblenesse of their seasons doth further aggrauate the miseries of their Husbandry; which might learne vs thankfulness to whom God hath giuen the beasts in seruice, the Heauens seasonable, and besides, and with infinite other blessings, his owne Sonne.
- * Panike, Millet, &c. No Bread. They haue growing neere the Riuer mouth Bononos, as delicious and great as any in the West Indies; likewise store of small Limons or Limes, and Orenge were brought vs farre vp in the Riuer. Of Palmita trees their are whole grounds or groues, whence they draw a sweete Wine and wholsome, by cutting holes into the bodie of the tree, into which a Cane is put, which receiueth the sap and conueyes it into gourds. The vulgar may not meddle with this: it tastes like white Wine when it comes first ouer, and as many differences are thereof: but will not last aboue foure and twentie houres. Some of them beare Apples almost like Quinces, which the common people will eate. When they make Dullo, the King or some principall person makes a Feast, and hauing provided three or foure great Gourds, they make an end of all before they part. The Gourds grow like our Pompions, in that manner placed and carried vpon their wals, of vnequall quantities from an Egge to a Bushell, yeelding varietie of household Vessell to eate, drinke, wash clothes: the meat is bitter and throwne away, which seasons the shell so that it must be seasoned before it is fit for vse. They haue Pompions also like ours in nature and vse. They haue great store of Locust trees, which yeeld clusters of cods, ripe in May; the trees bigge and high, of which the younger sort eate. They haue store of Honey; for which they place baskets on great trees about their houses, made of Reed and Sedge, in which the Bees will come and breed: so many in some trees that to vs as farre off, they seemed as the fruit thereof. In hollow trees also are store of Bees. They haue one great sort of trees, which on a long stalke yeeldeth a great and round fruit, with a pleasing pith therein, whereon the Baboones and Monkies feed. Some are so bigge that ten men can hardly fathome. The Cola is much like our bigger sort of Chestnut, flat on both sides, yet without a hard shell, the taste very bitter, yet causing that which is taken immediately after to be very sweet, water tasting like white Wine and Sugar, Tabacco also hauing thereby an admirable sweetness. The elder which want Teeth to chew it, haue morters to bruike it. Fiftie of these presented to the King would buy a Wife. They are brought from some other parts. I would haue brought some into England, but they would not last. Amongst their Plants one is most admirable, a tree or bush commonly growing on the Riuer bank, resem-

Shed not their teeth.

Baboones and Monkeyes. He told me, he neuer saw greater Lion then of them: their height (standing vp) most admirable!

They haue many Lions, hardly seene by day, easily knowne by night, by reason of his Vshers or Fore-runners the Iackall, sometimes two or three, which is a little blacke shag-haired beast, of the bignesse of a small Spaniell; which when Eeuening comes hunts for his prey, and coming on the foote, followes the scent with open crie: to which the Lion as Chiefe Hunt, giues diligent eare, following for his aduantage. If the Iackall set vp his Chase before the Lion comes in, he howles out maynly, and then the Lion seifeth on it, making a grumbling noyse, whiles his Seruant stands by barking (as we not onely heard of the Countrey people, but might heare our selues riding at Anchor by night in our passing vp the Riuer) when the Lion hath done, this Attendant feeds on the Relikes.

There are many Ounces and Leopards, the prints of whose feet wee might often see in the mouthes of their Dennes or Holes, and many of their skinnies were brought to vs. The Ounce is the more rauenous: I saw a child which the Mother hauing left on a cloth at the doore, whiles she fetched water, an Ounce had gotten and being hotly pursued, let fall the childe out of the cloth which he carried away. Many times our Dogge hath beene driuen to our Bed-side by a hole he had thorow our straw walls, not daring with any animating to goe forth, till we with Firebrands haue scarred away the Ounce. The Ciuet-cat and the Porcupine, are diligent Purueyors for their Poulterie.

These are night-walkers: By day you may see the Elephants, of which the Countrey people are very fearefull: they doe much harme in their Corne and Cotton grounds, going in companies together. They feed amongst the Sedge, halfe their bodies appearing ouer the same, which yet is higher then a tall man can well reach; they bruise also on trees, whereof you shall finde many in the Woods by them pulled downe of bigge bodies, with their two great Teeth which are not like a Bores turning vpward; but downward, so that with his trunk bending the top, hee hasps ouer his two Teeth and then puls, that either the Tooth or Tree must yeeld; whence it comes that so many rift and broken Teeth, and pieces of Teeth are to bee had. They shed not their Teeth as Stagges their Hornes, but by death loose together themselves. I did eate of the flesh at Ferambrac house, who only (that wee knew) had a man which durst kill an Elephant, which with a poysoned Azagay tenne foote long (the head whereof I saw bound vp in a cloth with poyson) he performed, stealing into the Reeds behind the Elephant feeding, till hee might thrust his Iauelin into his bodie, there leauing it and fleeing away thorow the Reedes: the Poyson killing the beast, the people about from Trees watch, and when hee fals come and cut away the inflamed flesh, eating the rest. It seemed to mee good and sauourie meate. Thus had he killed so many as he shewed me tayles hanged vp. The people else-where seeme very fearefull of them, and yet they seemed as fearefull as a Forrest Stagge going from vs (which aduentured on them as wee met them) with a swifter pace then an able man can runne. One wee shot three times and lost him; but his Teeth were after brought vs to sell by those which had found him dead. There are wild Buls, and huge wilde Boares, of a darke blue colour, armed with large tuskes, and very bold; walking from vs with his tayle vpriight in a scornfull manner. There are great Antelopes, Deere of all sorts, and Beasts vnkowne. They brought vs strange Hides, amongst which, one foureene foot long, dunne, and streaked with white.

Their Baboones & Monkeyes may deserue mention: they go in Herds, the Monkeyes alwayes by themselves, as the Baboones also; and aswell within the Riuer Ilands to which they swim, contrary to some mens conceit; I had a Monkey which both swamme and diued often to escape from him which pursued him. The Baboones goe three or foure thousand in a Herd, marching in ranke, some of the greater being Leaders (their greatest are as bigge as Lions) the smaller following; euer and anon a great one as a Commander; inserted: the Females carrie their young vnder their bellies, and if they haue two, the other is carried aboue. In the Reare comes a great company of the bigger sort, as a Guard against Pursuers. Thus doe they march along and are very bold. And as we passe in the Riuer, when we come neere their troopes, they will get vp into the Trees, and stand in gaze vpon vs; and in a kind of cholericke humour, the great ones will shake the Trees, and with their hands clatter the boughes, with greater strength then a man is able; barking and making a noyse at vs, as much offended: and so following vs, in the night when we ride at Anchor, take vp their stands on the Mountayne tops or trees aboue vs, where wee might heare their gouernment. For often in the night, you shall heare many voyces together, when instantly one great voyce exalts it selfe, and that noyse is all hush; that we were wont to say, Master Constable speaks. On shoare when we suddenly meet with these troopes, the great ones will come forward and seeme to grinne in our faces, flying on the first offer of a Game. One of our people killed one with a Peece, but before the Boate could get ashore, the others had gotten it vp, and carried it away. The Countrey people will eat them heartily. We haue seene in Desert haunts of theirs, Trees and Plants woond and wrought together in that artificiall manner, thickly folded ouer head to keepe away the Sunne, and the ground so smooth and beaten below, as might appeare an excellent Arbour, which place they haue only vsed and kept for their Dancing and Disport. No man liuing which should see the place, and not know of the persons, would conceiue otherwise of it, then of Mans handie-worke (which wee knew it could not bee.)

Vnicornes.

We enquired aboue in the Countrey if they had any knowledge of the Vnicorne; and they haue told me that higher within the Land: is a beast which hath one horne only in his fore-head, but describe him to be of the colour and bignesse of a vallow Deere, and the horne to be about the length of their arme, and no otherwile; not like that which we haue described, of which I doubt, whether there be any such.

Land Fowle.

* Estriches & Emes vñe san-die Deserts.

For their Land Fowle, we neuer saw any * Estriches, nor had any of their Feathers brought vs by the people. The greatest we saw is a Stalker, whose long legges and necke makes him standing vpright to be taller then a man; his body is in substance more then an indifferent Lambe. Some of his Feathers are worne and well esteemed here at home. The next is a Wake, which makes great noyse when he flyeth; they doe much spoyle on their Rice grounds: they are of great stature, good food, carrying a beautifull shew on the crowne with a faire tuft. There is infinite store of those which we call Guinnie-hennes, as bigge and beautifull as our Pheasant, his Feathers layd ouer him like eyes: wee haue killed eight of them at a shoot, excellent meate. Their Partridges are of darke feathers, and are all ouer the inhabited parts, remayning neere their houses. The plentie of these and the former, shew that they haue no Foxes: their keeping so neere the houses, is to preserue them from the Baboones and Monkeyes which are no night-walkers, and frequent not frequented places by day.

There are store of Quailes as bigge as Woodcockes; and of Pidgeons, of which I haue killed with my Stone-bow, twenty in two houres. There are Parrats, but none good but the dun with the Red taylor; of Parakitos there are very faire, some which come to perfection. Of small Birds are many pleasing both the Eye and Eare.

Hanging Bird.

One strange Bird there is which hath no legges, but two strings by which he hangs with his head downe-wards, resembling a dead leafe hanging on the tree, and is directly of that colour, so that except hee light, you can hardly discouer him. And hee seemes to take pleasure to deceiue our Eyes, hanging wondrous steadie without motion, till you bee neere the touching. Another strange Bird there is, which flyeth with foure wings: wee see him not all the day, but an houre before night. His foremost wings are largest; the other two are a prettie distance backward; his bodie is borne vp as betwixt foure.

A Bird with foure wings.

No trees like ours.

It is remarkable, how Nature hath taught them to secure their Nests from Baboones and Monkeyes, the professed Enemies of Fowles. In their varietie of trees, there is none that I can call by an English name, as beeing of any of our kinds; but one there is full of prickles in the bodie and boughes; many of which grow on the Riuer bankes, hanging their tops ouer the water. On these trees, and on the water-shading side doe these Birds breed, winding their Nests with a hollow necke made of Reedes and Sedge, so that the whole Nest hangs like a Bottle fastned by the necke; in some places so thicke that that side of the tree seemes couered with Thatch.

Cunning building.

The Parrat speedes not so well, making his Nest on the out-most smallest twigge of a tree on the Land, winding it about so that it will not beare that bodie, whose wit seeing the young growne (for he can ouer-looke) teacheth him to sit fast on his hinder-feet, and taking the bough as neere the Nest as he dares, shakes it in that manner with his hands, that the young fall out for his share. Other Birds breed in holes, made in the ouer-hanging bankes of the Riuer: to escape both those beasts and the Snakes.

Hunting
Hawkes.

There are Hawkes, one sort as large as our Ger-falcon, which (the people say) will kill of themselves a Deere, seizing on his head, hanging fast and beating with his wings till the Deere faints, falls to his prey. There are small bastard Eagles, Buzzards, some with skinnies smelling like the Crocodile. These are meanes to the people to finde out Elephants, or other beasts dead, which become often sharers with these Hawkes. They haue no Ginnes nor Deuices to take Fowle, but when the King meanes to make a Feast, the people are all summoned, and placed in seuerall fit distances, so that the Guinie-hennes and Partridges are pursued without rest, till wearinesse deliuer them to their Enemies hands, and they to the King.

CHAP. XIII.

A Letter containning the admirable escape and glorious Victorie of NICHOLAS * ROBERTS Master, TRISTRAM STEVENS his Mate, and ROBERT SVCKSBICH Boatson of a Ship of Doner, taken by Algier Pyrates : which three men being carryed as Slaues by cleuen Turkes in the same Ship, partly killed, and partly sold them all, and returned free and safe home into England.

Ouing Friend, I haue receiued your Letter, &c. You desire to haue the whole proceedings of our unfortunate Voyage, yet fortunate to vs, who are heere to relate what the Lord hath done for vs: the which, as neere as God shall enable mee, I will make knowne unto you. First, ten leagues to the Southward of the North Cape, wee were chased by a Turkish man of Warre: of foure and thirtie Pieces of Ordnance, and being not farre from the shoare, it pleased God wee recovered it before hee could seich vs up: yet hee was so neere to vs before hee left vs, that he was within shot of vs, and seeing that wee were bent to runne ashoare: rather then to come into his hands, hee espied ten or twelue Boates vnder the Ile of Dones, Fisher-men, where wee were chased in, and left vs; and put out his Boate full of small Shot; and some of them hee tooke, and some got away, and some hee chased ashoare vpon the Island; and there hee landed his men and tooke them all away, to the number of fise and fiftie persons, and one killed. So there hee kept vs the space of foure dayes: at length away hee goes, and the next day wee finding the winde faire, came out and went along the shoare within Musket shot all the way, betwixt that and the Iles of Bayone.

At length wee espied this Sayle comming out of the Sea, and came directly in with the Iles of Bayone, and wee being so neere the shoare did not greatly feare, because wee thought what ener he was, wee should get the shoare before him. At last hee comming something neere to vs, wee saw it was no great Sayle, not passing one hundred Tunnes or thereabouts; and that there was no hope of running away, but that wee must either Fight it out, or runne ashoare. I called up all my Company, and asked them what they would doe, whether they would stand by mee and shew themselves like men, and that it might neuer bee said, that wee should runne away from him, being not much bigger then wee, although hee had as many more Ordnance as wee. They answered all with one consent, that they would lue and dye with mee: whereupon our Boate standing vpon the upper Decke, wee put her over-boord and fitted our selues; and by that time hee was come within shot of vs: presently wee fired a Piece, and shot crosse his Fore-foote * to see what hee was, and seeing hee would not strike, wee knew then that hee was a Turkish man of Warre. And presently wee shot two more, and as soone as they were off, hee held up his Sprit-sayle in the * Clewline, and shot two at vs.

Then wee hauing no Portes right aft, were forced to bring our Ship vpon a winde, to bring our Pieces to beare vpon him. At length he came so neere that hee hald vs: I being vpon the Poope, they let flye their small shot so fast, that there was no staying. For at last, as I was going aft, I heard the Captayne bid them stay their hands. With that I stayed and talked with him, and the Captayne in English bad mee strike my Top-sayle, and hee would doe me no hurt: and I seeing what they were, told him that they were Dogges, and that I would not strike nor trust him, but hee should come aboard and strike it himselfe. They hearing mee say so, let flye all their small Shot at me, and shot the Ropes a sunder besides, and yet it pleased God, not hurt me; so being vpon our weather quarter, wee freed our quarter Piece, and had our Piece haled in ready to put at that Port whiles that was a lading againe: but as soone as that Piece was shot off, he hald up his Sprit-sayle, and bore up his Helme, & fired his two chad Pieces, and came with all sayles to top aboard of vs, and carryed ouer our ship: and shee being something tender sided, and our Ports being all open, our Lee * Ports were all vnder water, and our Chists and things that were betwixt our Deckes did swimme, and the Piece of Ordnance that was hald in, got loose and fell to Leeward, like to carrie out the side and all. At which mischance our men being much discomfited, they tooke our Ship; And Richard White, which all this while was in company with vs, and so neere when wee began: that the Shot flew ouer him; in the time that wee strone with him hee got into Bayone.

And they put all aboard the man of Warre, and so wee put to Sea, and our Ship after vs as fast as shee could, being hardly able to beare any sayle. Yet that night being Munday night, and the foure and twentieth of March, it proued faire weather, and they began to risle vs, and the next day by two of the clocke in the after-noon, they had taken out as much things as possible could bee spared, leauing such things as of necessitie must bee left for the carriage of her for Sally: and then the Captayne sent for mee to come aboard our owne Ship. Where I was no sooner come, but hee caused three men to take mee, and lay me sit to the winde: chac't Pieces, are those which lie right forward, or right aft-ward on; the Decke is the floore which is the Ordnance placed.

* These three men serued their Appren- tiships at Doner, but were Western men borne: the Master in Corn-wall, the other two in Deuon-shire. I haue added this to the former, as pertaining also to Africa; and this with the former, and all the relations of Santos, and the Iesuits & some others, and so to the end of this Booke, as Appendix to the first Tome; being such Relations as I had not to insert in their due place but later come into my hands.

* Fore-foote is not a part of a Ship, but when two ships sayle, one so much a weather the other, that shee will goe a head of the other, it is then called the Fore-foote: so that it implies one Ships sayling a crosse another Ships way.

* Clewline, is to the top top-gallant and sprit-sayle, that which the Clew garnet is to the mayn-sayle: the Clew is the lower corner of the sayle where the tackes & sheats are made fast: the Clew-garnet, a rope fast to the Clew running thence in a blocke to the middle of the yard, to which it haies vp the Clew, &c.

upon my belly upon the Deckes, and two of them to lye upon my legges, and one to sit on my necke, and he himselfe with a Rope did giue me so many blowes, that I did intreat him: if euer hee came of a Woman, not to vse mee like a Dogge, but rather that hee should heane me ouer-boord: then to put me to that penurie. His answer was to mee againe, after that hee had vsed his pleasure to me; Thou Dog, if I doe finde any thing more then thou hast confest to mee, I will giue thee a hundred times as much, and when I haue done, I will heane thee ouer-boord. So leauing mee aboard of our Ship: and foure of our Companie and seuen Turkes, he bad vs stay till wee heard further from him. At last, it was accorded among them who should goe our Captayne to carry vs for Sally; and that was a Hamburger a Renegado, one that could speake very good English. As soone as my Mate understood that hee was to goe our Captayne, hee did intreat him upon his knees that he might goe with him, because hee did alwayes desire that hee might goe with mee wheresoeuer I went: and one of the Moores seeing of him intreating so hard to goe with him, gaue him two or three blowes, and bad him get him downe into the hold againe. But the Captayne hauing something more commiseration on him then the other, gaue him his Plate, and bad him goe into the Boate; for hee should goe with him. And they hauing a Witch aboard, told him: that hee should take but three that could doe their labour well, and send the rest aboard the man of Warre, and that hee should haue an especiall care to keepe the Weapons from vs; and so comming aboard, brought my Mate with him, and sent three of them away of our company, and brought three Turkes more besides himselfe: so there were no more of vs but my selfe, and my Mate, and the Boatson; and there were eleuen of them.

They presently made sayle and went away, and the man of Warre stayed there behind. Being parted from the man of Warre, wee agreed together to see if it pleased God to worke some meanes for our deliuerie: for our vsage was such aboard the man of Warre, that wee feared it would be worse if they got vs where they would haue us; and therefore did resolute by Gods helpe, either to quite our selues of it, or to end our misery: and passing the time from Tuesday to Thursday in this sorrowfull manner, in that time wee did deuise the best meanes that God did enable vs; which was, that when it did please God to send vs a gale of winde to vndergoe our businesse withall, that they should alwayes haue each of them a Wedge in their pockets, to barre fast the Cabbins doore where the Weapons were, because then two did alwayes steere halfe the Night. But they would neuer suffer mee so much as to come into the Steeredge, (for they were suspicious of vs) and would not suffer vs to haue a Knife; or if wee had at any time bene betwixt the Deckes, they would presently haue searcht the Ship from one end to the other, to see if they could finde any thing that wee had layed up. But I alwayes bad them haue a care that they should lay up nothing, but onely take notice where it lay; For there was nothing to trust to, but onely two Pompe-brakes, and they stood alwayes an end in the Pompes without suspicion of any of them. Other thing there was not any, save one peece of Ore that lay upon the Poupe: for they would not leane so much as a Hatchet, but as soone as they had done with it, would straight carrie it into the Cabbins againe.

Thursday night being come, it pleased God to send vs durty weather; but wee not suspecting that wee should haue an opportunitie so soone, they were vnprovided of their Wedges in their pockets. And at last there arose a great gust of winde out of the North-west, and yet was neither of our mens turnes to be at the Helme, which made vs doubtfull whether wee might giue the enterprise or no. At last, the winde did increase so much, that I did intreat the Captayne that one of our men might goe to the Helme, because I told him: I thought they could better * Cunne the Ship afore the Sea then his men could, and hee was very willing that hee should. So the Boates-man being neereft to it, stept vnto the steeredge and tooke the Helme, and hee that was at the Helme before: sate downe in the steeredge beside him, and baled the Steeredge doore too, and made it fast in the in-side. Now there were foure of them upon the Decke with vs, the Captayne and three more, and foure in the Cabbins abaft by the Weapons, and two betwixt the Deckes, and one in the Steeredge. So walking upon the Decke with them, at last wee saw our opportunitie that all the Turkes were abaft * vs, and wee by the Maine-mast.

I tooke my Coate and heaued it from mee for a signe to him, and so wee tooke the two Pompe-brakes and ranne on upon them, and hee with one blow, and I with another killed the Captayne out-right, and the rest were not long a dispatching: onely one that got the Poupe, but hee was not long there, for wee got him downe; yet hee got away from vs little better then dead. Now for the Boatson that was in the Steeredge, when the word was giuen (which was God and Saint George) putting his foot against the Steeredge doore, thinking it would flye open, the Turke had made it so fast that it would not: and the Turke was so busie with him with his Knife, that hee was forced to strue with him to get it from him. And in the meane time came one of the Turkes that was betwixt the Deckes, and opened the Cabbins doore where the weapons were, and one of them with a Cutlaxe ranne him into the side, and bore him vp against the Steeredge doore, and meeting with two ribbes did not goe cleane through his body. Hee seeing they were come all vpon him, did strue to get the Steeredge doore open, and at last did, but with great hurt, hauing sixe or seuen bleeding wounds vpon him: and the doore being open, the Turkes durst not for all their Weapons aduenture to come vpon the Decke. But wee being in the heate of blood, assayed twice to get the Steeredge from them, but could not; for they ranne vs through the clothes but did not hurt vs. Seeing that would not preuaile, wee got a Bucket of water to put the Candle out that was in the Bitakell, which they perceiuing: tooke it away and carried it into the Cabbins, and lighted two more.

Then

Then they began to light their Matches to shoot at vs, which as soone as wee perceived, wee got our Capstaine Barres, and made fast the doore, and one of the rough trees crosse all the Bulke head. This being done, we tooke the men that were dead: and layed them crosse the sight of the steeredge to keepe them from sight of vs, and then tooke one of our Hatches and opened it, and went downe betwixt the Deckes to see if we could find any there. At last, it being very darke, I felt where there was one lay under a Cabbin, and hauing one of the Turkes Knives in my hand, I stucke it into his side as farre as it would goe, and he crying out, my Mate came, thinking to strike him, and strooke mee vpon the hand, which did mee great hurt: for after that, I had but little vse of it when it was cold. But to proceed, that man wee killed, and seeking for more, I happened with another; which as soone as euer I did but touch his clothes, 10 thrust his Knife at me, and cut me crosse the thumbe, and ranne it into my hand a little way, and so got away that we could find him no more. Then fearing lest they would come all downe vpon vs, we went vp and layed our Hatches, and tooke the other rough tree, * and made them all fast. Then wee cut our maine Hall-yards, and let our Main-sayle runne downe to keepe them from sight of vs when it was day: and iust as we had made all things fast, it was light day, and it was betwixt twelue and one when we began.

When it was day, we durst not come vpon the Decke for feare of their Muskets, but went continually without boord: yet they shot twice at me vpon the Poupe, out of the Forecastle through the Main-sayle; and yet, I thanke God, hurt me not. And thus we continued from Thursday night till it was Saturday morning: and I askt them if they would steere in for the shoare, and saue their lines; or else they should presently die. They replied, they would not. Then we hauing an old Axe, I was minded to cut a hole in 20 our Bowe aboue the lower Decke; and then to open a scuttle, and let them come vp (and so wee would haue dispatcht them as fast as they had come) and then to haue layd her by the Lee, to haue stopt it againe. When they saw that was my resolution, and that wee had made a beginning, hee told mee that was the chiefe of them, that if I would saue their lines they would doe what I would haue them. I had them beare up the Helme, which they did, and gaue mee a Compasse out, and I set them their course to steere in by.

At last, I had them giue mee their Muskets out, and hee sware by the Sunne, that they had beaueed them ouer-boord (and so they had) and then I had them giue mee their weapons. They did beginne to feare, lest when we had got them, that wee would haue killed them; and fell downe on their knees, and did entreate that I would saue their lines, and that they were sorry for what they had done; thinking that 30 they had killed him that was in the steeredge with them, because they neuer heard him speake, all the time (and Indeed, he could not helpe himselfe but as he was listd by vs) I promised them, that I would not hurt them, and then they gaue me their weapons, and fetcht vs what we would haue. So by twelue of the clocke that day we made the Rocke: and fearing to beare in with it, for feare of Men of warre, we held in two or three leagues to the Northward of it. Seeing a great Towne by the waters side, we were in hope to get a Boat aboard before night; and comming with it, wee went as neere to it as wee could, and lay by the lee, and put out a weafe, and stayed there three houres, and no Boat would come to vs.

Then night comming on, we got our tacks aboard, and steered away for the Rocke againe, and the wind being at North-west, we were fearefull to hale off farre from the shoare for feare of Men of warre; but steered directly for the Rocke, and went not aboue halfe a mile without it, because the wind was 40 large enough: and as soone as we were shot to the South-ward of the Rocke, in a dye of raine the wind came to the West South-west, and we running that way in hope to carrie it away, the wind Southwarded still, till we had brought our selues so neere, that we had no roome to beare up, and hauing no After-sayle to make our ship stay, were forst (being but we two) to put our Anchor from the Bowe, and to breake open a Scuttle, and goe downe and vered to a whole Cable, and brought up the ship, and went vp and tooke in our Sayles, and got another Anchor from the Bowe, and made three or foure of the Turkes cleere the Cable to vs. This was about twelue of the clocke in the night, and when the day came on, the weather did beginne to encrease much, and the Sea was much growne, being so neere the shoare as wee were, that we were faine to cut our Masts by the boord, and being not able to doe it of our selues (being but two of vs, and ouer-watcht for want of sleepe; (for from Thursday night till Sunday night, we neuer 50 tooke winke of sleepe) I went to the Cabbin doore, and bad them come to helpe vs. They told mee they would come, but made no great haste; for they did feare that we would haue killed them. At last perceiving that I was very angrie with them, as I was cutting at our Main-mast, and my Mate at the Fore-mast, one of them came up, and fell downe on his knees and kist me by the foot, and begged of mee, that I would not kill him, and I told him that I would doe none of them any hurt, but they should come and helpe vs worke, and hee went and told his consorts what I had said. So vp they came all vpon the Decke, and euery one of them one after another came and kist vs by the feet, as well hee that lay hurt; as vs: and then we gaue them the Axes to cut the Masts, but wee kept the weapons, and when our Mayne-mast and Fore-mast were cut away, the ship did ride pretie easie, and then wee went to prayer, the Turkes sitting with vs: and I hauing no more Bookes left but a little Prayer-booke in my Pocket,

60 one of the Turkes went to his Bagge and fetcht mine owne Bible, and brought it to me; saying, Master here is a bigger Booke for you.

After Prayer, we did eate and drinke together, and were as though we had beene altogether consorts: there we ridde from twelue of the clocke at night, till two of the clocke in the after-noone the next day, and all this time there came not a Boat to vs, yet wee were but three miles from Cast Cales, wee were not halfe a mile from the Point, which if we could haue weathered, we might haue gone into Lisboa without any sayle, but it was not Gods will that it should be so. Sunday being the seuenih day after we were taken, we cut our Cables, and with our sprit-sayle and spritsayle-top sayle wee ranne into a flat place, being no more flat places there, that there was no hope of cuer sauing our liues (for the Rockes are as steepe as a house) and so, some by one meanes, and some by another, we got ashore: but we did not suffer one of the Turkes to goe till we were all ashore, and then wee went to a little Village halfe a mile from the place where we came ashore, and there we caused all the Turkes to be pinyoned (for not a man came to the waters side all this time) and so two or three of the men of the Village went with vs to Cast Cales, and there the Turkes were put in prison, and we were very well used, and they that were hurt were drest, and had a Chirurgeon to looke to vs for the space of two dayes, till we had a little refreshment our selues, and then a Boat provided for vs, and the Turkes to carrie vs to Lisboa, where after examination both of vs and them, the Gouvernours gaue them freely to vs, and told vs we did deserue a great deale more.

Thus haue I related vnto you the whole truth of our proceedings, and no more but what is truth, not for that I desire to bee applauded of men, but that whosoener shall heare this discourse, may not thinke that of our owne power we could doe this, but that it is the hand of the Lord hath done it: and the Lord grant that I and euery of vs may neuer be vnmindfull of that the Lord hath done for vs. Amen.

This Letter was written to Master Iohn Moulton, to whom also he wrote another, which I haue, demanding his aduice about that which seemed to mee a strange immanitie (that I say not inhumanitie and vnchristianitie alone) of men; as the other was the vnspeakable grace and bountie of God: namely, that the owners of the ship so taken (being also the Masters kinsmen) demanded, and by Law threatned to wring from him part of the Moneyes which they made by sale of the Turkes at Lisbon; where yet they were not in their possession, but as the Kings slaues; and the Kings Officers (for encouragement of others in like case) gaue them that money as Almes, howsoeuer it was reckoned also as their iust price. Neither would they giue them wages, which yet demanded this money; as if their eye had beene euill because Gods was good and gracious, like Ionas in his mad anger for the Nininites spared. But I hope they better bethought them afterwards, or else I would here name them to their euerlasting reproach: which I now forbear, as David did Shimeis punishment, in regard of so great and present an escape, victorie, triumph, which euen then had happened.

And because these Algier Pirats haue brought vs into the thoughts of Turkish power, the rather obseruing that last Turkish businesse, rather then Christian charitie: and of Turkiewe haue deliuered already diuers things remarkable; yet hauing since met with a piece of worth, I thought good also to communicate it vnto thee. It is a Royall present worth the receiuing: namely, to set thee in possession, and make thee Master of the Grand Signiors Serraglio: a sight hitherto prohibited, in manner, to Christian eyes. I doe not promise thee the stones and edifices, but a securer and quieter Title (for how lately hath the Master beene dispossessed of them and his life together, that I mention not the instabilitie of the present, who once before held, and after was holden of the same?) Here thou hast the Rarities of that Great Palace for the Matter and Arte, with the representation of the Turkish Court; the Rites prophane and deuout, solempne and priuate of the Grand Signior and all his Grandes: the Sultanas, the Women and Virgins, the Sonnes and Daughters Royall, the Great Officers of State, and of the Household, their Courts, their admirable Discipline, with other Observations such as I thinke (for a great part of them) haue not yet seene the publike light in any Language. These hath Master Robert Withers collected: after his ten yeeres obseruation at Constantinople, where he was educated by the care and cost of that late Honourable Embassadour from his Maiestie, Sir Paul Pindar, and well instructed by Turkish Schoolemasters in the Language, and admitted also to further sight of their unholy Holies then is vsuall. But why doe I hold thee longer from the Author himselfe; yea, from this promised Serraglio?

CHAP. XV.

The Grand Signiors Serraglio: written by Master ROBERT WITHERS.

§. I.

Description of the place, partitions, and manifold conueniences.

The situation.

He Serraglio wherein the Grand Signior dwelleth, with all his Court of Seruants, is wonderfully well situated; being built directly in that place where Bizantium stood, vpon a great point of the Mayne, which looketh towards the mouth of the Blacke Sea, and is in forme triangle; two sides whereof are circumpassed with Mare Egeum, and the third ioyneth to the rest of the Citie of Constantinople; It is enclosed with a very high and strong wall, vpon which there are diuers uers Watch-towers, and is by computation, about three Italian miles in compasse. It hath many Gates, some of which open towards the Sea side, and the rest into the Citie; but the chiefest Gate (which indeed is a very stately one) is one of those towards the Citie, and by it every one goeth in and out daily; the others being kept shut till such times as the King, or some of the principall Officers of the Serraglio shall cause any of them to bee opened, either for their pleasure to sit by the Sea side: where they haue a very dainty prospect, and may behold the ships sayling to and fro) or for any other occasion: likewise, if any other of the Land-gates be opened, it is either when the King sendeth priuately to put some Great man to death, or for the execution of some other secret businesse; but they are all locked fast in the night againe.

The compasse:
Gates.

10 The aforesaid chiefe and common Gate, is in the day time guarded by a great companie of Capoochees, which change their watch by turnes; and in the night likewise by others; all which Capoochees are vnder the command of a Capoochee-Bashee, which Capoochee-Bashees being sixe in number, are bound that every weeke one of them lie within the Serraglio, for the securitie and safeguard of the same. And without the Gate, about ten or twelue paces off, there stands a little House made of boords, vpon wheelles, in which every night a Companie of Ianizaries doe watch, who vpon any occasion are ready to awake those within, and to giue them notice of whatsoeuer sudden accident may happen without.

20 It is also well guarded, by the Sea side, in the night, for in the Watch-towers which are vpon the wall there lies diuers Agiamogians, which are to watch, and see that none come neere; and lest any shipping should dare to attempt some mischiefe, they haue Ordnance ready charged, and the Gunners lying hard by them.

In this Serraglio there are many stately Roomes, being appropriated to the seasons of the yeere; the greatest part whereof are built vpon plaine ground, some vpon the hills which are there; and some also vpon the Sea side, which are called Kiosks, that is, Roomes of faire prospect, or (as we terme them) banquetting Houses, into which the King oftentimes goeth alone, but most commonly with his Concubines, for his recreation.

Chamber of Audience.

30 There is amongst the aforesaid Roomes, the Chamber into which the Grand Signior repairereth, when he is to giue audience to Ambassadors; to the Bashees on the dayes of publique Dian, and to those who being to depart vpon any weighty seruice or employment, are to take their leaue of him; as also to such as are returned from their places of gouernment and charge which was before giuen vnto them: This Roome standeth in a fine little Court adorned with many very delicate Fountaines, and hath within it a Sofa spread with very sumptuous Carpets of Gold, and of crimson Veluet embroydered with very costly Pearles, vpon which the Grand Signior sitteth; and about the Chamber in stead of hangings, the walls are couered with very fine white stones, which hauing diuers sorts of leaues and flowers artificially wrought vpon them, doe make a glorious shew. There is also a little Roome adioyning vnto it, the whole inside whereof is couered with Siluer plate hatcht with Gold, and the ground is spread with very rich Persian Carpets of Silke and Gold.

Gardens.

40 There are belonging to the said Roomes and Lodgings of the King, very faire Gardens of all the sorts of Flowers and Fruits that are to bee found in those parts; with many very pleasant Walkes, enclosed with high Cypressse trees on each side; and Fountaines in such abundance that almost in every Walke there are some, such great delight doth the Grand Signior, and all Turkes in generall take in them.

Cypresssewalkes.

Besides the aforesaid Roomes (which are very many and serue onely for the Kings owne person) there is also the womens lodging, which is in a manner like a Nunnerie, wherein the Queene, the other Sultanaes, and all the Kings women and slaues doe dwell: and it hath within it all the commoditie that may be, of Bed-chambers, Dining-roomes, Withdrawing-roomes, Bagnoes, and all other kinds of building, necessarie for the vse and seruice of the women which dwell therein.

Womens Lodging.

50 There are likewise diuers Roomes and Lodgings built apart from all those afore-said, which serue both for the principall Officers, those of a meane degree, and also for the basest sort; and are so well furnished, that not any wanteth whatsoeuer is fit and necessary. Amongst which there are two large buildings; one of which is the Hazineh or priuate Treasure, and the other the Kings Wardrobe. These are two very handsome buildings, and secure, by reason of the thickenesse of their walls, and strong Iron windowes, and haue each of them an Iron doore, both which are alwaies kept shut, and that of the Hazineh sealed with the Kings Seale.

In the said Serraglio there are Roomes for prayer, Bagnoes, Schooles, Buttries, Kitchens, Stillatories, swimming places, places to runne Horses in, places to wrestle, Butts to shoot at, and to conclude, all the commoditie that may be had in a Princes Palace for things of that nature.

60 At the first entrance into the Serraglio, there is a very large and stately Gate, in the Porch whereof, there is alwaies a Guard of about fiftie men with their weapons by them; as Peeces, Bowes, and Swords: and hauing passed this Gate (through the which the Bashees, and other Great men may ride on horse-backe) there is a very Spacious Court-yard about a quarter of an Italian mile in length, and almost as much in bredth; and on the left hand of the Court neere

- vnto the gate there is a place to shelter the people and horses in raynie weather: and on the right hand there is an Hospital for such as fall sick in the Serraglio, in which there are all things necessary, and it is kept by an Eunuch, who hath many seruants vnder him to attend vpon the diseased: And likewise on the other side on the left hand, there is a very large place where they keepe Timber and Carts, and such like things, to haue them neere hand for the vse and seruice of the Serraglio; ouer which there is a great Hall, where are hanged vp many Weapons of Antiquity, as Cimitars, Iauelins, Bowes, Head-pees, Gauntlets, &c. which they keepe to lend the Souldiers and others, for to accompany the Grand Signior, or the Chiefe Vizier, when they make any solemne entry into the Citie of Constantinople.
- And hauing passed through the aforesaid Court, there is a second gate (at which the Bashaws 10 alight) somewhat lesse then the former, but more faire and costly; vnder which there is also a stately Porch, where there is likewise a guard of Capochees, prouided with weapons as they are at the first gate; and then there is another Court, lesse then the former, but farre more beautifull, by reason of the delicate Fountaynes, and walkes enclosed with Cipresse Trees, and the fine greene grasse plots in which the Gazells doe feed and bring forth young; insomuch, as it is an exceeding pleasant place; and in this Court (the Grand Signior only excepted) euery one must goe on foot: On both sides of the said Gate, there is an open Gallerie vnder set with very stately Pillars, without the which the Chianshes, the Ianizaries, and the Spahes, doe vse to stand all along in rankes very wel apparelled, at such times as there is a great Diuan held for the comming of any Ambassador, to kisse the Grand Signiors hand. 20
- In the said Court on the right hand are all the Kitchens, beeing in number nine, all which haue their Larders, and seuerall Officers for their seruice. The first, and greatest is the Kings; The second, the Queenes; The third, the Sultanaes; The fourth, the Capi Agbas; The fift, for the Diuan; The sixt, for the Agbas, the Kings Gentlemen; The seventh, for the meaner sort of seruants; The eighth, for the women; The ninth, for the vnder Officers of the Diuan, and such as attend there to doe what belongeth vnto them in their seueral callings.
- And on the left side of the Court, there is the Kings Stable of about thirtie, or thirtie fve very braue Horses, which his Highnesse keepeth for his exercise, when he pleaseth to runne or sport with his Gentlemen the Agbas in the Serraglio: ouer which Stable there is a row of Roomes, wherein is kept all the Furniture of the Horses, the which I hauing seene I can affirme, that they 30 are of an extraordinary value; for, the Bridles, Pettoralls, and Cruppers, are set so thicke with Jewels of diuers sorts, that the beholders are amazed to see them, they doe so farre exceed all imagination.
- Neere adioyning to the said Stable, are certayne buildings for the seruice of the Officers of the Diuan; and hauing passed two thirds of the Court, there is the Roome wherein the Diuan is kept; vnto which joyneth the Hazineh, called the outward Hazineh, the which the Diuan being ended, is sealed with the chiefe Viziers Seale: And euen with the Diuan but somewhat behind it towards the left hand, is the Gate which leadeth into the womens Lodgings, called the Queenes gate, which is kept and guarded by a company of blacke Eunuches.
- The aforesaid Court endeth at a third Gate, called the Kings Gate which leadeth into the 40 Roomes and Lodgings kept apart for himselfe, and such Gentlemen as attend vpon him continually; neither may any one enter therein, but by an absolute leaue from the Grand Signior (speaking of men of great qualitie) but such as are belonging to the Butterie or Kitchen, and Phisicians, Caters and Sewers, may goe in and out with leaue only of the Capi Agba, who is the Chiefe Chamberlaine of the Serraglio, and to him is committed the keeping of that Gate; and he is alwayes at hand (by reason his Lodging is neere) with a Company of white Eunuches about him like himselfe. So that, what is reported of things within this Gate, is for the most part by relation; for, either one may not see them, or if hee doe see them, it must bee when the King is absent; and hee must bee brought in by some man of qualitie and command, by one of the Gates at the Sea side: the which also cannot be obtayned but with great difficultie, and some 50 charge too, for a gratification to the guide; they hauing not onely great respect to their Kings person, but also to his roomes in his absence.
- And hauing passed the third Gate (the which hath also a very faire Porch) immediatly is seene the aforesaid Roome appointed for publique audience; into which the Grand Signior repaireth to giue audience to Ambassadors, and to the Bashaws; and there is also another very faire Court, paved with very fine Marble wrought with Mosaicall worke, wherein there are many delicate Fountaines, and sumptuous Buildings on all sides, in which (commonly) the King vseth to eate, and passe the time in some recreation.
- It happened, that I taking hold of a fit time, the King being abroad a hunting, through the great friendship which was twixt my selfe and the Kabiyah of the Bustangi Balbee; had the opportunity (he being my guide) to goe into the Serraglio, entring in at a Gate by the Sea side; where he shewed me many of the Kings backward roomes, diuers Bagnoes, and many other very curious and delightfull things, both for the excellencie of their gilding, and the abundance of Fountaynes that were in them. In particular, I saw a row of Sommer Roomes built vpon the 60 top top of a little Hill, so well contriued with Hals and Chambers, and so pleasantly seated and richly furnished, that it might very well be the Habitation of so great a Prince. Amongst which there was a Hall that was open towards the East, but vnder-set with very faire Pillars, which Hall looked into an artificiall foure square Lake (which they call Hawooz) proceeding from about thirtie Fountaynes: which were built vpon a kind of Terrase or high foundation of very fine Marble, which compassed the said Lake, so the water ranne from the Fountaynes aboue, downe into the Lake, and from the Lake it ranne through diuers Gutters into certayne Gardens: there might two men walke abreast vpon the Terrase, where they should heare the continuall and sweet Harmonie which the Fountaynes made with their Leaden Pipes, insomuch that it was a most delightfull place. And in the Lake there was a little Boat, the which (as I was enformed) the Grand Signior did oftentimes goe into with his Mutes and Buffones, to make them row vp and downe, and to sport with them, making them leape into the water; and many times as he walked with them aboue vpon the sides of the Lake, he would throw them downe into it, and plunge them ouer head and eares.

I looked also through a window which was in the wall of the said Hall, and saw his Highnesse Bed-chamber; the wals whereof were couered with stones of the finest China Metall, spotted with flowers of diuers colours, which made a very daintie shew: The Anteportaes were of cloth of Gold of Bursia, and their borders of Crimson Veluet, embroydered with Gold and Pearles: the posts of the Bed-stead were of siluer, hollow; and in stead of knobs on the tops of them there were set Lions made of Chrystall; the Canopie ouer it was of Cloth of Gold, and so were the Bolsters and the Matteresses. The floore of this Chamber (as of the other Roomes also) and the Sofaes, were couered with very costly Persian Carpets of silke and Gold, and the Pallets to sit on, with the Cushions to leane vpon, were of very rich cloth of Gold.

There was hanging in the midst of the aforesaid Hall a very great Lanthorne, the forme whereof was round, and the barres of siluer gilt, and set very thicke with Rubies, Emeralds, and Turkeses; the panes likewise were of very fine Chrystall, which made a very splendent shew. I saw also a Bason and Ewre to wash with, of masse Gold, set with Rubies and Turkeses, which did beautifie the Roome exceedingly.

Shooting.

Behind the Hall there was a place to shoot in, where I saw many very stately Bowes and Arrowes; and there were showne vnto mee, such strange passages made with Arrowes by the King himselfe through Brasse and Iron, that me thought it was almost vnpossible to bee done by the arme of any man.

The Roome which is called the publike Diuan, hath beene built of late yeeres; it is foure square, and about eight or nine paces euery way from side to side; it hath behind it another Roome for the seruice thereof, and one also at the comming into the Diuan, on the right hand, diuided only by a wooden rayle, with many other Roomes somewhat distant from it, which serue for the expedition of sundry businesses: This Diuan is called publike, because any kinde of person whatsoeuer publicly and indifferently, may haue free acceffe vnto it to require Iustice, to procure grants, and to end their Causes and Controuersies, of what nature, condition, or import so euer they bee.

§. II.

Of the Diuan Dayes, Indges, Session, Indicature, Dyet, Accounts.

THe Diuan dayes are foure in the Weeke; viz. Saturday, Sunday, Munday, and Tuesday, vpon which dayes, the Chiefe Vizir, with all the rest of the Vizirs; the two Cadischers of Gracia and Natolia (which are the Chiefe ouer all the Cadies of those two Prouinces; which Cadees are men of the Law, who by priuiledge doe gouerne in all places and Cities of the Ottoman Empire, as Iustices of Peace doe with vs, but with a little greater domination) the three Defterdars (whose charge is to gather in the Kings Reuenues, and likewise to pay all the Souldiers, and others which haue any stipend due vnto them :) The Reiskitarob (which is the Chancellor.) The Nishawngce, (that is, hee which signeth the Commandements and Letters with the Grand Signiors marke.) The Secretaries of all the Beshawes, and other great men; a great number of Clerkes or Scriueners, which are alwayes at hand attending at the doore of the Diuan; The Chiausb Bashee, who all that while that he is in the Serraglio, carrieth a siluer staffe in his hand; and many Chiausbes also to attend, that at the command of the Vizir they may bee readie to bee dispatched with such order as shall bee giuen them by him, to what place, or to whom soeuer; For, they are those which are employed in Ambassies, in ordinary Messages, to summon men to appeare before the Iustice, to keepe close Prisoners, and in fine to performe all businesses of that nature. All which aforesaid Officers, from the highest to the lowest are to be at the Diuan by breake of day.

Reuerence.

The Vizirs being come into Diwan, doe sit within at the further end thereof, with their faces towards the doore, vpon a bench which ioyneth to the wall, euery one in his place as hee is in degree, sitting all at the right hand of the chiefe Vizir (for with them the left is counted the upper hand) and on his left hand vpon the same bench doe sit the two Cadilefchers, first hee of Grecia, as being the more noble and famous Province, and then hee of Natolia. And on the right side at the comming in at the doore: doe sit the three Defterdars, who haue behind them (in the aforesayd roome which is deuided with a woodden rayle) all the sayd Clerkes or Scriueners who sit vpon the ground, with Paper and Pennes in their hands, being ready to write whatsoever is commanded them. And on the other side (ouer against the Defterdars) doth sit the Nishawnee, with his Pen in his hand: hauing his Officers round about him. And in the middest of the roome doe stand all such as require audience of the Bench.

Now being all come together, and euery man set in his owne place, forthwith the Petitioners begin their suites, one by one (who haue no need of Attorneys, for euery one is to speake for himselfe) referring themselves to the iudgement and sentence of the Chiefe Vizir, who (if hee please) may end all; for the other Bashawes doe not speake, but attend till such time as hee shall referre any thing to their arbitrement, as oftentimes hee doth, for hee hauing once vnderstood the substance onely of the Cause; (to free himselfe from too much trouble) remits the deciding of the greatest part to others; As for example, if it bee appertayning to the Ciuill Law, hee remits it to the Cadilefchers. If it bee of Accounts, to the Defterdars. If of Falshood, (as counterfeiting the Marke or such like) to the Nishawnee. If concerning Merchants, or Merchandizes (wherein there may bee any great difficultie) to some one of the other Bashawes which sit by him; so that after this manner he doth exceedingly ease himselfe of so great a burthen, which otherwise hee alone should bee enforced to vndergoe; reseruing onely to himselfe that which hee thinketh to bee of greatest import and consequence. And on this wise they spend the time vntill it bee Noone: at which houre (one of the Sewers being appointed to bee there present) the Chiefe Vizir commands that the Dinner bee brought in, and immediately all the common people depart. So the roome being free, the Tables are made readie after this manner before the Chiefe Vizir, there is set vpon a stoole a thinne round plate of Copper tinned, about the bignesse of the bottome of a Barrell, at which hee with one or two at the most of the other Bashawes, doe eate; the like is prepared for the rest of the Bashawes which doe eate together: And another for the Cadilefchers; one for the Defterdars; and one likewise for the Nishawnee. And hauing euery one a Napkin spread vpon his knees to keepe his Garments cleane; and a great quantitie of Bread being layd readie round about the sayd Copper plates, immediately the Meate is brought in, and set before them vpon the Plates in great Dishes (which they call Tepsee) and still as they haue eaten of one Dish, the Sewer takes off that and sets on another. Their dyet is ordinarily Mutton, Hennes, Pigeons, Geese, Lambe, Chickens, broath of Rice and Pulse, dressed in diuers manners, and some Tarts or such like at the last, so in very short space they make an end of their Dinner. That which remayneth of the sayd Tables, the Officers of the Diwan doe eate, but they haue more also allowed and brought them from their Kitchen. The Bashawes and other Great men, haue Drinke brought vnto them, which is Sherbet, in great Porcelaine Dishes; but the others doe either not drinke at all, if they doe drinke, it is faire Water brought them from the Fountaines. And the same time, when the Vizirs of the Bench and others of the Diwan are at Dinner, the vnder Officers, Waiters, and Keepers, doe dine also; the which are not lesse ordinarily then foure or fise hundred persons, but their food is nothing but Bread and Pottage, which they call Churma.

Dinner being ended, the chiefe Vizir attendeth onely publique Affaires, and taking Counsell together (if hee pleaseth and thinketh it fit) with the other Bashawes; at last, hee determineth and resolueth of all within himselfe, and prepareth to goe in vnto the King; It being the ordinarie custome so to doe in two of the foure Diwan dayes, that is, vpon Sunday, and vpon Tuesday; to render an account vnto his Maiestie, of all such businesses as hee hath dispatched. And to this end the Grand Signior (after hee hath dined also) repayreth vnto his Chamber of Audience, and being set downe vpon a Sofa, sendeth the Capi Agha (which hath in his hand a Siluer staffe) to call first the Cadilefchers, who immediately rise vp out of their places, and hauing bowed to the chiefe Vizir, they depart, being accompanied with the sayd Capi Agha, and Chiausli Bashawee, who goe before them with their Siluer staves in their hands, and so they goe in vnto the King, to giue account and make him acquainted with what hath passed concerning their Charge, and so they being dismissed, (for that day) they goe directly home to their owne Houses.

Next after them are called the Defterdars, who in the same manner are brought vnto the King, and hauing dispatched, they take leaue, and giue place to the Vizirs who are called last of all, and goe together in a ranke one after another, the Chiefe Vizir being formost, vihered along by the two aforesayd Siluer staves. And being come before the presence of the Grand Signior, they stand with their hands before them, holding downe their heads, in token of Humilitie; and so none but the Chiefe Vizir speaketh, and giues an account of what hee thinketh fit, deliuering his Memorials or Arzes one by one, the which the King hauing read, the Vizier taketh them, and hauing put them into a little crimson Sattin bagge, hee most humbly layeth them downe againe before his Maiestie: and so if the Grand Signior demand no further of him (the other Bashawes not hauing spoken one word all this while) they all depart and take horse at the second Gate; and being accompanied by their owne people, and by diuers others (especially the chiefe Vizier) who is brought euen into his owne house by a great companie of Chiaushees and others, all for the most part on horse-backe) they goe euery one to his owne Serraglio, and so the Dinan is ended for that day, it being about two houres after noone.

It is to be noted that sometimes also the Agha of the Ianzaries, and the Captaine Bashaw come to the Dinan, when they are at home in Constantinople, and haue businesse to doe there: but the Captaine Bashaw onely doth goe in vnto the King (which also may not be but in companie of the other Bashawes) to acquaint his Highnesse with the state and affaires of the Arsenal and Armado; his place in the Dinan is vpon the same Bench, but yet hee sitteth last of all the Bashawes, vnlesse he bee one of the Viziers (as it is often seene) and then hee sitteth second, or third, as he is in degree by election: but the Agha of the Ianzaries doth not sit in Dinan, but sitteth vnder the open Gallerie on the right hand, within the second Gate; and if so bee it so fall out, vpon some extraordinarie businesse, that hee be to goe in vnto the King, then he goeth first of all others; and being come out againe from him, he sitteth downe againe in his place, vntill the Dinan be ended; and he is the last that departeth of all the great men.

The Grand Signiors Predecessors were alwaies wont, and this man sometimes commeth privately by an vpper way to a certaine little window which looketh into the Dinan, right ouer the head of the chiefe Vizier, and there sitteth with a Lattice before him, that he may not be seene, to heare and see what is done in the Dinan; and especially at such times when he is to giue audience to any Ambassadour from a great Prince, to see him eate, and heare him reason with the Bashawes: and by this his comming to that window, the chiefe Vizier (who alwaies standeth in ieopardy of losing his head, vpon any displeasure of the Grand Signior) is enforced to carrie himselfe very vprightly, and circumspectly in the managing of his affaires.

§. III.

Of Ambassadors entertainment and audience.

When it falleth out that an Ambassadour from any great King is to kisse the Grand Signiors hand, it must bee either vpon a Sunday or vpon a Tuesday; for those are the dayes appointed for his Highnesse to giue audience, to the end he may not bee troubled at other times: and then the Vizier commandeth that there be a great Dinan, which is, by calling together all the Great men of the Port, all the Chiaushees, all the Mutase-rakes, all the Spahes, and all the Ianzaries; who are euery one of them commanded by their Captaines to apparell themselues in the best manner that they are able; and to goe euery one to his ordinary place in the second Court, and there to stand in orderly rankes; who indeed make a very goodly shoue, for they are very well clothed, and are most of them of comely personage.

The Dinan being all in order (in which at that time there are very few or no particular causes at all handled) the chiefe Vizier sendeth the Chiaushe Bashaw, with many of his Chiaushees on horse-backe to fetch the Ambassadour, who being come to the Dinan, is set face to face close before the chiefe Vizier vpon a stoole couered with cloth of Gold; and hauing for a while complimented and vsed some pleasant discourse together; the Bashaw commandeth that the dinner bee brought, the which is done after the aforesaid manner, (only the round plate Table, on which the meate is set is of Siluer, and the victuals are more delicate and in greater abundance.) And so the Ambassadour, and the chiefe Vizier, with one or two of the other Bashawes doe eate together: and for euery such Banquet at such times, the Grand Signior alloweth the Steward a thousand Crownes to spend.

They hauing dined, the Vizier entertayneth the Ambassadour: with some discourse till such time as the Ambassadors people haue also dined; and then the Ambassadour together with his owne attendants retire into a certaine place neere the Grand Signiors Gate, where hee stayeth till such time as all the orders of the Dinan haue had audience of the King, who being dismissed, doe all depart (except the Bashawes onely, who for the Grand Signiors honour are to stay and attend in the Roome vpon his Maiestie.) And then the Ambassadour is called by the Master of the Ceremonies, by whom hee is brought to the Gate, whereat the Capi Agha standeth with a ranke of Eunuches, which Capi Agha leadeth him to the doore of the Roome, where there doe stand two Capoochee Bashawes ready, who take the Ambassadour, the one by one arme, and the other by the other, and so leade him to kisse his Highnesse hand, which he hauing done, they leade him backe in the same manner to the wall of the Roome, where hee standeth till such time as the said Capoochee Bashawes, haue also led such of the Ambassadors Gentlemen as are appointed Departure. to kisse the Kings hand : and then the Druggaman declareth the Ambassadors Commission, to which the Grand Signior maketh no answer, but only speaketh a word or two to the chiefe Vizir to licence him ; and so the Ambassador departeth, doing reuerence to the King, bowing downe his head, and not pulling of his Hat or Cap at all.

Vesting. This one particular is worthie the obseruation, and that is this; There is not any person whatsoever, as well Ambassador as other, which being to kisse the Grand Signiors hand, that is not vested with a Vest giuen him by the Grand Signior. And to this end, before the Ambassador goeth in to the King, the chiefe Vizir sendeth him so many Vests as are appointed in the Canon, for him and his Gentlemen, who put them on the place where the Ambassador stayeth till the King sends for him to haue his audience. The said Vests are of diuers sorts, of which there is one or two for the Ambassadors owne person of cloth of Gold of Bursia; the other being of lowe price worth little or nothing. But in lieu of those Vests, there is not any Ambassador (which is to goe to the King for his audience;) or Bashaw (which at his returne from some employment abroad, is to kisse his hand;) but they present him to the full of what the Canon requireth, in so much that the Grand Signior receiueth farre more then he giueth. Besides, the Bashawes (ouer and aboue the ordinarie Canon) doe giue him exceeding great and rich Presents; together with great summes of money; sometimes, to the end they may continue in his grace and fauour.

Recompence. Other Ambassadors which come from petie Princes or States, howbeit they are vested also with Vests giuen them by the Grand Signior; yet they goe not to the Diwan in that pompe, neither are they feasted as the others are, but goe priuately, carrying their Present with them; howsoever they are lead in vnto the King after the aforesaid manner.

All Ambassadors but the Venetian, at the Kings charge. It is to be noted, that all Ambassadors from absolute Princes, as well ordinary as extraordinary, (except those from the Signioria of Venice, to whom from their first introduction it was denied) all, I say, lie at the charges of the Grand Signior; for, from his owne store they haue allowed them Wheat, Barlie, Pulse, Wood, Coles, Hay, the custome of their Wine, and all other necessities to spend in their houses, and from the Defterdar so many Aspars per diem; which prouision, though now of late it be somewhat hard to be gotten in; yet by gifts and importunitie, in the end they receiue the greatest part of it, though the Officers will share with them.

Hauiing thus farre made description of the Serraglio, and the Buildings which are therein; with some other particulars belonging vnto it, according to that which I haue seene and heard by relation. It followeth that I speake somewhat touching those which dwell in it, and concerning their ministerie and functions.

§. IIII.

Of the persons which liue in the Serraglio: and first of the Women and Virgins, their manner of life there.

One Lord, the rest Slaues. Irst, I say that all they which are in the Serraglio, both men and women, are the Grand Signiors slaues, and so are all they which are subiect to his Empire: for, as hee is their onely Soueraigne, so they doe all of them acknowledge, that whatsoever they doe possesse or enjoy, proceedeth meerely and simply from his goodwill and fauour.

This Serraglio may rightly bee termed the Seminarie or Nurserie of Subiects; for, in it all they haue their bringing vp, which afterward become the principall Officers, and subordinate Rulers of the state and affaires of the whole Empire.

3000. within the Kings gate. They which are within the third Gate, called the Kings gate, are about two thousand persons men and women, whereof the women (old and young one with another, what with the Kings Concubines, old women, and women seruants) may bee about eleuen or twelue hundred. Now, those which are kept vp for their beauties, are all young Virgins taken and stolen from forren Nations, who after they haue bene nurtured in good manners, and can play on Instruments, sing, dance, and sew curiously, they are giuen to the Grand Signior as Presents of exceeding great value; and the number of these encreaseth daily, according as they are sent and presented by the Tartars, by the Bashawes, and other great men, to the King and Queene: they doe likewise decrease sometimes, according as the Grand Signior seeth fit, who vpon some occasions and accidents, causeth many of them to be sent out of this Serraglio into the old Serraglio, which is also a very goodly and spacious place, as hereafter I shall take occasion to make mention of.

Virgins made Turkes, and how. These Virgins, immediatly after their comming into the Serraglio are made Turkes, which is done by vsing this ceremonie onely, to hold vp their fore-finger, and say, Law illaw-beh il Al-lawh Muhamedrefull Allawh, that is, there is no God but God alone, and Mahomet is the Messenger of God: and according as they are in age and disposition, (being proued and examined by an old woman called Cahiyah Cadun, that is, as wee say, the Mother of the Maides) so they are placed in a Roome with the others of the same age, spirit, and inclination, to dwell and liue together. Now, in the Womens lodgings, they liue iust as the Nunnies doe in their great Mona-

Monasteries; for, these Virgins haue very large Roomes to liue in, and their Bed-chambers will hold almost a hundred of them a piece: they sleepe vpon Sofas, which are built long wise on both sides of the Roome, so that there is a large space in the midst for to walke in. Their Beds are very course and hard, and by euery ten Virgins there lies an old woman: and all the night long there are many lights burning, so that one may see very plainly throughout the whole Roome; which doth both keepe the yong Wenchies from wantonnesse, and serue vpon any occasion which may happen in the night: neere vnto the said Bed-chambers they haue their Bagnoes, and Kitchins for their vse at all times, with a great abundance of Fountaines of which they are serued with water. Aboue ouer the said Bed-chambers there are diuers Roomes, where they sit and sew, and keepe their Chifts in which they lay vp their apparell. They feed by whole Camaradaes, and are serued and waited vpon by other women; so that they doe not want any thing whatsoever which is necessary for them. They haue other places likewise where they goe to schoole, to learne to speake and reade the Turkish tongue, to sew, and play on Instruments; and so they spend the day with their Mistresses which are ancient women: some houres notwithstanding being allowed them for their recreation, to walke in their Gardens, and vse such sports as they familiarly exercise themselues withall.

The King doth not at all frequent or see these Virgins, vnlesse it be at the instant when they are first giuen him, or else in case that he desire one of them for his bed-fellow, or to shew him some pastime with Musike and tumbling trickes: and then hee giueth notice to the aforesaid Cabiyah Cadun of his purpose, who immediatly chooseth out such as shee thinketh to bee the most amiable and fairest, and hauing placed them in good order in a Roome, in two rankes, halfe on the one side and halfe on the other, shee forthwith brings in the King, who walking foure or fise turnes in the midst of them, and hauing viewed them well, taketh good notice of her which he best liketh, but sayeth nothing, onely as he goeth out againe, he throweth a Hand-kerchiefe into that Virgins hand, by which shee knoweth that shee is to lie with him that night; and she being wondrous glad of so good a fortune, to be chosen out from among so many to enioy the societie of an Emperour, hath all the art that possible may bee shewen vpon her by the Cadun, in attiring, painting, and perfuming her, and so at night shee is brought to sleepe with the Grand Signior in the womens lodgings: (there being diuers Chambers appropriated for that businesse onely: and being in bed they haue two great Waxe lights burning by them all night, one at the beds feet, and the other by the doore; and there are appointed (by the Cadun) diuers old Blacke-moore women, which watch by turnes that night in the Chamber, two at a time, one to sit by the said light at the Beds feet, and the other by the doore, and when they will they change, and other two supply their roomes, without making the least noise imaginable, so that the King is not any wise disturbed. And in the morning when his Highnesse riseth (for he riseth first) he changeth all his apparell from top to toe, leauing those which hee wore to her that he lay withall, and all the money that was in his pockets were it neuer so much; and so departeth to his owne lodgings, from whence also he sendeth her immediatly a Present of Iewels, Vests and Money of great value, according to the satisfaction and content which hee receiued from her that night: in the same manner hee is to deale with all the others which hee maketh vse of in that kind, but with some he continueth longer, and enlargeth his bounty more towards some then to others, according as his humour and affection to them encreaseth; by their fulfilling his lustfull desires. And if it so fall out, that any one of them doe conceiue by him and bring forth his first begotten child, she is called by the name of Sultana Queene, and if the child bee a sonne, then shee is confirmed and established by great Feasts and Solemnities; and hath a dwelling apart assigned vnto her, of many stately Roomes well furnished, and many seruants to attend vpon her: The King likewise alloweth her a very sufficient Reuenue, that shee may giue away and spend at her pleasure, in whatsoever shee may haue occasion; and all they of the Serraglio doe acknowledge her for Queene, shewing all the respect and dutie that may bee, both to her and hers.

Other Sultanaes.

The other women (howsoeuer they bring forth issue) are not called Queenes; yet they are called Sultanaes, because they haue had carnall commerce with the King. And shee onely is called Queene, which is the Mother of the first begotten Sonne, Heire to the Empire: the which Sultanaes being frequented by the King at his pleasure, haue also this prerogatiue, to be immediatly remoued from the common sort, and to liue in Roomes apart, exceeding well serued and attended, and haue no want either of Money, or of Apparell, in conformitie of their degree. All these Sultanaes doe resort together very familiarly, when they please; but not without great dissimulation and inward malice, fearing lest the one should be better beloued of the King then the other; howbeit in outward shew they vse all kind of curtesie one towards another.

And if it happen that the first begotten sonne of the Queene (Heire to the Empire) should die, and another of the Sultanaes should haue a second sonne; then her sonne being to succeed the deceased Heire, shee is immediatly made Queene, and the former shall remayne a Sultana onely: and so the title of Queene runneth from one Sultana to another, by vertue of the sonnes succession.

Queen changed.

- Nuptiall rites. Sometimes the Queene was wont to bee wedded to the King, but now shee passeth without the Kebir, that is, without an assignment of any Ioynture, or celebrating the Nuptiall rites; which is nothing else, but in the presence of the Musfee, to giue each of them their assent to Matrimonie, of which the Musfee maketh Hoget, that is, an authenticall Writing or Testification, not onely of the Consent of the two parties contracted, but also of the Dowrie which the King is to allow her.
- Ioynture. The reason why the Queenes are not now (nor haue not beene of late) espoused; is, not to dismember the Kings Patrimonie of five hundred thousand Chicquins a yeere: For, Sultan Selim hauing allowed so much to the Empreffe his Wife, (to the end she might spend freely, and build Churches and Hospitals, so that by all meanes she might bee honoured and esteemed) left order by Canon, that all his Successours should doe the like, if so bee they determined to be married to their Queenes. But now the sayd reuenues being otherwise imployed, the Bashawes doe what in them lyeth to dissuade the Grand Signior from marrying: and so much the rather, because they would haue none but the King alone to rule: yet howsoeuer, (married or not married) the Mother of the Heyre is by every one called and acknowledged for Queene, and presented with rich Presents from all great Personages, and hath continually at her Gate, a Guard of thirtie or fortie blacke Eunuches, together with the Kuzlar Aga their Master, whom shee commandeth and imployeth in all her occasions, and so doe all the other Sultanaes, the which neuer stirre out of the Serraglio, but in companie of the King himselfe, who oftentimes carrieth either all or most of them, abroad by water to his other Serraglio's of pleasure. And in those wayes through which they passe to goe to and fro their Kaiks, their is Canuasse pitched on both sides, and none are by them but blacke Eunuches, till they are sealed close in the roome at the sterne of the Kaik; then goe in the Barge-men: so that in fine, they are neuer scene by any men, but onely by the Grand Signior and the Eunuches.
- Guard of black Eunuches.
- Canuasse-way.
- Kings Daughters and Sisters The Kings Daughters, Sisters, and Aunts, haue their lodgings also in the same Serraglio, being roially serued, and sumptuously Apparellled, and liue together by themselves in continuall pleasures; vntill such time as the King shall bee pleased to giue them in Marriage, and then they come out of that Serraglio, and carry each of them along with them a Chest which the King giues them, full of Gownes of Cloath of Gold, rich Jewels, and Chicquins, to the value of at least thirtie thousand pounds sterling per Chest, and that is (as wee call it) their Portion. They carrie likewise along with them, all that which they hid from time to time, things of great price which haue beene giuen them, which sometimes amounteth to a great matter, and stands them in stead all their liues time. And if so bee that the Grand Signior loues them, and is willing to further them, and deale roially with them; then they are suffered to carry out of the Serraglio, as many Slaues with them as they will, (prouided they exceed not the number of twentie a piece) and such Eunuches as they like best for their seruice. These also being named Sultanaes, serue still (during their liues) the stipend which they had within the Serraglio some a thousand, and some a thousand five hundred Aspers per Diem, the Slaues also and the Eunuches doe likewise enioy their former allowance. Their Houses are furnished, both with household stuffe and other necessarie prouision from the Kings Hafineh and Begglick, that they may liue Alla grande, like Sultanaes; so that in conclusion, they liue farre better without the Serraglio then they did within.
- Portion-Chest
- Slaues and Eunuches.
- Bill of Dowrie. And if so bee, that a Bashaw hauing married one of them, bee not prouided of a House fit for her, then the King giueth her one of his (for hee hath many) that her House may bee correspondent with her Greatnesse and qualitie. Now for the Husbands part, hee is on the contrarie to make her a Bill of Dowrie, which is called Kebir, as aforesayd, of at least a hundred thousand Chicquins in money, besides Vests, Jewels, Brooches, and other Ornaments, amounting to a great summe. For although the fashion of a Sultanaes habite bee common, and nothing different from other Womens, yet the substance is farre more proud and costly; the which redounds to the great charge and losse of their Husbands. They being thus married, doe not at all conuerse with any men, more then they did when they liued in the Kings Serraglio, (except with their owne Husbands) but with women onely; and that is commonly when they goe vpon visits to see their old acquaintance in the Serraglio: but hauing themselves come forth of the same (as I sayd before) they may not come in againe without the Grand Signior's leaue and sufferance.
- Prinacesse.
- Visittings.
- They are their Husbands masters. These Sultanaes (the Bashawes wiues) are for the most part their Husbands Masters, and command them as they please: they alwayes weare a Hanjar (that is, a Dagger) set with rich Stones, in token of their predomination, and call their Husbands Slaues, doing good or euill for them, as they receiue content & satisfaction from them, or as they find them powerfull with the King. And sometimes they put their Husbands away and take others, but not without the Grand Signior's leaue, which would proue to bee the death and ruine of the poore Husbands.
- Their Dagger.
- Diuorce.
- What becomes of the other Women. Now the other women, which neuer were so fortunate as to bee beloued of the King, liue together and dyet with the rest, wasting their youthfull dayes amongst themselves in euill thoughts, (for they are too well lookt vnto to offend in Act;) and when they are growne old, they serue for Mistresses and Quer-seers of the young ones, which daily are brought into the Serraglio: but hold it their best fortune (their former hopes of being Bed-fellowes to an Emperour : being now frustrated) through some accident, to bee sent forth from thence into the old Serraglio, for from thence they may bee married (if the Mistrresse of that place giue her consent) and take with them such money, as they through their frugallitie haue saued and spared of their former allowance in the Kings Serraglio, and such things as haue beene giuen them, which may amount to a reasonable value. For in the Serraglio they get many things from the Sultanaes, besides their currant pay out of the Kings Hazineb, of fifteene or twentie Aspers per diem. For the middle sort, and foure or fise for the baser sort, the which is payed at euery three moneths end, without any deferring or contradiction: In that manner also are the Sultanaes paide, viz. quarterly, hauiug for their allowance from a thousand to a thousand fise hundred Aspers a piece, per diem. Besides, as many cloathes as they will, and Jewels in great abundance, giuen them from the Kings owne hands.

Manner of their pay.

Cloathes and Jewels.

The women Seruants also haue two Gownes of Cloath a piece, per annum, and a piece of fine Linnen for Smocks, of twentie Pikes long, and a piece more fine for Hankerchiefes, of ten Pikes, and at the Byram one silke Gowne a piece, and somewhat else, according to the pleasure and liberalitie of the Grand Signior, who at that time hath commonly a bountifull hand towards the Women. And giueth to the Sultanaes, Gownes with very rich Furres, Eare-rings, Brooches, Bodkins, Bracelets for their armes and legges, and such like things set with Stones of great worth; of which the King hath an abundance, by reason of the vnspeakable number of Presents which are giuen him. The Sultanaes are likewise presented at such times, by the Bashawes and their Wiues (that by their meanes they may continue in grace and fauour with the Grand Signior) with most stately and rich Gifts, and with money also which indeed is more acceptable to them then any other kinde of Present. For, they being very couetous, doe hoord vp and spend very sparingly, abandoning all manner of prodigallitie (in what may concerne their owne priuate purses) but witilie provide against disastrous times which may betide them, and especially against the Kings death: for then (excepting the Queene which remayneth still in the Serraglio, Mother to the succeeding King) all the other poore desolate Ladies (losing the title of Sultanaes) are immediatly sent to the old Serraglio, leauing behind them their Sonnes and Daughters (if they haue any liuing) in the Kings Serraglio, there to bee kept vnder the gouernment of other Women appointed for that seruice.

Frugalitie.

Old Serraglio.

And in such case, finding themselves wealthy, they may Marrie with men of reasonable good qualitie, according to the measure of their portion or estate, and according to the good-will of the Mistrresse of the old Serraglio, but with the Grand Signiors consent. Notwithstanding, who will (for the most part) not onely know the condition of their Husbands, but also what Dowrie they will bee content to make them sure of, in case their Husbands should put them away without their consents, or otherwise leaue them Widdowes: So that by meanes of their being turned out of the Kings Serraglio, it is often seene, that though the Daughter of the King bee married to a Bashaw, yet the Mother of that Daughter must bee content with a Husband of small account, farre vnequall and much inferiour, both in Title, wealth, and reputation, to her Sonne in Law.

Daughter preferred to the Mother.

The Sultanaes haue leaue of the King, that certayne Iewes women may at any time come into the Serraglio vnto them, who being extraordinary subtil Queanes, and comming in vnder colour of teaching them some fine Needle-worke, or to shew them secrets in making Waters, Oiles and Painting stufes for their Faces; (hauiug once made friendship with the Eunuches which keepe the Doores, by often bribing them) doe make themselves by their craftie insinuation, so familiar with the Kings women, that they rule them as they please, and doe carrie out any thing to sell for them, or buy and bring in whatsoever the Sultanaes shall haue a will to. And hence it is, that all such Iewes women as frequent the Serraglio, doe become very rich. For, whatsoever they bring in they buy it cheape, and sell it deare to them; and then on the contrary, when they haue Jewels to sell for the Sultanaes, (which are to bee conueighed out by stealth) they receiue their true value for them of Strangers, and then tell the simple Ladies who know not the worth of them, (and are afraid to bee discouered) that they sold them peraduenture for halfe that which they had for them.

Iewish women.

Their Arts.

And by this meanes, there come things of great price out of the Serraglio, to bee sold at very easie rates: yet in the end the Iewes haue but a bad market of it, for being discouered to be rich, and their wealth to be gotten by deceit, they oftentimes lose both Goods and life too. The Bashawes and Defterdar altogether ayming at such as they are, thinking by that meanes to restore to the Grand Signior, that which hath beene from time to time stolen from him, and the rather for that they themselves, seldome want their shares in the estates of such delinquents.

The Women of the Serraglio, are punished for their faults very seuerely, and extremely beaten by their Ouer-seers: and if they proue disobedient, incorrigible and insolent, they are by the Kings order and expresse commandment, turned out and sent into the old Serraglio, as being reiected and cast off, and most part of that they haue is taken from them. But if they shall be found culpable for Witchcraft: or any such hainous offence, then are they tyed and put into a Sacke, and Punishments of the Women.

Death. in the Night cast into the Sea : so that by all meanes it behooueth them to bee very obedient, and containe themselues within the bounds of honestie and modestie, if they meane to come to a good end.

Preuention of Lust. Now it is not lawfull for any one to bring ought in vnto them, with which they may commit the deeds of beastly vncleanness; so that if they haue a will to eate Cucumbers, Gourds, or such like meates, they are sent in vnto them sliced, to deprive them of the meanes of playing the wantons; for, they being all young, lustie, and lasciuious Wenches, and wanting the societie of Men (which would better instruct them) are doubtlesse of themselues inclined to that which is naught, and will be possesse with vnchaste thoughts.

¶ V.

Of the Agiamoglans, how taken, distributed and employed.

Agiamoglans
700.

Having already spoken of the Women, I now will say somewhat of the Agiamoglans which serue in the Serraglio, and of their employments. They are in number about seven hundred, from twelue to five and twentie, or thirtie yeeres of age at the most, being all of them Christian Renegadoes, as all Agiamoglans are, which are gathered every three yeeres in Morea, and in all the Prouinces of Albania; the which tythe Children are disposed of in this wise. They are sometimes more, and sometimes fewer, according to the discretion of the Capichees, appointed for that seruice, but a whole harvest of them, seldome or neuer exceeds the summe of two thousand, and are taken from such Families as are thought to bee of a more warlike disposition; they may not bee (when they are gathered) of aboue twelue or fourteene yeeres of age, least they should bee vnfit for a new course, and too well settled in Christianitie: and being kept fast for a while by the Capichees, they are then forthwith sent to Constantinople, to bee distributed and shared out as followeth.

How vsed.

Apparell.

So soone as they are arriued at the Port, they are all cloathed in Salonichi Cloath, it skilleth not of what colour, and yellow Caps of Felt on their heads, in the forme of a Sugar-loafe. And being brought before the Chiefe Vizir (who at that time is accompanied with the other Bashawes and Officers of the Serraglio) hee maketh choise of as many, as he seeth to bee well-fauoured and iudgeth to bee likely to proue Souldiers. Then this choise being made, the Youthes chosen by the Chiefe Vizir, are carried by the Bustangee Bashee into the Kings owne Serraglio, and there distributed to such Companies as want their compleat number: then are they Circumcised and made Turkes, and put to learne the Turkish Tongue; and according as their inclination is discovered by their Ouer-seers, so are they encouraged, and suffered to proceed (if it bee in goodnesse) and are taught to Write and Read: but they are in a manner all of them taught to Wrestle, to Leape, to Runne, to shoote in a Bow, and to conclude, all such Exercises, as are befitting a Souldier.

The rest how disposed.

Now part of the residue of them are distributed by the Chiefe Vizir, into all the Grand Signiors Gardens and Houses of pleasure, and into such Ships as sayle for the Kings account, and which goe to lade Wood and such like prouision for the Serraglio; consigning them to the Masters of the sayd Vessels, with this Condition, to restore them againe when hee shall require them: And so hee doth with the chiefe Arts-men of all sorts of Occupations, to the intent the Youths may learne and practice the sayd Arts in their Lodgings at home; when they are become Ianizaries, or else if they please abroad at the Warres also. Hee giueth likewise to all the Bashawes, and Great men of the Court, as many as they please, to serue them deliuering them by Name vnto them, and writing them downe in a Booke, that hee may haue them againe when there shall be occasion to make them Ianizaries. Now these which are giuen to the Bashawes, are the scumme and refusall of all the rest; and are employed onely in the seruice of Stables, Kitchens, and such base Offices. But the other are put into diuers Serraglio's, vnder the custodie and discipline of certayne Eunuches, who are appointed to bee their Ouer-seers, and take care that they bee brought vp and trayned in Militarie exercises, vntill such time as they become fit to bee accepted into the number of the Ianizaries, in the roomes of the Dead, or of Old ones, which are no longer fit for the Warre, but are made Otooracks, and haue leaue to stay at home. So that I may say, all these are in a manner kept in a Seminarie, to serue at all hands. The King, Queene, and Chiefe Vizir, employing them also many times in their Buildings, and other very laborious Offices, without exception.

Booke and Pension.

These Agiamoglans being thus distributed, the Chiefe Vizir presents a Booke of all their Names to the Grand Signior, who hauing seene it, appointeth to every one his Pension, according to the ordinary Canon, which is of two or three, or at the most, five Aspers per diem. And the sayd Booke in which their seuerall Pensions are distinctly set downe, being vnder-written by the Kings owne hand, is forth-with consigned into the custodie of the Chiefe Defterdar, that euery one may duely receiue his pay. Now this Defterdar is bound, when hee giueth out their pay, pay, (that is, once in three moneths) to visit them; enquiring who is dead, and taking good notice how the others liue and spend their times, whither they profit or not by their Tutors and Ouer-seers.

I will now returne to speake of the Agiamoglans of the Serraglio, hauing not thought it superfluous to haue digressed a little; for although it hath not bene to that purpose, yet it may prooue delightfome to those who haue not as yet heard of those passages so distinctly.

- These Agiamoglans of the Serraglio, albeit they were chosen out of the rest by the Chiefe Vizir, yet are their first employments but very base and slauish, for they serue in the Stables, Kitchens, Gardens, for digging, for cleauing of wood, and are made to row in Kaiks, and to lead the Grey-hounds a coursing; and indeed any thing, which is commanded them to doe by their Oda Bashees, who are Decurions and Centurions, and haue about fifteene Aspars per diem, two Vests of Cloth per annum, two pieces of Linnen Cloth for Shirts and Handkerchiefes, and so much Satteen or fine Cloth, as may make each of them a paire of Chiakshirs, or Breeches after their fashion downe to the heeles, and ruffled in the small of the legge like our Boots: Neuerthelesse, these Oda Bashees are all vnder command of the Kabiyah, who is the Bustangee Bashees Steward; now the Bustangee Bashee himselfe may haue about three hundred Aspars per diem, for hee is their Patron, Iudge, and Protector. And to the end that the Oda Bashees, and Bulook Bashees may be knowne from the common sort of Agiamoglans; they weare great broad silken Girdles of diuers colours about their middles, and are allowed a larger stipend; who by authoritie giuen them from the Kabiyah, doe bring the Vnderlings to such an extraordinary subjection by their often beating them, that they doe not only, not refuse all manner of paines taking, but patiently vndergoe whatsoeuer is done vnto them.

of the Serraglio
how vsed.

Gouernment.

Gouernours.

Slauerie.

Possibilitie of preferment.

- They haue their Termes and Prerogatiues amongst themselves, succeeding or preceding one another, according to the length of time which they haue spent in the Serraglio; so that in Proceffe of time (if they still continue there, and are not sent out vpon other occasions) they may aspire to the degrees of Chiefe Steward to the Bustangee Bashee, or of Bustangee Bashee himselfe, which is a very eminent place; for hee steeres the Kings Kaick, and weareth a Telbent vpon his head in the Serraglio, although he were but lately an Agiamoglan, and did weare one of the afore-said felt Caps, who also (if the King loue him, as commonly hee doth) may rise to greater dignities; as to be Captaine Bashaw, &c. nay, sometimes to be Chiefe Vizir.

- These Agiamoglans are not altogether forbidden to goe abroad, but may vpon vrgent occasions be licensed: And the Bustangee Bashee alwayes takes good store of them along with him, when by the Kings order hee goeth to see some great man put to death, the which is commonly done by the hands of three or foure of the chiefeest and strongest of the said Agiamoglans.

- There are brought in amongst them sometimes, (but indeed very seldome) naturall borne Turkes, by meanes made to the Bustangee Bashee, who therein doth greatly pleasure such poore folkes as are willing to bee rid of their children; but it must first bee made knowne to the Grand Signior, and done with his consent.

Some Turkes.

- Their Roomes, Bagno's, and Kitchens, are about the wals of the Serraglio, on the out side, diuided seuerally to each company of them, and built for the more commoditie of such Offices and Seruices, as the said Agiamoglans are appointed vnto.

Their Roomes.

- And as for their Diet, they order it as they please, hauing their flesh and Pulse for their Potage, their Bread and euery thing for Food, deliuered them euery day, and the dressing of it left to themselves: And in that they lye neere the Sea-side by the wals of the Serraglio, they take good store of fish, part of which they sell, and rescue the rest to themselves.

Dyet.

- They sleepe alwayes in their clothes (taking only off their vppermost coat, and their shooes) according to the ordinarie custome of the poorer sort of Turkes, betweene a couple of Rugges in the Winter, and thinne Blankets in Summer. They neuer see King, vlesse it be when he passeth through the Gardens to some Sport, or when he taketh Boat, or else when he goeth a hunting, for he makes them serue in stead of Hounds to hunt wild beasts.

Sleepe.

- But when his Highnesse will be in the Gardens to take his pleasure with his women, all the Agiamoglans being warned by Helnet, get them out with all speed at the Gates by the Sea side, where they may walke vpon the Bankes and Causeyes, but must not goe in againe vntill the King be departed: For there must none come neere the women but himselfe, and his blacke Eunuches: Nay, if any other should but attempt (by some tricke in conueighing himselfe into some priuate corner) to see the women, and should bee discovered, hee should immediately bee put to death. Euery one therefore (so soone as they haue notice of the Kings comming into the Gardens with his women) runnes out of sight, as farre as they can, to bee free from all feare, and suspicion.

None may see the Kings women.

- Now of this Ranke of Agiamoglans, which are in the Kings Serraglio, they doe not make Ianizaries, as they doe of those which are put into the other Serraglio's and Nurseries to bee brought vp; and of such as are lent to diuers of the Kings subjects, as Tradesmen and such like, and to the Bashawes. But his Highnesse turne is serued of these, to bestow vpon his Gentlemen, when he employes them abroad in some principall Gouernment, that they may be as Assistants vnto them in their busineses; who also in time become men of reasonable estate and condition themselves. The Grand Signior likewise maketh vse of them when he intendeth a journey to any place; as when he goeth to the Wars, or any whither farre from Constantinople, for the pitching of his Tents, for remouing and carrying of Chifts and Baskets, and many other such like Manuall Seruices, as happen, in those times. For which employment the King neuer carrieth with him lesse then foure or five hundred.

¶ V I.

The choise Agiamoglans, seuere Discipline and Education in foure Subordinate Schooles, and their after- aduancements.

now remayneth, that I say somewhat of those Youths which are kept in better fashion in the Serraglio, for the King and Countreyes Seruice, brought vp in Learning, in the knowledge of the Lawes, and in Military Exercises, that they may bee able to performe those things which belong to the Gouvernement of the whole Empire. And albeit for the most part these are Christian Captiues and Renegado's, yet there are some Naturall borne Turkes amongst them, (youths of very comely aspect, whose out-sides must promise a great deale of goodnesse;) brought in by the Capee Agha's meanes (who is the great Chamberlaine) with the Kings consent; but this hapneth but very seldome, and that with great difficultie: For, the ancient Institution was, that they should alwayes be of Christian Renegado's, of the most Ciuill and Noblest that could be found.

Turkes hardly admitted.

Noble Captiues.

Eunuches cruell. Mortification Turkish.

And when in the Warres, either by Sea or Land it shall so happen, that any youth bee taken, who is of Noble Parents, he is presently appointed and markt for the Grand Signior, and is instructed in matters of Gouvernement, being as it were ordayned for great Employments. Now such are of great esteeme, for the Turkes themselves affirme, that Noblenesse of Birth cannot but produce the most vertuous and generous spirits; especially, when they are well nurtured and tutored, as it is professed in the Serraglio; where there is great seueritie vsed in all the Orders of Discipline, the Gouvernement of them being in the hands of the Masters, who are all for the most part white Eunuches, which are very rough and cruell in all their Actions; Insomuch, that their Prouerbe saith, that when one commeth out of that Serraglio, and hath runne through all the Orders of it, he is, without all question, the most mortified and patient man in the World. For the blowes which they suffer, and the fastings which are commanded them for euery small fault, is a thing of great admiration: Nay, some of them are so seuerely handled, that although their time of being in the Serraglio be almost expired, and that they should in few yeeres come forth to bee made great men, yet not being able to suffer such crueltie any longer, they procure to bee turned out, contenting themselves with the Title and small pay of a Spahes, or a Mutasferaka, rather then be so often punished, and made weary of their liues.

Their number.

The number of these youths is not prefixed, but there are of them sometimes more, and sometimes lesse; for the King entertaynes very willingly all such as are giuen him of the aforesaid qualitie (if so be that they be young) and as I haue heard, they are commonly about an hundred.

Second Shoole.

The course that is taken with them, so soone as they come into the Serraglio, is admirable, and nothing resembling the Barbarisme of Turkes, but befeeming Subjects of singular Vertue and Discipline. For they are exceeding well entred, and daily taught aswell good fashion and comely behauour, as they are instructed in the Rites and Ceremonies of the Mahometan Law, or in Military Discipline. And for this purpose they haue Roomes, which the Turkes call Oda's, but we may more properly (in regard of the vse they are put vnto) call them Schooles; of which there are foure, the one taking Degrees from the other. Now into the first they all come, when they are but chidden, where the Primarie Precept they learne is Silence; then their personall Positures, betokening singular Reuerence to the King; which is, that they hold downe their heads and looke downwards, holding their hands before them joyned a crosse.

They are seene of the King, and registred in a Booke by their Turkish Names, and the Names of their Natiue Countreyes set downe with them; they receiue Pensions from the Grand Signior, which is ordinarily from three to five Aspars per diem. The Copie of the Booke is sent to the great Defierdar, that euery one of them, may in due time haue the aforesaid Pension sent vnto them. Then (by a white Eunuch who is chiefe ouer all the other Masters and Vthers) they are set to learne to write and reade, and to practise the Turkish Tongue; and are taught their Prayers, with all Reuerence to the Religion in the Arabian Tongue. And in this Oda's, they are both Morning and Euening so diligently followed, and carefully lookt vnto, that by report it is a thing of admiration: Now, for the most part, they all stay at the least six yeeres in this Schoole, and such as are dull and hard of apprehension stay longer.

From this Oda's they are removed to the second, where (by more Learned Tutors then the former) they are taught the Persian, Arabian, and Tartarian Tongues; and take great paines in reading diuers Authors, that they may be the better able to speake the Turkish Elegantly; which cannot be done without some knowledge in those three Tongues, vpon which the Turkish chiefly doth depend: So that there is found a great difference betweene their speech, and that of the vulgar sort.

for.

Here also they begin to learne to wrestle, to shoot in a Bow, to throw the Mace, to tosse the Pike, to handle their Weapons, to runne, &c. And in these Exercises in their seuerall Orders and seuerall Places, they spend whole houres, being seuerely punished if they shall in any wise seeme to grow negligent.

10 They spend other five or sixe yeere likewise in this Odah, from the which (being become men, strong, and fit for any thing) they are removed to the third Odah, where (forgetting nothing of what they haue learned before, but rather bettering themselves) they also learne to sit a Horse, and to be quicke and nimble in the Warres: Moreover, euery one of them (according to his inclination and disposition) shall learne a Trade, necessary for the Seruice of the Kings person, viz. to make vp a Telbent, to shauie, to paire mayles, to fold vp Apparell handsomely, to keepe Landspaniels, to keepe Hawkes, to be Sewers, to be Quiries of the Stable, to be Target-bearers, and to waite at the Grand Signiors Table, and the like Seruices, as it is also vsed in the Courts of other Kings and Emperours. So that hauing bene in these Offices foure or five yeeres, they become men able to teach others.

20 And whilst they are in these three Schooles, they are but indifferently apparelled, hauing their two Vests of Cloth per annum, somewhat fine, but their Linnen is such as the others weare, and so they must be contented to be vnder the correction of their Masters, who are so seuer, that for euery fault, or for suspicion only of Dishonestie, cause them to bee punished with an hundred blowes on the soles of the feet, and on the Buttocks, insomuch that they leaue them oftentimes for dead. Neither are they permitted whilst they remayne in these three Oda's, to bee familiar with any but themselves, and that with great modestie too: so that it is a matter of great difficultie for any Stranger to speake with them or see them; which if it be obtayned, it must be by expresse leaue from the Capee Agha, who causeth an Eunuch to bee there present, so long as any Stranger shall bee in the company of any of the said youths. Nay, when they haue occasion to goe to the Bagno, or the like necessary businesse, they are very narrowly lookt vnto by the Eunuches, to keepe them by all meanes from any filthy Actions: And if they shall be found guiltie, or accused of any fault, they are most seuerely punished for it: And in their Bed-chambers (which are long Roomes, and hold about fortie or fittie in each of them; for they sleepe neere one another vpon the Sofas) there are euery night Lampes lighted, and Eunuches lying by them to keep them in awe, and from lewd and wanton behaviour.

Some of them also doe learne Mechanicke Arts, as sewing in Leather (which is in great esteeme amongst the Turkes) to mend Guns, to make Bowes and Arrowes, and Quiuers, and the like; from which Trades they often haue both their Sir-name and their Reputation too; For they are exceedingly beloued, who are diligent and flye Idlenesse.

40 And the Eunuches make great tryall of their constancie in Religion, searching (as farre as in them lyes) their hearts, to see how they stand affected to Turcisme: For the time growing neere, wherein they are to passe to the fourth Odah, which is the chiefeft and last, and from which they are called to businesse of great import; they would not then haue them at all remember that they were formerly Christians, or to haue any desire imaginable to turne to their first beliete; least they should by some stratagems and politike carriage, proue disadvantageous to the Turkish Empire. So then, all possible prooffe and triall being made, and they found to bee most strongly perswaded in themselves of the truth of that Religion, they then are preferred to the fourth Odah, where they are once more registred: For all they which are of the third Odah are not translated to the fourth at one and the same time, but only such as haue gone through all the Degrees in the three former, and are become fit for Seruice: And there is an Account kept apart of them

50 which come into this fourth Odah, for they are immediately ordayned for the Grand Signiors owne Seruice, and haue their pay encreased, some more and some lesse, vnto eight Aspers per diem, and their Habits changed from Cloth to Silke, and Cloth of Gold of great price: but continue still with their heads and beards shauen, only they suffer some lockes to grow on each side from their temples, which hang downe below their eares, for a signe that they are they which are neereft to the preferment of comming into the Kings Chamber.

They must be very cleanly and neat in their Apparell before they come about the Grand Signiors person; many of them accompanying him euer when he goeth abroad vpon pleasure: And they may freely conuerse with all the great men of the Serraglio, and with the Bashawes also, and are often presented with great gifts by men of great qualitie, to keepe in their fauour, hoping that they may become men of great command, and bee able to stand them in stead vpon diuers occasions. Now out of these young men (after they haue finished the appointed terme of yeeres, and haue bene well instructed in all things as aforesaid) the Grand Signior chooseth his Agha's, which are his Gentlemen and serue him only; whose names and places are as followeth.

All which are of the eldest sort of them; and are alwayes in his Maiesties presence, holding downe their heads, for they may not be so bold as to looke him in the face, and standing with their hands acrosse before them, in token of the greatest Humilitie and Reuerence that may bee imagined. Neither are they permitted to speake at all to the Grand Signior, nor in his presence to one another; but if the King shall command or call for any thing, they are wonderfull speedie, and readie to obey. These all doe execute their Offices distinctly as aforesaid, and attend in places appointed for them; that they may bee the better able to performe their Seruices, and the more readie to obey at euery becke; and at the houres of Dinner and Supper they waite in the Roome, taking the meate from the hands of the Vnder-sewer at the doore, and so his Maiesties Table being made readie (which is of a Bulgar Hide) vpon a Sofa, they bring in the meate which is set thereon orderly, dish by dish, by the chiefe Sewer before the King, and is taken off againe as his Maiestie shall appoint.

The Grand Signior is very well pleased, and takes great delight in their Service and company, making them ride on Horsebacke, and playing with them at seuerall Sports, at such time as hee is well disposed, euer gracing them with the bestowing gifts on them, of Vests, Chicquines, Swords, and other such like Presents, as come to the hands of the King before, by way of gift: And besides those fauours, his Maiestie vseth to bestow vpon them the dispatching of Ambassies for other Countries, which is a Merchandize held by them to be of a great price, and bringeth in a great profit with it: For one of them hauing his Commission from the Grand Signior, for such or such a Prince, presently thinketh with himselfe, what that Prince vsually doth present the Ambassadour withall, and so accordingly agreeth with a Chiansh, or one of such like qualitie, to vndertake the Ambassie, who must giue for the same as they can agree betwixt themselves, either in readie Money, or otherwise at his returne, as he shall thinke best for his profit, and so he forthwith giueth expedition to the partie chosen.

These sorts of Presents, proue wonderfull beneficiall; for, in the establishing of the Princes of Valachia, Bugdania, Transluania, and of the King of Tartarie (to all which Princes the Grand Signior, sendeth Ambassadors for confirming their Possession of the said Dominions) they reape great benefit, it being specified in the Canon, how much euery one is to disburse for being honored with that Solemnitie.

And this the Grand Signior doth of policie, to the end his Agha's may become rich, laying vp Money by them to serue for necessary Expenses for themselves, furnishing them with diuers things by that meanes against such time as they shall goe forth of the Serraglio: which is only when his Maiestie thinkes fit, and that most commonly on a sudden; either to be Generall at Sea, Bashaw of Cairo, Aleppo, Damascus, Babylon, or of some other Prouinces; giuing also to some of them a Musabib, that is, as it were a Companion, who hath liberty freely to talke with him, and to goe out and in vnto him when he pleaseth; The which Title and fauour (of Musabib) proues to be of so great Reputation, that it is esteemed aboue any other sort of employment, for it is very rare, and only bestowed on such Subjects as haue deserued well of the Emperour.

And this hath beene a course vied of old by the Grand Signiors Progenitors, that so they may haue some trustie Subjects abroad, that may giue notice of the carriage of the Bashawes in their seuerall Regiments, or of any other, if so be they should attempt any thing that might bee prejudiciall to the Crowne; that so the King by cutting off their prouision and the like meanes, may anticipate their Plots and Designs. But if his Maiestie be not pleased, so highly to exault some one of the aforesaid Agha's, as to be of the Degrees already named; he then makes him Beglerbegh of Grecia, or of Natolia; Agha of the Ianizaries, Spaheeler Agasee, which is Head over all the Spahees, Imrohor Bashee, which is Master of the Horse; or at least a Capigee Bashee, which is Head over the Capigees.

Now

Now, the Grand Signior hauing bestowed any of the said places vpon them, they leaue the Serraglio, and carrie with them all their estates, both money and goods: and oftentimes other young men of the other Odabs, which are let goe through their owne hastinesse, and great importunitie, not willing to stay out their times; but losing the Kings fauour are content with small pay and lesser reputation, to goe along with the said Aghas.

Such as goe out vpon the greatest employments, are accompanied forth of the Serraglio by the chiefe Vizir, who also presenteth them, and giueth them entertaynment for three or foure dayes in his house, vntill such time as they can bee provided of houses of their owne, whither afterwards they repaire, and set their families in order, taking also vnto them such as are come out of the Serraglio, with them for Assistants and Ministers in the charge assigned vnto them; they also accept of the seruice of others which come in by gifts, which likewise redounds to the benefit and aduantage of the great ones.

Now, they which succeed in preferment, those that are gone out of the Serraglio vpon the afore said employments; are (as the custome commandeth) such as are next in yeeres vnto them, and of the longest standing; neither can this course be altered, vnlesse by some sinister accident, or euill behauiour they faile thereof: So that it is alwaies knowne amongst themselues, who is next capable of publique employment; nay, the businesse is so orderly carried, and their course so regular, that euen they of the third Odab doe know what their future fortunes will bee, if they liue to enioy them: And indeed all of them liue in hope, and desire that the Grand Signior would often be pleased to send them abroad, that they may the sooner be out of their hard seruice in the Serraglio, and enter into the state of ample gouernment.

They are most commonly of five and thirtie, or fortie yeeres of age before they are sent abroad. And because they come out of the Serraglio with their Beards shauen, they are faine to stay within doores for some few dayes to let them growe, that they may be fit to come amongst other great men, with which staying at home they are very well contented, for that in that time they receiue the Presents which are sent them from all the Sultanaes, of Vests, Shirts, Linnen-breeches, and Hand-kerchiefs of all sorts richly wrought, and of great worth: and from the Bashawes and other Great men; Horses, Carpets, Vests, Slaues, and other things fit for the erecting of a House and Familie. The which Presents are made the greater and richer, by so much the more as the partie to whom they are giuen, is knowne to bee fauoured and beloued of the King. Now, so soone as their beards are growne, they goe abroad, and beginne their visits; First, to the chiefe Vizir, and then in order to the other Great ones, till they haue beene with them all, and last of all, offer their seruice to the Capee Agha, in all humble manner, acknowledging that all their best fortunes and honours haue beene conferred vpon them by his meanes; and promising for euer, all dutifull respect vnto him for the same; but this complement with the Capee Agha is performed without that Gate on the Kings side, which is kept by the Eunuches; for they may not come no more within that Gate, vnlesse they be called for by the King, for to treat of things belonging to their employments before their departure.

They all strue to gaine the loue of the Capee Agha; that he may bee a Protector and Patron vnto them, to possesse the Grand Signior with a good opinion of them in their absence; he being the chiefe in the Serraglio, and alwaies neere to the King.

§. VII.

Of inferiour persons, as Buffons, Mutes, Musicians; of white Eunuches, and of the Grand Officers of the Serraglio.

BESIDES the Women, and Aiamogians of this Serraglio, and the afore said Youths last spoken of; there are many and diuers Ministers for all manner of necessarie seruices, and particular functions: there are also Buffons of all sorts, and such as shew trickes, Musicians, Wrestlers, many dumbe men both old and young, who haue libertie to goe in and out with leaue of the Capee Agha; And this is worthie the obseruation, that in the Serraglio, both the King and others can reason and discourse of any thing as well and as distinctly, alla mutesca, by nods and signes, as they can with words: a thing well befitting the grauitie of the better sort of Turkes, who care not for much babling. The same is also vsed amongst the Sultanaes, and other the Kings Women: for with them likewise there are diuers dumbe women, both old and young. And this hath beene an ancient custome in the Serraglio: wherefore they get as many Mutes as they can possibly find: and chiefly for this one reason; that they hold it not a thing befitting the Grand Signior. Neither stands it with his greatnesse, to speake to any about him familiarly: but he may in that manner more tractably and domestically iest and sport with the Mutes, then with others that are about him.

It followeth now, that I speake of the White Eunuches; who, as the Blacke ones are for the Service and Attendance of the Sultanaes, and for the keeping of their Gate; so are the White Eunuches.

The Chiefe of them Capee Agha , or Chamberlaine 2. Treasurer of the House. 3. Master of the Wardrobe. 4. Keeper of the House. Capee Aghas Priviledges.	Eunuches appointed for the King and his Gate; And the chiefe and most ancient of these, attend only the most trusty and important employments, both about the Kings Person and his Household: of which the first is the Capee Agha , for he is the Chiefe of all the Eunuches; and is High Chamberlaine. The second, is the Hazinehdar Bashee , who is the Chiefe Treasurer for the House. The third, is the Keelergee Bashee , who is the Chiefe Butler and Master of the Wardrobe. The fourth, is the Sarai Agasee , who is the Keeper of the Serraglio . Now of these foure olde Eunuches, the Capee Agha (as I said) is principall in Authority, and in greatest esteeme with the Grand Signior , for, none but he can of himselfe speake with his Majestie, neyther can any Messages, Writings, or Petitions, be sent in (ordinarily) but by his hand and meanes; He likewise doth alwayes accompany the Kings Person whither so euer he goeth, both without and within the Serraglio . And when he goeth to his Women, also he accompanieth him to the very doore, which leadeth in vnto them, and there he stoppeth, and so returnes to his owne Lodgings againe; alwayes leauing some bodie to wayte at the said doore, that when the King is ready to come away againe, they may call him. This Capee Agha hath for his ordinary Pension eight Sultaneens per diem , besides Vests and other necessaries as many as he will; he getteth great store of Money, and (indeed) more then befits a man that hath so small occasion of expence as he hath, by vertue of his place; for that both they of the Serraglio , and those abroad of what condition or degree soeuer they bee, to obtayne his fauour and furtherance in any businesse, doe present him with all that they can imagine may giue him content, whatsoeuer it cost.

Treasurer.	The second, is the Hazinehdar Bashee ; and he hath the charge of the Treasurie, which is within the Serraglio , he hauing one Key of it and the King another, the doore being likewise sealed with the Kings Seale, which is neuer taken off, but when the King himselfe giues order for the opening of the same. In this Hazineh are all the Treasures which haue beene layd vp by the deceased Emperors; and into this commeth no other Reuenue of the Crowne, sauing that from Egypt of sixe hundred thousand Crownes per annum ; all the other Reuenewes going into the outward Hazineh , out of which all Expences are borne, both ordinary and extraordinary. But there is not any thing taken out of the aforesaid inward Hazineh , vnlesse it bee vpon extreame necessitie, when the Grand Signior is not otherwise prouided, to appease the out-cries of the Souldiers for their pay; or for some other the like occasion: Notwithstanding, it is done with this Prouiso , that the Defterdar bee bound to make it good againe to the vtmost Aspar . This Agha's charge is to keepe an exact Accompt of all the Treasure that is brought in or taken out of the same: nor may any goe into the said Hazineh , but only the Hazinehdar , and such as hee shall take in with him when occasion shall require. And when there is any Gold or Silver taken out, it is all put into Leather Bags, and so brought before the King, who disposeth thereof as he thinketh fit. He hath also the charge of all the Kings Iewels, of which he keepeth a Book by himselfe, that hee may know what Iewels the King giues away, what Iewels are giuen to the King, and what are likewise for his Majesties owne wearing; And the Capee Agha dying, hee succeeds him in his place.
Treasurer. Outward Treasurie.
Household-Treasurers Office.
Wardrobe.	The third, which is the Keelergee Bashee , keepes the account of the Kings Wardrobe (viz. of all his Household-stuffe.) Into which Wardrobe are all the Presents brought, which are giuen to the Grand Signior , as Cloth of Gold, Silkes, Woollen Clothes, Furres of all sorts, Swords, Feathers, Raw Silke, Carpets, and whatsoeuer else may serue for his Majesties owne vse. Of all which things he keepes particular Notes, to the end he may at any time see what is giuen to the King, and what the King giues away to others: The which is a very painfull employment, inasmuch as his Majesty doth euery day, aswell take as giue a great number of Vests, and other the like things: But the businesse is so well ordered and carefully lookt vnto, that there doth not follow any confusion at all. This Eunuch hath diuers Seruants vnder him; and stayes alwayes (for the most part) within the Serraglio ; his Pension is a thousand Aspars per diem , besides Vests, and other such Presents which are giuen him in abundance from time to time; hee also is much fauoured and graced by the King, for that he is to succeed the Hazinehdar Bashee , in case hee the said Hazinehdar should dye; and is well esteemed of and reuerenced by all, aswell without as within the Serraglio .
Busie employment.
Pension.
Keeper of the Serraglio .	The fourth, which is the Sarai Agasee (who is an Eunuch as the former are) hath the care and looking vnto the Serraglio , nor doth he euer goe out of it in the Kings absence; but is very vigilant, not only in seeing all things readie for the daily Seruice of the same; but also to looke ouer all the Roomes and to eye the Officers, marking whither they exercise themselves in their seuerall Functions, as befits them to doe. And because he is old, and his businesse great, he hath liberty to ride within the wals of the Serraglio , as the three former Aghas are also permitted to doe; for which purpose they haue a Stable of Horses within the Garden for their vse alone; his Pension is eight hundred Aspars per diem , besides Vests and Furres, as many as hee can well haue occasion to weare; and is to succeed the Keelergee Bashee , and so curiously the Capee Agha if he out-live the rest.
Riding liberty.
Differing Priviledges.	And although all these foure Eunuches may weare Telbents in the Serraglio , and ride, (being the chiefe next the King himselfe in authoritie, within the Serraglio) and are reuerenced and respected respected of all men; yet the three last viz. Hazinehdar Bashee, Keelergee Bashee, and Sarai Agassee, may not of themselves speake to the Grand Signior, but onely answer when any thing is asked of them: howbeit they alwayes attend (with the Capoe Agba) the person and service of the King, with all the other Eunuches vnder them, and the aforesayd Aghas; And they foure onely gouerne the Kings Household affaires, giuing order for all things needfull and necessarie, as well for the Dayes as for the Nights prouision.

All the Eunuches in the Serraglio may bee about hundred in number, what with old ones, middle aged, and young ones: they are all guelt and cut cleane off, and are chosen of those Renegado youthes which are presented from time to time to the Grand Signior as aforesayd: 10 few or none at all are guelt and cut against their will, for then (as the Master workman in that businesse sayth) they would bee in great danger of Death; wherefore, to get their consent thereto, they shew vnto them the assurance they may haue (in time) to become Great men, all which must bee done at their first comming into the Serraglio, for it is a worke not to bee wrought vpon men of yeeres.

They are brought vp with the others, and are taken out by turnes of the fourth Odab, for the Grand Signiors service, as well as those which are not Eunuches. Education in the foure Odabs

His Majestie also employes some of these his white Eunuches in the gouernment of all the other Serraglios and Nurseries of young Lads, as well in Constantinople, as in Adrianople, Bursia, and in diuers other places, (in each of which there are commonly two or three hundred Schollers) 20 that by their ouerlooking them (together with the helpe of other Ministers) they may bee brought to an excellent Discipline, by which they may proue men of good manners and reasonable Learning.

And it so falleth out oftentimes, that the Grand Signior (to giue way to the other inferiour and younger Eunuches, who expect that they shall succeed in order the aforesayd Officers) sendeth forth some of the ancientest and of the highest ranke, into great employments, as to bee Bashaw of Cairo, or of some Prouinces in Asia, and sometimes Vizirs of the Port; for the Eunuches generally proue Subiects of greatest iudgement and fidelitie; their mindes being set on businesse rather then pleasure. And for that they are more trustie then any other seruants of the Serraglio, the Capoe Agba committeth such things as the Grand Signior would haue kept for curio- 30 sitie, vnto their custodie; who for that end haue places made of purpose to lay vp such delicacies as are presented to the King; as great peeces of Amber Greece, sent from the Bashawes of the Morea, Muske, Treacle, Mithridate of Cairo, Terra sigillata, Balsami, Bbloarmeno, and other things of great value; Cups also of Agat, Christall, and Iasper, Turkeesses, and other precious Stones; all which are so neatly and orderly kept, that indeed it is admirable; they likewise lay vp his Indian Presents of Zeua and Ciuet, of all which things his Majestie and his Sultanaes make daily vse, the Eunuches who are the keepers of the sayd Dainties, being first made acquainted therewithall.

There is in the Serraglio a very large place, in which are kept all the goods which fall to the King, as well by them which are put to death, as by those which dye of naturall Diseases, of 40 which the King will bee Master. And the goods being brought into the sayd place by the chiefe Destordar (whose particular charge it is to see them brought thither) and the King in presence of his Assistants hauing seene and viewed it all; maketh choise of what he thinks fit to reserue, and for to giue away; the rest is cryed in the Serraglio, to the end if any one there haue a will to buy, hee may haue a good penniworth: and the surpluse is carryed into the publique Bezisten, a place somewhat resembling the Paune in our royall Exchange: where it is cryed vp and downe, the Cryer still naming the most that hath beene already offered; and is at last sold to him that bids most, nor may hee that bids money goe from his word, at least if hee bee able to performe and stand to it. Now the money is deliuered to the Hazinehdar Bashee, and is put into the outward Hazineh: And although the goods did come from out of the Houses of 50 such as dyed but the day before of the Pestilence; the Turkes neuertheless buy them, and vse them as if the Disease were not infectious at all; affirming that their end is written in their Forehead, and it cannot bee auoyded by any humane Rule or Policie.

- Kuzlar Agba. vnder command of the Kuzlar Agba, that is to say, the Master of the Virgins being allowed a Pension of fiftie or sixtie Aspers per Diem, and two Vests of Silke per Annum, with Linnen and other necessaries sufficient for their vse, besides diuers gifts they receiue from Women strangers at such times as they let them goe in to the Kings women: they are named by the names of Flowers, as Hiacynth, Narcissus, Rose, Gilly-flower, and the like; for that, seruing the Women, their names may bee answerable to their Virginitie, sweet and vndefiled.
- Pension.
- Names.
- Negro Girles. The Black-moore Girles, are no sooner brought into the Serraglio after their arriual at Constantinople, (for they come by Ship from Cairo and from thereabouts) but they are carryed to the Womens lodgings, where they are brought vp and made fit for all seruices; and by how much the more vglie and deformed they are, by so much the more they are esteemed of, by the Sultanaes; wherefore the Bashaw of Cairo (who for the most part sends them all) is alwayes diligent to get the most il-fauoured, cole-blacke, flat-nosed Girles that may bee had throughout all Egypt, or the bordering Countries, to send them for Presents to the Grand Signior, who bestowes them vpon his Women. Now after their comming, if they shall bee disliked by reason of some Infirmitie, then are they sent into the old Serraglio, as the white Women are, when they are vnfit for seruice or misbehaue themselues; all which is done by the Kings order and consent.
- Esteemed most for vglinesse. The aforeseyd blacke Eunuches, by occasion of being sent with Messages to the Grand Signior from the Sultanaes, may passe through the Mens lodgings to carrie little Notes to the Capee Agba, that hee may deliuer them to the King; or for to fetch any thing from any of the Officers of the Serraglio, or to speake with a friend at the Gate; but otherwise they may not goe forth of the Serraglio from the Kuzlar Agba, without expresse licence from the Queene. They likewise are to goe about and doe all other businesse for the Sultanaes in the Womens lodgings, which
- Priuiledges. White Eunuches cannot performe, for they are not permitted to come there; nor any man that is White (but the King onely) may see and come amongst the Women. Insomuch, as when by reason of some one of them being fallen sicke, it is required that the Hekim Bashee (who is the Kings Physician) should come thither; they must necessarily first haue leaue of the King for his entrance, and being admitted to enter by the Sultanaes doore, hee seeth none but the Blacke Eunuches (all the other Women being retired into some withdrawing roomes) who bring him into the Sicke womans Chamber; and shee being closely couered from head to foote with Quilts and Blankets, holdeth out her Arme onely, so as the Doctor may touch her pulse, who when hee hath giuen order what shall bee done, goes his way immediatly by the same way that hee came.
- No White man may come amongst the Women. Physicians visiting the sicke women.
- But if she which is sicke be the Queene or one of the Sultanaes, then her arme and hand which shee holdeth out of the Bed for the Physician to feele her pulse, is couered with a fine piece of white Silke or taffata Sarcenet, for her flesh may not be seene; neither may the Doctor say any thing in her hearing, but being gone out of her chamber, prescribeth what medicine hee thinks fit; which for the most part (according to the common custome of the Turkes) is but onely some kinde of loosening Sherbet, for they seldome vse any other Physicke; neither doe I hold their skill sufficient to prepare Medicines for euery Maladie. But in case that shee should need a Chyrurgeon, shee must then doe as shee may without any scruple; for there is no remedie to conceale her skinne from him. And as for the other Women which are not Sultanaes, or at least which are not well beloued of the Grand Signior for some peculiar vertues; they needing a Chirurgion are sent into the old Serraglio to bee cured.
- Physicke meane.
- The Kings Sonnes which are borne vnto him by his Queene, are Nursed and brought vp together by themselues, by choise Nurses which are found abroad without the Serraglio; But if hee haue also Sonnes by other Sultanaes (as commonly euery Grand Signior hath) then those are brought vp apart and not with the Queenes, so that euery Mother careth for her owne Children, and that with great ialousie; yet they may play together till they come to bee of sixe or seuen yeeres of Age; being much made of, sumptuously maintayned, and Apparellled all alike at the Kings charge, and their Nurses are well rewarded for their paines. They liue among the Women till they come to bee of nine or ten yeeres of age; and about fourteene they are Circumcised with a great deale of pompe (especially the eldest Sonne) and solemnities throughout the whole Citie; for the Circumcision of the Turkes Children, are like the Christian Weddings, there being vsed at them, great Feasting, Banqueting, Musicke, and bringing of Presents.
- The Kings Sonnes by the Queene.
- Mothers care.
- Circumcisions solemnitie.
- From five yeeres of age vntill ten (during which time they liue amongst the Women) they haue their Hoiah (that is, their Schoole-master) appointed them by the King to teach them; which Hoiah comes into the Womens Serraglio euery day, and is brought into a Chamber by the Blacke Eunuches, (without euer seeing the Women at all) whither the Children come accompanied with two old Black-moore women Slaues, and are taught for so many howers as their Tutor is permitted to stay, and so hee departeth.
- Hoiah or Schoolemaster.
- Kings Daughters. As for the Daughters, they are but sleightly looked after; nor is the King so tender ouer them; for, as they are not suspected for any thing that may concerne the State in future times, so likewise are they not much respected; yet they are well provided for by the Grand Signior their Father, in case they liue to bee fit for Husbands.

After the Prince (next Heire to the Crowne) is circumcised; if his Father thinke it vnfit to keepe him any longer with him at home in the Serraglio, hee provides all things fitting to send him abroad that he may see the World the better to enable him for to gouerne the Empire after his Fathers decease; and sends along with him one of his principall Eunuches for to be his Ouer-seer and a helpe vnto him, besides many Seruants to attend vpon him, all which hee chuleth out of his owne Serraglio: hee allowes him likewise sufficient meanes to maintayne him like a Prince (as he doth also by the rest of his Sonnes if he haue a purpose to send any of them abroad) and so all things being well ordered for him, hauing taken his leaue of his Father and Mother (who present him with many gifts; as also the Sultana's, and all the Bashawes, and great men of the Port doe) he departs for Magnesia, a Citie in Asia, there to reside in the Gouvernement of that Prouince; in which hee hath not the Supream Authoritie, but gouernes only as his Fathers Deputie. And should hee passe the limits of his Commission, hee would quickly fall into disgrace, and suspicion of Rebellion; as heretofore it hath hapned vnto diuers: wherefore the Eunuch which was appointed for to bee his Ouer-seer, is bound to giue continuall aduice to the Grand Signior and the Vizirs, of all Occurrences according to the Canon: and likewise to receiue from Constantinople such Commandements as are to bee obeyed in those parts where the Prince resideth; so that all things in a manner, are swayed by the discretion of the Eunuch.

Provisions of Victuals, Cookes, Kitchens, Diet of the King, Queene, and others, and of their manner of Seruice.

AL the victuals in the Serraglio, (for the most part) are dressed by Agiamoglans, brought vp to Cookerie; howbeit there are belonging more then two hundred Vnder-cookes and Scullions to the Kitchens that are therein, besides their principall Officers, as Sewers, Caters, and such like: all which are carefully to looke to their seuerall Kitchens, and not any one to trust another with his businesse.

Victuals and Cookes.

The Kings Kitchen beginnes to worke ordinarily before day, for, his Highnesse rising betimes, there must be alwayes something readie for him, and oftentimes he eateth three or foure times a day. Hee dines commonly at ten of the clocke in the fore-noone, and sups about sixe at night, as well in the Summer as in the Winter. Now when hee hath a will to eate, hee tels the Capee Agha of it, who forth-with sends an Eunuch to giue notice of the same to the Chiefe Sewer; and he hauing dished the meate, brings it in dish by dish to the Kings Table; and so his Majestie sits downe after the common Turkish fashion with his legges acrosse, hauing a very rich embroydered Towell cast before him vpon his knees to saue his Clothes; and another hanging vpon his left arme which he vseth for his Napkin to wipe his mouth and fingers. He is not carued vnto, as other Princes are, but helps himselfe; hauing before him vpon a piece of Bulgar leather (which is in head of a Table-cloth) fine white Bread, of three or foure sorts, very new and well relished. He neither vseth Knife nor Forke, but only a wooden Spooone, of which there are two layed before him, the one seruing him to eate his Pottage, and the other to sup vp certaine delicate Sirrups withall; made of all sorts of Fruits, compounded with the Iuice of Limons and Sugar, to quench his thirst: he tasteth of his dishes one by one, and as hee hath done with them, they are taken off againe: his meate is so tender and delicately dressed, that (as I said before) he needs no Knife, but puls the flesh from the bones very easily with his fingers: He vseth no Salt at his Table, neither hath he any Antipasto; but immediately fells aboard the flesh, and concludes with a Tart or some such like thing: And so his Dinner or Supper being ended, hee washeth his hands in a Basen of Gold, with the Ewer all set with precious stones.

Not carued. No Knife nor Forke.

His diet.

His Majesties ordinary Diet (as I haue beene told by some of the Aschees) is halfe a score roasted Pidgeons in a dish, two or three Geese in a dish, Lambe, Hens, Chickens, Mutton, and sometimes Wild-fowle, but very seldome: and looke what he hath roasted for him, so hee hath the same quantitie boyled, almost of euery thing; there being very good sawce for euery dish, and other ingredients very pleasing to the pallat. He hath likewise Broths of all sorts, and diuers Purcelaine dishes of Preserues and Sirrups, and some Tarts and Pyes, after their fashion made of flesh: and hauing made an end of eating, hee drinckes one draught of Sherbet, (not drinking about once at a Meale) which is brought vnto him in a deepe Purcelaine dish couered, standing vpon a flat vnder dish, of the same Metall.

Drinking once

All the while that he is at Table, he very seldome or neuer speakes to any man, albeit there stand afore him diuers Mutes and Iesters, to make him merrie, playing trickes and sporting one with another Alla Mutescha, which the King vnderstands very well, for by signes their meaning is easily conceiued. And if peraduenture he doe chance to speake a word or two; it is to grace

No words. Mutes and Iests.

- His fauour. some one of his Agha's standing by him whom hee highly fauoureth, throwing him a Loafe of Bread from his owne Table, and this is held for a singular grace and speciall fauour: and hee diuiding it amongst his companions, they accept of it at a second hand, as a great honour done vnto them, in regard it came from their Lord and King.
- Dishes and couers of Gold. Yellow Purcelaine for Ramazan, or Lent. The dishes for his Highnesse Table are all of Gold, and so likewise are their couers; they are in the custodie of the Keelergee, who attends at the Kitchin; and so are all the yellow Purcelaine dishes (which are very costly and scarcely to bee had for money) in which the King eates in the Ramazan time, which is their Lent, and lasteth a whole Moone, and the Moneth it selfe is so called: In which time they neuer eate in the day, but only in the night, not making any difference in meates (excepting Swines flesh and things strangled, of which they are forbidden by their Law to eate at any time.) The King seldome eates fish, vnlesse it be when he is abroad at some Garden House by the Sea-side with his Women.
- Remainders. The meate which remaynes of that which was at the Grand Signiors Table, is immediately carried to the Agha's Table which waite vpon him; so that they (what with that and their own diet together) are wondrous well to passe. Now whilst the Agha's are eating, the King passeth away the time with his Mutes and Buffones, not speaking (as I said) at all with his Tongue, but only by signes: and now and then hee kicks and buffeteth them in sport, but forth-with makes them amends by giuing them Money; for which purpose his pockets are alwayes furnished.
- Capee Aghas diet. In the meane time also the Capee Agha eates in a Roome apart, such meate as is prepared for him in his Kitchin, being farre inferiour to the Kings diet, and with him doe eate the Hazineh-dar Bashee, the Sarai Agasee, and sometimes some of the Kings Physicians, whom hee calls in for to beare him company; and such other Eunuchs which are Keepers of the Serraglios abroad, as doe come to visit him. And the remainder of his diet, with a fresh supply from the Kitchens, serues Di man' in mano, all the other white Eunuchs.
- Diet for the Odah youths. In this Interim likewise, is meate sent to all the other Odahs, for the youths there; which is two Loaves apiece per diem, and a little boyled Mutton, and Pottage of Rice mingled with Butter and Honey, which consists more of Broth then substance, it being but thinne of Rice, and so little flesh put in it, that it is well if it giue but a taste thereof when they soppe their bread therein.
- Queene and Sultanas diet. On the other side is meate carried in by blacke Eunuchs, to the Queene, to the Sultanas, and to all the other women, wherein is obserued the same order as is aforesaid with the King. Inso-much as that in the space of an houre and halfe all is dispatched.
- Queenes Seruice in Copper. The Queenes Seruice is in Copper dishes tinned ouer, but kept very bright and cleane, and some also of white Purcelaine: howsoeuer it is to bee vnderstood, that for her owne mouth shee may be serued as she pleaseth, and so questionlesse may all the Sultanas, although their ordinarie allowance be no other then Copper. For oftentimes the King is amongst them a whole day together, eating, sporting, and sleeping; of which there is no notice taken, nor may any one looke into his actions; where amongst themselves they make him delicate and sumptuous Banquets (ouer and aboue the ordinary meales of Dinner and Supper) of sweet Meats and Fruits of all sorts; hauing daily an abundance presented vnto them. They drinke their Sherbet mingled with Snow in the Summer, of which there is a great quantitie preserued yeerely for to serue the Serraglio, but at a very great charge. For the Snow doth stand the Port in more then twentie thousand Chicquines per annum, in Gifts and Ceremonies, and other Expenses, at the fetching it in from the Hills; and in putting it vnder ground in Houses made of purpose for that vse.
- King with his women. They doe not ordinarily vse Comfets, nor Cheese, for the Turkes doe hardly know how to make them; especially Cheese (which although they doe make of it) it neuer prooues good: So that the Sultanas, and all great Personages eate none but Parmezan, of which the Bailo of Venice doth alwayes furnish them, and that very plentifully, for they loue it well, and eate heartily of it when they goe abroad vpon pleasure or a hunting.
- Snow mixed with Sherbet, at a deere rate. For the prouision of the said Serraglio, all things are prepared in great abundance, and every particular prouision is assigned to particular persons to take care therefore, so that there is neuer any want of things necessary.
- Comfets and Cheese not vsed. The first and best sort of Bread (which indeed is very white and sauourie) is for the King, the Sultanas, the Bashawes, and other great ones. The second sort for them of a middle ranke. The third and last sort (which indeed is very blacke and course) for the Agiamoglans and others of base qualitie.
- Order. The meale whereof the best sort of bread is made for the Grand Signior and the Sultanas, is brought from Bursia, made of the Wheate of that Prouince of Bithinia, growing in the Kings owne ground. And the yeerely prouision thereof is about seuen or eight thousand Keeloes, which makes almost so many Bushels of ours here in London: the which Wheat makes the best flower that comes to Constantinople, for that it is also ground at Bursia, and those Mills are far better then any that are neere Stanbol.
- Bread of three sorts. Now for the other Wheate which they spend, it all comes (for the most part) from Volo in Grecia, where there is a great deale of Land belonging to the Crowne; a great part of which
- Meale from Bursia. Quantitie. Corne

Corne is yeerely spent in the Armado, made into Bisket at Negropont: and some part of it is sold to the Raguseans and others, who come with their shipping to lade it thence, but they must bring their Authoritie with them from Constantinople. There is likewise brought yeerely to Stamboll of the aforesaid Wheate, hirtie five, or forcie thousand Keeloes, which is laid vp in Magasins that serue for that vse, and is afterwards ground, and spent in the Serraglio, for the seruice of the same. Nor is it any wonder that the Serraglio consumes so much Corne; for, besides the Seruants as aforesaid; all the Sultanas and great Personages, with diuers others, haue their daily allowance of bread from the Keeler (that is) the Pantrie, or from his Highnesse Bakehouse; scilicet, euery Sultana, twentie Loaves: euery Bashaw ten: to the Muskee eight: and so to diuers others a seuerall proportion, euen to one Loafe a man. All which is by the Commandement and discretion of the Chiefe Vizir: the seuerall allowances beeing set downe in the Chiefe Butlers Bookes, or else in his who is the Ouerseer of the Bake-houses: Euery Loafe being as bigge as three penie Loaves of ours here in London, but very light and spungie; and easie of digestion.

Oyle of Grecia.

Of Candie.

Butter from Bogdania, &c.

No fresh Butter.

Little Milke eaten.

Prouision of flesh.

Kow Beefe.

Dryed and hanged.

The Rice and Lentils, and all other sorts of Pulse (of which there is a great quantitie spent) is brought yeerely from Alexandria in the Galeons, which make two Voyages per annum, and bring out of Egypt, not only the said Pulse, but also all sorts of Spice and Sugar, and a great quantitie of Preserues, and pickled meates, which the Turkes much delight in. And as for Sugar, there is spent an vnspeakeable deale in making of Sherbets, and Tarts; which not only the Serraglio vseth, but are also ordinary Presents from one Bashaw to another, and from one friend to another; insomuch that it is a thing to be admired, to see so great a quantitie so suddenly consumed. True it is, that there is but little Spice spent in the Serraglio, nor indeed any great store among the Turkes (Pepper only excepted) for inasmuch as Wine is not an ordinary drink amongst them, they therefore auoide such things as prouoke a desire thereunto. Howsoeuer in the Store-houses of the Port, there is prouision of all sorts of Spices and Drugges for whatsoeuer occasion should happen, that may require the vse of them.

There likewise comes from Egypt great store of Dates, Prunes, and other dryed Plummes of diuers sorts, which the Cookes vse in their dressing of meate, as well for rost as boyled, and indeed they make delicate dishes of them. The Hony (of which the Port spends a great quantitie both in their Broths, boyled meates and Sherbets also for the common sort of people) is brought from Valachia, from Transilvania, and from Moldania, as well that which is presented to the King, as that which comes for particular mens Accounts; yet that which is vled in the Kings Kitchen comes from Candie, and is farre better and purer then the other.

The Oyle (of which there is an vnspeakeable consumption made) is brought from Modon and Coron in Grecia, the Saniack beg of that Prouince being bound to see the Port sufficiently furnished therewith: howbeit that which is spent in the Kings Kitchen is brought from Candie, it being sweeter, cleerer, and in euery respect better then that of the Morea.

The Butter (of which there is also spent a very great quantitie, in that it is vsed almost in all their meates; especially in Pillane) comes out of the Blacke Sea, from Bogdania and from Cassa, being put into great Oxe-hides and Buffalo-hides, and so laid vp in Magazines, for the yeerely prouision of the Kings Court, but commonly they haue so much that they sell part of it into the Citie, as they doe likewise the Oyle, Honey, &c. which is Beggleek (that is, for the Grand Signiors Account) when they haue more of them then they thinke they shall spend; and make a great benefit of it. The Turkes know not what belongs to fresh Butter, there being little or none at all made about Constantinople; neither doe they eate much Milke, except it bee made sower, which they call Yoghurd, for that it being so turned sower it doth quench the thirst; and of that both they and the Christians doe eate a great quantitie. They eate also some store of Kaymack (that is, clouted or cloded Creame) but that is only for the better sort, for it is a meate of too high a price for the vulgar.

Now as for flesh, euery yeere in the Autumne, Winter drawing nigh; the Bashaw causeth the Prouision of Basturma to be made for the Kings Kitchens; and they make it of Kowes great with Calfe, for then say they, the flesh is most tender and sauourie: they vse it in the same manner as Christians vse Swines flesh, for they make Puddings and Sauceages of it, and therest they boyle and dresse after other fashions.

This sort of dryed flesh, after that it is sufficiently dryed with hanging a moneth or better in a Roome, and little or no Salt vsed about it, will last the whole yeare, and eate very sauourly; and it is in such vse amongst the Turkes, that there is scarce a house of any fashion or account, but doth yeerely make prouision of it, and it is held a very thriftie and sparing course; but they doe not all make their Basturma of Kowes great with Calfe, for there are some which loue the other better, which is made of Oxen and Bullocks; and they can buy it farre cheaper.

The Bashaw hath the ouersight of that which is prepared for the Kings Kitchens; and there are ordinarily spent foure hundred Kowes per annum, for the said prouision of Basturma. The other flesh which is daily spent in the Kitchens of the Serraglio (as I was told by one of the Aschees) is as followeth: Sheepe, 200. Lambes, or Kids when they are in season, 100. Calues, 100.

Geese,

- Fish. Geese, 50. Hennes, 200. Chickens, 100. Pigeons, 200. There is but very little store of Fish spent in the Serraglio: yet sometimes the Aghaes for dainties will eate some; the Seas thereabouts doe exceedingly abound with diuers kinds, and they may easily take as many as they please: but the Christians are well serued with Fish in the Markets, and at reasonable prices; and the common sort of Turkes doe beare them Companie.
- Fruits. The Grand Signior (nor any of the Serraglio) cannot want for Fruit; there being in time of yeere so many Presents thereof brought thither continually; besides what comes from the Kings owne Gardens (which are many, and neere the Citie) every morning in great abundance, and excellent good; the Gardeners selling the remainder at a place in Constantinople, where onely the Kings Fruit is sold; and bring the money weekly to the Bustangee Bashee, who afterwards giues it to his Maiestie, and it is called the Kings Pocket-money; for he giues it away by handfuls, as he sees occasion, to his Mutes and Buffons.
- Skullery. The furniture of the Kitchens in the Serraglio, as Ketles, Cauldrons, and Skillets, &c. are almost all of Brasse, and they are so neatly kept, and of such a largenesse, that there cannot bee a brauer sight of that nature. And as for the Dishes, they are of Copper tinned ouer, but so often new forbished and trimmed, that (they being daily vsed) it is wonderfull to behold their continuall brightnesse; and of these they haue a great number, but the King sustaynes great losse by them: for, there being such a companie of people serued daily from the Kitchens with meate both within and without (especially vpon the foure Diuan dayes) there are so many of them stolne, that the Defterdars (weighing the losse and charge of those Dishes) haue often beene almost resolued to make them all of Siluer, and so to consigne them to the custodie of the Sewers and Butlers, who should from time to time giue account of them, and looke the better to them: but finding it a thing so costly, not any Defterdar (as yet) hath performed it, nor aduentured to beginne.
- Losse by pilfering.
- Wood and Fewell. The Wood which is spent in the aforesaid Kitchens and in all the Serraglio, are almost an infinite number of weights, (for at Constantinople the Wood is all bought and sold by weight) there being for the account of the Serraglio (which they call Begleek) about thirtie great Caramusals, which doe nothing else at one time of the yeere, but sayle into the Blacke Sea, there to lade at the Kings Woods: It is a businesse which costs but little (in respect of the worth of it) for they haue it for the cutting downe; and the bringing and vnlading of it requires little or no charge at all; for they are to make so many returnes per annum for the King, but receiue no freight: and the Masters are to see it vnladen at their owne costs and charges, receiuing only a discharge, but no recompence at all.

Apparell, Bedding, Sicknesse, Hospitals. Inheritance; Kings expences, Recreations, receiuing Petitions, Stables; Ramazan Solemnities.

- Fashion of Kings apparell.  He Grand Signiors Apparell, is nothing different in fashion from other mens, sauing in the length of his Vests, and the richnesse thereof; nor are his shooes shod with Iron at the heeles, as other Turkes weare them, but are rased and painted like childrens shooes, with knots and flowers.
- His bedding. And as for his Lodging; he sleepest vpon Mattresses of Veluet and Cloth of gold: In the Summer in Sheets of Shash embroydered with Silke sowne to the quilts: and in the Winter betwixt Couerlets of Lucernes or of Sables, wearing all night a little Telbent on his head;
- Pages watch. And when he lies alone in his owne Lodgings, he is alwaies watched by his Pages of his Chamber, by two and two at a time, changing every three houres; one of them standing at the Chamber doore, and the other by the Bed side to couer him, in case the clothes should slide off, and to be neere hand, if his Maiestie should want any thing: And in the same Chamber where he lies, there are alwaies two women that attend with burning Torches in their hands; nor may they put them out till such time as the King is risen out of his Bed.
- Two Torch-women.
- Womens habit. The habite of the women is much like to that of the men, for they weare Chackfirs, and Buzkins, and haue their Shooes shod with Iron at the heeles. They sleepe as the men doe, in linnen Breeches, and in quilted Waist-coats; hauing thinne and light ones for the Summer, and more chicke and warme ones for the Winter.
- No Close-stooles. The Turkes neuer haue any Close-stooles, or such like implements in their Chambers; but hauing a will to that businesse, they rise and goe to their Priuies, made in places apart, where there doe alwaies stand Water-pots ready, that they may wash when they haue done; nor may they vse Paper in that seruice, as we doe.
- No Paper, &c. Stipends. The seuerall stipends which the Grand Signior alloweth to those of the Serraglio, (of what degree or condition soeuer they be) are payd out of the outmost Hazmeh; and the chiefe Defterdar (who hath a Booke as well of the names of the Stipendaries, as of their stipends) is bound to send lend once euery three moneths, to all the Odabs in severall bagges, so much money as their pay imports, and there they share it amongst them: The like hee doth also by the women, and the Agiamoglans, paying them in good money. And against the Biram, which is their Carnual, hee lends them their Vests, their Linnen, and such like necessaries, of which he neuer fayles them; for, they wanting them, if he should disappoint them, they would so complaine against the said Defterdar, that it would bee his vtter ouerthrow; for hee should bee sure (at the least) to lose his place.

When any one dieth in the Serraglio, his Chamber-fellowes are made his Heires, and that which he left is diuided amongst them. And if any great Eunuch die, all comes to the King; for they are alwaies very rich, by reason of the manifold gifts which come to their hands: But 10 if any Eunuch of the Serraglios abroad, or in places of other gouernment should die, then two thirds of his estate falls to the King by Canon, the other third part being to bee disposed of according to the Testators will; and that is onely when the King giues way vnto it, and will not out of his supreme authoritie take all to himselfe, as he vseth to doe by all great rich ones, the Kings person being held the principall and most lawfull Heire of all; they being accounted as slaues which haue receiued their liuelihood, goods, estates, and all that they haue enioyed, meerly from his greatnesse, and bountie. And to this end there is an Officer, called the Beytimawgee, 20 who so soone as any one dies, makes inquisition for their estates, and so certifies the Defterdar thereof, leauing the execution to him, if it be in matters of import. But the Beytimawgee for his owne priuate gayne, doth oftentimes conceale a great part of the estate of the deceased, parting the same betwixt the kindred and himselfe.

When any ordinary person falls sicke in the Serraglio, he is carried from his chamber in a Cart which is couered and drawne with hands; and is put into the aforesaid Hospitall or Lazaretta, where he is lookt vnto after the Turkish fashion; and kept so closely, that none may come to the speech of him but with great difficultie; and growing well againe, he is carried backe in the same manner to his owne chamber where he was at the first.

The expences of the Serraglio are very great, as any one may gather by what hath bene already said; besides, there are other charges of great consideration which the King is at, by reason of the Queene, the chiefe Vizirs, the Generals of his severall forces, and the great Defterdars: All whom he doth present according as he seeth fit vpon diuers occasions; as at the times 30 of their going forth, or at their returnes from their employments abroad; The which Presents are of Vests, some vnlined, and some lined with very costly Furs; Swords, Bowes, Plumes and Brooches, Girdles all set with rich Stones, and in fine many other things of great value; and some but of lowe price, according to the qualitie and desert of the partie to whom hee is pleased to shew his liberalitie. Nay, the Hazinehdar Bashee without (who hath the keeping of the Cloth of gold and siluer of Bursia) doth affirme, that in that one commoditie, to make Vests of, there is spent yeerely two hundred thousand Sultanines; besides what he disburseth for the buying of Venetian Silkes and Wollen clothes, of which the Serraglio consumes a great quantitie, they not wearing (for the most part) any other.

Neither would this alone serue the turne, for besides all this, the Gr. Signior giues away all that which is giuen him by strangers, and a great part of that which comes to him of the spoyle of the dead, of which he is Master, as hath bene shewed before. And surely, should he want these helps, the King could not continue in that humour of giuing Presents, long, as he doth, to his wenches, to his Basshawes, and to all such as are at any time to kisse his hand. Neuerthelesse, true it is that the greatest part of things of great value, in time, come againe to his hands; for, his Sultanaes, Basshawes, or other rich men dying, hee becomes Master of all, or (at least) of the greatest part of their estate. And so much of such things, there is a continuall ebbing and flowing in the Serraglio.

The Queene also giues much away; for, as shee is presented by many, so is it fit, that shee should in part make some compensation: and to that end, shee hath an allowance of Vests, and other things in abundance; besides, shee hath libertie to dispose of many of those which haue 50 benee worne by the King.

The chiefe Vizir is likewise a giuer, as well whilest hee is in Constantinople, as when he is vpon departure as Generall of the Armie: and to that end, before he departeth, hee hath allowed him from the Hazinehdar Bashee, a great number of Vests and other things, that he may be provided when he is in the field with Presents; according to the Turkish custome, which (in all busineses, and vpon euery occasion) is, to giue and take.

The King (if he please) may at any time goe abroad either by water or by land: when hee goes by water, he hath his Kaik of sixteene or eightene bankes; with a very sumptuous Poope, couered ouer with rich embroydered crimson Veluet, vnder which he himselfe sits, and none but he, on cushions of Veluet and Cloth of gold; his Aghaes standing all on their feete, and onely 60 the Bustangee Bashee, who steeres the Kaik, may now and then sit downe, that he may handle the Helme the better. Now the Bustangee Bashee, by reason the King talkes much with him in the Barge, (at which time, least any one should heare what they say, the Mutes fall a howling like little Dogs) may benefit or preiudice whom he pleaseth; the King being ignorant of diuers passages, passages, and apt to beleue any information, either with or against any Subject whatsoever. His Kaik is rowed by Agiamogians, which are brought vp to that exercise, and indeed they manage the businesse with a great deale of dexteritie.

His going out by land.

When he goeth forth by land, hee alwaies rides on horse-backe, and goes out (for the most part) at the greatest Gate, especially, at such times as he goes to the Moschea which is vpon the Friday (it being their Sabbath) and is accompanied into the Citie by the Bashawes, and other great men of the Port, besides many of his owne seruants which goe by his stirrop, and diuers Solacks with their Bowes and Arrowes, for his Guard. And as he rides along the streets, he salutes the people with nodding his head, who againe salute him with loude shouts and prayers of prosperitie and happinesse; and for recompence, hee oftentimes puts his hand into his Pocket, 10 and throwes whole handfulls of money amongst them.

Gratulations and gratifica-tions.

Petitions.

Now, they of the Serraglio, which goe by his stirrop, haue charge to receiue such Petitions as are preferred to his Maiestie, as he rides along: and many poore folkes, who dare not to approach nigh him, stand as farre off with fire vpon their heads, holding vp their Petitions in their hands; the which the King seeing, sends immediatly to take the said Petitions, and being returned home into his Serraglio, reades them all, and then giues order for redresse as he thinks fit. By reason of which complaints, the King oftentimes takes occasion to execute Iustice, euen against the most eminent in place, before they are aware, without taking any course in Law against them; but causing a sudden execution of what punishment he pleaseth vpon them. Which makes the Bashawes that they care not how seldome the Grand Signior stirres abroad in publike, 20 for feare least in that manner their vniust proceedings and bad Iustice should come to his eare. And indeed, they alwaies liue in great feare, through the multiplictie of businesse that passeth through their hands, and in danger of losing their liues at a short warning; which makes them, vse the Prouerbe; that, He that is greatest in Office, is but a statue of Glasse.

Stable.

The Grand Signior, for the vse of his household, hath in Constantinople neere vnto the Serraglio; an exceeding large Stable of a thousand Horses and vpward: And the Imrahor Bashee, which is Master of the Horse, hath the charge of them, together with an Vnder-Imrahor for his assistant; besides many ordinary Groomes, which are to looke to them and see that they be kept in good case. Now, the said Imrahor Bashee and his Deputie, are to see the Kings seruants provided of Horses, at such times as they accompanie his Maiestie abroad, either a hunting, or 30 for other sports.

Other Stables.

Besides this Stable, hee hath diuers others in other places, for his owne seruice, and for the vse of his Gentlemen, at such times as he or they shall come thither; namely, at his Gardens, and Houses of pleasure abroad in the Countrey, to which his Maiestie vseth to goe very often: but these Stables haue not aboue eight or ten Horses a piece in them, for to those houses hee carrieth but few followers with him.

Hee hath also Stables for his Stallions for race, in Bursia, Adrianopoli, and in diuers other places; from which are brought very stately Horses; besides such as are continually sent him for Presents, from Cairo, Bagdat, Arabia, and from other places from the Bashawes, and also such as fall to his share by the death of great persons; all which are Horses of great price, and kept for 40 his owne vse. And because there must bee a great number of Horses for ordinary seruices for the baser sort of his seruants; he is therefore furnished with lowe priced Nags out of Valachia.

Mules.

Besides these Stables of Horses, the Grand Signior is provided of five thousand Mules which serue to carrie Pauilions, Chifts, Water, and all other necessaries for trauell: but because the Vizir (going out Generall) makes vse of a great part of them, there is seldome that number complete at home. And should the King himselfe goe out to the Warres, his very household would vse a thousand of them, besides their riding Horses; for, the Emperours of Turkie are alwaies almost as well accommodated in their Voyages abroad, as they are at home in the Citie: and indeed, the generalitie of the Turkes are very well fitted against such times as they are to goe forth, especially for long iourneyes. 50

Publike appearing at Ra-mazan.

The Grand Signior is bound by Canon of the Empire, that vpon the first day of the Byram, which is their Carnenall, the Ramazan being ended, which is their Lent, hee shew himselfe publikely, and let all the great men, and the better sort of his owne seruants, kisse his Vest: wherefore vpon that day, early in the morning, being richly clad and set forth with his best Jewels, he comes out at his Serraglio Gate, that is, out of the Eunuches Gate, in the third Court; and sets him downe vpon a Persian Carpet of silke and gold, in a certaine place (close by the aforesaid Gate) which is onely for that seruice, and doth not stirre thence vntill all haue kissed his Vest in token of their reuerence and dutie; The chiefe Vizir standing close by him, and telling him the names of such as hee thinkes fit, to the end the Grand Signior may take notice of them: Now, to some of the Doctors of the Law which are of high degree, the King raiseth himselfe 60 vp a little, to honour and receiue them; and to some he shewes more grace and affection, then to other some, and indeed more then ordinary.

some.

Going to Santa Sophia.

Now, this Ceremonie being ended he goeth to the Moschea of Santa Sophia, accompanied by them all; and at his returne taking his leaue, hee retires himselfe to his owne Lodgings, where he

he dines alone, as he doth vpon other dayes; notwithstanding vpon that day he maketh a very solemne Banquet in the Dinan for the Bashawes and other Great ones; and a very great Dinner in the Court yard, for all such as did accompanie him, and are there present. Then his Majestie obseruing the ordinarie Custome, sends to present the Chiefe Vizir with a very rich Vest, lined with a very costly Furre, and doing the like by the other great ones of the Port, (though with Vests of farre lower price) hee also extends his bountie to all his Aghas, giuing them Swords and such like things; and to the Sultanaes costly Iewels, and other Gifts to many others of the Serraglio, giuing (as wee say) New-yeeres Gifts, to all.

Gifts to the Grandes.

10 Every night during the three dayes of the Byram (for it is but for three dayes and so it ends) hee causeth Shewes to bee made of Fire-workes, and such like, which continue vntill Morning, and that the Sultanaes may see them, the King comes of purpose into their companie to be merrie with them, and is more free and familiar then at other times; and hee giues free libertie for mirth and sports Day and Night throughout the Citie, during those three dayes.

Three dayes Solemnitie.
Fire workes
and Shewes,

To these Festiualls, all the Sultanaes which liue out of the Serraglio, are also inuited, who both giue Presents to the King, and take Presents from him. Likewise in these three dayes the King is presented by the Bashawes and Great men, and indeed with Gifts of great value, for euery one strives to exceed another, thinking thereby to winne fauour. The Sultanaes also are not behinde hand, for they present him, with Shirts, Handkirchiefes, Linnen breeches, and such like things of good consideration, the which the Grand Signior afterwards makes vse of for his

Presents to him.

20 owne wearing.

The same Byram of three dayes is kept in all his Dominions, and throughout the Citie of Constantinople, euen in euery Turkes house; the Streets being at almost euery corner set out with Deuises, and Swings of diuers sorts very artificially made; where old and young are solaced, and giuing two or three Aspers to them which owe the Swings, they may haue sport sufficient. But during this Feast, it is somewhat dangerous for the poore Christians and Iewes to walke the streets; for, the Turkes being then somewhat insolent and full of Wine, doe put them in great feare of doing them some mischief, if they deny them money when they demand it of them; And so they doe likewise in another Byram, which is called the little Byram, and comes three Christians awed

§. XI.

The Old Serraglio, and Womens liues therein: Of their Marriages and Children, Slaue-selling, Witnesses.

Having oftentimes mentioned the old Serraglio, which is as it were a dependent of the Kings Serraglio, it will not bee amisse briefly to make some kinde of relation of it.

The Old Serraglio.

40 This is a very large Serraglio, immured with a very high Wall; the Buildings are faire, it hath many Inhabitants, and is about an Italian mile in Compasse, being seated in the noblest part of the Citie. It was the first Serraglio, which Mahomet the second built for to dwell in with all his Court, when hee tooke Constantinople; It hath but one Gate (which is of Iron) belonging vnto it, the which Gate is kept by a Companie of white Eunuches, and no men may come in thereat, vnlesse it bee to bring in such necessaries as they want, at which times they cannot see any of the Women. Now the Women which are therein, are those which are put out of the Kings Serraglio, viz. such Sultanaes as haue belonged to the deceased Grand Signior, those Women likewise which through their euill behauiour and conditions are fallen into disgrace with the King, and such as are Infirme or Defectiue, in what should belong to Women fit for the companie of a King; and none else are there, but for some of the aforesaid causes. All

Who are there
in.

50 which are gouerned, and lookt vnto by an old Woman which is made their Ouer-seer, and taketh care to see them vsed according to the Custome of the House, and that they haue their Food and Cloathing, with their seuerall stipends; all which is farre short of what they had when they were in the Kings Serraglio; howbeit such as haue beene Queenes and Sultanaes, liue out of the common ranke, in their Lodgings apart; and although they are out of the Kings sight and (as it were) out of fauour, yet they are reasonably well serued.

Woman Ouerseer.

60 Now the greatest part of the sayd Sultanaes (Queenes excepted) if they bee any thing rich, may (with the Kings leaue by the old Womens solicitation) goe forth and marrie, and carrie with them all that which they haue kept and stollen. For at their comming forth of the Kings Serraglio, if they haue ought of any great worth or value that is knowne, the Cadun takes it from them, and restores it to the Grand Signior. So that I say, if they haue any thing to bestow themselves withall, they cunningly make it knowne abroad, to the end that some men of qualitie may become Suitors for them, and make them a good Ioynter.

In the said Serraglio, they haue all the commoditie of necessaries that may bee, as Gardens, Conueniences Fountaines, and faire Bognoes, and the King hath some roomes also therein readie furnished: for some-

- Sometimes hee goeth thither to visite his kindred, as his Grandmother, Mother, Aunts, Sisters, &c. who for some of the aforesaid occasions were put out of his Serraglio.
- The other Women of this old Serraglio, haue but meane allowance; and had they not somewhat of their owne to helpe sometimes, they would passe but courly; so that they are faine to betake themselues to their Needles, by which they reape a reasonable benefite, and haue diuers Iewes women who frequent their companies, and sell their labours for them.
- Hard state. A Turke (if hee please) may take seuen Wiues at Kebin: besides hee may haue as many Slaues as hee will, and the Children of the Slaues are held as truly begotten and legitimate, as those of the Wiues, and haue as much right to the Inheritance of what the Father leaues behind him: Nay, a Bashaw hauing married a Sister or a Daughter to the King, and hauing Sonnes by them; those Sonnes may not rise aboue the Degree of a Saniack Begh or a Capoogee Bashee, to the end they may bee kept vnder, being allyed to the Crowne, that so being but in meane places, they may not bee apt for reuolution. But their Brothers which their Fathers beget of Slaues, may come to bee Bashawes, for they are free from suspicion, in regard they are not of the Bloud Royall: And hence it is, that those Children which had a Sultana to their Mother, are so often seene to bee in lower Degree then the others; for hee which is borne of the Slaue, is aboue him which is borne of the Sultana; yet with the Children of the other Subjects it is otherwise, for they are equals.
- Seuen Wiues, Slaues unlimited.
- Bashawes Sons kept vnder, if of royal Bloud
- Diuorces. The parties Married, may vpon diuers occasions specified in their Law, leaue one another, especially when they cannot agree together. And if the man put away the Woman, hee is bound to allow her the Ioynter or Dowrie, which hee promised her when they were Contracted: but if the Woman forsake the Man, shee can recouer nothing, but departs onely with a small Portion, such as shee brought with her into her Husbands house.
- Slaues sold if barren. Now in case a Turke take Slaues for his vse, hee may not sell them againe, but they become members of the Familie, in which they are to remaine till they die; but if they prooue barren, they may bee sold from hand to hand, as often as their fortune so betides them.
- The Turkes may buy of all sorts of Slaues of euery Religion, and vse them as they please (killing onely excepted) which the Christians and Iewes there may not doe; for they haue libertie onely to buy Christians and Iewes.
- Bezisten. There is for this purpose in Constantinople a Bezisten, that is, a common publike Market, where euery Wednesday there are bought and sold Slaues of all sorts, and euery one comes freely, to buy for their seuerall vses; some for Nurses, some for Seruants, and some for their Lustfull appetites; for they which make vse of Slaues for their sensualitie cannot bee punished by the Iustice, as they should bee if they were taken with Free women, and with Turkish women especially.
- Manner of selling Slaues. These Slaues are bought and sold, as Beasts and Cattle are; they being viewed and reuiwed, and felt all about their Limmes and Bodies, as if they were so many Horses, then they are examined of what Countrey they are, and what they are good for; either for Sewing, Spinning, Weaving, and the like: buying sometimes the Mother with the Children, and sometimes the Children without the Mother, sometimes two or three Brothers together, and againe, sometimes taking the one and leauing the rest, vsing no tearmes of loue, regard, or honestie, but euen as the Buyer or the Seller shall thinke, will best turne them to profit. Now when there is a Virgin that is beautifull and faire, shee is held at a high rate, and is sold for farre more then any other; and for securitie of her Virginitie, the seller is not onely bound to the restitution of the money (if shee proue otherwise) to him that bought her: but is for his fraud fined at a summe of money. In the Bezisten there sitteth an Emeen, that is, a Customer, who receiues Custome of the buyers and sellers; which amounteth to a reasonable summe in the space of a yeere.
- Restitution if not a Virgin. The Bashawes and other Subiects, though by Marriage they become Vncles Sonnes in law, or Cousens to the Grand Signior, may not by vertue of their Affinitie, challenge any more familiaritie or freedome with his Majestie, then if there were no such matter of Kindred betwixt them, but onely what may well besit their Office and Dignitie, they remayning still Slaues as the others doe: nay, their seruitude is thereby increased, and they loose a great part of their former Libertie; for they must be very obsequious to the Sultanaes whom they haue Married, and turne away the greatest part of their other Women and Slaues (if they haue any) and must with patience support all their imperfections: so that for this reason, few Bashawes of worth and iudgement seeke after such Marriages, for they are both chargeable and bring Discontent: but when the King commands, they (as his Slaues) must submit and obey, though their vexation and charge increase neuer so much thereby.
- No benefit by Affinitie to the King.
- Losse by it.
- Rites of Marriage. The Ceremonie of Turkish Marrying, is nothing else, but in the presence of the Cadee (who is the Iustice) to make Hoget, that is, a Writing expressing the Vow and good liking of the parties to bee Married, with a specification of the Dowrie which the Husband is to make to the Wife; all which is done in presence also of Witnesses, which are true and honest, and not to bee denied. For in Turkie it is not permitted that euery one that will, should beare Witnesse; but onely such men as are Free, of a good Age, that can say the Namaz, and haue some knowledge in the Law, knowne to bee men of ciuill life, and which drinke no Wine: for the Witnesse of a
- Turke*

Turke which drinke Wine is nothing worth, and thus their Law commandeth; But for all this, Corruption is so crept in amongst them, that now in Turkie (especially in Constantinople) there are (to the outward appearance Graue and Honest men) more false Witnesses, then in any other part of the world besides; and who are they? (at least the Chiefe of them) but a certayne sort of Emeers, that is, such as pretend to come of the Race and Stocke of Mahomet, which weare greene Telbents: and certayne poore Cadees out of Office, and these are they which for money doe vse that detestable Trade, which our Knights of the Post doe practise heere with vs. And hence it is that Ananias are so commonly framed, for they can stoutly (and that with ease) out-face the poore Christians and Jewes: nay, for a Bribe they will not spare their owne generation, in bearing false witnesse, or rayeing calumnies against them: For the Turkes being naturally giuen to Couetousnesse, not fearing God, but altogether inclined to Rapine (although without question there are many very honest men amongst them) when they meete with a fit opportunitie, they will play the Rogues with any man, bee hee of what condition soeuer; wherefore it proues dangerous to haue any dealing with them, for that they with that tricke will easily free themselves from any Obligation or Agreement before made; for, Iudgement there, consists onely of the force of prooffe by Witnesses, so that a man had need to be wondrous circumspect in his proceedings with Turkes, especially in matters of Couenant.

§. XII.

Of their Religion, Opinions, Persons, Times, Places and Rites sacred.

The Turkes beleue in Almighty God, that hee is the Creator of the whole Vniuerse, and the gracious Redeemer of all good men in the day of Iudgement, that hee is in the highest Heauen, serued with especiall Angels, hauing from the beginning cast out the Disobedient ones; for whom as also for Wicked men hee made Hell. And as they affirme, euerlasting Life to bee in these two places, viz. Heauen and Hell: So they confesse and wayte for the Resurrection of the Bodie to bee re-vnited with the Soule, at such time as the fearefull Trumpet shall bee sounded by Mahomet, at the commandement of the Great G o d of the Iudgement.

Resurrection.

They beleue also, that Life euerlasting in Paradise, is such a happinesse, that it consists onely in the delighting and pleasing of the Sences; and that they shall haue there, the vse of Naturall things in all perfection, without making any difference, inioying perfect health, and free from all manner of trouble. And on the contrarie, that in Hell, the vse of the aforesayd things shall bee in vnquenchable Fire, and shall haue a most bitter and loathsome taste. And this is all that they attribute vnto them, either for the reward of the Blessed, or the punishment of the Reprobate.

Sensuall Paradise.

They say moreouer, that the Power of God is such, that hauing at Mans Creation prefixed and appointed a set time for his end, it is impossible that the wit or deuice of mortall Man, should bee able to diuert or preuent it. Wherefore in the warres, or in other occasions, they are so much the more bold, resolute and couragious; saying, that their End is written in their Fore-heads, and it is not for them to goe about to auoyd it, so that if they dye, they dye.

Fate.

They also affirme Gods Power to bee such, that after mens Bodies are risen againe, hee will giue them such an agilitie, that they shall bee able in a moment to passe from one Heauen to another, euen to the farthest parts of them, to visite and imbrace their Wiues, Mothers, Brothers, and others of their Kindred, the Heauens being all transparent, being of Diamonds, Rubies, Turkeesses and Christall.

Agilitie in the next Life. Transparent Heauens.

As concerning Gods Throne or Seate of Majestie; they affirme, that euery one cannot behold it, by reason of the brightnesse of the beames which comes from his Eyes, and by reason of the vnspokeable splendour proceeding from his glorious Face, and that the Angels and Prophets onely, haue the grace to inioy that sight.

Gods Throne.

These are the principall foundations of their Religion, vpon which they build the course of this their present temporall Life, and by which they hope to obtaine a Life euerlasting and happie; affirmed by their Prophet, to bee full of the delights and pleasures of this World, but enioyed in all perfection and excellencie, in a Supernaturall and Incorruptible manner.

They say, that Almighty God sent foure Prophets into the World, to instruct, gouerne, and saue Mankind; each of them being holy, pure, and vndefiled, to wit, Moses, Dauid, Christ, and Mahomet; and that God sent to euery one of them by his Angell Gabriel a Booke, that they themselves being first perfected, might the better know how to instruct the people. To Moses he sent the Taurat, that is, the Old Law; to Dauid the Zebur, that is, the Psalmes; to Christ the Ingil, that is, the Gospell; and to Mahomet the Kurawn, that is, the Alcoran, (as wee call it.) And that the three first Prophets with their people, did faile somewhat in the Lawes giuen them by God: But Mahomet comming last, brought a Law, more true, plaine, cleere, and sincere, in which all such as beleue should obtayne the loue of God; but they say that other Nations continue still in their errors, and hauing sucked of their Mothers Milke, doe not embrace the Truth; For which fault being (by right) deprived of Heauen, they haue no other meanes to recouer, and to come thither at the Day of Iudgement, but by Mahomets protection, who is the only Intercessor and Mediator vnto the Almighty God: And standing in the dreadfull Day of Iudgement at the gate of Paradise, he shall be sought vnto and entreated by the other Prophets to saue their people also, and his clemencie shall be such, as to make Intercession for them, so that the good Christians and the good Jewes shall by his meanes obtayne euerlasting Life, with perpetuitie of sensuall delights as aforesaid, but in a place apart and inferiour to the Turkes, they being beloued of God, and more deare vnto him then others. The women also shall come into Heauen, but shall be in a place farre inferiour to men, and be lesse glorified. 10

uen.

All the Prophets are held in great honour amongst them. They call Moses, Musabib Allah, that is, a talker with God; and Christ, Meseeh, Roob-ulloh, and Hazrette Isaw, that is, Messias, the Spirit of God, and venerable Iesus: and Mahomet, Resul Allah, that is, the Messenger of God. When they talke of Christ Iesus, they speake very reuerently of him; and confesse that the Jewes through Enuie apprehended him, and maliciously condemned him, and led him along to put him to death; but the Angels being sent from God, tooke him away from them in a Cloud, and carried him into Heauen, at which the Jewes being astonished and vexed, tooke one that was there present, and crucified him in his stead; not being willing to haue it knowne that Iesus was the Messias; he being in Heauen in company of his Brethren the Prophets, beloued of God, and 20 serving him, as the other Prophets doe.

The Musfee.

The Ministerie of their Religion (or rather their confused Sect) is as followeth. They haue first a Musfee, that is to say, an Expounder or Declarer of Cases in Law; who amongst them is as an Archbishop is with vs, for he is also the Primate ouer the Church; and must be a man very expert in the Lawes, and one accustomed to Iustice, chosen by the Grand Signior himselfe, the which Mustees charge is to ouersee, and heare such things as are belonging to the Law, or to the Church. And although he hath not an absolute command ouer the Mustees of the other Prouinces, yet with his subtiltie he preuailes with the King, and effecteth what he list, especially when he hath the Chiefe Vizir to friend, who in degree, dignitie, and authoritie is his Superiour. Vnder the said Musfee there are two Cadeeschers, that is to say, Iudges of the Armies, one of Grecia 30 and the other of Natolia, who also being men of the Law, and they which alwayes succeed the Musfee, haue the ouersight of all the other Cadees, who are Iustices; of which there is one in euery Citie and Towne, to doe Iustice and end Controuersies betwixt man and man, and to punish Offenders. But they are changed euery three yeeres, and others put into their places by the Cadileschers, with order from the Grand Signior.

Cadeeschers.
Cadees and their orders.

Amongst the said Cadees, they haue also their orders; scilicet, those of the first ranke, and they are called Meulaws, which signifieth Lords, and they are employed in the principall Cities, the other are but Cadees, and they get employment as they can by their vertues: and good carriage in former places. Now the Cadeeschers haue Bookes lying by them, wherein are exactly set downe the Reuenues of euery Cadeelick, so that by that meanes they know the better how to 40 furnish them; none of them surmounting aboue five hundred Aspers per diem.

Bookes.

This order of Turkes amongst the rest, hath only this Priuiledge, which is, that they cannot be put to death; so that if any of them by committing some notorious crime against the Law, should deserue death, it must be done by absolute command from the Grand Signior, and that very warily and secretly, but this hapneth very seldome or neuer.

Priuiledge.

The Musfee and Cadeeschers are changed at the Kings pleasure (for there is no Office in Turkie during life) howbeit their ordinary Residence is three yeeres; their chiefe Fortune depending wholly in their continuance in the grace and fauour of the Chiefe Vizir.

Their continuance.

All the aforesaid men of the Law, that is, the Musfee, the Cadeeschers, Mulaws, and Cadees, weare their Turbants farre bigger then any other Turkes, and made vp after another fashion, in 50 token that they ought to be reuerenced aboue others. And although their habit be in fashion like other mens: yet in this there is a difference, for they weare much white Chamblet, and the finest cloth, but no silke at all.

Turbants.

The principall charge of the Musfee, is to Answer to all such Propositions as are made vnto him, of matters in generall, vpon Cases concerning conscience, and the Rites of Turkish Iustice and Law, the which Answeres are of few words, very brieft, and they are called Fetfa's, that is, Declarations, or Iudgements of the Musfee; with which he may compell not only the Cadees and Bashawes to the performance of the Contents thereof, but the Kings owne person is also bound to see them executed; for in conclusion, they seeke altogether to amplifie their Sect in honour of their Prophet; the Mustees Fetfa being in high estimation, in as much as it is vpheld very stoutly 60 by the whole order of the Cadees.

Mustees office.

Then next they haue a Gouvernour of the Moscheas, called the Mootenelee, and Eemawms, which are Parish Priests, and next to them Muyezins, which are as our Church Clerkes; all which are employed in the Seruice of the Moscheas, calling the people to Prayers, burying the dead, dead, reading vpon the graues of the dead, and to conclude, performing all such Offices as are any way belonging to the Church, for the good of the people.

They pray five times a day (aswell in the Moscheas, as in their Houses, or wheresoeuer they are) that is, at foure of the clocke in the morning; at noone; betweene three and foure in the afternoone; betweene seuen and eight at night; and at mid-night: and vpon the Friday which is their Sabbath, at nine of the clocke in the fore-noone also which makes fixe times, and vpon that day there are more Muyezins which cry in the Steeples, then vpon other dayes: for at all those houres, in stead of Bells, the people are called to Prayer by the voice of one or two men in the Steeples or Turrets adjoyning to the Moscheas, of a reasonable height, by which voices they are stirred vp to the praye of God and Mahomet: and may prepare themselves for their Prayers. And because the Muyezins which cry, can heare no Clockes (for they haue none in their Churches) they vse Houre-glasses, by which they are directed aswell in this Seruice, as in other ordinary matters.

In euery great Moschea there are Mudereeser, which are Readers; that teach diuers Schollers the common Prayers, and instruct them in the Seruice belonging to the Moscheas, being paid for their paines out of the Reuenues of the said Churches.

The condition of them which are to pray, is only to be corporally cleane; it being vnlawfull for any one to enter into the Moscheas, or to pray, if he find that he hath any naturall pollution or carnal vncleanenes about him, be it of what condition soeuer, or of neuer so small moment: wherefore for their clensing, euery one is bound either to wash him selfe in the Bagno, if it bee for carnall commerce, or else for other sorts of vncleanenesse with cold water, euery Citie and place abounding with Bagnoes, both publike and priuate, and euery Church-yard with very faire Fountaynes for the vse of the common sort. Now immediately after euery one is clensed and come into the Moschea, the Eemawm, which is the Parish Priest, beginnes, to pray, and all they which are present imitate him in gesture: for, of themselves a great part of them would not else know how to performe that businesse. For their Prayers consist chiefly in rising vp, falling downe, kissing the ground, and sometimes sitting still, one while touching their eyes, sometimes their faces, then their beards, then their heads; saying some few words in the prayse of God and Mahomet, the Churches being all matted vnder-foot, and in some places there are Wool-len Carpets spread for the better sort of people.

The said Prayers according to the houres, are diuers; some longer, and some shorter, none of them being aboue an houre long, only that Prayer of the Euening in the time of the Ramazan, which is their Lent, which is longer then the other Prayers: they pray after their Eemawm, for he is their Guide, and esteemed of if hee haue a good voice, as wee esteeme of our Singing men. They also vse preaching vpon euery Friday in the Ramazan: And when they will pray for any good successe in the Warres, or curse any Rebell; they haue a custome then to goe a Procession along the streets by two and two, but without any Lights or any such thing in their hands; and as they goe along they prayse the Name of God, and reade very long Prayers which they haue for those purposes, the people still crying Amen, making one whole dayes worke of it, and then they hold that Rebell or Enemie, whosoeuer he be, to be without all doubt, accursed.

In the time of trouble or affliction, They publish in the most eminent places a Conuocation of all the chiefe men in the Citie (and of the common people also, such as will come, may) to pray in the fields which are for that vse, therein imitating the Jewes, and being all come together, diuers of their Santons of esteeme for their Holinesse, make Sermons of exhortation, to Fortitude, Patience, and to the loue and feare of God: But if those troubles continue still, they then vse the Prayers of forty houres, and of fortie dayes in the chiefeest Moscheas built by the Emperours; the which Prayers are made by a company of men, who are belonging to the said Moscheas.

The Musftee hath his Entrada apart, in Land of about fixe thousand Sultanines per annum: but being put out of his place, falling into disgrace with the King, and leauing the Entrada to his Successor, he hath then but a thousand Aspars per diem pay: as the Cadceleschers haue when they are in Office.

All the Ceremonie which they vse in the Ramazan, which is their Lent, is no other but to abstayne from eating and drinking in the day time, they hauing leaue to eate all the night long, (that is, from seuen a clocke at night to foure in the morning) and what they please without making any difference of meates; At twilight they light the Lampes in the Steeples, which burne till morning: the Eemawm of euery Parish taking especiall notice who is often wanting from Church, especially in the Euening, and who drinks Wine, or eates in the day time; for, besides, that they should bee held despisers of the Law, they should bee most severely punished if they were found in any such fault. I remember once that Nasooch Bashaw being Vizir Azam, and riding through the streets in the Ramazan, espied a Turke that was drunke with Wine; so forthwith he caused him to be brought vnto him, and without giuing him any respite to recouer his wits; caused a Ladle full of boyling Lead to bee powred downe his throate, and the Wretch perished immediately.

- Sacrifices. The King useth in the Ramazan aswell as in the times of troubles and afflictions, and so doe the Bashawes and other great men, to sacrifice diuers sorts of beasts, aswell at the Sepulchres of such as haue beene holy men, as at the Moscheas. Now some were wont to doe it priuately, but the Kings haue still commanded that their Sacrifices be done publikely in the streets, and at the gates of the Citie, diuiding the flesh of the beasts amongst the people, giuing some also to the Bashawes themselues, and to the other great men of the Port. The said Sacrifices are vsed very often, for by that meanes they thinke to appease Gods wrath, and regaine his loue and fauour.
- Beads. Those Turkes which are professors of Humilitie and Deuotion, haue their Beades longer then other men, and carrie them in their hands into the Moscheas, and as they walke vp and downe the streets: but passe them ouer very quickly, for, whereas the Papiests say the Aue Maria, so they say only Subhawn Alloh, that is, God is pure and true, and sometimes Alloh Ekber, that is, God is great.
- Pilgrimage. They goe also many of them to Meccha on Pilgrimage, and to Hiernusalem also, which they call, Gudds' il Shereef, to Meccha, to visit the Temple which they say was built by Abraham, in the which Temple Mahomet in the time of Idolatry did hide himselfe: And they affirme, that when he was almost fortie yeeres of age, he receiued the Alcoran from God, and that from that time the Mussulmanlick beganne, that is, the true Beliefe: and shortly after hee dyed; and his Sepulchre is visited by all such as goe the said Pilgrimage. And when they goe to Iernusalem, they goe not to visit Christs Sepulchre, for, they say hee did not dye, but they goe only to see the places which he most frequented, as being a miraculous Prophet, who rayled the dead to life, healed the sicke, and wrought such like Wonders. They goe likewise to the Valley of Iehoshaphat, for they say that in that place shall bee the Resurrection at the Day of Iudgement. Now such as haue gone the said Pilgrimage, and returne home againe to their Houses, are euer after called Hagees, that is, Pilgrimes, and are much reuerenced and esteemed of. There are also diuers Turkes, who forsaking the World, leaue all that they haue, and goe to liue neere to the aforesaid Valley for deuotion, and for that they would be the neerer to the place of Resurrection, supposing thereby to get a great aduantage to themselues aboue the rest at that day.
- Circumcision. The greatest Ceremonie (for Pompe and Solemnitie) which is vsed amongst the Turkes, is that of the circumcising their children; wherein they differ from the Iewes in this one particular; for the Turkes neuer circumcise them till they be past ten yeeres of age, following the example of Ismael whom they imitate, alleadging that Abraham loued and esteemed him and not Isaac, and would haue sacrificed him. This Circumcision is done without the Church, because of the shedding of blood; all the Kindred and Friends being invited vnto it, in token of joy and gladnesse: They vse the like to those which turne from any other Religion and become Turkes, who in token that they imbrace the Religion of Mahomet, hold vp their fore-finger, saying these words, La illah il Alloh Muhamet resull Alloh, that is, there is but onely one God, and Mahomet is his Messenger.
- There are in the Cities, and by the High-ways also, in most places of the Grand Signiors Dominions, for the benefit of the Inhabitants and Trauellers, diuers Hannes with their Fountaynes. There are Hospitals also in the Cities, and Colledges for the bringing vp of youth, where they may learne to reade and write, all the Moscheas built by the Emperours, and other great Moscheas also, hauing great Reuenewes for the mayntayning of the said Colledges and Hospitals: For the Emperours by Canon may not build Moscheas, but in memory of some notable Conquest, or memorable Enterprize, by which the Church may bee provided for; nor Sultanas neither, vnlesse it be the Mother to that Emperour who reignes at that time when shee goes about it; for the building of which, they are at an infinite charge, and they dedicate them with great Solemnities, to the said Enterprize, be it what it will be.
- Moschees and Hospitals. Limited. In the Moscheas there are some very costly pieces of worke, and frames of great beautie; aswell for the largenesse and neatnesse of the places for Prayer, as also for the beautifull Porches and large paved Courts which compasse the said Moscheas; adorned with very itately Pillars, and Fountaynes built all of curious Marble; besides their Colledges and Hospitals to which belong very large Reuenewes; Infomuch that some of those Moscheas may be well compared with the richest Churches in the World: They are built all of wonderfull faire stone, with their Cabrioles couered all ouer with Lead, the Pillers being of Porphir or some such costly stones, and the Basis thereof all whited: the Pillers shine extraordinarily in time of Prayer, by reason of the abundance of Lampes which are burning; the which Lampes are curiously fastned into round Iron hoopes in compasse as bigge as the hoope of a But, vpon which there are diuers rounds of Lampes one aboue another, and are let downe by Copper chaines from the Roofe of the Church; and in euery Moschea there are three or foure such clusters of Lampes, according to the greatnes of the Church.
- Magnificence. There are no Benches, nor any thing to sit vpon; only a little place raised from the ground for the Priest; and another right ouer against it (but somewhat lower) for the King at such times as he comes to Prayer; all the rest sitting vpon the ground, as ordinarily they vse to sit in other places: wherefore the Pauements (although they are of very bright and cleane stone) are couered red with very fine Cairo Ma's, which are kept very cleane: for, besides the Grand Signior, no man may come into the Church with his shooes on; but must leaue them at the doore, or else giue them to one of their seruants to keepe.

When any one is extremely sicke, and as they thinke, past hope of recouery; then the Imamms Sicknesse fa- comes to vse comfortable words vnto him, and prayes by him: and being dead, they wash him tall, and death; all ouer, and then hauing wound him vp in a Sheete, and layed him in his Coffin with his face downward, they carrie him to his Graue, with his head foremost. If the partie bee a Man or a Man-child, they set a Turbant vpon the Coffin: and if it bee a Woman, then they set a Filiann takya vpon the Coffin, that is, such a Cap as the women weare, with a Brooch and Feather in it.

10 They are accompanied to the Graue by the Church-men, and their owne kindred, (but no wo- Funerall. men) vting no lights at all: but the Muyezins sing all along as they goe, calling vpon the Name of God, and their Prophet Mahomet, and pray for the health of the Soule departed; and at their returne there is a Banquet made for the companie for their paines.

The Tombes of the Emperours most commonly are built vpon the ground, close by their Tombes of the Graues which are couered either with extraordinary fine Cloth, or with Veluet; hauing Tur- Emperours. bants set vpon them of the fashion of those which the Emperours weare, with Brooches and sprigs of Feathers in them: and there stand Candlestickes both at the head and at the feet of the said Graues, and two Lampes burning continually both day and night. Now, these Tombes are for the most part built in little Chappels close by, but not adjoyning to the Moscheas of the said Emperours. And in the said Chappels there are Muyezins, who by turnes, doe continually read in the Alcoran, and pray with their Beades, for the glorie of the Emperours deceased. The Vizirs, Bashawes, and other Great men also (imitating the Kings) doe the like; but with lesse pompe and charge: And they which haue not burying places neere the Moscheas, may make them neere their houses and be buried there, or else in any part of the Citie, provided that the ground be their owne.

The common sort are carried out of the Citie, and buried in the fields which serue for that Common purpose; hauing one stone set vp an end at the one end of their Graue, and another at the other Tombes. end; vpon which is grauen the Name, Countrey, and Degree, and any thing else that they please, of the parties deceased.

30 Amongst the Turkes there are no Religious houses, nor Monasteries: onely the *Teckeh*s of the Meuleuees, (which are an order of Derveshes, that turne round with Musike in their Diuine Religious Service:) for, for the most part, they are all bred vp to Armes, and very few can reade and Turkes. write: Nay, it hath beene sometime seene, that a Bashaw (which had not his education in the Kings Serraglio) hath sate in the Deewan, and hath not knowne either to write or reade; but hath beene enforced to learne to write a few words of course, to vnder-write Commandements, and the like. And amongst the Turkes, he that can but reade and write, is held a learned fellow, and esteemed of farre aboue others.

There are also diuers which professe a kinde of liuing, out of the common custome of the world; being clothed wonderfull poorely and raggedly, with a kind of Felt caps on their heads; 40 they begge for their liuing, and lie in the courts of the Moscheas, and in such like places; and these are accounted very holy; for they pray much in the view of the world, and liue alwaies (in outward appearance) in the loue of honestie; preaching this doctrine, that it is vnpossible perfectly to arriue vnto and gayne the Loue of God, but by the ladder of humane Loue and Innocency: and for this cause they betake themselues to that course of life, that they may be in charitie with all the world, and bee accepted for it of God, in Heauen. Vnder which colour of holinesse they liue at ease, and deceiue the World (euery one being bountifull vnto them) and play the Villaines in secret, as well as any other. Besides them, there are also some, who like Hermites, liue in solitary places, neglecting the World; conceiuing that course of life to excell all other, for Innocency and Holinesse.

50 As for the women, there is no heed or reckoning made of their Religion at all; for they ne- Womens Reli- uer goe to Church: so that, if they happily haue a will to pray, at the houre of Prayer, they gion. doe it in their owne houses. But their honestie is much looked after, the Imamms of euery Parish being bound to hearken diligently after their deportment: who if they discouer any thing that is amisse, they must reueale it to their Husbands, that they may put them away: or else, to their Fathers or Kindred, if they bee vnmarried, that they may take some course for their amendment.

And although the Women may not bee conuersant with other Men then with their Fathers, Husbands, or Brothers; and liue in Lodgings apart by themselues, and goe alwaies with their faces couered: yet, they being extraordinarily giuen to the sport, and very dishonest; taking 60 the opportunitie of their Husbands absence at the Warres, or in some long Iourney; vnder colour of going to the Bagnoes, and going couered withall; they goe whither, and to whom they list; knowing, that the worst of it is, but to bee put away, if so bee it should bee at any time discouered.

I have hereunto added a Letter, sent by Sultan Osman the late murdered Emperour, to his Maiestie, by Husein Chiaus; and translated into English, by Master Robert Withers.

Although in this transitorie world, the King or the Beggar should enjoy the longest terme of life that might bee, and obtayne all that his heart could wish; yet it is most certaine, that in the end hee must depart, and be transported to the World eternall: and it is well knowne unto the Wise, that it is impossible for Man to abide for ever in this World.

The occasion of this Prologue is, that the immortall, omnipotent, and onely God, hath through his Divine will and pleasure, called unto himselfe Our glorious Father of blessed memorie, Sultan Achmet Kan, who in Life was happie, and in Death laudable, and departing out of this momentany World, to be neere the mercifull Creator, being changed into perfect glorie and eternall blisse, hath his habitation on high, and his rest in Paradise.

This paternall Empire and Monarchicall Kingdome hath almost untill this present blessed time bene alwaies hereditarie, from Grand-father to Father, from Father to Sonne, and so cursively in that manner: but having regard unto the age and yeeres of Our Great and Noble Vncle, Sultan Mustafa, hee was preferred and honoured to sit on the Ottoman Throne, and being settled for some time, tooke care for the affaires of the Empire, and for all that might concerne the people both in generall and particular.

But he having bene many yeeres retired in solitarinesse, and given to Denotion and Divine obedience; being also as it were wearied with the cares of the Empire; of his owne accord with-drew himselfe from the Gouvernement: for that the Diadem and Scepter of the Empire of the seven Climates, was the true Right and Inheritance of Our most Excellent Maiestie, of the which (with the meeting and consent of all the Vizirs, and other Deputies of State, of the Primate of the Mussulman Law, and of the other honorable Doctors, of the Souldiers, and of all Subjects both publike and private) the almighty God hath made a high Present and worthie gift unto us. And in the happie day in the beginning of the Moone Rebea-il-euel, of this present yeere 1027. in an expected time, and in an acceptable houre, was Our blessed and happie sitting established upon the most fortunate Ottoman Throne (the Seate and Wisedome of Salomon) In the Pulpits of all the Moschees (the Congregations of the Faithfull, and deuotion of the Mussulmen) throughout all Our Dominions, is read to Our Imperiall Name, the Hutbeh. And in the Mints where innumerable summes of money are coyned, as well upon the Siluer as the Gold, Our happie name and marke is stamped.

And Our most powerfull Commandements are obeyed in all the Parts and Dominions of the World: And the brightnesse of the light of the Sunne of Our Iustice and Equitie, hath caused the darkenesse of Iniuries and Molestations to vanish away.

Now, seeing it hath bene an ancient custome of Our most famous Predecessors to give notice of the same to such Princes as are in sincere friendship, and that doe continue it with the House of great Maiestie, and our Imperiall Court: Wee also have written these our Princely Letters, and appointed for their Bearer, the choyce amongst his equals, Husein Chiaus, (whose power be great) one of the honoured and respected Seruants of Our magnificent Port, the refuge of the World; to the end that such newes might cause great ioy of Our most honourable Assumption. And Wee doe hope, that when they shall come to your hands (in conformitie of the well grounded friendship upon the sure League, Articles, and Writings, which hath bene established of old with Our most Royall Race, and permanent Empire) you will manifest infinite ioy and gladnesse, and certifie as much to the Rulers and Governours of the Dominions and Countreies under you, that they may know, that the Articles of Peace and League, and the points of the Oath which are firme, and to be desired on both parts, from the time of Our Grand-fathers and Predecessors of Royall Stocke, now in Paradise (whose soules God enlighten) Vndoubtedly during the time of Our Raigne shall be observed with all respect. And let there not be the least imagination of any want of due obseruance of the signes of friendship on Our part, or by any manner of meanes on your part, for the violating the foundation of the Peace and League.

The ensuing Letter was written by Halil Bashaw, Chiefe Vizir and Generall in the Persian Expedition, at his returne in Aprill, 1618. to Sir Paul Pinder, Ambassadour for his Maiestie. Englished by Master Robert Withers.

TO the Courteous Lord of the Nation of the Messias; both Great and Honourable among the people of I E S V S, and the true Determiner of Christian Affaires: Our good Friend the English Ambassadour, whose latter dayes bee with all felicitie, to whose Noble presence (after our many kinde Salutations tending to all good affection and manifestation of Ioy, worthy and becomming our Friendship:) our louing aduice is this. That if you desire to heare of our State and beeing, you shall vnderstand, that after wee departed from the happie Port, with the Armie for the Warres of Asia, wee arrived and wintered red in Mesopotamia, and remooving thence in the Spring with all the Mussulman Host (alwayes victorious) wee went to Van, from which place untill wee came to Tauris, the Mussulman Armie went on alwayes sacking and destroying all those places and Townes of the Persians, which wee met withall by the way in those parts, where were burnt, pillaged, and ruined, some thousands of Villages; and tormenting all those people that came to hand. And when wee were come neere to Tauris, the Generall of the Persian Forces (of peruerse Religion) called Carcighai Han, (the accursed) retired himselfe into the sayd Tauris, where beating up his Drummes in euery Quarter, made a shew that hee had a will to Fight; so wee sent a little before vs, some Tartars and others of our Armie, to hearken out and take notice of the Enemy, who meeting with seuen or eight hundred Persians of note, put them to the Sword, very few escaping, and that with great difficultie and hazard. By which, the sayd Generall finding himselfe unable to resist the power and furie of the Mussulman Host, or to stay any longer in the sayd place; the very same day that wee arriued there, the sayd Generall hauing spoyled all the Citie, fled away; So wee tooke the place, ransackt it, and burned all the Buildings, Towers, Gardens, and whatsoever else wee found within it: And thus the great Citie Tauris by Diuine fauour and Grace became ours. Then forthwith wee sent after the Enemy, the Tartar, with some Beglerbeghis, who overtaking them gaue them Battell, and albeit some of ours did fall, yet they which fell of the Enemies side were innumerable. And so going forward towards Erdeuil (their obscure residence) about ten dayes Iourney of Countrey, wee went burning and spoyling it, and killing all the Persians that wee met. That indeed there was so much Honour and Glorie wonne, as that all the ancient men of the Countrey doe affirme, there neuer was seene the like; Inasmuch, that from the Confinnes unto Erdeuile, twentie dayes Iourney of Countrey, was on that manner by vs destroyed. Thus afterward, the King caused to emptie the sayd place of Erdeuile, and fled into a place called Hulchal, and caused his Armie to goe to the top of a high Mountayne, from whence hauing sent three or foure times Men of qualitie unto vs, seeking and intreating for Peace, with promise to giue yearly to our Emperour, a hundred Somes of Silke, and all such Places as are upon the Confinnes, made in the time of Sultan Solymán, except Der ne, and Der Tink; and wee were contented with the Peace, and his Ambassadour is upon the way comming toward vs. And so wee returning the same way againe alwayes spoyling, wee came to Erzerum. And this our present Letter is written unto you, for the respect and preseruation of our Friendship: And euen as our Amitie hath euer beene hitherto sincere and firme, so likewise by the Grace of God at our arriual in the happie Port, it shall bee in like manner maintayned and continued, that more cannot possibly bee. And so God keepe you in health.

To the Reader.

I Heere present thee Reader, many Voyages and Obseruations of Master Iohn Sanderson Merchant; worthy of good welcome, though not in so due place as wee could haue wished. But this, and the former, and all in this Booke from the tenth Chapter forward (enough to haue made another large Booke) thou hast as I could, and not as I would; who could not order them before I had them. I haue therefore presented them to thee as an Appendix to the former Worke, and a Reniew of Africa and Asia, (some fresh Drops after a great Shower, and faire Gleanings after a goodly Haruest) all intended to entertaine thee with varietie of Speculation and Discourse, as thou returnest shorow those long Seas, from the Indian to the English shoares. In which respect there is some Methodicall correspondence hitherto, and especially of this last with the former, both hauing Constantinople for their Centre, and diuersly representing the same to thy view: that giuing thee the Court, this the Citie; that the Gouernment, this the Places and Countries gouerned. And if Ierusalem come often in our way, remember our intended worke is of Pilgrimes, which (bee they Iewes, Turkes, or Christians,) haue conspired in the acknowledgements of her Antiquities and Holies. Neither doe wee much trouble thee with repetitions of the same things which others haue before deliuered; present Pilgrime by reason of his Iewish Associates, his Greeke Guides, and Quarrels with Father Guardian and his Popish Friars, presenting many notable rarities. I haue not shortned him (as some others) both for his request, and for his owne breuitie and pithie Passages. The Letters following will (I hope) giue thee good content, as the testimonies of many English Travellers in those parts, some of which thou mayest finde elsewhere mentioned in this Worke.

§. I.

His first Voyage to Constantinople, and thence to Cairo, and to Tripoli.

^a We were shewed the Monastery and fine adorned Chappell; a decorated Altar; and the golden Image of Saint Vincent, which stood on the right hand below the steps of the Altar. About five or six yeeres after, as is sayd, Sir Francis Drake did throw that Image over the Rocke.

^b Then flamed, and since I haue diuers times passed by it, but onely now the smoke is seene on the top of that Mount Mongebella.

^c Sio for the pleasantnesse is called the Great Turkes Garden, in that Island, are many raine Partridges, and there groweth Mastick, the bodies of those Trees are crooked, and cragged, not much thicker then very old Vine bodies, the leaues are somewhat like Mirtle leaues, rather longer and narrower, there are no Masticke trees in all the world, but those in Sio, as some doe say.

^d The Dardinelli. These two Castles, our Scholars will haue to bee those of Hero and Leander, yet sure they are eight leagues, before you come to the mouth of the Blacke Sea. These are very formall and very strongly built Castles, double furnished with excellent good and great Ordnance, the one standing on Troy side, the other right opposite, on Europe side, the passage is about a league, little more or lesse.

^e My Lord South when hee was there, as Master Barton sayd, did like exceeding well of this place and attendance of the Dogs. ^f In my company at that time, was an ancient English Gentleman, called Captayne Austel.

IN the good Ship called the Merchant Royall, wee set sayle from Grauesend vpon Friday the ninth day of October, 1584. The fifteenth to Harwich. The eighteenth to the Ile of Wight. The fifteenth of Nouember wee arriued at Cape Saint Vincent in Portugall, and ^a went there ashore. The foure and twentieth, ²⁰ wee passed the Straights of Ieberalter, at the Ingenies wee stayed and watered. The next day arriued at Grand Maliga, where wee were three dayes. The nine and twentieth, wee passed by Morrill, and beheld the Mountayne Salabrenna, which is continually couered with Snow; of the same they carrie to Lisbourn to mixe with their Wine, which Citie is esteemed to be three hundred miles from thence. The thirteenth of Nouember, we passed Cape de Gate. The third of December, wee came to Cape de Fare; heere the Ship Charitie ouertooke vs.

The tenth of December, wee came to Sardinia. The thirteenth, wee came to Maritima, and in sight of Cape Bona in Barbaris. The fifteenth to Sicilia, wee saw Mount Etna and Mongebella ^b, which then flamed out of the top, although vpon the same was also Snow: then to Cape ³⁰ Passara. The foure and twentieth of December, wee arriued at Cefalonia, and stayed there three dayes. The nine and twentieth, wee were in Zant Road, and went ashore the first of Ianuarie. The seuenth, wee put from thence, and the eighth at mid-night the Ship came a ground, so that for halfe an houre we were in great danger. The twelfth, wee arriued at Petrus in Morca, where wee stayed a few dayes; and at that time onely I noted of memorie Saint Andrews Chappell, wherein the Greekes say, his Bodie lyeth buried.

The nine and twentieth, I tooke Shipping in the Charitie, and came the first of Februarie backe to Cefalonia: and passed Serigo (where faire Hellen was borne) and Cape Angelo. The fourth, the winde being contrarie, wee anchored betweene the Islands of Milo and Argentiera: set sayle and with contrarie weather and calmes, came to the Island Pattynos. The eleuenth, from thence dri- ⁴⁰ uen a little backe againe, yet we arriued in ^c Sio. The fourteenth, there stayed foure dayes: the weather yet vnprosperous, wee put into Port Dolphin, which is in the same Island three leagues distant from the Towne of Sio, there we went vp to a Mountayne (hard by a Towne called Gardamul;) where the Poet Homer lyeth buried.

The three and twentieth, wee put out; and the seven and twentieth, wee passed by old Troy; some of the ruinated Walls yet standing. Then wee passed two great Castles which are called the ^d Dardinelli, a little within them is a very old ruine of a Towne called Heritho, which is reported to bee the place where the Turkes first planted themselves in Europe; then to Galipoli, so to Rodesto; and the ninth day of March wee arriued in Constantinople.

In the time of my there being, I went to see the chiefe Monuments which are described at ⁵⁰ large in a Booke I translated out of Italian, presented me by a Iew Doctor. Amongst the Beasts I did at that time see three Elephants: also the Great Turkes Dogges, and manner of ^e keeping them are worth the sight, for they haue their seuerall attendants as if they were great Horses, and haue their clothing of cloth of Gold, Veluet, Scarlet, and other colours of Cloth, their sundry Couches, and the place where they are kept, most cleanelly; It is in Asia some foure miles off by water toward the Blacke Sea.

I was likewise, at the mouth ^f of the Blacke Sea, where vpon a Rocke standeth a white Marble pillar, as is reported, set vp by Pompey. On the mayne on Europe side within little of the sayd Pillar is a Lanthorne, which standeth high and is so great, that fortie men may stand in it: it is Glased, and they light in it many Lamps euery night, that the Shipping bound from the ⁶⁰ Blacke Sea, may know where they are.

In a Gallie with the Beg of Alexandria, I departed from Constantinople the ninth day of October,

October, 1585. we put into Galipoli, Troy, Lemnos, Mitelin, Sio, Samos, and diuers other Ilands in the Archi-pelago, and came to Rhodes, a most strong place, and much exceeding great Ordinance there; upon the two Rocks where the Collosses (one of the seven Wonders) stood, are now two high Turrets; the Towne double ditched, and triple walled on the land side.

From thence we crossed the Seas in sixe dayes very prosperously, and arriued in Alexandria of Egypt, the second day of November. That Citie and Land standeth so lowe, that were it not for the Pharos, and some sight of the tops of Palme trees, you may bee vpon it before you bee aware; which is very dangerous for the ships that come thither: for in my time diuers were cast away; amongst other, a great Argusie of Venice, called the Gallion Bon h: and an other Venetian ship leaped ouer a Rocke, very miraculously escaped, hauing ouer-shot the Port of Alexandria. That said ledge of Rockes lieth out into the Sea a little beyond Bickier.

From Alexandria I went the nineteenth; and came to Grand Cairo the nine and twentieth; passing by land a day and an halfe and a night to Rosetto; and there embarked vp the Riuer Nilus, our Boat being drawne along the shoare by the Water-men Moores, we passed many Towns and Villages. Very pleasant is that trauell, onely the heate troubleth, and some feare of Theeues which continually robbe on that Riuer, and alike on the Land. Many famous matters I was shewed in the way, as the old ruines of Conducts of Nilus to the Citie of Alexandria: for, there are no Springs, nor prouision of fresh water but what commeth from Nilus, which I say, hath in time past bene conducted fise and twentie or thirtie miles to fill the Cisternes vnder the Citie. For Alexandria is built vpon admirable marble Pillars all vaulted vnderneath, euery House hauing his sundry Cisternes, the water formerly hauing come in; and now is vpon Camels backs in Leatherne Budgets brought thither: they fill them in the moneth of August, when Nilus is at the highest; and that water they drinke of all the yeere.

The same remayneth, though standing, yet sweet, one whole yeere: towards the end of the yeere it is heauier then at the first, cleare as Crystall, and not so vnwholsome to drinke, as when it is but few moneths old, so againe towards August they cleanse their Cisternes to take in fresh. There are store of diuers Fruits: small Fig-trees I haue seene not aboue a foot and halfe from the ground, hauing diuers ripe Figs vpon them. There are also some few Cassia trees, Locusts, and Capers; but very many about Cairo; all the whole Land full of Date trees. In Alexandria is Saint Markes Church, a Church at this day of Christians, and there is a noted place at the entrance of the said Church, where Saint Marke preached. There are diuers Pillars of Name within and without the Citie. Within the walls is an old ruine of the Castle where Cleopatra was stung to death: there is also a ruine of a high Castle, called the Pharos, one of the seven Wonders.

In the way as I passed, we rode ouer the Plaine where Pharo pitched his Tent, the spaciousnesse whereof was admirable, being marked out to this day with foure great stones: eight dayes wee were going vp Nilus, and arriued at Bollacco, the Port Towne of Cairo; which is a mile and a halfe from the Citie, from whence also they fetch all the water that serueth that great Citie.

Cairo is much bigger then Constantinople; many things notable are within and about this Citie, which others no doubt report, and are not beleued; as are the twelue Store-houses, where they say, Ioseph kept the Corne the seven deare Yeeres: some say, the same was reserved in the Vaults of the Pyramides. I went twice to a place ten miles from Cairo, called the Mataræa, being yet solemnely visited by Christians; it is where Ioseph and Mary remayned with our Sauour. There is a Spring of water, which, as they report, hath bene euer since; and likewise a plot in a Garden, where growe sprigs that yeeld Balsam. The Papists come often to this House a Massing, in great deuotion; and obserue a place like a Cupboord, where they say our Sauour was laid, and alike a great crof-bodied wilde Fig-tree in the Garden, with the water wherein our Ladie washed our Sauours clouts.

At Cairo I was shewed how, and of what sorts of Serpents, the Moores doe make their Treacle: I did there also see both wilde and tame Gattie Pardie (Cats of Mountaine, as wee call them) little and great Monkeys, Bragons, Muske Kats, Gasels (which are a kind of Roe-bucke) bodies of Momiæ, and liue Crocodiles both of land and water, which haue bene offered at my gate to be sold. Some I haue bought at some times for my recreation of most of these sorts; for there I remayned eightene moneths. Once I caused a Villaine to rippe a Crocodile, which was of some two yards and a quarter long, the same was a female, which had in her panch aboue an hundred Egges, yellow like the yelkes of Egges, and iust of such bignesse: out of the said Crocodile he tooke a piece of thicke round skinne about the bignesse of a Cockes stone; wished mee to lay the same vp vntill it was dry; which I did, and the dryer it was, the sweeter it sauored.

all the way cried, Christos, Christos, Christos: sum Christiano, & mero Christiano. This was to mee related by an old Custie Priest, whose name was Comous; and a Scriuan also hee was of the Custome-house in Alexandria. There are euer Boyes ready with Asses to let for Cairo; so that, wee hire them, and presently pay the hire, about a penie matter: and when we come to Cairo, turne off our Ass without more care; for the Ass knowes his place and home: the like we doe when we ride to the Castle, to the Bashaw and Cadiques, who doe thereabout inhabit. The land Crocodiles are about three quarters of a yard in length, scaly, and of a fiery Dragons colour. Some of the Moores doe make Purples of their skinned, after they are dried, and tawed.

A poore fellow, a Christian of Egypt, called Hawat, g At Rhodes I did fall ouer-board: a Flemming taking mee by the hand, out of a little shel-boat, a Black-moore Sculler, by meanes of the Turkes, and the helpe of God, I was taken againe into the Gally, after I had bene in the bottom of the Sea. The Reg came by as I was shifting, & laughingly said, that now God had washt me; because I would not wash in the Banias as we came by the way. h There dwelt in Cairo, a Iew called Emanuel Serolus; who euer much ioyed at all mishap that he heard of. And did eate Swines flesh: much giuen to mirth, and many times ysing to our house, I questioned him of his Religion, at a collation of Bacon; he said, that hee was of all Religions: that if any entred Heauen, them hee would follow. I asked, why he did so reioyce at the losses and crosses of other men. Why, Signior Giouanni, sayth he, I lost 60000. Chequins in good Gold at the third bastinado vpon my feet, taken from me by the Deuill Bashaw, after the decease of my companion; and 60000 more, if I had so many, I would lose, before I would suffer three such other blows; and better then Gold it is to my heart, when I heare that others with my fortune take part. i There lieth one Iohn, a Christian, which the Custies doe make account of. Hee was long since carried about Cairo, vpon a Camels backe, bound with his aimes spread broad vpon a Crosse of wood; and on the top of his shoulders were two Lamps burning in his flesh, yet for all this torment, hee red;

n Though indeed I haue bene among the Oues, and haue seene that manner of hatching.

o And 100. others, Turkes, Moores, Ienes, and Christians; wee stood a distance off, in a round ring: the Estridge; in the midst did before vs all lay her Egg, and did presently rise vp and left her Egge; which was taken vp, and presently carried to the Cadylesker, and deliuered to him in his Iudgement Hall: he sitting on his banke of Iudgement.

p I brought, to Tripoly from Cairo, a Libbet; of about a cubits length; for a muster; but in time of my sicknesse, it was stolne from mee.

q The two Germane Gentlemen and my selfe, did in sport spread our selues in that Tombe at that time.

s A whole body as it was taken vp from the other bodies: It is extra banda, to sell of them, but by friendship, which William Shales had amongst the Moores, he hauing their language as perfect as English, with words and money the Moores will be entreated to anything.

t This body of Momia, after our arriual was carried to the house of Sir Edward Osborne in Filpot lane in London, and there it was with the 600. pounds till they were sold to the London Apothecaries.

u Doctor Sander-son Arch-deacon of Rechefer.

v These Saints, in certaine companies doe goe before the Vesture, in a round ring, leapingly lifting vp their legs, and wagging vp and downe their heads, crying, Holloh, Holloh, Holloh, Holloh, euen till their mouthes bee of a white fume, with breathing out only, Holloh, Holloh, Holloh, &c. Foul-foole Saints.

red; no Ciuet had euer better smell: such he said was in all those old female Crocodiles; yet being flayed, the flesh before it be cold, sauoreth badly. More I could say of Beasts and Fowles of that place, but I will not talke how they hatch thousands of Chickens, and sell them by measure; neither of the Doues that carrie Letters from Alexandria to Cairo; neither of the Estridge Henne, when she layerth, how shee goeth round twice or thrice looking vp into the aire, and in a moment deliuereth her Egge: this I did see in the midst of the Cadyleskers yard.

There is a place called Ischia, adioyning to Cairo, some fixe or eight acres in bignesse, as I take it; it hath in former times bene compassed with very faire houles. The yeere that I was there, at the cutting in of Nilus (which was in August, 1586.) it is ouerflowen; wherein they fish the first two moneths or more, that the water is sinking into the ground: then in the muddie 10 they sowe their Wheate, and reape it at three or foure moneths end; then groweth it with Grasse, wherewith they feed their cattell three moneths: and the last season of the yeere, vntill they againe let in Nilus, they a little labour it, by reason of making channels for the water; and sowe and set Radice, Carrots, Turnep, Lettice, and such like. They reserue of the water for the last encrease, in a great Well which is built in the midst of the said place. This should bee admirable for such as haue not seene nor heard of the like.

There is also a great Plaine of sand, going to the Matarea, (this Matarea is the place where Mary and Ioseph kept the Child Iesus, when Herod sought his life) wherein are many pieces seeming to be of rotten Wood, as of wracked Ships or Boats, and taking them vp, they are very weighty Stones, which also is maruellous.

The eight and twentieth of Aprill, 1586. I went to see the Pyramides and Momia, being of three Gentlemen of Germanie entreated to accompanie them. The next day wee returned. These Pyramides (one of the seuen Wonders) are diuers, but especially two of a like bignesse, at the bottome each a thousand paces about; one of them open, that in wee went with Waxecandles lighted, and vp to the top, where standeth in a square roome, a Tombe hewed out of blacke Marble or Iet, wherein they report, that Pharo should haue bene buried, which pursued the Children of Israel: it is about a mans length and vncouered: I say the Iet Coffin. The rooffe of the said Pyramides is of five stones, five and twenty foot long and five broad, each stone: the stones on each side are of admirable greatnesse, and impossible to thinke how they were carried vp so high. It is also maruelous in the foundations, which are vpon mightie Pillars, 30 they are well called one of the seuen Wonders. There is likewise a huge Figure of a Head of stone, standing vpright to the necke out of the ground.

The Momia, which is some five or fixe miles beyond, are thousands of imbalmed bodies; which were buried thousands of yeeres past in a sandy Caue; at which there seemeth to haue bin some Citie in times past: we were let downe by ropes, as into a Well, with Waxecandles burning in our hands, and so walked vpon the bodies of all sorts and sizes, great and small, and some imbalmed in little earthen Pots, which neuer had forme: these are set at the feet of the greater bodies: they gaue no noysome smell at all, but are like Pitch, being broken; for I broke of all the parts of the bodies to see how the flesh was turned to drugges, and brought home diuers heads, hands, armes, and feet, for a shew: wee brought also 600. pounds for the Turkie 40 Companie in Pieces; and brought into England in the Hercules: together with a whole body: they are lapped in about an hundred double of cloth, which rotting and pilling off, you may see the skin, flesh, fingers and nayles firme, onely altered blacke. One little hand I brought into England, to shew; and presented it my brother, who gaue the same to a Doctor in Oxford.

The three and twentieth of September, the Emir Hagge, which is the Captaine of the Carauan, goeth out of Cairo towards Mecca, with very great shew; all the Citie comming out to see him and the rich couering which is carried with great pompe, to couer the Sepulchre of Mahomet their Prophet; all or most of the Rogues of Cairo (which they call Saints) attending it out with great deuotion, and some goe with it to Medina; and they are the holiest men of all, who haue bene twice or thrice there.

One graue old man, who had a long grey beard, I saw led with great ceremonie at that time out of the Citie, who had but one eye: and I likewise did see the same man returne backe againe with the aforesaid Emire, and had left his other eye there, hauing had it pluckt out, after he had seene their Prophets Sepulchre, because he would see no more sinne. Many of the Turkes and Moores Women, and other, came about him, to bid him welcome, reioycing of his returne to Cairo; and they who had kissed his hand, arme, or garment, thought themselues very happy.

Another of their Saints went about the Citie continually starke naked, couering neither head, foot, nor any part of his foule fat body, no nor his most filthie foule circumcised member: yet haue I seene diuers, as hee passed along, at diuers times (yea women) kisse his naked armes and hands. On a time at Bullaco, going ouer Nilus, he going in a passage Boat, in which I with others went ouer; a Moore in the companie seeing him come, layed him a piece of an old coat to sit on; but when he felt it vnder him, he layd it aside, and sate on the bare boords: so hee euer did on the stones, earth, and sands. This man was in Cairo before I came thither, and I know not how long after.

This

This great fat lubberly beaft would goe through the streetes, and take off the stalles to eate, bread, little baked meates, and fruit and roots, and no bodie denied him, but counted themselves happie that he would so doe. He would not touch money of any sort, a very kinde of scorched Bacon hogge, hee was as fat as he could goe. Other of those Saints of Cairo goe but halfe naked, and some of them very leane Rascals.

The said Carauan of some foure or five thousand Camels, meeteth with the Carauan of Aleppo, Damasco, and Ierusalem; so that when they are all joyned, it is thought they passe aboute twentie thousand, but I thinke not so.

10 The last day of May I departed from Cairo to Bullacco, the fourth of Iune arriued in Rossetto, and the sixt in Alexandria: From thence the tenth of August, 1586. beeing Tuesday, we had freighted with Wine, Wood and other Prouision, a Barke called a Iermi, and purposed for Cairo by Sea. We set saile and came in sight of the ruines of the Mossolia, ¹ this was a huge Sepulchre, built by a great Queene for her Husband, which is held to bee one of the Wonders; then to Bickier, where are the ruines of a Towne, and is at this present a very strong Castle planted with Brasse Ordinance, so we arriued to the mouth of Rossetto, where Nilus and the Sea meeteth together and mingleth, raising bankes of sand vnder water. We missed ^m the channell and strooke and broke our Barke, we were maruellously saued, holding fast by the Barkes Boate; leaping into the same after a Turke had cut the shippes shrouds (my selfe, my companion William Shales, our Cooke and the said Turke with my two Roe Buckes, our two Ianizaries, and our other Seruant a Christian swamme to shoare, and by swimming many were saued, and some vpon
20 planks of the ships and chifts, five only drowned: vpon the Iland, wet as we were, we reposed badly all night. In the morning came to shoare diuers of the Turkes luggage, and a Sappetta of mine, wherein were our Bookes, and my Apparell recouered by a Moore an excellent Swimmer, and our Wine wee saued which boyed to the shoare some seuen Buts, all else whatsoever lost. That morning came Barkes out of Rossetto, to take in all that was recouered, so to Rossetto wee came, housed our Wine to be sent after vs; and vp along Nilus to Cairo we went, where we arriued the eighteenth day.

The first of December I departed from Bullacco, and so vpon an arme of the Riuier to Damiatta, where I arriued the third day, recouered the goods which was sent vs from Tripoly, and came thence the fift day in my company one ^a Englishman, and my Ianizarie, Drogman Iew, and other Attendants. That morning comming along by a little Iland, wee espied eight Sea-horses, which were in bignesse like great Swine, rather bigger; headed like a Horse, only their eares round like a Camels, they arose one by one as we came neere them; and plunged into the water. A Spahi, which is a Caualiere Turke, tooke his Bow and shot at them, did hit one vpon the head, and he snuffed vp out of the water, making a great noyse. But we set eye no more vpon them.

Other matter ^o at Damiatta worth the noting, I remember not: only that there are great gardens, full of Adams figs, some doe so call them, these are also called ^p Mousses; their growing is vpon a great huge stalke, no wood of bodie, but the fruit comming out amongst the leaues in great bunches, some eightene or twentie more, and foure on a short stalke. These figs are commonly five or sixe inches long, ioyning close to one another in the bunch, and formed like a little 40 Cowcumber: when they are ripe they are blackish Greene on the out-side, and within yellowish mellow, they eate like a kinde of a ripe mellow Peare, but more luscious and a little drier, not Sugarie sweet. They peelee easily, the leaues are of diuers lengthes and bignesse; the bigger sort longer then a man, and about a yard in breadth: some lesser and some bigger; this is very true.

There are about Cairo, a kind of tree called Pharohs figge trees, the hugest sort of all others in Egypt, yet yeeld worst fruit, and weighed worth nothing, neither for ^q firing nor other to my remembrance, though some of the trees as bigge, and more spreading then our English Okes; the figs or fruit thereof very small ones and wild: euery yeere the poore Villaines climbe the trees, and with small Knives cut euery figge on the tops, I say a little round piece away when they are 50 Greene, so afterward becomming ripe, the poore people eateth of them. The Cassia tree is also great and spreading, and very goodly to behold, those long blacke Truncheons among the Greene leaues, aloft the Timber, seemes all threddie, as it were, and corkie; but they doe lay the logs at length, mingled with stone for the strengthening of their wals and buildings.

But of all in Egypt, the Palme tree is to be preferred, which yeeldeth Dates to eate alone, and in Cheeses, as it were, and a kinde of drinke that they call Sherbet, Sea-fatches, of the branches, stalkes, frames to lay their Beds vpon, and to inclose bailes of Spices and other goods in stead of chifts, Serons, and Baskets for many vses, and Fannes to coole and to keepe off the flies and dust: Mats, Hoops, and coards of diuers sorts, timber, straw and stubble.

10 The Moores in those Orchards of Date Trees, tye a Rope about the bodie of the Tree, and their middle, for it is all body from the Root to the toppe branches. (Knobbed by the meanes of the yeerely breaking off of the old branches, except the branches and fruit that spring at the top) they yeerely goe vp to pare and breake off the out-side branches. The fruit being young, springeth out in a long codde, at opening of which, the Moores takes of the Male Seedes, and puts into the Females; so it commeth to perfect fruit: otherwayes of themselues, they say, they yeeld but wild Dates; this I haue beene told, and I doe beleue it. I doe beleue also that as they say, the Plague comming into some of their Orchards of Date Trees, that one infects another: and many doe dye of the Plague.

* In Tripoly standing vpon the Tarras, John Eldred, W. Shales, Nicholas Salter, Samuel Stone, W. Lawnder, Robert Gold and others, wee did at two sundry times see two spouts: one of them appeared at first sight little bigger then a great Conger, but coming from the cloudes downwards did, to our sight appeare, watering as through a spout of Glasse, and fel with great force vpon the Sea in the Ports before vs: the other did so come downe and suckt vp the sand on Tripoly banke, that to our eyes appeared in the Skies a cloud of sand. All the whole time of ships being in the Port, I had a very great sicknesse, & departed in her for England, before I had thoroughly recovered. Many deceased at that time in Tripoly, as I haue elsewhere at large related.

Where we found such a fall, that staggerd the Mariners, Master and all.

Nilus water I thinke also to be the profitablest and wholsomest in the World, by being both Bread and Drinke to them: for Bread there could be none without it; no Rayne falling in Egypt to that purpose: yet I haue seene it rayne there, but it hath beene very little, as it were a small showre, at a time this Riner doth couer the Land, and fatten it, whereby it fructifieth abundantly. It breedeth no manner of disease in the bodie, as diuers other waters doe: it hurteth not to drinke thereof either troubled or cleere; for being brought to our Houses one mile and halfe or two miles off, it commeth in warmer then blood, and troubled seeming sandy; standing all night in our Iarres of Earth, it is very cleere and coole in the morning, and so continueth in the House be the weather neuer so hot.

We were there much troubled, * alike, with flies and dust: for the streets of Cairo are all vnpaueed, except on each side some two or three foot broad before their Houses (the middle way about a foot lower then those Pauements) and the Horses, Camels, Asses, Mules, Men and Monsters, make such a stirre passing to and fro, that what stranger soeuer commeth thither, in short time will wish himselfe further off. So much by the way.

Now I say, from Damiatta, I arriued againe in Cairo the thirteenth. The nineteenth, I went being inuited by the Venetian Consul once more to the Pyramides, where wee were feasted and returned home at night. The twentieth of March 1586. we set from Carro being three English, and our Seruants, a Iew, a Turke, and Christians, arriued in Rossetto the three and twentieth; fraighted a Carmisale the eighteenth of Aprill 1587. came to Bichier the eight and twentieth of Aprill. I went to Alexandria to see what newes the ship Tiger had brought, who arriued there two dayes before. Backe to our Carmisale I returned the next day.

We set sayle the seuenth of May, calmly coasting all the Palestine Sea; and arriued in * Tripoly, the thirteenth being Saturday. The ship Hercules arriued the twelfth of Nouember, being Munday. Three dayes we were in a great storme, and like to haue perished in the Bay. To Tripoly we came againe on the Friday. On Saturday came the Tobie of London. Friday the two and twentieth of December, wee departed from thence in company with the Tobie: wee went by Cyprus the foure and twentieth.

The three and twentieth of Ianuarie, we were ashore at an Iland by Candte, called Christiana; The five and twentieth, we cast Anchor at Caldarona. The eleuenth and twelfth of February, we passed betweene Sicilia and Malta. The thirteenth, to Pantalerea. The fourteenth, we were in the sight of Cape Ben on Barbarie side. The fifteenth, we saw Goletta, a Rocke a little off of Carthage. The last of February we arriued in Argier, set saile from thence the second of March. The sixt, came in sight of Cape de Gat. The seuenth, at night we passed by Gibberaltare, and lo through the Streights; From Suta wee were espied, they shot twice; In the morning wee had Cape Sprat, about fixe leagues a sterne. The eleuenth, wee were as high as Cape Saint Vincent. The nineteenth, wee were euen with Cape Finister, from thence caped North North-west. The two and twentieth being Friday, we came to the Soundings, threw the Lead at night and found ninetie two fathome; then we caped North-east and by East. The next day in the morning we found seuentie fathome, and at noone fiftie five.

The next day we fell with Portland, which was the first of England we had sight of, then to the Downes, and so to Gravesend, from thence in a Wherrie to Black-wall, so by land to London, the nine and twentieth of March 1588.

¶ II.

His second Voyage to Constantinople, with other his Trauells.

THe fourth of Iune being Saturday, I departed from London in company of Deputie Edgerton and others. Sunday we passed from Gravesend in a Hamborough Barke fraighted by the Ladie Drurie, who in the same was bound ouer with her two Daughters and diuers Attendants to Sir William Governour of Bergen vp Zone. Sir Henry Palmer in a ship of the Queenes guarded the Barke to Flushing, where wee arriued vpon Munday; to Middleborough with the Deputie and others went presently, and two dayes after had a Court called one purpose to make free my selfe and my companion Thomas Calthorpe. Vpon Thursday we departed thence and came to Flushing; went aboard a small Barke that Euening. And in the Morning were at Sandwidge, lodged at Knowlton, Master Calthorpe being sicke, yet departed in the morning, and were in London on Saturday night. Thus were wee eight dayes on this Voyage, and eight dayes after Thomas Calthorpe departed this life.

In September, 1590. we set sayle in the Samaritan of Dartmouth, bound for the East India, victualled for thirteene moneths at the least, and well manned; John Davis Captayne and Pilot, Edward Rene Master. About the Maderas we were overtaken with a great storme; in which extremitie we lost our Pinnasse consort, but afterward met with an English ship who had saved our men. We had before that storme been in diuers fights with Spaniards, and braued by a couple of French at vnawares; in that Voyage of one hundred and fve men and boyes we lost only one: a very hot fight we had with an Armado of Spaine, she gaue vs seuentene great shot ouer night, and in the morning fought some foure or fve houres, shee shot downe our top-mast, and thorow our sailes and ships fortie times, yet no hurt to any of vs in person, except a poore fellow which was touched on the legge with a great stone shot, which shot rested in the ship: the next day an ill Surgeon cut off the legge about the knee, in which torment of cutting, sawing and searing, the poore Wretch died in his armes. This ioly Spaniard left vs; for if he had durst he might haue laid vs aboard: with this fight and the extreame storme we had before passed, our Samaritan was so crasie and leake, that all in generall tooke our turnes at the Pumpe, made foure or fve hundred strokes in a Glasse for many dayes and nights together. With the said water we watered our fish, so were we forced to returne for England, where at Famouth we arriued in February, and so to Dartmouth, in that Voyage we went ashore only at Safia, Santa Crus, and the Maderas, as I remember.

The thirteenth of September, 1591. I went out in the Tobie, the first of October to Tilburie, then to Lee. The fourth to Gorend, wee departed thence the eighth, and arriued at Dartmouth, Munday the eleuenth. From thence we set saile the sixteenth, being Saturday the last day of October, wee arriued at the Streights mouth. The eleuenth of Nouember, we entred the Streights. The thirteenth and fourteenth, we saw Grand Maliga, Velis Maliga, Salabrica, Cape Negro. The fine and twentieth, we came in sight of Maritima, the next day of Sicilia and Malta. The twentieth of December, we arriued in Cephalania, there remayned six dayes, and came to Zant the thirtieth. The first of Ianuarie, we were at Patras in the Moria, thence the Tobie went the thirteenth to Zant for her lading. Thursday the foure and twentieth of February, by land we departed Petras, that night to Postigia, Sunday Vasilago and Corinth. Tuesday at a Casale, and so to Thebes, which they now call Tma.

There grow abundance of Aniseeds, it hath a most delectable situation, so doth Corinth stand most gloriously where we aboad two dayes: wee also were in sight of Athens. Then wee came to Negroponto, where we freighted a little Turkish Vessell, imbarcked our selues and goods, and on Friday departed for Constantinople, sailed by Macedonia, but had no sight of the Citie Thessalonica, it is vp in the Gulfe now called Salonica, it was the chiefe Citie of Macedonian Philip, Father of Great Alexander: then we passed diuers Ilands in the Arches, as Taradano and others; were ashore at Troy, passed two great Castles, called the Dardanelli, and came to Galipoli, the seuenth of March. Vpon Palme Sunday we arriued in Constantinople, where then I remayned fixe or seuen yeeres, in which time I had the view of many Animals, as Elephants, tame Lions, tame spotted Cats as big as little Mastiffes, great and small Deere, Ro-bucks tame; but these are brought out of Egypt. The admirablest and fairest beast that euer I saw, was a Iarras, as tame as a Domestickall Deere, and of a reddish Deere colour, white breasted and clouen footed; he was of a very great heighth, his fore-legges longer then the hinder, a very long necke, and headed like a Camell, except two stumps of horne on his head. This fairest Animall was sent out of Ethiopia, to this Great Turke Father for a Present; two Turkes the keepers of him, would make him kneele, but not before any Christian for any money. An Elephant that stood where this faire beast was, the keepers would make to stand with all his foure legges, his feet close together vpon a round stone, and alike to vs to bend his fore-legges. Many things passed also worth the noting, as the deposing and placing great Rulers, the contention of the Souldiers many times, once for their pay which the Spahies demanded in the time of Sultan Marat, who not being answered, as they desired, made an uproare in the Court, that the Vice-Royes were glad to hide themselves in the Turkes Lodgings for feare of their liues; and most of the Household Seruants of the meaner sort, came out with Spits, Tongs, and other Kitchin tooles to end the fray, who cleared the Serraglio of the Spahies: at that broyle were slaine of all sorts, some two hundred or more. Not long before they had the Beglerbegs head (whom the Great Turke especially loued) giuen them, which they spurned about the Court.

Other strange actions I could speake of, and of their cruelties, but I am loth to wearie you with many particulars. Only the crueltie of that government may be marked in this, for at this Great Turke his taking possession of the Empire, were strangled all his liuing Brethren, which were in number nineteene. They are brought one by one before him, and hee seeth them both ned Turkes, as Beniamin Bishop, George Butler, John Ambrose, and others, but to turne Greeke I neuer heard of any except that Consul at Patras, who did cause the Greeke Priests newly to baptize him, which they performed, and did name him John Gold; being at the very instant demanded (by an honest Englishman) his meaning, his answer was, that as he had liued in credit amongst those Greekes, so his purpose was to be carried to his Graue with credit, a very notable Whoremaster, one of the cutters of the Cabina in Turkie. p This was at my being there in *M. alive and dead. I did see e them carried to buriall, the next day after their dead Father. That Great Turke Sultan Morat left also foure or five Women with Child, two of which brought Sonnes; who also at their Birth were deprived of life; the Daughters all live. It was crediblie reported, that hee had buried thirtie Children in his Life time, and had at his Death seven and twentie Daughters living, so it appeareth hee was Father of eightie one Children.

This new King Sultan Mahomet, went to the Warres in Hungarie against the Christian Emperour, the first yeere of his Raigne, our Ambassadour worthy Edward Barton, attended him (with also an ancient Greeke, a Galatean called Signior Matteo, who had many yeeres beene Servant and chiefe Interpreter for the Emperours Ambassadours,) to whom the Great Turke had before his going presented two and twentie Christians, which had layne in Prison in Constantinople three yeeres: they were the late Ambassadours Household, who had beene resident there for the Christian Emperour when the Peace was broken. The Great Turke also gave Commandement that through his Countrey, their charges should bee defrayed, and alike allowed foure Coaches and a Chaouise, to conduct them to the Emperours Court. The chiefe cause of our Ambassadour his accompanying the Great Turke, was, to have concluded a Peace betwixt those two Great Potentates, as formerly hee had done, betweene the Poles and the Great Turke deceased; which had beene most easily performed, had it pleased her excellent Majestie so to have commanded. The Ambassadours absence was sixe moneths, from Iuly to Ianuary, which space I remayned his Deputie in Constantinople. 10

After the Ambassadour was fully resolved to goe with the Grand Signior, some few dayes before his departure, hee went with me John Sanderson to Hassan Bassa, Eunuch, who governed the Citie of Constantinople in the Great Turkes absence. And taking his leaue of the sayd Hassan Bassa Vice-roy, hee recommended mee vnto him, as his Deputie; praying him so to respect me in his absence. The Vizier promised all kinde respect and regard of mee; saying, Volo volo bosh Gediet, Welcome welcome, Hosh Geldie, I will, I will, Elchee Ambassiater, and so I kist his Hand, and then the Ambassadour kist his hand, and wee departed his presence.

When the Great Turke went out of the Citie towards the warres, it was with wonderfull great solemnitie and notable order, too long to describe particularly; but I remember a great number of Dogs led afore him well manned, and in their best Apparell; his Hawkes by Horsemen also carried in great number. Tame Lyons and Elephants, with other Beasts of many sorts, but especially, the Jarraff before spoken of, being Prince of all the Beasts, was led by three chaynes of three sundry men stalking before him. For it is the custome, that the Great Turke in person going on Warfare, most or all in generall, the chiefe Men and Beasts, attend him out of the Citie: and at his returne, it is lawfull for all their Women both of high and low degree, meane and great, to meet him without the Walls: at other times the Women of any account or credit, neuer come in multitudes among Men. By a Letter dated in October 1596. the Ambassadour advised me of all passed that imported the taking of the Citie Agria, and after overthrow of the Christians Campe. Copie of which Letter I sent for England, to the Right Honourable her Majesties chiefe Secretarie Sir Robert Cecil. 30

The Turke returned with great Triumph, entred at Adrianople Gate, three or foure miles without which Gate, and so along within the Citie to the Gate of the Serraglio, which is at least foure or five miles further, all on both sides the way as hee should passe through, the people his Subjects (Turkes, Iewes, and Christians) held in length whole peeces of cloath of Gold, Velvet, Sattin and Damaske, of all sorts and colours, and for three dayes together Feasted, keeping open Shops and Houses day and night, in Ioy of his Victories and safe Returne. Two or three miles before his entrance, I did meete our Ambassadour with a fresh Horse, and about twelue or thirteene attendants: the Ambassadour by Ebrehim Bassa, the Vice-royes appointment, did stay in the way to take his leaue of the Grand Signior, which was thus performed: Sultan Mahomet made a stand with his Horse, and vpon Horsebacke, Hee, and the Ambassadour saluted, hee sate still, our Ambassadour did alight and kist his Hand; then got vpon his Horse, hee saluted; the Great Turke re-saluted him, saluted me also, and all our Ambassadours trayne, and so turned his Horse: and ouer the Fields we came to the Vines of Pera, before he was come into Constantinople. 50

For the whole full and fine discourse of the Citie Constantinople, I referre to a little Pamphlet that was presented mee by a Doctor Iew Poet, which sayd Discourse hee gave me in Italian, I immediatly translated the same into English, the seventeenth and eighteenth of August, 1594. I gave it at that time both in Italian and English to a friend Master Edward Riners, since which, the Copies haue beene dispersed, and it may bee some fantasticall will attribute it to himselfe both Author and translator. For five yeeres past, one in England required it of mee, but I had left the Copie amongst my papers at Constantinople, where at my last beeing I found that scribed originall in English, but the Italian was common amongst them, it hath beginning on this manner. Pausania a Captayne of the Lacedimonians, &c. I haue written it againe in the end of this Discourse, and alike followeth a true Relation of my three Moneths trauell, from Constantinople to the Holy Land, and backe againe to Tripoli Sirria, ouer the highest Mount of Libanon. Many worthy 60 thy things passed in this my long abode at Constantinople. Amongst other I note the extraordinarie esteeme was had of the Ambassadour afore named, with them all in generall, both Christians, Turkes, and Iewes. By meanes chiefly of the Turkes Mothers fauour, and some money: hee made and displaced both Princes and Patriarches, befriended Vice-royes, and preferred the suites of Cadies who are their chiefe Priests and spirituall Iustices. The Hoggie, a very comely, graue and wise Turke, who was Sultan Mahomets Schoole-master, (and I may well say Counsellor) was a very true friend, and an assister of Master Barton, in all his businesse with the Grand Signior, and had a Catholike Roman Christian Corrupter about him, a Consull, by name Paulo Mariani, who was hanged by the necke in his Consuls Robes at Grand Cairo, vnder the chiefe Gate of the Citie; vpon whom the Moores in the morning had great pitie. For Monsieur de Breuis the French Ambassadour, had procured the Execution to bee performed in the night, to preuent the Moores who euer fauoured Malleus Paulo (Master Paul) as they commonly called him.

From Constantinople, I departed the three and twentieth of September, 1597. hauing in my time there remayning, beene at diuers notablest places within the Citie, and on all the confines of the same, as when I accompanied the Ambassadour towards the Warres, rid on the way with him some thirtie or fortie miles. And alike was often at the Blacke Sea, which is eightene or twentie miles off. At the entrance of the said Sea, are remayning ruines of the old Castles Sestus and Abidus; but the Schollers of our Age affirme, those neere Troy ruines, to bee they, time hauing eaten out the ruines; and so the true remembrance of the other too at the very mouth of the Blacke Sea, though I was shewed a marke of a peece of a Rocke vpon Asia side, where the Louer was Drowned in swimming from Europe side to his beloued. And then I say, in Anno 1585. was there to bee seene on each side, some very old appearance of Castles foundation walls, though in a kinde as it were couered with Earth and Grasse, which remembreth to vs the Storie of Hero and Leander. And other two great Castles at halfe way, one esteemed the chiefe Prison in Turkie, except the seuen Towers within the Citie wall. I was also at Colcos Ile, and other Ilands thereabout. And alike diuers times wee went ouer into Asia to Calcedon, &c. At Calcedon now called Scutari, my selfe and attendants being fve, well Horfed and a sumpter Horse, there wee remayned two dayes, at Curtall one, Gibs one, Dill one, Giourkie one, Isnike two, Gini Shar two, Auc Binke one, Bosuke one, Eschi Sheer one, Sidie Batal one, Baiat one, Buluadin two, Anke Shar fve, Ilgin two, Guarchi one, Casal one, Conia (Iconiam where Barnabas and Paul preached) I remayned two dayes, Siml one, Caribonar one, Regli one, Vluc-kistia one, Cadengighen one, Sareshek one, Casale di Turkie one, Adina two, Missis, Tharso one, where Paul was borne; Court Colucke one, Bellan one, Curdi Casall one, Iuni one, to Alepo one. Dayes foure and fortie, in companie of Court Vizeir, who went to Gouverne in Alepo, where I remayned some three moneths. The one and twentieth of Februarie, wee were in Antiochia, where wee beheld an admirable Wall, edging vp vpon the Mountayne hauing very many Turrets, some say as many as there are dayes in the yeere, the Riuer Orantes is at the bottome of this Hill, and runneth close along the nether part of the Citie wall. Entering in at one of the by gates, there is a place of excellent Spring water, where many were Baptised that became Christians at the f Apostles Preaching.

The fourteenth, wee came to Alexandretta, there are the ruines of an old Citie built by Great Alexander, the Turkes call it Scandarone.

The three and twentieth, wee departed thence in a great Venetian Ship called Nani Ragaxoxa, and arriued in Ciprus the fixe and twentieth of the said February. At my being in Ciprus, I went to the chiefe Cities, Nicosia which is in the middest of the Iland, and Famagusta a very strong Citie and Port for their Gallies: before a Towne called Larnica, we rode with our Ship. At the *Salinos, there is the Church that Lazarus built, and likewise the Greekes say, that the Mother of Constantine lyeth buried in a Mountayne in that Iland, which is called Santa Elena.

The tenth of Aprill, 1598. wee set sayle from Ciprus in the sayd Ship, and arriued in Venice the two and twentieth of the same.

The foure and twentieth of May, I departed from Venice, to Trafino Castle, Franco, Sismon, Grinio, Luenico, Trent, Alanis, Enia, Boldax, Clusa, Maols, Luke es Bruke, Sesfield, Patakerk, Am-brega, Sanga, Lansberg, Augusta, now called Osburge, Danower, Fetling, Dink selfspill, Perte, Herbisbouson, Martigall, Pissiche, Miltiburgh, Riuer of Maine, Valstat, Ostum, Pobohouson, Frankford, Ments, Elfni, an Almes house Eruels. Mistorne a little Castle vpon a Rocke, where at this day they report that the Bishop of Ments was deuoured of Rats, for hoording vp Corne when the Poore starued with want thereof. Snikwere, Gesinan, Roderfen, Bubard, Andernough, Bon, Cullen the thirteenth of Iune, in their chiefe Church they reserue a Monument of the 3 Three Kings, so much talked on. Sons, Nues, Druselthorp, Keserswert, Ruer Wert, Berk, Wesell, Emrick, Sniks Sconce, Nemingham, Tele, Wercam, Kercam, Dort, Viana, Camsine, Middleborough, Flushing. The eight and twentieth, from thence embarked in a man of Warre a Flushinger, who set vs alhoare in the Downes the nine and twentieth of Iune, the same day arriued in England, and so from Sandwich to London by Land.

B. III.

The third Voyage of Master Iohn Sanderson to Constantinople.

From London to Grauesend, the eleuenth of Februarie, 1598. The fourteenth, tooke shipping in the Hector, lay at Tilburie two dayes. To the Downes the seuenteenth, lay there eight dayes, came to Dartmouth the third of March, rid there foure dayes, and came to Plimouth the eighth. Set sayle three or foure dayes after, and in May, 1599. arriued in Alexandretta, hauing touched at Argier and Zant by the way. In the sayd moneth of May wee departed, coasted all along the North-side of Ciprus, passed close by the seven Capes, came and cast Anchor at Roades, I went also at this time ashore there. Thence wee went and came with the Ship a ground at Samos, the Island where Esope was borne; so sayled by Sio and Metelin; were also a ground about Cape Ianesarie in some danger, and with much adoe wee came off at last, pulling the Ship off with our Boate and skiffe at the sterne, by strength and labour of the Marriners. Hauing doubled that Cape, I tooke a small Barke and went to Galipoli, and thence to Constantinople, where the Hector arriued about the fifth of September. At her entrance the Port in tryumph discharging the Ordnance, they lost a Man who was parted in the middle, being busie about cleansing a Peece in the fore-castle. At this my third and last being in Constantinople, of one of the Coens, an ancient and very learned Iew Priest, I did with much intreatie and my money, get a very old Booke; it was the five Bookes of Moses in foure Languages. I presented it to my Brother, Doctor Sanderson, hee lent it Doctor Barlow, hee to Doctor Andrewes: They vsed it in their Translation at Cambridge, and did returne it to Bishop Barlow. The Bishop dyed, and I thinke one Johnson his Sisters sonne hath it, who as I heard had the residue of the Bishops bookes.

I went to visite the Sepulcher of that fore-named Master Edward Barton late Ambassadour, who lyeth Interred (according to his alwayes desire) vnder an Oliue Tree, before the entrance into the Monasterie on the top of Calcos Ile; a Stone of white Marble is layd vpon him, Letters thereon engrauen of his Title and Decease. Other places I went to also, which I had bene at in former times. And some strange actions, other then formerly the like had happened in their most cruell Executions, I note not.

Yet can I not let passe to relate, that a Iewish woman of the greatest credit and wealth in Constantinople, was brought out of her House and stabbed to Death in the Vice-royes yard, thence by a window in the Serraglio wall where the Grand Signior, Sultan Mahomet stood to see; shee was drawne with Ropes to the publikest place in the Citie, and there (betweene a Pyramed pillar erected by Theodosius, and the Brasen tripled Serpent) layd for the Dogges to eate, who did deuoure her all saue her bones, sinewes of her legges, and soales of her feet. Her head^a had been carryed vpon a pike through the Citie, and alike her shamefull part; also many small peeces of her Flesh, which the Turkes Ianizaries and others carried about tyed in a little Pack-thred, shew-⁴⁰ ing to the Iewes and others, and in derision sayd, Behold the Whoores flesh; one slice of her I did so see passe by our doore in Galata. Her^b eldest Sonne the next day in like manner cruelly stabbed and murdered in the sayd Vice-royes court; dragged thence and layd by his Mother, but was so fat and ranke that the Dogges would not seaze vpon him, or else they were satiate with the Womans flesh the day before, who was a short fat trubkin. So together with his Mothers bones the next day was this body burned in that place. Her second Sonne became Turke to saue his life; so would his dead Brother, if hee could haue had the fauour. The third Sonne a young youth, their wrath being appeased, they permitted to liue. This was an act of the Spahies in spite of the Great Turkes Mother; for by the hands of this Iew woman shee tooke all her Bribes, and her Sonnes were chiefe Customers of Constantinople; who tooke all the gainefull businesse into their owne hands, doing what they listed. The Mother and Children were worth Millions,⁵⁰ which all went into the Great Turkes Coffers. After this their Mala Pasqua, for it was at their time of Paskeouer, the chiefeest Feast of the Iewes.

After this, the Spahies had a great sling at the Head of the Capie Agha, who was the Great Turkes chiefe Seruant and Fauourite, but by meanes partly of the Admirall Sigallogli, alias Sinan Bassa, Vizeir, and fiftie thousand Duckets of money amongst them, they were for that time pacified. But since my comming away it is written mee, that they haue got his Head and the Heads of one two or three more, and forced the Grand Signior to come forth and see the Execution done. I thinke not good heere as I said before, to note their Crueltie in sundrie sorts of Executions, yet some I cannot let passe. Their vsuall punishment for Adulterous women, is binding in a Sacke and so throw them into the Sea. Seven I haue scene so vsed one Morning, in the time that the Eunuch Hassan Bassa gouerned Constantinople, when the Great Turke was at the Warres. But for such crueltie and other actions, the^c Queene Mother got his Head at her Sonnes returne.

^a Master Henry Lillo, the Ambassadour and my selfe went of purpose and thus did see these two, Mother and Sonne.

^b He was a goodly Gentleman Iew, some few dayes before, I had shewed him our Ship, and had talked with him at his Mothers house, and Master Paul Pinder and my selfe, were with his Mother, to whom shee deliuered for the Ambassadour, to send the Queene a Safana, of Rabines from the Sultana, and another of Diamonds from her selfe, with teares in her eyes I well remember.

^c The Queene Mother, with the Grand Sultana, and other of the Grand Signiors women, walking in their Serraglio, espied a number of Boates vpon the Riuer hurrying together. The Queene Mother sent to enquire of the matter; who was told that the Vizir did Iustice vpon certaine Chabiers, that is Whoores. Shee taking displeasure sent word, and aduised the Eunuch Bassa, that her Sonne had left him to Gouerne the Citie, and not to deuoure the Women; commanding him to looke well to the other businesse, and not to meddle any more with the Women, till his Masters returne.

The commonest Death for men is Gaunthing; which is, to be stripped into their Linnen breeches, with their hands & feet bound all foure together at their backs, and so drawne vp with a rope by a pullie vpon the Gallowes, and let fall vpon a great Iron hooke fastned to a lower crosse Barre of the Gallowes, most commonly lighting vpon their flanke and so through their thigh, there they hang sometimes talking a day or two together, but if they bee Gaunched through the belly and backe, then are they dead in two or three houres. Thus they vse their common Theeues at Constantinople. In Cairo and other parts, they doe Stake them, a most ouell Death, yet speedie or lingering as they list to execute. But Hanging by the necke they vse in a fauour to any offender who meriteth Death, yet sometimes cutting downe for Dogges to eate. They strangle with a Bow-string their Brethren, Bassaes and other Great men. But for their Religious men false Iudges, their Law is to pash them all to peeces in a stone Morter with wooden Mallets. And for their false Witnesses, they are set vpon an Asse, with their faces towards the tayle which they hold in their hands, and the Inwards of a Bullocke, powred vpon and bound about them, and so ride they through the Citie. And for any found Drunke in the time of their Ramazan (which is a Fast they haue one whole Moone in the yeere) their Law is, to melt a Ladle full of Lead and powre it downe their throats; (Their manner of Fast, is to eate nor drinke any thing, neither Water nor other, vntill they see a Starre appeare in the Euening, and then they may begin and eate till Morning.) Any chiefe Officer belonging to their Artilerie if hee bee a Thiefe, is bound to the mouth of a brass Piece and so shot into the Sea; thus I saw one vled^d at Tophana.

d Tophana, is their Artillerie yard, where is a great Wharfe to take Boatear, it is betweene Rophagh-
mak and Garlati:

20 And alike in my time, a Iamoglaine, found Drunke in their Fast, was vsed as I haue reported. I did see vpon the Gaunch Vssine Bassa, the Traytor that first rose in Asia; but hee for a more crueltie had from each shoulder bone a muskell taken out, in presence of the Bench of Vizeirs, the Great Turke also looking out at a Lattice ouer their heads. By reason of that torment he died presently vpon the Gaunch, being led from the Serraglio halfe a mile or more before hee was put thereon. Not long before that, a Christian Tributarie Prince called Stephano Vinoyda, being deposed of the Great Turke, after hee had enioyed the Princedome a yeere; by malice of some Great men who preuayled with the Grand Signior, was brought to the Gaunch, ledde of the Bustangi Bassi.

e To see this,
Master Like the Ambassadour, and my selfe, went purposely and did see him on the Gaunch, being starke dead.

3C This Bustangi Bassi is a man of account about the Turke, and the great, but not the common Executioner (for the Turke employes him in strangling ^f Vice-royes; throwing by night rebellious Souldiers into the Sea, and such like. Chiefe Gardner is his Office, hauing thousands Iamoglans and their Gouernours at his command: hee keepeth the Caiks, and alwayes steereth when the Great Turke goeth vpon the water, whose Caikes are most rich and beautifull to behold, the poepe all Iuorie, Ebonie, or Sea-horse teeth, mother of Pearle and Gold, set with all manner of precious Stones. To row him hee hath eightie chosen men, two and two at an Oare, twentie Oares on a side, all in white Shirts and red Caps, coloured Cloath shackshers Breeches, Cordiuan leather coloured shooes, who often in their rowing baie like $\S$ Dogges; the reason I know not, except it bee when they heare him talke (to the Bustangi Bassi who sits at the rudder) that they dare not hearken to his talke. His Court of Dwarfes and Dumme men, alwayes follow (except the very principall who are with him) in another Caike; and many times also his Women.

Hee strangled Ferrat Bassa, in the seuen Towers, first, after hee had wakened the Bas-sa, he shewed a little testimony of his authoritie, then turnes the wrong side of the Carpet vppwards, so the Bassa layes his Salah, then with a boxe on the eare hee astonishes him, and the Le Mogians come in presently and strangle him,
the Bustangi Bassa found but fixtie Chequins in his pocket, and so thence departed.

Now to the Prince I spoke of; this poore Prince intreated for life at the place of Execution. The Bustangi Bassi told him, that if hee would become Turke, hee should see what hee would doe for him. Whereupon hee turned, and vttered to such effect the words ^h; being content rather then dye, to bee Turke; which they call Mussulman. Which done, this cruell Dog told him, that hee was glad hee would dye in the right Beliefe, and therefore, whereas hee should haue beene Gaunched, now he shall bee but Hanged by the necke. Whereat the poore soule presently repented, and cryed often and aloud vpon CHRIST, and bad all witnesse that hee dyed a Christian.

g I have often heard them vpon the water, now and then between times, many of them say, Bough, boughwake, bough,
bough, boughwake,
&c. and then pull some few strokes and tut againe.

Being a Musli

Here I leaue them to their cruelty. Now, the fourteenth of May, 1601. I departed from Sidon, in the ship Mermaid, with my Voyage to Damascus, and the holy Land, and so ouer the highest Mount of Libanus, to Tripoly; being iust three moneths. I leaue to bee seene in that my discourse: At Tripoly for passage I remayned vntill the sixteenth of Februarie; in which time our people of the Troian passed some trouble in that bad gouerned place. Our men of the ship Troian, were most of them imprisoned in Tripoly Iayle the Castle; and fise were in great hazard to haue beene executed: for the Emiers people accused them to haue robbed a Caramisall of the Emers, of Sope and other merchandise: but as God would haue it, the Cadie of Tripoly being a Green-head, that is one (a holy man) of the Parentage of Mahomet their Prophet: who came Passenger with me to Sidon (in the Mermaid) from Constantinople, he and his hauing beene well entreated in that Voyage, together with my very often and earnest solicitation, did to his vtmost power fauour our people so effectually, that euery one of them were freed, without further harme, from those false accusing Moores.

The tenth day, the ship Trogian was cast away vpon the Rockes in the Road of Tripoly by boysterous billowes, that broke her anchors, and shou'd her on the shoare. The sixteenth I departed in the Edward Bonauenture, came to Scandaron the nineteenth; from thence the fourteenth of May, 1602. to Limiso in Ciprus, the seuen and twentieth; the one and thirtieth wee parlied with two great Ships Spaniards, and two Frigots; they durst not fight, but said they were of Malta. The seuenth of Iune, we espied seuen Gallies, which we imagined to be Spaniards bound for Scandaron: now, we were as high as the seuen Capes the eighth, and met thereabouts the Samuel. The tenth, wee passed by Rhodes: Scarpanto, the eleventh: Candia, the twelfth: Cape Sapientia in the Moria, the fise and twentieth: Stranalia an Iland, the sixth of Iuly: at Zant the eighth wee arriued: from thence the fifth of August in the Cherubin, to Corfu the fourteenth: from thence the sixe and twentieth in Istria: the one and thirtieth Ostrenta: the seuenth of September, Rouina, Prensa, Citta noua, an old walled Towne at the end of the Gulfe: the eighth of September in Venice.

The fifteenth, I departed to Castile Franco, Carpanet, Grenio, Burgo, Riuer Trent, Neus, Nimmarke, passed Ladise the Riuer, Bulsano, Clusa, Sterching, Matara, Churla, Riuer Tine, Mitebant, Ambergam, Sandar, Stadell, Riuer Ligh, Osburgh, alias Augusta, Susmerhausen, Leibham, Olme, Getzingen, Blochenn, Stuchert, Diesen brunt, Almatingen, Ratstat, Litfinkal, Strossburge, Galsenburch, Cansman, Blanbenburch, Luncuil, Portadi, Saint Nicolo-Nantes, Tull, Saint Tobin, Barloducke, Tanhuer, Russefason, Salon, Fonte, Effael, Momil, Butchier, Fuerti, Sant Giouan, Marne, Meaw, Paris. Dico Paris the nineteenth of October. From Paris to Saint Denis, to Puntoys, the Riuer Almais. The twentieth, to Maine, Equie. The one and twentieth, to Roan, to Deepe, the two and twentieth. The three and twentieth, from thence in the Vantgard of the Queenes. The foure and twentieth, to Doner; from thence at eleuen a clocke in the night. In London the fise and twentieth being Monday, at foure a clocke in the after-noone. For all which the Almighty God bee magnified.

§. II. III.

A Discourse of the most notable things of the famous Citie Constantinople: both in ancient and late time.

Read hereof
Strabo lib. 7.

Pansania a Captaine of the Lacedemonians, wandring through the world with his people, seeking where he might settle himselfe, of the Oracle of Apollo in Delfas it was answered, that they should make their abode ouer against the blinde, vnderstanding thereby the Magares, who had not the fore-sight to take so faire a situation as they had in Europe, fertile and good; but built in Asia Calcedonia, that now is called Scutari; heere then stayed Pansania with his Calcedonians, 663. yeeres before the comming of Christ. (Tullio Hostillio remayning in Rome) building at that time a little Citie, which hee named Bizantio; whether it were as some say, for the two Seas it hath, or according to others, of a Captaine so named. In the beginning, this was a very small thing, as others of small time were wont to be, subiect once to the Lacedemonians, founders thereof; and another time to the Athenians: it flourished in short time with the felicitie of the Countrey in such sort, that Philip King of Macedon, Father of Alexander the Great, being in loue with her beauty and riches, resolved with himselfe to conquer the same: laying siege thereto many dayes, and could not take it: notwithstanding that hee enterprised it with a great and chosen Host; with whom encountered Leon Sophista, a man of Bizantio, who said vnto him: Tell mee, Philip, what iniurie hast thou receiued of Bizantio, that in such fury thou art moued to warre against it? I haue not (answered Philip) of thy Citie had any iniurie that prouoketh mee, but because it is the fairest Citie of Thracia, being enamoured therewith, moued me to conquer it. Those that be in loue (answered Leon) and would of their Beloued bee loued, with sweet Musike, Gifts, and such like, doe seeke to obtayne; and not with their Armies and Warre to damnifie them. Philip in conclusion departed without taking it.

The same went forward prosperously, and in processe of time was augmented with buildings and riches, in such sort, that then it passed all the Cities of Asia, and in fertilitie was equall to the fairest of Europe. Amongst the beautifullest things, it had goodly to be seene, and most worthe to be praised were the walls, the stones whereof they brought from Milesio, not any of which were carued or grauen, but sawed in manner of planks. This caused that the walls being of many stones, notwithstanding appeared to be but one. And the Citie increased vntill the time of Seuero the Emperour, that hauing possession thereof the Tyrant Pesenio (the Blackmoore his mortall enemy) the sayd Emperour was moued to goe and besiege it: hee kept siege thereto three yeeres, in the end they were constrained through hunger to render to the discretion of the Romanes, which was such, that after they had slayne all the Men of warre and Magistrates, they ruinated the famous walls from the top to the bottome.

Constantine the

It remayned in this calamitie vntill the yeere 313: that Constantine the Emperour (surnamed, the Great) was minded to transport the Seat of the Empire of Rome to the East, to the end that with the more facilitie he might bridle the vntamed Persians and Partians, that hourly ly rebelled: and for that Rome was so farre off, the Emperours could not come so speedily, to force them to order. After they had searched diuers places to this effect, and in some began to build: they were still diswaded by dreames, vntill in the end they came to Calcedonia (which as before I haue said is Scutary) who hauing now chosen and designed the place, certaine Egles (as writeth Zonora a Greeke Author) flying thereabout tooke in their bills pieces of the wood of the builders, and houering about the Streight of Hellspont: they let them fall neere to the ruined Bizantio, of the which Constantine being aduised translated the builders from Calcedonia: and taking it to be the will of the Diuine power, and for good lucke, well liking also the maruellous situation, hee compassed and enclosed in one circuit seuen most pleasant Hills, imitating Rome which hath so many) building a wall about, of length, thickeesse, and fairenesse, one of the famousst in the world, with all things needfull, adorned and furnished like vnto a Fortresse; the forme thereof Triangle, two parts washed on with the Sea, and the other compassed with Land.

Seuen Hills.

Hee erected also many high Towers, built many sumptuous Temples, and adorned it with infinite other magnificall buildings publike and priuate, commanding by publike Edict all Princes of the Empire, that euery one should build either Palace, or some sumptuous and splendent other Monument, after which for the greater adornment, hee caused to bee brought from Rome diuers memorable Antiquities, and amongst the rest the most famous Palladium of old Troy, which hee caused to be set in an open place that was called Placote, and the high Piller of Porfido (which is a kinde of hard Stone) in the same place was erected. At the side whereof was planted an Image of Brasse in likenesse of Apollo, which was of vnmeasurable greatnesse, in whose head hee would haue his name written thereon. So greatly was increased the adornment and beautie thereof, that not without merit it might haue beene called another Rome. The old Writers which saw it in the flower, rather Iudged it a dwelling for the Gods, then an habitation for earthly Emperours.

Constantine named it New Rome, but the peoples voyce preuayled, which called it alwayes after the Emperours name Constantinople, the which his Successors daily adorned, and amongst the sightliest Ornaments, was the most proud Palace of the publike Librarie, which contrayned aboue 120000. chosen written Bookes. In the midst of which Librarie, there was the Guts of a Dragon in length aboue one hundred and twentie foote, vpon them written in Letters of Gold Homers Iliads. There were many other worthy things in diuers places of the Citie; as the Nymphs Groue, the Market-place of Metall, with infinite others. There was also most famous Images, as of Iuno, Samo, Minerua, Lindo, Venus, Gnido, in such sort that all Strangers who came to it, full of admiration were astonied at the beautie thereof, reputing it a celestiall thing.

New Rome.

Librarie.

Nymphs groue.

It suffered diuers fortunes vnder the Greekish Emperours many yeeres, insomuch that through their disgraces it went by little & little declining; so that it came to be subiect to the French and Venetian, in company, the space of fife and fiftie yeeres, and in the end by the Illustrious familie Pa-lealoga Genonesi, was brought out of their hands. Vntill long after by a long Siege, in the yeere 1453. the nine and twentieth of May, it came into the hands of the most mightie House of Ottaman, and was taken by the Great Sultan Mahomet the second, the eight Lord of Turkes, 1190. yeeres, little more or lesse from the time that it was built of Great Constantine.

Ottaman.

It is obserued of the Writers, that the first founder was called Constantine, and his Mother Hellen. Likewise hee that lost it Constantine, the Sonne of Hellen. Within the which, Time, the destroyer with his true Teeth, one, Mars with his Sword another, the ordinary Pestilence and continuall Fires, diuers Earthquakes, and many ouer-flowings which it hath alwayes had, hath brought it to such a passe, that now there is not remayning of so many Antiquities, other then scarce the name of Constantinople. And for conclusion, to say thereof that which remayneth, the Citie is scituate in the Prouince of Thracia, being fertile and mightie in Armes. Insomuch, that it hath of Old time beene called the Countrey of Mars. It is in the Straight of Helespont in Europe, which is distant fourteene miles from Calcedonia (now Scutarie) built ouer against Asia. At the Point or Sea Euxina, called the Great or Blacke Sea, where Ouid named it Port of the two Seas, being in 45. degrees of Latitude, and in 56. of Longitude.

First Hill.

The mightie Princes of the House of Ottaman, who wanne it of the Greekes, hauing destroyed all the Temples and famous Buildings, with their Churches, Sepulchers, &c. They haue giuen it another sort of ornament building, them on the top of the seuen Hills within the Citie. On the first Hill is to bee seene, beginning from the West towards the Port of Andranople, a fragment standing in memorie of the old Emperiall Palace with certayne Galaries, wast roomes, and pillers within it selfe, doth well shew the great power of Time, the destroyer and overthrower of all, that a Prince of the world, his Palace is now become a Lodge for Elephants, Panthers, and other Beasts. Hard by that Gate in the South street, is a Church newly built by the Queene, Mother of this present Sultan Murat, the same is little but faire and finely contriued.

On the second Hill, was the Temple and Palace of the Patriarke of Constantinople, a thing worthy the memorie, where was buried in Chests of fine Marble, most of the Christian Emperours; but about foure or fife yeeres since, it is reduced into a Church as now may be seene.

Second Hill.

Third Hill.
Mahomet's Sepulchre and Hospitall.

The third and highest Hill, hath vpon it the Church and magnificate Sepulcher of the Great Sultan Mahomet the second, that tooke the Citie from the last and vnfortunate Greeke Constantine, a building worthy of admiration chiefly at these times, in which the Turkes are more practique, then in those times when matters were more grosse and rusticall. Maruellous is the greatnesse and magnificence of it being made in similitude of the Sophia, and hath about it one hundred Houses couered with Lead (of a round cube fashion) ordayned to receiue Strangers and Trauellers of what Nation or Religion soeuer they be, where they may rest (as alike at other Churches) with their Horses and Seruants, three dayes together if they please, and haue their charges borne, not paying any thing for their owne and seruants dyet. Besides, there are without the circuit of the Church, other one hundred and fiftie Lodgings for the poore of the Citie, vnto whom they giue to eate, and to euery one of them in money one Asper a day. It hath also a place where they giue Sirrop and Medicines of free cost to all that demand, & another for gouernment of the Mad people. The sayd Sultan Mahomet left for the maintenance hereof sixtie thousand Duckets yeerely rent in that time, which now doth import aboue two hundred thousand, for they haue allowance of the rents of Sofia; to which also besides other reuenue belongeth the Basistans and in a manner all the principall shops of the Citie, euen vntill yee come to the Serraglio of the Great Turke, which payeth Rent thereto 1001. Aspers per diem.

Fourth Hill.

The fourth Hill hath vpon it the Church and Sepulchre of Sultan Selim, Father of Sultan Soliman, in the same forme and order as the others are; a Building rather firmer then other wayes.

Fifth Hill.

The fift Hill hath the Church and Sepulchre of Sultan Bajazet, Father of the aboue named Selim, with a great Piazza (a void place) which is the spaciousest belonging to any their Churches, and most frequented by the Turkes.

Sixth Hill.

The sixth Hill hath the maruellous Church and Sepulchre of the Triumphant and Inuincible Sultan Soliman, a Building worthy of such a Monarch, in the best and most traffiqued place of the Citie; which passeth in greatnesse, workmanship, Marble Pillars, and Riches more then Kingly, all the other Churches of the Emperours his Predecessors; a Worke which meriteth to be matched with the seven Wonders of the World.

Seventh Hill.
Temple of Sancta Sophia described.

The seventh and last Hill hath the sumptuous Temple of Santa Sophia, founded by Iustinian the fifteenth Emperour of the East, in the yeere five hundred and thirtie. It was a Building of greatnesse, workmanship, beautie, and riches incomparable, which it is said hee made to match the Building of the Temple of Salomon. In time past this tooke a great part of the Citie, the centre of which Temple is made round in a Cube, like the Pantheo of Rome, which Agrippa built; as that was, so this top is round, but much more large and high, and there are two rankes of very great Marble Pillars, all of one colour and of such thicknesse, that two men can scarce fathome one. Then there are another order more higher, and not so long nor thicke, that holdeth vp the Cube, the which is made within with great Art, after the Mosaicall resemblance with Gold and Azure, the inside of the Temple is all implastered, and ouer wrought with great Tables of Porfido, Serpentino, and Marble of diuers colours; and the cloysters round about are of like vaulting and workmanship, all singular faire, and beautifull, more then ordinary, but of the Pictures of all sorts (as the painted Images) the Turkes haue scraped out the eyes. The couering on the out-side is of Lead, the gates (which haue beene the fairest in the World) of fine Metall of Corinth.

The quondam
glorie.

It was in the time of the Greekish Emperours, the most rich, perfect, and sumptuous Temple, not only of the East, but of all the World; for there were one hundred gates, and it was more then a mile about, compassing the houses of the Canons, Priests, and others; it had 300000. Duckets yeerely Rent. There is now the Sepulchre of Sultan Selim the Second, Father of this present Sultan Morat, his Church for want of place he caused to be made in Adrianopoli, which is also a sumptuous thing.

Solims Sepulchre and Church.

Seraglio.
Of it see the former Treatise.

Vpon one of the corners of the Citie (a point at the mouth of the freight that diuideth Europe and Asia) on the Promontorio, called of the Ancients Christophori, (which is as much to say, Lord of Gold) a name that whosoeuer gaue it, peradventure did foresee as much as now is inclosed in the bosome thereof, and of the Greekes called (Saint Demetrio) is the admirable Habitation (Seraglio) of the Grand Signior, that hath beene in time past a Monasterie of Monkes of the said Sophia, and is foure miles about compassed round with a high Vault, and very faire Towres built by great Mahomet the Second, amplified and decked by all his Successors; it is so replenished with braue Palaces, faire Gardens, Marble Cisternes, fine Fountaynes, sumptuous Banias; that it were an vnwise part to describe them, especially in regard that this present Sultan Morat, hath begunne so magnifically to replenish it, for he alone hath built therein more then all his Predecessors together, and particularly he hath beautified with two faire Lodgings, or as we may say Banqueting Houses, which they call Chouskes, the top coverings of Lead, but vnder wrought with curious Worke of Bossing, Painting, and Gilding, built of fine Marble Pillars of Porfido, and Serpentino, richly laid with Gold and inestimable expence.

Without the great Seraglio, neere to the point thereof is a little Fountayne, but rich, of white Marble, laid on with Gold of very fine workmanship, (abounding with excellent water) built by this present Sultan Morat, in memory that there he went a Land dismounting the Caske, when he

he came to take possession of the Empire; as may be read therevpon written in Turkish Letters. In the chiefeſt place of the Citie, betweene the Piazza of Sultan Baiazet, and that of Sultan Soliman, there is another Seraglio called of the Turkes Eschi Serrai, as much to ſay, the old Seraglio. The ſame was firſt builded and inhabited by Great Mahomet the Second (I meane before the aboue named) it was two thouſand paces about, before that the triumphant Sultan Soliman to make his Church tooke away the halfe. It is compaſſed with a Vault of fifteene yards high without any Turrets, the Virgins of the Grand Signiors remayne there. Thither hee goeth many times vpon pleaſure, for within it are faire Lodgings, great Orchards, many Banies, cleere Fountaynes, and of old time the deceaſed Emperours were wont there to hunt.

Old Seraglio.

- 10 Many other faire Churches are diſperſed through the Citie of great coſt and goodly proſpect, built with Royall magnificence, as that which Sultan Soliman cauſed to be made at the death of one of his Sonnes, called Iegni Sultan Mehemet, as much to ſay, as new Sultan Mahomet, (different from the other of the Great aboueſaid) neere thereby are Lodgings of the Janizaries, who are houſed in manner of Friers, Guimas, Mosches. And other places for Prayer are there likewiſe built by many Baſſaes, and other great Perſonages (but not of ſuch importance as thoſe afore nominated) as that of Mahomet Baſſa, Dauit Baſſa, Roſtan Baſſa, Mahomet Baſſa, and of Meffih Baſſa the Eunuch, and now they are a building two new ones, better then the others, one for the excellent Sinan Baſſa neere the red Pillar which is by the Lodging of the Emperours Ambaſſadors, the other very faire in Aurat Bazar (hard by the Pillar which they ſay to bee of
- 20 Pompey) of the excellent Girabe, Maher Baſſa, and diuers others very many.

The Iew the preſenter of this Pamphlet, ſaith without number, ſome Turkes to me haue named the number to be 18000. great and ſmall Churches of Turkes. The Patriarch of Greekes, Meleteo, who had formerly beene of Alexandria, and there dyed, told me that there is in Conſtantinople one hundred Chriſtian Churches, moſt aſſuredly within the Citie and Suburbs, I take it there are more: For at Galata, ouer the water, as may bee compared to Southwarke from London, there are of Popiſh Churches (wherein are grauen Images) foure or five, and two or three Monaſteries of Romane Friers; of Greekiſh Churches and Friers many more, in whoſe Churches are no grauen Images; yet they whip themſelues there, as the Papiſts doe. This I haue ſeene vpon a Good Friday as I remember: Bels the Chriſtians are not permitted to haue in their Churches. Thus much from the matter of the Iewes

- 30 Diſcourſe, which is not from the purpoſe of that therein handled.

The greateſt and moſt famous ſpacious place of the Citie is that which in time paſt of the Greeks was called Hippodromo, and now of the Turkes Atmaidan, which is as much to ſay, both in the one and the other Language, running of Horſes, for there they did and doe runne them. In time paſt it hath beene much more greater, but the many Palaces (that diuers great men in proceſſe of time haue built) hath leſſened it; as the Great Ebrim Baſſa, who builded in the time of Sultan Soliman, that faire Palace which is to bee ſeene; now the Lodging of this other Ebrim Baſſa, giuen him when he married the Emperours Daughter.

- Right ouer againſt it is another Seraglio, that, alſo built in my time by the excellent Roſtan Baſſa, when he married his Daughter vnto Ahmat Baſſa. In the middeſt of this great Piazza is to be ſeene rayſed vpon foure Dice of fine Metall, a very faire Pyramide of mingled ſtone, all of one piece, fiftie Cubits high, carued with Heroycall Letters, reſembling the Agulia of Rome, in whoſe top were incloſed the aſhes of the vnconquered Iulius Caſar, that now Pope Sixtus hath reduced into the middeſt of the place of Saint Peter: this Monument Theodoſius the three and fortieth Emperour of Rome, (by Nation a Spaniard) and eightie of Conſtantinople, cauſed to bee erected in memory, that he had conquered the Goths, the Alani, the Hunnes, and ſo many Tyrants that vſurped the Empires of the Eaſt and Weſt, as by the Greeke and Latine Verſes there ingrauen, yet after ſo many yeeres is to be read, although a wheele hath carried away ſome part of the Latine: His foot that is double in the foundation which is two Cubits high, is carued the manner and way they tooke to ſet vp this Pyramide or Obeliſke, the which was there rayſed
- 40 by Theodoſius in the yeere 390. ſo that it paſſeth 1200. yeeres, ſince it was erected; now that it is in the yeere 1594, and ſeuentie ſixe yeeres after that the Great Conſtantine built the Citie. In the ſecond foundation which is foure Cubits high, are carued the Tyrants round about, who to the ſaid Emperour Theodoſius (he alſo being carued in the middeſt) on euery ſide bring Preſents and render obedience. This Piazza hath alſo another Pillar very high of ſquared ſtone in manner all lineated with the time, and likewiſe one of Braſſe made with maruellous art in forme of three Serpents wreathed together with their mouthes vpwards, which is ſaid, was made to inchant the Serpents that on a time moleſted the Citie. There was betweene the Agulia and the Braſſe Pillar, foure very high Pillars equally diſtant with their foundation and top ornament, the which Sultan Selim, Father of this preſent Sultan Morat, remoued & ſent to Adrianople for the
- 50 Church which he there built. This place had alſo before the place of Ebrim Baſſa ſome yeeres paſt three faire Images of Braſſe, that the victorious Sultan Soliman, after he had taken Buda, brought and no other thing, in teſtimonie of his Victorie; they were of the great Mathia Coruino, the moſt famous King of Hungarie. The ſaid Image, when the named Ebrim Baſſa was ſlaine, were by the furie of the people throwne to the ground.

Admirable
Vaults.

At the end of this place towards the Sofia, are also to be seene certaine ruines of a great circle of a Theator which was there, where the people sate to see the Playes and Pastimes that there were shewed; now it is a place wherein the Lions and other Animals of the Great Turkes are kept, one thing resteth in my Iudgement) to be maruelled at, and the most notable in this place which is, that it is all hollow vnderneath, and holden vp with Pillars of rich Marble with their foundation, and top garnishing all wrought in branches. They are said to passe the number of one thousand, and vnderneath it is light and fresh water, there are also Instruments or great wheelles that they vse to spinne Silke with, and not only vnder this void place, but it is held for certayne that vnder all the Citie they may walke, as may be perceiued by many other ruined places; this was very faire to behold some yeeres past, when the present Sultan Morat for the space of three or foure moneths made there in Pastimes at the Circumcisiou of his first begotten Sonne Sultan Mahomet, it was a maruellous incredible thing, the Shewes and Playes they had at that time.

In another large and spacious place farre from this towards the Port of Selimbria, called by the Turkes Aurat Bazar (which is as much to say, the Market place of women, for thither they come to sell their Workes and Wares) is to be seene a very high great Pillar, written vpon round about on the out-side, made hollow within, which they commonly call of Pompey, perhaps, because it resembleth another that is of Pompey in Rome of the like Fashion; but I beleue that neither Pompey nor other for him, euer caused this to be set vp. Another high Pillar of red Marble bound about with Iron hoopes, is to be seene neere to the Lodging of the Emperours Ambassadour, with certayne Greeke Letters, which time hath consumed and often fires many times burned it, in such sort that they cannot be vnderstood or read.

Naumachia.

There are to bee seene also in the Citie of Constantinople certayne very great places of the Ancients called Naumachia, which they filled with water, and shewed thereon the battailes of their Nauie to delight the people, which at this time is full of Orchards. There is in the chiefeft places for Traffique of the Citie, two Basistans, which are certayne Buildings foure square high, and made round at the top, in the forme of great Lodges couered, each of which haue foure Gates, opening vpon foure streets, round about garnished, with shops stuffed with all rare and exquisite Merchandize, as of inestimable value, Precious Stones and Pearles, (Zebulini) Sables, and other rich Furies of all sorts, Silkes and Cloth of Gold, Bowes, Arrowes, Bucklers, and Swords: here likewise they sell many Christian Slaues of all Sects and Ages, in manner as they sell their Horses, looking them in the eyes, mouth and all other parts; this they doe every fore-noone, except Friday, which the Turkes hold for their day of rest.

Bathes.

There is also to be noted the Sarachiana, which is a street of Sadlers, & of them that work in Leather, a thing so worthy and rich that the more part of strangers, who come thither, maruell more at this place then at all the rest of the most worthy and rich that are to be seene in Constantinople. The Citie is also full of a number of very faire Banias, as well publike as priuate, which in imitation of the Ancient Greekes and Romanes, are built and contriued with great industry, sumptuousnesse and expence almost incredible, besides those of the Great Turkes Seraglio, his women, and Bassaes, the most of the common sorts are beautified with Pillars, Bankes and Pavements of diuers and rare coloured Marble: faire they are and very great with plentie of water.

Great mens Seraglioes.

I let passe the diuers Seraglioes, faire Houses of many Vice-royes, old and new, so great and compassed with such high wals, that they rather appeare to bee Cities then Seraglioes, which without make no beautifull shew; but within are full of all Riches and Pleasure the World affords; for the Turkes are wont to say, that they build not to pleasure the sight of those that passe by the way, but for their owne commoditie: deriding the goodly shewes that our Palaces in Christendome make outwardly, and that within they are not agreeable to their minds.

Conduits.

Heare I would make an end, but I cannot forget the goodly Arches and Conduits of water, which Sultan Soliman of good memory brought with incredible expences so many miles by Land, and in so great quantitie; that ouer and aboue so many old Fountaynes, he increased many more with faire Marble so magnificall, and with such quantitie of water that is most notable; being a very necessary ornament to the Citie. There are so many that there is not in a manner a street which hath not one of his, and the greatest prayse in my opinion which he meriteth for so worthy a worke, is that setting a part the expences which he made in conducting this water, and in making the Fountaynes; all the places where he built, he caused to be bought with ready money of the Ownors without forcing any; and oftentimes changed the places appointed, because he would not haue the people lament, who were vnwilling to sell them, and tooke not one Aspar towards the charge. Also being broken, some of the Conduits after they were finished. Sultan Soliman said, that he thanked God they were decayed in his time, that he might repaire them without exacting on the people, or that there should haue come another Prince that would not haue regarded them.

The Citie of Constantinople in time past had eleuen Gates, every one for some purpose called Aurea, Pagea, Roma, Carthaseo, Regia, Caligaria, Xilina, Haringa, Phara, Theodosia, and Syliaca. But the continuall fires, the many Earth-quakes, and particularly that which hapned in the time of Sultan Baiazet Father of Selim the moneth of September, Anno 1509. which lasted eightene dayes together (letting passe the other Buildings in which about 13000. persons perished) it ouerthrew the famous ancient wall; the said Sultan Baiazet gathered together more then 60000. men to rebuild it, making new Gates which are at this day five and twentie. They were one lesse, but the Sultana Mother of this Emperour made a faire publike Bania, few yeeres since, and for the more magnificence opened a new Gate; these following are the names at this present, beginning at the East Gate of the Citie hard by the great Seraglio.

Five and twentie Gates.

- The first, Giebud Capasi. The Jewes Gate, for thereabout they dwell.
- The second, Baluc Bazar. The Fish Gate, for there they sell their Fish.
- 10 The third, Yemis Eschelessi. The Fruit Gate, for to that Scale comes their Fruit.
- The fourth, Odun Capi. The Wood Gate, there they weigh and sell their Wood.
- The fifth, Yegni Capi. New Gate.
- The sixth, Vn Capan. The Corne Gate, there they sell their Corne.
- The seventh, Giubali Capi. The Moone Gate.
- The eighth, Aya Capi. The Holy Gate.
- The ninth, Yegni Capi. New Gate: which the Empresse caused to be made.
- The tenth, Petri Capi. Saint Peeters Gate.
- The eleventh, Tener Capi. The Lanthorne Gate, where Mahomet the Second entred, when he tooke Constantinople.
- 20 The twelfth, Balat Capi. The Palace Gate, for it was the chiefe Gate in time of the Greeke Emperours.
- The thirteenth, Aynansari Capi. Iobs Gate, for there they say, hee lyeth buried: it is a little Church, to which the Great Turke goeth often in Deuotion.
- The fourteenth, Egri Capi. The Eye Gate.
- The fifteenth, Anderne Capi. The Gate of Andranople.
- The sixteenth, Top Capefi. The Artillerie Gate.
- The seventeenth, Celebri Capi. The Gate of Selembria.
- The eighteenth, Yegni Capi. New Gate.
- The nineteenth, Yedi Cula. The Gate of the seven Towres: for so many there are together, neere thereunto, built of the Ottoman Princes, where it is said, they haue in time past put their
- 30 Treasure.
- The twentieth, Narli Capi. Gate of the Pomegranates.
- The one and twentieth, Semati Capi. Saint Matthews Gate.
- The two and twentieth, Yegni Capi. New Gate.
- The three and twentieth, Cum Capi. Gate of the Sands.
- The foure and twentieth, Chiatladi Capi. The cracked Gate.
- The five and twentieth, Abircapi. The Gate of the Stables, where the Grand Signiors Horses are kept.

This is all which at this time commeth to my purpose to say (A. V. S. Illstre) hauing spoken only of the bodie of the Citie Constantinople, with the most breuitie and veritie that I could possible; not touching the matters of the Aynansaria, (where the Turkes say, is buried patient Job) and where are many Sepulchres of much importance, of the chiefe Bassas and other great men, holden of them for holy ground, neither touch I the Citie Pera (a Colonie in time past of the Genueses) Tophana, or Scutari; for it would bee needfull of them to make a long Discourse, leauing the same vntill some other occasion that you please to command me, and if herein be any error; let the small time I had to write it excuse me, and supply the same with the good will I haue to serue you. And seeing this Discourse accepted, I will present you also with a Summarie of the Liues and Deeds of the Ottoman Princes; which I am gathering together with the greatest breuitie and veritie that I can possible. At Constantinople presented me, written by a Jew Doctor, an ancient dweller in that Citie, which when I had read, I presently out of Italian translated it, the seuenteenth and eighteenth dayes of August, 1594.

Sepulchres

¶ V.

The Pilgrimage of IOHN SANDERSON from Constantinople, to the Holy Land, and so to Tripoly in Syria, begunne the fourteenth day of May, 1601. ended the fourteenth of August.

- 60  He fourteenth day of May, 1601. we set saile in the good ship called the Mermaid from Constantinople, so to Galipoly, Troy, Sio, Rhodes, and the first day of Iune arriued at Zur, which is Tyrrus: passed by Sarfanta, in time past Sarepta, anchored and went ashore at Sidon, now called Saiet, where the third day of the same we visited the Sepulchre pulchre of Zebulon. Sophani the Prophet, and Basaleel which built the Arke, buried halfe a dayes journey from Sidon.

Tobar Asladi.

Iewes Bookes.

The ninth, I departed in company of Iewes, and arriued in Damasco, the twelfth, passing by Samcania, Baruck, Hermiston, Libiton, foure Mountaynes so called. The nineteenth, I went to a Towne within three miles of Damasco, now called Iobar Asladi, where Elias did anoint Azael, Iehu, and Elisha; the Iewes hold that like as in Mount Horeb, so heere Elias hid himselfe in a Rocke from Iesabel, where also they say the Rauens fed him. Here is built a Synagogue of the Iewes, in which is solemnely reserued their chiefest ancient written Books, and thither they go to worship with great deuotion. The sumptuouslest matter to be noted is the Church which hath twelue Gates of Brasse, excellent Corinthian Metall, the middle one of each three being bigger and higher then the two on each side) curiously wrought, (it is now called Bedremon. Here it was that the Idoll Rimmon was worshipped, it is iust square, three doores on each side. Any man may passe by the doores (being they are open to foure publike places) but not any enter other then are of the Mahumetan Religion, many Pillars there are, but two especially noted about the rest in respect of some passed matter. Hither it was that Naaman the Affyrian desired the Prophet Elisha, after hee had beene healed of his Leprosie, to licente him to bring from Samaria, which at this day is called Shomrom (the said Prophets Country) two Mules lading of Holy Land to build an Altar vnto God; which the Prophet denied him not, and there are also foure Riuers called Barada, Towra, Tesed, Cananat, two of which are Abana and Pharpar: which Naaman said (murmuring) were fairer then all the Riuers of Israel, when the Prophet bad him goe wash himselfe in Iordan, to heale his disease.

Silke Girdles, Shashes, Bodkins, &c. fit to sell in Sio and Natolia.

I remayned ten dayes in Damasco, by reason that my rich Companion Iew, bespake much Merchandize to be readie at his returne, left there tenne or twelue thousand Duckets of Gold; which for surer conueyance he had carried quilted in his owne and Seruants vnder-garments: all he left in a friends hands, except two or three thousand which he spent of Almes, and disbursed for Bookes in the Holy Land; that money he reserued still in their quilted Coats, fearing theues which abound in these Countries.

This Bridge as I doe remember, is strong built of stone, some Bricke, & hath seven or eleuen Arch as I remember.

From Damascus to Sasa, the two and twentieth, so to Conetra, neere Mount Hermon, whose Eastermost part confineth the Countries of Reuben and Gad, then to Naube the Countrey, where was borne the Virgin Ebrew; whom Naaman had taken Captiue, shee counselled that her Master should goe and be cured of the Prophet in Shomrom. Here likewise I saw the Lake I could not be certified the Name, it is in the Country of the Gergesites where the Legion of Devils entered into the Swine. Then to the Bridge vpon Iordan, on the right hand is the little Sea Cadis, on the left Genazeret, a little on this side that Bridge, as the Iewes to mee reported, the Angell wrestled with Iacob, had passed ouer his Wiues, Children, Family, and Cattel; fearefully he meeting his Brother Esan, who receiued him kindly; then wee came to a Mountayne which they called Mount Canaan, and on the backe side of that Mountayne towards the right hand, came to the high Countrey of Galilee, passed by some Townes, and so to a Citie called Safet, the foure and twentieth of Iune: here the Iewes look for their Messias to appeare vpon a most high Mountaine adjoyning, which as I remember they called Mount Caram. Heere on this Mount Canaan, Mahaleel a Iew Priest that had beene about in gathering (he told me he had got but five hundred Chequins in Gold, and had them about him) for the Iewes of the Holy Land did bid mee marke the current of the River Iordan, which seemed to stand and slowly beare towards Tiberias and Sodome, but withall a forceable current, did runne in the middest backe againe towards the Bridge, and so to fall into Cades, toward Ior and Dan, from whence the whole River of Iordan doth take his increase.

In this Citie of Safet are all the most learned and deuout Iewes: and here are fixe Colledges or Schooles of Learning, this they call the House of God, and many aged goe purposely to dye there: this is Bethel where Iacob slept and dreamed in the way he went to serue his Vncle Laban, afterward returned, dwelt there and built an Altar to the Lord, the Citie of old was called Lus. Built it is on the top of a high Mountayne; and compassed about with many Mountaynes, which are both high and steepe, but the highest is that adjoyning, where I say (they affirme) the Messias wil come; on the top of the Mountain where this Citie is, is the exceedingest old Cattle that I haue seene or heard off, except a part of that at Hebron, and alike the ruines of Tiberias, where I was at my returne from Ierusalem. At the foot of the said Citie Safet, is interred the Prophet Osea, Sonne of Beer, first of the twelue Prophets (so say the Iewes) ouer his Sepulchre is built a Cube not very old, and the Iewes now doe bury their dead at that place.

At Sefferhittim we repoled the heate of that day.

Then we passed by a little Village, where dwelt and is buried the Prophet Abakuke, so said the Iewes, and that the Towne was called Teacoke; thence wee came to a Village called Sefferhittim, where they say is buried Iethro the Father in Law of Moses: then wee came to Aionto-sar at the foot of Mount Tabor, on the top of which Mount our Saviour Iesus Christ transfigured himselfe talking with Elias and Moses; with him was Peter, James and Iohn: (leaning on the right hand, the place where was the Warres with Sisera and Deborah; and on the left, the River Chison: Sisera fled to Sefferhittim, where Iael killed him, and from thence by a Village called Zarni, Zarni, the place is called Isarel, so wee passed the Valley of Iesserell; here Iehu fought the battell with Ababs sonne. So we came to Ienin, of old time Ingenin, interpreted, is Paradise so pleasant; that is the place and situation that well may be called Paradise; it may be assuredly compared to the Citie of Palme trees spoken of in Scripture, so pleasant and prospectiue, it is with also Woods of very many Palme trees replenished.

But the Valley wherein Damascus is built, is much more fairer to the eye, pleasanter and larger.

The twentieth sixe, we passed by Dotana, in Scripture called Dotan, or Dotban, the place where Iosephs brethren cast him into the pit. From thence wee passed the Mountaines of Gilboa, where Saul and his sonnes were slaine: on the right hand a faire off wee saw the Sea Palestine, thence we passed a place now called Sabastia, in Scripture Shomron, that is, Samaria, a Citie of Ahab, a pleasant situation on the top of the Mountaine, but not very high. From thence to Sichem the twentieth eight of the same, which is ^a situate betweene two Mountaines, Mount Gerezin, that is the Mount of Blessing, and Mount Ebal, that is, the Mount of Cursing; euen betweene these two Mountaines, a little before wee came to the Citie, is a great Conduit of very good water, twentieth paces before, which is a piece of ground marked out by two short Pillers of plaine white Marble: There was some notable thing done in Moses or Iosias time, else I suppose there stood the stone whereon the seuentie heads of Gedeons sonnes, Abimelecks brothers were piled.

Samaria.

^a At Sichem wee lodged both at our going, and at our returne from Ierusalem.

Betweene the said Mountaines at the Easter-most of them was interred Iosephs bones, where the Iewes prayed as alike at all the Sepulchers they went to visit, and about five miles off, neere to a Village called Awarta, are buried vpon a Hill on the Mount, ^a amongst the Mountaines of Ephraim, the two sonnes of Aaron, Eleazar and Ithamar, and Phineas, the sonne of Eliazar: and hard by vpon another Hill are the ^b seuentie antients buried all in one plot, one Caue, one Sepulcher, these antients of Israel are spoken of in Scripture. Also some two miles further neere the tops of one of the highest said Mountains of Ephraim, is the Sepulcher of Iosua, kept by the Moores as the others are, this we did very wel discern. The Iewes at all pay pole pence, some more, some lesse to the Moores, before they be permitted to say their Ceremonies.

^a Here all the Iewes of our company prayed very deuoutly.

^b As the Iew to me reported.

^c Here we rested two or three houres. Old great stony ruines of a Citie. No Inhabitants there, and many other ruined places wee trauelled ouer, where had beene Townes, but now were craggd stones, and here and there some plots of ground where they sowed Corne: bread very plente and cheape in the Citie of Ierusalem, and all places that we came at in the holy Land; and also at Damascus and all Syria ouer.

^d John Sanderson in companie of the Iewes his fellow traellers.

^e Tedious iourney I made, yea a very chargeable and dangerous iourney; for had not Rabby Abraham, Cohn, the principalls, and the other Iewes

also fauoured and much regarded me: I had beene singled out by some villanous Moores of our owne company, who grudged at me, and at last one of them, that we had hired our Mules of, did punch at me with a staffe, reuiling me with Bre han

zier Goner, saying that I had beene the cause that

Maronis, the Christians of Mount Libanus had broke the head of a Ta

The thirtieth of Iune, wee came to Biera, in Scripture called Beroth, in the Countrie of Beniamin; this Citie is five miles short of Ierusalem, Rama is to bee discerned three or foure miles, on the right hand going to Ierusalem. This day we arrived in Ierusalem; vpon high ground we had trauelled when we drew neere the Citie, though most of the way were rockie and stony, yet now we might euidently see a signe of a long broad high way all craggd, with cornered diffused stones that no beast could trauell ouer, so that along hard by the said way through the fields all traellers passe, yet that also very stony and craggd, but they are not so big as those on the foresaid high way. Then being within a mile we had sight of Ierusalem, which to our view was most excellently situated on Hills, and compassed with other huge Hills round about, some neere, some many miles off. The adornement of waters it wanteth, for there are not any beautifull neere it: Jordan onely we might see a great way off, which Jordan is North-east of Ierusalem about nine or ten miles. The neereft part Eastward Jordan passeth the Lake of Sodome and Gomorrah, and so commeth along towards Ierusalem, which is some fifteene or sixteene miles off; so we entred at the gate opening to Damasco, which I take to be South, and to the Westward.

The second of Iuly ^d, we went to Rama, to the Prophet Samuel his house, vwhere the Iewes say he was buried; vpon the top of the said house is the place where the children of Israel had their haire cut off, at vvhich time they made vowes, gaue great sums to the Sanctorum: at this day there are of the Iewes that vow & performe, carrying their children to haue their haire cut there for deuotion; on the right hand is a Well vvhich is called Samuels Well, other matters here I obserued not. Many and sundry ruinated both great and small Townes, I passed in the Holy Land, both outward and backe againe, vvhich to my desire I could not be informed the names of: as may bee imagined by these nominated in the tedious ^e iourney I made.

In Ierusalem is a little part of the wall of Salomons Temple (so say the Iewes) vnder the said piece of wall is the place vwhere the high Priest went to wash himselfe, within is a stone of twentieth sixe braces long, and twelue broad; in that Temple the Greekes say the holy Ghost came to the Apostles: in these times no Christian nor Iew is suffered to enter that Church on paine of death; a broad going vp also there is of Marble steps, and on the tops of the stayres two white Marble pillars, not very big; vpon these steps none dare come except Turkes and Moores of the best account, this is there held by Christians of the place to bee Salomons Porch. The mount on which the Temple is built, is called in Greeke Thusia tou Abram, where Abraham would haue sacrificed his sonne: this is mount Moria; where to this day I say is curiously kept part of Salomons Temple, the Turkes hauing bestowed very great cost in re-building and leading it all ouer. It is formed, one part a round Cube, close to which cube goeth, as it were ascending a long bridge of building leaded, comparable to the Easter-most part of Pauls, but seemeth some-

Marie, who by the way fell into our company hauing beene at Mecca. Of this Marie ouer night they had asked a little gun-powder, which he deeming they met him on the Hill in the morning and did sore wound him: the Turkes did marke that those Christians had been kinde to me, therefore by that one old collicke fellow I did with patience pocket some abuse, though no great hurt. Abuse for the present, but at Tripoly the Iewes so handled this businesse, putting the Moore in a great feare that I would complaine to the Bassa; so that in their presence the Moore prayed mee of pardon, and withall did bow downe and kist my hand, seeming sorry he had so abused me; nay very sure I am that he did repent, so I forgane him, and hee afterward did bring me a present of fruit and flowers.

what flatter and broad, with the leads more cheuerend and of a deeper worke, and at the end a proportionate forme seeming higher then the rest of the leaded worke.

Ierusalem hath only foure gates, at one of which is the Tower of Dauid, where he fell enamoured with Bertheba, as those fondlings say. Without the said gate, a stones cast from the corner of the wall on the top of Mount Sion are buried Dauid, Salomon, and most of the Kings of Iuda; here neither Iewes nor Christians are suffered to enter, neither permitted to come neere the walls in sight of Turkes and Moores; such as peradventure doe, are forced to pay summes of money to their vttermost abilitie. On the out-side of the aforesaid piece of the Cities wall appeareth apart, as the Iewes to mee reported, of the old wall of the studie of Salomon, vpon one of the stones wherof is written in Hebrew letters carued בתי that is Bitti, which interpreted is to say, my house: 10 here for two dayes I left the company of my great companion Iew, and had attendant on mee a Coloiero, a Greeke Priest, which the Patriarke commanded, to shew me all the notable places in and about Ierusalem and Bethalem. This holy Priest had continued one whole yeere in the Church where they say our Sauour was buried, and for that space neuer came out night nor day, so doing of his owne will onely in deuotion; he chiefly attended me, with other Greeke Friers at my pleasure: likewise also a poore Iew of Ierusalem whom I hired to bee still with mee, partly to interpret, for the Friar Greekes speake but meane Italian, and my selfe vnderstood but little Greeke.

First, the Coloiero went and shewed mee the gate where our Sauour entred when they cryed Hosanna, efsemati, after which wee viewed Caiphas Palace, Pilats Palace (the ruines, remaining as now they say) and alike the Marble pillar of diuers colours at which Christ was whipped; it 20 standeth distant from the house: ouer the way wee passe through somewhat high, a place neere to that where was a water called pronatichi, colinithra, a maruellous great dry ditch which came to the prison or deepe durty dungeon, wherein the Iewes Princes in Zedechias time caused Ieremie the Prophet to be put. He found fauour of the Kings chiefe Eunuch a Blacke-moore, who drew him out, hee standing halfe way in the mud, as by the Scripture appeareth: these Greekes hold that hee was throwne amongst Lions, who licked him in stead of deuouring, and that at last the Iewes caused him to be sawed in sunder.

These Lamps
did hang, burning ouer the Virgins tombe.

Then went wee to the Virgin Maries Sepulchre, a space without the walls of the Citie, in a little Chappel going down many steps, the stayres very broad; on the right hand, as it were, halfe the steps down lieth buried her father and her mother, the Virgin below in a roome a part, where 30 in were only seuen Lampes burning; her stone is of streaked Marble of diuers colours, her Tombe not so high as a mans waste from the ground. My Greeke Priest shewed great deuotion at this Sepulchre (so did hee at the place where our Sauour sweat water and blood, and at the ascension place on top of Mount Oliuet.) A Well of good water is also at the foot of the stayres; then to the place where Saint Steuens was stoned; (the Greekes say our Sauour had made him an Arch-deacon) so to Iesami where Christ was in a bloody sweat (here I prayed) and likewise I saw the place where the Apostles slept; then to the place where hee taught his disciples the Pater noster, the Greekes call it Pater emos: and where he stood when hee wept ouer Ierusalem, and the place where hee was betrayed by that reprobate seruant Iudas.

Then walking further on the side of this Mount Oliuet, wee saw the Garden where Mary 40 met our Sauour after his resurrection. From this part of the Mountaine is seene a farre off the Lake of Sodome, through the which runneth the River Jordan. Then to Orosteolo, the place of Christs ascension, which is on the very top of this Mount Oliuet, a stone yet remaining wherein is the print of a foot: all those Christians hold assuredly, that it is the signe of our Sauours foot, most formall and proportionably it is to bee perceiued, but worne much by the touching and kissing of Christians: here I prayed and hope my Sauour beheld mee. The like square stone white Marble, wherein is the print of the other foot, was stolne from hence and carried to Rome; so say these Greekes.

f Hauing read

a thither traueller in company of *Ed-acher, and one jeweller.

Then to Bethſage, the Village where the Colt was loſed; so along ouer againſt it wee came to Bethania, the Greekes call it Vithania. In this Towne they also affirme, that our Sauour eate the 50 Paſſeouer with his disciples; here was Lazarus raised, who had beene dead foure dayes, in whose Sepulchre I was, wherein I writ my name on the wall, and not in any other place all my pilgrimage. This Lazarus, as the Greekes hold, was afterward Bishop of Larnaca, in Cyprus thirtie three yeeres, where at a Church so named, they say, hee lyeth buried; truth it is of such a faire Church so called in such a Towne of Cyprus, where foure yeeres past I was; but of the bones of Lazarus to be there it is vncertaine to mee. Also the Greekes affirme, that Saint Ellen, the mother of Constantine the Great, is likewise buryed in the said Island of Cyprus, on a mountaine, which at this day is called after her name: shee was erecter of all these Churches, alike repairer and obseruer of all these holy places in the holy Land.

Then returned we backe againe to the water of Siloam, where our Sauour commanded a blind 60 man to wash his eyes, after hee had with earth and spittle touched them, this is at the foot of Mount Sion. Vpon the side of Mount Oliuet is buried Hulda the Prophetesse, there in the middelt of Mount Oliuet was the Altar where they burnt the Red Cow: In a Caue on the right hand are the Sepulchers of Haggi, and Malachi, Zacharia is buryed below. Neere to the Sepulchre of Zacharia

Zacharia is the tombe of Absolom, made of seven stones, and a sharpe pinnacle on the top: at which Monument the Moors of the Countrey when they passe by at this day, throw stones, with railing speeches at him for rebelling against his father. Betweene the places of Zacharia and Absalom, is a plot where in old time they put the vncleane apart to purge themselves; this was the Poole of Bethesda, into which the Angel descended at certaine times and troubled the waters. The Scripture speaketh of five Porches; but I noted not when I was there, neither to me by my Greekes was mentioned, as I remember, any such matter. And there is the Valley of Iosaphat, betweene Mount Morea and Mount Olivet, where the Iewes say the world must bee iudged; most huge stone of incredible bignesse is here to be seene, out of some of which are carued whole houses, two or three I did see, one of which had diuers parted roomes all hewed out of one stone: these in respect of the painfull workmanship I thought notable; as alike a mile off from Ierusalem is a place of buriall, out of a rocke of one Marble stone hewed, with foure doores to foure sundry roomes, and foure coffins of the said stone, but the bodies turned to dust, and the bones not any remaining, except very small pieces. This place or rocke is called Celbasabua; this may well bee the Caue wherein the five Kings hid themselves. Then went I to Esaia the Prophet his Sepulcher, where I beheld the fig-tree, vnder which the Greekes say that the sonnes of Ieremie slept sixtie three yeeres: their names were Varub and Abdimeleck; this may be thought a fallacy in respect of the fig-tree which cannot be of that age; but they say, it is and hath bin euer since replanted of the branches in that selfe place.

Then went I to the Sepulcher of good old Simeon, from thence to a place (neere vnto the Church and Sepulcher where the Christians affirme the bodie of our Sauour was layd) a place, I say, called Anastasia, where Mary met our Sauour after his resurrection, saying, If thou bee the Gardener, tell mee where thou hast layd him. Ouer against the Church doore, in a place where Iesus our Redeemer and Sauour shed his most precious blood, paying the ranfome of our sinnes was cruelly crucified, I say where the Crosse stood, is at this day a prison & in the Church, whose distance is twentie or twentie five paces, are diuers Altars of diuers sorts of Christians; but first I noted in the Church doore two great holes, at which is daily giuen in the victuals to all the sorts of religious persons which keepe continually in the said Church; for the Turkes neuer open the doore, except for some Pilgrime, who first payeth to the Cadie, which is the chiefe Iustice, the Great Turkes due, vpon euery one vnder the Popes banner, which they call Franks, nine Chequins in gold, and Greekes vnder the Patriarke foure and a halfe, with other Christians alike, some lesse. Six officers of the Turks at least comes to open the doore, which house being opened, all Christians that are of that sort who hath payed, may enter the Church with that one, if it be registred that they formerly had payed; but Turkes and Moors may at all times goe in when the doores are opened for any sort of Christian, but must presently come out againe; the Christian for whom the gate was opened, may at his pleasure lye all night, or two or three nights in the Church if he will, and the Turkes Officers returne to open and let them out.

Diuers little Bell-strings there are at the inside of their doores, which rung euery sort of Friers to come downe into the Church to receiue their victuall, or take out pitchers of water to poore folkes, or other actions that may happen. Some eight or nine paces in, is the Sepulcher vpon which they haue made a formall round worke of twelue white Marble Pillers, two and two together, and leaded with a round Cube on the top; open ouer is the Church, with a kind of round building, open I say ouer the said inward proportionate matter, that alike is leaded on the outside very substantially: within the Church I say about that part where the Tombe is, are twelue other coloured great Marble Pillers; those Pillers vpon it formerly spoken of, stand about a Brace from the ground, and a wooden foot-pace vp equall with it some five paces distant. At the end towards the Altars are on each corner one white little Marble stone squared smooth, but not made like Pillers, and are some two foot high; in the midst of the white Marble Pillers ouer the Tombe is three holes made of stone, out of which once a yeere the Popish Friers make artificiall fire to appeare, perswading the Christians that it hath bene euer since the bodie of Christ was there layd.

Right afore vp in the Church is a great white Canopie, vnder which are diuers pictures and lamps, but in the midst hangs a most stately white Crosse of siluer curiously made; the Altars are more vp in the Church aboue that Canopy: many Idolatrous Christians haue their Altars euery sort apart, to say an Altar for the Romanists, for the Greekes, for the Custies of Cairo, Georgians about the Blacke Sea, Armenians of Persia, Abbasies of Ethiopia, Nestorians of Bagdat, Iacobites of Aleppo, Merdi, and Babylon, Maronites of Mount Libanus, Shemsi in Siria and Cilicia a kind of Family of Loue. In the Sepulcher these sorts of Christians haue their Lamps continually burning, to the number (as say the Greeke Friers) of sixtie sixe, and alike haue their superstitious Crosses apart; I went not downe into the Sepulchre, by reason I had a great controuersie with the Popish Friers, but might haue done in their despight, had I not bene entreated by the Greeke Patriarke and others to auoyd an vproare at that time; yet made I those foolish Idolaters spend much money, and at last they sent to intreat mee: but then I would not, hauing to my content seene enough when the doores were opened for mee, and alike out of the Patriarkes house which

At this day a prison, in this prison M. Henry Timberly, alias Capitaine Timberly was, as by this digressing paper appeareth, which he himselfe recordeth in a printed booke; but thus much I had copied from his owne hand.

More M. Timberly relateth that from Grand Cairo to Ierusalem all the way by land he performed this, and backe againe to Cairo in fewer then fiftie dayes.

h I had paid these nine Chequins, and had by the Turkes the Church doore opened for me, was within, & entering the Sepulcher, the Roman Friers and others fell in an vproare, saying that I was a Jew; the Turkes had me goe in in despight of them, but the brabble was so terrible that I returned to the Cadie, with the Friers: the Padre Gordiano sent his Drudgeman and accused me to be a Jew, because I came in company of Iewes: diuers Turkes followed to heare the matter, one old Turke came & earnestly exhorted me to become a Musselman in presence of the Cadie, I gaue him the hearing, and told him that I was a Christian, and no Jew; then he said in the hearing of all the Iewes, Turkes, and Christians, let him bee searcht: but the Cadie, before whom we were (being a very discreet man) did reprove that Turke & also the Drudgeman and Friers my accusers, and so did dismisse me; but (as I was afterwards told) it cost my aduersaries aboue 200. Chequins, I spent not past some twentie in that businesse, ioyneth to the Church, in whose possession the whole steeple and halfe the Tarras is (halfe I say of one side the Church) where are three great grates of Iron open, seruing to giue light into the Church, and where they let downe daily baskets of victuals for the Greeke Friers there abiding; those grates are aboue a mans length, and five or sixe foot broad, at which I did see as much as if I had stood in the Church, and drew with my pen the forme of the inside, and alike the outside. More lower in a roome, at a window out of the Patriarkes house, I stood and drew the forme of that which is erected right ouer the Sepulchre, as I haue described it.

From Ierusalem halfe way to Bethlehem, is a Greeke Chappell (built by Brittish Hellen, the mother of Constantine; who found, they say, the Crosse of Christ; and erected all the Monuments in the Holy Land) in place where Elias his house stood; ouer against which there is a stone in the high way that sheweth an old Monument print of a man leaning sleeping, with his arme vnder his head. The Greekes affirme it most certainly to be the print of Elias bodie, when the Angel bad him eate and make himselfe strong to goe fortie dayes iourney to Mount Oreb, where for a time hee remained fed of Rauens, and after at Gods command arose and went to Damasco to appoint Hazael, Iehu, and Elisha. No remembrance at this place of the Iuniper tree the Scripture speakes of, but a Fig tree there is betweene Ierusalem and Bethlehem, which the Friers shewed mee, saying that the Virgin rested her selfe against it, when shee fled into Egypt with the child Iesus, and her husband Ioseph. They cut thereof little pieces for relikes, and alike in deuotion they at this day make many formall carued Crosses wherein are relikes, and Beads, & they make *Pater noster*s as they call them of the Oline trees which grow vpon Mount Oliuet. Likewise there they told mee (an vnlikely thing it was) that the withered Figge tree which Christ accursed, is yet standing vpon Mount Oliuet.

From the Figge tree before spoken of, one halfe mile, is Rachels Tombe ¹ in the midst of the high way, in sight whereof on a great Bankeside, is finely situate a pretty Towne on the right hand as we went to Bethlehem, and two miles off is Bethlehem, being on a Hill side situate very pleasantly: the high way and land chaulkie the space of halfe a mile euery way round about it. A Church the mother of Constantine hath built ouer the place where our Sauour was borne, and first worshipped of the Shepherds, and then of the Wise-men, before Ioseph and Mary fled with him into Egypt, where also I haue beene some seuentene yeeres since, as in discourse of my former trauels is recorded. The Romanist Friers haue a Chappell going downe vnder this Church, where they haue continually Masse, and ceremoniously keepe the very place of his birth. The Church hath fortie or fiftie very faire Marble Pillers all of one forme and bignesse (I counted them ^m not) it hath beene a very sumptuous Church, Greeke pictured Saints yet remayning in the vpper end of it, which is in forme round, with large steps to goe vp to the Altar, and on both sides vnderneath halfe round steps to goe downe to the Popes Friers persingute, who haue the custodie of the very place of birth, and where the Manger stood. By a gray-headed Greeke Priest and Frier Gretian my attendant, I was brought vp a payre of stayres, going vp at the vpper end of this great Church aloft to a little Chappell, where are many pictures according to the Greekes manner, but especially a large Saint George; before whom they had a Lampe burning, expecting of mee great deuotion, they vnto it making many crosses, and told me he was Saint George. I answered, that I had neuer seene a bigger: they fixed earnest lookes vpon me at that answer, seeing I regarded it not, and the old man told the other in Greeke he thought I was no Christian, because I made no crosse nor reuerence neither, as hee said, to our Ladies, Christs, Saint George, or to other Saints pictures; his fellow, a foolish Frier, told him that those of my Countrey were Christians of the worlds end: I presently turned them both out of their talke, by hastning to bee gone thence.

But they led me vp to the top of the Church which is leaded, & many Christians had there ingrauen their names, so did not I, then they offered mee kindly to stay and dine with them, but I refused. The old Priest required of me almes towards their Lamps, which I did, giuing to them foure Chequins, and came downe the same way I went vp, through the Chappell full of painted (most sorts and sizes) Saints. In which Chappell also is a Well where ordinarily the Christians draw water, and it is, they say, the best in Bethlehem: they draw of it in that place, being neere the top of the Church: but that within the Church (it stands at the very entrance within) I take to be the Well that Dauid desired to drinke of from the hands of his valiant men: The Papists hold neither of both, but say it is another neere Bethlehem.

So we returned to Ierusalem the same afternoone, and in Ierusalem my holy Coloyro led mee to a Monastery of Greeke Nuns, where I bestowed some mony in trifles of needle-worke wrought by them, and there the Nuns required my beneuolence, I gaue them seuen Chequins; then presently not farre from that, he had me to another Monastery of Nuns, where I saw their Chappell full of very fine pictures, and they told me that a man comes daily to doe their seruice; there I did as at the other, and more I bestowed in buying, for there they graced me with the sight of a very faire young Virgin Nun, that so much beautie and youth I could doe no lesse then praise, and pittie her estate to my Coloyro, who was readie the next day to attend mee thither againe, if so had beene my pleasure to haue bought more new workes of the old Nuns, &c.

With Gold and thankes I rewarded his passed paines, leauing him at that time: and to my Pilgrime, k Of these Crosses & Pater-noster Beades, Rosaries, I did bring from thence, and at my returne presented my brother and some others, hauing onely referred for my selfe one Crosse, two paire of Beads, and two Girdles, which are the length of the Sepulcher. These Crosses, Beades, and Girdles are brought to vs by poore Christians to sel, they saying that they are holy things, for that they had been put into the Sepulcher: I, as the custome was, and as other Christians did, did buy of them & brought from thence.

I When I was there, Anno 1601. ouer the graue of Rachel, there was a Cube raised vpon foure Pillers made of stone and mortar, and open it was on all sides. m And yet it comes in my mind that I did tell them, and I thinke they were in number fortie of verie smooth whitish Marble, the vpper end of this Church, the halfe round mounting steps I meane, are much like those at the Church of Rocheſter.

n Amongst which names I did see Huet Stapers, who (as some said) had trauelled from Grand Cairo thither in Friers weeds, and (as I haue heard) was made a Knight of the Sepulcher, by the Padre Guardian and the other Romish, &c. Those, who so euer English or others, who are so knighted, are made to take a mad kind of oath.

grime mates the Jewes I returned; and prosecuting my purpose desired, I againe further traced the Holy Land, where two miles from Bethleem are to bee seene two Vallies, then Rivers, now Drie; which the Jewes say Salomon digged to water the Woods. A little way off on the left hand is buried Gad, one of the twelve Patriarchs, and halfe a mile on this side Hebron is the Valley Eshcol, where the twelve Spies sent by Moses were, they returned with good newes. At this day there are Grapes * in that Valley growing, one bunch of them weigh eight or nine Okes, as those of the Countrey affirmed, which may be of our weight twentie or one and twentie pound. I saw none such, though some there were very great sprung out, but not neare ripe. This was the fifth of July, 1601. At the end of this Valley Eshcol is Hebron the Citie, the Valley is a long mile before you come to it, all planted with Vines and many Trees. In this Citie is the Sepulcher of Abraham, the Jewes hold that there also are buried Adam and Eve, Sara, Isaac and Rebecca, Jacob and Lea. Into this Tombe not any are suffered to enter, but at a square hole through a thicke wall: they may discerne a little light of a Lampe. The Jewes doe their Ceremonies of Prayer, there without. The Moores and Turkes are permitted to have a little more sight, which is at the top where they let downe the Oyle for the Lampe, the Lampe is a very great one continually burning. An exceeding old Castle (but of late time somewhat repaired) joyneth to it on the one side: a Moschea that is a Church of Moores on the other, and it seemeth to bee within part of the Moschea. At the right side of Hebron on the Mount, is the Sepulcher of Iesse, the Father of Dauid, and in the Citie also is the Tombe of Abner. On the North side of Hebron is the Playne of Mamre, where hee received the Angels into his Tent.

* Eshcol Grapes still great bunches.

This we went not to, but might perceiue it a pretie way off; and riding backe to Ierusalem also wee saw the Lake of Sodom, and all the Countrey thereabouts: but thither wee went not. From thence the length of the Riuer Jordan, most pleasant to behold in the way wee trauelled through the Countrey, yet was I not that I know of, at that very place where Iohn baptised our Sauour Christ: notwithstanding I washed my hands and head, and dranke of the Riuer in diuers places, as if you haue and doe marke this Discourse, may bee perceiued.

* Jacobs Well is iust square, about foure yards euery way, built of some squared stones and not very deepe, but excellent cleere and coole, so flat at the top that we did sit vpon it for our ease, recreation and refreshment, the space of one houre parlying.

Vpon thursday the eight of July, 1601. wee departed Ierusalem; came backe to Beer or Beeroth, then to Sichem the ninth day; but our Horses, Camels, Mules and Asses, being very hot and wearie, wee stayed and refreshed our selues and them at Jacobs * Well, which is about halfe or three quarters of a mile before yee come to Sichem. The Jewes are there also somewhat ceremonious, the water is excellent good & abundant, being hard by the high-way. There it was that our Sauour talked with the Woman of Samaria. In sight of this Well, two stones casts off, are Iosephs bones buried, where I had beene with the Jewes at my last being in Sichem, as I went to Ierusalem.

* Memorandum, that my honourable and most honest Iew, in a kind sort to doe mee pleasure, was content to goe out of the straight way fixe miles, to shew me the Citie Tiberias, and Capernaum, where wee lodged that night.

The eleuenth, wee came to Ienin Paradise. The twelfth, to the ancient Citie * Tiberias, this is built close by the shoare side. From thence wee might see most excellent pleasantly, appearing about the tops of other high Mountaynes, the Citie Bethel vpon his Mountayne, the highest Mountayne neare vnto it, whereas I say they affirme, that the Messias will come; those for the pleasurablest Mountaynes which in my life time I haue seene, and Libanus for the hugest; ouer top of which Libanus I haue passed, (the Playne of Baalgad at the bottome of Mount Libanus to words Damascus, is the spaciousest; but the Playne wherein Damascus is built, is the pleasantest that any eye can in earth behold.) The Sea Tiberias, is in my iudgement at the most fixe or fixe miles * ouer in the broadest place. Heere it was that our Sauour and Peter fished, and went ouer when hee fed the fixe thousand. Wee onely remayned heere foure houres, in which time we cast crummes of Bread into that little Sea, and diuers Fish like Carps (but like Carps in scales and of colour, but they were somewhat longer and thinner bellied) came in abundance to the shoare, some small, some great: thence wee passed for * feare of Arabian Theeues, which are in troupes about those Countries, pitching their Tents at diuers times in diuers Playnes and fruitful places; liuing a little Common-wealth amongst themselues, subiect to no Law, begetting Children, and breeding vp all sorts of Cattle for their vse. They are of diuers Trades, as Smiths, Shoemakers, Weauers and such like, and amongst them haue excellent running Horses, where-

* And yet by reason of the very high Land on the other side, I may well imagine the breadth to bee three or foure leagues.

50 with they often ride a Theeuing. We came to Almenia, which hath beene a great Citie also, seuen or eight miles off, close built by the Sea side, along through which runneth a Channell of Jordan; this vndoubtedly is Capernaum, for that it is ouer the point of the Land, there wee lodged. So riding vp the higher part of the Countrey, wee came to a reasonable great Towne, which may well bee Nazareth, from thence to Cana. Wee saw the Riuer Arnon, so called as some sayd, being a Riuer it seemed to vs a Poole, apart from this Jordan; which Jordan, as I haue sayd before, runneth through the Lake of Sodome, and alike through the Sea Tiberias, which is Genesaret, passeth a Bridge and falleth into another little Sea or rather great Poole called Cadis. Then progressed we through another excellent scituation where had beene some famous Citie, like to be Gilgall or Nazaret. For the Patriarch * of Ierusalem told me, that comming from Damascus ward, we must

* And yet in the foure houres that wee there rested, we fell to the prouant wee brought, and we got foure or fixe of those Fishes fresh out of that Riuer Jordan, and did broyle them vpon hot coales, that of wood wee had quickly made for that purpose, and I did eate my part of them so broyled.

60 We came to Almenia, which hath beene a great Citie also, seuen or eight miles off, close built by the Sea side, along through which runneth a Channell of Jordan; this vndoubtedly is Capernaum, for that it is ouer the point of the Land, there wee lodged. So riding vp the higher part of the Countrey, wee came to a reasonable great Towne, which may well bee Nazareth, from thence to Cana. Wee saw the Riuer Arnon, so called as some sayd, being a Riuer it seemed to vs a Poole, apart from this Jordan; which Jordan, as I haue sayd before, runneth through the Lake of Sodome, and alike through the Sea Tiberias, which is Genesaret, passeth a Bridge and falleth into another little Sea or rather great Poole called Cadis. Then progressed we through another excellent scituation where had beene some famous Citie, like to be Gilgall or Nazaret. For the Patriarch * of Ierusalem told me, that comming from Damascus ward, we must

* Of this Patriarch I had to his power most louing and kinde entertainment: out of his Librarie I had a very old new Testament Manuscript Greeke, for which I gaue him fixe Chequins in Gold, and I gaue it to my Brother Doctor Saunderson, old and torne as it was, yet they the Translators of Pauls Epistles at his house in Saint Laurence Parish, did make some vse thereof in their Translation. D. Barlo, Bishop. D. Hutchinson, D. Spencer, D. Felton, D. Tighe, Master Rabbes, Master Fenton, &c.

needs goe through Nazareth. So that I say, either this was Nazareth, or that formerly spoken of; but my Jewes, neither Turkes, could directly aduise me which it was.

So by diuers Townes wee came againe to Safet, which is Bethel, before spoken of, this was the thirteenth of Iuly, heere the Jewes stayed to keepe a solemne Sabbath, were visited of all the Priests in generall, who are cloathed in an outward habit of White, but made of Goates hayre, as are our Grogerains, and some of them in white Grogeraine. With great modestie and holy shew they came one by one to salute, imbracing and conferring some small time, and so departing. These my companions stranger Jewes, bought many Bookes, some two or three Mules loadings, which were holy Bookes of the declaration of their Law. To Christians they will not sell of some of them for any money, I imagine they thinke it a sinne so to doe. Here they gaue almes, much money, and likewise sod meate, great Caldrons full for the Poore, to euery one a peece at a time, with a loafe of Bread and Portage, with also at other times money; this they did three times in the sixe dayes wee there remayned. I thinke they spent, I say the chiefest Jew called Abraham Coen, hee I say, gaue away heere at least two thousand Dollers, and one thousand at Ierusalem, others in his company according to their abilitie reasonable summes. This all to the poorer sort with their owne hands; but to the greater Doctors and Schooles, they allow yeerely stipend, most or all Jewes of abilitie wheresoeuer they remayne, although they goe not to the Holy Land, yet such as haue beene there and safely returned, giue great voluntary Almes. For once in their life time, the Jewes say, they are bound by the Law of Moses to goe thither, if they can or bee able, and the Bones of many dead Jewes are carryed to the Holy Land and there buried. Wee were fraughted with Wools from Constantinople to Sidon, in which Sackes as most certainly was told to mee, were many Jewes bones put into little Chests, but vnknowne to any of the ship. The Jewes our Merchants told mee of them at my returne from Ierusalem to Saphet; but earnestly intreated mee not to tell it, for feare of preuenting them another time.

The nineteenth, wee came to Conetra, the twentieth to Safa, and the one and twentieth wee arriued at Damasco; entring in at the Gate called Toma, which leadeth to Iobar. From Damascus the eleuenth of August, going out at the Gate called Amara. Without the sayd Gate are two great Mountaynes, one of them wee mounted, it is called Dobonet, where on the top there is vnder a Cube not leaded, a great huge Foote of stone set vp, in signe (as the Turkes say) that Mahomet was there, and viewed the Valley wherein the Citie of Damascus is built, calling it Paradise, most assuredly thence to see the same all along the lly plaine Valley, being rarely mixed with many Trees, most glistering siluer sided shaking leaues, eye cannot behold a more pleasanter sight, the Citie being long and close as it were to the side of the right hand Mountayne. As wee came towards the same from Sidon, seemed at our view so mingled amongst the branches all alongst the Valley, that out of doubt branched Damaske tooke the name thereof, if not pattered by it. The other Mountayne is called Dora, so wee came to Seraglio a Village.

The one and twentieth, we passed the Mountaynes now called Hagbhet and Romani, in Scripture called Halacke, where a farre off wee saw the end of Hermion. Close vnder the side of this Mountayne Halacke, open to the very midst of the Playne which is betweene it and the Mountayne Libanon, is a very great and most ancient Citie, called now Balbarka, in which at this day standeth a row of very great Pillers, set vp as is said in Salomons time. This Citie in Scripture is called Baalgad, old, ruined and vninhabited it is, as I remember. An old Piller also there is in the middest of the Plaine built of squared Stones, yet doubtlesse of much later time then the other Pillers that wee beheld from the Citie. This surely is the Valley of Gad. The flat Playne from hill to hill, may bee in bredth some ten, eleuen or twelue miles; the length double: it seemes the pleasantest leuell (as it were a Sea of Land) that I haue euer seene, it farre passeth the Playne of Antioch.

The thirteenth, wee came to a Village called Ainat, at the foote (or rather some fise miles ascended) of Mount Libanus, which said Mountaines the tediousst and I thinke the highest trauelled in the world: being the hottest time of the yeere wee passed the very highest top, the foureteenth day of August, 1601. yet some Snow was there remayning, and so extreame cold that my hands were benumd and seemed white all ouer, like vnto a kinde of Frost, but being descended three or foure miles, were againe reuiued as formerly.

At after-noone, wee came to a Village some seuen or eight miles from Tripoli, called Aigdel, there wee reposed halfe an houre, and so passed some old Townes, among the which is Acon, a very strong Fort and Castle full of great Ordnance, heere the Emier of Tripoli hath his abode. And then wee had sight of one plot of ground in those Mountaines, wherein are growing diuers Cedar Trees: these are of indifferent bignesse but not very huge, the bodie streight, and branches spreading of very excellent shew, the broadest row of them lowest, and so rowes of branches going vp narrower & narrower, vntill at the top they do seeme in a manner sharpe, the fruit growing vp right, vpon the very branches (very finely) the leaues in forme of Rosemary, but rather slenderer and sharper, yet doe they grow in pretie little bunches pert vp right together with the Fruit, but the fruit beareth vp aboue the leaues, with a very small wrie stalke, as it were set into the side of the branch. That same night very late wee came to Tripoli safely, the Lord bee euer praised.

a Jewes bones carryed to the Holy Land.

b Wee traueling betweene Safa and Conetra, I was told by some, that about this very place it was where Saint Paul was stricken off of his Horse, but I could not tell how to belieue them, yet sure I am, that wee did twice passe ouer that very way.

Pleasantnesse of Damascus. Branched Damaske.

* Sea of Land, the Hills a farre off, rising aboue this Playne to our appearance as if we should descrie land, we sayling as it were vpon the Sea, the Valley is so very plain and spacious, most pleasant to behold.

* There is a more common way and lower road-way, but that makes more miles before we come to Tripoli.

c Being at Tripoli, in Anno 1586, I went diuers times vpon pleasure vpon those Libanus Mountayns and gathered of those Cedar branches before I fell sicke.

Memorandum, that, I noted that in all my Pilgrimage, the grauer and better sort of Iewes, in whose companie I trauelled, would neuer reason with mee of Christ, for offending or being displeasing vnto me, for without scoffing they neuer talke of him or his followers. Yet one day I had from the mouthes of the meaner sort (aged men who professed knowledge in their Jewish Religion) an Argument wherein is consideration, and in my opinion a kinde of acknowledgement and confession.

- They said that there was a Stone in the Lords House at Ierusalem, in the middest of the world, called Eucnasediya, vpon which there was written the Name of God, and that whosoever could get in thither, and returne with it written, might haue what he required and doe what he would.
- 10 Which they said, I E S V S, Ioseph the Carpenters Sonne by extraordinary meanes got vnto, and wrote it, and cutting his owne thigh, so hid it, and escaped out of the Temple and sayd, Tea adoni anni. But was presently answered, Mamzer bemitadah. Which interpreted as the Iewes told mee, is, saith CHRIST, Let the people serue mee. The Oracle answered, After death not in life. Then say they, at first hee began to flie, and make of Earth Birds, with many more such like workes, as these Iewes to mee confessed, in an opprobrious and very scornfull manner; adding further, that they marvelled how wee Christians could bee so led, by one Peter, and Paul, Iohn, Marie, &c. Further adding, that it was not possible for the best Learned amongst all Christians, to expound the meaning of the Letter A. and that their Doctors could, onely vpon that first letter write whole Volumes, to be studied in vntill the end of the world. And they knew they said,
- 20 that Ierusalem should bee built againe, and their Messias come to make them Princes, as they haue beene in times past: but then to Gouverne all the world, and that the other dispersed Tribes who at this day they say, doe liue in Ethiopia but cannot come out thence, by reason of a Sea of Sand, which parts Egypt and Ethiopia, the said Sea flowing and is continually troubled, except euery seuenth day, (which is their Sabbath) so that they cannot passe it, vntill the time appointed by Adonai (God Almightye.) Many other opinions they haue, as that God sends their soules if they haue not at first forgiuenesse, twice more into other new Bodies in the world, to amend and become better, and then either receiue them according to their deserts; and that in what part soeuer of the world they dye and are buryed, their Bodies must all rise to Iudgement in the Holy Land, out of the Valley of Iehosaphat, which causeth that the greater and richer sort of them, haue their Bones conuayed to some part thereof by their kindred or friends.
- 30 By which meanes, they are freed of a labour to scrape thither through the ground, which with their nayles they (say they) hold they must, who are not there buried nor conuayed thither by others. Other talke I had from them, offering as little taste of truth, as this last reasonlesse likelihood, So I them left to become wiser and better, if Goodnesse will, who in all bee euer glorified; and wee Christians, by our Lord and Sauour Iesus Christ sanctified and saued, our sinnes being drowned in his Blood, by the spirit of true Beliefe in his powerfull Predestination; Glory, glory, glory, for euer and euer and euer. Amen.

- 40 Thus haue I giuen thee the Voyages of Master Iohn Sanderson. Touching the difficulties of entrance into Ierusalem, I thought good to adde this which followeth; the rather that my Countrey-men may be aduised, before they aduenture this Ierosolymitan Pilgrimage; Superstition on the one side and Tyrannie on the other endangering the best Pilgrimage, which is the peaceable way of a good Conscience to that Ierusalem which is aboue. For if a man doth not gine content to the Friers, which a good Conscience cannot doe (except some of their Patrons and Benefactors letters, or other extraordinary provision helpe) you see these superstitious Friers to prone malicious lyers, as here they slandered Master Sanderson to bee a Iew, and Master Timberlie to bee a Spie; that I mention not foure other Englishmen not long before, seene to enter their Monasterie but neuer seene to come forth, as the Patriarch of Ierusalem confidently affirmed to Master Sanderson. Hence it is that Master Timberlie affirmeth, that none enter the Citie but protected by them, which others hauing otherwise entred by extraordinary course disanow, and yet may that speech (vnderstood of ordinarie entrance) bee true. For Master Timberlies
- 50 passage wee will adde it to the end: for Master Sanderson, thus hee writeth.

- Now Master Purchas, take a memorandum of mee, that my first dayes entertaynment into Ierusalem was somewhat crosse, in that I crossed two Friers which came to bid mee welcome. I said that I had not to vse of their kindnesse, because I was recommended to the Greeke Patriarch, so in some colour they left mee, but a Turke presently after came in the Name of the Bassa, and tooke my Sword from my side, which had cost me thirtie Dollers in Damasco, alleadging that no Christian ought to enter the Citie Gates, with his Sword girt about him, but that I might haue borne it in my hand. And yet their Custome is, to priuledge the Iewes in that case. Thus I lost my Sword and after was ledde to the Caia of the Bassa, who related to mee the errour I had committed, and further demanded of me a Present for his Master, and another for himselfe: then I shewed him the Great Turkes Letter, which imported a command to vse mee respectiuey wheresoever I came in his Dominions: he read the Letter with great regard, and said that he had not, neither would he offer me any abuse, nor any in Hierusalem should doe me wrong, and that he would passe ouer my errour, concerning the presumption to enter the Citie Gate with my
- 60

Sword by my side, if in courtesie I would bestow a Vesture of Veluet vpon the Bassa his Master, and a Garment of Satten vpon himselfe : which I denied to doe, hee then presently committed me to the Subbassie againe and grisly Turke, and his rascally terrible Attendants to bee laid in Prison : but the Iewes in whose company I had trauelled fell downe at his feet, and entreated for me, often kissing his hand & Garment, praying him to pardon my bold behaviour and words of displeasure with much whispering ; they agreed for mee that I should giue him twelue Chickquines in Gold ; wherewith, together also the losse of my Sword, I escaped at that time. But two dayes after the Friers set vpon mee againe, and feed the Turkes lustily and largely, thinking to doe me some displeasure, but effected not their purpose, for I still defied them and their Padre Guardian, which in a manner broke their very galls, only they did put mee to some trouble and charge. And I in their despight kept company with the Patriarke of the Greekes and his Colo- ros, (I meane Priests and Friers) and I went not at all to the Romish Clergie, nor visited their Padre Guardian (though the poore Greeke Patriarke did very much, and often intreate mee to it) at which they were so exceedingly distempered, that that my scorne of them was written of to Tripoly, they certifying an old Frier thereof, all past on my part in Hierusa- lem, which Tripoly Frier at my coming ducked very kindly, and came to our House to bid mee welcome from the Holy Land: yet he with a Fowling-peece shot made at me two sundry times, out of an Italians House where he kept, I being trayned abroad by a Iew, a Broker an old acquaint-tance of mine, whose name was Daniell Gallana, but as God would haue it, missed both the times : the first time I suspected nothing, although the Bullet fell within my length, and flapt against a Tree about the Root; the Iew taking occasion to goe somewhat before me ; we hearing the report, I told him how neere the bullet fell : hee said that it was Signior Francisco, shooting at some Bird from the Tarras, or out of the Window, and I then imagined no other. Some few dayes after walking abroad againe the second time, about the very same place, another bullet whirld very neere before me, when on a sudden the Iew lingered behind me; then I mistrusted, and walked no more that way, nor at all againe with that Iew, And prayled God in my heart for that escape, as for many other former Deliuerances, from Murthering, Poysoning, Shipwrack, &c. with intolerable agrieuances and terrible temptations, in the course of my Pilgrimage.

I Haue in my hands three originall Certificates or Letters of commendations written in behalfe of the said Master John Sanderson, two in Moderne Greeke, the third in Talmudicall Ebrew.
 The first, from the Patriarke of Constantinople, to the Patriarke of Ierusalem, commending him to his care; the second, a Testimoniall of the Patriarke of Ierusalem, to this sence.

Sophronius by the mercy of God, Patriarke of the holy Citie Ierusalem. Master John Sanderson, Englishman, hath come to the holy Citie of Ierusalem, hath there done his Deuotion, hath visited the Sepulchre, Bethlehem, and Gethsemani, Mount Oliuet, the Ascention, Bethania, the Sepulchre of Lazarus, Iordan, Hebron, and the rest of the holy places where Iesus Christ walked: and this present Writing is made to testifie the truth. Amen. Dated the Yeere of the World 7111. The eleuenth of Iuly. Sophronius by the mercie of God Patriarke of Ierusalem.

This was written, sayth our Author, by the Patriarke his owne hand. Hee was a graue man with a grey beard, had eight or ten Attendants : at the first meeting in his Monasterie, offered his hand to kisse after their fashon ; Master Sanderson vsing his owne, kissing his hand, and touching therewith the Patriarkes, wherewith he seemed well pleased. The occasion of his Iewish societie he thus deliuereth.

When it was determined, that Master Best the Captaine and Master of the Mermaid, at our arriuall at Sidon, with three other and my selfe should haue gone for Ioppa, and so to Ierusalem, but the Master, by danger of Rockes, and rising of Winde, thought not good to leaue the ship, and the other three passingers would not; so that I was faine (holding my determination) to post alone without fellow Christian, in company of Honourable Iewes ; in which journey by the Principall, named Abraham Coen, who went to accompany his Wifes Father to Saphet, which is at Bethel; and there to end his dayes, after two thousand Dollors at least distributed in charity to those Colledges of Iewes; We went to Ierusalem, and in our returne wee tooke Tiberias and Capernaum in our way, which was somewhat out of the way, direct to Damascus. But this my companion Iew Merchant, and a dweller in Sio and Smirna, was so respectiue kind and courteous, that neuer in any Christians company of what degree soeuer I euer did receiue better content : for morall carriage towards all, vnderstanding and honestie; this Iew was without company, I kept his company three moneths together by reason that from Sidon wee went to Da- mascus, to disburthen him and some of his, of at least ten thousand Chequins, which he left there to be employed in commodities till our returne thither againe : So ouer Libanus to Tripoly wee went, and there the Gentile Iew with his Damasco commodities and Attendants, departed by Sea to Sio, not without moist eyes betweene Iew and Christian, when wee parted company. A most deuout, zealous, and soft hearted man he was; I cannot speake too much good of him in regard of his great humanitie and extraordinary charitie, his measure being more in those performances, then is to be found in many of vs Christians.

The Iewish Testimonie written in Hebrew, and subscribed by diuers Iewes, I haue here added.

These

THese are to declare the Iourney of the Worshipfull Master Iohn Sanderson English Gentleman, who came hither unto Ierusalem the holy Citie (may it shortly bee built) with the Caravan and company of honourable Iewes, upon Tuesday the tenth of the Moone Tamas, Anno 5361. of the Creation of the World; and went with them unto many holy places, and hath brought with him also Letters of fauour from the Patriarke of Constantinople, for the Patriarke of this place; and he hath sent together with him of his men; and they haue shewed him all the places of their Denotion, and they brought him to Bethelhem. And to declare the truth I haue written, and under-written this with my owne hand, for to giue knowledge thereof unto all the people of his Citie, & the Gentlemen of his places; and all the places which he went to, he hath kept a true note of under his owne hand. I that write this in Ierusalem the holy Citie (may it be shortly built) The seuenteenth of the nominated Moone and Yeere. I Gedelia

10 Cordoero (he was the Hacham * or Priest) Abraham Coen, the sonne of Isack Coen, an Inhabitant in Sio (this * was Rabbi Abraham, the chiefe Iew of the company) Salomon Marabi, an Inhabitant of Tirria. Iacob the Sonne of David, a dweller in Smirna, Abram Aluo, a dweller in Constantinople; this ancient Iew was their Cooke all the iourney. Mose Rasimo, a dweller in Damasco, who of deuotion went with vs to the Holy Land, and in whose House in Damasco, wee did remayne and lodge both at our going and comming, and thence we went to Tripoly ouer the highest top of Libanus, where was some Snow remaying, though it were in the heate of Summer, namely, the fourteenth day of August, 1601. from the bottome to the top, they accounted it to be at the least eight miles up: and about ten miles downe to the Towne of Tripoly. Salomon di Vrbino, a dweller in Constantinople. Isack, he was the sonne of the aboue named Iacob, he was of yeeres one or two and twentie, and yet his Father had much feare of him; in tranelling those Sodomiticall places, because as he said, the Boy was beardlessse. The old Iew Father in Law to Rabbi Abraham, we left to die at Bethel; which they do call Saphet Casa di Dios. At our first entrance thither, the Iewish women cried from the tops of their Houses; Sei ben venito à la casa di Dios Rabbi Abraham.

I haue this Certificate in Rabbinicall Hebrew, with the Iewish Subscriptions, and the Italian translation thereof.

* Subscriptions. * This and the following descriptions of their persons, is added by M. Sanderson.

MEletus, by the mercie of God, Pope and Patriarke of Alexandria: Most Illustrious Ambassador of the Renowned Queene of England, my beloued sonne, these dayes are so peruerse by the iniquitie of our times, that if our Lord present not, there is no hope at all of any good. The Archbishop of Efasus, hath attempted to get also the Archbishopricke of Smirna, from the Bishop that holds it, hee being absent, to me it appears vnjust, neither is it iust, and it is also prohibited by the Vniuersall Councils, that one be consecrated in two Chaires, though hee should be worthy; not such a one as he is. The matter is also to be considered of, in presence of the other both Actor and accused; it appears that these Musselmen Turkes doe the contrary, they came to mee that I should under write a matter that is not indged of; a thing also which they cannot indge of: I denied once, twice, and diuers times; euen now a gallant fellow came to me with the same writing, and said that your Lordships Neighbour Signior Mahomet Aga, by one of his Capogies, sent also a command that I should under-write. I haue abstayned purposing to come this Euening for to haue likewise the opinion of your most Illustrious Lordship; for I am resolu'd to depart hence, rather then to haue to doe with men void of all conscience. Let your Lordships write vnto me, and if you find the distaste of this miserable time of ours; bewaile you also that wee haue beene borne in such an Age, worse then the World of Iron stormie.

Having mentioned two Easterne Patriarkes Letters, I thought fit to adde this also, though of another subject.

40 Our Lord blesse you and saue you, this fixe and twentieth of May, 1593. From the Cell of the Patriarke of Alexandria.

This holy Patriarke Padre Melete, was a very comely blacke long bearded man. He neuer did eate any sort of flesh in all his life time. He often frequented, and was very inward with our Ambassadour Master Edward Barton; I haue heard him reason often, and seens him pray one time, in the Ambassadors chamber together with vs: he spake in Greeke, which Master Barton did little vnderstand; my selfe nothing at all except Theos, &c. When he hath eaten with the Ambassador, our Table was euer furnished with the best fish, and not the weakest Wine; yet euer he had a young Priest for his Taster of all the Wine he dranke; and all the while that the cup was at the Patriarkes mouth, the fixe other Coloyros that waited on him at Meales, did euer pray in a soft kind of voice. This man was very meeke in the shew of his behaniour towards all sorts and manner of men, which amongst his Greekes made him to be much respected and beloned. Yet did he aspire and got by Master Bartons meanes and his money, to be Patriarke of Constantinople, which soone he was weary of. The Turkes Ministers did so much and extraordinarily exact vpon him, so that before his death hee resigned it; and went from Constantinople, and did de cease at his old Patriarkado Alexandria, and there iyet buried. Of all these Moderne Greekes, I haue not heard of a better man; most certainly he was a true Christian Professor, although the times permitted not that he might declare it, except in priuate, to some of Learning and vnderstanding. Master Edward Barton the Ambassador, as Master Henry Lillo did tell mee, who did see it, said, that few dayes before his de cease, the Patriarke and he did weepe vpon one anothers neckes, he kissed the dying man, who had seriously recommended a Kinsman, and other his Seruants vnto him, pretending (that of the monies which by his promises he was behind with him) his desire was that he would be good vnto his said Seruants, and so they parted.

Aged 45: M. Sandersons report of P. Melete.

I haue

I haue here added also a Letter from Master Biddulphe, or Biddle; dated, Aleppo, October the two and twentieth, Anno Dom. 1601. I could also haue added other notes with M. Sanderfons Charts and Delineations of the Citie and Temple of Hierusalem; but I dare not be too tedious, for which caule I also omit diuers Letters written in those parts to and from him.

IN right heartie manner I commend mee vnto you (good friend Master Sanderfon) with heartie thanks for all your former kindnesse towards mee, and lately towards my poore Brother who hath written to me of your kindnesse towards him. I pray you impute it not vnto mee for vngratefulnesse, or forgetfulnesse that I haue not saluted you with my Letters all this time. The last newes I heard of you was, that you were gone from Tripoly to Cyprus, and from thence to Zante, otherwise you had heard from me sooner, and so much the rather because we haue both commenced Hogies in Hierusalem, which Degree no Uniuersitie in the World can giue besides. But if your Hogiship hath beene as chargeable to you, as mine hath beene to mee, you will take as little delight to remember it as I doe, for mine cost mee two hundred and seuentie Dollers. And at my returne to Aleppo, I heard of the losse of the Rebecca, wherein I had a bale of Nutmegs, besides a Carpet, and other Tokens which I sent to my friends.

I haue beene sundry times sorrie that euer I came out of England, or that I had not gone with you to Constantinople. For I haue had here no profit besides my bare wages, and scarce that. But great discontentment sundry wayes, especially of late by that () Wherefore as you haue beene my friend euer since our first acquaintance undeseruedly, so I pray you continue. And I, although I bee no other wayes able to pleasure you, yet I will not be unmindfull of you in my Prayers, that God would grant you continuall health, long life and much happinesse in this life, and euermore felicitie in the life to come.

Yours in the Lord wholly to command,

WILLIAM BIDDLE.

I pray commend me to Master Timberley, John Brochurst, William Pate, &c.

After so often mention of Master Timberley, I haue here giuen you some Extracts of his Iournall, (the whole the Reader may see printed) Before the Impression I writ out of a Manuscript many yeeres agoe the whole Iournall, of which thus much I haue here presented in memorie of him and Master Burrell.

CHAP. XVII.

A Report of the Voyage of Master HENRIE TIMBERLEY * from Cairo in Egypt, to Ierusalem in fiftie dayes 1601.

* Or Timberlake.

M. Burrell.

Departed from Grand Cairo, the ninth of March 1600. which day I came to the place where the Virgin Mary staid with our Saviour when shee fledde into Egypt. From thence with my fellow Traueller Master Burrell in our Pilgrimes Weed, came that night to a Towne named Canko, where wee lodged that night in a yard vpon the bare ground, wanting no Fleas nor Lice. The next day we came into the Land of Goshen, and here wee found a company of Turkes Jewes, and Christians, about seuen hundred and fiftie, which were all bound ouer the Deserts of Arabia for Damasco. Among which were some two and twentie Greekes and Armenians, bound for Hierusalem, of which company I was right glad. Here at this Towne wee staid two dayes and one night, called in their Language Philbits, at which Towne I went into the Houses where I saw the secret of hatching Chickens by heate artificiall in greater abundance then I had before seene at Cairo.

The thirteenth of March, we departed from Philbits, and travelled all night in company of the Carauan of Damasco. And the fourteenth, at nine of the clocke we pitched our Tents at Baire, in the Land of Goshen. From thence that night, and pitched at () on the East of Goshen, on the edge of the Deserts. Here we staid two dayes for feare of the wild Arabians, departed the seuenteenth; and that night passed ouer a great Bridge, vnder the which the salt water standeth. This water commeth out of the Sea from the parts of Damiata, and was cut out of that place by mens hand some one hundred and fiftie miles into the Land by Ptolomeus King of Egypt, intending to bring the Mediterranean and Red Seas together: but foreseeing hereby the drowning of all the Countrey, hee left and built this Bridge which is the parting of Egypt and Arabia. We were no sooner past this place, but we were set vpon by the Arabians. Notwithstanding we were about 1000, wee had a Camell laden with Callicoes taken away, and foure men men sore hurt, and one of the foure mortally. Thus they ranne away with their prey, and wee could not remedie it because it was in the night. So the eighteenth in the morning we pitched at a Well of brackish waters. In this vprore in the night past my fellow Master Burrell escaped ver-ry hardly. Here wee repofed our selues till three of the clocke in the afternoone called Lazera. For the Arabians and Egyptians diuide the day but into foure parts. And then we departed, and the next morning pitched at a Castle, in the Deserts called Cattay. This is one of the three Castles which the Turkes keepe in the Deserts to defend the Trauellers from the Arabians, and therefore here we pay a certayne taxe, that is to say, sixtie pieces of siluer, and two pence the piece for the head of man or boy, and seuentie fixe for a laden Camell, and fourteene for a Mule.

 10 Hence we departed and pitched at another brackish Well, thence at another. The twentieth of March at the second Castle called Arriis, here our taxe was twentie pieces of siluer by the head, a Camell thirtie. From hence with many Souldiers to conduct vs to the third Castle; and so making a long Journey of foure and twentie houres, we arriued at a Castle called Raphael, here we payd tenne pieces of Siluer, and a beast twentie. In the one and twentieth we pitched our Tents at Gaza in Palestina, a goodly fruitfull Countrey, beeing now cleere of the Deserts. Here did I see the place, as they say, where Samson pulled downe the two Pillars. Here we paid two and twentie for the beast, and tenne for the head. The two and twentieth we pitched at a place called of the Arabians, Canny, of the Christians Bersheba. Here we paid two for the head, and foure for the beast. The three and twentieth we pitched vpon a Greene vnder the wals of Ramoth Gilead. Hence the next morning, I with the other Christians departed toward Hierusalem, the 20 Carauan to Damasco, yet we pitcht short that night at a place in Arabia, called Cude chelaneb, being fifteene miles from Hebron, from Hierusalem siue little miles. Hence wee departed in the morning being our Lady day, and at nine of the clocke I saw Hierusalem, kneeling said the Lords Prayer, singing we went to the West Gate, and then stayed. For it is not lawfull for any Christian to enter not admitted. Then Master Burrell requested mee to say that I was a Greeke, only to auoid going to Masse; but I not hauing the Greeke Tongue, refused absolutely so to doe; affirming to him, euen at the Gates, that I would neither deny my Countrey nor Religion, so that when they asked what we were, Master Burrell answered in the Greeke Tongue that hee was a Greeke, and I an Englishman, so hee was admitted to the Greeke Patriarch, and I was taken and 30 cast into Prison, after that I had stayed an houre at the Gate, for the Turkes did all denie that they had heard either of my Queene or Countrey, or that shee paid them any tribute. Then the Pater Guardian, who is their defender of all the Christians Pilgrimes, and the principall actor of my imprisonment, because I would not offer my selfe vnder his protection, but said I would rather bee protected vnder the Turke then vnder him, made the Turke so much my foe, that they supposed I was a spie, and so would not let mee out of the dungeon. Now for my deliuerance you shall vnderstand, that being at Ramoth Gilead I went to a Fountaine to wash my foule linnen, in which time one came and called me by my name, and tooke my linnen from mee to helpe me. Whereat I maruelling: What Captaine, quoth hee, in the Frank tongue, I hope you haue not forgotten me. It is not yet fortie dayes since you landed mee at Alexandria among the 40 passengers, which you brought from Argier in your Ship called the Troian. Here is also another that you brought. I asked if he dwelt there, hee answered no, but that hee and his fellow were going in the Carauan to Damasko, which they call Sham: and from thence to Bagdet, which wee call Babylon, and so to Mecha to make a Hadge, for so they are called when they haue beene at Mecha. He dwelt in Fez in Barbary. After better view I somewhat remembered him to haue beene of those three hundred and sixtie I brought to those parts. This brought me to the other, which both agreed that the other should goe in the Carauan, and this with me to Ierusalem.

This Moore accompanying me, when he saw that I was in prison, wept, and bid me be of good comfort, and away he went to the Bassa of the Citie, and to the Saniack, and tooke his oath that I was a Mariner in a Ship that had brought two hundred and fiftie, or three hundred Moores into Egypt, from Arger and Tunis which came to go for Mecha. The Moore, because he was a Musselman so preuailed, that hee came that night to the prison with fixe Turkes, and called mee to the 50 doore, and there told me, that if I would go to the house of the Pater Guardian, and rest in his protection, I should onely hold a Waxe candle, to which I consented, and so paying the charges of the prison departed, and went to the Pater Guardians Monastery. He bad mee very welcome, and said, hee maruelled that I should so much erre from Christianitie, as to put my selfe rather vnder the Turkes protection, then vnder his. I told him I did it because I would not goe to Masse; here hath beene, saith hee, many English, but Catholikes, and told the Turke at the gate they were French-men or Britons; for the Turke vnderstandeth not the word English-men. About twilight came Master Burrell, although hee professed himselfe a Greeke, for all Christians must here haue the Popish protection. We being thus together in the Court of the Monastery, there came to vs some 60 ten or twelue fat Friers, with each a Waxe candle burning, and two to spare for mee and M. Burrell. Then another Frier brought a bason of hot water, with Roses and other flowers therein, and so there was a carpet spread, and chayres set with cushions in them. Then the Pater Guardian set vs downe, and gaue each of vs a candle in our hands. Then came a Frier and pulled off our hose and set set the water on the carpet, and when hee began to wash our feet, twelue Friers began to sing, and so continued till our feet were washed: then they altogether brought vs singing to a Chappell in the said Monastery: where one preached how meritorious a thing it was to come into the Holy Land. Hence they brought vs into a chamber to supper, which we for feare of poyson doubted to eat. Thence to bed.

His obseruations here are omitted, hauing before so largely out of others giuen you the sight of these holies.

The sixe and twentieth, we rose early, and hauing saluted the Pater Guardian, hee appointed vs seuen Friers and a Trudgeman, and forth wee went to see the holy places within the Citie, except the Sepulchre, and at euery place where wee came we kneeled downe and said the Lords Prayer, &c.

To conclude, it was prophesied that Ierusalem should bee an heape of stones: so is it come to passe that I could see no ground neere to the Citie by fiftene or sixteene miles, the Plaine of Iericho excepted, but it is all a heape of stones, in such abundance as may bee wondred at how the Inhabitants can liue: for prooffe, we being within fve miles of the Citie lodged in the field. I sent my Moore to a place not farre hence to buy some bread, who returned with this answer, That he and his did neuer eat bread in all their liues. A man may goe twentie miles before hee finde a place to feed a horse or a cow. But the countries about Palestina, Galilee, and Syria are all goodly plentifull countries, and Ierusalem it selfe is the most barren that I saw in all my trauels, the desert excepted. I cannot compare any place in England to it, except the barrenest place in Cornwal, where is nothing but rocks & stones, and daily by the report of the Inhabitants, the stones grow more and more: that Ierusalem, and fiftene miles round about is but a heape of stones, and I am of opinion that it is quite forsaken of God; for the more sort of Turkes there inhabiting vse all filthinesse, that the Christians are forced to marry their children very young, yea euen at tenne yeeres of age; boyes they keepe openly, and shew them at their doores which hath the fairest. Thus hauing my Patent sealed with the great seale of the Guardian, and a Letter Patent that did shew I had washt in the water of Iordan the thirty one of March I departed from Ierusalem in my *Moore*s company, the same night I came to Ram. April 1. to Askalon, so to Gaza, where I hired two wilde Arabians, with two Dromedaries to carry me to Cayro; wee rode two vpon a beast: by the breaking away of one of our Dromedaries at our lighting, being left alone we were seized by foure other Arabians, who would haue made prey of vs, had not the other their fellow theeuers returned. I had nothing to lose but my clothes, but promised to pay them twentie foure pieces of gold. The fourth, at night we came to these theeuers Tents, where we had Camels milke. The next night to Salbia, where being ouershaken I hyred horse. The Dromedarie is like a Camel, but that his head is lesse, his legs longer, and a very small necke, the difference being as betweene a Grey-hound and a Mastiffe. In this foure dayes trauell I neuer saw them eat nor drinke, from which they say they will abstaine ten dayes, but not so long from meat. Yet I thinke a good horse will runne faster but not continue with this beast. Their pace harder then a trot. I paid them, gaue my Moore sixe pieces of gold, and sent him to Mecha with the Carauan; so I came to Bolack, to Roshetta, thence with a Ianizarie to the walls of Alexandria, in the eleuenth of April, 1601. I came aboard my Ship, hauing ended my Pilgrimage in fiftie dayes.

Dromedaries.

Ight Worshipfull, my heartie commendations premised, &c. My last I sent you was of the thirtieth day of May last past from Aleppo, and the next day after came from thence. And the nineteenth day of the last moneth arrived at Feloge, the which is one dayes iourney from hence; notwithstanding some of our company came not thither vntill the last day of the last month, which was for want of camels to carry our goods, & since the goods came hither, as yet haue found but small sales; but towards Winter I hope it will be better, notwithstanding if I had mony to put away with the Carsie, we might haue very good Spices, for with mony there is here great good to be done, and without mony there is no great profit made. Tomorrow I meane to goe, with Gods helpe, from hence to Ballara, and so to Ormus, but my going to Ormus is more of necessitie, then for any good will I haue to the place: for I want a man to goe with me that hath the Indian tongue, the which is the onely cause of my going thither for to take one there: I was minded to haue gone from Ballara by Sea, to a place called Abowsher, and from thence by Land into the Indies; but the want of one to speake for mee forceth me to leaue that way. In Aleppo I hired two Nastraynes, and one of them

Two Nastraynes deceitfull.

them hath the Indian tongue, and hath bene twice there, but hee and the other are so lewdly giuen, that it is not for mee to trust to either of them: one of them I leane here with Raphe Aleyn and William Skinner, and the other at Balsara with Iohn Elured and William Shales, and forced so to doe for that here is no other to be had; although I am in great doubt they will be a thousand Crownes hinderance to the Voyage, for that in diuers matters of small valew they haue manifestly deceined vs, but wee put no more trust in them saving to speake for vs. I was enforced to take them in Aleppo but two or three dayes before my comming from thence, or to haue had none at all. Here followeth the prices of Spices, as they are worth here at this present; Cloues and Maces the Batman, five duckets Synnagon, sixeduckets and none to be had, Nutmegs fortie fine Madynes, Ginger the Batman, one ducket Pepper seuentie fine Madaynes, and Silke which is much better then that which commeth out of Persia, Duckets eleuen and a halfe the Batman. And so God preserue you. In Babylon this fiftenth day of Iuly, 1583.

Your Worships at command,

IOHN NEWBERY.

Right Worshipfull, my heartie commendations premised, &c. My last I sent you was from Bagdet of the sixteenth day of the last moneth, and the two & twentieth day of the same came from thence but by reason that our Barke was great and the water very low, halfe a dayes iourney from thence came a ground, and in a long time could not get her off againe. Whereupon doubting that further below in the Riuer we might be put to more trouble, I returned to the City, and hired a smaller Boat, and the twentie seven day embarked our goods in the same Boat, and the sixth day of this present arrived here: since which time I haue hired a Barke to goe to Ormus, and within a day or two I mind with Gods helpe to depart from hence. About the beginning of this moneth arrived here foure Venetians from Ormus, whereof three are for the account of Michaell Stroopenny, and the other for himselfe. Their Conducts are twentie Bales of Turbith Cloues, and Synnagon and Long-pepper, and Muske, Pearles, and Feathers, which Feathers come from a Citie called Syndye, about one hundred and sixtie leagues from Ormus, and are very much esteemed in Italy. The Bashaw here hath taken away of their Feathers 84000. the which they say are worth a thousand duckets, and he would haue giuen them for the same 501. duckets. So they say that they will certifie of it to Constantinople, and hope to haue some remedie from thence. And if it were not sometimes for this kind of dealings by the Bashaw towards the Frankes, here were in these Countries verie much good to be done: for the exchange from Ormus to Aleppo is sixtie per cento, and commonly they make their voyage in fine or sixe moneths, and if it were but onely for the profit of the exchange it shall bee good to haue one remaining here, and one at Ormus, and another at Bagdett. And to auoid all troubles that may happen either here or at Bagdett, you shall doe well to procure a commandement from the Grand Signior, both to the Bashaw of Bagdett, and the Bashaw of this place, that and if any of our folkes should die in this Countrie (the which God forbid) that the Bashaw, neither any other Officer shall meddle with the goods, but that it may be kept in a Magasine within some Cane or Crauancera, untill such time as the owners shall send for it, except there bee more in company to take charge of the same: for here hath chanced Venetians to dye; and although bee were one that had nothing, and hee bee in company with those that haue great store of goods, the Bashaw will take the goods, and say that the goods did belong unto him that is dead, and by this meanes they shall be in great trouble, and leese halfe their goods, if they can escape so. And if any of our company should die here, as God defend, the rest should bee in great trouble about it; as also that it may be in your commandement, that it shall not be lawfull for the Bashaw, or any other for to take away from vs any of our goods, except hee will pay for the same to our content, for many times there are fine things brought out of the Indies, and the Bashawes man sitteth alwayes in the Custome-house, especially at the comming of the Frankes, and if there bee any thing that liketh him hee taketh it, and payeth for that which is worth a hundred pound, ten pound, and so the Bashaw hath dealt with many. But if you send this commandement, that it may bee registred both heere and at Bagdett, it will for euer hereafter preuent those troubles that now wee are in danger of, and this is a thing very needfull to be sent with those that shall next come hither. There is as yet no Spaniards come into the Indies, and by report of one that is here, who came from Ormus, there was a Spaniard sent out of Spaine to Goa to haue had some authoritie there, and the Vice Roy caused him to bee put to death, and will suffer none for to come thither. As yet they alter not the keeping of their Christmasse, as the Spaniards and others haue done, but continue in keeping of their old reckoning of the Feasts and Moneths, neither will they alter untill commandement come from the Pope to the contrary. And so I commit your Worship to God. From Balsara this fiftenth day of August, 1583.

Yours euer to command,

IOHN NEWBERY.

A Letter

At this time Portugall was not settled, &c.

A Letter of Master John Eldred, to G. S. Written in Bagdet the fourteenth day of Iuly, 1583.

These Letters I had of Master Sanderson and were found amongst Master William Harborne (Ambassadour from her Maiestie to the Grand Signior) his papers endorsed with the said Ambassadour his owne hand. Master Eldred yet liueth, a graue, rich and principall Citizen. Some of these heere mentioned I haue known and discourted with of these parts.

Right Warshipfull, my humble and heartie Commendations remembred, wishing your health, and desiring to heare of your prosperitie, the which God increase and long continue, &c. My last to you was in Aleppo the nine and twentieth of May, wherein I certified our arrivall in the Tigre, and the determining of this Voyage, how there was appointed to take at Aleppo for the summe of two thousand pounds sterling, in Carsies, Cloathes, Tinne, and other Commodities, and with the same Master Newberie, Raph Fitch, Raph Allen, William Skinner, William Shales, and my selfe, to goe with the same goods to this place, there to leaue two, and part of the goods. At Balsara, there leaue two and part of the goods, and Master Newberie and Raph Fitch, to take for three or foure hundred pounds sterling at Balsara of these goods, and to goe for the Indies.

Since which time, it may please you to vnderstand wee all in company haue come to this place, and beere arrived the nine and twentieth day of the last, hauing past the hands of many bribing Dogges, wee arrived heere all in safetie thanks bee to God, and whereas wee had thought to haue sold in this place, great store of our Commodities, wee cannot sell, nor haue not sold this sixteene dayes for thirtie Duckets, nor no likelihood of sales there untill the Winter, this Towne is so full of Carsies and Tinne, most bought at Aleppo of William Baret, which were the Tinne and Cloath that came in the Emanuel. Tinne is heere as good cheape as it is in Aleppo, and Cloath also, God send it to mend, or otherwise this Voyage of ours will make no profit; but in hope wee rest the same will mend.

Wee haue at this present imbaled and laden aboard a Barke for Balsara, one hundred and twentie peeces of Carsies halfe, some Tinne, three Scarlets, eight & twentie Rotellos of this place, of Tinne and Amber, with diuers small Haberdash wares, which is for the summe of seven hundred sixtie foure pounds sterling, and heere wee leaue the rest, which is about one thousand pounds, and with the same in this place we leaue William Skinner, and Raph Allen, and all the rest of vs goe forward, and at Balsara, William Shales and my selfe, doe determine to stay to make sales and imployment as the Market will giue vs leaue: and Master Newberie, and Raph Fitch, with the Jeweller and Painter, are determined to proceed for the Indies, and out of this wee carrie to Balsara, hee will take out his foure hundred pounds in Commodities for the Indies. Thus the Lord blesse our doings, and send us a merrie meeting in our Countrey Norfolke; and that I may bee your Seruant, &c.

In Balsara the sixth of Nouember. 1583.

Right Honourable, our humble duties considered, &c. Our last unto your Lordship was from Babylon of the nineteenth of Iuly, wherein wee signified our safe arrivall there, and euill sales which wee found, that in twentie dayes staying there, we sold not for thirtie Duckets. Insomuch as by direction of Master Newberie, wee tooke of our Commodities for seven hundred pounds sterling, and came to this place Balsara, out of which, Master Newberie tooke for the value of foure hundred pounds, and departed for Ormus, where hee arrived the fourth of September, and the ninth of the same, was committed to Prison with all his Company, accused for Spies from Don Antonie, and that his Painter was to draw the plats of Castles and Fortresses, in the behalfe of Don Antonie. Whereupon the Captayne of Ormus hath determined to send them with the remayner of their goods which is vnspend, Prisoners to Goa, there to bee at the will and pleasure of the Vizrea, what shall become of them God knoweth. Hee hath written to our worshipfull Masters, to procure the King of Spaine his Letters to the Vizrea of Goa for his deliuerie, which Letters wee haue sent by mosse expresse to Aleppo. This his false accusation was by meanes of Venetians Letters written from Aleppo, and directed to Michaell Stropennie in Ormus, who as Master Newberie writeth, hath beene the onely cause of his trouble. Concerning our estate, wee haue not sold neither can sell of all our Commodities for two hundred Duckets. Our Carsies heere are not worne, neither come there any Merchants to make imployments heere, being this place onely as a thoroughfare for Merchants which come from Ormus to discharge their goods and pay Custome, and so to passe for Babylon. Before wee came hitber, Master Newberie told vs, wee should finde to make Bazar for any kinde of Spices, which wee haue found cleane contrarie, for neither are there Merchants resident heere, or Commodities to bee found to make Bazar for two hundred Duckets, they which come from Ormus mindeth neuer to make Bazar here, but departeth presently after his Custome payd, for Babylon. Wee haue offered to giue our Commodities at price very reasonable, with as much money to haue taken up the same by Exchange for Aleppo, but no man would deale with vs. Whereupon wee imbarcked our goods to haue gone for Persia, but before our Ships departure there arrived heere two Venetians with diuers sorts of Spices, who had taken up ten thousand Duckets by exchange to bee payed heere in Balsara, this money their credits will not serue to take up for Babylon. Insomuch as being in some distresse for money, they offered to barter with vs halfe money halfe commoditie, whereupon wee haue disembarked our goods, and hope within these few dayes to make Bazar with them. Thus humbly taking our leaues, we cease to trouble your Lordship any further.

Your Lordships most readie at Commandment, John Eldred. William Shales.

In Balsara the two and twentieth of January 1583.

Right Honourable, our duties humbly considered unto your Lordship, &c. Our last was of the tenth of Nouember sent by the Cadie of this place, wherein wee signified vnto your Lordship the alteration of our mindes for going into Persia, and how wee were returned with our goods backe againe to this place. Wee also wrote you the hope which wee had to make Bazar with a French-man, which was at that time newly come from Ormus, the which is now come to passe and finished, although with some trouble. Wee deliuered all our goods, which amounted vnto 2000 Duckets, and gaue him more in money two thousand eight hundred and thirtie Duckets, which wee tooke vp by exchange for Bagdet at fiftene per Cento, and to pay more two per fiftie per Moneth, during the time of our staying heere. which God knoweth how long it will bee, the way betweene this place and Bagdet is full of Theeues, and no Merchants dare venture to depart till the wayes be cleare. There haue gone no Barkes from hence this foure moneths and more. We haue imbaled all our goods for Camels being of them as followeth, foure somes of large Cynamon, foureteen somes and an halfe of middle Cynamon, three somes and an halfe of Nutmegs, one some & an halfe of Ginger, one some and a third part of Cloues, foure somes & a halfe Fusses of Cloues, 197 Turbands fine, and one Chest of gilded Pusillanes; all these goods haue beene in readinesse this moneth wishing euery day our departure, which God grant may be shortly, for here wee spend, and our money eateth, and that which is worse, wee feare wee shall loose our passage from Bagdet to Aleppo, except wee depart very shortly. We receiued no Letters from Master Newberie since the first newes of his trouble: but we beare by others that hee and his Companie are sent Prisoners to Goa, and the remayner of his goods is left in the hands of the Kings Factor. Thus not hauing others to trouble your Lordship with at this present, wee rest, humbly taking our leaue, and commending you and all your Lordships affaires, to Gods mightie protection.

Your Lordships most readie at commandment till death,

JOHN ELDRED.

WILLIAM SHALES.

30 Master Hakluit hath deliuered Master Fitches Indian Peregrination, with notes also of Master Eldred and Master Barret, to whom I referre the more desirous Reader. Linschoten also hath mentioned the troubles at Goa (whereof he was eye-witnesse) of Master Fitch and Master Newberie. I haue added hereto three Commands from the Great Turke, in behalfe of the English.

To the Cadilesquire of Egypt.

40 K Now that the Ambassadour for the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, resident in our most famous Port, by Supplication certified, how that our Vice-roy Ebrahim Bassa, then Beglerbie of Egypt, did giue the Custome of Cassia to a certaine Iew called Abraham Ripollo, with expresse and straight commandement, that whosoeuer brought Cassia to Cairo, should sell it to him and none other, and what Merchant soeuer would buy Cassia, should buy it of him and of no other. Wherupon certaine of the English Merchants, buying of the foresayd Iew three and thirtie Kintals, to the value of foure hundred and fiftie duckets of Gold, and hauing before iustice payd to the said Iew the whole summe, and receiued Hogetta from the Cady, the Beglerbie that now is Synan Bassa, casting the said Iew in Prison, and seazing on all his goods in the behalfe of the Grand Signior, did also take from the English Merchants all the Cassia they had bought of the Iew, and for which they had fully payed, nor restoring to them one Asper, and thereby did them great harme and iniurie. Wherfore wee charge thee, that this our Commandment comming to thee, thou doe examine this matter according to Iustice; that if the English Merchants haue bought of the sayd Iew so much Cassia, and haue payed to the sayd Iew the full price, and haue receiued thereupon Hogetta from the Cady, and if the Beglerbie haue taken the sayd Cassia into his hands, that then you cause the sayd Cassia to be restored to the English Merchants, suffering nothing to bee done against Law and Iustice.

To the Beglerbie of Cairo.

60 K Now that the Ambassadour for the Queenes most excellent Maiestie of England, by Supplication certified in our most famous Court, that for default of their Consull in Egypt, the French Consull that there is Vento, alledging that they are vnder his Banner, doth violently vsurpe authoritie oner them; and that heretofore hauing sent our Commandment to the contrarie, yet hee hath not abstained, nor ceased from molesting and troubling the English Nation. Wherfore know, that to the Queene of England our Priniledge is granted, by which priniledge it is by no meanes permitted, that the French should should bee Consull ouer them, or intermeddle with them. Wherefore wee Command, that against our Priuiledge, the French Consull doe them no iniurie, nor vsurpe the Consulship ouer them. Wee haue sent our Letters to the Cadilesker of Egypt, according to which, and contrarie to our Priuiledge, wee command him also, that the French beare not the Consulship ouer the English Nation.

To the Cadilesquire of Egypt.

K Now that the Ambassadour for the Queenes most excellent Maiestie of England, by Supplication certified vs, that for default of their Consull in Egypt, the French Consull there resident called Vento, alledging that they bee vnder his banner, doth trouble and molest the English men, contrarie to our priuiledge: our commandement was formerly given that hee should abstaine from molesting the English Nation, but hee did not onely not leaue off, but did more arrogantly persist to trouble and iniurie them. And therefore the Ambassadour required our commandement, that according to their Priuiledge, the French Consull might not intermeddle with their Nation, nor beare the office of Consull ouer them. Know thou therefore that our Priuiledge is granted to the Queene of England, and wee command thee, that the French Consull resident in Egypt, doe not hereafter beare the office of Consull ouer them. Wee command thee againe, that our commandement comming to thee, according to our Priuiledge giuen the Queene of England, and this our commandement, thou neuer permit the French, to exercise the office of Consull ouer the English Nation, nor suffer them by the French to bee molested and troubled. 20

To the Reader.

From the tenth Chapter to the end of this Booke, all is of later Intelligence, and added by way of an Appendix.

O Vr Countrey-men, in loue with the wealth of India, haue brought vs (I know not how) backe thorow Turkie to Bagdet and Balsara; neither can wee now retorne without some renew of India: especially of the parts and Ports there before least visited; and wherof later Intelligence hath come to our hands. Such are the Maldiuies Ilands, of which hitherto wee haue taken small notice in our multi-forme Peregrinations. Loe heere therefore wee present you them in a French-English Chart (that I may so speake) both for the translation from the French, and because our Author was Piloted by an Englishman, whose name I finde not; who seeking to escape with some others of his wracked Companie, was done to death by the Maldiuans. This our Author learning the Language, with long and deare experience learned this which heere hee freely teacheth, and many many more Obseruations of these and other places in India; out of which I haue gathered what I deemed fittest for our purpose. 30

CHAP. XIX.

The Voyage of FRANCOIS PYRARD de Laual, to the East Indies (an English-man being Pilot) and especially his Obseruations of the Maldiuies, where being Ship-wracked hee liued five yeares. Translated out of French, and abbreuiated. 40

An Dom. 1601.

Company of Merchants of Saint Malo, Laual and Vire, in the yere 1601. set forth two ships to the Indies; one was of the burthen of foure hundred tunne called the Croissant, the other of two hundred, called the Corbin, sent vnder the command of the Lord of Bardeliere Burgesse of Saint Malo, & Francis Grou, Lord of Clos-neuf, Constable of Saint Malo, his Lieutenant or Vice-admirall, Captayne of the Corbin. Wee set sayle from Saint Malo with a North-east winde to begin our 50

Flying Fishes.

The Ternades.

Superstition.

Voyage the eighteenth of May, 1601. Being not aboue nine or ten leagues out in the Sea, our Miffen mast broke and split in the middle: this was the beginning of our misfortunes. The third of Iune, we coasted the Iles of the Canaries. The twelfth and thirteenth of the same month, wee came to the Ilands of Cape Verd. The nine and twentieth of Iune, wee found our selues in the height of 5. degrees, and saw the North-starre very low: and at the same time, wee perceiued the South-starre. In the same place and height, we saw great quantities of flying Fishes, with wings like to Bats.

The foure and twentieth of August, wee passed the Equinoctiall line, where are very violent heates, and vnconstant weather, in an instant a maruellous calme, and halfe an houre after very fearefull Thundrings and Lightnings, and impetuous windes. Often they see come as farre off great whirle-winds, which the Marriners call Dragons: If this passeth ouer their ship it bruiseth them and ouerwhelmeth them in the waues. When the Marriners see one come they take new Swords and beate one against the other in a crosse vpon the Prow, or toward the Coast

Coast from whence this storme comes, and hold that this hinders it from comming ouer their ship, and turneth it aside.

The nine and twentieth of August, our Pilot who was an English-man, from the tops saw land ten leagues off: this was the Ile of Anabon, whither we came the day following, and were there a while courteously entertayned by the Portugals Lords of the Ilands, but after had treacherously fūe of our men surpris'd by them, and one slaine. The sixteenth of October, we went out of the road of this Ile, and on the seuenteenth of Nouember, came to the Iland of Saint Helena. The nine and twentieth of the same moneth, wee doubled the Abroilles.

Iles of Comorro

The seuen and twentieth of December, wee passed the Cape of Good Hope. The nineteenth of Februarie, 1602. wee cast anchor in the Bay of Saint Augustine, in the Ile of Saint Laurence, where we abode to refresh our selues, vntill the fifteenth of May. The three and twentieth of the same moneth, wee came to the Iles of Comorro, where all that had the Scorbuto or other diseases recouered their health, as well because of the good ayre, as of good water and fruits.

The one and twentieth of Iune, wee passed the Equinoctiall toward the North Pole. The second of Iuly in the night, wee were miserably ship-wrackt vpon the Bankes of the Maldines, where we lay till the day following, when we imbarcked our selues in our Gallion: hauing taken our Swords, Harquebushes, and halfe Pikes, to goe to Land: after great labour wee attayned one of the Iles called Pouladon, but the Inhabitants would not let vs land, before they had disarmed vs.

Pouladon.

They ledde vs all together into a House in the midst of the Ile, where they gaue vs Fruits, Cocos, and Limons. Then the Gouvernour of the Ile came to vs called Ibrahim, who seemed very aged, he could speake some words of Portuguese, by the meanes whereof he asked vs many things: after his people rifled vs, and tooke away all that wee brought, saying that it did belong vnto the King. Hauing bene in this Lodging the space of a day, they tooke the Master of our Ship with two Marriners, and conuayed them to the King fortie leagues distant in the Iland of Male. The King sent his Brother in law with many Souldiers to our ship-wrackt Vessell, to get what they could.

Male chiefe of the Maldines.

The Kings Brother in law when hee went away, ledde me and two others into the Iland of Paindoie, where at our first comming the Inhabitants gaue vs a little food, but when they saw that our companions had money (this money was about fūe hundred Crownes, which we tooke while wee were in the ship, and the first night we came on Land wee buryed in the ground, which they after digged vp wanting necessaries, but wee that were in the Ile of Paindoie had none of it) they tryed by extremitie of famine to make vs to giue them some also, for they beleued we had some. By reason of this euill resolution of the Ilanders to giue vs nothing without money, wee were brought into great miserie. All that wee could doe, was to gather Periwinkles on the Sea shoare to eate, and sometimes to meet with a dead Fish. This extremitie endured a long time, till that the Inhabitants seeing wee had no money, began to haue a little more commiseration on vs; we offered our seruice to them, to doe what they would imploy vs about.

Paindoie.

Miserable famine.

I went often with them to the neighbouring Ilands to get Cocos, and sometimes on Fishing, and in recompence of my labour they gaue me part of the Fish or Cocos. While wee liued thus, I endeaoured my selfe to learne the Language, which my companions despised. The Commander of the Ile seeing mee so studious of their Language, began to esteeme and fauour me. Then there came one called Affant Ocaonnas Calogue, a Grand Signior, to fetch the rest of the Lead of our ship and some Iron Ordnance, and to make search for the Money which the inhabitants of the Ilands had of our men. The Signior of the Ile of Paindone and the Catibe, with those that affectioned me, presented me to this Signior that came from the King, and commended me to him: this commendation was the cause that the Signior began to fauour me: and also because hee saw I could expresse my selfe in their Language, and daily studied to learne it, hee tooke me with him to carrie me to the King.

He learns the Language.

When wee arriued at Male, hee went presently to the King to render him an account of the Voyage, and among other things failed not to speake of mee to him. In the euening I went into a Court, whither the King was come to see that which was brought from our Ship. I saluted him in the Language, and after the fashion of the Countrey, which pleased him, and gaue him occasion to enquire much concerning those things which were brought from the Ship: hee commanded the Signior that brought me, to lodge and entertaine me. The day following, I was busied with relating to the King, the manners and fashions of our people of Europe and of France. Hee made me see the Queenes, who imployed me diuers dayes in giuing answers to that which they asked me; being curious to vnderstand the Habits, Manners, Marriages, and fashion of our French Dames.

He is presented to the King,

I was about foure or fūe moneths in good health, and wanted nothing but the exercise of my Religion and my libertie, hauing all things else to my content. After this, I fell sicke of a hot burning Feauer. There passed not a day but the King and Queenes sent to know how I did, and euery houre sent mee delicious viands to eate, and thus I continued a great while. But afterward the King sent me to the Ile of Bandos (a little Ile in sight of Male) which hath a better ayre then Male, where an experienced man by the Kings appointment recovered mee. Afterward the King gaue me a lodging neere him, and euery day rise out of his owne house, and necessarie prouisions for my sustenance, hee gaue me also a seruant and money, and other presents, so that I became somewhat wealthy after the mann^r of the Countrey. While I thus continued heere (despairing euer to returne into France) I was diligent to enquire of the people, their manners and customes, which heere I haue written and particularised.

A kind of Cur-rall.

The Islands of the Maldiuēs, begin in eight degrees of the Equinoctial line, on the North-side and end in foure degrees on the South-side. They are of an extraordinarie length, about two hundred leagues, but not about thirtie or fve & thirtie leagues in Latitude. They are distant from the firme land, that is to say, from Cape Comorin, from Coman and Cochin, one hundred and fiftie leagues. The Portugals reckon that there are foure thousand and fve hundred leagues by Sea, to goe thither from Spaine.

They are diuided into thirteene Prouinces, which they call Atollons, which is a naturall partition according to the scituation of the places. Forasmuch as euery Atollon is seperated from others, and contaynes in it selfe a great multitude of small Iles; It is admirable to behold, how that each of these Atollons are inuironed round with a huge ledge of Rockes. The Atollons are all after a sort circular or ouall, hauing each of them thirtie leagues, some a little more, some a little lesse, and lye all one at the end of the other: from the North to Susans, they almost touch one another: there are betweene two channels of the Sea, the one large the other exceeding narrow. Being in the midst of an Atollon, you shall see about you a great ledge of Rockes which impale and defend the Iles, against the impetuousnesse of the Sea. But it is a very fearefull thing euen to the most couragious to approach to this ledge, and see the waues come afarre off and breake furiously on euery side. For I assure you, as a thing which I haue seene a thousand times, that the surge or billow is greater then a House, and as white as Cotton: so that you shall view round about you as it were a very white Wall, especially when the Sea is loftie.

Now within each of these Cantons, is almost an infinit number of Islands, both smal and great. The Inhabitants told me, that there are about twelue thousand. But I coniecture that there appeare not so many, and that they say twelue thousand, to note an incredible number, and which they cannot count. It is true that there are an innumerable multitude of small ones, which are as it were Hillockes of sand, all vnpeopled. And moreover, the King of the Maldiuēs puts this number in his Titles, for hee is called Sultan Ibrahim dosos assa raltera Atolon; that is to say, Ibrahim Sultan, King of thirteene Prouinces and twelue thousand Iles.

Which notwithstanding, the currents and daily flowing of the Sea diminish that number, as the Inhabitants informed me, who said also that a proportion of the number of the people are consumed, and that there are not so many as were accustomed to be anciently. Also they reported that within one of the Atollons, all the little Iles and Sea which part them, was one continued ground, and that it was in former times but one only Ile, cut and diuided after into many. And surely they which nauigate neere the Maldiuēs, discern all within white, by reason of the sand which is of this colour, vpon all the Flats and Rocks. The Sea thereabouts is very quiet and of a meane depth, insomuch that the deepest entrance is not twentie fathomes; and yet heere are very few entrances: for a man may almost see the bottome euery where.

All the shallowes are stone, Rocke and sand, so that when the tide is out, it reacheth not to ones waste, and for the most part to the mid-legge; so that it were very easie to goe without a Boate throughout all the Iles of the same Atollon, if it were not for two causes. The one great fishes called Paimones, which deuoure men and breake their legges and armes, when they encounter them; the other is that the depths of the Sea are generally very keene and sharpe Rockes which hurt them wonderfully that goe into it. And moreover, they meete with many branches of a certaine thing which I know not whether to terme Tree or Rocke, it is not much vnlike white Corall, which is also branched and piercing, but altogether polished; on the contrary, this is rugged, all hollow and pierced with little holes and passages, yet abides hard and ponderous as a stone. They call it in their Language Aquiry, they keepe it to make their Honey and Sugar of Cocos, hauing bruised them with little stones, and putting them to boyle with the water of Cocos, this is that which fashions their Honey and their Sugar. It greatly hinders those which wash themselves in the Sea, it was very difficult to me to goe so from Ile to Ile without a Boate, but they which are accustomed goe often.

Amongst

Amongst these Ilands there are very many, and as I beleene the greatest number, which are wholly vnhabited, and which haue neither Trees nor Herbs; others which haue no greene thing, and are but a moueable sand: yet there are some which are for the most part ouerflowne at spring tides, and are discouered when the Sea is out, the residue are all couered with great Crabs (which they call Caconne) and Cray-fishes.

Many of the Ilands are not inhabited.

There are great store of Fowles called Pinguy, which heere lay and hatch, and here is such a prodigious multitude of them, that a man knowes not (I haue often made triall) where to set his foot without touching their Egges, or young ones, or the old Birds, which flye not farre when they see men. The Ilanders eat them not, and yet they are very good meate, and as bigge as 10 Pidgeons, their Feathers white and blacke. These Iles which I haue said to bee vnhabited, appeare as farre off white, as if they were couered with Snow, by reason of the great whitenesse of the Sand which is fine and subtile, as that of an Houre-glasse, and so hot and burning, that the Egges of those Birds are hatched with great facilitie.

Prodigious numbers of the Pinguy Fowles.

Heat of sands.

They haue great scarcitie of fresh water, some Ilands are well woodded and inhabited which haue not any: except some few, whither the Inhabitants are constrayned to go and seeke it from the confining Iles; also they haue inuentions to receiue raine water: and although they haue water in the Iles, they are not like one another, being better in one respect then another. All their Pit-water is neither very sweet nor wholsome. They make their Pits in this manner, digging 20 (that which is very strange) not aboue foure feet from the Sea-shore, in places also which are often ouer-flowne. I haue obserued that their waters are very cold in the day, principally at noone, and in the night very hot.

Want of water

Pits how made

Hot at night and cold at noone.

But to returne to the thirteene Atollons, here are their names beginning at the North Point, which is in the head, which the Portugals call for that cause Cabexadel las ilhas, and in the Maldines Tongue, Tilla dou matis, in the same signification, that is to say, the high Point, which is vnder eight degrees of the Line on the North-side, in the same height that Cochin is. Now the first Atollon is called Tilla dou matis. The second Milla done madone. The third, Padypolo. The fourth, Malos madou. The fift, Ariatollon. The sixt, Male Atollon, which is the principall where is the Iland of Malé, chiefe ouer the others. The seuenth, Poulisdou. The eighth, Molucque. The 30 ninth, Nillandous. The tenth, Collo madous. The eleuenth, Adon matis. The twelfth, Sonadon. The thirteenth, Addon and Poua Molucque, which are distinguished into two little ones, and separated, as the others, but are very small, and therefore are accounted as one. Notwithstanding, Addon, as the better giues name to the other.

Names of the Atollons.

Euery Atollon is separated from his Neighbour by a channell of the Sea, which passeth betweene them. But although they cannot passe with great ships without perishing, yet there are foure which are farre larger then the others, and may easily passe for great ships, notwithstanding, it is very dangerous, and perillous to goe there, and especially in the night: for it is certaine to bee shipwrackt (as we were) because they cease not to encounter certaine Shoalds and Rockes, which they ought to shunne. I haue seene amongst the Maldines many Sea-cards, 40 where these were exquisitely deciphered. These people also are maruellous cunning to auoide them, and to saile through passages very dangerous without perishing. I haue seene them often passe in the middle of the Bankes, Sands, and Rockes, through little channels so narrow, that they had roome only for their Ba ke, and sometimes so euently that they grated the Rockes on both sides; and neuerthelesse they went securely in the midst of those perils, and with a high saile. Once being with some of the Ilanders in a little Boate, which was not aboue foure fathome long, the Sea was higher then the two Pikes length, and so outragious and turbulent as could not be more. I thought euery moment that the billow would haue carried mee out of the Boat; where I had great labor to hold my selfe, and they were not a whit perplexed, nor did feare any thing. For they feare not the Sea, and are very skilfull to conduct Barkes and Boats, being 50 made and accustomed to this from their youth, as well the Gentlemen as poore people, and it should be a disgrace to them to be ignorant in it. For this cause it is impossible to summe vp the number of Barkes and Boates which are throughout all the Iles, for as much as the poorest will haue one, the rich many. They neuer saile by night, but take Land euery euening, they saile not neither without sight of Land without a Compasse, except when they goe out of their Iles, and goe some long Voyage. They carrie therefore little prouision, but buy daily whatsoeuer they need in diuers Ilands.

Foure principall channels.

The Natives dexteritie in sayling.

Numberlesse numbers of Larkes.

No sayling by night.

The greatest part also of the Iles which are within the circuite of one Atollon, are surrounded with a shoald, and there are but one or two open places which are very strait and difficult to heede: wherefore it is necessary that they vnderstand well the manner actiuelly to guide their 60 Barkes, otherwise if they be defectiue the least thing in the World, their Barke will bee ouerthrowne, and their Merchandize perish. As for the men they can swimme well within those parts of the Sea preserues them daily, and to speake truly, they are as it were halfe fishes, they are so vsed to the Sea, whither they goe daily either swimming, or roading or sailing. I haue seene them many times within the ledge of Rockes where the Sea is calme, runne swimming

Shoalds:

Good Swimmers.

- after the fishes, which they haue suddenly perceiued bathing themselves, and haue taken them in their course. And this is visuall. And yet they faile not often to lose their Barkes, notwithstanding all their dexteritie.
- Strange Sea-currents. The greatestt discommoditie is the current Pynarou, which runn aswell to the East as the West, in the channels of the Iles, and in diuers in-draughts of the Sea, six moneths on one Coast, and six months on another; yet not certainly, but sometimes more, sometimes lesse. This is that which deceiues them, and ordinarily casts them away. The winds are alwel fixed as the currents, from the East quarter or the West, but they vary sometimes, and are not so ruled, fetching their Compasse toward the North or the South, and the current goes perpetuall his accustomed course, till the season alter. It is a very remarkable thing, that whereas the Atollons are continued one at the end of the other, and separated by channels of the Sea which goe thorow them, they haue open places and entrances opposite one to the other two on one side, and two on the other, by which meanes men may goe and come from Atollon to Atollon, and alway communicate together. Wherein may be obserued an effect of the prouidence of God, which hath left nothing vnperfect. For if there were but two open places in euery Atollon, that is, one on one side, and another on the other; it were not possible to passe from Atollon to Atollon, nor from entrance to entrance, because of the boysterousnesse of the currents; which runne fixe moneths to the East, and fixe to the West, and permit not to crosse ouer, but force them downe. And when the two entrances are not aduerse, but one on the East Coast, the other on the West, men may easily enter, but not returne, except the fixe monethes are ended, and the current changed. Now as these entries are disposed, men may notwithstanding the currents goe from one Atollon to another, in euery season, and Traffique, and Merchandize freely together, as they doe; for as much as euery Atollon is open with foure entrances which are in opposition to their two Neighbours.
- The Monsons.
- Inlets opposite.
- Forme of the Entrances and their danger. The entrances of these Atollons are vnlike, some competently broad, others very narrow, the largest is not more then two hundred paces or thereabouts; some are but thirtie, nay lesse. On both the sides of each of these passages are two Iles, on each side one; you would say that it were to guard the comming in, which surely were easie to doe, if they would, with Ordnance hinder the ships to enter, because the largest hath not aboue two hundred paces. Now concerning the channels (which they call Candon) which diuide the Atollons, foure are Nauigable, where the great ships may goe to passe through the Maldines, many strangers ships of all sorts passe often there, but not without perill, for there are a great number yeerely cast away. It is not that they affect this passage (for all on the contrary shunne it; as much as may be) but they are situated in such sort in the middest of the Sea, and so long, that it is not easie to escape them, principally the currents carrie the ships thither against their wils, when the calmes or contrary winds take them, and that they cannot helpe themselves with their sailes, to make way against the currents. The first beginnes on the North-side, and is that where wee were shipwrackt at the entry of the shelve of the Atollon of Malos madou. The second approacheth very neere Malé, called Caridon, in the middest whereof is the greatest of all the Iles, so hemmed in with Rocks as I haue said. The third, is by Malé, stretching toward the South, and is called Addou. The fourth, is called Sonadou, which is directly vnder the Equinoctiall Line: this is greatest of all, hauing more then twentie leagues in widenesse.
- The first.
- The second, third, and fourth.
- No Compasse but in long Voyages. The Ilanders going by the Iles and Atollons, helpe not themselves with a Compasse, except in farre Voyages, but when they passe through the great channell they vse it. All the other channels betweene the Atollons are very strait, and full of Rockes and Shoalds, they cannot goe but in small Barkes, and yet it is requisite to haue great knowledge of the places to faile without danger. I found it strange sayling with the Ilanders in the channell, which separates Malé and Polisdon, and which beares the name of Polisdon, and is seuen leagues broad or thereabouts, that the Sea appeares there blacke as Inke, notwithstanding beeing taken vp in a Pot, it differs not from other water; I saw it daily boyle in bigge blacke billowes, as if it had beene water on the fire. In this entrance the Sea runnes not as in other places, which is feareful to behold: I thought I was in the nethermost depths perceiuing not that the water mooued on one side or the other. I know not the reason, but I know well that the Natiues are greatly afraid of it: they very often encounter such tortures.
- Sea blacke as Inke; the water not.
- Heat. Seeing these Iles are so neere the Equinoctiall on both sides, it may bee judged what is the qualitie of the Aire, which is very intemperate, and the heate excessiue. Notwithstanding the day and night are alwayes equall, the nights are very coole, and bring abundance of dew. This coolenesse is a cause that the Countrey may bee more commodiously inhabited, and that the Herbs and Trees are fruitfull, notwithstanding the heate of the Sunne. The Winter beginnes in the moneth of Aprill, and continues fixe monethes and the Summer in the moneth of October, which endures sixe other moneths. The Winter is without Frost, but alwayes rainie. The Winds are violent from the West Coast; on the contrary the East is extreame hot, and neuer causeth Raine.
- Dewes.
- Winter.
- Winds.
- Whence peopled. They affirme, that the Maldines haue beene heretofore peopled by the Cingala, (so they call the Inhabitants of the Iland of Ceylan.) But I finde that the Maldines resemble not at all the Cingala, Cingala, which are blacke, and very euill featured, and these are well shaped and proportioned, and little differ from vs, except their colour, which is Oliue. But it is out of doubt, that the place and the length of time haue made them more gracefull then those which first inhabited the Iles. Adde also that there are seated a great number of strangers of all parts, which inhabit there, (besides the Indians) who from time to time haue been shipwrackt as we were. Wherefore the people which inhabit Male, and round about to the North point are found more orderly, honest and ciuill: and they which are on the South-side toward the low point, are more rude in their Language and Fashions, and not so well featured; and blacker, and also many women of the poorer sort are naked without any shame, hauing only a little cloth to cover their Priuities:

Ciuitie of the North parts. South barbarous.

10 And for as much as the North-coast is daily more haunted and frequented with strangers who ordinarily marrie there: Also that it is the passage of all the ships, which enrich the Countrey, and ciuillize it more and more, which is the cause that persons of ranke and qualitie seate themselves there more willingly, and not toward the South, whither the King sends in Exile those which he will punish with banishment. And yet the people which inhabit the South parts, are not inferiour in capacitie or Religion to the others, if it be not more for other things, but all their Gentry inhabit on the North Coast, where also they take their Souldiers.

20 The people is very Religious, greatly addicted to Manufactures of all kindes of Workes, wherein they excell, also in Letters and Sciences after their manner, principally in Astrologie, whereof they make great esteeme. They are a wise and circumspect Nation, very fraudulent in their Merchandizing, and their liuing in the World. They are valiant and hardie, and well seene in Armes, and liue in great order and policie. The women are faire, but that they are of an Oliue colour: and some are found as white as they be in Europe, yet they haue all blacke haire: but they esteeme that beautie, and many make it to come so, wherefore they keep their Daughters heads shauen, till the age of eight or nine yeeres, not leauing them till then any haire but a little on their fore-heads, to distinguish them from Boyes, who haue none at all, yet this comes not lower then their Eye-browes, and after that the children are borne, they shauie them from eight dayes to eight dayes, which makes their haire very blacke, that would not be so else, for I haue seene little children with halfe flaxen haire.

Religion.

Women.

Haire-ceremonies.

30 The beautie and ornament of the women is to haue their haire very long, thicke, and blacke, which they accommodate and wash often, and purifie with water and Lye made of purpose: hauing well washed and clensed their heads and haire, they abide in the wind all disheuelled, but within the compasse of their house, vntill it bee thoroughly dry; after they rub and oyle their haire with odoriferous Oyle, which causeth that their heads are alwayes moist and Oily. For they neuer wet their bodies men nor women, but after they oyle them, two or three times in the weeke for their haire, but for their bodie, oftener then there are dayes. As for their haire they are not obliged to wash it, but when they haue accompanied together, and they are bound particularly euery Friday, which is their Sabbath, and in all their great Feasts; the men on their Fridayes, the women on their seuerall Feasts only, but sleepe after it when they shall thinke good and according to their necessitie. The women also perfume their heads for a little reason which they haue, and so washed, oyled, and perfumed they attire themselves, which is to bring all their haire from before backward, and draw it out as much as may be, that one haire may not moue nor wauer this way nor that way: after they tye them behind, or they make a great tuft bound on, for which greatnesse, they haue a counterfeite Locke of mans haire, but as long as the womens, in fashion of a Horse taile; and to hold it, they garnish it at the great end after the manner of a (^l) and all the rest of their haire is put in order: after the (^m) of Gold or Siluer is couered with Pearles and Jewels according to their abilities: and some weare two of these false haire, because it serueth to tye their haire behind, and make the tuft greater. They put also odoriferous flowers of the Countrey, which is not thereof defectiue.

Bathing and Oyling.

m De.

40 It is not permitted the men, but onely the Souldiers and Officers of the King, and Gentlemen to weare their haire long, who doe so for the most part, and as long as the womens, yea take as much paines as they to wash, clense, and oyle and sweeten it with flowers: and there is no other difference, but that the men bind their haire on one of their sides, or right vp, or vpon the head, and not behinde as the women: also they neuer weare any false Periwigs: they are not compelled to weare their haire so, but short or long, as they thinke good. I haue seene the King and the Princes, and greatest part of the Grandes and Souldiers, who weare their haire short, and they which weare them long, for the most part, when they are weary, or when they grow no more, cut them off to giue or sell to women, for they haue no counterfeite haire, but mens, because they neuer shauie the womens haire liuing or dead: the most part of these false haire come from the Continent, as from Cochin, Calicut and all the coast of Malabar, where all the men weare their haire

Increase of haire.

60 long, which after they cut and sell for women, as wel of the Countrey as Aliants. Their haire increaseth there a great deale faster then here, because, as I coniecture, they so often wash and oyle them, also by reason of the extraordinary heate, which causeth their haire to be thicker and harder, but neuer curled as with vs. Commonly also the men are hairy ouer all the bodie, yea so thicke as more cannot be imagined; hereof they boast, as if it were the strength of nature; which yet

Haire on their bodies.

yet they finde not alwayes true, and if a man bee not so hairy, they say, that hee rather resembles a woman then a man, and despise him for it: but the women are not so hairy, and haue no haire but in ordinary places.

All Barbers and none.

There is no common Barbers, but euery one hath skill to shauē, as well men as women, and vse no razor for it, nor any combe; but they haue sizers of cast copper, and looking-glasses also of copper, which they vse instead of razors of Steele, but not made as ours. They shauē themselves after our fashion: for the King and Peeres, there are men which account themselves honoured to serue in this office, not for gaine, but for affection, being men of fashion; the King sends them presents at the yeeres end. Also throughout all the Ilands there is neither man nor woman, rich nor poore, great nor little, which after the age of fiftene yeeres hath not all their furniture and instruments to order their head: and they are very curious to take them off when it neuer so little grieues or troubles them.

Boyes and girdles.

The maidens weare no coats till the age of eight or nine yeeres, but onely a cloth which reacheth from the girdle to the knee, which they weare from the time they begin to goe: but the boyes weare nothing till they are seuen yeeres olde and are circumcised: they say that it is not necessary that their daughters should weare any other robe the time aforesaid, for that then their breasts begin to beare out & increase, and it is needfull to couer them, as a thing which they hold as great a shame to show, as here their priuities; and then they let their haire increase without any more cutting, but adorne and trim it, being then in the time to finde some to marry with; for before that they hold them as children, and permit not men nor boyes to speake of loue to them, for that they are not acknowledged nor arrayed as maidens. Now the men being very old and couered with haire, as I haue said, and not clothing their bodies from the girdle vpwards, they shauē not the haire on the breast and stomacke, but in such a fashion as they cut the haire in one place, and leaue it in another, to the end that it may appeare and bee like the fashion of a cased doublet.

Shame to let the breasts be seene.

Beards of two sorts.

The men weare their beards in two fashions: one which is permitted to the Pandiares, Naibes, and Catibes, and other Ecclesiasticall persons, and those which haue gone on pilgrimage to Mecca, and Medinat alnaby in Arabia, where is the Sepulchre of Mahomet, to weare their beard so long as they will, and not to shauē it but vnder the throat, and their vpper and lower lips, because they would not for any thing being eating or drinking touch a haire, being the greatest nastinesse and filthinesse in the world: wherefore they haue no haire about their mouth; and I haue often seene that for finding onely one haire in a platter of meat, they would not touch it, and remained rather without eating, giuing it to the birds and other creatures, except any bodie would haue it. The other sort of beards for the rest of the nation, and the commonest is to weare a little one after the Spanish custome, shauen about their mouth and vnder their throat, but without mustaches, and in the cheekes they make like holes and fashions with the sizers, and they shauē them very close, yet so that it may appeare. Their chin as we vse now.

Neat superstition.
Curiositie.

Very niggards

In the meane while they curiously keepe the shauings of their haire and nailes, without losing or letting fall any, and are carefull to interre it in there Church-yards with a little water: for they would not for any thing in the world goe vpon it, or cast the left part into the fire; because, they say, being part of the bodie it requires burying as wel as the bodie; and they inclose it neatly in a little cotton, and the most of them wil be shauen in the porches of their temples or Moschees. They are verie hardie and insensible in all this, and vse no hot water in shauing them; their razors cut verie naughtily, and they doe nothing but poure a little cold water vpon it; and whatsoeuer hurt they doe, they complaine not, and say that it paines them not: this comes of custome to them, for else they would be as sensible as we.

§. III.

Their Cocos and other fruits and food, their Trades and trading, Creatures profitable and hurtfull. Of Male the principall Iland. Their Houses, Candou, Languages, Apparell.

Their food Millet.

THE Maldines are very fertill fruit, and other commodities necessarie for the life of man. They haue abundance of Millet, which they call Oura, also of another little graine called Bimby, which is like to Millet, but that it is blacke as Rape-seed. These graines sow themselves, and are reaped twice in a yeere. They make a kinde of meale, whereof they make pottage with milke and hony of Cocos, and also of Torteaux and Bignets, and many other sorts of food. There grow also rootes of many kindes, one called Itelpoul, which growes in abundance without sowing, and is round, and two handfulls in greatnesse, like more or lesse. Now they bruiſe it by rubbing it on a rugged stone, after they lay it in a cloth in the Sunne to dry, this is like our Amidon or wheate-flower, which they keepe as long as they wil, whereof they make pottage, and Torteaux and Galletus, which is a verie delicate meat, but that it a little surchargeth furcharge the stomacke, it must bee eaten while it is new. They haue plentie of another sort of root, called Alas, of a very good taste, which they sow and cultivate, one sort red, like red-partinip, another white like nauews, and are ordinarily bigger then a mans thigh. They boile and dresse them in diuers fashions, and keepe them a great part of the yeere; also they order them with hony and sugar of Cocos, and it is a great part of the nourishment of these people. They call wheat Godame & rice Andone, which grows not there, but is brought in great quantitie from the firme land. They eat and prepare it in diuers manners, boyling it only with water, and eat it with other viands in stead of bread. They boyle it also, after dry it and bray it, and of this bran, with egges, hony, milke, and butter of Cocos, they make Florentines, and verie good belly-timber.

Roots.

10 Hearbes and trees grow plentifully in all the Iles; many that beare fruit, others that beare none, whereof notwithstanding they eate the leaues which are sweet and daintie. There are Citrons, Pomgranets, Orenge in abundance; Bannanes, which the Portugalls call figges of India, and the Maldives Quella, which is a great fruit, and multiplies exceedingly, delicious and of great nourishment; so that they nourish their infants with it in stead of broth. There is none more profitable then the Cocos or nut of India, which they call Roul, and the fruit Cate: they abound more in the Maldives then in any place of the world: this onely tree serues for all necessaries of life, furnishing them in great quantitie with wine, hony, sugar, milke, and butter; and moreover the pith or kernell serues to eate, with all sorts of meate in stead of bread. Adde also the wood, barke, leaues, and shells make the greatest parts of their moueables and vtenfills.

Hearbs, trees, and fruits.

Cocos.

20 There is such store of fire-wood, that they buy it not, for as much as the cuntry is couered with all sorts of trees: it is lawfull to goe and cut those trees at any time when they haue need, which serue for nothing but to burne. Also there are whole Ilands full, whither euerie one send their seruants and slaues daily to fetch for their vse. It is admirable that each of the thirteene Atollons produce sundry fruits, although they are all vnder the same climate; yet euerie one hath not that which is necessarie. You would say, that God would that these people should visite one another, here is such diuersitie: for what is plentiful in one place is rare in another. Although euerie thing growes particularly in each place, yet it is little, and not so good and naturall as that which comes from the Atollons and Iles proper to it, because it is brought from other places.

30 The people also haue followed in their habitations a like order, for the crafts-men are assembled in Iles apart, as the Weauers in one, the Gold-smiths in another, and so all the rest. In brieft, none of their mechanick Arts are mingled, but each hath his Ile, yet they communicate one with another in this sort: they haue close boates, with a little deck, and goe from Ile to Ile traueilling and retayling their merchandize, and sometimes are more then a yeere before they returne to their Ile and ordinarie residence. They carrie with them their male children, from foure or five yeere old, to learne and be accustomed to it. They lye alwayes in their Barkes, and drinke and eate there, and often worke also. Where I was on the Maldives, there was found a Bird (which landed in an Iland) of prodigious shape and greatnesse. It was three foot high, the body exceeding great, more then a man could fathom: the feathers all white as a Swan, the feet broad like Fowles that swim, the necke halfe a fathom long, the beake halfe an ell; on the vpper part at the end a kinde of crooked claw, vnderneath larger then aboue, whence hung a very great and capable bagge of a yellow gilded colour resembling parchment. The King was much astonished whence this creature should come, and what was the nature of it: and enquiring of all men which came from other regions, at the last hee happened on certaine strangers, who told him that this creature was particular to China, and that it was bred nowhere else, and that the Chinois vse them to take fish, for this creature swimmeth on the water as other riuier Birds, and very long. It takes fish with great dexteritie, and fills the great purse or bagge which hangs from the beake vnderneath, which is so great and capable, that it will hold many fishes each two feet long, which the King handling hard, wondred greatly how it was possible that this Bird should come so alone from China, being distant more then a thousand and two hundred leagues. The King made triall, causing them to tye and fasten his throat, onely giuing it leaue to breath, that it might not swallow the fish, but bring vp the poke full. I haue seene it often goe so on the Sea, and come with it full of fish. It goeth a long time on the Sea, and carries there sometimes a day, which makes me beleue that it is not impossible that it should come from China.

Crafts differing with the Ilands.

50 They haue Hens in such plentie, that it is strange, and cost them nothing but the taking, for they are wild: in the Market they sell them but for one Som apiece, and thirtie fixe Egges at the same price; this is the meate they vse most next to fish. They haue store of Pidgeons, of Duckes, of Rayles, and of certayne Birds which altogether resemble Sparrow-hawkes, Muskets blacke and gray, which liue not of prey, but of fruits and many other differing kinds, all wilde and none domesticke. The Crowes greatly indanger the Inhabitants; for they are so bold, that they will come into the Houses; and take any thing, although men be present, of whom they are not awhit afraid. At the first, I thought they had bene tame and domesticall, they are in so great abundance that they cannot be numbered, because they kill them not. The Bats are as great as Rauens. They are greatly annoyed by the Muskites or Gnats, which picke very sorely. But that which troubles them most are the Rats, Dormice, and Pismires which are found euerie where,

Hens wilde.

Other Fowle. Crowes bold. Great Bats. Muskites, Rats Mice, Pismires, &c. Of these creatures see Linschot. C. 45. who relateth the like in Goa.

where, with other sorts of Creatures and Vermine which enter into their Houses, and eate and spoyle their Graine, Prouision, Fruits, and tender Commodities, so that they are forced for to resist them, to build their Lodges and Granaries on piles in the Sea two and three hundred paces from the Land, whither they goe in Boates, and there lay vp their graine and fruits to keepe them. The most part of the Magazines of the King are builded after this manner.

Sea-snakes.

In the Sea there is a kinde of Snakes which are very dangerous. There are great store of Cats, Foines, and Ferrets. There are no beasts for riding; there are few great beasts, wilde or tame. It is true, that there are about foure or five hundred Cowes and Bulls: but they appertaine to the King onely who breedes them in the Ile of Male: whither they are brought from the firme land for curiositie to multiply to that number; They eate them not, but in foure or five months in the yeere, and at great feasts when the King causeth to kill one, and sometimes he giueth one to the strangers ships, whom hee will gratifie. There are also some Weathers which are the Kings. They haue no Dogges, yea are greatly afraid of them. While that I was there, the Portugalls of Cochin sent two to the King for a raritie, who caused them incontinently to be drowned. If any touch a Dogge, he presently goes to bath, as to purifie himselfe.

Dogs dreadful and vncleane.

Fish.

The Sea is very full of fish, of all sorts great and small, principally because it is shallow and calme within the Atollons. It is their chiefe sustenance, either fresh with Rice or other meate, or fried with Oyle of Cocos, or sod in sea-water and dried to keepe it. They send many ships daily laden to Achen in Sumatra and other places. There is one great kinde of fish which greatly vexeth them, for it deuoures the men when they bath or go a fishing. I escaped very hardly from being deuoured. A man may see a great number of persons which haue lost their armes or legges, or otherwise are lamed by this misfortune. The great abundance of all things causeth that victuall costs little, and that euery thing is good cheape. Foure hundred Cocos may bee bought for one Larin, which is eight souses: five hundred Bannanes for one Larin: in like manner after the same price an hundred great fishes, or a dozen of good Hens, or three hundred pound of Roots, and so of other things: so that there is no * Country in India where strangers grow rich so soone, because trading is good, and victualls cheape.

* Note.

Male the principall Island.

The principall Island is called Male, which giues name to all others: for the word Dines signifieth a number of small Iles heaped together: it is very neere the middest of all other Iles, and is in circuit about a league and a halfe. It is fruitfuller then all the rest, and the Staple and Mart of them, and of strangers; the seat of the King and of the Court. By reason whereof it is best peopled, but vnhealthfullest; there dye many, whom they interre each a part, so that all the Ile is full; the Sunne, which is very hot, draweth vp noysome and pestilent vapours. The waters also are naught, the King therefore is compelled to send, for him and his houle, to another Ile, where the water is better, and where they bury no bodie; so doe also the principall and men of abilitie in the Ile. Throughout all the Islands they haue no enclosed Townes, no not in the Ile of Male. But all the Ile is replenished here and there with houses and buildings, either of Lords and Gentlemen, or of the common people, and also of others. Notwithstanding the houses are distinguished by Streets and Wards, in a faire order, and all know their owne diuision. The houses and edifices of the common people are of Wood of the Cocos, which they cut from the trunke of the Tree, they couer them with leaues of the same Tree, sowed double one within another.

Vnhealthfull.

No walled Townes.

Their houses.

Sea-stones how drawne thence.

Candon strange wood.

The Signiors and rich men build with stone, which they draw forth of the Sea, from vnder the Shelves and Rockes, where they find as much as they will, of good length and greatnesse. It is smooth and good merchandise, verie white, somewhat hard to cut and fashion: but as soone as it raines on it, it loseth its naturall hardnesse and whitnesse, and becomes all blacke when it is beaten with the raine, or wet with fresh water: the manner of drawing them forth of the Sea is remarkable. There groweth in that Countrey a kind of Wood which they call Candon, which is as great as the Wall-nut tree here, like in the shaking leafe, and whitnesse, but wonderfull soft. It beares not any fruit, and is fit onely to burne: being dry they cut it into Plankes, which they vse as we doe fire. This Wood is lighter then Corke. Hauing noted the stone within the water which they will haue, they fasten it with a great Cable. This is ordinary, for as I said before, they are halfe fishes, very expert in swimming, their women swim as well or better then the men of these parts: so that they will goe on euery occasion to the bottome of the Sea, fiftene or twenty fathoms deepe, and stay there a long time and marke the depths very often, to see where it is good laying their anchor. Sometimes also in stead of an anchor they choose some great rocke in the bottome of the Sea, and there fasten their Cable. Then after that they haue selected the stone, which they will draw vp, & that they haue bound it to their Cable, they take a piece of the wood of Candon, & tie or thrust through (after they haue bored it) their cable right opposite to the stone, and after aloft adde a certaine number of these pieces, as many as shall be necessary, so that which is marvellous light, and fleeting aboue the water, pulls vp with it the stone and draweth it aloft, whatsoeuer weightie or ponderous a thing it bee, euen to a thousand pounds. The Cannons and Anchors of our overwhelmed Ship were drawne vp thus. I haue scene that the Hauen of the Ile of Male, being full of great Rocks, so that the Ships could not ride nor anchor in safetie, clefted and made nauigable thus in lesse then five dayes.

They

They vse also to take five or sixe great pieces of this kind of wood, and binde them fast in a row, and aboue set sawed Plankes of the same Tree after the fashion of a Hurdle, after eleuate it with little boords round, before, and behinde, and on the sides, and in the middle to sit. This serues them to goe to Sea, and passe from Ile to Ile: they principally fish in such, euery man hath one, for they need but one to guide and conduct them. Another propertie of this Tree is, that rubbing pieces one against another, fire comes forth, and this is their kindling of fire. For chaulke they vse shells found on the Sea side, which ioynes and conglutinats their buildings very well together.

Fire how kindled.

Languages.

10 They haue two languages in vse. The first, which is particular to the Maldines and is very ample. The second is the Arabick, which they greatly esteeme and learne as wee doe Latine. Also it serueth them daily for their holies. In the Atollon of Souadou, and toward the South of the Maldines they speake a language hard to vnderstand, and very clounish and rude.

Their apparell.

20 They apparell themselves thus. First the men tie about their priuities a great swath-band of cloth, which comes round about them, for feare that going or comming, or in doing any worke, they might be discovered. After, they put a little cloth of cotton died blew, or red, or some other colour, which goes no lower then their knees. Vpon that they put a great piece of cloth of cotton or silke (if they are a little rich and wealthy) which reacheth to their ankles, and gird it with a faire square handkerchiefe imbroidered with gold and silke, which they fold in three corners, and spreading it vpon their backes make it fast before; after for greater ornament they adde a little piece of silke of diuers colours, transparent as cobweb-laune, which is short and extends no further then the middle of their thighes: and after all that they incomasse themselves in a great girdle of silke, which is like to their turbant, and is well fringed; they let the ends hang before. Within this girdle, which serues them for a purse, they put their money, and their bettele on the left side; and on the right side they weare their knife, which they esteeme very honourable, and there is no bodie but weares one, no not the King. These kniues are very well made, all of excellent Steele, for they haue no inuention to mingle yron with Steele. They which haue any meanes, weare the haft and sheath all of siluer wrought and fashioned. In the end of the sheath on the top they haue a buckle of siluer, whereto hangs a little chaine also of siluer, whereto are tyed their tooth-pickers and eare-pickers, and other little instruments. Others, which haue not meanes to haue them so costly, weare the sheath of wood wrought, the haft of a fishes bone, as of a Whale or other

They are not suffered to carry other Armes, except the Souldiers and Officers of the King, and they onely while they are in seruice of the King in the Ile of Male, or elsewhere sent by him. They haue commonly at their side a waued dagger, which they call a Cris; they come from Achen, Iana, and China. And moreouer when they goe in the street, they alwayes carry their sword naked in one hand, and their buckler in the other, or else a janelin. Their principall brauerie, is to weare about their girdle many chaines of siluer. There is not one man nor woman, boy nor girle, little or great, which will not haue of them according to the proportion of their goods and

But none except the Grand Lords and Strangers weare them vpon their clothes to be seene: the other weare them hid vnderneath: and yet they will haue them to speake of them, and shew priuately. The residue of their bodie from the Girdle vpward is naked; I vnderstand of the common people, for the Signiors of qualitie are not so. Yet in their Feast dayes they couer themselves with Ierkins and Cassocks of Cotton or Silke which they fasten with Buttons of gilt Copper. These Ierkins are of all sorts of colours, but the edges are welted with white and blue. The sleeves come but to their elbow; they say, if they should descend to the wrist, as ours, they should not haue the free manning of their armes. They put on also coloured linings, which are very strait, and reach from the ankles to the waist, which they fasten also on the bottome with gilded buttons.

Ierkins.

50 The chiefe men array themselves ordinarily with Ierkins and Cassocks. A great number on Feast dayes vse another kind of gallantry: they bruse Sanders and Camphire on very sicke and smooth stones (which they bring from the firme Land) and sometimes other sorts of odoriferous wood; after they compound it with water distilled of flowres, and ouerspread their bodies with this paste, from the Girdle vpwards, adding many formes with their fingers, such as they imagine: it is somewhat like cut and pinked Doublets, and of an excellent sauour. Sometimes they bind together faire flowres, and of the best sent. They dresse their Wiues or Lemmons in this sort, and make vpon their backes workes and shadowes, as they please. This is one kind of brauery which is much vsed, but they dare not present themselves so trimmed before the King, nor within the Palace. Vpon their heads they weare red Turbants, or diuersified into various colours, the richer sort of Silke, the poorer of fine Cotton. The Souldiers and Officers of the King attire themselves after one fashion, which is not permitted to others, putting often on their heads imbroydered Hand-kerchiefes, which others may not. All the people goe naked on their feet, and often on their legges, yet within their Houses they vse a kind of Slippers or Sandals dals made of wood, but when any of their Superiours come to visit them, they pull off their Sandals, and remaine with bare feet.

Womens habit.

The women haue a great cloth of Cotton, or of coloured Silke which comes about them from their middle to their ankles, and serues them for a Coate. Vpon that they put a Robe of Taffata, or very light Cotton, but very long: It descends to their feet, the borders are blue and white; it is very like the Smocks which women weare in these parts. It is a little open on the necke, and fastned with two little gilded Buttons, and so before in the Throate, without any more opening in the bosome: so that when they will giue their children sucke, they are constrained to pull vp their Garments, yet without any indecencie, by reason of the cloth which they vse in stead of a Coate. Their Armes are laden with great Bracelets of Siluer, sometimes from the wrist to the elbow; the poorer sort weare them mixed with Brasse, others of fine and massie Siluer, so that there are some found with three or foure pound of Siluer on their Armes: and moreover they haue Chaines of Siluer on their Girdles vnder their clothes, which are not seene, but sometimes when their Garments are very lightsome. They haue many Chaines of Gold about their neckes if they be women of ranke and fashion, or they knit together pieces of Gold Coine, which comes thither from Arabia, or elsewhere from the Continent. In their eares they weare very rich pendants according to their wealth, but they weare them not after the same fashion we doe heere. For the Mothers pierce the eares of their Daughters when they are young, not only in the lap or fat of the eare, but all along the gristle in many places, and put there threds of Cotton to encrease and keepe the holes, that they may put when they are greater little gilded 20 nailes, to the number of twentie foure in both eares. The head of the naile is commonly adorned with a precious Stone or Pearle, also in the lap of the eare they haue an earring fashioned after their manner. When the women goe in the streets either in the night or day, (although they go seldome in the day) they weare a Veile vpon their heads; but they put it downe going with the Queenes or great Ladies, or with their betters, but not at all before men, no, not before the King; but on the contrary they will hide themselves more when they imagine that men eye them.

Eare-tires.

It is obseruable, that none neither man nor woman, except the Prince or Grand Signior dare weare any Rings set with Stones, nor Jewels, nor Bracelets, Carkanets, or Earrings, nor Chaines of Gold without permission from the King, if they bee men, or from the Queenes, if they bee 30 women. This permission they buy, except they conferre this benefit on them, as they doe often to the women.

Gold prohibited.

None, neither Queenes nor Princesses may weare Bracelets and Rings of Gold on their Armes and Legs: but for any other ornament it is permitted them to haue Gold; but although the Rings of their Feet and Legges are of Siluer, they may not weare what quantitie they will, if they be not of great Birth and Originall, nor put Rings on their fore-fingers, except the Queenes, the Princesses and great Ladies on the middle-fingers; all other women with permission on the two other fingers, the men only on their thumbe. So euery one knowes his ranke and degree, and what ornaments he must haue aswell for himselfe as his Wife, and there is no confusion in it. If the Wife of any one which hath not accustomed to goe braue before, beginne 40 to goe more gay, or if a man weare Rings set with Jewels on his finger, although in so doing hee exceeds not that which is permitted him; yet they impose on him a greater Taxe for this: except the Officers of the King and of the Queenes, which pay no Taxes, nor the Inhabitants of the Ile of Malé, yet they are burthened with other charges, and pay many extraordinary expences. The Strangers and their Wines haue priuiledge to attire themselves as they wil, to weare what ornaments and costlinesse they will, without permission, euen as the great Princes, or the King himselfe. In brieft I obserued, that the Strangers haue more Priuiledges and Immunities then the Naturals. Also the Pandjars, the Naybes and Caribes of the Ile of Malé, and other Islands may dresse and array themselves as they please, without being bound to the Lawes for this thing as others. 50

Strangers priuiledged.

Womens customs.

The women are curious to tricke and trimme themselves handsomely. They haue a custome to make the nailes of their feet and hands red. This is the beautie of the Countrey: they make it with the iuice and moysture of a certayne Tree, and it endures as long as their nailes. Certainly they appeare very faire and beautifull, aswell because they attire themselves neatly, as because they are wel-fauoured, of a good proportion, and very prettie.

§. IIII.

Rites of Meate and Drinke, Bathing, Superstitious Observations : Diseases.

Education of Children. Fishing, Fashions, Lusts.

They neuer eate together, but with men of their owne Ranke and Qualitie; counting it a dishonour to eate with their inferiour: Also they feast seldome, except at their Festivals and Solemnities. If they wil at other times entertaine their friends, they prepare a Service of many Dishes, and set it on a great round Table couered with Taffeta, and send it into his House whom they will feast: which they hold a great honour. Being in their owne house they loue not the others should see them eate, and goe therefore to the furthest side of their house, letting downe all the clothes and Tapistrie which are before them, that so they may be vnseene. Before they eate, they say their Prayers. They haue no other Table then the floore of their Lodgings, which is couered with a little fine Mat, whereon they sit crosse-legged. They vse no Naperie, but for feare of wasting their Mats they vse great leaues of the Bannanes whereon they set their Dishes, and others before them instead of Trenchers: they are so neat in their feeding, that they shed nothing in the place where they eate, no not one drop of water, although they wash their mouth before and after their repast. Their dishes are of Earth, figured after the maner of the Country, and come from Cambaya; as good as China Porcelane, and so common that all vse them. But they haue no Platter of Earth or Porcelane, which is not after the fashion of a Box round, varnished and nealed, and a couer of the same matter. The poorer sort haue couered Platters in stead of these Boxes, which cost little. The reason is because of the Ants, which in great numbers fill euery place, so that it is very difficult to keepe any thing without a couer.

They are also so nice in their Diet, that they will not taste of any meate wherein hath fallen a Flye or an Emit, or any little creature, or the least filthinesse, so that they will giue it to the Birds when they come: for they haue no minde to giue it to the poore, to whom they neuer giue any thing which they would not haue, or which is not aswell dressed as for themselves. Wherefore when the poore come to their doores, they make them come in, and make them as good cheere as for themselves; saying, that they are the Seruants of God aswell as themselves. The Grand Signiors and rich men haue no other Vessels then other men, although they might haue them of Gold and Siluer, yet their Law forbids it. If a dish happen to be a little riuen or crackt, they eate no more in it; saying, that it is polluted. They vse no Spooones neither to eate Rice nor Honey, nor any liquid thing, but take them with their fingers, which they doe neatly and nimbly without losing any thing, for they account it the greatest inciuitie in the World to let any thing fall in eating. In the meane while also, none dare spit nor cough, but must rise and goe forth. In eating they neuer vse the left hand, because therewith they wash their Priuities. They willingly eate at the beginning of their feeding a Cocos halfe ripe, and drinke the water of it; saying, that it is healthfull, and looseth their belly. They eate all greedily and in haste, holding it mannerlinesse not to be long in eating: and in the meane while, though they be in company, they speake not a word.

To drinke while they are eating, is reckond clownishnesse, but after they haue eaten their fill, they drinke once. Their drinke is commonly of water, or of Wine of Cocos drawne forth the same day: they haue also other sorts of drinckes for the King and Nobles, or at their great Solemnities. They drinke in Copper Cups well wrought, with couers on them. After their repast, and when they haue washed, they present a Platter of Betsell, instead of sweet meates. For the most part they haue no ordinarie houre of eating, but eate at all houres when they are hungry. Their Wiues and Daughters prepare and dresse their meate, and not men. It is the greatest injurie that a man can doe to one, to call him Cisday, that is to say Cooke: and if any bee found to addict themselves to this, they are mocked and despised euery where, in such sort that they esteeme them not for men but women: and they dare not accompany with any but women, nor doe any other exercise; also they make it no difficultie to leaue them with them.

Betsell.

No man cooke

When they kill any creature for their food, they haue many Mysteries. They cut the throat turning themselves toward Mahomets Sepulchre, and say their Prayers, and all speedily let it goe, or goe forth, not touching it till it be thoroughly dead. If any touch it before, they cast away the flesh, and eate it not. Also they cut it not euery-where, but in a certaine place of the throat, otherwise they eat it not, and euery one vnderstands not this, but principally their Priests or Mondius know it: they which enterprize it must bee ancient and not yong, and such as haue had children. In all their actions they are very scrupulous and superstitious. After they haue slept, whether in the night or day, they faile not presently after they are awake, to wash their eyes and face, and rub them with Oyle, and put also a certaine blacknesse vpon their eye-lids and eye-browes: they dare not speake nor bid any good morrow till they haue done thus; they are carefull to rub their Teeth, and to wash and clense them, saying furthermore, that the Red colour

- Bettell and Arecka. of Bettell and Arecka, which they chawe continually takes the better: so that they haue all red Teeth, by reason of champing of Bettell, & they account this brauerie. They carrie it also alwaies about in the pleats of their Girdle, and it should be a dishonor to be found without it; it is the custome when they encounter one another by the way interchangeably each to giue the other some of his. They bathe often in the day, not only for pleasure and commoditie, but for Religion, or entrance into the Mosche: they wash their Extreems after they haue made vrine, or done their necessities, they wash their Priuities with the left hand, or they wash all their bodie, which they call lunan, according to their Feasts with diuersities of formes and ceremonies. So that when they wash in publike, as they doe, a man may know wherefore they bathe, as if they haue accompanied with their Wiues whether by night or by day, they plunge their head three times vnder the water. When they are to goe any Voyage, they desire not to meet or touch any body, and if any disastrous thing chance to them, they attribute it to him who toucht them. About all when they goe on fishing, they must not salute any, nor bid them good morrow. From the going downe of the Sunne on Thursday in the Euening, till the day following about three or foure of the clocke, they will not permit any thing to be carried out of their Houses, although their dearest Loue, or their Father would borrow any thing, they would not giue it them, neither will they render that which shall be lent for, although it bee not theirs: yet they will receive any thing, and let it enter into their houses in the meane while without any scruple. They wrangle not nor quarrell together, although there be enmitie betweene them; about all take heed of reproaching.
- Bathing.
- Superstitions. In sailing, if they be surprized with contrarie winds, of calmes or stormes, they make Vowes to him which commands the winds, whom they call not God, but King. There is no Ile where is not found a Siare, as they call it, which is a place dedicated to the winds, in a desolate corner of the Ile, where they which haue escaped danger, make Offerings daily of little Boates and ships made purposely, full of Perfumes, Gummes, Flowres, and odoriferous Woods. They burne the Perfumes, and cast the little Boats into the Sea which goe floating till they be burned, for they put fire in them; to the end, they say, that the King of the Winds may accept them. Also they set not willingly their ships and Gallies afloat, but they kill Hens and Cockes, and cast them in the Sea before the ship or Boat which they will vse. They beleue also that there is a King of the Sea, to whom in like sort they make Prayers and Ceremonies in their Nauigation, and when they goe on fishing, fearing vpon euerie error and offence, the Kings of the Winds and of the Sea. So that being on the Sea they dare not spit on the windie side, nor cast any thing ouerboard, for feare that they should be angrie with them: also they neuer looke behind them. All the Boates, Barks, and ships are deuoted to the powers of the Winds and of the Sea: and surely they respect them as if they were their Temple, keeping them neate, and neuer committing any filthy and dishonest thing in them. They haue also the Kings of the other Elements (as they call them) and especially that of Warre, but all with great Ceremonies.
- Their Soluities. They greatly esteeme certaine Characters, which they call Tanide, which they weare vnder their Garments, inclosed in little Boxes, which the Rich make of Gold or Siluer. They weare them often on their armes, on their necke, or at their Girdle, or else at their foot, according to the subject of the Disease; for they weare them for all things as well offensive as defensive, that they should loue or be loued, or hate, or to heale or cure any Maladie. The Magicians and Sorcerers sell them these for monie, and tell them that it brings them good lucke, and heales their Diseases. They haue few remedies for their Maladies, but haue recourse to the Magicians and Sorcerers, who are their only Physicians. They beleue also that all their euill is caused by the Deuill to vexe them, who is the only cause of their Deaths and Diseases. Therefore they call vpon him, and offer Flowres to him, and prepare Banquets of all sorts of Viands and Beuerages, which they set in a certaine secret place, where they let them consume, if no poore people happen to take them away. For the same purpose they kill Cockes or Hennes, turning them towards the Sepulchre of Mahomet, after leauing them there, praying the Deuill to accept of them.
- Superstitious nearnesse. The Feuer is common among them, but most dangerous to strangers. From ten yeeres to ten yeeres, here comes a Disease called Curinadiri, for which they abandon one another, as if it were the Plague. It is like the small Pockes, and kils many. The diseases of the Eyes are very common, I haue seene a great number blind, and the most part haue little Eyes. It happens also often that hauing beene long in the Sunne in the height of the day, after the Sunne is downe, they see not at all, whatsoever fire or light be put neere them, although it were a hundred Torches, yet without feeling any other euill. To heale it, they boyle the Liuer of a Cocke, and write words and Charmes, and set it toward the point of the setting of the Sunne. My Companions and I were sometimes vexed with this Maladie: but hauing learned the Receipt, wee tooke the Liuer of a Cocke, rejecting their Charmes, to see if that would serue, and wee found that it healed vs as well as them, without obseruing their Sorceries. They are much subject to the Itch, which they heale with Oyle of Cocos. Remediless Tettters terrifie them much: some haue almost their whole bodies ouer-runne with them. These euils come by reason of the quantity titie of Salt-fish which they eate, and also because they seldome salt their meates, but powre Sea-water to it.

In the Winter, although the Raines are continuall, yet they goe bare-foot, they haue vnder their feet and betweene their toes, a kind of hand-worme, which breeds in the filth, it maketh Wheales and Pushes full of water, which after they increase ingender Vicers, which greatly hinders their going. They are also troubled all over the bodie with these Wormes. They haue all commonly great Spleenes, and are subject to obstructions, and endure much euill. They haue some Receits and Compositions of Herbes and Drugges for diuers Maladies, and principally for wounds, which they heale very cunningly.

10 They vse no bindings nor linnen to their Soares, but only Ointments. Cathaires and Fluxes sometimes trouble them, and aches in the bones. The Neapolitan disease is not very frequent: they heale it with China wood, without sweating or any other thing, they call it Farangui Basfrou, this Maladie came from Europe, whose Inhabitants they call it Farangui or Frangui. They are neuer troubled with the Tooth-ache; it seemes their ordinary chawing of Bettell is the cause hereof. As soone as their Infants are borne, they wash them in cold water sixe times a day, and after they chafe them with Oyle, and continue this washing a great while: and moreouer, when they make Vrine, or doe Natures Office, they wash their Priuities with water.

The Mothers nourish their owne Children, and dare not put them forth to nurse to others, not the Queenes, saying ordinarily that the beasts bring vp their young, but they haue Seruants to tend, carrie, and gouerne them. Besides the brest they make a kind of Pappe, of Rice or Honey, brayed and macerated, after boiled with Milke and Sugar of Cocos. The most part (especially the poorest) giue them Bananes. They neuer swaddle their Children, but let them goe free, and yet I neuer saw any deformed. Now their Couch hangs in the Aire, within little Beds of board, or little Chaires, where they shogge and rocke them. At the age of nine moneths they begin to goe.

At nine yeeres old they bring them vp in the studies and exercises of the Countrey. These studies are to learne to write and to reade, and to vnderstand their Alcoran, and know what they are bound to doe. Their Letters are of diuers sorts, the Arabicke with some Letters and Points which they haue added to expresse their Language: another whereof the Character is peculiar to the Language of the Maldines, and moreouer, a third which is the vulgar of Ceylan, and of the greatest part of the Indies. They write their Lessons on little Tables of wood, which are white, and when they can say their Lesson by heart, they blot it out, and white it againe. If the writing bee to abide and remaine perpetually, they write vpon Parchment which is made of the leafe of the Tree called Macore Quean, which is a fathome and an halfe in length, and a foot broad. To teach their Children to write, they haue Boards made of wood purposely, very smooth and plaine, whereon they spread very fine and thinne Sand, after with a Bodkin they make the Letters, and make them imitate them, blotting out the Rule which they haue written, and neuer vse herein any Paper.

They carrie as great respect and reuerence to their Tutors as to their Fathers: so that they may not contract Marriage together, as being allied in Affinitie. There are some found among them who follow their studies, who are very skilfull in the Alcoran, and Ceremonies of their Law; they are principally the Modins, Catibes, or Naybes. These two Offices are compatible, for a Catibe may be a Naybe, and a Naybe a Catibe.

The Mathematickes are there taught, and are greatly esteemed, especially Astrologie, which many studie; for they consult with the Astrologers about euery thing: They will enterprize nothing without their aduice. They will not only know their Natiuities and time of their Births, but also if they build, whether with wood or stone, they must enquire of the Astrologer, what houre will bee best to beginne, that it may bee vnder a good Constellation: or if they employ a Boate, although they doe it diuersly, taking a different day or houre for a ship of Warre, or of Merchanchize, or a fishing Barke. If they vndertake any Voyage, or any thing else, they enquire of the Astrologer what shall be the issue, and whether the day bee good or euill, if the Planet be fauourable or vnfortunate. Whatsoeuer sinister accident happens to them, they attribute the cause to the day, and take it patiently, saying, it is the will of God that hath brought it to passe.

The Ilanders are much exercised in Armes, either to serue with a Sword and Buckler, or readily to bend the Bow, or vse the Harquebuse, or mannage the Pike: they haue Schooles, the Masters whereof are greatly honoured and respected, and ordinarily the Grand Signiors vse this exercise. They haue no plaies but the Ball and Tennice, which they receiue and cast forth with great agilitie, although it be not but with their feet.

60 Their greatest exercise is fishing, which all in all places of the Maldines vse indifferently, without hauing any (as in other places) certaine persons of this vocation, or certaine places proper to it, which are not publike. This exercise they account honest and honorable, wherein also the Gentlemen exercise themselves as they doe heere in hunting. The King hath twelue persons appointed to guide and conduct his Boat when he goeth on fishing, and to prepare all things necessarie for it.

Fishing

They haue an admirable quantitie of great Fish, as Bonitos, Albacorres, guilt-heads and others which are very like one another, and of the same taste, and haue no more scales then the Mac-krell. They take them in the deepe Sea, on this fashion; with a line of a fathom and a halfe of great round Cotton thred made fast to a great Cane. Their hooke, is not so much bowed as ours, but more stretched out, & is pointed in the end like a Pin, without hauing any other beard or tongue. They fasten not on their Bait, but the day before prouide a quantitie of small Fish, as great as our little Bleaks, or Roches, which they find in great number on the Banks and Sands, and keep them aliue inclosed in little pursnets (made of the Thred of Cocos) with little Mashes, and let them hang in the Sea at the Sterne of their Barkes. When they come into the deepe Sea, they sow a-bout their little Fishes, and let their Line hang downe. The great Fish seeing the little Fish, 10 which is not frequent in the deepe Sea, runne together in great shoales, and by the same meanes they fasten them to their hooke, which they white and trim ouer; so that being a rauenous and foolish Fish, it takes the whited Hook, thinking it is a white little Fish. They doe nothing but lift their Line into their Boat, and the Fish falls off presently (being not strongly fastened) and then they put it into the Sea againe; thus they take a strange quantitie, so that in three or foure houres their Boates are in a manner full; and that which is remarkable, they go alwayes with full sayle. The Fish which they take thus they generally cal in their language Cobolly Masse, that is to say, the Blacke Fish, for they are all blacke.

They haue another sort of fishing on their bankes, when the Moone is in the change, and when it is at the full, three daies each time. This they doe on Rafts made of the Wood, called 20 Camdon. They haue great Lines of fiftie or sixtie fathome pitched ouer. In the end they hang hooke whereon they fasten the baite as we doe, and thus take great quantitie of fish, one kinde very delicious, which they call the King of the Sea. They haue all sorts of Nets and Toiles made of Cotton twine, Weeles and other Instruments of fishing. Neere the Sea shoare, and where it is shallow, they passe their time, and take delight in fishing for small fish, like Pilchards with casting Nets. Twice in the Yeere at the Equinoctials, they make a generall fishing, a great number of persons assemble together in certaine indraughts of the Sea. The Sea at that time ariseth higher then all the times of the Yeere, and passeth the limits of other Tides, the Ebbe after the same proportion recoiles and retires, discovering the Rockes and Shoalds, which at other times appeare not. In these places while the Sea is going out, they obserue some fit corner, and 30 set about it great stones, one vpon another to a great height, so that it resembles a round Wall or Rauling. This inclosure hath fortie paces in circuit or compasse: but the entrance is but two or three paces large. They gather together thirtie or fortie men, and euery one carrieth fiftie or sixtie fathome of great coard of Cocos, where from fathome to fathome they tie a piece of the Barke of dried Cocos, to make it float on the water, as we vse Corke: after, they tye them together, and stretch them out in a round vpon the flats. It is strange, that all the fish which is within the coard, finding themselues taken, although there bee no other Nets nor Instruments, but the Coard which swimmeth on the water, but the fish fearing the Line and shadow of the Line; so that they dare not passe vnder to escape, but flye from the Line, thinking that it hath 40 a Net vnderneath: The men goe all driuing them to the inclosure of stone, drawing vp the coard by little and little some in Boates, and some in the water (for vpon these flats the Sea is shallow, and not aboue necke high for the most part lesse) so moderately drawing vp the Line, the fish flye from it, and are locked vp in the inclosure, so that in the end the Line being all drawne vp, all the fishes enter in: and they speedily stop the entrie with Faggots of boughes and leaues of Cocos, bound end to end, twentie or thirtie fathome, and compacted together about the greatness of a man, and so when the Sea is out, the fish remaine taken on the dry Land. They often take thus of all sorts ten and twelue thousand or more. This fishing they make but once in fixe monethes, vpon euery flat, and euery time continues fixe daies, and they change daily their diuisions, and returne not often into the same place to fish in this manner, except at another Equinoctiall.

The people are aboue measure superstitious, and addicted to their Religion: but yet extreemly 50 giuen to women, wanton and riotous. There is nothing commoner then Adulteries, Incest and Sodomie, notwithstanding the rigour of their Lawes and Penalties: As for simple Fornication, there is nothing more ordinarie: they count it not a sinne, neither their Wiues, nor Daughters which are not married, make it no great matter to yeeld themselues to their Friends, and after (which is very execrable) to euacuate their Fruit by making an abortion, or destroy their children which are not legitimate. The women are strangely impudent, and the men are not lesse vicious (but they cannot be more) and very effeminate. All their desire is to procure (if they can) some 60 Receit, that they may better content their Wiues, and be more strong to exercise their Fornications. I thinke they spend all their goods on this; hereof they continually speake, and are very dissolute in their words, and almost neuer stirre from their Wiues, of whom they haue pluralitie, to three, which is the cause that they cannot satisfie each of them: also the Aire of the Countrey is hot, and exhales part of their spirits and courage: and also their continually softening their flesh in the water, and that the most part eate Opium, or Aphion, as they call it, which tipples, in intoxicates and dals them. The women (as I haue said) carefully hide their breasts: to speake of them, they account very lasciuious and dishonest. To kisse, they make as great a matter as to lye together, although they be dissolute in their conuersation, yet they containe themselves before their Parents, and respect their presence. But if a man happen to speake a word (such as I haue said) to a woman, before one or any of her Kindred, they will goe hide themselves, and be greatly offended against him; he must therefore make them excuses, and say that hee knew not that they were neere of kin; otherwise they will thinke that he did purposely, and therefore complaine to the Iustice, that hee may manifest which said these lasciuious words in their presence, that he holds them for good and honest people. A man dare not enter into the place where a woman bathes her selfe, or where she is retired (her Robe being off) although they neuer take off the cloth which enuirones them, and serues them for a Coat; but (as I haue said) they esteeme the breasts as shamefull parts.

Breasts not to be spoken of.

When a man and a woman is together, and another person meet with him, hee must not demand of this man if she be his Wife, or Daughter, or Sister: for if it were his Daughter, and hee should aske if it were his Wife, he should offend as if he accused him of Incest; only he must demand if she be his Kinswoman, & he tels the degree of Parentage or Affinitie. As long as the women haue their tearmes, they bathe not, and wash only their hands and mouth, they change not their Garments, nor lie with their Husbands; nor eate nor conuerse with any bodie. When the women goe a visiting in the night, they must haue a man to accompany them who goeth before, and when hee perceiues that any body comes, hee saith three times Gas, that is, take heede: the men aduertised by this, quite the side of the way where the women goes, making no semblance of seeing them, nor of knowing them, with great respect: and if they bee other women, they take each her side of the way, and salute not, except they bee very familiar. They neuer knocke at the Gate (for there is no Ring or Hammer) nor call to bee let into the house, for the great Gate of the Court is alwayes open till eleuen of the clocke in the euening: wherefore they enter into the Court, which is neere the doore of the house, which is also open and spread onely with Tapestry of Cotton cloth, or other stufte, and as they approach to this Gate, they cough once, which they hearing within, go forth and see if any one would speake with them. Also the men going in the night through the street, cough often determinately, that they may aduertise one the other, for feare of hurting, or wounding, for they carry their weapons naked: I vnderstand the Souldiers and Officers of the King in the Ile of Male.

§. V.

Their Government described. The Iudges, Officers, Gentry, Communalitie. The King his Palace, Guard, Nobilitie, Robes, Attire, Attendance, Exercises, Riches; slaine by the Bengalans.

40 The government of the estate of the Maldines is royall and very absolute and ancient; the King is feared and reuerenced, and all depend of him. In each of the thirteene Cantons is one principall, whom they call Naybe. These Naybes or principalls of the Prouinces are Priests and Doctors of their Law, and haue the ouersight of all that concerns Religion, and instruction of the people therein, and exercise of Iustice, and command the Priests which are vnder them. These Atollons are subdiuided into many Ilands, in each of which, where there is not aboue fortie and one men, is a Doctor called Catibe, superior in the Religion of that Ile, who hath vnder him the particular Priests of the Moschees, all which haue care to nourish and instruct the people in the Law; and liue of a certaine portion of fruits which euery one is bound to giue them, and of certaine rents which the King giues them according to their degree. But particularly the Naybes, besides the exercise of Religion, and authoritie which 50 they haue, are instituted to execute and doe iustice, each in his government. They are the onely Iudges of the Country as well in matters ciuill as criminall, and if any one will haue iustice hee must goe finde out the Naybe, or attend his comming to the place. For the Naybes foure times in the yeere, go in circuit about the Ilands, each in his Iurisdiction, and make Visitations, as wel for the religion of the Priests, as for iustice. This is their greatest reuenue, for then their duties are paid them; moreouer they receiue store of Presents from many persons, whereof they are very greedie. In all the Maldines there are no Iudges but the thirteene Naybes; for the Catibes of the Ilands, and the Priests of the Moschees are but for a shew.

The thirteene Naybes Visitation and Circuit.

60 Ouer these Naybes there is a superiour, which resides in the Ile of Male (and is euer neere his person) which is called Pandire; who is not onely chiefe of the Religion throughout all the Realme, but also soueraigne Iudge. So that after they haue pleaded before the Naybe, if they will not stand to his sentence, whether in matters ciuill or criminall, they may appeale to the Pandire: who discides all affaires that offer themselves, taking aduise of some Naybes which are neere him, of the Catibes, graue men called Moucouris, that is Doctors and experienced men,

The Pandire or chiefe Iudge.

Moucouris learned men.	which are not Officers : they giue no iudgement if they be not assisted with foure or five of these persons at the least. These Moucouris can say all the Alcoran by heart (and all the others read it onely) besides diuers other Sciences which they know. They solemnely inuite them to all their Feasts, Sermons, and Ceremonies ; and are greatly honoured and respected by all. There are not aboue fifteene of them in all the Ilands. The Pandiare is called Cady in the Arabick language.
The King. Sixe Councellours of State.	Also after the iudgement of the Pandiare , one may complaine to the King, who commands, and makes iustice to be executed : and this is by six Signiors his principall Officers, who manage the most importune affaires of state. The Pandiare being assisted with two Catibes of the Ile of Malé , and by Naybe of the Atollon , besides some of those Doctors, goeth also to make his visita- 10 tion through the Ile of Malé , as euery Naybe in his Atollon ; and hee is attended with his Officers which carry a long whip to correct delinquents. Hee makes all (without exception) that meet him, to say their creed, and some prayers in the Arabick tongue, and after demands the interpretation in the Maldine language ; and if they are ignorant, he causeth them to be whipt and scourged in the open field by his Officers. The women dare not shew themselves when hee goeth through the street, and if hee encounter any vnuailed, hee causeth her haire to be shauen.
Seuere Catechising.	Besides the Naybes , there is in euery Atollon a man delegated and appointed by the King to receiue and leuie his rents and reuenues. All the Iles haue each their order by Diuision and Cantons, as that of Malé ; there are five diuisions which they call Auares , and each hath a principall called Mouscouly Auaire : the ancient of the diuision , and nothing is done there for the King or 20 the people, but they come to him. Iustice (which they call in their language Saconest) is exercised in the house of the Naybe , or else in the Ile of Malé in the house of the Pandiare , and sometimes in the Kings Palace when the matter is of weight or moment. When they will begin a suit, they goe to the Iudge or Naybe , who sends one of the Sergeants (of whom there are a certaine number, called Deuonits) to make the accused partie come ; and if he bee in the same Iland, hee must haue to make him come, a letter of the Naybe , by the meanes whereof he must notifie the place where he is, seeing that he is in the Iurisdiction of the Naybe . Or else if hee be of another Iurisdiction,
Treasurer.	the Naybe can doe nothing, but in this case he must haue letters of the Pandiare , who can make him come from any part of the Realme into the Kings Iland, where he abideth. Now they giue this letter to the Calibe , superior of the Ile, who in presence of them all giues it to the partie ac- 30 cused, exprelly charging him to goe thither : hereof they dare not faile, for they which disobey this iustice, cannot associate with any, nor goe to the Mosche , nor eate nor drinke with them, and they hold them not of their Law. If it bee so that any will not obey, or if hee be some Grande, the King sends his Souldiers to constraime him to come. But if hee will not plead before the Naybe , either because hee beares him ill will, or because that his partie hath too much fauour against him, then the plaintiffe or the defendant, who is accused, goeth to find out the King, who commands that hee doe Iustice by Iudges not suspected. This they execute in the Kings house, in the presenee of all the chiefe of the Iland. The parties plead their owne causes themselves. If the cause bee of fact, each bring three witnesses, and if they haue them not, the defendant is be- 40 lieued on his oath only, which they take in touching with the hand the book of their law, which the Iudge presents ; and then the plaintiffe if hee bee a little versed in affaires, markes scrupulously if the partie touched the booke really, and the place where he did it. If the difference bee in matter of right, they are iudged by the Law.

Slaues.	The Iudges take nothing for their iudgements, for nothing is due, except that the Deuonits or Sergeants haue the twelfth part of that which is due or adiudged. The Slaues cannot bee witnesses, nor plead, nor make triall in iudgement ; likewise in such a cause they receiue three women for one man. The Slaues are such as make themselves so, or such as they bring from other places and sell ; for shipwrackt strangers lose not the libertie which they had ; if they were Slaues they remaine so. The Slaues which they call Allo , are of worst conditions. They can haue but one wife although all others haue three. Beating of a Slaue is punished with halfe that which they inflict for beating a Free-man. Debtors are constrained, if they haue nothing to pay, to yeeld 50 themselves Seruants and not Slaues, and are not vsed as such, but as naturalls of the Countrie, and serue onely their Creditors or other persons which lend them mony to discharge them, these are called Pemoussere , which is to say, seruant by borrowing , and they continue thus till they are acquitted, yea their children are Slaues perpetually if they pay it not. Yet when they are ill intreated, they may discharge them, ingaging themselves in the same sort to another, that lends it them : for all their seruice they are nourished and maintained, and when they die their Masters takes all that they had, and if there be not enough to satisfie him, the children must serue till hee bee paid. There are many which seeke (to bee these Pemoussere) to great persons and men of authority, to haue support and fauour : for when they belong to no body, they are troubled by one 60 or other.
Debtors.
Children.	The wife cannot pursue in iustice the death of her husband : but onely the children or the kindred. If the children be young, they stay till they be sixteene yeeres old, to know if they will reuenge the death of their father. While they thus stay, the Iudge commands him which is appea- ched ched of murther to bring vp the children of the deceased, and teach them some Trade or Mysterie. When they are come to age, they demand Iustice, or remit and pardon the Murtherer, without any after examination. In matters of iniury committed on the person of any particular, the wronged must complaine; or otherwise the crime is abolished: except the King will make iustice to be executed, without the other partie, but this is seldome.

- The ordinary punishments are banishment into the desert Ilands towards the South; cutting off a principall member; or the whip, which is the commonest punishment, but extraordinarily cruell. They are thongs of great thicke leather, a fathom in length, foure fingers in breadth, and two in thicknesse: hereof there are five or sixe tied together, in a stocke and handle of Wood. Punishments.
- 10 With this they chastise malefactors, and beat them so seuerely that they die often. This is the ordinary punishment (for the most part) of the greatest crimes, as Sodomy, Incest, and Adultery. Besides this punishment, they cut off the womens hayre that are taken in adultery. False witnesses, and periured persons are thus punished, and moreouer condemned in a pecuniary mulct, which is disposed of to the poore. A rape is punished as adultery, and (for the most part) the rauisher is condemned to endow the woman or mayd. The stealing of any thing of valew, with the cutting off the hand. If they commit any thing against the Law, they must make a kinde of publike penance. They thinke they shall neuer come in Paradise if they pay not, and accomplish that which the Law hath appointed. For the execution and chastising of malefactors, they haue no hangmen, but the Denanits or Sergeants doe it. For punishment with death, although their Law ordaines it for Homicide, yet the Iudges neuer condemne them to it. All the while I was in the Maldines I saw none condemned to death by the ordinary Iudges: they dare not doe it, except the King expressely commands it, which is seldome. They say commonly, that they must not put men to death so; and if they should execute all that merit death, it would bee a long time before the Ilands should bee inhabited. Yet the King sends his Souldiers, and condemnes and executes those as haue deserued it. For although iustice be in the power of the Doctors of the Law, yet the King is the onely arbitrator, and alone hath power of life and death. Among others the King vseth one particular punishment on those which haue offended him; hee maketh them lye on the ground vpon their belly, and their armes and legs to bee held by foure men, and after to be beaten on their backe, with a staffe or kinde of cane, called Rotan, which comes from Bengala; Terrible whips.
- 20 this pulls off the skin, and the marke or brand endures perpetually. Adultery, Rape, Theft.

They neuer put in writing their suits and differences, nor their accusations, nor depositions, nor iudgements, for they are all very readie and compendious: neither in ciuill matters, except it be about grounds of inheritance, or Cocos trees which are immoueable, and that the Pandiar or Naybes giue iudgement. For in this case, they giue their letters sealed with their seale of Inke, for I neuer saw them vse any Waxe, and this serues for a testimony to their offspring, that hereafter, neither hee which hath obtained the cause, nor his heyres may be disquieted. Few executed.

- There are foure sorts of persons: in the first is comprehended the King called Rasquan, and the Queene called Reneguillagne, with those which are of their race, and precedent Kings, Princes, called Calans, Princesses or Camenaz, and Grand Signiors. The second order is that of Dignities, Offices, and Degrees, which the King distributes, wherein likewise the rankes is very carefully obserued. The third is the Gentry. The fourth, the common People. I will begin at the third, which is the ranke which birth giues to euery one separate from the common people. There are many Noble men disperfed heere and there among the Iles. They which are not Nobles dare not sit with them, nor in their presence, although it bee at the further end, and as farre as they see a greater then they comming behind, they must attend and let him goe before. If also they haue any piece of cloath vpon their shoulder, or any thing, they put it downe. The Noble women, although they marrie with men of inferiour condition and not Noble, loose not their ranke. Yea the Children which issue from them are Noble, by reason of the Mother. Also the women of low estate marrying to Noble men, are not ennobled by their Husbands, but retayne their first ranke. Besides the Nobles by birth, the King ennobles whom hee will. Then when this happens, the King besides his Letters wherewith hee priuiledgeth him, sends one of his Officers appointed for this, who makes publication throughout all the Ile, or sounds a kinde of Bell which is of cast mettall, whereon hee strikes with a Hammer. After the King, are the Princes of the bloud, and they which are descended of other Kings his predeceffours, who although they be of diuers Houses, yet are all much honoured and respected. Degrees and sorts of men. Rites, & rights of Nobilitie.
- 50

- Next are the great Officers of the Kingdome: that is to say, the Quilague, which wee may call the Kings Lieutenant generall: because next to the King and in his absence, hee is most mightie in the Gouvernement of the State, so that nothing is done without his aduise. Also if the King will haue any thing obserued or executed, hee is the first whom the King deposes, and to whom hee addresseth his commands. Next him, another called Parenas which is of great authoritie: An Endequery, whose Office is to bee alwayes neere the King, and to counsell him in all his occasions and affaires. Another hath charge of Sea matters, which wee may tearme Admirall, hee is called Velannas, hee lookes to the Ships which arriue, and their Merchandize; and hath care of entertaining Strangers and soliciting for them, hee vseth to come to the ships which arriue, Kings Lieutenant and other Officers.
- 60

arrive, even the smallest Barkes, although they bee of the Countrey, and takes away the rudder, and causeth it to bee carried into the Kings house, for feare they should goe away without taking leaue. He hath vnder him two Sergeants which looke to the Ships that arrive, and make him account, and obey his behests. There is a Generall ouer the Souldiers, called Dortimenaz, who hath also a Lieutenant, called Acowaz. Moreouer there is a Chancellor, called Manpas, who sets to all letters the Kings seale, which is nothing else but his name in Arabick, ingrauen in Silver, which hee dips in Inke and imprints on the paper. The Secretarie is called Carans, the Controller of the Exchequer Musbandery, and the Treasurer Ransbandery: with diuers other lesser Officers. All these Grandes abouenamed are often called to giue the King counsell when he pleaseth, with fixe ancient and experienced men, called Monscoulis. Besides the rents and reuenues of certaine Islands giuen to these Officers, the King giues them Rice for their prouision, as also to the Souldiers, with Tributes and Tolls of Barkes and Ships which come to trafficke in the Maldines. All the honour in this Countrey is to eate of the Kings Rice, and be of the number of his Officers: without this a man is not esteemed noble, although he be.

Souldiers and Gentlemen.

Next to the Officers the Souldiers are most esteemed and priuiledged, and they make little account of a Gentleman if hee bee not inrolled in the Souldierie. The Souldierie consists of Souldiers of the Kings Guard which are six hundred, diuided into fixe companies, commanded by the Monscoulis. There are ten other great Companies gathered together, each whereof hath a Captayne of the Grand Signiors of the Realme. These guard not, but serue the King, when hee hath any affaires, not onely as Souldiers to march and fight, but to doe all that hee commands, as to lanch a Ship, to draw it on dry land, or to doe such great worke where there is neede of men to build his Palace, if it bee needfull, or to make any worke or edifice for him. They call them and gather them together with the sound of a certayne Bell. They diuide them into parts, for there are fixe Companies which are more honourable, wherein they admit none but Gentlemen, and other fixe Companies meaner, of all sorts of persons.

None can bee entred into the Companies, before they haue permission of the King, and moreouer it costs him for his entrance sixtie Larins, twentie to the King for his permission, and fortie to distribute to the Companie whereof hee ought to bee. The Slaues therefore cannot bee inrolled, nor they which get their living and substance from the Coco Trees, nor any mechanickall and base people, and generally those which cannot write and reade, nor those which serue others. Moreouer they buy for the most part all Offices of the King, and they are greatly sought after by rich men, because of Honour, Authoritie, and Power, which they haue ouer others; but they may not sell, leaue, nor resigne them.

One name.

Titles.

Common people.

The Kings Palace.

All the Islanders haue but one name, without any surname or name of the familie, and vse frequently these names, Mahomet, Haly, Hussun, Affan, Ibrahim, and such others, but to know them, they distinguish them by their qualitie, which they adde in the end of their name as they that are of Noble race adde to their name Tacourou, and their Wiues Bybis: Moreouer they put also the Ile which is theirs. Those which are not Noble, but by their Office or qualitie, call themselves Callogues, and their Wiues and Daughters, Camullogues. Not those onely which I haue named vse these, but others obtayning of the King vacant functions, to bee separated from the Plebeians. They buy this dearly of the King, because the Names and Titles are limited to a certayne number. The common people are called with their proper Callo, and adde also the trade and condition whereof they are, their Wiues and Daughters Camulo.

The Palace of the King is built of Stone, composed of many handsome mansions and well built, yet without any ornament of Architecture, and of one storie. Round about it are Yards and Gardens, where are Fountaines and Cisternes of water, enclosed with walles and paved on the bottome with great smooth stones. These places are guarded continually by men appointed for it, because the King and Queenes wash themselves there, all others being strictly prohibited from washing there. In the inclosure of the Palace (called in their Language Gandoyre, which is very large) are many Lodgings and Courts, which haue all in the midst a Well garnished with faire white stones. In one of these Courts, are two Magasins of the King: in one he puts his Ordnance, in the other all other sorts of Munition.

Guard.

Two Halls.

At the entrance of the Palace is a Corps de guard, where are many Pieces of Ordnance, and other kindes of Armes. The Portall is made like a square Tower, vpon the top whereof on Feast dayes, players of Instruments play and sing. From thence they come to the first Hall, where the Souldiers wayte: a little further is another great Hall for the Signiors, Gentlemen, and persons of fashion. For none neither Signiors, nor Plebeian, man, woman, nor childe, dare goe further, except the domesticall Officers of the King and Queenes, and their Slaues and Seruitors. The pavement of these Halls are eleuated three foot aboue the ground, and neatly boarded with wood well playned. It is thus raised vp because of the Ants. Then the floore is after all couered with a little Matte, which they make in the Isles, interlaced in various colours, with Characters and other workes very finely contriued. The walls are hanged with Tapistrie of Silke; also vpon the plat-fonds, it is couered with tapestrie of silke, from which hangs round about faire fringes as a Curtaine. The King made the great Ensigne and Banner of our ship which was blue, where the the Armes of France were well made, to bee displayed in the Souldiers and Strangers hall.

In these Halls before the place where the King sits, there is another forme of Curtaines very rich, vnder which is a large place eleuated two foot, couered with a great Tapestry, hereon they sit crosse-legged, for they vse no other seats. Vpon these Mattes throughout all the hall, the Nobles which come to assemble together sit downe. In this sitting they obserue exactly the order of their Dignities: for they which are of lower degree, stay at the lower end, if the King or his Grandes which are there in his absence, bid them not sit. For the Gentlemen of the Ile of Male, and ordinarie Courtiers, which are bound to come and salute the King euerie day after noone, stay and sit in the second Hall, and may goe no further, wayting till the King come forth, or that they see some domesticke Officer, by whom they send the King word that they are come to salute him. Sometimes the King sends them while they are thus sitting, platters full of Bettell and Fruits, which they hold a great honour. The Gentry of the other Ilands come also and obserue the same customes that they doe of the Ile of Male: but they come not without Presents, for none is permitted to salute the King, neither Noble-man nor Merchant, without one.

The Chambers and inner Lodgings are well adorned, hanged with Tapestry of silke, enriched with flowers, boughes and branches of Gold, and of diuers colours. The people vse tapestry of Cotton, which is composed of many pieces of cloath of Cotton of all colours. Their Beds are hanged in the ayre by foure cords to a barre which is sustained with two pillers. They make the beds of the King and rich men in this sort, because they may rocke and shogge them more easily. They are accustomed when they are layd downe to make their folke touch and mooue their bodie, and chafe them easily, strike them little blowes with both their hands together, saying that is good against the Splene, and makes their grieve cease; also that it makes them sleepe soundly, and makes them forget the grieve of the member beaten and rubbed.

The ordinarie habillement of the King, is a white fine Robe of Cotton, or rather a Cassoque, descending to the girdle or a little lower, edged with white and blue, made fast before with massie buttons of Gold. With this he weares a piece of red imbroydered Taffetie, which reacheth from the girdle to the heele. This Taffetie is girded with a long large girde of Silke fringed with Gold, and a great chayne of Gold before, whereat hangs a great Jewell as big as a hand, of exquisite stones which may bee seene. Hee weares also a knife after the manner of the Countrey, but more richly wrought. Vpon his head hee hath a Bonnet of red Scarlet, which is much esteemed in this Countrey, and permitted to none but the King: this bonnet is laced with Gold, and on the top it hath a great button of massie Gold with a precious Stone; and although the Grandes and Souldiers weare their hayre long, yet hee hath his shaven euery weeke. Hee vseth to haue his legges alwayes bare as others, and weares only on his feet Pantoffles of gilded Copper, brought out of Arabia and made like sandals. Of which sort none but the Queenes and Princesses his kinswomen may weare. When the King goeth forth, hee hath a Sun-shadow or white Parosel, which is the principall Ensigne of Maiestie, carryed ouer him. This is permitted to none but Strangers who may haue what they will: alwayes there is one Page neere the King which carries a fanne, another the Kings Sword and Buckler, another a boxe full of Bettell and Arecqua, which hee chawes euery houre. A Doctor of the Law alwayes followes him, and neuer looeth sight of him, reading a Booke in his presence, and admonishing him of his Religion.

His exercises and ordinarie pastimes are not to goe out and fish as his predecessors vsed to doe, but to remayne for the most immured in his Palace, to court his Queenes, see his Courtiers, and many Mechanickes and Artificers worke, as Painters, Goldsmiths, Imbroiderers, Cutlers, Ioyners, Turners, Armorers, and others sorts which hee keepes in his Palace, and furnissheth them with matter to worke. Hee workes himselfe, and saith frequently that it is a sinne to bee idle. Hee hath a quicke and viue apprehension, and hath skill to worke in many Crafts and Mysteries, and is daily curious to learne: hee seekes out those which are excellent in any thing; if hee meet with any stranger that knowes that which he nor his Ilanders know not, he makes very much of him, that he may shew him his Art.

Going out of his Palace, hee is accompanied with his Souldiers, whereof hee hath a hundred euery day for his Guard. On Friday he goeth to the Mosche, in a faire order and kind of pompe, for the Souldiers goe in ranks, some before and some behinde, and so his ordinarie Officers: the Drums, Flutes, Trumpets, make good agreeable musicke. After seruice is done, hee returnes in the same order, the Souldiers going with the sound of Instruments playing among them and leaping before the King with their armes, and striking blowes with their Swords on one anothers Bucklers: shewing their agilitie, yet not all together, to auoyde confusion but two at a time onely, and so one after another without ceasing. The people of the Ile which are present goe home with him, and it should bee a shame to any one not to goe. Then the Pandare, Naybes, Catibes and Moudins, and principall Signiors, Gentlemen and Souldiers, which hee chooseth diuerly, dine with him, and after dinner hee imployes himselfe in doing Iustice. Moreouer, when the King goeth forth hee is alwayes on foot (for in these Ilands is neither Horse nor any Beast to ride on) except hee bee carried in a Chayre on his Slaues shoulders: but this is seldome, because he is strong and lustie & had rather go on foot. - Children and Princes of their blood, or else if they speake of them to others, it is in other termes which they vse not but for this, and dare not apply them to others. As if they say of a man hee sleepeth, if it bee of the King, they say, he slumbrath or takes his rest, which they neuer say but speaking of the King.
- Complement.
- Queenes, and their pompe. The Queenes are attired as other women formerly described, but in more costly manner. The Ladies, Wiues and Daughters of the Grand Signiors of the Ile, are bound to come see them in the euening, to passe the time with them. They goe sometimes forth, but it is very rare: and then there are women and slaues which goe a great way before, to aduertise the men that they retire and appeare not in the way, but onely the women, who assemble by their quarters and diuisions, and come to meet them with Presents of Flowers and Fruits. There are foure principall women which carry ouer the Queenes head a white Curtine of Silke reaching to the ground, so that they cannot be seene. They goe often to bath in the Sea, as all other women: for it is the custome of the Country, and they hold it very healthfull; for this cause therefore they haue prepared in the Sea a little inclosure, couered round with Cotton cloth, where the Queenes and great women bath: after they come out they haue another little house also made purposely where they bath againe in Fresh-water. Within the chambers of the Queenes, Princesses, and great Ladies they neuer see day, nor haue any other light but of Lamps, which burne continually. They retyre themselves into a part of the chamber, being enclosed with foure or fve rowes of Tapistry, which they must lift vp before they come where they are: but none neither man nor woman, domestical nor others dare lift vp the hindmost, although they are not laid, nor eating, in brieft although they be idle. They must first cough, and tell who they be, and then they call them or send them whither they thinke good. Neither women nor maids pull off the cloth which goes about their middle, but only their robe: the men doe so also, and dare not doe otherwise.
- Bathing in the salt and fresh-water,
- Perpetuall night.
- Reuenues. The Kings reuenues consists in his Crowne lands, which are many Ilands; and the duties which his subiects pay of the fruits which grow in the Countrie, that is to say, the fifth part of the graines which they sow, they giue the King a portion of their Cocos and Limons, they compound also throughout all the yeere for a certaine quantitie of Hony or fruit. Besides these duties the King imposeth an ordinary taxe on his subiects, according to their meanes, which consists in cords of Cocos, in shells called Boly, and dried Fish. For they giue him no mony for his Taxes and Rents, but onely when they buy Titles and Offices, and haue permission to weare their braueries. Also hee chargeth the Inhabitants of the Iles to make and furnish him yeerely Cotton clothes, which serueth him for his Souldiers, to whom hee giues thrice a yeere Cloth, besides their pay. The reuenew of the King consists also in merchandise: For all the Ships which arriue there, first goe to him, and declare what they haue brought, after they agree at a certaine price for that which hee will haue, which is very often the better part: after the people buy it at a dearer rate then the King; and then the King sends to distribute his merchandise throughout the Iles to the richest, at what price hee will; although they haue no vse of it, taking in exchange such merchandise, as hee hath need of, at a better price by halfe then it is worth. He sends often also Ships laden with merchandise of his Ile to other Countries. The King hath also besides these Royalties, whatsoever is found on the Sea shoare, and no man dare touch it to detain it, but is bound to take it vp and bring it him, whether it bee pieces of shipwrackt Ships, pieces of Wood, Coffers, or other things: or Amber Greece, which they call Gomen, hereof is the greatest quantitie in the Indies, and none dare keepe it on paine of hauing his hand cut off.
- Al paid in kind
- Cotton clothes
- Merchandise.
- Wrackes.
- Sea Nuts. Also there is a certaine Nut, which the Sea sometimes casts vp, which is as great as a mans head: they call it Tauarcarre, and suppose that it commeth of certaine trees that are vnder the sea: the Portugals call them Cocos of the Maldines. It is a thing very medicinable & of great price. Also the fishing for Blacke Corral appertaines to the King, who hath many men to make this fishing. The mony of the Kingdome is onely Siluer, and of one kind. These are pieces of Siluer which they call Larins, of the valew of eight Sols or thereabouts of our mony, long as a finger, but much folded. The King coynes them in his Iland, and imprints on them his name in Arabicke letters. The other monyes are Exotick coynes, and there goe current, but they take them not but at iust value, and at equall weights, and onely the Gold or Siluer, all other sorts of coyne which are not of the Countrie they reiect. For in India, as there are many Realmes and Signiories, so great diuersitie of mony, of stampe and character, not onely of Gold and Siluer, but also of an other mettall called Calin, which is white like Tin, and very hard, pure, and beautifull, whereof they make great esteeme in the Indies; they haue also Iron mony. But this kind of mony goeth onely in the Dominions of the Prince that coynes it. The Gold and Siluer of whatsoever stampe and character it be, is current through all Kingdomes according to the iust valew, which is of different valew from ours, because Siluer is dearer then here, and Gold baser. The King makes no lesser coynes then the Larin: so that to effect their merchandise, they cut the Siluer and giue in weight according to the valew of the merchandise: which is not without losse, for in cutting of a Larin they loose the twelfth part. They take no piece of Siluer which they haue not weighed, and put in the fire to try the goodnesse: euery one hath weights in his house for this purpose. Also in stead of little and base mony they vse shells, whereof 12000. goe at the valew of a Larin.
- Coynes.
- Buying.

All their Gold and Silver come from forraigne places, for they haue no coine in these Iles. In all their publique markets and particuler bargainings, they vse to exchange very often one thing for another. Bartering.

The Maldives are very well frequented with Merchants of many Countries, as of the Malabares, of Barcelor, Onor, Bacalor, Cananor, Calecut, Tananor, Cochin, Coulam, Cael: of the Guzerattes, of Cambaia, Surate, and Chaule of the Arabs, Persians, of those of Bengale, Saint Thoma and Masulipatan, Ceylan and Sumatra; which bring Merchandise whereof the Ilanders haue need and esteeme, and in recompence carrie away those things wherewith the Ilands abound. First of the Cocos tree, they make many kindes of things which the strangers seeke after, as Cordage, Merchants.

There is another sort of riches in the Ilands: These are little shells wherein there is a little creature, as great as the end of the little finger, all white, very smooth and glistering, which they fish for but twice a moneth, three dayes before, and three dayes after the new Moone, and likewise the Full, and finde them at no other season. The women gather them vpon the sands and flats of the Sea, being in the water to the girdle. They transport great quantities of them to other Countries, insomuch that I haue seene yeerely thirtie or fortie ships laden without any other commoditie. They goe all into Bengala: for there onely they buy them at great prices, and in great quantitie. They of Bengala make such esteeme of them, that they vse them as common money, although they haue Gold and Silver, and enough of other mettals: and that which is more maruellous, the Kings and Nobles build places to lay them vp in, and account them part of their Treasure. They giue twentie * measures of Rice for one fardell of Shells. For all these Bahys are put vp by fardells of twelue thousand together in little baskets made of the Cocos leafe, garnished within with cloath made of the same Tree, for feare the shells should fall out. They much esteeme in India Tortois shells, which they call Cambe. This sort of Tortois is found nowhere but there, and in the Philippinas: it is faire, very smooth, all blacke, with many naturall figures. They sell them best in Cambaia where they make (besides bracelets for women) faire Shell money.
* Coquettes.

Coffers and Cabbinets inlayed with siluer. They make heere very fine mattes of Reed of diuers colours, and enrich them with ornaments and ciphers very neatly. They haue also faire cloaths of Cotton and Silke. Exotike wares.

In counter-change of these the Merchants bring them Rice, white Cotton clothes, and cloath of Silke: Oyle which is made of an odoriferous Graine, wherewith they vse to rub their bodies when they haue bathed, Arecqua, Iron and Steele, Spices, Porcelane, and whatsoeuer they haue need of: and yet euery thing is very cheape by reason of the abundance, and ordinarie arriual of Ships. They bring also Gold and Silver, which neuer goeth forth againe: for they giue it not for any thing to Strangers, but put it among the Treasure and Jewels of their Wiues.

§. VI.

A larger discourse of their Religion, manifold Ceremonies, and absurd opinions.

The Authors departure and returne.

THeir Religion is Mahometan, their Temples or Moschees are builded square of hewen stone. They haue three doores, and at the entrie of each doore on the outside, there is a large Well whereinto they descend by degrees, the bottomes and sides are garnished with polished stone, in these they vse to bathe themselves. Moschees.

The Temple is eleuated nine or ten greeces; the floore of it is couered with Mattes and Tapistrie: they are very curious to keepe them neate and handsome; they dare not spit in them, nor blow their nose, but if they bring no handkerchiffe with them, if they haue any necessitie, they must goe forth. The rooffe is of wood, of excellent Carpenters worke, the wall waynscotted, whereon hang Tables of wood or stone, engrauen with letters and writings in Arabicke. There are separations of certaine places appointed to certaine persons, yet not to one particuler person, but for those which are of one order, estate, age, or qualitie, and none dare place himselfe in a place not appointed for his condition. Within the Temples are Lamps light continually. Euery Mosche hath a Moudin or Priest. Each day in the weeke, they goe at the breake of day to the Mosche, and there make a prayer according to their beliefe, that Order.
Lights and darknesse.

is to say, that the world is flat and not round, and that there is a wall of Copper about it, which hinders the world from being ouerwhelmed with the waters which inuiron it, and that the Deuill the enemy of Mankinde, seekes euery night to pierce thorow and vndermine this wall, and by day breake hee wants very little to haue made a hole thorow; for this cause all the men from fifteene yeeres old, goe at the point of day to their Moschees, to make prayers, saying that without their prayers all the world would perish. Their beliefe of the world, the Deuill and their Prayers.
They

- Five times a day praying. Women-recusants. They goe foure other times in a day to the Mosche: at mid-day, three houres after, at Sun-set, and ten a clocke in the euening, and tarie each time halfe an houre. The Women neuer enter into their Temples, but abide in their houses, and there make Prayers. Yet if they goe not to their Temples the ordinarie dayes of the weeke, they make their Prayers and Ceremonies in their houses or else-where: and although they constraîne none to doe thus; yet if they know of any that neglects it, they will neither eate nor communicate with them. Before they enter into the Temple, they wash their feete, hands, eares, mouth, and eyes, making also certaine Ceremonies, and pronouncing prayers, which are diuers according to the houres, feasts, occasions, for which they wash: If they make vrine, or doe their necessities, or touch their priuities, they wash and say their prayers destined for that: If they haue accompanied with a woman, they must bath and say their Prayers of another sort; if with their owne wife, of another sort. They wash and bath in publike and say their prayers so loude, that by the diuersitie of prayers according to the occasions, a man may know what they haue done in secret, and when they haue lyen with their wiues, or elle with others.
- Washing rites. They are all Circumcised, the males at seuen yeere old. Before an Infant is Circumcised, they say hee is an Innocent, and cannot sinne. For their Daughters, they make no feasts nor ceremonies, but for their Circumcision draw two or three drops of blood from their nature, then when they come to the age of ten yeeres old. All the yeere long they celebrate many Feasts. First euerie weeke they solemnize Friday. On Thursday in the euening, some make prayers for their health, others for the deceased: and therefore they prepare to eate and drinke, and send to their Priests or Moudins neere the place where their dead are interred, to pray to God for them: or else they inuite them to their houses, and there entertaine them. On Friday morning one goeth through the Ile carrying in his hand a kind of cast Bell, much resembling the couer of a Limbeck, with a hammer of wood, wherewith hee beates it: and at the end of euerie street hee staves, and admonisheth the people, that is their feast Oncourom or Friday. Hee is assisted with three persons which haue straight Trumpets, wherewith they often sound. The people being thus warned cease from their worke, and bathe and wash themselves, saying their Prayers. And each of them cloathes himselfe in his best attire, and all from the age of fifteene yeeres are bound to bee there. In the meane while on the portall of the Kings Palace, are players of diuers Instruments. Then the Kings foure Moudins all together ascend an Edifice of stone, high erected, joyning to the Mosche, putting their hands to their eares, crying thrice with all their might with a most fearefull voice all together in the Arabicke language, Alas, alas Aquebar, that is to say, Great God: and then they adde something of Mahomet.
- Diuersified deuotions. Then they goe to the Kings Palace; and the King, if hee will bee found, as hee is seldome defectiue, sends a Carpet of silke to spread in the place where he will sit: if hee doth not, it is a certaine signe hee will not bee found. When all the companie is assembled (and the King is come and hath made his prayers) the Catibe ascends a raised place of wood fixe or seuen steppes high. There hee holds a naked Sword in his hand, with the point downward, which hee often flourisheth this way and that way, and recites his prayers. All this time the people pray without ceasing, putting themselves in diuers postures, sitting, standing vpright, kneeling, their face grouellling to the earth, their hands lifted vp and cast downe, then crossed, turning their head and eyes hither and thither: it were very difficult to represent all the gestures and apish tricks which they doe in this time: then they put off their weapons, and their kniues, and dare haue nothing about them but their cloathes, and they also must bee very neate. The Catibe changeth his prayers euerie Friday to the end of the yeere, and then begins againe. Hee saith all by heart, and in the meane time one of the Moudins holds the Booke, and if it chanceth that hee faileth in one word, sillable, or letter, the Moudine reprehends him with a loud voyce and without dissembling: for they say, if hee should faile in one point, the Feast should bee nullified, and worth nothing.
- Circumcision. Females. On the dayes of their New Moone all the yeere long, they make the like Feast, and reioyce when they see the new Moone: then they make cleane their Houses, Courts, and all their streets and the wayes to the Mosches, and all the gates of their houses as well without as within, and they set on both sides Cocos shells cut in the middle, like wooden dishes, and fill them with white sand, and burning coales vpon it, scarce ceasing all the night to burne Aromaticke gummies, and odoriferous woods and perfumes: likewise within in their Houses, at the corners of their Beds and else-where, they besmeare and fashion all their doores and householdstufte at their feasts, with Sanders, and other sweet smelling odours beaten and tempered together; but about all, they solemnise foure New Moones in the yeere more then the others.
- Feasts. In the moneth of December or thereabouts at the New Moone, they obserue a feast called in Arabicke Ramedan: this begins at the new Moone, and ends at the new Moone following. This night the men and the women each by themselves visite one another, and feast, and reioyce together with banquets, dances and merriments, so that it is neere day before they retire. The day before, they bathe and make particuler ceremonies, cleanse and wash their teeth, and leaue their Bettell, and thence forward fast till night although the day be long, with such superstition, that they will not only not taste any thing, but also not wash their mouth, nor put their fingers in it, nor nor yet swallow their spittle. This causeth them often to spit, and diseaseth them much, especially at their Mesquit, where it is not lawfull for them to spit, but euer and anone they must goe forth for that purpose. The men may wash themselves * but not plunge their heads in water, lest some drop should enter their mouthes or eares: but the women dare not, lest the water should enter at their lower parts. Halfe an houre before Sunne-set, all which are fiftene yeeres old and vpwards goe to the Temple, that they may in that halfe houres space cleanse their mouthes and picke their teeth very exactly; to which purpose the Moudins furnish themselves all the Lent with Pick-tooths, and other instruments of neatnesse, made of the Coco wood. This done, the Moudin makes his crie three times, and enters the Temple; all the People are behinde him; thus they make their Prayers there, and the women in their houses; which ended, they make good cheere with their friends, and feast each other by course, hauing made prouision long before to that end; the poorest sparing before hand that they may haue to feast during the Ramedan. The King makes seuerall entertainments, one day feasting his Nobles, another his Souldiers, a third the Pandiare, Moudins and Religious persons; and all the people of the Ile in their differing rankes. The Nobles obserue the like custome for their friends and equals; for they religiously obserue this, not to eate with men of differing ranke and qualitie. Men and Boyes feast thus, the Women goe not, but send Presents and Viands one to another, and bathe themselves in the euening, at which time, men may not bee admitted to bathe. In the day-time the men neither marrie nor touch their women: and during the Ramedan they are more carefull to auoide sinne then at other times. And if any by occasion breakes any of the Fasting-dayes, hee fasteth as many after; which often happeneth by reason of their superstition, supposing their Fast defectiue, if they happe to bleed in any part. They will not in this moneth worke, be they neuer so poore, nor trauell or send out of their Ile.

The Pandiare (whom the Arabs call the Cadi) euery day preacheth at the Kings Palace, or at the Temple, or at his House, beginning at three after noone, and holding on two houres; and all the Inhabitants of the Ile of Malé assemble thither: this commonly in the vulgar Language, and sometimes in Arabike, which hee after interpreteth. They employ themselves the rest of the time in exercise of Armes and diuers playes, as at the Ball, in seuerall companies, with their feet: the women and daughters also haue their visitations and petie sports. The youths also and maidens court and make loue to each other more in that moneth then at other times; send each other Songs, Sonnets, and Verses written in Coco leaues (which are as white as Paper) inscribed or grauen with Bodkins; and send Garlands of the fairest and sweetest flowers to their Sweet-hearts. All deuise pastimes to entertaine that moneth. The women and maidens for their flowers sake must fast eight dayes more then the men, after the Ramedan is ended.

Three dayes before it ends, the Coly warneth all from the top of the Steeple to send their names to the Pandiare of Malé, as in other Ilands to the Naybe, to pay their offerings (halfe a Larin for each person) or else man and boy, woman and maide haue lost the merite of their fasting, saying it is their Tribute to God and Mahomet. They which haue it not may borrow, for the King and the richer sort will pay for all that aske; but if any will not indure the shame that another should pay for him, his name is recorded neuerthelesse, and he makes it his debt, to pay after the feast. Parents pay for their children till they be married and dwell from them, as also for their slaues. This money is after diuided into three parts: and foure Receiuers are appointed, one on behalfe of the King, another for the Church-men, the third for New Conuerter, the fourth for the Poore: there are eight Registers which record the offerings. It is after shared one part to the Priests, as the Pandiare, Naybes, Catibes, Moudins, Denanits, and others of their Church: The second to the Conuerter, the third to the Poore. On the last day of the Fast is celebrated a great feast called Ydu. The day is no more certaine then the beginning of the Ramedan (which is when they first see the New Moone, as in all their Moon-feasts, not at the change but at the appearance, which is therefore) sooner or later in one Iland then another, as it hath had cleerer weather or sooner sight. Their May Ydu, a three dayes solemnitie; and their Poycacan at the Full Moone about Aprill or May; and their Dida, or All-Soules feast in Iune, when they visit the Sepulchres and there set viands; and their Candis Cacan in August; and Maulude or Night-feast in October (the night that Mahomet died) with the seuerall ceremonies thereof, as also of their Marriages and Funerals, I dare not present you for feare of tediousnesse.

Wee will therefore returne with our Authour, and free you also from the Maldines. Tenne dayes before his libertie he had a dreame that hee was free and in Christendome, whereat hee much reioyced, and awaking made a vow to make a Voyage to S. Iames of Galicia, to giue God thanks. Two nights after the King was told of an Armada of sixteene Gallies or Gallions comming thither. The King commanded to rigge his seuen Gallies with other Ships, Barkes and Boates. This was attempted with all industrie, but could not be effected before the Enemies Fleet came in sight. Thereupon he charged that all his best goods should be embarked,

S. Augustin in diuers places mentions the Christians of those parts of Africa in his time, not washing till the Fast were ended.

so to save himselfe and his women in the Southerne Iles. He forsooke his Palace, and fled with his three Queenes, each of them carried in armes by Gentlemen, as Nurses carrie their Infants; covered with Vailes and Taffataes of diuers colours. The streets were full of cries of women and infants. He was forced to leaue great part of his goods and all his Armes and Ordnance behind for want of time; and with much lamentation set sayle for the South, to the Atollons of Sonadon. But the winde fayled, and the Enemie sent eight Gallies after him, in fight with whom the King was slaine, and his wiues and goods taken. The other eight entered on land, and the Authour yeelded to them, and being found not to be a Portugall, was spared. They stayd ten dayes to lade their Gallies with the goods which they found, and with fise or sixe score peeces of Ordnance great and small (a principall cause of their Voyage) and then departed, lea-

His arrivall in Malicut a small Ile, and the Iles Dinandron thirty leagues thence, and at last at Chatigan in Bengala, I omit. At his departure from Bengala, the Mogol had denounced warre to the chiefe King of Bengala, who prepared to entertaine him with aboute a million of men and ten thousand Elephants. The Kings of Aracan and Chaul, and other great Lords, Mahumetans and Gentiles were his Tributaries, and were bound to finde him a certaine number of men and horses. The successe is related by others, and other things many of many other Indian Regions are related by the Authour, whom wee are willing now to dismisse, hauing entertained him only for a Maldinan Guide and Pilot.

The particulars of his returne he relateth at large: first his passage from Bengala to Mon-tingué, gouerned by a petie Prince, a Nairo, subiect to the Samory of Calecut. It is seated betwixt Cananor and Calecut, and is a Port of the Malabar Pirats. He was here much amazed to see so many in Armes, borne by all from ten or twelue yeeres. There are ten other neere Ports within ten small leagues of each other, Chombais, Badara, &c. But Moutingué is the best.
Thence he went to Calicut, and waiting eight moneths for a Holland ship in vaine, he was perswaded by Iesuites to goe to Cochin, where he was imprisoned for a Spie. At Goa also hee was prisoner with those which remained of the seuentene Englishmen taken at the Barre of Surrat.
The Iesuits had brought one Master Richard and foure other Englishmen from the Mogols Court; some Hollanders also were there: and they all were prisoners together. But the Iesuits vndertooke for them, and procured their libertie; namely Thomas Steuens an Englishman, Rector of 10 Margon Colledge in Salsete, and Nicolas Trigaut a Wallon, and Steuens Crosse a Frenchman of Roan, with Gasspar Aleman a Spaniard. The said Thomas Steuens procured the libertie of the Englishmen also, foure of which became Catholike-Romanists, and two of them died there. Don Loys Lorencio d'Establa arriued at Goa with the title of Vicc-roy, to the peoples great grieve, which more desired Don Andre Furtado. Ten moneths after his comming, foure great Caracks arriued, contayning each about two thousand tunnes. Fise had departed from Lisbon, but they knew not what was become of the fift, separated by tempest at the Cape. In each were em-barqued a thousand persons, Souldiers, Mariners, Iesuites, and other Church-men, with Merchants and Gentlemen. But when they arriued at Goa, there were not about three hundred in each, by reason of sicknesse and miseries endured eight moneths at Sea, without sight of Land.
40 These brought an Edict from the King, forbidding English, French, or Dutch commerce, and if there were any such there, to packe them away vpon perill of their liues. On the sixe and twentieth of December, 1609. He returned for Lisbon. March the fifteenth, 1610. they arriued at the Ile of Diego Rodrigue, in 20. Southerne degrees, about forty leagues East from Saint Laurence. After a cruell storme there fise dayes together, they attained the Cape, Saint Helena, Brasill, the Acores, the Berlings, and hauing payed his vow to Saint Iames in Galicia, he arriued at Rochell, the sixteenth of Februarie, 1611.

the Discoveries of the World.

N the yeere 1153. * in the time of Fredericke Barbarossa it is written, that there came to Lubeo, a Citie of Germanie, one Canoa with certaine Indians, like vnto a long Barge: which seemed to haue come from the coast of Baccalaos, which standeth in the same latitude that Germanie doth: The Germanes greatly wondered to see such a Barge, and such People, not knowing from whence they came, nor vnderstanding their speech, especially because there was then no knowledge of that Countrey, as now there is: it may be credible that though the Boate was small in respect of those huge Seas, yet the Winde and Water might bring them thither: as wee see in these our dayes, that the Almaase, which is but a small Boate, commeth notwithstanding from Quiloa, Mosambique, and Sofala, to the Iland of Saint Helena, being a small spot of Land standing in the mayne Ocean off the coast of Bona Sperança so farre separated.

In the yeere 1300. after the coming of Christ, the great Soldan of Cairo commanded, that the Spiceries and Drugs, and merchandises of India should be carried through the Red Sea, as it was vsed before: at which time they unladed on the Arabian side, at the Hauent of Iuda, and carried them vnto the house at Mecca, and the Carriers of it were the Pilgrims. So that each Prince vsed a custome to augment the honour, and increase the profite of his countrey. And these Soldans had speciall regard to Canro, from whence the wares were carried vnto the Countreies of Egypt, Lybia, Africa, the Kingdomes of Tunez, Tremessen, Fez, Marocco, Suz: and some of it was carried beyond the Mountaines of Atlas vnto the Citie of Tambuto, and the Kingdome of the Ialophos: vntill afterwards that the Portugals did bring it about the Cape of Bona Sperança vnto the Citie of Lisbone, as in the place conuenient we purpose to shew more at large.

In the yeere 1344. King Peter the fourth of that name reigning in Arragon, the Chronicles of his time report, that one Don Luis of Cerda, sonne vnto the sonne of Don Iohn of Cerda, craued aide of him to goe and to conquere the Iles of the Canaries, standing in 28. degrees of latitude to the North, because they were giuen vnto him by Pope Clement the sixt, which was a French man.

* This Author writ in Portugall a Summarie of Discoveries in Chronologicall order from the beginning of the world: hee was translated and published in a small book in quarto, An. 1601. by Master Hakluyt, I haue chosen these, which follow, out of his booke: those which are here omitted, I haue more fully deliuered in other parts of this voluminous worke: Ioannes Leo Africanus. Ramusius 1. vol. fol. 373. Tombuto. The Canarie Ilands.

Whereby in those dayes there grew a knowledge of those Ilands in all Europe, and specially in Spaine: for such great Princes would not begin nor enterprise things of such moment without great certaintie.

vered by Macham an English man.

About this time also the Iland of Madera was discovered by an English man, called Macham: who sailing out of England into Spaine, with a woman of his, was driuen out of his direct course by a tempest, and arrived in that Iland, and cast his anker in that Haven, which now is called Machico, after the name of Macham. And because his Louer was then Sea-sicke, hee there went on Land with some of his companie, and in the meane time his ship weyed and put to Sea, leaving him there: whereupon his Louer for thought died. Macham, which greatly loued her, built in the Iland a Chappell or Hermitage to burie her in, calling it by the name of Iesus Chappell: and wrote or graued vpon the stone of her Tombe his name and hers, and the occasion whereupon they arriued there. After this hee made himselfe a Boate all of a Tree, the trees being there of a great compasse about, and went to Sea in it with those men of his companie that were left with him, and fell with the coast of Africke without Saile or Oare, and the Moores among whom hee came tooke it for a miracle, and presented him vnto the King of that countrie: and that King also admiring the accident, sent him and his companie vnto the King of Castile.

In the yeere 1395. King Henrie the third of that name reigning in Castile, the information which Macham gaue of this Iland, and also the ship wherein hee went thither, moued many of France and of Castile to goe and discouer it, and the great Canarie: And they which went were principally the Andaluzes, the Biscaines, and the Gnepussees, carrying with them many people and horses. But I know not whether the charge of that voyage was theirs or the Kings. But by whomsoever it was set out, they seeme to bee the first that discouered the Canaries, and landed in them: where also they tooke one hundred and fiftie of the Ilanders prisoners. Concerning the time of this discouerie, there is some difference among the Writers: for some affirme this to bee done in the yeere 1405.

THe Chronicles of Portugall haue this record, That after the Incarnation of Christ 1415. King Iohn the first of that name King of Portugall, departed from the Citie of Lisbone with the Prince Don Duarte or Edward, and Don Peter, and Don Henrie his sonnes, with other Lords, and Nobles of his Realme, and sailed into Africa, where he tooke the great Citie of Centa, standing on the North side thereof betwene 35. and 36. degrees in latitude: which was one of the principall causes of the enlarging of the Dominions of Portugall.

When they were come from thence, Henrie, the Kings third sonne, desirous to enlarge the Kingdome, and to discover strange and unknowne Countries, being then in Algarbe, gaue direction for the discoverie of the coast of Mauritania. For in those dayes none of the Portugals had euer passed the Cape de Non, standing in 29. degrees of latitude. And for the better accomplishing of this discoverie, the aforesaid Don Henrie prepared a fleete, and gaue commandement to the chiefe Captaines to proceede in discoverie from the aforesaid Cape forward : Which they did. But when they came to another Cape named Bgiador, there was not one of them that durst goe farther or beyond it : at which fearfull and cowardly faintnesse of theirs, the Prince was exceedingly displeased.

In the yeere 1417. King John the second reigning in Castile, and his mother Lady Katharine then vsing the gouernment, one Monsieur Ruben of Bracamonte, which was then Admirall of France, craued the conquest of the Ilands of the Canaries, with the title to be King of them, for a kinsman of his, called Monsieur John Betancourt: which being granted him by the Queene, and farther also partly furnished out, he departed from Seuil with a good armie: But the chiefe or principall cause that moued him to enter into this action, was to discover and perfectly to take a view of the Iland of Madera, whereof Macham before had giuen so much information. But for all that he went vnto the Canaries, and carried with him a Friar, called Mendo, to bee as Bishop thereof, admitted by Pope Martin the fift. When they were landed, they wonne Lancerota, Fortentura, Gomera, and Ferno: from whence they sent into Spaine many Slaues, Hony, Waxe, so Comfora or Camfire, Hides, Orchall, Figs, Sanguis Draconis, and other merchandises, whereof they made good profit: And this Armie also, as they report, discovered Porto Santo. The Iland that they inhabited was Lancerota, where they buile in it a Castle of stone for their better defence and securitie.

In the yeere 1418. one Iohn Gonzales Zarco, and Tristram Vaz Teixeira, household Gentlemen vnto Don Henrie the Kings third sonne, perceiving the desire that their Master had to discover new Countries, and willing in that course to doe him some seruice, craued of him a Barke, and licence to vndertake the action: which they obtayned, and sailed to the coast of Africa: where they were overtaken with a terrible tempest; but they were succoured, by falling with the Land, and entring into an Hauen called Santo, where they landed, and remayned two yeeres, and

In the yeere 1420. they discovered the Iland of Madera, where they found the Chappell and the Stone and Tombe, whereupon the foresaid Macham had grauen his name. There are others that write, that a certaine Castilian, perceiving the desire and fauour to Navigation, which Don

Henrie had, told him that they had found the Iland of Porto Santo; which being but a small thing they made no reckoning of it. Don Henrie sent Bartholomew Perestrelo, Iohn Conzales Zarco, Tristram Vaz Teixeira, and by the signes and likelihoods that they had received, they went to Porto Santo, and there remayned two yeeres: and after that, namely, in the yeere 1420. they sailed also to the Iland of Madera, where they found the memoriall and moniment of the afore-said Macham the English man.

Porto Santo.

As for Monfieur Betancourt, who entred into the Conquest of the Canaries, as is above mentioned, he was slaine in the middest of the action, and left behinde him for his heire a kinsman of his, called Monfieur Menante, who after that sold the said Ilands of the Canaries vnto one Peter Barba of Sinil. There are other which speake otherwise, and say, that Monfieur Iohn Betancourt went into France to prepare a new Armie about this Conquest, and left there a Nephew of his; who because he heard no more of his Vncle, and saw that hee could not maintaine the warres any longer, he sold the Canaries to Don Henrie the King of Portugals third sonne, for a certaine thing that he gaue him in the Iland of Madera.

The Canarie Ilands sold o-uer to a Spaniard.

In the yeere 1424. they write that the said Don Henrie prepared a Nauie and Armie to conquer these Ilands, wherein there went as Captaine Generall, one Don Fernando de Castro; and by reason of the valiantnesse and warlike behaviour of the people, they had the repulse: whereupon Don Ferdinando, considering the great charge, and little or no good successe, hee gaue ouer the action, and returned back againe. After this Don Henrie resigned ouer these Ilands to the Crowne of Castile, in consideration of the aides which Betancourt had received. But the Castilians agree not vnto this report. For they say, that neither the Kings of Portugall, nor Don Henrie would render the Ilands, till they came in question before Pope Eugenius the fourth; who fully vnderstanding the matter, gaue the Conquest of the Ilands by order of iudgement vnto the King of Castile in the yeere 1431. whereupon this contention ceased touching the Title of the Canaries, betweene the Kings of Portugall and of Castile.

Barros Decad. 1. lib. 1. cap. 12.

The Canaries came to the Crowne of Spaine in the yeere 1431. Description of the Canaries.

These Ilands being in number seuen, were called by the name of Fortunate, standing in 28. degrees to the North: where the longest day is but thirteene houres, and the longest night as much, lying distant from Spaine two hundred leagues, and from the Coast of Africa eightene leagues. The people were Idolaters, and did eate their flesh raw for want of fire: they had no Iron, and sowed without any toole: they tilled and raised the ground with Oxe hornes, and Goats hornes.

The ancient manners of Canarians.

Euery Iland did speake a seuerall language. They tooke many wiues, and knew them not carnally vntill they had deliuered them to the Superiours. They had diuers other Paganish customs: but now the Christian faith is planted among them. The commodities of these Ilands are Wheat, Barly, Sugar, Wine, and certaine birds, called Canarie birds, much esteemed in Spaine and other places.

The commodities of the Canaries.

In the Iland of Ferro they haue none other water, but that which proceedeth in the night from a Tree, compassed with a cloud, whence water issueth, seruing the whole Iland both Men and Cattell, a thing notorious and knowne to very many.

A Tree yeelding abundance of water in Ferro.

In the yeere 1428. it is written that Don Peter, the King of Portugals eldest sonne, was a great traoueller. He went into England, France, Almaine, and from thence into the Holy Land, and to other places; and came home by Italie, taking Rome and Venice in his way: from whence hee brought a Map of the World, which had all the parts of the World and Earth described. The Streight of Magelan was called in it, The Dragons taile: The Cape of Bona Sperança, The forefront of Afrike, and so forth of other places: by which Map, Don Henrie the Kings third sonne, was much helped and furthered in his Discoveries.

See Tom. 2. l. 7. c. 5. M. Iacksons report from his owne eyes. A most rare & excellent Map of the world. A great helpe to Don Henrie in his Discoveries.

It was told mee by Francis de Sosa Tauares, that in the yeere 1528. Don Fernando the Kings sonne and heire did shew him a Map, which was found in the studie of Alcobaza, which had beene made one hundred and twentie yeetes before, which Map did set forth all the Nauigation of the East Indies, with the Cape of Bona Sperança, according as our later Maps haue described it. Whereby it appeareth, that in ancient time there was as much or more discovered, then now there is. Notwithstanding all the traouaile, paines, and expences in this action of Don Henrie, yet he was neuer wearie of his purposed Discoveries. At length, there was a seruant of his, called Gilianes, that first passed the Cape Boiador, a place before terrible to all men: and hee brought word that it was not so dangerous, as it was reported: for on the other side of it he went on land, and in manner of taking possession, set in the ground a Crosse of wood, to bee as a marke and token afterwards of his discoverie so farre. In the yeere 1433. in the moneth of August, Don Iohn died, and his sonne Don Duarte or Edward succeeded him in his Kingdome.

As much discovered in ancient time as now is.

Barros Decad. 1. lib. 1. cap. 4. Cape Boiador first passed. Anno 1432. The death of Don Iohn the first of Portugall.

In the yeere 1434. Don Henrie set out one Alfonso Gonzaes Baldaia, and Gilianes afore-said, and they went to another Cape, which was beyond the former, and going on land perceiued the Countrie to be inhabited: and because they were desirous to satisfie Don Henrie, with as much relation and knowledge as they could get, they continued their voyage, and went forward, till they came to a certaine point of Land, from whence they turned backe againe. In the yeere 1438. King Edward, whom the Portugals call Don Duarte, died, and Don Alphonso the Prince being young, Don Peter his Vncle, gouerned the Kingdome.

The death of Don Henrie
1463.
Sierra Leona.

In the yeere 1441. Don Henrie sent out two ships, and the Captaines were in the one Tristan, and Antonie Gonsales in the other. Being put to Sea they tooke a prize vpon the Coast; and sailed on to Cape Blanco, that is, the White Cape, standing in 20. degrees, and informed Don Henrie of the state of that Countrie by the Moores, which they brought from thence. Whereupon hee sent one Fernan Lopez de Sauado, to giue knowledge thereof to Pope Martin, trusting to make these things commodious to Holy Church. Vpon which knowledge the Pope granted Indulgences and euerlasting pardon, and all other things demanded of him, vnto those which should die in this enterprise. After this, in the yeere 1443. Don Henrie commanded Antonie Gonsales to carry backe the slaues which he had brought, and to ransom them in their Countrie: Which he did, and the Moores gaue them in trucke for them againe blacke Moores with curled haire, 10 and some gold; so that now that place is called Rio de Oro, that is, the Golden Riuer; whereby the desire of the Discouerie might be the more increased.

Not long after he sent out another, named Nunnez Tristan, who came vnto the Ilands of Arguin, where he tooke more slaues, and brought them to Portugall in the yeere 1444. Hereupon also one Lansarote, a Groom of Don Gilians chamber, with others associated with him, armed out certaine ships, which went coasting till they came to the Ilands of Garze, where they tooke two hundred slaues: which were the first that were brought from thence to Portugall.

In the yeere 1445. there went as Captaine of a Barke one Gonsalo de Syntra, an Esquire belonging to Don Henrie into those parts; and he went on Land, where he was taken with fixe or seuen more of his companie, which place was therefore called after his name, Angra de Gonsaluo de 20 Syntra. This was the first losse, which the Portugals receiued in their Discoueries.

In the yeere following, Don Henrie sent out three Carauels, wherein went as Captaines Antonie Gonsales, Diego Aloizio, and Gomes Perez, who had their direction, not to enter into Rio de Oro, nor to beare themselves disorderly, but to trauaile in peace, and to conuert as many Infidels as they could to Christianitie. But none of these things were performed by them; for they returned without doing any memorable act. In the same yeere 1446. another Esquire belonging to the King of Portugall, called Denis Fernandes, of the Citie of Lisbone, entred into these Discoueries, more to win fame then to reape commoditie by them. And he being in his voyage came to the Riuer of Sanaga, standing betweene 15. and 16. degrees of latitude towards the North, where he tooke certaine Negroes; and not contented therewith, hee went forward and discou- 30 red Cape Verde, standing in 14. degrees on the same side; and there hee set vp vpon the Land a Crosse of wood, and then returned with great contentation.

In the yeere 1447. one Nunnez Tristan went forth to discouer in a Carauell, and he passed the aforesaid Cape Verde, and Rio Grande, and went past it vnto another, standing beyond it in 11. degrees, where he was also taken with eightene Portugals more: but the ship came home againe in safetie, conducted by foure or fise which escaped the hands of the Negroes.

In this yeere also 1447. it hapned that there came a Portugall ship through the Streight of Gibraltar; and being taken with a great tempest, was forced to run Westwards more then willingly the men would, and at last they fell vpon an Iland which had seuen Cities, and the people spake the Portugall tongue, and they demanded if the Moores did yet trouble Spaine, whence they had 40 fled for the losse which they receiued by the death of the King of Spaine, Don Roderigo. The Boatswaine of the ship brought home a little of the Sand, and sold it vnto a Gold-smith of Lisbon, out of the which hee had a good quantitie of gold. Don Pedro vnderstanding this, being then Gouvernour of the Realme, caused all the things thus brought home, and made knowne, to be recorded in the house of Iustice. There be some that thinke, that those Ilands whereunto the Portugals were thus driuen, were the Antiles, or New Spaine, alleaging good reasons for their opinion, which here I omit, because they serue not to my purpose. But all their reasons seeme to agree, that they should be that Countrie, which is called Nona Spagna.

In the yeere 1449. the King Don Alfonso gaue licence vnto his Vncle Don Henrie, to inhabit the Ilands of the Azores, which were long before discovered. And in the yeere 1458. this King 50 went into Africa, and there hee tooke the Towne, called Alcazer. And in the yeere 1461. hee commanded Signior Mendez, a Gentleman of his House, to build the Castle of Arguin, whereof he gaue vnto him the government, as to his Lieutenant.

In the yeere 1462. there came into the Realme of Portugall three Genowais of good parentage, the chiefe of whom vvas called Antonie de Noli, and of the other two, the one was his brother, the other was his nephew, and each of these had his seuerall ship, crauing libertie of Don Henrie to discouer the Ilands of Cape Verde, which was granted them. Others say, that the places which they discovered, were those vvhich Antiquitie called the Gorgades, Hesperides, and Dorcadés: but they named them Mayo, Saint Iago, and Saint Philip, because they discovered them on those Saints dayes: but they are also called by some, the Ilands of 60 Antonio.

In the yeere following 1463. this good noble man Don Henrie died, leauing from Cape De Non, discovered vnto the mountaine called Sierra Leona, standing on this side the Line in eight degrees of latitude, where no man had beene before that time.

In the yeere 1469. the King of Portugall did let out for yeerely Rent the trade of Guiney vnto one called Fernan Gomez, which Countrey afterwards was called The Mine. He let it out for five yeeres, for two hundred thousand Reyes by the yeere (which is of our English money, one hundred thirty eight pounds seuentene shillings nine pence halspeny) and added vnto his lease this condition, that euery yeere he should discover an hundred leagues. In the yeere following, which was 1470. this King went into Africa, with his sonne Prince Iohn, where they tooke the Towne of Arzila, and the people of the Citie of Tanger fled out for feare, and that he took also. It seemeth that good fortune followeth a couragious attempt.

Aren*, and Iohn de Seomar; and they went and found the Mine in 5. degrees of latitude. And the next yeere, which was 1472. one Fernando de Poo discovered the Iland now called after his name. Also about this time the Ilands of Saint Thomas, and Del Principe were discovered, standing vnder the Line, with the firme Land also, wherein is the Kingdome of Benin, reaching to the Cape De Santa Katarina, standing on the South side of the Line in 3. degrees. The man that made this Discoverie was a seruant of the Kings, and his name was Sequeira. Many suppose, that then also there were those places, Countries and Ilands discovered, which before were neuer knowne to vs since the Flood.

In the yeere 1484. the foresaid King Iohn sent out one Diego Caon a Knight of his Court to discover: and he went to the Riuer of Congo, standing on the South side in 7. or 8. degrees of latitude; where he erected a Pillar of stone with the Royall Armes and Letters of Portugall, wherein he wrote the commandement that he had receiued from the King, with the time and day of his being there. From thence he went vnto a Riuer neere the Tropike of Caprerne, setting still vp Pillars of stone where he thought it conuenient, and so came backe againe vnto Congo, and to the King of that Countrey: who thereupon sent an Ambassador and men of credit into Portugall.

In the next yeere or the second following, one Iohn Alonso d'Aueiro came from the Kingdome of Benin, and brought home Pepper with a taile: which was the first of that kind seene in Portugall.

In the yeere 1487. King Iohn sent to discover India ouer Land. In which Iourney went one Pedro de Couillan a seruant of the Kings, and Alfonso de Payua, because they could speake the Arabian tongue. They went out in the moneth of May, and the same yeere they tooke shipping at Naples, and arriued in the Ile of Rhodes, and lodged in the house that was prouided for the Portugall Knights of that order: from thence they went to Alexandria, and so to Cairo, and thence to the Hauen of Toro in the companie of the Carauans or Carriers which were Moors. There they tooke shipping, and being on the Red Sea they arriued at the Citie of Aden, and there they separated themselues: for Alfonso de Payua went towards Ethiopia, and Pedro de Couillan into India. Who came into the Cities of Cananor and Calicut, and came backe vnto Goa: where he tooke shipping vnto Sofala, being on the Coast of Africa in the Southerne latitude of 20. degrees, to see the Mines that were of so great name. From Sofala he turned backe to Mosambique, and vnto the Cities of Quiloa, Mombaza, and Melinde, till he came backe againe vnto the Citie of Aden: where he and Alfonso de Payua diuided themselues: and thence hee sayled againe through the Red Sea vnto the Citie of Cayro, where he thought to haue met with his companion: but there hee heard that he was dead by the Letters that he receiued from King Iohn his Master; in which Letters he was farther commanded to trauell into the Countrey and Dominions of Presbyter Iohn. Vpon this commandement he prouided for his farther Iourney, and from Cayro went backe againe to the Hauen of Toro, and from thence to Aden, where hee had bene twice before: and there hearing of the fame of the Citie of Ormuz, he determined to goe thither; and therefore went along the Coast of Arabia vnto the Cape Razalgate standing vnder the Tropike of Cancer, and from thence he went to Ormuz, standing in 27. degrees on that side. There he learned and vnderstood of the Straight of Persia, and of that Countrey: and entred there into the Red Sea, and passed ouer to the Realme of the Abassini, which commonly is called Presbyter Iohns Countrey or Ethiopia: and there he was detained till the yeere 1520. when there came thither the Ambassador Don Roderigo de Lima: This Pedro de Couillan was the first Portugall that euer knew and saw the Indias and those Seas, and other places adjoyning thereunto.

Hee being sufficiently furnished for this enterprise departed from the Towne of Palos the 10 third day of August, hauing with him as Captaines and Pilots Martin Alfonso Pinzon, Francis Martinez Pinzon, Vincent Yannes Pinzon, and Bartholomew Columbus his brother, with an hundred and twenty persons more in his companie: and some affirme that they were the first that sayled by latitudes.

Contention
betweene the Kings of Spaine and Portugall.

Hereupon there grew such a common desire of trauell among the Spaniards, that they were ready to leape into the Sea to swimme, if it had beene possible, into those new-found parts.
The aforesaid companie of Columbus, at their comming home, tooke in their way the Iles of the Azores, and the fourth day of March in the yeere 1493. the entred into the barre of Lisbon:
which discoverie pleased not the King of Portugall. Whereupon rose a contention betweene those two Kings.

The Bull of donation.

Christopher Columbus being arriued, went presently into Castile with the newes of all things, and acquainted the King Fernando with the discontentednesse of the King of Portugall: whereupon he and the Queene Isabella his wife sent streight word thereof vnto Pope Alexander the Sixt, whereat he and the Italians were in great admiration, maruelling that there was any more Land besides that which was vnder the Romanes. But the end of this matter was this: Alexander the Pope gaue these Countries by his Iudgement vnto the Kingdomes of Leon and Castile; with this condition, That they should labour to extirpate Idolatrie, and plant the holy Faith in those Countries.

Fernando the King hauing receiued this answer, was glad of it, and sent Christopher Columbus againe on the former Voyage, hauing made him Admirall, and giuen him other honours, 30 with particular Armes, and a Poëse written about his Armes to this effect. For Castile and for Leon, A new world found out Colon.

In the yeere 1493. the five and twentieth of the moneth of October Christopher Columbus went back vnto the Antiles, and from Cadiz he tooke his course, hauing in his companie seuenteene ships, and fiftene hundred men in them, with his brethren Bartholomew Columbus, and Diego Columbus, with other Knights, Gentlemen, men of Law, and Religious men, with Chalices, Crosses, rich ornaments, and with great power and dignitie from Pope Alexander; and the tenth day after their setting forth, they arriued at the Canaries; and from thence in five and twenty or thirty dayes they sayled vnto the Antiles; and the first Iland that they saw standeth in 14. degrees towards the North, due West from Cape Verde on the coast of Africa. They say 40 that the distance from thence to the Canaries is eight hundred leagues. The name they gaue it was Descada, that is, the Desired or wished Iland, for the great desire which the companie had to come to sight of Land. After that they discovered many more which they named the Virgines, which the Naturals of the Countrie call the Caribas, for that the men of that Countrie are good warriors, and shoot well in Bowes. they poison their Arrowes with an herbe, whereof he that is hurt dieth, biting himselfe like as a mad Dog doth.

Boriquen or
S. Iohn de Porto ricco.

From these Ilands and others they went vnto the principall Iland there, which they of the Countrie doe call Boriquen, and the Spaniards call it Saint Iohn, and thence to Hispaniola or Isa-bella, where they found all the men dead which there they had left. Here the Admirall left the most part of the people to plant it, and appointed his brethren to bee Gouernours there: and 50 so tooke two ships, and went to discover the other side of the Iland of Cuba, and from thence to Iamaica. All these Ilands stand from 16. vnto 20. degrees of Northerly latitude. In the meane time that the Admirall sayled about, his brethren and they that were left with them were much troubled, because the Sauages did rise against them. So that Christopher Colon went backe againe into Spaine, to tell the King and Queene of his adventures.

See sup. l. 2. c. 1.
§. 7.

In the yeere 1494. and in the moneth of January there was an agreement made of the differences which were betweene the two Kings of Spaine and Portugall. For the which agreement there were sent out of Portugall Ruy de Sosa, and Don Iohn his sonne, and the Doctor Ayres de Almada: and for the King of Spaine there were Don Henry Henriques, Don Iohn de Cardenas, and the Doctor Maldonado. All these met in the Towne of Tordesillas, and they diui- 60 ded the World from the North to the South by a Meridian which standeth West from the I-lands of Cape Verde 300. leagues: so that the one halfe which lay to the East should belong vnto Portugall, and that which lay to the West to the King of Spaine, whereby notwithstanding liber-tie to trauell was left equall vnto both. In the yeere following 1495. Iohn King of Portugall died, and Emmanuel his Cousin began to raigine.

In the yeere 1496. there was a Venetian in England, called John Cabota, who hauing knowledge of such a new Discoverie as this was, and perceiuing by the Globe, that the Ilands before spoken of stood almost in the same Latitude with his Countrey, and much neerer to England then to Portugall, or to Castile, hee acquainted King Henrie the seuenth then King of England with the same, wherewith the said King was greatly pleased, and furnished him out with two Ships and three hundred men: which departed and set sayle in the Spring of the yeere, and they sayled Westward till they came in sight of land in 45. degrees of Latitude towards the North, and then went straight Northwards till they came into 60. degrees of Latitude, where the day is eightene houres long, and the night is very cleere and bright. There they found the ayre cold, and great Ilands of ice, but no ground in an hundred fathoms sounding: and so from thence finding the land to turne Eastwards, they trended along by it discovering all the Bay and Riuer named Descada, to see if it passed on the other side: Then they sayled backe againe till they came to 38. degrees toward the Equinoctiall line, and from thence returned into England. There be others which say, that hee went as farre as the Cape of Florida, which standeth in 25. degrees.

In the yeere 1497. the King of Spaine Don Fernando sent out Christopher Columbus with sixe ships, and hee himselfe prouided two ships at his owne cost, and sending his brother before, he made sayle from the Bay of Cadiz, carrying with him his Son Don Diego Colon. It was then reported that he went to take the Iland of Madera, because he mistrusted the French men, & therefore sent thither three ships: others say it was to the Canaries. But howsoeuer it was, this is true, that he and three more went vnto the Ilands of Cape Verde, and ranne along by the line finding great calmes and raine, and the first land which they came vnto of the Antiles was an Iland standing in 9. degrees of Latitude towards the North joyning fast vnto the maine land, which they called La Trinidada; and so he entred into the Gulfe of Paria, and came out of the mouth which they name Bocca de Dragone, or the Dragons mouth: and they tooke their course hard by the Coast, where they found three small Ilands, which they named Los Testigos, that is to say, The Witnesses, beyond which standeth the Iland of Cubagua, where is great fishing of muske Pearles: where also, as they say, there springeth a Well of oyle: and beyond that Iland they came to the Iles of Frailes, Roques, Aruba, and Curacao, with other small ones all along the Bay: and they came to the point of Cabo de Vela, and discovered along the Coast almost two hundred leagues, from whence they crossed ouer to Hispaniola, hauing had also sight of the Iland called Beata.

In this same yeere 1497. on the twentieth day of the moneth of Iune, one Vasques de Gama, sayled from Lisbon by the King *Emmanuel*s commandement to India with three ships, wherein there went for Captaines Vasques de Gama, Paulus de Gama his brother, and Nicolas Coello with one hundred and twentie men; with whom also there went one ship laden onely with victuals, and in fourteene dayes they came vnto Cape Verde, vnto the Iland of Saint Iago, where they refreshed themselves, and from thence they went along the coast beyond the Cape of Bona Speranza, whereupon they erected certayne Pillers of stone, and so came vnto Mosambique, standing in 15. degrees to the South of the line, where they stayed not long, but went from thence to Mombaza, and vnto Melinde: where the King of that place gaue them Pilots, which conducted them into India, in which discoverie they found out Los Baxos do Padua, that is to say, the flats of Padua.

In the yeere 1498. in the moneth of May, they came to an anker before the Citie of Calicut, and Panana, where they remained all the winter: and the first day of September they set sayle towards the North, discovering the Coast all along till they came to the Iland of Angedina, which standeth on that side in 15. degrees of latitude, where they came to an anker in the beginning of October, and so they departed from Angedina in Februarie, in the yeere 1499. and came in sight of the coast of Africa about Melinde towards the North 3. or 4. degrees, and from thence they sayled vnto the said Citie, and so vnto Mosambique againe, and to the Cape of Bona Speranza, sayling along by the Coast, and then they came to the Ilands of Cape Verde, and last of all to the Citie of Lisbon in the moneth of September, hauing beene in the voyage six and twentie moneths.

In the yeere 1499. on the thirteenth day of the moneth of Nouember, there departed from Palos one Vincent Yannex Pinson and his nephew Aries Pinson, with foure ships well appointed at their owne cost and charges, to discover the new world vnder the licence of the King of Castile, and with commandement not to touch there, where the Admirall Columbus had beene. And so they went to the Ilands of Cape Verde, and passed the line to the Southward, and discovered the Cape of Saint Augustine, standing on that side in 8. degrees of latitude, and there they wrote on the rindes of Pine trees the names of the King and Queene, also the yeere and day when they arriued there. They fought with the people of Brasil, but got nothing, they tooke their course all along the coast towards the West vnto the Riuer Maria Tambal, and at that time they had taken thirtie and odde Prisoners. The chiefe places where they touched were the Cape of S. Augustine, and the angle or point of S. Luke, and Tierra de los Humos, the Rivers

The great discovery of John Cabota and the English. His sonne Sebastian was the chiefe Discoverer of the American Continent on the Easterne shores that euer hath liued, as in the next tome will often appeare. The Countrey now called New Scotland discovered by Cabota about a yeere before Columbus had seen the Continent.

Riuers of Marannon, and of the Amazones, and Rio dulce, or the Sweet Riuer, and other places along the Coast: and they came to 10. degrees of latitude on the North side, where they lost two ships and their companie, and remained in that Voyage of discouerie ten moneths and fiftene dayes.

In the yeere 1500. and in the moneth of March, one Pedro Aluarez Cabral sayled out of Lisbon with thirteene ships, with commandement not to come neere the coast of Africa to shorten his way; and he losing the sight of one of his ships, went to seeke her, and in seeking of her lost his course, and sayled till he came within sight of the land. The Generall was so long in seeking his ship, that the companie were wearie of it, and entreated him to leaue his enterprife. The next day they fell in sight of the Coast of Brasil: whereupon the Generall commanded a Barke to goe to land and seeke a hauen: which they did, and found a good and safe hauen, and they named it Puerto Seguro, that is to say, The safe Hauen, standing on the South side in 17. degrees of latitude. From thence they sayled towards the Cape of Bona Speranca, and Melinde, and crossed ouer to the Riuer of Cochin, which before was not knowne, where they laded themselves with Pepper, and at their returne Sancho de Thonar discovered the Citie of Sofala vpon the coast of Africa. 10

In this same yeere 1500. it is reported that Gaspard Cortereal craued a generall licence of the King Emmanuel to discover the New found land. Hee went from the Iland Tercera with two ships well appointed at his owne cost, and hee sayled vnto that climate which standeth vnder the North in 50. degrees of latitude, which is a land now called after his name; and hee came home in safetie vnto the Citie of Lisbon: And making another time this voyage, the ship was lost wherein he went, and the other came backe into Portugall. Wherefore his brother Michael Cortereal went to seeke him with three ships well appointed at his owne cost; and when they came vnto that Coast, and found so many entrances of Riuer and Hauens, euery ship went into her seuerall Riuer, with this rule and order, that they all three should meet againe the twentieth day of August. The two other ships did so, and they seeing that Michael Cortereal was not come at the day appointed, nor yet afterwards in a certaine time, returned backe into the realme of Portugall, and neuer heard any more newes of him, nor yet any other memorie. But that Countrey is called, The land of Cortereall vnto this day. 20

In this yeere 1501. in the moneth of March, Iohn de Noua departed from the Citie of Lisbon with foure ships, and passed the line on the South side into 8. degrees of latitude, and hee discovered an Iland, which he called the Ile de Ascension: and hee went vnto Mosambique, and to Melinde, and from thence he crossed ouer vnto the other side, where they tooke lading, and so came backe and doubled the Cape, and found an Iland called Santa Helena, being but a small thing, but yet of great importance in respect of the situation thereof. 30

In this same yeere 1501. and in the moneth of May, there departed out of Lisbon, three ships vpon the commandement of Emmanuel the King to discover the coast of Brasil: and they sayled in the sight of the Canaries, and from thence to Cape Verde, where they refreshed themselves in the Towne of Bezequiche, and passed from thence beyond the line Southward, and fell with the land of Brasil in 5. degrees of latitude, and so went forward till they came in 32. degrees little more or lesse, according as they accounted it, and from thence they came backe in the moneth of Aprill, because it was there at that time cold and tempestuous. They were in that voyage fiftene moneths, and came to Lisbon againe in the beginning of September, 1502. 40

In the yeere 1502. one Alonso Hoseda went to discover Terra firma, and followed his course till he came to the Prouince of Vraba.

The next yeere following, also one Roderigo Bastidas of Sinill went out with two Carauels at his owne cost, and the first land of the Antiles that hee saw was an Iland which he named Isla Verde, that is, the Greene Iland, standing fast by the Iland of Guadalupe, towards the land: and from thence they tooke their course towards the West to Santa Martha, and Cape De la Vela, and to Rio Grande, or the Great riuer, and they discovered the Hauen of Zamba, the Coradas, Carthagenas, and the Ilands of Saint Barnard, of Baru, and Islas de Arenas, and went forward vnto Isla fuerte, and to the point of Caribana, standing at the end of the Gulfe of Vraba, where they had sight of the Farrallones standing on the other side hard by the Riuer of Darien, and from Cape De la Vela vnto this place are two hundred leagues: and it standeth in 9. degrees and two parts of latitude. From thence they crossed ouer vnto the Iland of Jamaica, where they refreshed themselves. In Hispaniola they graued their ships because of the holes which certaine wormes of the water had eaten into the planks. In that Countrey they got foure hundred markes of Gold, although the people there be more warlike then in Noua Spania: for they poison their arrowes which they shoote. 50

In this same yeere 1502. Christopher Columbus entred the fourth time into his discouerie with foure ships, at the commandement of Don Fernando to seeke the Straight, which as they said did diuide the land from the other side, and he carried with him Ferdinando his sonne. They went first to the Iland of Hispaniola, to Jamaica, to the Riuer Azua, to the Cape of Higuera, and vnto the Ilands Gamares, and to the Cape of Henduras, that is to say, the Cape of the Depthes: from 60 from thence they sayled towards the East vnto the Cape Gracias a Dios and discovered the Province and Riuer of Veragua, and Rio Grande, and others which the Indians call Hienra. And from thence he went to the Riuer of Crocodiles, which now is called Rio de Chagres, which hath his Springs neere the South Sea, within foure leagues of Panania, and runneth into the North Sea: and so he went vnto the Iland which hee called Isla de Bastimentos, that is the Ile of Viuals, and then to Puerto Bello, that is, the Faire Hauen, and so vnto Numbre de Dios, and to Rio Francisco, and so to the Hauen of Retrete, and then to the Gulfe of Cabeza Castiua, and to the Ilands of Caperosa, and lastly to the Cape of Marble, which is two hundred leagues vpon the Coast: from whence they began to turne againe vnto the Iland of Cuba, and from thence to La-

10 maica, where he grounded his ships being much spoyled and eaten with Wormes.

In this yeere also 1502. Don Vasques de Gama being now Admirall, went againe into India with nineteene or twentie Caruels. Hee departed from Lisbon the tenth day of Februarie, and by the last day of that moneth he came to an anker at Cape Verde, and from thence he went vnto Mosambique, and was the first that crost from that Iland into India: and hee discovered another in 4. degrees of Latitude, which he called the Iland of the Admirall, and there he tooke his landing of Pepper and Drugs, and left there one Vincent Sodre to keepe the Coast of India with five ships. These were the first Portugals that with an Armie did runne along the Coast of Arabia Felix. It is there so barren, that their Cartell and Camels are onely maintayned with drie Fish brought from the sea; whereof there is such plentie and abundance, that the Cats of the 20 Country doe vie to take them.

In the yeere following, as it is reported, one Antonie de Saldania, discovered the Iland which in old time was called Coradis, and now Socotora, and the Cape of Guardafu, which adioyneth vnto that Country.

In the yeere 1504. Roderigo de Bastidas obtayned licence of King Ferdinando, and by the meanes of Iohn de Ledesma, and others of Seuill, armed and furnished out two ships, hauing for his Pilot one Iohn de Cosa of Saint Marie Port, and he went to discover that part of Tierra firma, where now standeth Carthagera, being in 10. degrees and a halfe of Northerly latitude. And it is said that they found the Captaine Luis de la Guerra; and they together tooke land in the Ile of Codego, where they tooke fixe hundred persons of the Sauages: And going farther along the 30 Coast they entred into the Gulfe of Vraba, where they found Sand mingled with Gold, being the first that was brought to the King Don Ferdinando: from thence they returned to the Citie of Santo Domingo laden with Slaues without victuals, because they of the Country would not bargain with them, which grew to their great trouble and griefe. In the latter end of this yeere dyed Ladie Isabella Queene of Castile: Which Queene while she liued would not suffer any man of Arragon, Catalunia, Valencia, nor any borne in the Country of Don Fernando her husband to enter into these discoveries, saue those which were there Seruants, or by speciall commandement, but onely the Castillians, Biscaines, and those which were of her owne Signories, by whom all the lands aforesaid were discovered.

In the yeere 1505. vpon our Lady day in March, Francisco de Almeida Viceroy of India, tooke 40 his course with two and twentie sayles towards India as now is accustomed. He came vnto the Citie of Quiloa, where he built a Fort, appointing one Peter Ferreira to bee Captayne thereof: and beyond Melinde hee trauersed to the Iland of Angedina, where he placed as Captayne one Emmannell Passania. In Cananor also he built another Fort, giuing the Captainship of it to Laurence de Brito. In Cochin he did the like, where Don Alfonso de Noronia was made Captayne. This yeere one Peter de Anbaya did build the Fortresse of Sofala, whereof also himselfe was made Captayne. In the latter end of this yeere, the Viceroy commanded his Sonne, whose name was Don Laurenzo to make some entrie vpon the Ilands of Maldina, and with contrarie weather he arriued at the Ilands, which of ancient time were called Tragana, but the Moores called them Ysterubenero, and wee call them Ceilan: where he went on land, and made peace with the peo-

50 ple there, and afterward came backe vnto Cochin, sayling along the Coast and fully discovering it. In the middest of this Iland, there stands a Rocke of stone very high hauing the signe of the foot of a man vpon the top of it, which they say to be the footstep of Adam, when he went vp into the Heauens, and the Indians haue it in great reuerence.

In the yeere 1506. after the death of the Queene of Spaine, King Philip and Queene Ioan his wife, came into Spaine to take possession thereof, and King Don Fernando went into Arragon being his owne Patrimonic. In this same yeere the said King Philip dyed, and then Fernando came againe to gouerne Spaine, and hee gaue licence vnto all Spaniards to goe vnto the New Land, & to the Antiles, but not to the Portugals. In this yeere & in the month of May Christopher Columbus dyed, and his Son Don Diego Columbus succeeded in his roome (Admirall of the West

60 Indies. In the yeere 1506. in the moneth of March Tristan de Acunna and Alfonso de Albuquerque went into India with 14. ships in their company, & sayled til they came to an anker at the Town of Bezequiche, where they refreshed themselves: and before they came to the Cape of Bona Speranca in 37. degrees they found certaine Ilands, which now are named the Isles of Tristan de Acunna, where they had such a tempest that therewithall the Fleet was disperced. Tristan de A- cunna and Alfonso de Albuquerque went vnto Mosambique, and Aluaro Telex ranne so faste that he came to the Island of Samatra, and so backe againe vnto the Cape of Guardafu; hauing disco- uered many Islands, Sea, and Lands neuer scene before that time of any Portugall. Emmanuel Te- laz de Menezes was also driuen without the great Island of S. Laurence, and he ran along the coast thereof, and arriued at last at Mosambique, and there met with Tristan de Acunna, who was the first Captaine that wintred there; and by them it was told, that in this Island was much Ginger, Cloues and Siluer: whereupon he went and discovered much of it within the land; but finding nothing he came backe againe vnto Mosambique; from whence he sayled vnto Melinde, and ran along that coast and entred into Braua, and from thence they crost quer to the Island of Socotora, where they built a Fortresse, and made one Don Antonio de Noronia Captaine thereof.

In the yeere 1507. in the moneth of August, Tristan de Acunna tooke shipping for India, and Alfonso de Albuquerque remained there with five or sixe ships to keepe the coast and entrie of the Straight; but being not therewith satisfied hee tooke his course ouer vnto Arabia, and running along that coast he doubled the Cape of Rosalgate, standing vnder the Tropike of Cancer.

In the yeere 1509. one Diego Lopez de Sequera went out of Lisbon with foure sayle vnto the I- land of S. Laurence, and continued in his voyage almost a yeere, and in the moneth of May the same yeere he arriued in Cochin, where the Viceroy gaue him one ship more: and in the begin- ning of the moneth of September, he tooke his course vnto Malacca passing between the Islands of Nicubar, and many others: He went also to the land of Samatra to the Cities of Pedir and Pa- cem, and all along by all that Coast vnto the Island of A Puluoreira, and the flats of Capacia: and from thence hee went ouer vnto Malacca, standing in 2. degrees of latitude toward the North: but in that Citie the people killed & tooke Prisoners some of his men: and thereupon he turned backe againe into India, hauing discovered in this voyage 500. leagues. This Island of Samatra is the first land wherein wee knew Mans flesh to bee eaten by certaine people which liue in the Mountaines called Bacas, who vse to gild their teeth. They hold opinion that the flesh of the black people is sweeter then the flesh of the white. The Buffes, Kine and Hens which are in that Countrey are in their flesh as blacke as any inke. They say that there are certaine people there called Daraqus Dara, which haue tailes like vnto sheepe; and some of their Wells yeeld Oyle.

The King of Pedir is reported to haue a Riuer in his land running with Oyle: which is a thing not to be marvelled at, seeing it is found written, that in Bactria there is also a Well of Oyle: it is farther said, that there groweth here a Tree, the ioyce whereof is strong poyson, and if it touch the blood of a man, he dyeth immediately: but if a man doe drinke of it, it is a soueraigne reme- die against poyson, so seruug both for life and death. Here also they doe coyne pieces of Gold which they call Drachmas, brought into the land as they say by the Romans: which seemeth to haue some resemblance of truth: because that from that place forward there is no coyned gold: but that which is thus coyned doth run currant in the buying of Merchandise and other things.

In the yeere 1508. one Alfonso de Hoida with the fauour of Don Fernando purposed to goe vn- to Tierra firma to conquer the Prouince of Darien. He went forth at his owne charges, and dis- couered The firme Land, where it is called Vraba, which he named Castilia del Oro, that is Golden Castilia, because of the Gold which they found among the sand along the Coast: And they were the first Spaniards that did this. Alfonso de Hoida went first from the Island of Hispaniola and the Citie of San Domingo with foure Ships and three hundred Souldiers, leauing behind him the Bachelier Anciso, who afterwards compiled a Booke of these Discoveries. And after him there went also one ship with victuals, munition, and 150. Spaniards. He went on land at Caribagena: but there the people of the Countrey tooke, flew and eate seuentie of his Souldiers, whereupon he grew very weake. In this yeere 1508. one Diego de Niquesa, prepared seuen ships in the Port of Beata to goe vnto Veragua, and carried in them almost 800. men. When he came to Carthage- na, he found there Alfonso de Hoida sore spoyled with his former losse: but then they both ioy- ned together, and went on land and auenged themselues of the people. And in this voyage Die- go de Niquesa went and discovered the Coast called Nombre de Dios, and went vnto the sound of Darien, and called it Puerto de Misas, which is vpon the Riuer of Pito. When they were come vn- to Veragua, he went on shore with his Armie, his Souldiers being out of hope to returne to Hi- spaniola. Alfonso de Hoida began a Fortresse in Caribana against the Caribes; which was the first Towne that the Spaniards built in the Firme land: and in Nombre de Dios they built another, and called it Nuestra Sennora de la Antigua. They builded also the Towne of Vraba. And there they left for their Captaine and Lieutenant one Francis Pizarro, who was there much troubled. They builded other Townes also, whose names I here omit. But these Captaines had not that good successe which they hoped for.

In the yeere 1509. the second Admirall Don Diego Columbus went into the Island of Hispanio- la with his wife and household: And she being a Gentlewoman carried with her many other wo- men of good Families, which were there married, and so the Spaniards & Castilians began to peo- ple the Countrey: for Don Fernando the King had giuen them licence to discover and people the Townes of Hispaniola; so that the same place grew to bee famous and much frequented. The foresaid Admirall also gaue order to people the Island of Cuba, which is very great and large and,

and placed there as his Lieutenant one Diego Velasques, who went with his father in the second voyage.

In the yeere 1511. in the moneth of Aprill Alfonso de Albuquerque went from the Citie of Cochin vnto Malacca. In which yeere and moneth the Chineans went from Malacca into their owne countrey, and Alfonso sent with them for Master a Portugall called Duarte Fernandes, with letters also and order vnto the King of the Mantias, which now is called Sian standing in the South. They passed through the Streight of Cincapura, and sailed towards the North, went along the coast of Patane vnto the Citie of Cuy, and from thence to Odia, which is the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome, standing in 14. degrees of Northerly latitude. The King greatly honoured and welcomed Duarte Fernandes being the first Portugall that hee had seene, and with him hee sent backe Ambassadors to Albuquerque. They passed ouer land towards the west vnto the Citie of Tanazerim standing vpon the sea on the other side in 12. degrees, where they imbarcked themselues in two ships, and sailed along the coast vnto the Citie of Malacca, leauing it all discovered.

The people of this countrey of Sian are people that eat of all kinde of beasts, or vermine. They haue a delight to carrie round bels within the skin of their priuie members: which is forbidden to the King and the religious people. It is said that of all other people of those parts they be most vertuous and honest. They commend themselues much for their chastitie and povertie. They bring no hennens nor doves vp in their houses. This Kingdome hath in length two hundred and fiftie leagues, and in breadth eightie. Of this only Kingdome the King may bring forth into the field thirtie thousand Elephants, when hee goeth to warre, besides those which remaine in the Cities for the garde of them. The King much esteemeth a white Elephant and a red one also, that hath his eyes like vnto flaming fire.

There is in this countrey a certaine small vermine, which vseth to cleaue fast to the trunke of the Elephant, and draweth the blood of the Elephant, and so he dieth thereof. The skull of this vermine is so hard, that the shot of an handgun cannot enter it: they haue in their liuers the figures of men and women, which they call Toketa, and are much like vnto a Man-drake. And they affirme, that hee which hath one of them about him cannot die with the stroke of any iron. They haue also wilde Kine in this countrey, in the heads of whom they finde stones, which are of vertue to bring good hap and fortune to Merchants.

After that Duarte Fernandes had beene with the Mantales or people of Sian, Alfonso de Albuquerque sent thither a Knight called Ruy Nunnez de Acunna with letters and Ambassage vnto the King of the Seguies, which we call Pegu. He went in a Iunco of the countrey in sight of the Cape Rachado, and from thence went vnto the Citie of Pera which standeth fast by the Riner Salano, and many other Villages standing all along this Riuier, where Duarte Fernandes had beene before, vnto the Cities of Tanazerim and of Martanan, standing in 15. degrees toward the North, and the Citie of Pegu standeth in 17. This was the first Portugall, which trauielled in that Kingdome: and hee gaue good information of that Countrey, and of the people which vse to weare bels in their priuities euen as the Mantales doe.

In the end of this yeere 1511. Alfonso de Albuquerque sent three ships to the Ilands of Banda, and Maluco. And there went as Generall of them one Antonio de Bren, and with him also went one Francis Serrano: and in these ships there were 120. persons. They passed through the Streight of Saban, and along the Iland of Samatra, and others, leauing them on the left hand, towards the east: and they called them the Salites. They went also to the Ilands of Palumbam and La Paparam; from whence they sailed by the noble Iland of Iaua, and they ranne their course East, sailing betweene it and the Iland Madura. The people of this are very warlike and strong, and doe little regard their liues. The women also are there hired for the wars and they fall out often together, and kill one another, as the Mocos doe, delighting onely in shedding of blood.

Beyond the Iland of Iaua they sailed along by another called Bali: and then came also vnto others called Aniane, Zambaba, Solor, Galaa, Mallua, Vitara, Rosalanguin, and Arus, from whence are brought delicate birds, which are of great estimation because of their feathers: they came also to other Ilands lying in the same parallell on the South side in 7. or 8. degrees of Latitude. And they be so neere the one to the other, that they seeme at the first to bee one entire and maine land. The course by these Ilands is aboue fise hundred leagues. The Ancient Cosmographers call all these Ilands by the name Iauos: but late experience hath found their names to bee verie diuers, as you see. Beyond these there are other Ilands toward the North, which are inhabited with whiter people going arraied in shirts, doublets and flocs like vnto the Portugals, hauing also money of siluer. The Gouvernours among them doe carrie in their hands red staues, whereby they seeme to haue some affinitie with the people of China. There are other Ilands and people about this place, which are redde, and it is reported that they are of the people of China.

Antonie de Bren and those that went him, tooke their course toward the North, where is a small Iland called Gumnape or Ternate, from the highest place whereof there fall continually into the Sea flakes or streames like vnto fire; which is a wonderfull thing to behold. From thence they went to the Ilands of Burro and Amboino, and came to an anchor in an haue of it called Guliguli, where they went on land and tooke a Village standing by the Riuer, where they found dead men hanging in the houses; for the people there are eaters of mans flesh. Here the Portugals burnt the ship wherein Francis Serrano was, for she was old and rotten. They went to a place on the other side standing in 8. degrees toward the South, where they laded cloues, nutmegs, and mace in a Iunco or Barke which Francis Serrano brought here. They say that not farre from the Ilands of Banda there is an Iland, where there breedeth nothing else but Snakes, and the most are in one caue in the midst of the land. This is a thing not much to be wondred at; for as much as in the Leuant Sea hard by the Iles of Maio and Minorca there is 10 another Iland of old named Ophiusa, and now Fornientera, wherein there is great abundance of these vermine: and in the rest of the Ilands lying by it there are none.

In the yeere 1512. they departed from Banda toward Malacca, and on the Baxos or flats of Luzapinho, Francis Serrano perished in his Iunke or Barke, from whence escaped vnto the Ile of Mindanao nine or ten Portugals which were with him, and the Kings of Maluco sent for them. These were the first Portugals that came to the Ilands of Cloues, which stand from the Equinoctiall line towards the North in one degree, where they liued seuen or eight yeeres.

The Iland of Gumnape now called Ternate is much to be admired, for that it casteth out fire. There were some Princes of the Mores and couragious Portugals which determined to go neere to the fire place to see what it was; but they could neuer come neere it. But Antonie Galuano 20 hearing of it, vndertooke to goe vp to it, and did so, and found a riuer so extreame cold that he could not suffer his hand in it, nor yet put any of the water into his mouth: And yet this place standeth vnder the line, where the sunne continually burneth. In these Ilands of Maluco there is a kinde of men that haue spurs on their ankles like vnto Cocks. And it was told me by the King of Tydore, that in the Ilands of Batochina there were people that had tayles, and had a thing like vnto a dug betweene their cods, out of the which there came milke. There are small hennes also which lay their egges vnder the ground aboue a fathome and a halfe, and the egges are bigger then ducks egges, and many of these hennes are blacke in their flesh. There are hogs also with hornes, and parats which prattle much, which they call Noris. There is also a riuer of water so hot, that whatsoever liuing creature commeth into it, their skins will come off, and 30 yet fish breede in it. There are crabs which be verie sweete, and so strong in their clawes, that they will breake the iron of a Pikeaxe. There bee others also in the sea little and hairie, but whosoever eateth of them dieth immediately. There be likewise certaine oysters, which they doe call Bras, the shels whereof haue so large a compasse, that they doe Christen in them. In the Sea also there are liuely stones, which doe grow and increase like vnto fish, whereof verie good lime is made: and if they let it lye when it is taken out of the water, it loseth the strength and it neuer burneth after. There is also a certaine tree, which beareth flowers at the sun set, which fall downe as soone as they be growne. There is a fruit also, as they say, whereof if a woman that is conceaued of child eateth, the child by and by mooueth. There is further a kind of herbe there growing, which followeth the Sunne, and remooueth after it, which is a verie 40 strange and maruailous thing.

In the yeete 1512. In the moneth of Ianuarie Alfonso de Albuquerque went backe from Malaca vnto Goa, and the ship wherein he went was lost, and the rest went from his companie. Simon de Andrada, and a few Portugals were driuen vnto the Ilands of Maldina, being many and full of palme trees: and they stand lowe by the water: which stayed there til they knew what was become of their Gouvernour. These were the first Portugals that had seene those Ilands, wherein there growe Cocos, which are verie good against all kind of poyson.

In this yeere 1512. there went out of Castile one John de Solis borne in Lisbon, and chiefe Pilot vnto Don Fernando. And he hauing licence went to discover the coast of Brasil. Hee tooke the like course that the Pinsons had done: hee went also to the Cape of Saint Augustine, and 50 went forwards to the South, coasting the shoare and land, and he came vnto the Port De Lagoa: and in 35 degrees of southerly latitude he found a riuer which they of Brasil call Parana-guazu, that is, The great Water. He saw there signes of siluer, and therefore called it Rio de Plata, that is, The Riuer of siluer. And it is said that at that time he went farther because he liked the countrey well: but he returned backe againe into Spaine, and made account of all things to Don Fernando, demaunding of the King the government thereof, which the King granted him. Whereupon he provided three ships and with them in the yeere 1515. he went againe into that Kingdome; but he was there slaine. These Solisses were great discoverers in those parts, and spent therein their liues and goods.

In the same yeere 1512. John Ponce of Leon, which had beene gouvernour of the Ile of Saint 60 John armed two ships and went to seeke the Ile of Boyuca, where the naturals of the countrey reported to be a Wel, which maketh olde men young. Whereupon he laboured to finde it out, and was in searching of it the space of fixe moneths, but could finde no such thing. Hee entered into the Ile of Bimini; and discovered a point of the firme land, standing in 29. degrees towards the

the North vpon Easter-day, and therefore he named it Florida. And because the Land seemed to yeeld Gold and Siluer and great riches, hee begged it of the King Don Fernando, but hee died in the Discouerie of it, as many more haue done.

In the yeere 1513. Vasco Nunnes de Valboa hearing speech and newes of the South Sea, determined to goe thither, although his companie dissuaded him from that action. But being a man of good valour with those Souldiers that he had, being two hundred and ninetie, hee resolved to put himselfe into that ieopardie. Hee went therefore from Dariene the first day of September, carying some Indians of the Countrey with him to be his Guides, and he Marched overthwart the Land sometimes quietly, sometimes in Warre: and in a certaine place called Caraca he found Negroes Captiues with Curled haire. This Valboa came to the sight of the South Sea on the 25. day of the said Moneth, and on Saint Michaels day came vnto it: where hee Imbarked himselfe against the will of Chiapes, who was the Lord of that Coast, who wished him not to do so because it was verie dangerous for him. But he desirous to haue it knowne, that he had bene vpon those Seas, went forwards, and came backe againe to Land insafetie, and with great contentment, bringing with him good store of Gold, Siluer, and Pearles, which there they tooke. For which good seruice of his Don Ferdinando the King greatly fauoured and honoured him.

This yeere 1513. in the Moneth of Februarie, Alfonso de Albuquerque went from the Citie of Goa towards the Streight of Mecha with twentie Ships. They arriued at the Citie of Aden and battered it, and passed forward and entred into the Streight. They say that they saw a Crosse in the Element and worshipped it. They Wintered in the Iland of Camaran. This was the first Portugall Captain that gaue information of those Seas, and of that of Persia, being things in the World of great accompt.

In the yeere 1514. and in the Moneth of May, there went out of Saint Lucar, one Pedro Arias de Auila at the commandement of Don Ferdinando. He was the fourth Gouvernour of Castilla del Oro or Golden Castile: for so they named the Countreies of Dariene, Carthagena, and Fraba, and that Countrey which was newly Conquered. Hee caried with him his Wife the Ladie Elizabet, and one thousand five hundred men in seuen Ships; and the King appointed, Vasco Nunnez de Valboa Gouvernour of the South Sea and of that Coast.

In the beginning of the yeere 1515. the Gouvernour Pedro Arias de Auila, sent one Gaspar Morales with one hundred and fiftie men vnto the Gulfe of Saint Michael, to Discover the Ilands of Tararequi, Chiapes, and Tumacous. There was a Casique Valboas friend, which gaue him many Canoas or Boates made of one Tree to Rowe in, wherein they passed vnto the Iland of Pearles: the Lord whereof relisted them at their comming on Land. But Chiapes and Tumacous did pacifie him in such order, that the Captaine of the Isle had them home vnto his House, and made much of them, and receiued Baptisme at their hands, naming him Pedro Arias after the Gouvernours name, and hee gaue vnto them for this a Basket full of Pearles, waying one hundred and tennie pounds, whereof some were as bigge as Hasell-nuts, of twentie, twentie five, twentie sixe, or thirtie one Carats: and euerie Carat is foure Graines. There was giuen for one of them, one thousand and two hundred Duckets. This Iland of Tararequi standeth in five Degrees of Latitude towards the North.

In this verie yeere 1515. in the Moneth of May, Alfonso de Albuquerque Gouvernour of India, sent from the Citie of Ormuz one Fernando Gomes de Lemos as Ambassadour vnto Xec or Shaugh Ismael King of Persia: and it is reported that they trauielled in it three hundred Leagues, and that it is a pleasant Countrey like vnto France. This Xec or Shaugh Ismael went on Hunting and fishing for Troutes, whereof there are many. And there be the fairest Women in all the world. And so Alexander the Great affirmed, when hee called them The Women with Golden eyes. And this yeere this worthie Vice-roy, Alfonso de Albuquerque died.

In the yeere 1516. and one hundred yeeres after the taking of Centa in Barbarie, Lopez Suarez being Gouvernour of India, there was a dispatch made by the commandement of the Kings Highnesse, vnto one Fernando Perez de Andrada to passe to the great Countrey and Kingdome of China. He went from the Citie of Cochin in the Moneth of Aprill. They receiued Pepper, being the principall Marchandise to be sold in all China of any value: And hee was farther commanded by the King Don Emmanuel to goe also to Bengala with his Letter and dispatch to a Knight called John Coelo. This was the first Portugall as farre as I know, which drunke of the water of the River Ganges. This yeere 1516. died Don Fernando King of Spaine.

In the yeere 1517. this Fernando Perez went vnto the Citie of Malacha, and in the Moneth of Iune he departed from thence towards China with eight Sailes, foure Portugals, and the others Malayans. He arriued in China: And because hee could not come on Land without an Ambassage, there was one Thomas Perez, which had order for it: and he went from the Citie of Canton, wherethey came to an Anker: They went by Land foure hundred Leagues, and came vnto the Citie of Pekin, where the King was for this Province and Countrey is the biggest that is in the World. It beginneth at Sailana in twentie Degrees of Latitude towards the North, and it endeth almost in fiftie Degrees. Which must be five hundred Leagues in length: and they say that it containeth three hundred Leagues in bredth, Fernando Perez was fourtene Moneths in the Isle

Da Veniaga, learning as much as he could of the Countrey, according as the King his Master had commanded him. And although one Raphael Perestrello had beene there in a lünke or Barke of certaine Marchants of Malaca, yet vnto Fernando Perez there ought to be giuen the praise of this Discoverie: as wel for that he had commandement from the King, as in discovering so much with Thomas Perez by Land, and George Mascarenhas by Sea, and for coasting vnto the Citie of Foquiem standing in twentie foure Degrees of Latitude.

In the same yeere 1517. Charles, which afterward was Emperour, came into Spaine and tooke possession thereof. And in the same yeere Francis Fernandes de Gordona, Christopher Morantes, and Lopez Ochoa armed three Ships at their owne proper charges from the Iland of Cuba. They had also with them a Barke of Diego Velasques, who then was Gouvernour: They came on Land in Lucatan standing in twentie Degrees of Latitude, at a Point which they called Puntade las Duenas; that is to say, The point of Ladies, which was the first place wherein they had seene Temples and Buildings of Lime & Stone. The people here goe better Apparellled then in any other place.

In the yeere 1518. Lopez Suares commanded Don Iohn de Silueira to goe to the Ilands of Maldina: and he made peace with them: and from thence hee went to the Citie of Chatigam, situated on the mouth of the Riuer Ganges, vnder the Tropicke of Cancer. For this Riuer, and the Riuer Indus, which standeth an hundred Leagues beyond the Citie of Diu, and that of Canton in China, doe all fall into the Sea vnder one Paralell or Latitude. And although before that time Fernando Perez had beene commanded to goe to Bengala, yet notwithstanding Iohn de Silueira ought to beare away the commendation of this Discoverie: because he went as Captaine General, and remained there longest, learning the commodities of the Countrey, and maners of the people.

In the said yeere 1518. the first day of May, Diego Velasques Gouvernour of the Iland of Cuba, sent his Nephew Iohn de Grisalu, with foure Ships and two hundred Souldiers to discover the Land of Lucatan. And they found in their way the Iland of Cosumel, standing towards the North in nineteene Degrees, and named it Santa Cruz, because they came to it the third of May. They coasted the Land lying on the left hand of the Gulfe, and came to an Iland called Ascension, because they came vnto it vpon Ascension day: They went vnto the end of it standing in sixteene Degrees of Latitude: from whence they came backe because they could finde no place to goe out at: and from hence they went round about it to another Riuer, which they called The Riuer of Grisalu, standing in seuentene Degrees of Latitude: the People thereabout troubled them sore, yet notwithstanding they brought from thence some Gold, Siluer, and Feathers, being there in great estimation, and so they turned backe againe to the Iland of Cuba.

In the same yeere 1518. one Francis Garay armed three Ships in the Ile of Jamaica at his owne charges, and went towards the Point of Florida, standing in twentie five Degrees towards the North, seeming to them to be an Iland most pleasant, thinking it better to people Ilands then the firme Land, because they could best Conquer them and keepe them. They went there on Land, but the people of Florida killed many of them, so that they durst not Inhabit it. So they Sayled along the Coast, and came vnto the Riuer of Pannuco, standing five hundred Leagues from the point of Florida in Sayling along the Coast; but the People resisted them in euerie place. Many of them also were killed in Chila, whom the Sauages Flayed and eate, hanging vp their Skinnies in their Temples, in memoriall of their valiantnesse. Notwithstanding all this, Francis de Garay went thither the next yeere and begged the Government of that Countrey of the Emperour, because he saw in it some shew of Gold and Siluer.

In the yeere 1519. in the Moneth of Februarie, Fernando Cortes went from the Iland of Cuba, to the Land which is called Noua Spania with eleuen ships and five hundred and fiftie Spaniards in them.

The Countrey of Tenich and vp the Riuer were not subiect to Mutezuma, but had Warre with him, and would not suffer the Mexicans to enter into their Territorie. They sent Ambassadors vnto Cortes with presents, offering him their estate, and amitie; whereof Mutezuma was nothing glad. They which went to Tututepec standing neere the South Sea, did also bring with them examples of Gold, and praised the pleasantnesse of the Countrey, and the multitude of good Harbours vpon that Coast, shewing to Cortes a Cloth of Cotten Wooll, all Wouen with goodly workes, wherein all the Coast with the Hauens and Creekes were set foorth. But this thing then could not be prosecuted, by reason of the coming of Pamphilus de Naruaez into the Countrey, who set all the Kingdome of Mexico in an vprore.

In this yeere 1519. the tenth day of August, one Fernande de Magallanes, departed from Siuil with five Ships toward the Ilands of Maluco.

About this time Pope Leo the tenth, sent one Paulis Centurio as Ambassador to the great Duke of Mosconie, to wish him to send into India an Armie alongst the Coast of Tartarie. And by the reasons of this Ambassadour, the said Duke was almost perswaded vnto that action, if other inconueniencies had not letted him.

In this same yeere 1520. in Februarie Diego Lopes de Sequeir, Gouvernour of India, went towards the Streight of Mecha, and carried with him the Ambassadour of Presbyter Iohn, and Roderigo de Lima who also went as Ambassador to him. They came vnto the Iland of Maçua standing in the Red Sea on the side of Africa in 17. degrees towards the North: where he set the Ambassadors on land, with the Portugals that should goe with them. Peter de Couillan had beene there before, being sent thither by King John the Second of Portugall: but yet Francis Aluarez gaue principall light and knowledge of that Countrie.

Roderigo

In the yeere 1520. the Licenciante Lucas Vasques de Aillon and other Inhabitants of Saint Domingo furnished two ships, and sent them to the Iles of Lucayos to get slaues, and finding none they passed along by the firme land beyond Florida vnto certaine Countries called Chicora and Gualdape, vnto the Riuer Iordan and the Cape of Saint Helena standing in 32. degrees toward the North. They of the Countrie came downe to the Sea side to see the ships, as ha-

But they brought many of them into their ships, and then set sayle and brought them away for slaues: but in the way one of their ships sunke, and the other was also in great hazard. By this newes the Licenciante Aillon knowing the wealth of the Countrie, begged the gouernment thereof of the Emperour, and it was giuen him: whither he went to get money to pay his debt.

In the yeere 1522. in Ianuarie one Gilgonzales armed foure ships in the Iland of Tararequi standing in the South Sea, with intent to discouer the Coast of Nicaragua, and especially a 20 Straight or Passage from the South Sea into the North Sea. And sayling along the Coast hee came vnto an Hauens called Saint Vincent, and there landed with an hundred Spaniards and certaine horsemen, and went within the Land two hundred leagues, and he brought with him two hundred pesoës of gold, and so came backe againe to Saint Vincent: where he found his Pilot Andrew Nigno, who was as farre as Tecoantepec, in 16. degrees to the North, and had sailed three hundred leagues: from whence they returned to Panama, and so ouer land to Hispaniola.

In the same yeere 1522. in the moneth of Aprill the other ship of Magallanes called The Trinitie went from the Iland of Tidore, wherein was Captaine Gonzalo Gomez de Espinosa, shaping their course toward Noua Spania: and because the winde was scant, they steered toward the 30 North-east into 16. degrees, where they found two Ilands, and named them the Iles of Saint John, and in that course they came to another Iland in 20. degrees, which they named La Griega, where the simple people came into their ships, of whom they kept some to shew them in Noua Spania: They were in this course foure moneths, vntill they came into 42. degrees of Northerly latitude, where they did see Sea-fishes called Seales and Tunies. And the climate seemed vnto them comming newly out of the heate, to be so cold and vntemperate, that they could not well abide it, and therefore they turned backe againe to Tidore, being thereunto enforced also by contrary windes. These were the first Spaniards which had beene in so high a latitude toward the North. And there they found one Antonie de Britto building a Fortresse, which tooke from them their goods, and sent eight and forty of them prisoners to Malaca.

In this yeere 1522. Cortes desirous to haue some Hauens on the South Sea, and to discouer the Coast of Noua Spania on that side, whereof he had knowledge in Muteçuma his time, (because he thought by that way to bring the drugs from Maluco and Banda, and the spicery from 40 Iana, with lesse trauell and danger) he sent foure Spaniards with their Guides to Tecoantepec, Quabutemallan, and other Hauens: where they were well receiued, and brought some of the people with them to Mexico: And Cortes made much of them; and afterwards sent ten Pilots thither to search the Seas thereabout. They went seuentie leagues in the Sea but found no Hauens. One Casique or Lord called Cuchataquir vsed them well, and sent with them to Cortes two hundred of his men with a Present of gold and siluer, and other things of the Countrie: and they of Tecoantepec did the like: and not long after, this Casique sent for aide to Cortes against 50 his neighbours which did warre against him.

In this same yeere 1523. Cortes went with three hundred footmen, and an hundred and fifty horsemen, and forty thousand Mexicans, to Panuco, both to discover it better, and also to inhabit it, and withall to bee reuenged vpon them which had killed and eaten the Souldiers of Francis Garay. They of Panuco resisted him, but Cortes in the end ouerthrew them, and conquered the Countrey: And hard by Chila vpon the Riuer he built a Towne, and named it Santo Stephano del puerto, leauing in it an hundred footmen, and thirty horsemen, and one Peter de Valleio for Lieutenant. This Iourney cost him seuentie fixe thousand Castillians, besides the Spaniards, Horses, and Mexicans which died there.

In this yeere 1523. Francis de Garay made nine Ships and two Brigandines to goe to Panuco, and to Rio de las Palmas, to be there as Gouernour: for that the Emperour had granted vnto him from the Coast of Florida vnto Panuco, in regard of the charges which hee had beene at in that Discoverie. He carried with him eight hundred and fifty Souldiers, and an hundred and fortie Horses, and some Men out of the Iland of Iamaica, where he furnished his Fleet with munition for the warre: and he went vnto Xagua an Hauen in the Iland of Cuba, where he vnderstood that Cortes had peopled the coast of Panuco: & that it might not happen vnto him as it did to Pamphilus de Naruacz, he determined to take another companion with him, and desired the Doctor Zuazo to goe to Mexico and procure some agreement betwene Cortes and him. And they departed from Xagua each one about his businesse. Zuazo came in great ieopardie, and Garay went not cleere without. Garay arriued in Rio de las Palmas on Saint Iames his day, and then he sent vp the Riuer one Gonsaluo de Ocampo, who at his returne declared that it was an euill and desart Countrey: but notwithstanding Garay went there on land with foure hundred footmen and some horsemen; and he commanded one Iohn de Grijalua to search the Coast, and he himselfe marched by land towards Panuco, and passed a Riuer which hee named Rio Montalto; he entred into a great Towne where they found many Hennes, wherewith they refreshed themselves, and he tooke some of the people of Chila which he vsed for messengers to certaine places: And after great trauell comming to Panuco they found no victuals there by reason of the warres of Cortes, and the spoile of the Souldiers. Garay then sent one Gonzalo de Ocampo to Sant Isteuan del puerto to knowe whether they would receiue him or no. They had a good answer. But Cortes his men priuily by an ambushment tooke forty of Garayes horsemen, alleaging that they came to vsurpe the gouernment of another: and besides this misfortune he lost foure of his ships: whereupon he left off to proceed any farther.

While Cortes was preparing to set forward to Panuco: Francis de las Casas, and Roderigo de la Paz arriued at Mexico with Letters Patents, wherein the Emperour gaue the gouernment of Nueva Spagna and all the Countrey which Cortes had conquered to Cortes, and namely Panuco. Whereupon he stayed his Iourney. But hee sent Diego de Ocampo with the said Letters Patents, and Pedro de Aluarado with store of footmen and horsemen. Garay knowing this thought it best to yeeld himselfe vnto Cortes his hands, and to goe to Mexico; which thing he did hauing discovered a great tract of Land.

In this yeere 1523. Gil Gonzales de Anila made a Discoverie, and peopled a Towne called San Gil de buena vista, standing in 14. degrees toward the North, and almost in the bottome of the Bay called the Ascension or the Honduras. He began to conquer it because he best knew the secrets thereof, and that it was a very rich Countrey.

In this yeere 1523. the sixt day of December Peter de Aluarado went from the Citie of Mexico by Cortes his commandement to discover and conquer Qualiutemallan, Vilatlan, Chiap, Xochmuxco, and other Townes toward the South Sea. He had with him three hundred Souldiers, an hundred and seuentie Horsemen, foure Field-pieces, and some Noblemen of Mexico, with people of the Countrey to aide him as well it the warre, as by the way being long. Hee went by Tecoantepec to Xochmuxco, and other places abovesaid with great trauell and losse of his men: but he discovered and subdued all the Countrey. There are in those parts certaine Hills that haue Alume in them, and out of which distillerh a certaine liquor like vnto Oyle, and Sulphur or Brimstone, whereof the Spaniards made excellent Gun-powder. He trauelled foure hundred leagues in this Voyage, and passed certaine Riuers which were so hot, that they could not well endure to wade thorow them. Hee builded a Citie calling it Sant Iago de Quahutemallan. Peter de Aluarado begged the gouernment of this Countrey, and the report is that it was giuen him.

In the yeere 1523. the eight day of December Cortes sent Diego de Godoy with an hundred Footmen and thirty Horsemen, two Field-pieces, and many of his friends Indians vnto the Towne Del Espiritu santo: He ioyned himselfe with the Captaine of that Towne, and they went to Chamolla the head Citie of that Prouince, and that being taken all the Countrey grew quiet.

In the yeere 1524. in Februarie Cortes sent one Roderigo Rangel with an hundred and fifty Spaniards & many of the Tlaxcallans and Mexicans against the Zapotecas and Nixtians, and vnto other Prouinces and Countries not so well discovered: they were resisted at the first, but quickly put the people to the worst, and kept them for euer after in subiection. In this same yeere 1524. one Roderigo de Bastidas was sent to discover, people, and gouerne the Countrey of Santa

Martha:

Martha; where he lost his life because hee would not suffer the Souldiers to take the spoile of a certaine Towne. They ioyned with Peter Villa-forte, and he being sometimes his entire friend did helpe to kill him with Daggers lying in his Bed. Afterward Don Pedro de Lugo, and Don Alfonso his sonne were Gouvernours of that place, which vsed themselues like couerous Tyrants; whereof grew much trouble.

In this same yeere also 1524. after that the Licenciado Lucas Vasques de Aillon had obtained of the Emperour the gouernment of Chicora, he armed for that purpose certaine Ships from the Citie of Santo Domingo, and went to discover the Countrey, and to inhabite it: but he was lost with all his companie, leauing nothing done worthie of memorie. And I cannot tell how it cometh to passe, except it bee by the iust iudgement of God, that of so much Gold and Precious stones as haue beene gotten in the Antiles by so many Spaniards; little or none remaineth, but the most part is spent and consumed, and no good thing done.

In this yeere 1524. Cortes sent one Christopher de Olid with a Fleet to the Iland of Cuba, to receiue the victuals and munition which Alonso de Contreras had prepared, and to discover and people the Countrey about Cape De Higueras, and the Honduras; and to send Diego Hurtado de Mendoza by sea, to search the Coast from thence euen to Darien, to finde out the Straight which was thought to runne into the South sea, as the Emperour had commanded. He sent also two ships from Panuco to search along the coast vnto Florida. Hee commanded also certaine Brigandines to search the coast from Zacatullan vnto Panama. This Christopher de Olid came to the Iland of Cuba, and made a league with Diego Velaquez against Cortes, and to set sayle and went on land hard by Puerto de Canillos standing in 10. degrees to the North, and built a Towne which he called Triumpho de la Cruz. Hee tooke Gil Fonzaes de Auila prisoner, and killed his nephew and the Spaniards that were with him, all sauing one Childe, and shewed himselfe an enemy to Cortes, who had spent in that expedition thirtie thousand Castellans of gold to doe him pleasure withall. Cortes vnderstanding hereof the same yeere 1524. in the moneth of October he went out of the Citie of Mexico, to seeke Christopher de Olid to bee reuenged of him, and also to discover, carrying with him three hundred Spanish footmen and horsemen, and Quahutimoc King of Mexico, and other great Lords of the same Citie. And coming to the Towne called La villa del Espiritu santo, he required guides of the Lords of Tauasco and Xicalanco: and they sent him ten of their principall men for guides: who gaue him also a Map of Cotton-wooll, wherein was painted the situation of the whole Countrey from Xicalanco vnto Naco, and Nito, and euen as farre as Nicaragua, with their Mountaines, Hills, Fields, Meadows, Vallies, Rivers, Cities, and Townes. And Cortes in the meane time sent for three ships which were at the Hauen of Medellin to follow him along the coast.

In this yeere 1524. they came to the Citie of Izacauanac, where hee vnderstood that the King Quahutimoc and the Mexicans that were in his company were conspired against him and the Spaniards: for the which he hanged the King and two others of the chiefe: and so came to the Citie of Mazatlan, and after that to Tiaca, the head Citie of a Prouince so called standing in the middest of a Lake: and heere about they began to finde the traine of the Spaniards, which they went to seeke, and so they went to Zuzullin, and at length came to the Towne of Nito: from Nito Cortes with his owne companie and all the Spaniards that hee found there, departed to the shore or strand called La Basa de Sant Andres, and finding there a good hauen hee builded a Towne in that place and called it Natiuidad de nuestra Senora. From hence Cortes went to the Towne of Truxillo standing in the hauen of the Honduras, where the Spaniards dwelling there did entertaine him well: and while hee was there, there arriued a ship which brought newes of the stirre in Mexico in Cortes his absence: whereupon hee sent word to Gonsola de Sandomal to march with his companie from Naco to Mexico by land toward the South sea vnto Quahutimoc, because that is the vsuall plaine and safest way, and hee left as Captaine in Truxillo Fernando de Saavedra his Cousen: and he himselfe went by sea along the Coast of Iucatan, to Chalchicoeca, now called Sant Iuan de Ulhua, and so to Medellin, and from thence to Mexico, where hee was well receiued, hauing beene from thence eightene moneths, and had gone fife hundred leagues traouelling often out of his way, and enduring much hardnesse.

In the yeere 1525. Francis Pizarro and Diego de Almagro, went from Panama to discover Peru standing beyond the line toward the South, which they called Nuena Castilla. The Gouvernour Pedro Arias would not entermiddle with this expedition, because of the euill newes which his Captayne Francis Vezerra had brought.

In the same yeere 1525. there was sent out of Spaine a Fleet of seuen ships, whereof was Captayne generall Don Garcia de Loaisa to the Ilands of Maluco. They went from the Citie of the Groine and passed by the Ilands of the Canaries, and went to Brasil, where they found an Iland in two degrees, and named it Saint Mathew: and it seemed to be inhabited, because they found in it Orenge trees, Hogs, and Hens in caues, and vpon the rindes of most of the trees there were grauen Portugall letters, shewing that the Portugals had beene there seuen teene yeeres before that time. A Patach or Pinnefle of theirs passed the straight of Magellane, hauing in her one Iohn de Resaga, and ranne all along the coast of Peru and Noua Spagna: They declared all they they declared all their successe vnto Cortes, and told him, that Frier Garfia de Loaifa was passed to the Ilands of Cloues. But of this fleet the Admirall onely came thither, wherein was Captayne one Martin Mingues de Carcbona: for Loaifa and the other Captaines dyed by the way. All the Moores of Maluco were found well affectioned to the Spaniards.

In the same yeere 1525. the Pilot Stephen Gomes, went from the Port of the Groine toward the North to discover the straight vnto the Malucos by the North, to whom they would giue no charge in the fleet of Frier Garfia de Loaifa. But yet the Earle Don Fernando de Andrada, and the Doctor Belram, and the Merchant Christopher de Sarre furnished a Gallion for him, and hee went from the Groine in Galicia to the Iland of Cuba, and to the point of Florida, sayling by day because he knew not the land. He passed the bay Angra, and the riuer Enseada, and so went over to the other side. It is also reported that he came to Cape Razo in 46. degrees to the North: from whence he came backe againe to the Groine laden with Slaves. The newes hereof ranne by and by through Spaine, that hee was come home laden with Cloues as mistaking the word: and it was carried to the Court of Spaine: but when the truth was knowne it turned to a pleasant jest. In this voyage Gomes was ten moneths.

In this yeere 1525. Don George de Meneses Captayne of Maluco, and with him Don Garcia Henriques, sent a foyft to discover land towards the North, wherein went as Captaine one Diego de Rocha, and Gomes de Sequeira for Pilot. In 9. or 10. degrees they found certaine Ilands standing close together, and they called them the Ilands of Gomes de Sequeira, hee being the first Pilot that discovered them. and they came backe againe by the Iland of Batochina.

In the yeere 1526. there went out of Sinill one Sebastian Cabota a Venetian by his father, but borne at Bristol in England, being chiefe Pilot to the Emperour, with foure ships toward Maluco. They came to Pernambuco, and stayed there three moneths for a winde to double the Cape of Saint Augustine. In the Bay of Patos or of Ducks, the Admirall ship perished; & being without hope to get to the Iles of Maluco, they there made a Pinnesse to enter vp the Riuer of Plate, and to search it. They ranne 60. leagues vp before they came to the barre: where they left their great ships, and with their small Pinnesses passed vp the Riuer Parana, which the Inhabitants count to bee the principall Riuer. Having rowed vp one hundred and twentie leagues, they made a Fortresse and stayed there about a yeere: and then rowed further till they came to the mouth of another Riuer called Paragion, and perceiuing that the Countrey yeelded Gold and Silver they kept on their course, and sent a Brigandine before; but those of the Countrey tooke it: and Cabote vnderstanding of it thought it best to turne backe vnto their Fort, and there tooke in his men which he had left there, and so went downe the Riuer where his ships did ride, and from thence he sailed home to Sinill in the yeere 1530. leauing discovered about two hundred leagues within this Riuer, reporting it to bee very Nauigable, and that it springeth out of a Lake named Bombo. It standeth in the firme land of the Kingdome of Peru, running through the Vallies of Xauxa, and meeteth with the Riuers Parso, Bulcasban, Cay, Parima, Hincax, with others which make it very broad and great. It is said also, that out of this Lake runneth the Riuer called Rio de San Francisco; and by this meane the Riuers come to bee so great. For the Riuers that come out of Lakes are bigger then those which proceed from a Spring.

In the yeere 1527. one Pamphilus de Naruaez went out of Saint Lucar de Barameda, to bee Generall of the coast and land of Florida, as farre as Rio de las Palmas, and had with him five Ships, fixe hundred Souldiers, one hundred Horses, besides a great summe and quantitie of Victuals, Armour, Clothing and other things. Hee could not goe on land where his desire was but went on land somewhat neere to Florida with three hundred of his companie, some Horses, and some victuals, commanding the ships to goe to Rio de las Palmas; in which voyage they were almost all lost: and those which escaped passed great dangers, hunger and thirst.

This yeere 1527. when Cortes vnderstood by the Pinnesse aforesaid, that Don Garcia de Loaifa was passed by the Straight of Magelan, toward the Ilands of Cloues, hee provided three ships to goe seeke him, and to discover by that way of New Spaine as farre as the Iles of Maluco. There went as Gouvernour in those ships one Aluaro de Saavedra Ceron, cousen vnto Cortes, a man fit for that purpose. Hee made sayle from Cinatlaneio, now named Saint Christopher standing in twentie degrees toward the North on All Saints day. They arrived at the Ilands which Magelan named The Pleasures: and from thence sayled to the Ilands, which Gomes de Sequeira had discovered, and not knowing thereof, they named them Islas de los Reyes, that is to say, The Iles of the Kings, because they came vnto them on Twelke day. In the way Saavedra lost two ships of his company, of which they neuer after heard newes. But from Iland to Iland hee still sayled and came to the Iland of Candiga, where he bought two Spaniards for seuentie Ducats, which had beene of the companie of Frier Loaifa, who was lost thereabout. In the yeere 1528. in March, Saavedra arrived at the Ilands of Maluco, and came to an anker before the Ile of Gilolo: hee found the sea calme and winde at will, without any tempests: and he tooke the distance from thence to Noua Spagna to bee two thousand and fiftie leagues. At this time Martin Ynniguez de Carquigano dyed, and Fernando de la Torre was chosen their Generall, who then was in the Citie of Tidore, who had there erected a Gallowes and had fierce warre with Don George de Meneses.

Warre betwixt the Span. and Portug. in the friend-foe Indies.

Meneses Captaine of the Portugals: and in a fight which they had the fourth day of May, Saavedra tooke from him a Galiot and slew the Captaine thereof called Fernando de Baldaya, and in Iune hee returned towards New Spaine, hauing with him one Simon de Brito Patalin, and other Portugals, and hauing bene certayne moneths at Sea, he was forced backe vnto Tidore, where Patalin was beheaded and quartered, and his companions hanged.

In this yeere 1528. Cortes sent two hundred Footmen and 60. Horsmen, and many Mexicans to discouer and plant the Countrey of the Chichimecas, for that it was reported to be rich of Gold. This being done he shipped himselfe, and came into Castile with great pompe, and brought with him 250000. markes of Gold and Siluer: and being come to Toledo where the Emperour then lay, hee was entertayned according to his deserts, and the Emperour made him Marquesse Del Valle, and married him to the Lady Iane de Zuniga, Daughter vnto the Earle De Aguilar, and sent him backe againe to be Generall of New Spaine.

In the yeere 1529. in May, Saavedra returned backe againe towards New Spaine, and hee had sight of a land toward the South in two degrees, and he ranne East along by it aboue fūe hundred leagues till the end of August. The Coast was cleane and of good ankerage, but the people blacke and of curled hayre; from the girdle downward, they did weare a certayne thing plaited to couer their lower parts. The people of Maluco call them Papuas, because they bee blacke and frizeled in their hayre: and so also doe the Portugals call them. Saavedra hauing sayled 4. or 5. degrees to the South of the line, returned vnto it, and passed the Equinoctiall towards the North, and discouered an Iland which hee called Isla de los Pintados, that is to say, The Ile of painted people: for the people thereof bee white, and all of them marked with an Iron: and by the signes which they gaue hee conceaued that they were of China. There came vnto them from the shore a kinde of Boate full of these men, making tokens of threatnings to the Spaniards; who seeing that the Spaniards would not obey them, they began to skirmish with flinging of Stones, but Saavedra would suffer no shot to bee shot at them, because their stones were of no strength, and did no harme. A little beyond this Iland in 10. or 12. degrees, they found many small low Ilands full of Palme trees and grasse, which they called Los Iardines, and they came to an anker in the middest of them, where they tarried certayne dayes. The people seemed to descend from them of China, but by reason of their long continuance there they are become so brutish, that they haue neither Law, nor yet giue themselues to any honest labour. They weare white cloth which they make of Grasse. They stand in maruelous feare of fire, because they neuer saw any. They eate Cocōs in stead of Bread, breaking them before they bee ripe, and putting them vnder the sand, and then after certayne dayes they take them out and lay them in the Sunne, and then they will open. They eate Fish which they take in a kinde of boat called a Parao, which they make of Pine wood, which is driuen thither at certayne times of the yeere, they know not how, nor from whence, and the tooles wherewith they make their boates are of shells.

Saavedra perceiuing that the time and weather was then somewhat better for his purpose, made sayle towards the firme land and Citie of Panama, where hee might vnlade the Cloues and merchandise which he had, that so in Cartes it might bee carried foure leagues to the Riuer of Chagre, which they say is Nauigable running out into the North sea, not farre from Nombra de Dios, where the ships ride, which come out of Spaine: by which way all kinde of goods might be brought vnto them in shorter time, and with lesse danger, then to sayle about the Cape of Bona Speranza. For from Maluco vnto Panama they sayle continually betweene the Tropikes and the line: but they neuer found winde to serue that course, and therefore they came backe againe to Maluco very sad, because Saavedra dyed by the way: who if hee had liued meant to haue opened the land of Castilla del Oro and New Spaine from sea to sea. Which might haue bene done in foure places: namely from the Gulfe of S. Michael to Vraba, which is fūe and twentie leagues, or from Panama to Nombre de Dios being seuentene leagues distance: or through Xaquator, a Riuer of Nicaragua, which springeth out of a Lake three or foure leagues from the South sea, and falleth into the North sea; whereupon doe sayle great Barks and Crayers. The other place is from Tecoatepec through a Riuer to Verdadera Cruz, in the Bay of the Honduras, which also might be opened in a straight. Which if it were done, then they might sayle from the Canaries vnto the Malucos vnder the climate of the Zodiacke in lesse time and with much lesse danger, then to sayle about the Cape of Bona Speranza, or by the straight of Magelan, or by the North-west. And yet if there might bee found a straight there to sayle into the sea of Ghina, as it hath bene sought, it would doe much good.

In this yeere 1529. one Damian de Goes a Portugall being in Flanders, after that he had traueled ouer all Spaine, was yet desirous to see more Countries and fashions, and diuersities of people; and therefore went ouer into England and Scotland, and was in the Courts of the Kings of those parts: and after that came againe into Flanders, and then traueled through Zealand, Holland, Brabant, Luxenburgh, Switzerland, and so through the Cities of Colen, Spyres, Argentine, Basill, and other parts of Almaine, and then came backe againe into Flunders: and from thence hee went into France through Picardie, Normandie, Champaine, Burgundie, the Dukedome of Borbon,

From thence hee went into Germanie to Vlmes, and other places of the Empire, to the Dukedome of Suenia, and of Banier, and the Archdukedome of Austrich, the Kingdome of Boeme, the Dukedome of Moravia, and the Kingdome of Hungarie, and so to the Confines of Grecia. From thence hee went to the Kingdome of Poland, Prussia, and the Dukedome of Lithuania, and so came into the great Dukedome of Mosconia. From whence hee came backe into high Almaine, and through the Countries of the Lantzgrau, the Dukedome of Saxonie, the Countries of Denmarke, Gotland, and Norway, travelling so farre, that hee found himselfe in 70. degrees of latitude toward the North. He did see, speake and was conuersant with all the Kings, Princes, Nobles, and chiefe Cities of all Christendome, in the space of two and twentie yeeres: So that by reason of the greatnesse of his trauell, I thought him a man worthie to be heere remembred.

In the yeere 1529. or 1530. one Melchior de Sosa Tanarez. went from the Citie of Ormuz vnto Balsera and the Ilands of Giffara with certaine ships of warre, and passed vp as farre as the place where the Riuer Tygris and Euphrates meete one with the other. And although other Portugals had discovered and sailed thorow that Strait, yet neuer any of them sailed so farre vpon the fresh water till that time, when hee discovered that Riuer from the one side to the other, wherein he saw many things which the Portugals knew not. Not long after this, one Ferdinando Continbo a Portugall came vnto Ormuz, and being desirous to see the world, he determined to goe into Portugall, from thence ouer land to see Asia and Europe: And to doe this the better, he went into Arabia, Persia, and vpwards the Riuer Euphrates the space of a moneth, and saw many Kingdomes and Countries, which in our time had not beneene scene by the Portugals: He was taken prisoner in Damasco, and afterward crost ouer the Prouince of Syria, and came vnto the Citie of Alepo. He had beneene at the holy Sepulchre in Ierusalem, and in the Citie of Cayro, and at Constantinople with the Great Turke; and hauing scene his Court he passed ouer vnto Venice, and from thence into Italie, France, Spaine, and so came againe to Lisbon. So that he and Damian de Goes were in our time the most noble Portugals, that had discovered and seen most Countries and Realmes of their owne affections.

In the yeere 1531. there went one Diego de Ordaz to be Gouvernour in the Riuer of Maragnon, with three ships, fixe hundred Souldiers, and thirty five Horses. He died by the way, so that the intention came to none effect. After that, in the yeere 1534. there was sent thither one Hierome Arsal with an hundred and thirty Souldiers, yet he came not to the Riuer, but peopled Saint Michael de Neueri, and other places in Paria. Also there went vnto this Riuer Maragnon a Portugall Gentleman named Aries Dacugna, and hee had with him ten ships, nine hundred Portugals, and an hundred and thirty horses. Hee spent much, but hee that lost most was one John de Barros. This Riuer standeth in 3. degrees toward the South, hauing at the entrance of it fiftene leagues of bredth and many Ilands inhabited, wherein growe trees that beare Incence of a greater bignesse then in Arabia, gold, rich stones, and one Emerald was found there as bigge as the palme of a mans hand. The people of the Countrie make their Drinke of a kind of Dates, which are as big as Quinces.

In the same yeere 1531. one Nunnez de Gusman went from the Citie of Mexico towards the North-west to discover and conquer the Countries of Xalisco, Ceintiliquipac, Ciametlan, Tonallala, Cnixco, Ciamolla, Culhuacan, and other places. And to doe this he carried with him two hundred and fifty Horses, and five hundred Souldiers. He went thorow the Countrie of Mechuacan, where he had much Gold, ten thousand Markes of Silver, and fixe thousand Indians to carrie burdens. He conquered many Countries, called that of Xalisco Nueva Galicia, because it is a ragged Countrie, and the People strong. He builded a Citie which he called Compostella, and another named Guadalaiara, because hee was borne in the Citie of Guadalaiara in Spaine. Hee likewise builded the Townes De Santo Espirito, De la Concepcion, and De San Miguel standing in 24. degrees of Northerly latitude.

In the yeere 1532. Ferdinando Cortes sent one Diego Hurtado de Mendoza vnto Acapulco seuentie leagues from Mexico, where he had prepared a small Fleet to discover the Coast of the South Sea as he had promised the Emperour. And finding two ships ready, he went into them, and sailed to the Hauen of Xalisco, where he would haue taken in Water and Wood: but Nunnez de Gusman caused him to be resisted, and so he went forward: but some of his men mutined against him, and hee put them all into one of the shippes, and sent them backe into New Spaine. They wanted water, and going to take some in the Bay of the Vanders, the Indians killed them. But Diego Hurtado sailed two hundred leagues along the Coast, yet did nothing worth the writing.

In the yeere 1533. Francis Pizarro went from the Citie of Tumbes to Caxamalca, where he rooke the King Atabalipa. Peter Aluorado found Mountaines full of Snowe, and so cold, that seuentie of his men were frozen to death. When he came vnto Quito, he began to inhabite it, and named it S. Francis.

In the yeere 1534. a Briton called Iaques Cartier, with three ships went to the land of Corte-realis, and the Bay of Saint Laurence, otherwise called Golfo Quadrato, and fell in 48. degrees and an halfe towards the North, and so he sailed till he came vnto 51. degrees hoping to haue passed that way to China, and to bring thence drugs and other merchandise into France. The next yeere after he made another Voyage into those parts, and found the Countrie abounding with Viſtualls, Houses, and good Habitations, with many and great Riuer. He sailed in one Riuer toward the South-west three hundred leagues, and named the Countrie thereabout Noua Francia: at length finding the water fresh, he perceiued he could not passe thorow to the South Sea, and hauing wintered in those parts, the next yeere following he returned into France.

- 10 In the yeere 1535. or in the beginning of the yeere 1536. Don Antonie de Mendoza came vnto the Citie of Mexico, as Vice-roy of New Spaine. In the meane while Cortes was gone for more men to continue his Discoverie, which immediatly he set in hand sending forth two ships from Tecoantepec which hee had made ready. There went as Captaines in them Fernando de Grijalua, and Diego Bezerra de Mendoza, and for Pilots there went a Portugall named Acosta, and the other Fortunio Ximenez a Biscaine. The first night they diuided themselves. Fortunio Ximenez killed his Captaine Bezerra, and hurt many of his confederacy: and then he went on land to take Water and Wood in the Bay of Santa Cruz, but the Indians there slue him, and about twenty of his companie. Two Mariners which were in the Boat escaped, and went vnto Xalisco, and told Nunnes de Gusman that they had found tokens of Pearles: hee went into the ship, and so went to seeke the Pearles, hee discouered along the Coast about an hundred and fifty leagues. They said that Ferdinando de Grijalua sailed three hundred leagues from Tecoantepec without seeing any land, but onely one Iland which he named The Ile of Saint Thomas, because he came vnto it on that Saints day: it standeth in 20. degrees of latitude.

- 20 In this same yeere 1535. Nunnez Dacunna being Gouvernour of India, while he was making a Fortresse at the Citie of Diu, he sent a Fleet to the Riuer of Indus, being from thence ninety or an hundred leagues towards the North vnder the Tropike of Cancer. The Captaines name was Vasques Perez de San Paio: also he sent another Armie against Badu the King of Cambaia, the Captaine whereof was Coscosar a Renegado. They came to the barre of that mighty Riuer in the moneth of December, of the water whereof they found such triall as Quintus Curtius writeth of it, when Alexander came thither.

- 30 In this yeere 1535. one Simon de Alcazaua went from Smill with two ships and two hundred and forty Spaniards in them. Some say they went to New Spaine, others that they went to Maluco, but others also say to China, where they had beene with Ferdinando Perez de Andrada. Howsoeuer it was, they went first vnto the Canaries, and from thence to the Straight of Magelan, without touching at the Land of Brasill, or any part at all of that Coast. They entred into the Straight in the moneth of December with contrary windes and cold weather. The Souldiers would haue had him turne backe againe, but he would not. Hee went into an Hauen on the South side in 53. degrees: There the Captaine Simon de Alcazaua commanded Roderigo de Isla with sixty Spaniards to goe and discouer Land: but they rose vp against him and killed him, and appointed such Captaines and Officers as pleased them, and returned. Comming thwart of Brasill they lost one of their ships vpon the Coast, and the Spaniards that escaped drowning were eaten by the Sauages. The other ship went to Saint Iago in Hispaniola, and from thence to Smill, in Spaine.

Hee died by the way returning homewards. The most part of his men remained in that Riuer, and builded a great Towne contayning now two thousand houses, wherein great store of Indians dwell with the Spaniards. They discouered and conquered the Countrie till they came to the Mines of Potosi, and to the Towne La Plata, which is five hundred leagues distant from them.

- 50 In the yeere 1536. Cortes vnderstanding that his ship wherein Fortunio Ximenez was Pilot was seized on by Nunnez de Gusman, hee sent forth three ships to the place where Gusman was, and he himselfe went by Land well accompanied, and found the ship which he sought all spoiled and rifled. When his three other ships were come about, hee went aboard himselfe with the most part of his Men and Horses, leauing for Captaine of those which remained on land one Andrew de Tapia. So he set sayle, and comming to a Point the first day of May he called it S. Philip, and an Iland that lieth fast by it he called Sant Iago. Within three dayes after he came into the Bay where the Pilot Fortunio Ximenez was killed, which hee called La plata de Santa Cruz, where he went on land, and commanded Andrew de Tapia to discouer. Cortes tooke shipping again, and came to the Riuer now called Rio de San Pedro y San Paulo, where by a tempest the ships were separated, one was driuen to the Bay of Santa Cruz, another to the Riuer of Guaianal, & the third was driuen on shore hard by Xalisco, and the men thereof went by land to Mexico. Cortes long expected his two ships that he wanted: but they not coming he hoised saile and entred into the Gulfe now called Mar de Cortes, Mar Vermeio, or the Gulfe of California, and and shot himselfe fiftie leagues within it: where he espied a ship at anker, and sayling towards her hee had beene lost if that ship had not succoured him. But hauing graued his ship, hee departed with both the ships from thence. He bought victuals at a deare rate at Saint Michael of Culhuacan; and from thence he went to the Hauen of Santa Cruz, where hee heard that Don Antonio de Mendoza, was come out of Spaine to be Viceroy. He therefore left to be Captayne of his men one Francis de Ulloa, to send him certaine ships to discouer that Coast.

While he was at Acapulco, messengers came vnto him from Don Antonio de Mendoza the Viceroy, to certifie him of his arriual: and also hee sent him the copie of a Letter, wherein Francis Pizarro wrote, that Mango Ynga was risen against him, and was come to the Citie of Cusco with an hundred thousand fighting men, and that they had killed his brother Iohn Pizarro, and aboute foure hundred Spaniards, and two hundred Horses, and hee himselfe was in danger so that hee demanded succour and ayde. Cortes being informed of the state of Pizarro, and of the arriual of Don Antonio de Mendoza, because he would not as yet bee at obedience; First he determined to send to Maluco to discouer that way along vnder the Equinoctiall line, because the Ilands of Clones stand vnder that paralell: And for that purpose hee prepared two ships with prouision, victuals and men, besides all other thinges necessarie. Hee gaue the charge of one of these ships to Ferdinando de Grijalua, and of the other vnto one Aluaredo a Gentleman. They went first to Saint Michael de Tangarara in Peru to succour Francis Pizarro, and from thence to Malucco all along neere the line as they were commanded. And it is declared that they sayled aboute a thousand leagues without fight of land, on the one side, nor yet on the other of the Equinoctiall. And in 2. degrees toward the North they discouered one Iland named Asca, which seemeth to be one of the Ilands of Clones: five hundred leagues little more or lesse as they sayled, they came to the sight of another which they named Isla de los Pescadores. Going still in this course they saw another Iland called Hayme towards the South, and another named Apia: and then they came to the sight of Seri: turning towards the North one degree, they came to anker at another Iland named Coroa, and from thence they came to another vnder the line named Meosum, and from thence vnto Busu, standing in the same course. The people of all these Ilands are blacke, and haue their haire frizled, whom the people of Maluco doe call Papuas. The most of them eate mans flesh, and are Witches, so giuen to diuelishnesse, that the Diuels walke among them as companions. If these wicked spirits doe finde one alone, they kill him with cruell blowes or smother him. Therefore they vse not to goe, but when two or three may bee in a companie.

The Moun-
taines of Abibe

There is heere a Bird as bigge as a Crane: hee flyeth not, nor hath any winges wherewith to flie, he runneth on the ground like a Deere: of their small feathers they doe make haire for their Idols. There is also an Herbe, which being washed in warme water, if the leafe thereof be laid on any member and licked with the tongue, it will draw out all the blood of a mans body: and with this leafe they vse to let themselues blood. From these Ilands they came vnto others named the Guelles standing one degree towards the North-east, and West from the Ile Terenate, wherein the Portugals haue a Fortresse: these men are haired like the people of the Malucos. These Ilands stand one hundred and foure and twentie leagues from the Iland named Moro; and from Terenate betweene fortie and fiftie. From whence they went to the Ile of Moro, and the Ilands of Clones, going from the one vnto the other. But the people of the Countrey would not suffer them to come on land, saying vnto them: Goe vnto the Fortresse where the Captayne Antonie Galuano is, and we will receiue you with a good will: for they would not suffer them to come on land without his licence: for hee was Factor of the Countrey, as they named him. A thing worthie to be noted, that those of the Countrey were so affectioned to the Portugals, that they would venter for them their liues, wiues, children and goods.

In the yeere 1537. the Licenciado Iohn de Vadillo Gouvernour of Cartagena, went out with a good Armie from a port of V-raba called Saint Sebastian de buena Vista, being in the Gulfe of V-raba, and from thence to Rio verde, and from thence by land without knowing any way, nor yet hauing any Carriages, they went to the end of the Countrey of Peru, and to the Towne La plata, by the space of one thousand two hundred leagues: a thing worthie of memorie. For from this Riuer to the Mountaines of Abibe the Countrey is full of Hills, thicke Forests of trees, and many Riuers: and for lacke of a beaten way, they had pierced sides. The Mountaines of Abibe as it is recorded haue twentie leagues in bredth. They must be passed ouer in Ianuarie, Februarie, March, and Aprill. And from that time forward it raineth much, and the Riuers will be so greatly increased, that you cannot passe for them. There are in those Mountaines many heards of Swine, many Dantes, Lions, Tygres, Beares, Ounses, and great Cats, and Monkeys, and mightie Snakes, and other such vermine. Also there bee in these Mountaines abundance of Partridges, Quails, Turtle doves, Pigeons, and other Birds and Fowles of sundrie sorts. Likewise in the Riuers is such plentie of Fish, that they did kill of them with their staves: and carrying Canes and Nets, they affirme that a greut armie might bee sustained that way without being distressed for want of victuals. Moreouer they declared the diuersities of the people, tongues, and apparell that they obserued in the Countries, Kingdomes, and Prouinces which they

they went through, and the great trauels and dangers that they were in till they came to the towne called Villa de la Plata, and vnto the sea thereunto adioyning. This was the greatest discoverie that hath beene heard of by land, and in so short a time. And if it had not beene done in our dayes, the credit thereof would haue beene doubtfull.

In the yeere 1538. there went out of Mexico certaine Friers of the order of Saint Francis towards the North to preach to the Indians the Catholike Faith. He that went farthest was one Frier Marke de Nizaa, who passed through Culhuacan, and came to the Prouince of Sibola, where he found seuen Cities.

In the same yeere 1538. Antonie Galuano being chiefe captaine in the Iles of Maluco sent a ship towards the North, whereof one Francis de Castro was captaine, hauing commandement to conuert as many as he could to the Faith. He himselfe christened many, as the Lords of the Celebes, Macasares, Amboynes, Moros, Moratax, and diuers other places. When Francis de Castro arriued at the Iland of Mindanao, fixe Kings receiued the water of Baptisme, with their wiues, children and Subiects: and the most of them Antonie Galuano gaue commandement to be called by the name of Iohn, in remembrance that King Iohn the third raigned then in Portugall.

The Portugals and Spaniards which haue beene in these Ilands affirme, that there be certaine hogs in them, which besides the teeth which they haue in their mouthes, haue other two growing out of their snouts, and as manie behinde their eares of a large span and an halfe in length. Likewise they say there is a tree, the one halfe whereof, which standeth towards the east is a good medecine against all poyson, and the other side of the tree which standeth toward the West is very poyson; and the fruit on that side is like a bigge pease; and there is made of it the strongest poyson that is in all the World. Also they report that there is there another tree, the fruit whereof whosoever doth eate, shall bee twelue houres besides himselfe, and when he cometh againe vnto himselfe, he shall not remember what hee did in the time of his madnesse. Moteouer there are certaine crabs of the land, whereof whosoever doth eate shall be a certaine space out of his wits. Likewise the countrey people declare that there is a stone in these Ilands whereon whosoever sitteth shall be broken in his bodie. It is farther to be noted, that the people of these Ilands doe gild their teeth.

In the yeere 1539. Cortes sent three ships with Francis Villon to discover the coast of Culhuacan Northward. They went from Acapulco, and touched at Saint Iago de buena speranza, and entred in the gulf that Cortes had discovered, and sailed till they came in 32. degrees, which is almost the farthest end of that gulf, which place they named Ancon de Sant Andres, because they came thither on that Saints day: Then they came out a long the coast on the other side, and doubled the point of California and entred in betweene certaine Ilands and the point, and so sailed along by it, till they came to 32. degrees, from whence they returned to New Spaine, enforced thereunto by contrary windes and want of victualls; hauing been out about a yeere. Cortes according to his account, spent two hundred thousand ducats in these discoveries.

From Cabo del Enganno to another Cape called Cabo de Liampo in China there are one thousand or twelue hundred leagues sayling. Cortes and his Captaines discovered new Spaine, from 12. degrees to 32, from the South to the North, being seuen hundred leagues, finding it more warme then cold, although Snow doe lie ypon certaine mountaines most part of the yeere. In New Spaine there be many trees, flowers and fruits of diuers sorts and profitable for many things. The principall tree is named Metl. It groweth not very high nor thicke. They plant and dresse it as we doe our vines. They say it hath fortie kinde of leaues like wouen clothes, which serue for many vses. When they be tender they make conserues of them, paper, and a thing like vnto flaxe: they make of it mantles, mats, shooes, girdles, and cordage. These trees haue certaine prickles so strong and sharpe, that they sewe with them. The roots make fire and ashes, which ashes make excellent good lie. They open the earth from the root and scrape it, and the iuyce which commeth out is like sirupe. If you doe seeth it, it will become honie; if if you purifie it, it will be sugar. Also you may make wine and vineger thereof. It beareth the Coco. The rinde roasted and crushed vpon soares and hurts healeth and cureth. The iuyce of the tops and roots mingled with incense are good against poyson, and the biting of a Viper. For these manifold benefits it is the most profitable tree knowne to grow in those parts. Also there be there certain small birds named Vismalim, their bil is smal & long. They liue of the dew, and the iuyce of flowers and roses. Their feathers bee verie small and of diuers colours. They be greatly esteemed to worke gold with. They die or sleepe euery yeere in the moneth of October, sitting vpon a little bough in a warme and close place: they reuiue or wake againe in the moneth of Aprill after that the flowers bee sprung, and therefore they call them the reuiued birdes.

Likewise there be Snakes in these parts, which sound as though they had bells when they creepe. There be other which engender at the mouth, euen as they report of the Viper. There bee hogges which haue a nauell on the ridge of their backes, which assoone as they bee killed and cut out, will by and by corrupt and stinke. Besides these there be certain fishes which make a noyse like vnto hogs, and will snort, for which cause they bee named Snorters.

fol. 363.

In the yeere 1538. and 1539. after that Diego de Almagro was beheaded, the Marquesse Francis Pizarro was not idle. For he sent straight one Peter de Baldinia with a good companie of men to discouer and conquer the countrey of Chili. He was well receiued of those of the coun-trei, but afterwards they rose against him and would haue killed him by treason. Yet for all the waire that hee had with them, he discouered much Land, and the coast of the Sea toward the South-east, till he came into 40. degrees and more in Latitude. While he was in these dis-coueries he heard newes of a King called Leucengolina, which commonly brought to the field
two hundred thousand fighting men against another King his neighbour, and that this Leucengolina had an Iland, and a Temple therein with two thousand Priests: and that beyond them were the Amazones, whose Queene was called Guanomilla, that is to say, The golden beauen. But as yet there are none of these things discouered. About this time Gomez de Aluarnado went to conquer the Prouince of Guanuco: and Francis de Chanex went to subdue the Conchincos, which troubled the towne of Truxillo, and the countreys adioyning. Peter de Vergara went to the Bra-camores, a people dwelling toward the North from Quito. Iohn Perez de Vergera went against the Ciaciapoians: Alfonso de Mercadiglio went vnto Mulubamba. Ferdinando and Gonzaluo Pi-zarros went to subdue Collao, a countrey very rich in golde. Peter de Candia went to the lower part of Collao. Peranzures also went to conquer the said countrey. And thus the Spaniards dispersed themselues, and conquered aboue seuen hundred leagues of countrey in a very short space, though not without great trauailes and losse of men.

The countreyes of Brasil and Peru stand East and West almost eight hundred leagues distant. The neereft is from the Cape of Saint Augustine vnto the haue of Truxillo: for they stand both almost in one parallell and Latitude.

In some places of the Andes and Countries the earth is of diuers colours, as blacke, white, red, greene, blew, yellow, and violet, wherewith they die colours without any other mixture.
There grow on these mountaines many turneps, rapes, and other such like rootes and herbes.
One there is like vnto Aipo or Rue which beareth a yellow flower, and healeth all kinde of rotten sores, and if you apply it vnto whole and cleane flesh it will eate it vnto the bone: so that it is good for the vsound and naught for the whole.

Those which liue on the tops of these mountaines of Andes betweene the cold and the heat for the most part be blinde of one eye, and some altogether blinde, and scarce you shall finde
two men of them together, but one of them is halfe blinde. Also there groweth in these fieldes, notwithstanding the great heate of the sand good Maiz, and Potatoes, and an herbe which they name Coca, which they carrie continually in their mouthes (as in the East India they vse another herbe named Betele) which also (they say) satisfieth both hunger and thirst. Also they sow much cotton wooll, which of nature is white, red, blacke, greene, yellow, orange tawne, and of diuers other colours.

Likewise they affirme, that from Tumbex Sou hward it doth neither raine, thunder, nor lighten, for the space of fife hundred leagues of land: but at some times there falleth some little shower. Also it is reported, that from Tumbex to Chili there breede no Peacocks, Hens, Cocks nor Eagles, Falcons, Haukes, Kites, nor any other kinde of rauening Fowles, and yet there are of thm in all other regions and countreyes: but there are many Ducks, Geese, Herons, Pigeons Partridges, Quailes, and many other kinds of birdes. There are also a certaine kinde of foule, like vnto a duck which hath no wings to flie withall, but it hath fine thinne feathers which couer all the bodie. Likewise there are Bitters that make warre with the scale or Sea-wolfe: for finding them out of the water they will labour to picke out their eyes, that they may not see to get to the water againe, and then they doe kill them. They say it is a pleasant sight to behold the fight betweene the said Bitters and Scales. With the beards of these Scales men make clean their teeth, because they bee whol some for the tooth-ache. There are certaine beasts which those of the countrey call Xacos, and the Spaniards sheepe, because they beare wooll like vnto a sheepe, but are made much like vnto a Deere, hauing a saddle backe like vnto a Camell. They will carrie the burthen of an hundred weight. The Spaniards ride vpon them, and when they be wearie they will turne their heads backward, and voide out of their mouthes a wonderfull stinking water.

From the Riuer of Plata and Lima Southward there breede no Crocodiles nor Lizards, nor Snakes, nor any kinde of venemous vermine, but great store of good fishes breede in those Riuers. On the coast of Saint Michael in the South Sea there are many rockes of salt couered with egges. On the point of Saint Helena are certaine Well springs which cast forth a liquor, that serueth in stead of pitch and tarre. They say that in Chili there is a fountaine, the water whereof will conuert wood into stone. In the haue of Truxillo there is a Lake of fresh water, and the bottome thereof is of good hard sale. In the Andes beyond Xauxa there is a riuer of fresh water, in the bottome whereof there lieth white salt.

In the yeere 1540. the Captaine Ferdinando Alorchon went by the commandement of the Vice-roy Don Antonio de Mendoza with two ships to discouer the bottome of the gulf of California, and diuers other countries.

In this yeere 1540. Gonsalvo Pizarro went out of the Citie of Quito, to Discover the Countie of Canell or Cinamome, a thing of great fame in that Countie. Hee had with him two hundred Spaniards, Horse-men and Foote-men, and three hundred Indians to carie burthens. Hee went forward till he came to Guixos, which is the farthest place gouerned by the Ingas: where there hapned a great Earthquake with Raine and Lightning, which sunke seuentie Houses. They passed ouer cold and Snowie hils, where they found many Indians Frozen to death, maruelling much of the great Snow that they found vnder the Equinoctiall line. From hence they went to a Prouince called Cumaco, where they taried two Moneths, because it Rained continually. And beyond they saw the Cinamome-trees, which be very great, the Leaues thereof resembling Bay-leaues, both Leaues, Branches, Rootes, and all tastig of Cinamome: The Rootes haue the whole taste of Cinamome. But the best are certaine knops like vnto Alcornogues or Acornes, which are good merchandise. It appeareth to be wild Cinamome, and there is much of it in the East Indies, and in the Ilands of Iaoa or Ianaï. From hence they went to the Prouince and Citie of Coca, where they rested fiftie dayes. From the place forwards they travelled along by a Riuer side being sixtie Leagues long, without finding of any Bridge, nor yet any Foorte to passe ouer to the other side. They found one place of this Riuer, where it had a fall of two hundred fathoms deepe, where the Water made such a noyse, that it would make a man almost deafe to stand by it. And not farre beneath this fall, they say they found a Channell of stone verie smooth, of two hundred foote broad, and the Riuer runneth by: and there they made a Bridge to passe ouer on the other side, where they went to a Countie called Guema, which was so poore, that they could get nothing to eate, but onely Fruites and Herbes. From that place forward they found a people of some reason, wearing certaine Clothing made of Cotton-wooll, where they made a Brigandine, and there they found also certaine Canoas, wherein they put their Sicke men, and their Treasure and best Apparell, giuing the charge of them to one Francis de Orellana: and Gonsalvo Pizarro went by Land with the rest of the Companie along by the Riuer side, and at night went into the Boates, and they travelled in this order two hundred Leagues as it appeareth. When Pizarro came to the place where he thought to finde the Brigandine and Canoas, and could haue no sight of them nor yet heare of them, he thought himselfe out of all hope, because hee was in a strange Countie without Viſuals, Clothing, or any thing else: wherefore they were faine to care their Horses, yea and Dogs also, because the Countie was poore and barren, and the Iourney long to goe to Quito. Yet notwithstanding, taking a good heart to themselves they went on forward in their Iourney, travelling continually eightene Moneths, and it is reported, that they went almost five hundred Leagues, wherein they did neither see Sunne, nor any thing else, whereby they might be comforted, wherefore of two hundred men which went forth at the first, there returned not backe past ten vnto Quito, and these so weake, ragged and disfigured, that they knew them not. Orellana went five hundred or sixe hundred Leagues downe the Riuer, seeing diuers Counties and people on both sides thereof, among whom he affirmed some to bee Amazones. He came into Castile, excusing himselfe, that the water and streames draue him downe perforce. This Riuer is named the Riuer of Orellana, and other name it the Riuer of the Amazones, because there be Women there which liue like vnto them.

In the yeere 1540. Cortes went with his Wife into Spain, where hee died of a Disease seuen yeeres after.

In the yeere 1541, it is recorded that Don Stephan de Gama Gouverneur of India, Sayled toward the Streight of Mecca.

In the same yeere 1541. Don Diego de Almagro killed the Marques Francis Pizarro, and his brother Francis Martinez of Alcantara in the Citie of los Reyes, otherwise called Lima, and made himselfe Gouverneur of that Countie.

In the yeere 1540. the Vice-roy Don Antonio de Mendoza, sent one Francis Vasquez de Coronado by Land vnto the Prouince of Sibola, with an Armie of Spaniards and Indians.

In the yeere of our Lord 1542. one Diego de Freitas, being in the Realme of Siam, and in the Citie of Dedra as Captaine of a Ship, there fled from him three Portugals in a Iunco (which is a kind of Ship) towards China. Their names were Antonie de Mota, Francis Zeimoro, and Antonie Pexoto, directing their course to the Citie of Liampo, standing in thirtie and odde Degrees of Latitude. There fell vpon their Sterne such a storme, that it set them off the Land, and in fewe dayes they saw an Iland towards the East standing in thirtie two Degrees, which they doe name Iapan, which seemeth to be the Ile of Zipangri, whereof Paulus Venetus maketh mention, and of the riches thereof. And this Iland of Iapan hath Gold, Siluer, and other riches.

In this yeere 1542. Don Antonio de Mendoza Vice-roy of Nueva Spagna, sent his Captaines and Pilots to Discover the Coast of Cape del Engaño, where a Fleete of Cortes had heene before. They Sailed till they came to a place called Sierras Nenadas, or The Snowie mount aines, standing in fortie Degrees toward the North, where they saw Ships and Merchandises, which carried on their Stems the Images of certaine Birds called Alcatraz, and had the Yards of their Sailes gilded, and their Prowes laide ouer with siluer. They seemed to be of the Iles of Iapan, or of China; for they said that it was not about thirtie dayes sayling into their Countie.

In the same yeere 1542. Don Anthonie de Mendoça, sent vnto the Ilands of Mindanao a Fleete of sixe Ships with foure hundred Souldiers, and as many Indians of the Countrie, the Generall whereof was one Rui Lopez de villa Lobos, being his Brother in law and a man in great estimation. They set Sayle from the Hauen of Natiuidad standing in twentie Degrees towards the North, vpon All-Saints Ecue, and shaped their course towards the West. They had sight of the Iland of Saint Thomas, which Hernando de Grijalua had Discouered, and beyond in seuentene Degrees they had sight of another Iland which they named La Nublada, that is, The Cloudie Iland. From thence they went to another Iland named Roca partida, that is, The Clouen Rocke. The third of December they found certaine Baxos or Flats of sixe or seuen Fathoms deepe. The fifteene of the same Moneth they had sight of the Ilands, which Diego de Roca, and Gomez de Sequeira, and 10 Aluaro de Saanedra had Discouered, and named them Los Reyes, because they came vnto them on Twelfe-day. And beyond them they found other Ilands in ten Degrees all standing round, and in the midst of thew they came to an Anker, where they tooke fresh water and wood.

In the yeere 1543. in Ianuarie they departed from the foresaid Ilands with all the Fleete, and had sight of certaine Ilands, out of which there came vnto them men in a certaine kind of Boates, and they brought in their hands Crosses, and saluted the Spaniards in the Spanish tongue, saying, Buenas dias, Matelotes, that is to say, Good morrow companions; whereat the Spaniards much marueiled, being then so farre out of Spaine, to see the men of that Countrie with Crosses, and to bee saluted by them in the Spanish tongue, and they seemed in their behauiour to encline somewhat to our Catholicke Faith. The Spaniards not knowing, that many thereabout had bene Christ- 10 nized by Francis de Castro, at the commandement of Anthonie Galuano, some of them named these Ilands, Islas de las Cruzes, and others named them Islas de los Matelotes. In the same yeere 1543. the first of Februarie Rui Lopez, had sight of that noble Iland Mindanao standing in nine Degrees: they could not double it nor yet come to an Ancre as they would, because the Christened Kings and people resisted them, hauing giuen their obedience to Anthonie Galuano, whom they had in great estimation, and there were five or sixe Kings that had receiued Baptisme, who by no meanes would incurre his displeasure. Rui Lopez perceiving this, and hauing a contrarie wind, Sayled along the Coast to find some ayde: and in foure or five Degrees, hee found a small Iland which they of the Countrie call Sarangani, which they tooke perforce, and in memorie of the Vice-roy who had sent them thither, they named it Antonia, where they remained a whole yeere. 30

In the same yeere 1543. and in the moneth of August, the Generall Rui Lopez sent one Bartholomeu de la torre in a small Ship into new Spaine, to acquaint the Vice-roy Don Antonio de Mendoça with all things. They went to the Ilands of Siria, Gaonara, Balaia, and many others, standing in eleuen and twelue Degrees towards the North, where Magellan had bene, and Francis de Castro also, who there Baptized many, and the Spaniards called them the Philippines in memorie of the Prince of Spaine. Here they tooke victuals and wood, and hoysed Sayles, they Sayled for certaine dayes with afore-wind, till it came vpon the skanting, and came right vnder the Tropicke of Cancer. The twentie five of September they had sight of certaine Ilands, which they named Malabrigos, that is to say, The euill Roades. Beyond them they Discouered Las dos Hermanas, That is, The two Sisters. And beyond them also they saw foure Ilands more, which they called los Volcanes. The second of October they had sight of Farfana, beyond which there standeth an high pointed Rocke, which casteth out Fire at five places. So Sayling in sixtene Degrees of Northerly Latitude, from whence they had come, as it seemeth wanting Wind, they arrived againe at the Ilands of the Philippines. They had sight of sixe or seuen Ilands more, but they Ankered not at them. They found also an Archipelagus of Ilands, well inhabited with people, lying in fifteene or sixtene Degrees: the people be White, and the Women well proportioned, and more beautifull and better Arraied then in any other place of those parts, hauing many Jewels of Gold, which was a token, that there was some of that Metall in the same Countrie. Heere were also Barkes of fortie three Cubits in length, and two Fathoms and a halfe in breadth, and the Plankes five Inches thicke, which Barkes were rowed with Oares. They told the Spaniards, 50 that they vsed to Saile in them to China, and that if they would goe thither they should haue Pilots to conduct them, the Countrie not being above five or sixe dayes Sayling from thence. There came vnto them also certaine Barkes or Boates handsomely decked, wherein the Master and principall men sat on high, and ynderneath were very Black-moores with Frilled haire: and being demanded where they had these Black-moores, they answered, that they had them from certaine Ilands standing fast by Sebur, where there were many of them, a thing that the Spaniards much maruailed at, because from thence it was above three hundred Leagues to the places where the Blacke people were. Therefore it seemed, that they were not naturally borne in that Climate, but that they be in certaine places scattered ouer the whole circuit of the World. For euen so they be in the Ilands of Nicobar and Andaman, which stand in the Gulfe of Bengala, and from thence by the space of five hundred Leagues, we doe not know of any Blacke people. Also Vasco Nunez de Vaisboa declareth, that as he went to Discouer the South Sea, in a certaine Land named Quareca, he found Blacke people with Frilled haire, whereas there were neuer any other found either in Nona Spagna, or in Castilia del Oro, or in Peru.

In the yeere 1544. Don Gutierre de Vargas Bishop of Placenza sent a Fleet from the Citie of Sinill vnto the Straits of Magellan : which is reported to haue beene done by the counsell of the Vice-roy Don Antonie de Mendoza his Cousin. Some suspected, that they went to Maluco, others to China, others, that they went onely to discouer the Land betwixt the Strait and the Land of Peru on the other side of Chili, because it was reported to bee very rich in Gold and Siluer. But this Fleet by reason of contrary windes could not passe the Strait, yet one small Barke passed the same, and sayled along the coast, and discouered all the Land, till he came vnto Chirimai, and Arequipa.

10 In the yeere 1545. and in the moneth of Ianuary Rui Lopez de villa Lobos, and Giraldo with the Castilians came to the Iland of Moro, and the Citie of Camaso, where they were well receiued of the Kings of Gilolo and Tidore, and of the people of the Countrie (because Antonie Gualuano was gone) and put the Captaine Don George de Castro to great trouble, as appeared by those things which passed betweene him and the Portugals, and the great expences whereunto he put the Fortresse.

20 In the same yeere 1545. Rui Lopez de villa Lobos sent from the Iland of Tidore another ship towards New Spaine by the South side of the Line, wherein was Captaine one Inigo Ortez de Rotha, and for Pilot one Iaspar Rico. They sailed to the Coast of Os Papuas, and ranged all along the same, and because they knew not that Saanedra had been there before, they chalenged the honour and fame of that Discouerie. And because the people there were blacke and had frilled haire, they named it Nuova Guinea. For the memory of Saanedra as then was almost lost, as all things else doe fall into obliuion, which are not recorded, and illustrated by writing.

30 In this yeere 1545. and in the moneth of Iune, there went a Iunke from the Citie of Borneo, wherein went a Portugall called Peter Fidalgo, and by contrary winds he was driuen towards the North; where he found an Iland standing in 9. or 10. degrees, that stretched it selfe to 22. degrees of latitude, which is called The Ile of the Lucones, because the Inhabitants thereof were so named. It may haue some other name and harbours which, which as yet we know not, it runneth from the North vnto the Southwest, and standeth betweene Mindanao and China. They say they sayled along by it 250. leagues, where the Land was fruitfull and well couered, and they affirme, that there they will giue two Pezos of gold for one of siluer.

The summe of a Letter of NICOLAS TRIGAVTIUS a Iesuite, touching his Voyage to India, and of the State of Christianitie in China and Iapan. A Letter also of Capt. R. COCKE, and Relations of Master ROBERTS wracke on the Coast of China in the Vnicorne.

40 WEE set sayle from Lisbon, the sixteenth of Aprill, 1618. being three ships: foure and thirty of the society were distributed into two ships: one of them called Saint Mauro carried twelue destined for Iapon, of which was the Reuerend Lord, L. Iames Valent Bishop of Iapon of our societie. Father Gabriel Matos was Superiour of the other ten. In the other ship two and twenty of vs were carried for China, ten Portugals, three Italians, foure Germans, and besides my selfe, foure Belgians. Wee sayled prosperously, sauing that all Ours were Sea-sicke till wee came to the Canaries. There I know not how the ships parted companie. Wee sayled to the Torrid Zone pleasantly appointing set and distinct houres for taking care of the sicke, for Sermons, the Masse (almost daily) Cases of Conscience, Mathematicall disciplines, exercise of the China Language, &c. About the Line we were infested with Feuers; all saue one, and fise died; lastly, I and my brother Philip were sicke, and kept our beds fifty dayes, insomuch as I receiued Vnction likely 50 in few houres to die. Wee passed the Cape on Saint Iames his Day, and a few dayes after (hauing hitherto had no tempest) were three nights together horribly tossed. The Captaine of our ship also died, and scarcely could another succeed in peace.

60 After fise moneths and a halfe sayling, wee came to Goa. The Saint Mauro came thither a moneth after vs, one of our Societie (an Italian) being dead. The Admirall a fortnight after that, arriued with disgrace, for that hauing fallen in companie with sixe English ships, hee chose rather with eighty thousand pieces of money which they call Patacas, to redeeme the fight, then to fight it out with victorie or death. For which cause the Admirall and some other Officers are deprived and sent backe to the King in bonds to be punished, or to render accounts of their fact. A few dayes after, my brother falls sicke and dieth. The rest follow their studies at Goa, till affaires of China and Iapon bee more quieted. For howsoeuer I had left the China businesse quiet, and imagined still the same, yet they which aspire now to their helpe must propound crosses and martyrdome to themselves.

At Nankin Christianitie thrived well and in other our houses. Thence arose the beginning of euill. A chiefe Iudge in the third Tribunall named Xin, a great Idolater, sought to chafe

Christianitie out of the Kingdome, and therefore opposed Ours by putting vp many Petitions fraught with calumnies, which he sent secretly to the King. But after often petitioning obtaining no rescript, he employeth others & useth bribes, getting to his party the chief President of the Third Tribunal, to which Court belongs the knowledge of forren affaires, and of Religion. He also petitions the King, but with such effect, that the King makes no answer (which with the Chinois is a denyall) and at last he writes to the King, that according to his Office he will send them out of the Kingdome, such excepted as remained in the Royall Citie. This he did, but the Magistrates of those Cities where Ours resided dissembled the matter, except that Nanquin aduersarie, which apprehended two Priests and a Brother, their Pupils, Seruants, and some new Conuerts, but durst not send them away before the Kings answer. Meane while he exercised them all in diuers Courts about nine moneths space, and some were often whipped after their cruell manner; one or two died in prison by force of the torments. Many of the Ethnikes fauoured Ours; but the Christian Magistrates Paulus, Michael, Leo did maruellously bestirre themselves. Nor did any Conuert apostatise, but beyond the China pusillanimities were both constant and cheerfull in their sufferings.

At last our Nanquin aduersarie bribing the Eunuchs with ten thousand pieces of Gold extorted from the King that Ours should be sent backe to their owne, but not (which he sought) their death. Ours therefore honorably dismissed from Pequin, came to Canton. Those of Nanquin were sent away with shame, and two were carried in Cages to Canton. In other residences they were more gently vsed, and all continued in the Kingdome but two of Pequin and two of Nanquin. After this the Pequin Magistrate was deprived and sent home with dishonour: he of Nanquin also fell sicke, and lost his onely daughter, which the Chinois esteeme a great euill; for which cause in great rage he burned a certaine Idoll to which hee had commended that his daughter. Ours adorned a new seat or residence in Xanfi. Father Felicianus à Sylua a Portugall, his carkasse hauing lien foure yeeres in the Coffin, kept at home after the China fashion, was opened and found entire with his garments. The skie suddenly ouercast was calmed on the shutting of the Coffin; a horrible thing to the Chinois, which are very scrupulous to open Graues. His body was buried in the fields, and is reported to worke miracles, and to be frequented of the New Conuerts. I am called by my Superiours with all speed, and there is hope that all things will bee amended.

Daifus death.

Now for the Iaponian Church. Daifu, after that noble victorie which he obtained against Fideiori and Zaca, is dead: in the glorie whereof his sonne obtained the Empire without tumult. The Church had quiet a yeere and halfe; but by the indiscreet zeale of some Religious at Nangasacke, the sore brake out againe. Foure men, a Dominican, Austinian, Franciscan, and Iesuite, haue beene martyred, other two continued in prison. Twenty in all Iapon haue died for the Faith, others haue beene exiled and punished, the story whereof is not vnlike to those which I left in Europe comprehended in foure Bookes of Iaponian triumphs, which I hope ere this haue seene the light. I looke for other intelligence within these two moneths, which I will leaue in Latine before I goe for the next ships.

Two Comets.

In India things remayne in the wonted state. At Bazain was an vnwonted tempest, whereupon Processions were made in all India. Two Comets were seene at the same time, one foureene dayes after the other: the later directed his course to the North, and still is seene whiles I write these things the twentieth of December, beginning to appeare the eleuenth of November, 1618.

Extracts out of TRIGAVTIVS his Martyrologe, or Fine Bookes of Christian Triumphs among the Iaponians, before mentioned.

THE Iaponian State being oppressed, He is Emperour which possesseth the Imperiall Provinces called Tenca (or Tensa) a name receiued of the Chinois, of whom the Iaponian Islands are a Colonie (by the Chinois called Iepuen, the beginning of the Sunne, by themselves Gupon or Nitpon) and that which the Chinois call Thienhia, that is, Whatsoeuer is under Heauen, the Iaponians terme Tenca, expressed with the same characters, howsoeuer differing in pronunciation. Taicosama died An. 1598. and left for his Heire a childe called Fideyori. Daifusama King of Quanto with others were appointed his Tutors or Protectors, which quarrelling for themselves, A. 1600. Daifusama getting the better, entituled himselfe Xogun or Cubosama. He left Fideyori in the most famous Fort of Iapon, with a tolerable reuenue. This continued till the yeere 1614. He remoued the Imperiall seat from Miaco to Surunga the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome of Fuchu, and built there a Castle to keepe his treasure: his Sonne*, destined to the Inheritance, he placed at Tendo (or Edoo) and married him to the Neece of Nabunanga, which was next Emperour before Taicosama, and Aunt to Fideyori, being Sister to his Mother. This Fideyori being now growne in yeeres at his Castle of Ozaca, Daifusama fearing that he might interuert the Inheritance from his Sonne, deuised trickes first, which being eluded brake forth into open warre.

He had set Fideyori on worke to build a sumptuous Temple in the Suburbs of Miaco, in which Daibut (that is, a great Idoll or Colosse of gilded Brasse, his thumbe a spanne compasse and the rest proportionable,) should be worshipped. His Father Taicofama had before built at great expence this Temple, but the fire had consumed it, and the Sonne was incited to renew it by him, which sought by that meanes to exhaust his Treasures, the sinewes of warre. This Temple at the eighth Moone (which is our September) was to be dedicated by three thousand Priests thither assembled with great pompe, the Emperour meane while intending to seize on Ozaca. To this end hee had sent for Ichinocam the Gouvernour of the Citie and wonne him to his part. But at his returne vpon suspition he was forced to quit the Towne, and the Emperours 10 intents made knowne, and that Dedication deferred. The Emperour came before Ozaca with a great Armie of two hundred thousand, of which he lost thirtie thousand in the Siege, and was forced to depart with dissembled Conditions of Peace, in Ianuarie 1615. This lasted but few moneths, and hee returned with another Armie as great as the former. Fideyori is also reported to haue two hundred thousand in his armie. Sacay was burned, and in two Battels Fideyori had the better. In the third the Emperour was so out of hope that hee thought there to haue ended his dayes, and spake to some to dispatch him, if they saw no meanes for him to escape his Enemies hands. But Samandonus the Generall seeing the Victorie sure, sent for Fideyori that hee should come to haue the honour thereof, who in youthfull hast neglecting his old Captaines, they enraged at this seeming contempt, and perhaps corrupted by Cubosamas money, set fire on 20 the Castle. This forced Fideyori backe to saue his Mother, Wife, and what he could from the flames, preferring safetie before honour. But hee lost both, with himselfe together, no man yet knowing what became of him. Ozaca was quite destroyed in Iuly 1615. and the Emperour returned Victorious to Surunga, and magnified his Idols which had done him this Honour for his zealous persecution of Christians. But in March 1616. this Tryumph was turned to his Funerall. Hee was buried in his Castle Cuno, where his Treasure was kept. One of his Sonnes hee would not see, his other sonne succeeded, who is thought not likely to containe the mutable Iaponian spirits in order: Two other sonnes he left, of which hee gaue order, that if they would not otherwise bee ordered they should lose their Heads. Some hopes by his death befell the Christians of more libertie, and they haue since performed their holies, but secretly, least they 30 should seeme to insult on the Dead. For in pretence of wrongs by Portugall Merchants, and Contempts of his Imperiall Edicts, and of Death, and the reports of worshipping some executed Christian Malefactors (at whose death some kneeling had commended them to Christ, which was thus Paganly misconstrued) hee had exiled many, and done many to diuers kindes both of tortures and death: which our Author handles at large in fise * Bookes, where they which please may both read and see in Pictures their diuersified passions: which also from Captaine Saris, Captaine Cocke and others, wee haue in part before deliuered, with another Cause inciting the Emperour thereto, namely Iesuiticall hypocrisie, who vnder pretence of Conuerting soules, had become Factors and Agents for the Portugall Merchants. But we shall giue you further and later Iaponian intelligence from our owne Countrymen.

A Letter concerning later Occurrents in Iapon from Master R. COCKE to Captaine SARIS, written at FIRANDO in Iapon, the 31. of December. 1622.

Captayne SARIS:

I Haue written you two former Letters to one effect, the one dated the Fourteenth ultimo, sent by a Scotchman called John Portis, in the Ship Moone. And the other kept till the Twentieth 50 ditto, and sent per Master John Munden, in the Ship Bull. In both which Letters, I wrote you at large as time then offered, vnto the which I referre me, not doubting, but one of them will come to your hands, if not both.

Since which time I am informed of the greatest Conspiracie that euer was heard of in Iapon, pretended against the person of Shouga Samma, the Emperour of Iapon now raigning, the Factors being such great personages, that it is thought the Emperour dare not meddle with them, but winke at it and make Peace with them. Nine of them being named as followeth, viz.

Cangano Egen Dono, the Emperours kinsman, and of the greatest reuenues in Iapon, per Annum 200. Mangocas. (Which Master G. Saris calculated at 1875000. pounds sterling money: and so of the rest proportionably.)

60 Shimaszu Dono, King of Xaxica and Liqueas, most feared of any Prince in Iapon, for the strength of his Countries and valiantnesse of his Souldiers, his reuenues more then per annum 100. Mangocas,

Micanano Camy Dono, Sonne to this Emperours eldest Brother, called by the same name, a valiant man, but disinherited by Ogosho Samma his Father, because hee had lost his Nose by too much much Venerie, and Shougosama his brother (now Emperour) Constituted in his place: this mans reuenues rated at 70. Mangocas.

Massamonedas Dono, King of Osheu, per annum 70. Mangocas.

Mengamy Dono, King of , per annum 35. Mangocas.

Yechew Dono, King of Cocora, per annum 34. Mangocas.

Catto Samma Dono, King of I. O. per annum 30. Mangocas.

Nancobo Dono, High Priest or Bonse of Edo, and second to the Daire in Church matters, and Tutor to this Emperour Shonga Samma, per annum 001. Mangoco.

Codgsque Dono, Secretarie to Ogosho Samma when you were in Iapon, then had 3. Mangocas, but aduanced per Shougo Samma, per annum 10015. Mangocas.

Rule to summe the Reuenues aforesaid.
* Viz. of Firando.
Osaca.

Euery Mangoca is 10000. Gocas, and each Gaca is 100. Gantas of Rice, and each Ganta may be some three Ale pintes in England, for it is aboute three Wine pintes as I haue scene it proued per an English wine pinte in Iapon. And this King * (or Tono) of Firando, hath but six Mangocas, as I thinke you doe remember, yet is esteemed as much as the greatest Earledome in England, hee being stinted at foure thousand Souldiers or men at Armes, two thousand to keepe his owne Countrey, and two thousand to serue the Emperour at demand, but is able to set out many thousands more if need require.

And it is now some fixe or seuen yeere past, that Calsa Samma this Emperours second Brother, (who is married to Massamonedas Daughter) was vpon suspition disinherited by his Brother, and shauen a Pagan Bonse or Monke, and Confined into a Pagan Monasterie, with gaurds set about him. Attending euer since when the Emperour his brother would command him to cut his belly, but yet living.

Thus much I thought good to aduise you of the present state of Iapon, much altered from that it was at your being heere; and for the rest, I hope to tell you by word of mouth at my returne into England, which I hope to doe the next yeere, God sparing me life and libertie.

Master Edmond Sayer departed from hence towards Edo, the tenth day of this moneth of December; as the Hollanders did the like, to carry Presents to the Emperour: and wee haue newes that they arriued at Osaca tenne dayes past. And now this Ship the Elizabeth being ready to depart towards Bantam, and so I thinke from thence for England, I thought it good to write you these few lines of Aduise; and so end with my heartie Commendations to your selfe, not forgetting all the rest of our friends and acquaintance.

A Note of the Vnicornes Companie in China.

Although wee haue referred China relations to another Tome, yet because in Captayne Prings former relations, mention is made of the Vnicorne wracked by foule weather on the dangerous shores of China; I thought good to mention thus much heere. I spake with Master Roberts the Master of the Ship, also with Master Pickering another of the companie: which both told me, that their Ship being lost, the Companie saued themselves and with part of the goods went ashore. The rude Chinois would haue assaulted and rifled them, but they stood to their defence, till an Officer or Magistrate came and relieued them from the vulgar: after which they found both just dealing and kind vsage. They were permitted to buy for their money two Vessels with all necessarie prouisions for their departure, and one part of the Companie went to Iapon, the other (as I remember) to Malacca. If thou hast no compleater storie (of those, the onely English-men which I know to haue been on land in China) I must excuse my selfe by their promises of perfecter Relations, which whiles I expected, I was lesse inquisitiue then otherwise I would haue beene. They fayled me, and as I heare, are returned to the Indies: and I, if I seeme to fayle heere, shall in the next Tome repay thee with vse.

CHAP. III.

A Letter touching Iapon with the Government, Affaires and later Occurrents there, written to me by Master ARTHUR HATCH Minister, lately returned thence.

Salutem in authore salutis.

Worthy SIR:

Auing promised to impart vnto you some obseruations of those Countries where I haue trauelled, especially of Iapon, I was loath either to breake my promise, or in the least respect frustrate your expectation. Late performance is better then none; but the multiplicite of my businesse hath beene the occasion of my late writing vnto you, which I hope you will excuse; and being now called into the Countrey, and so barred from conference with you, I know not how or in what what manner fully to accomplish your desire; and therefore I intend at this time to make relation vnto you of some particular passages onely, vntill I heare farther from you, but if I may stand you in any stead for the furtherance of your intended purpose, I would intreat you to acquaint me with your request, and you shall finde me most ready and willing to the vtermost of my slender power to accomplish it.

The Countrey of Japon is very large and spacious, consisting of seuerall Ilands and pettie Provinces; it is Mountainous and craggie, full of Rockes and stonie places, so that the third part of this Empire is nor inhabited or manured; neither indeed doth it afford that accommodation for Inhabitants which is needfull, or that farnessse and conueniencie for the growth of Corne, Fruit, and small grayne as is requisite; which causeth the people to select the choyest and plainest parts and places of the land both to till and dwell in. The Climate is temperate and healthie not much pestred with infectious or obnoxious ayres, but very subiect to fierce windes, tempestuous stormes, and terrible Earthquakes, insomuch that both Ships, in the harbour haue beene ouer-set, and driven a shore by the furie of the one, and Houses on the land disioynted and shaken to pieces by the fearefull trembling of the other.

It is gouerned by an Emperour who hath threescore and fise Kings vnder his command; they haue but small and pettie Kingdomes, yet all of them challenge and assume to themselves that Royall state and dignitie, which may well become the persons of farre more famous Princes. There are but fise of the Emperours priuie Councell, who commonly are such, that for Wisdome, Policie, and carefull vigilancie in managing the State affaires, in preventing of Treasons and Rebellions, in executing of Iustice and continuing of peace and quietnesse may bee compared with many, nay most in Christendome. No man may make knowne any cause vnto the Emperour himselfe, either by word of mouth or petition, but euery one must acquaint the Councell with his cause, and if they approue it, the Emperour shall know of it, if not, you must be content to haue it drowned in obliuion. The Emperour liues in great Royaltie and seldome goes abroad either to Hawke or Hunt without a thousand followers at least to attend him: he hath but one Wife, and it is generally reported that hee keepes companie with no other, but her onely; and if it bee true as it is thought, hee may in that respect be termed the Phoenix of all those parts of the world: as for those within his owne Dominions they are so faine either from imitating or following him, that one is scarcely contented with a hundred women, and they are so shamelesse in that kinde, that they will boast of it, and account it a glory vnto them to make relation of the multitude of women which they haue had the vse of. Consuetudo peccandi tollit sensum peccati. This Emperour hath abundance of Siluer and Gold, and not onely his Coffers but whole Store-houses are cramm'd with coyne; hee hath some balls of Gold which were brought to his Court from Ozechya Castle of that waight and magnitude, that fiftene or sixtene men are scarcely able to beare one of them.

All Riuers doe in a kinde of thankfull renumeration returne their waters to the Sea, because they tooke them from thence, but the Princes of Japon doe cleane contrarie, for they receiue nothing from the Emperour, and yet they giue all to the Emperour, for they doe euen impoverish themselves, by enriching him by presents; nay, they strue and contend who may giue the greatest and chiefeest Present. And each of those seuerall Princes must alwayes bee either himselfe in person, or his Brother, eldest Sonne, or the chiefe Nobleman within his Realme at the Emperours Court; the reason of it is not well knowne, but it is pretended, that it is done to keepe the seuerall Kingdomes in quiet, and free from tumults, treasons and rebellions. The Emperour doth ordinarily requite his Princes presents after this manner: hee giues them a Feather for a Goose, some few Kerrimoones or Coates, for Gold, Siluer or other precious and rare commodities; and that they may not grow rich, and of sufficient abilitie to make head against him, he suffers not their Fleeces to grow, but sheares them off, by raising Taxes on them for the building of Castles, and the repairing of Fortifications, and yet they are not suffered to repaire their owne, or any way to fortifie themselves.

Ozechya is the most famous Castle that the Emperour hath, or that is within the Empire; it is of an extraordinarie bignesse and compassed round with three seuerall walls; the Castle of Edo is likewise walled and moated, hauing some few Ordnance on it; at Crates and Falkata there are likewise Castles both walled and moated, the Circumference of each of them is neere about two mile. The chiefe Noble-men of those Kingdomes haue Houses within the Castle walls to come and liue there, either at the Kings or their owne pleasures, within each of those Castles there is a Storehouse kept ordinarily full of Rice, which may serue for their prouision at all occasions and needs. At Falkata there is a Wood of Pine trees neere about three mile square, which is all the Summer time swept and kept so cleane, that you shall hardly see any small twig bough, or leafe vnder the Trees, and the trees stand so close together, that you may solace and recreate your selfe there at all houres of the day without any hurt or heat of the Sunne. In the midst of it there is a great Pagod or Church very richly adorned with gilded Images, and all sorts of curious carued workes.

The people are generally Courteous, affable and full of Compliments, they are very punctu-

all in the entertayning of Strangers, and they will assoone lose a limbe as omit one Ceremonie in welcomming their friend; they vse to giue and receiue the emptie Cup at one the others hands, and before the Master of the house begins to drinke, hee will proffer the Cup to every one of his Guests, making shew to haue them to begin though it bee farre from his intention; they feed not much vpon varietie; for Fish, Rootes and Rice are their common junkates, and if they chance to kill a Hen, Ducke or Pigge, which is but seldome, they will not like Charles eat it alone, but their friends shall be surely partakers of it. Their ordinary drinke is Water, and that is made most times hot, in the same pot where they seeth their Rice, that so it may receiue some thicknesse and substance from the Rice. They haue strong Wine and Rack distill'd of Rice, of which they will sometimes drinke largely, especially at their Feasts and meetings, and being moued to anger or wrath in the heate of their Drinke, you may assoone periwade Tygres to patience and quietnesse as them, so obstinate and wilfull they are in the furie of their impatience. Their Lawes are very strict and full of seueritie, affording no other kinde of punishment but either Death or Banishment: Murther, Theft, Treason, or the violation of any of the Emperours Proclamations or Edicts, are punished with death; so is Adulterie also if it bee knowne and the parties pursued, but the Deuill their master in those actions hath taught them such cleanly conueyances, that seldome or neuer are they apprehended; they proceed both in Controuersies and criminall causes according to the verdict of the produced witnesses, and the Sentence being once past, they will not reuoake or mitigate the seueritie of it, but if the parties attached haue deserued death they shall surely haue it, and for the manner, they are either Beheaded or Crucified; hee kneeles downe on his knees and then comes the Executioner behind him and cuts off his head with a Catan or their Countrey-sword, and his head being off, the young Caualleers trie their weapons on his limbes, and proue whether they can cut off an Arme or Leg at a blow; the other haue their armes and legges spread abroad on a Crosse, which done, they set the Crosse vpright in the ground, and then comes one either with a Lance or Speare and runnes the partie through the bodie, where hee hangs vntill he rots off, no man being suffered to take him downe.

Euery one may change his Name three times, when he is a childe, when he is a young-man, and when he is old; some change their names more often, euery one as hee pleaseth may make choise of his owne name, and they are commonly named either by the King, or else by some Noble or Great man with whom they are chiefly in fauour.

They haue the vse of Writing and Printing, and haue had the space of many yeeres, no man knowes certainly how long. They haue seuen sorts of Letters, each single letter seruing for a word, and many of them in their placing serue for fixe or seuen; and each Alphabet hath eight and fortie Letters, and yet with all these letters they are not able to write our Christian names; they haue not the true pronounciation of H. B. T. and some other letters, and a Chinesse if his life lay on it, cannot truly pronounce D.

They obserue no Sabbath, but certaine Feast dayes according to the Moone, as the first of the Moone, the 15. or 28.; on these dayes they goe to the Church, visit the Sepulchers of the dead, and vse many foolish and apish Ceremonies, which time will not permit me now to relate.

The ninth day of the Moone throughout the yeere they hold for accursed, and therefore in that day they will not begin or vndertake any worke of consequence and importance.

They strictly obserue a Fast on that day of the moneth, in which their Father or Mother dyed, which they doe so precisely keepe, that they will not touch or eate any thing that hath blood.

Kind Sir, if I haue not in this satisfied you according to your expectation, yet I will assure you it is according as the time and my wayward affaires will now permit me; I would intreat to heare from you, and God willing as I haue leasure I will more fully declare vnto you my particular obseruations of Iapon, in the meane time I will pray for your health and good successe in all your affaires and godly enterprises.

Extracts of Master CESAR FREDERIKE his eightene yeeres Indian Obseruations.

In the yeere of our Lord God 1563, I Cesar Fredericke being in Venice, and very desirous to see the East parts of the World, tooke my journey to Aleppo, and there I acquainted my selfe with Merchants of Armenia, and Moores, that were merchants, and consoorted to goe with them to Ormus, and wee departed from Aleppo, and in two dayes journey and a halfe, we came to a Citie called Br. (Thence to Babylon or Bagdet, and so to Basora and Ormus.)

The Authors going from Venice to Cyprus & Tripoly. Touching the way from Aleppo to Bagdet. See Sup. 19. & c. 3.

Ormus

Ormus hath a Moore King of the race of the Persians, who is created and made King by the Captaine of the Castle, in the name of the King of Portugall. At the creation of this King I was there, and saw the ceremonies that they vse in it, which are as followeth. The old King being dead, the Captaine of the Portugals chuseth another of the bloud Royall, and maketh this election in the Castle with great Ceremonies, and when hee is elected, the Captaine sweareth him to be true and faithfull to the King of Portugall, as his Lord and Gouvernour, and then he giueth him the Scepter regall. After this with great feasting and pompe, and with great company, he is brought into the royall Palace in the Citie. This King keepeth a good traine, and hath sufficient reuenues to maintayne himselfe without troubling of any, because the Captaine of the Castle doth maintayne and defend his right, and when that the Captaine and he ride together, he is honoured as a King, yet he cannot ride abroad with his traine, without the consent of the Captaine first had: it behooueth them to doe this, and it is necessarie, because of the great trade that is in this Citie: their proper language is the Persian tongue. There I shipped my selfe to goe for Goa, a Citie in the Indies, in which passage the first Citie that you come to in the Indies, is called Diu, and is situate in a little Iland in the Kingdome of Cambaia, which is the greatest strength that the Portugals haue in all the Indies, yet a small Citie, but of great trade, because there they lade very many great ships for the straights of Mecca and Ormus with marchandise, and these ships belong to the Moores and Christians, but the Moores cannot trade neither saile into those seas without the licence of the Vice-roy of the King of Portugall, otherwise they are taken and made good prizes. The merchandise that they lade these ships withall commeth from Cambaietta a Port in the Kingdome of Cambaia, which they bring from thence in small barks, because there can no great shippes come thither, by reason of the sholdnesse of the water thereabouts, and these sholdes are an hundred or fourescore miles about in a straight or gulfe, which they call Macareo, which is as much to say, as a race of a tide, because the waters there run out of that place without measure, so that there is no place like to it, vnlesse it be in the Kingdome of Pegu, where there is another Macareo, where the waters run out with more force then these doe. Cambaietta is situate on the seas side, and is a very faire Citie. The time that I was there, the Citie was in great calamitie and scarcenesse, so that I haue seene the men of the country that were Gentiles take their children, their sonnes and their daughters, and haue desired the Portugals to buy them, and I haue seene them solde for eighr or ten Larins a piece, which may bee of our money ten shillings or thirteene shillings foure pence. For all this, if I had not seene it, I could not haue beleueed that there should bee such a trade at Cambaietta as there is: for in the time of euery new Moone and euery full Moone, the small barks (innumerable) come in and out, for at those times of the Moone the tides and waters are higher then at other times they be. These barks be laden with all sorts of spices, with silke of China, with Sandols, with Elephants teeth, Veluets of Vercini, great quantitie of Pannina, which commeth from Mecca, Chickinos which be pieces of gold worth seuen shillings a piece sterling, with money, and with diuers sorts of other merchandise. Also these barks lade out, as it were, an infinite quantitie of cloth made of Bumbast of all sortes, as white stamped and painted, with great quantitie of Indico, dried ginger and conserued, Myrabolans drie and condite, Boraso in paste, great store of Sugar, great quantitie of Cotton, abundance of Opium, Assa Fetida, Puchio, with many other sorts of drugges, Turbants made in Diu, great Stones like to Corneolæ, Granats, Agats, Diaspry, Calcidonij, Hematists and some kinde of naturall Diamonds.

During the time I dwelt in Cambaietta, I saw very maruellous things: there were an infinite number of Artificers that made Bracelets called Mannij, or bracelets of Elephants teeth, of diuers colours, for the women of the Gentiles, which haue their armes full decked with them. And in this occupation there are spent euery yeere many thousands of crownes: the reason whereof is this, that when there dieth any whatsoever of their kindred, then in signe and token of mourning and sorrow, they breake all their bracelets from their armes, and presently they goe and buy new againe, because that they had rather bee without their meat then without their bracelets.

There come euery yeere to Chaul from Cochin, & from Cananor ten or fifteen great ships laden with great Nuts cured, and with Sugar made of the selfe same Nuts called Giagra: the tree whereon these Nuts doe grow is called the Palmer tree, and thorow out all the Indies, and especially from this place to Goa, there is great abundance of them, and it is like to the Date tree. In the whole world there is not a tree more profitable and of more goodnesse then this tree is, neither doe men reape so much benefit of any other tree as they doe of this, there is not any part of it but serueth for some vse, and none of it is worthy to be burnt. With the timber of this tree they make Ships without the mixture of any other tree, and with the leaues thereof they make Sayles, and with the fruit thereof, which bee a kinde of Nuts, they make Wine, and of the wine they make Sugar and Placetto, which Wine they gather in the spring of the yeere: out of the middle of the tree where continually there goeth or runneth out white liquor like vnto water, in that time of the yeere they put a vessell vnder euery tree, and euery eue ing and morning they take it away full, and then distilling it with fire it maketh a very strong liquor: and then they put it into Buts, with a quantity of Zibibbo, white or blacke and in short time it is made a perfect Wine. After this they make of the Nuts great store of Oyle: of the tree they make great quantitie of boords and quarters for buildings. Of the barke of this tree they make Cables, Ropes, and other furniture for ships, and, as they say, these Ropes be better then they that are made of Hempe. They make of the Bowes, Bedsteds, after the Indies fashion, and Scuasches for merchandise. The leaues they cut very small, and weaue them, and so make Sayles of them, for all manner of shipping, or else very fine Mats. And then the first rinde of the Nut they stampe, and make thereof perfect Ockam to calke ships, great and small: and of the hard barke thereof they make Spooones and other vessels for meate, in such wise that there is no part thereof throwne away, or cast to the fire. When these Mats be Greene they are full of an excellent sweet water to drinke: and if a man bee thirsty, with the liquor of one of the Mats he may satisfie himselfe: and as this Nut ripeneth, the liquor thereof turneth all to kernell.

In the yeere of our Lord 1567. I went from Goa to Bezeneger the chiefe Citie of the Kingdom of Narsinga eight dayes iourney from Goa, within the Land, in the companie of two other Merchants which carried with them three hundred Arabian Horses to that King: because the Horses of that Countrie are of a small stature: and at the going out of Goa the Horses pay custome, two and forty Pagodies for euery Horse, which Pagody may be of sterling money fixe shillings eight pence, they be pieces of gold of that value. So that the Arabian Horses are of great value in those Countries, as 300. 400. 500. and to 1000. Duckets a Horse.

The Citie of Bezeneger was sacked in the yeere 1565. by foure Kings of the Moors, which were of great power and might: the names of these foure Kings were these following the first was called Dialcan *, the second Zamaluc, the third Cotamaluc, and the fourth Viridy: and yet these foure Kings were not able to overcome this Citie and the King of Bezeneger, but by treason. This King of Bezeneger was a Gentile, and had, amongst all other of his Captaines, two which were notable, and they were Moors: and these two Captaines had either of them in charge threescore and ten or fourescore thousand men. These two Captaines being of one Religion with the foure Kings which were Moors, wrought meanes with them to betray their owne King into their hands. The King of Bezeneger esteemed not the force of the foure Kings his enemies, but went out of his Citie to wage battell with them in the fields; and when the Armies were ioyned, the battell lasted but a while, not the space of foure houres, because the two traiterous Captaines, in the chiefe of the fight, with their companies turned their faces against their King, and made such disorder in his Armie, that as astonied they set themselves to flight. Thirty yeeres was this Kingdome gouerned by three brethren which were Tyrants, the which keeping the rightfull King in prison, it was their vse euery yeere once to shew him to the people, and they at their pleasures ruled as they listed. These brethren were three Captaines belonging to the father of the King they kept in prison, which when he died, left his sonne very young, and then they tooke the gouernment to themselves. The chiefe of these three was called Ramaragio, and sate in the Royall Throne, and was called the King: the second was called Temiragio, and he tooke the gouernment on him: the third was called Benagatre, and he was Captaine generall of the Armie. These three brethren were in this battell, in the which the chiefe of the last were neuer heard of quicke nor dead. Onely Temiragio fled in the battell, hauing lost one of his eyes. When the newes came to the Citie of the overthrow in the battell, the wiues and children of these three Tyrants, with their lawfull King (kept prisoner) fled away, spoyled as they were, and the foure Kings of the Moors entred the Citie Bezeneger with great triumph, and there they remained fixe moneths, searching vnder houses and in all places for money and other things that were hidden, and then they departed to their owne Kingdomes, because they were not able to maintayne such a Kingdome as that was, so farre distant from their owne Countrie.

Policy to en-trap men.

When the Kings were departed from Bezeneger, this Temiragio returned to the Citie, and then beganne for to repopulate it, and sent word to Goa to the Merchants, if they had any Horses, to bring them to him, and he would pay well for them, and for this cause the aforesaid two Merchants that I went in companie withall, carried those Horses that they had to Bezeneger. Also this Tyrant made an order or law, that if any Merchant had any of the Horses that were taken in the aforesaid battell or warres, although they were of his owne marke, that he would giue as much for them as they would: and beside he gaue generall safe conduct to all that should bring them. When by this meanes hee saw that there were great store of Horses brought thither vnto him, he gaue the Merchants faire words, vntill such time as he saw they could bring no more. Then hee licenced the Merchants to depart, without giuing them any thing for their Horses, which when the poore men saw, they were desperate, and as it were mad with sorrow and griefe.

I rested in Bezeneger seuen moneths, although in one moneth I might haue discharged all my businesse, for it was necessarie to rest there vntill the wayes were cleere of Theeues, which at that time ranged vp and downe. And in the time I rested there, I saw many strange and beastly deeds deeds done by the Gentiles. First, when there is any Noble man or woman dead, they burne their bodies : and if a married man die, his wife must burne herselfe aliue, for the loue of her husband, and with the body of her husband : so that when any man dyeth, his wife will take a moneths leaue, two or three, or as shee will, to burne herselfe in, and that day being come, wherein she ought to be burnt, that morning she goeth out of her house very early, either on Horsebacke or on an Elephant, or else is borne by eight men on a small stage : in one of these orders shee goeth, being apparelled like to a Bride, carried round about the Citie, with her haire downe about her shoulders, garnished with Jewels and Flowers, according to the estate of the partie, and they goe with as great ioy as Brides doe in Venice to their Nuptials : she carrieth in her left hand a looking-glasse, and in her right hand an arrow, and singeth through the Citie as she passeth, and saith, that she goeth to sleepe with her deere spouse and husband. Shee is accompanied with her kindred and friends vntill it be one or two of the clocke in the afternoone, then they goe out of the Citie, and going along the Riuer side called Nigondin, which runneth vnder the walls of the Citie, vntill they come vnto a place where they vse to make this burning of Women, being widdowes, there is prepared in this place a great square Caue, with a little pinnacle hard by it, foure or fife steps vp : the foresaid Caue is full of dryed wood. The woman being come thither, accompanied with a great number of people which come to see the thing, then they make ready a great banquet, and she that shall bee burned eateth with as great ioy and gladnesse, as though it were her Wedding day : and the feast being ended, then they goe to dancing and singing a certaine time, according as she will. After this, the woman of her owne accord, commandeth them to make the fire in the square Caue where the drie wood is, and when it is kindled, they come and certifie her thereof, then presently she leaueth the feast, and taketh the neereft kinsman of her husband by the hand, and they both goe together to the banke of the foresaid Riuer, where she putteth off all her iewels and all her clothes, and giueth them to her parents or kinsfolke, and couering herselfe with a cloth, because shee will not bee seene of the people being naked, she throweth herselfe into the Riuer, saying : O wretches, wash away your sinnes. Comming out of the water, she rowleth herselfe into a yellow cloth of foureteene braces long : and againe she taketh her husbands kinsman by the hand, and they goe both together vp to the pinnacle of the square Caue wherein the fire is made. When shee is on the pinnacle, she talketh and reasoneth with the people, recommending vnto them her children and kindred. Before the pinnacle they vse to set a Mat, because they shall not see the fiercenesse of the fire, yet there are many that will haue them plucked away, shewing therein an heart not fearefull, and that they are not affraid of that sight. When this silly woman hath reasoned with the people a good while to her content, there is another woman that taketh a pot with oyle, and sprinkleth it ouer her head, and with the same shee annointeth all her body, and afterwards throweth the pot into the fornace, and both the woman and the pot goe together into the fire, and presently the people that are round about the fornace throw after her into the caue great pieces of wood, so by this meanes, with the fire and with the blowes that shee hath with the wood throwen after her, she is quickly dead, and after this there groweth such sorrow and such lamentation among the people, that all their mirth is turned into howling and weeping, in such wise, that a man could scarce beare the hearing of it. I haue seene many burnt in this manner, because my house was neere to the gate where they goe out to the place of burning : and when there dyeth any Great man, his Wife with all his Slaues with whom hee hath had carnall copulation, burne themselues together with him. Also in this Kingdome I haue seene amongst the base sort of people this vse and order, that the man being dead, hee is carried to the place where they will make his sepulcher, and setting him as it were vpright, then commeth his wife before him on her knees, casting her armes about his necke, with imbracing and clasping him, vntill such time as the Masons haue made a wall round about them, and when the wall is as high as their neckes, there commeth a man behind the woman and stranglet her : then when shee is dead, the workmen finish the wall ouer their heads, and so they lie buried both together.

In the yere of our Lord God 1567. for the ill successe that the people of Bezeneger had, in that their Citie was sacked by the foure Kings, the King with his Court went to dwell in a Castle eight dayes iourney vp in the land from Bezeneger, called Penegonde. Also sixe dayes iourney from Bezeneger, is the place where they get Diamants : I was not there, but it was told me that it is a great place, compassed with a wall, and that they sell the earth within the wall, for so much a squadron, and the limits are set how deepe or how low they shall digge. Those Diamants that are of a certaine size and bigger then that size are all for the King, it is many yeres agoe, since they got any there, for the troubles that haue beene in that Kingdome. The first cause of this trouble was, because the sonne of this Temeragio had put to death the lawfull King which hee had in Prison, for which cause the Barons and Noblemen in that Kingdome would not acknowledge him to be their King, and by this meanes there are many Kings, and great diuision in that Kingdome, and the Citie of Bezeneger is not altogether destroyed, yet the houses stand still, but emptie, and there is dwelling in them nothing, as is reported, but Tygres and other wild beasts. The circuit of this Citie is foure and twentie miles about, and within the walls are certaine Mountaines. The houses stand walled with earth, and plaine, all sauing the three Palaces of the three tyrane Brethren, and the Pagodes which are Idoll houses: these are made with Lime and fine Marble. I haue seene many Kings Courts, and yet haue I seene none in greatnesse like to this of Bezeneger, I say, for the order of his Palace, for it hath nine Gates or Ports. First when you go into the place where the King did lodge, there are five great ports or gates: these are kept with Captaines and Souldiers: then within these there are foure lesser gates, which are kept with Porters. Without the first Gate there is a little porch, where there is a Captaine with five and twentie Souldiers, that kepeth watch & ward night and day: and within that another with the like guard, where thorow they come to a very faire Court, and at the end of that Court there is another porch as the first, with the like guard, and within that another Court. And in this wise are the first five Gates guarded and kept with those Captaines: and then the lesser Gates within are kept with a guard of Porters: which gates stand open the greatest part of the night, because the custome of the Gentiles is to doe their businesse, and make their feasts in the night, rather then by day. The Cittie is very safe from Theeues, for the Portugall Merchants sleepe in the streets, or vnder Porches, for the great heat which is there, and yet they neuer had any harme in the night. At the end of two moneths, I determined to go for Goa in the company of two other Portugall Merchants, which were making ready to depart, with two Palanchines or little Litters, which are very commodious for the way, with eight Falchines which are men hired to carry the Palanchines, eight for a palanchine, foure at a time: they carry them as we vse to carry Barrowes. And I bought me two Bullocks, one of them to ride on, and the other to carry my victuals and prouision, for in that Countrey men ride on bullocks with pannels, as wee terme them, girths and bridles, and they haue a very good commodious pace. From Bezeneger to Goa in Summer it is eight daies journey, but we went in the midst of Winter, in the month of Iuly, and were fiftene daies comming to Ancola on the Sea coast, so in eight daies I had lost my two Bullocks: for he that carried my victuals was weake and could not goe, the other, when I came vnto a Riuer where was a little bridge to passe ouer, I put my Bullocke to swimming, and in the midst of the Riuer there was a little Island, vnto the which my bullocke went, and finding pasture, there hee remained still, and in no wise we could come to him: and so perforce, I was forced to leaue him, and at that time there was much raine, and I was forced to goe seuen daies a foot with great paines: and by great chance I met with Falchines by the way, whom I hired to carry my clothes and victuals. We had great trouble in our iourney, for that euery day we were taken Prisoners, by reason of the great dissention in that Kingdome: and euery morning at our departure we must paye rescate foure or five Pagies a man. And another trouble wee had as bad as this, that when we came into a new Gouernours Countrey, as euery day we did, although they were all tributarie to the King of Bezeneger, yet euery one of them stamped a seuerall coyne of Copper, so that the money that wee tooke this day would not serue the next: at length, by the helpe of God, we came safe to Ancola, which is a Countrey of the Queen of Garga, tributarie to the King of Bezeneger. The Merchandize that went euery yeere from Goa to Bezeneger were Arabian Horses, Veluets, Damasques, and Sattens, Armes fine of Portugall, and pieces of China, Saffron and Seablacks: and from Bezeneger they had in Turkie for their commodities, Jewels, and Pagodies which be Ducats of gold: the apparell that they vse in Bezeneger is Veluet, Satten, Damaske, Scarlet, or white Bumbast cloth, according to the estate of the person, with long Hats on their heads, called Colas, made of Veluet, Satten, Damaske, or Scarlet, girdling themselves in stead of girdles with some fine white Bumbast cloth: they haue breeches after the order of the Turkes: they weare on their feet plaine high things called of them Asperghs, and at their eares they haue hanging great plentie of Gold.

Returning to my voyage, when we were together in Ancola, one of my companions that had nothing to lose, tooke a guide, and went to Goa, whither they goe in foure daies, the other Portugall not being disposed to goe, carried in Ancola for that Winter. The Winter in those parts of the Indies beginneth the fifteenth of May, and lasteth vnto the end of October: and as we were in Ancola, there came another Merchant of Horses in a Palanchine, and two Portugall Souldiers which came from Zeilan, and two carriers of Letters, which were Christians borne in the Indies: all these consorted to goe to Goa together, and I determined to go with them, and caused a palanchine to be made for me very poorly of Canes; and in one of them Canes I hid priuily all the Jewels I had, and according to the order, I tooke eight Falchines to carie me: and one day about eleuen of the clocke we set forwards on our iourney, and about two of the clocke in the afternoon, as we passed a Mountaine, which diuiderh the territorie of Ancola and Dialcan, I being a little behind my company, was assaulted by eight theeues, foure of them had swords and targets, and the other foure had bowes and arrowes. When the Falchines that carried me vnderstood the noise of the assault, they let the Palanchine and me fall to the ground, and ranne away and left me alone, with my clothes wrapped about me: presently the theeues were on my necke and rifling me, they stripped me stark naked, and I sained my selfe sicke, because I would not leaue the Palanchine, and I had made me a little bed of my clothes: the theeues sought it very narrowly and subtilly, and found two Purfes that I had, well bound vp together, wherein I had put put my Copper money which I had changed for foure Pagodies in Ancola. The theeuers thinking it had beene so many Ducats of gold, searched no further: then they threw all my elother in a bush, and hied them away, and as God would haue it, at there departure there fell from them an hankercher, and when I saw it, I rose from my pallanchine or couch, and tooke it vp, and wrapped it together within my pallanchine. Then these my Falchines were of so good condition, that they returned to seeke me, whereas I thought I should not haue found so much goodnesse in them: because they were payed their money aforehand, as is the vse, I had thought to haue seene them no more. Before there comming I was determined to plucke the Cane wherein my Jewels were hidden, out of my couch, and to haue made me a walking staffe to carry in my hand to Goa, thinking that I should haue gone thither on foot, but by the faithfulness of my Fal- chines, I was rid of that trouble, and so in foure dayes they carried me to Goa, in which time I made hard fare, for the theeuers left me neither money, gold, nor silver, and that which I did eate was giuen me of my men for Gods sake: and after at my comming to Goa I payed them for ene-ry thing royally that I had of them. From Goa I departed for Cochin, which is a voyage of three hundred miles, and betweene these two Cities are many holds of the Portugals, as Onor, Man- galor, Barzelor, and Cananor. The Hold or Fort that you shall haue from Goa and Cochin that belongeth to the Portugals, is called Onor, which is in the Kingdom of the Queen of Bartadella, which is tributarie to the King of Bezeneger: there is no trade there, but onely a charge with the Captaine and companie hee keepeth there. And passing this place, you shall come to another small Castle of the Portugals called Mangalor, and there is very small trade but onely for a little Rice: and from thence you goe to a little Fort called Barzelor, there they haue good store of Rice which is carried to Goa: and from thence you shall goe to a Citie called Cananor, which is a Harquebush shot distant from the chiefest Citie that the King of Cananor hath in his Kingdome being a King of the Gentiles: and hee and his are very naughtie and malicious people, alwayes hauing delight to bee in warres with the Portugals, and when they are in peace, it is for their interest to let their Merchandise passe: there goeth out of this Kingdom of Cananor, all the Cardamomum, great store of Pepper, Ginger, Honie, ships laden with great Nuts, great quantitie of Archa, which is a fruit of the bignesse of Nutmeg, which fruit they eate in all those parts of the Indies, and beyond the Indies, with the leafe of an Herbe which they call Bettell, the which is like vnto our Iule leafe, but a little lesser and thinner: they eate it made in plaisters with the lime made of Oistershells, and thow the Indies they spend great quantitie of money in this composition, and it is vsed daily, which thing I would not haue beleued, if I had not seene it. The customers get great profit by these Herbes, for that they haue custome for them. When this people eate and chawe this in their mouthes, it maketh their spittle to be red like vnto blood, and they say, that it maketh a man to haue a very good stomacke and a very sweet breath, but sure in my iudgement they eate it rather to fulfill their filthy lusts, and of a knauerie, for this Herbe is moist and hore, and maketh a verie strong expulsion. From Cananor you goe to Cranganor, which is another small Fort of the Portugals in the land of the King of Cranganor, which is another King of the Gentiles, and a Countrey of small importance, and of an hundred and twentie miles, full of Theeuers, being vnder the King of Calicut, a King also of the Gentiles, and a great e-nemie to the Portugals, which when he is alwaies in warres, he and his Countrey is the nest and resting for stranger Theeuers, and those be called Moors of Carpasa, because they weare on their heads long red Hats, and these Theeuers part the spoiles that they take on the Sea with the King of Calicut, for he giueth leaue vnto all that will goe a roving, liberally to goe, in such wise, that all along that Coast there is such a number of Theeuers, that there is no sailing in those Seas but with great ships and very well armed, or else they must goe in companie with the armie of the Portugals. From Cranganor to Cochin is fiftene miles.

Cochin is next vnto Goa, the chiefest place that the Portugals haue in the Indies, and there is great trade of Spices, Drugges, and all other sorts of Merchandize for the Kingdome of Portugall, and there within the land is the Kingdome of Pepper, which Pepper the Portugals lade in their shippes by bulke, and not in Sackes: the Pepper that goeth for Portu- gall is not so good as that which goeth for Mecca, because that in times past the Officers of the King of Portugall made a contract with the King of Cochin, in the name of the King of Portu- gall, for the prices of Pepper, and by reason of that agreement between them at that time made, the price can neither rise nor fall, which is a verie low and base price, and for this cause the villaines bring it to the Portugals, greene and full of filth. Cochin is two Cities, one of the Portu- gals, and another of the King of Cochin: that of the Portugals is situate neere the Sea, and that of the King of Cochin, is a mile and a halfe vp higher in the land, but they are both set on the bankes of one River which is verie great and of a good depth of water, which River cometh out of the Mountaines of the King of the Pepper, which is a King of the Gen- tiles, in whose Kingdome are many Christians of Saint Thomas order: the King of Cochin is also a King of the Gentiles, and a great faithfull friend to the King of Portugall, and to those Portugals which are married, and are Citizens in the Citie of Cochin of the Portugals. And by this name of Portugals throughout all the Indies, they call all the Christians that come out of the West, whether they bee Italians, Frenchmen, or Almaines, and all they that marrie in Cochin doe get an Office according to the Trade he is of: this they haue by the great priuiledges which the Citizens haue of that Citie, because there are two principall commodities that they deale withall in that place, which are these. The great store of Silke that commeth from China, and the great store of Sugar which commeth from Bengala: the married Citizens pay not any custome for these two commodities: for all other commodities they pay foure per cento custome to the King of Cochin, rating their goods at their owne pleasure. Those which are not married and Strangers, pay in Cochin to the King of Portugall eight per cento of all manner of Merchandise.

Amochi and Nairi.

This King of Cochin is of a small power in respect of the other Kings of the Indies, for he can make but seuentie thousand men of Armes in his Campe: he hath a great number of Gentlemen which he calleth Amochi, and some are called Nairi: these two sorts of men esteeme not their liues any thing, so that it may bee for the honour of their King, they will thrust themselves forward in euery danger, although they know they shall die. These men goe naked from the girdle vpwards, with a cloth rolled about their thighs, going bare-footed, and hauing their haire very long and rolled vp together on the top of their heads, and alwayes they carrie their Bucklers or Targets with them and their Swords naked, these Nairi haue their wiues common amongst themselves, and when any of them goe into the house of any of these women, hee leaueh his Sword and Target at the doore, and the time that he is there, there dare not any bee so hardie as to come into that house. The Kings children shall not inherite the Kingdome after their Father, because they hold this opinion, that perchance they were not begotten of the King their Father, but of some other man, therefore they accept for their King, one of the sonnes of the Kings sisters, or of some other woman of the blood Royall, for that they bee sure they are of the blood Royall.

Huge huge
Eares.

The Nairi and their Wiues vse for a brauerie to make great holes in their Eares, and so big and wide, that it is incredible, holding this opinion, that the greater the holes bee, the more Noble they esteeme themselves. I had leaue of one of them to measure the circumference of one of them with a threed, and within that circumference I put my arme vp to the shoulder, clothed as it was, so that in effect they are monstrous great. Thus they doe make them when they be little, for then they open the eare, and hang a piece of gold or lead thereat, and within the opening, in the hole they put a certaine leafe that they haue for that purpose, which maketh the hole so great.

Note the departing of the ships from Cochin.
Coulam.

The ships every yeere depart from Cochin to goe for Portugall, on the fifth day of December, or the fifth day of January. Now to follow my voyage for the Indies: From Cochin I went to Coulam, distant from Cochin seuentie and two miles, which Coulam is a small Fort of the King of Portugals, situate in the Kingdome of Coulam, which is a King of the Gentiles, and of small trade: at that place they lade onely halfe a ship of Pepper, and then she goeth to Cochin to take in the rest, and from thence to Cape Comori is seuentie and two miles, and there endeth the coast of the Indies: and alongst this Coast, neere to the water side, and also to Cape Comori, downe to the low land of Chilao, which is about two hundred miles, the people there are as it were all turned to the Christian Faith: there are also Churches of the Friers of Saint Pauls order, which Friers doe very much good in those places in turning the people, and in conuerting them, and take great paines in instructing them in the law of Christ.

Christians.

The order how they fish for Pearles.

The Sea that lyeth betweene the Coast which descendeth from Cape Comori, to the low land of Chilao, and the Iland Zeilan, they call The fishing of Pearles, which fishing they make euery yeere, beginning in March or Aprill, and it lasteth fiftie dayes, but they doe not fish euery yeere in one place, but one yeere in one place, and another yeere in another place of the same Sea. When the time of this fishing draweth neere, then they send very good Diuers, that goe to discouer where the greatest heapes of Oysters bee vnder water, and right against that place where greatest store of Oysters be, there they make or plant a Village with houses and a Bazaro, all of stone, which standeth as long as the fishing time lasteth, and it is furnished with all things necessarie, and now and then it is neere vnto places that are inhabited, and other times farre off, according to the place where they fish. The Fishermen are all Christians of the Countrey, and who so will may goe to fishing, paying a certaine dutie to the King of Portugall, and to the Churches of the Friers of Saint Paul, which are in that Coast. All the while that they are fishing, there are three or foure Fusts armed to defend the Fishermen from Routers. It was my chance to bee there one time in my passage, and I saw the order that they vsed in fishing, which is this. There are three or foure Barks that make consort together, which are like to our little Pilot boates, an a little lesse, there goe seuen or eight men in a Boar: and I haue seene in a morning a great number of them goe out, and anker in fifteene or eightene fathom of water, which is the ordinarie depth of all that Coast. When they are at anker, they cast a rope into the Sea, and at the end of the rope, they make fast a great stone, and then there is ready a man that hath his nose and his eares well stopped, and annointed with Oyle, and a basket about dies, by reason

ledge of that

about his necke, or vnder his left arme, then hee goeth downe by the rope to the bottome of the Sea, and as fast as he can he filleth the basket, and when it is full, hee shaketh the rope, and his fellowes that are in the Barke hale him vp with the Basket: and in such wise they goe one by one vntill they haue laden their Barke with Oysters, and at euening they come to the Village, and then euery companie maketh their mount or heape of Oysters one distant from another, in such wise that you shall see a great long row of mounts or heapes of Oysters, and they are not touched vntill such time as the fishing be ended, and at the end of the fishing euery companie sitteth round about their mount or heape of Oysters, and fall to opening of them, which they may easily doe because they be dead, drie and brittle: and if euery oyster had pearles in them, it would bee a very good purchase, but there are very many that haue no pearles in them: when the fishing is ended, then they see whether it bee a good gathering or a bad: there are certaine expert in the Pearles, whom they call Chitini, which set and make the price of Pearles according to their caracts, beautie, and goodnesse, making foure sorts of them. The first sort be the round Pearles, and they be called Aia of Portugall, because the Portugals doe buy them. The second sort which are not round, are called Aia of Bengala. The third sort which are not so good as the second, they call Aia of Canara, that is to say, The Kingdome of Bezenegar. The fourth and last sort, which are the least and worst sort, are called Aia of Cambaia. Thus the price being set, there are Merchants of euery Countrey which are readie with their money in their hands, so that in few dayes all is bought vp at the prises set according to the goodnesse and caracts of the Pearles.

These Pearles are prised according to the Caracts which they weigh, euery caract is 4. Graines, and these men that prise them haue an Instrument of Copper with holes in it, which be made by degrees for to sort the Pearles withall.

Manar.

In the Island of Manar, they haue a small hold of the Portugals being situate ouer against Zeilan: and betweene these two Islands there is a Channell, but not very bigge, and hath but a small depth therein: by reason whereof there cannot any great Ship passe that way, but small Ships, and with the increase of the water which is at the change, or the full of the Moone, and yet for all this they must vnlade them and put their goods into small vessels to lighten them before they can passe that way for feare of Sholdes that lie in the Channell, and after lade them into their ships to goe for the Indies, and this doe all small ships that passe that way, but those ships that goe for the Indies Eastwards, passe by the Coast of Coromandel, on the other side by the land of Chilao, which is betweene the firme land and the Island Manar: From Cape Comori to the Island Zeilan is one hundred and twentie miles ouerthwart.

Zeilan.

In the Island of Zeilan, they haue a small hold of the Portugals being situate ouer against Zeilan: and betweene these two Islands there is a Channell, but not very bigge, and hath but a small depth therein: by reason whereof there cannot any great Ship passe that way, but small Ships, and with the increase of the water which is at the change, or the full of the Moone, and yet for all this they must vnlade them and put their goods into small vessels to lighten them before they can passe that way for feare of Sholdes that lie in the Channell, and after lade them into their ships to goe for the Indies, and this doe all small ships that passe that way, but those ships that goe for the Indies Eastwards, passe by the Coast of Coromandel, on the other side by the land of Chilao, which is betweene the firme land and the Island Manar: From Cape Comori to the Island Zeilan is one hundred and twentie miles ouerthwart.

Zeilan is an Island, in my iudgement, a great deale bigger then Cyprus: on that side towards the Indies lying Westward is the Citie called Columbo, which is a hold of the Portugals, but without walls or enemies. It hath towards the Sea a free Port, the lawfull King of that Island is in Columbo, and is turned Christian and maintained by the King of Portugall, being deprived of his Kingdome. The King of the Gentiles, to whom this Kingdome did belong, was called Madoni, which had two sonnes, the first named Barbinas the Prince; and the second Ragine. This King by the policie of his younger Sonne, was deprived of his Kingdome, who because hee had entised and done that which pleased the Armie and Souldiers, in despite of his Father and Brother being Prince, vsurped the Kingdome, and became a great Warriour. First, this Island had three Kings; the King of Cotta with his conquered Prisoners: the King of Candia, which is a part of that Island, and is so called by the name of Candia, which had a reasonable power, and was a great friend to the Portugals, which said that hee liued secretly a Christian; the third was the King of Gianisampatan. In thirteene yeeres that this Ragine gouerned this Island, he became a great Tyrant.

Cairo is a stuffe that they make Ropes with, the which is the barke of a Tree.

A rate thing.

The cutting and gathering of Sinamom.

A rate thing.

In this Island there groweth fine Sinamom, great store of Pepper, great store of Nuts and A-rochoe: there they make great store of Cairo to make Cordage: it bringeth forth great store of Christall Cats eyes, or Ochi de Gati, and they say that they finde there some Rubies, but I haue sold Rubies well there that I brought with me from Pegu. I was desirous to see how they gather the Sinamom, or take it from the tree that it groweth on, and so much the rather, because the time that I was there, was the season which they gather it in, which was in the moneth of Aprill, at which time the Portugals were in Armes, and in the field, with the King of the Countrey; yet I to satisfie my desire, although in great danger, tooke a guide with me and went into a Wood three miles from the Citie, in which wood was great store of Sinamom trees growing together among other wild trees; and this Sinamom tree is a small tree, and not very high, and hath leaues like to our Bay-tree. In the moneth of March or Aprill, when the sappe goeth vp to the top of the Tree, then they take the Sinamom from that tree in this wise. They cut the barke off the tree round about in length from knot to knot, or from ioynt to ioynt, aboue and below, and then easily with their hands they take it away, laying it in in the Sunne to drie, and in this wise it is gathered, and yet for all this the Tree dyeth not, but against the next yeere it will haue a new barke, and that which is gathered euery yeere is the best Sinamom: for that which groweth two or three yeeres is great, and not so good as the other is; and in these woods groweth much Pepper.

Negapatan.

From the Iland of Zeilan men vse to goe with small ships to Negapatan, within the firme land, and seuentie two miles off is a very great Citie, and very populous of Portugals and Christians of the Countrey, and part Gentiles: it is a Countrey of small trade.

Saint Thomas
or San Tome.
S. Thomas his Sepulcher.

From Negapatan following my voyage towards the East an hundred and fiftie miles, I found the House of blessed Saint Thomas, which is a Church of great deuotion, and greatly regarded of the Gentiles, for the great Miracles they haue heard to haue beene done by that blessed Apostle: neere vnto this Church the Portugals haue builded them a Citie in the Countrey subiect to the King of Bizeneger, which Citie although it bee not very great, yet in my iudgement it is the fairest in all that part of the Indies. It is a maruellous thing to them which haue not seene the lading and vnlading of men and merchandize in Saint Tome as they doe: it is a place so dangerous, that a man cannot bee serued with small Barks, neither can they doe their businesse with the Boates of the ships, because they would be beaten in a thousand pieces, but they make certaine Barks (of purpose) high, which they call Masadies, they be made of little boards; one board being sowed to another with small cordes, and in this order are they made. And when they are thus made, and the owners will embarke any thing in them, either men or goods, they lade them on land, and when they are laden, the Barke-men thrust the Boate with her lading into the streame, and with great speed they make haft all that they are able to row out against the huge waues of the Sea that are on that shore, vntill that they carrie them to the ships: and in like manner they lade these Masadies at the ships with merchandize and men. When they come neere the shore, the Bark-men leape out of the Barke into the Sea to keepe the Barke right that shee cast not thwart the shore, and being kept right, the Suffe of the Sea setteth her lading drie on land without any hurt or danger, and sometimes there are some of them that are overthrowen, but there can bee no great losse, because they lade but a little at a time. All the Merchandize they lade outwards, they emball it well with Oxe hides, so that if it take wet, it can haue no great harme.

Dangerous

shores.

In the Iland of Banda they lade Nutmegs, for there they grow.

In the Ilands of Andemaon, they eate one another.

In my voyage, returning in the yeere of our Lord 1566. I went from Goa vnto Malacca, in a ship or Gallion of the King of Portugall, which went vnto Banda for to lade Nutmegs and Maces: from Goa to Malacca are one thousand eight hundred miles, wee passed without the Iland Zeilan, and went through the Channell of Nicubar, or else through the channell of Sombrero, which is by the middle of the Iland of Sumatra, called in old time Taprobana: and from Nicubar to Pegu, is as it were a rowe or chaine of an infinite number of Ilands, of which many are inhabited with wild people, and they call those Ilands the Ilands of Andemaon, and they call their people Sauage or wilde, because they eate one another: also these Ilands haue warre one with another, for they haue small Barks, and with them they take one another, and so eate one another: and if by euill chance any Ship bee lost on those Ilands, as many haue beene, there is not one man of those ships lost there that escapeth vneaten or vnslaine. These people haue not any acquaintance with any other people, neither haue they trade with any, but liue onely of such Fruites as those Ilands yeeld: and if any Ship come neere vnto that place or Coast as they passe that way, as in my voyage it hapned as I came from Malacca through the channell of Sombrero, there came two of their Barks neere vnto our Ship laden with Fruit, as with Monces which we call Adams Apples, with fresh Nuts, and with a fruit called Inani, which fruit is like to our Turneps, but is very sweet and good to eate: they would not come into the ship for any thing that wee could doe: neither would they take any money for their Fruit: but they would trucke for olde Shirts or pieces of old Linnen breeches: These ragges they let downe with a rope into their Barke vnto them, and looke what they thought those things to bee worth, so much fruit they would make fast to the rope and let vs hale it in: and it was told me that at sometimes a man shall haue for an old Shirt a good piece of Amber.

Sion or Siam.

A Prince of a maruellous strength and power.

Sion was the Imperiall seat, and a great Citie, but in the yeere of our Lord God 1567. it was straken by the King of Pegu, which King made a voyage or came by land foure moneths journey with an Armie of men through his land, and the number of his Armie was a million and foure hundred thousand men of Warre: when he came to the Citie, hee gaue assault to it, and besieged it one and twentie moneths before he could winne it, with great losse of his people, this I know, for that I was in Pegu sixe moneths after his departure, and saw when that his Officers that were in Pegu, sent five hundred thousand men of warre to furnish the places of them that were slaine and lost in that assault: yet for all this, if there had not beene Treason against the Citie, it had not beene lost: for on a night there was one of the Gates set open, through the which with great trouble the King gate into the Citie, and became Gouvernour of Sion: and when the Emperour saw that hee was betrayed, and that his Enemie was in the Citie, he poisoned himselfe: and his Wiues and Children, Friends and Noblemen, that were not slaine in the first affront of the entrance into the Citie, were all carried Captiues into Pegu, where I was at the comming home of the King with his tryumphs and victorie, which comming home and returning from the warres was a goodly sight to behold, to see the Elephants come home in a square, square, laden with Gold, Siluer, Jewels, and with Noble men and women that were taken Prisoners in that Citie.

Now to returne to my Voyage: I departed from Malacca in a great Ship which went for Saint Tome, being a Citie situate on the Coast of Coromandell: and because the Captaine of the Castles of Malacca had vnderstanding by aduise that the King of Affa would come with a great Armie and power of men against them, therefore vpon this hee would not giue licence that any Ships should depart: Wherefore in this Ship we departed from thence in the night, without making any prouision of our water: and we were in that Ship foure hundredth and odde men: wee departed from thence with intention to goe to an Iland to take in water, but the winds were so contrarie that they would not suffer vs to fetch it, so that by this meanes wee were two and fortie dayes in the Sea as it were lost, and we were driuen too and fro, so that that the first Land that wee Discouered, was beyond Saint Tome, more then fve hundred miles which were the Mountaines of Zerzerline, neere vnto the Kingdome of Orisa, and so we came to Orisa with many Sicke, and more that were dead for want of water: and they that were Sicke in foure dayes died: and I for the space of a yeere after had my Throate so sore and hoarse, that I could neuer satisfie my thirst in drinking of water: I iudge the reason of my hoarsenesse to be with Sops that I wet in Vineger and Oyle, wherewith I susteined my selfe many dayes. There was not any want of Bread nor of Wine: but the Wines of that Countrie are so hot that being drunke without Water they will kill a man: neither are they able to drinke them: when we began to want water, I saw certaine Moores that were officers in the ship, that solde a small dish full for a Duckat, after this I saw one that would haue giuen a barre of Pepper, which is two quintals and a halfe, for a little measure of water, and he could not haue it. Truly I belecue that I had died with my slaue, whom then I had to serue mee, which cost me very deare: but to prouide for the danger at hand, I solde my Slaue for halfe that he was worth, because that I would saue his drinke that he drunke, to serue my owne purpose, and to saue my life.

Orisa was a faire Kingdome and trusty, through the which a man might haue gone with gold in his hand without any danger at all, as long as the lawfull King reigned which was a Gentle, who continued in the Citie called Catecha, which was within the Land sixe dayes iourney. This King loued strangers marueilous well, especially merchants which had trafficke in and out of his Kingdome, in such wise that hee would take no Custome of them, neither any other grieuous thing. Onely the Ship that came thither payde a small thing according to her portage, and euery yeere in the Port of Orisa were laden fve and twentie or thirtie ships great and small, with Rice and diuers sorts of fine white bumbast cloth, oyle of Zerzerline which they make of a seede, and it is very good to eate and to frye fish withall, great store of Butter, Lacca, long Pepper, Ginger, Mirabolans drie and condite, great store of cloth of Herbes, which is a kind of lilke which groweth amongst the woods without any labour of man, and when the bole thereof is growne round as bigge as an Orenge, then they take care onely to gather them. About sixteene yeeres past, this King with his Kingdome were destroyed by the King of Patane, which was also King of the greatest part of Bengala, and when he had got the Kingdome, he set custome there twentie pro cento, as Merchants payde in his Kingdome: but this Tyrant enioyed his Kingdome but a small time, but was conquered by another Tyrant, which was the great Mogol King of Agra, Delly, and of all Cambaia, without any resistance. I departed from Orisa to Bengala, to the harbour Piqueno, which is distant from Orisa towards the East an hundred and seuentie miles. They goe as it were rowing alongst the coast fiftie and foure miles, and then we enter into the riuer Ganges: from the mouth of this Riuer, to a City called Satagan, where the Merchants gather themselves together with their trade, are an hundred miles, which they rowe in eighteene houres with the increase of the water: in which riuer it floweth and ebbeth as it doth in the Thames, and when the ebbing water is come, they are not able to rowe against it, by reason of the swiftnesse of the water, yet their barks be light and armed with Oares, like to Foisttes, yet the cannot preuaile against that Streame, but for refuge must make them fast to the banke of the Riuer vntill the next flowing water, and they call these Barks Bazarus and Patuas: they rowe as well as a Galliot, or as well as euer I haue seene any. A good Tides rowing before you come to Satagan, you shall haue a place which is called Buttor, and from thence vpwards the Sips doe not goe, because that vpwards the Riuer is very Shallow, and little water. Euery yeere at Buttor they make and vnmake a Village, with Houses and Shops made of Straw, and with all things necessarie to their vses, and this Village standeth as long as the Ships ride there, and till they depart for the Indies, and when they depart, euerie man goeth to his plot of Houses, and there setteth fire on them, which thing made me to maruaile. For as I passed vp to Satagan, I saw this Village standing with a great number of people, with an infinite number of Ships and Bazars, and at my returne comming downe with my Captaine of the last Ship, for whom I tarried, I was all amazed to see such a place so soone razed and burnt, and nothing left but the signe of the burnt Houses. The small Ships goe to Satagan, and there they lade.

Ramusius 3. vol
fol. 363.

In the yeere 1538. and 1539. after that Diego de Almagro was beheaded, the Marquesse Francis Pizarro was not idle. For he sent straight one Peter de Baldinia with a good companie of men to discouer and conquer the countrey of Chili. He was well receiued of those of the coun-trei, but afterwards they rose against him and would haue killed him by treason. Yet for all the waire that hee had with them, he discovered much Land, and the coast of the Sea toward the South-east, till he came into 40. degrees and more in Latitude. While he was in these dis-coueries he heard newes of a King called Leucengolina, which commonly brought to the field
two hundred thousand fighting men against another King his neighbour, and that this Leucengolina had an Island, and a Temple therein with two thousand Priests: and that beyond them were the Amazones, whose Queene was called Guanomilla, that is to say, The golden beauen. But as yet there are none of these things discovered. About this time Gomez de Alvarado went to conquer the Prouince of Guanuco: and Francis de Chaner went to subdue the Conchincos, which troubled the towne of Truxillo, and the countreys adioyning. Peter de Vergara went to the Bra-camores, a people dwelling toward the North from Quito. Iohn Perez de Vergera went against the Ciaciapians: Alfonso de Mercadiglio went vnto Mulubamba. Ferdinando and Gonzaluo Pisarros went to subdue Collao, a countrey very rich in golde. Peter de Candia went to the lower part of Collao. Peranzures also went to conquer the said countrey. And thus the Spaniards dispersed themselues, and conquered aboue seuen hundred leagues of countrey in a very short space, though not without great trauailes and losse of men.

The countreyes of Brasil and Peru stand East and West almost eight hundred leagues distant. The neereft is from the Cape of Saint Augustine vnto the hauen of Truxillo: for they stand both almost in one parallell and Latitude.

In some places of the Andes and Countries the earth is of diuers colours, as blacke, white, red, Greene, blew, yellow, and violet, wherewith they die colours without any other mixture.
There grow on these mountaines many turneps, rapes, and other such like rootes and herbes.
One there is like vnto Aipo or Rue which beareth a yellow flower, and healeth all kinde of rotten sores, and if you apply it vnto whole and cleane flesh it will cate it vnto the bone: so that it is good for the vnfound and naught for the whole.

Those which liue on the tops of these mountaines of Andes betweene the cold and the heat
for the most part be blinde of one eye, and some altogether blinde, and scarce you shall finde
two men of them together, but one of them is halfe blinde. Also there groweth in these fieldes, notwithstanding the great heate of the sand good Maiz, and Potatoes, and an herbe which they name Coca, which they carrie continually in their mouthes (as in the East India they vse another herbe named Betele) which also (they say) satisfieth both hunger and thirst. Also they sow much cotton wooll, which of nature is white, red, blacke, Greene, yellow, orange tawnie, and of diuers other colours.

Likewise they affirme, that from Tumbez Sou hward it doth neither raine, thunder, nor lighten, for the space of fife hundred leagues of land: but at some times there falleth some little shower. Also it is reported, that from Tumbez to Chili there breede no Peacocks, Hens, Cocks nor Eagles, Falcons, Haukes, Kites, nor any other kinde of rauening Fowles, and yet there are of thm in all other regions and countreyes: but there are many Ducks, Geese, Herons, Pigeons Partridges, Quails, and many other kinds of birdes. There are also a certaine kinde of foule, like vnto a duck which hath no wings to flie withall, but it hath fine thinne feathers which couer all the bodie. Likewise there are Bitters that make warre with the scale or Sea-wolfe: for finding them out of the water they will labour to picke out their eyes, that they may not see to get to the water againe, and then they doe kill them. They say it is a pleasant sight to behold the fight betweene the said Bitters and Seales. With the beards of these Seales men make clean their teeth, because they bee whole some for the tooth-ache. There are certaine beafts which those of the countrey call Xacos, and the Spaniards sheepe, because they beare wooll like vnto a sheepe, but are made much like vnto a Deere, hauing a saddle backe like vnto a Camell. They will carrie the burthen of an hundred weight. The Spaniards ride vpon them, and when they be wearie they will turne their heads backward, and voide out of their mouthes a wonderfull stinking water.

From the Riuer of Plata and Lima Southward there breede no Crocodiles nor Lizards, nor Snakes, nor any kinde of venemous vermine, but great store of good fishes breede in those Riuers. On the coast of Saint Michael in the South Sea there are many rockes of salt couered with egges. On the point of Saint Helena are certaine Well springs which cast forth a liquor, that serueth in stead of pitch and tarre. They say that in Chili there is a fountaine, the water whereof will conuert wood into stone. In the hauen of Truxillo there is a Lake of fresh water, and the bottome thereof is of good hard salt. In the Andes beyond Xauxa there is a riuer of fresh water, in the bottome whereof there lieth white salt.

In the yeere 1540. the Captaine Ferdinando Alorchon went by the commandement of the Vice-roy Don Antonio de Mendoza with two ships to discouer the bottome of the gulf of California, and diuers other countries.

In this yeere 1540. Gonsalvo Pizarro went out of the Citie of Quito, to Discover the Countrie of Canell or Cinamome, a thing of great fame in that Countrie. Hee had with him two hundred Spaniards, Horse-men and Foote-men, and three hundred Indians to carie burthens. Hee went forward till he came to Guixos, which is the farthest place gouerned by the Incas: where there hapned a great Earthquake with Raine and Lightning, which sunke seuentie Houses. They passed ouer cold and Snowie hils, where they found many Indians Frozen to death, maruelling much of the great Snow that they found vnder the Equinoctiall line. From hence they went to a Prouince called Cumaco, where they taried two Moneths, because it Rained continually. And beyond they saw the Cinamome-trees, which be very great, the Leaues thereof resembling Bay-leaues, both Leaues, Branches, Rootes, and all tastig of Cinamome. The Rootes haue the whole taste of Cinamome. But the best are certaine knops like vnto Alcornogues or Acornes, which are good merchandise. It appeareth to be wild Cinamome, and there is much of it in the East Indies, and in the Ilands of Iaoa or Ianai. From hence they went to the Prouince and Citie of Coca, where they rested fiftie dayes. From the place forwards they trauelled along by a Riuer side being sixtie Leagues long, without finding of any Bridge, nor yet any Foorde to passe ouer to the other side. They found one place of this Riuer, where it had a fall of two hundred fathoms deepe, where the Water made such a noyse, that it would make a man almost deafe to stand by it. And not farre beneath this fall, they say they found a Channell of stone verie smooth, of two hundred foote broad, and the Riuer runneth by: and there they made a Bridge to passe ouer on the other side, where they went to a Countrie called Guema, which was so poore, that they could get nothing to eate, but onely Fruites and Herbes. From that place forward they found a people of some reason, wearing certaine Clothing made of Cotton-wooll, where they made a Brigandine, and there they found also certaine Canoas, wherein they put their Sicke men, and their Treasure and best Apparell, giuing the charge of them to one Francis de Orellana: and Gonsalvo Pizarro went by Land with the rest of the Companie along by the Riuer side, and at night went into the Boates, and they trauelled in this order two hundred Leagues as it appeareth. When Pizarro came to the place where he thought to finde the Brigandine and Canoas, and could haue no sight of them nor yet heare of them, he thought himselfe out of all hope, because hee was in a strange Countrie without Viſuals, Clothing, or any thing else: wherefore they were faine to care their Horses, yea and Dogs also, because the Countrie was poore and barren, and the Iourney long to goe to Quito. Yet notwithstanding, taking a good heart to themselues they went on forward in their Iourney, traueilling continually eightene Moneths; and it is reported, that they went almost fye hundred Leagues, wherein they did neither see Sunne, nor any thing else, whereby they might be comforted, wherefore of two hundred men which went forth at the first, there returned not backe past ten vnto Quito, and these so weake, ragged and disfigured, that they knew them not. Orellana went fye hundred or sixe hundred Leagues downe the Riuer, seeing diuers Countries and people on both sides thereof, among whom he affirmed some to bee Amazonas. He came into Castile, excusing himselfe, that the water and streames draue him downe perforce. This Riuer is named the Riuer of Orellana, and other name it the Riuer of the Amazones, because there be Women there which liue like vnto them.

In the yeere 1540. Cortes went with his Wife into Spaine, where hee died of a Disease seuen yeeres after.

In the yeere 1541, it is recorded that Don Stephan de Gama Gouvernour of India, Sayled toward the Streitt of Mecca.

In the same yeere 1541. Don Diego de Almagro killed the Marques Francis Pizarro, and his brother Francis Martinez of Alcantara in the Citie de los Reyes, otherwise called Lima, and made himselfe Gouvernour of that Countrie.

In the yeere 1540. the Vice-roy Don Antonio de Mendoza, sent one Francis Vasquez de Coronado by Land vnto the Prouince of Sibola, with an Armie of Spaniards and Indians.

In the yeere of our Lord 1542. one Diego de Freitas, being in the Realme of Siam, and in the Citie of Deana as Captaine of a Ship, there fled from him three Portugals in a Iunco (which is a kind of Ship) towards China. Their names were Antonio de Mota, Francis Zeimoro, and Anthony Pexato, directing their courle to the Citie of Liampo, standing in thirtie and odde Degrees of Latitude. There fell vpon their Sterne such a storme, that it set them off the Land, and in fewe dayes they saw an Iland towards the East standing in thirtie two Degrees, which they doe name Iapan, which seemeth to be the Ile of Zipangri, whereof Paulus Vencius maketh mention, and of the riches thereof. And this Iland of Iapan hath Gold, Siluer, and other riches.

In this yeere 1542. Don Antonio de Mendoza Vice-roy of Nueva Spagna, sent his Captaines and Pilots to Discover the Coast of Cape del Engaño, where a Fleete of Cortes had heene before. They Sailed till they came to a place called Sierras Nevadas, or The Snowie mount aines, standing in fortie Degrees toward the North, where they saw Ships and Merchandises, which carried on their Stems the Images of certaine Birds called Alcatarzi, and had the Yards of their Sailes gilded, and their Prowes laide ouer with siluer. They seemed to be of the Iles of Iapan, or of China; for they said that it was not about thirtie dayes sayling into their Countrie.

In the same yeere 1542. Don Anthonie de Mendoça, sent vnto the Ilands of Mindanao a Fleete of sixe Ships with foure hundred Souldiers, and as many Indians of the Countrey, the Generall whereof was one Rui Lopez de villa Lobos, being his Brother in law and a man in great estimation. They set Sayle from the Hauen of Natiuidad standing in twentie Degrees towards the North, vpon All Saints Ecue, and shaped their course towards the West. They had sight of the Iland of Saint Thomas, which Hernando de Grijalua had Discouered, and beyond in seuentene Degrees they had sight of another Iland which they named La Nublada, that is, The Clondie Iland. From thence they went to another Iland named Roca partida, that is; The Clouen Rocke. The third of December they found certaine Baxos or Flats of sixe or seuen Fathoms deepe. The fifteene of the same Moneth they had sight of the Ilands, which Diego de Roca, and Gomez de Sequeira, and Aluaro de Saanedra had Discouered, and named them Los Reyes, because they came vnto them on Twelue-day. And beyond them they found other Ilands in ten Degrees all standing round, and in the midst of thew they came to an Anker, where they tooke fresh water and wood.

In the yeere 1543. in Ianuarie they departed from the foresaid Ilands with all the Fleete, and had sight of certaine Ilands, out of which there came vnto them men in a certaine kind of Boates, and they brought in their hands Crosses, and salured the Spaniards in the Spanish tongue, saying, Buenas dias, Matelotes, that is to say, Good morrow companions; whereat the Spaniards much mar-ueiled, being then so farre out of Spaine, to see the men of that Countrie with Crosses, and to bee saluted by them in the Spanish tongue, and they seemed in their behauiour to encline somewhat to our Catholicke Faith. The Spaniards not knowing, that many thereabout had bene Christened by Francis de Castro, at the commandement of Antonie Galuano, some of them named these Ilands, Islas de las Cruzes, and others named them Islas de los Matelotes. In the same yeere 1543. the first of Februarie Rui Lopez, had sight of that noble Iland Mindanao standing in nine Degrees: they could not double it nor yet come to an Ancre as they would, because the Christened Kings and people resisted them, hauing giuen their obedience to Antonie Galuano, whom they had in great estimation, and there were hie or sixe Kings that had receiued Baptisme, who by no meanes would incurre his displeasure. Rui Lopez perceiuing this, and hauing a contrarie wind, Sayled along the Coast to find some ayde: and in foure or fise Degrees, hee found a small Iland which they of the Countrie call Sarangani, which they tooke perforce, and in memorie of the Vice-roy who had sent them thither, they named it Antonia, where they remained a whole yeere.

Vice-roy who had sent them thither, they named it Antonia, where they found In the same yeere 1543. and in the moneth of August, the Generall Rui Lopez sent one Bartholomeu de la torre in a small Ship into new Spaine, to acquaint the Vice-roy Don Antonio de Mendoça with all things. They went to the Ilands of Siria, Gaonara, Bilaia, and many others, standing in eleuen and twelue Degrees towards the North, where Magellan had beene, and Francis-de Castro also, who there Baptized many, and the Spaniards called them the Philippinas in memo-rie of the Prince of Spaine. Here they tooke victuals and wood, and hoysed Sayles, they Sayled for certaine dayes with afore-wind, till it came vpon the skanting, and came right vnder the Tropicke of Cancer. The twentie five of September they had sight of certaine Ilands, which they named Malabrigos, that is to say, The euill Roades. Beyond them they Discouered Las des Herma-nas, That is, The two Sisters. And beyond them also they saw foure Ilands more, which they called los Volcanes. The second of October they had sight of Farfana, beyond which there standeth an high pointed Rocke, which casteth out Fire at five places. So Sayling in sixteene Degrees of Northerly Latitude, from whence they had come, as it seemeth wanting Wind, they arrived againe at the Ilands of the Philippinas. They had sight of sixe or seuen Ilands more, but they Ankered not at them. They found also an Archipelagus of Ilands, well Inhabited with people, lying in fiftene or sixteene Degrees: the people be White, and the Women well proportioned, and more beautifull and better Arraied then in any other place of those parts, hauing many Jewels of Gold, which was a token, that there was some of that Metall in the same Countrie. Heere were also Barkes of fortie three Cubits in length, and two Fathoms and a halfe in breadth, and the Plankes five Inches thicke, which Barkes were rowed with Oares. They told the Spaniards, that they vsed to Saile in them to China, and that if they would goe thither they should haue Pilots to conduct them, the Countrie not being aboue five or sixe dayes Sayling from thence. There came vnto them also certaine Barkes or Boates handsomely decked, wherein the Master and principall men sat on high, and vnderneath were very Black-moores with Frilled haire: and being demanded where they had these Black-moores, they answered, that they had them from certaine Ilands standing fast by Sebut, where there were many of them, a thing that the Spaniards much maruailed at, because from thence it was aboue three hundred Leagues to the places where the Blacke people were. Therefore it seemed, that they were not naturally borne in that Climate, but that they be in certaine places scattered ouer the whole circuit of the World. For euen so they be in the Ilands of Nicobar and Andaman, which stand in the Gulfe of Bengala, and from thence by the space of five hundred Leagues, we doe not know of any Blacke people. Also Vasco Nunez de Vaiboa declareth, that as he went to Discouer the South Sea, in a certaine Land named Quareca, he found Blacke people with Frilled haire, whereas there were neuer any other found either in Noua Spagna, or in Castilia del Oro, or in Pern.

CHAP. 2. New Guinea. Philippinas. Portugals compound. Iesuite Bishop. 1693

In the yeere 1544. Don Gutierre de Vargas Bishop of Placenza sent a Fleet from the Citie of Sinill vnto the Straits of Magellan : which is reported to haue beene done by the counsell of the Vice-roy Don Antonie de Mendoca his Cousin. Some suspected, that they went to Maluco, others to China, others, that they went onely to discover the Land betwixt the Strait and the Land of Peru on the other side of Chili, because it was reported to bee very rich in Gold and Siluer. But this Fleet by reason of contrary windes could not passe the Strait, yet one small Barke passed the same, and sayled along the coast, and discovered all the Land, till he came vnto Chirimai, and Arequipa.

10 In the yeere 1545. and in the moneth of January Rui Lopez de villa Lobos, and Giraldo with the Castilians came to the Iland of Moro, and the Citie of Camaso, where they were well receiued of the Kings of Gilolo and Tidore, and of the people of the Countrie (because Antonie Gualuano was gone) and put the Captaine Don George de Castro to great trouble, as appeared by those things which passed betwene him and the Portugals, and the great expences whereunto he put the Fortresse.

Rui Lopez de villa Lobos sent from the Iland of Tidore another ship towards New Spaine by the South side of the Line, wherein was Captaine one Inigo Ortiz de Rotha, and for Pilot one Iaspar Rico. They sailed to the Coast of Os Papuas, and ranged all along the same, and because they knew not that Saavedra had been there before, they chalenged the honour and fame of that Discoverie. And because the people there were blacke and had frilled haire, they named it Nuova Guinea. For the memory of Saavedra as then was almost lost, as all things else doe fall into obliuion, which are not recorded, and illustrated by writing.

30 In this yeere 1545. and in the moneth of Iune, there went a Iunke from the Citie of Borneo, wherein went a Portugall called Peter Fidalgo, and by contrary winds he was driuen towards the North; where he found an Iland standing in 9. or 10. degrees, that stretched it selfe to 22. degrees of latitude, which is called The Ile of the Lucones, because the Inhabitants thereof were so named. It may haue some other name and harbours which, which as yet we know not, it runneth from the North vnto the Southwest, and standeth betwene Mindanab and China. They say they sayled along by it 250. leagues, where the Land was fruitfull and well couered, and they affirme, that there they will giue two Pezos of gold for one of siluer.

CHAP. II.

The summe of a Letter of NICOLAS TRIGAVIUS, a Iesuite, touching his Voyage to India, and of the State of Christianitie in China and Iapan. A Letter also of Capt. R. COCKE, and Relations of Master ROBERTS wracke on the Coast of China in the Unicorn.

40 WEE set sayle from Lisbon, the sixteenth of Aprill, 1618. being three ships: foure and thirty of the society were distributed into two ships: one of them called Saint Mauro carried twelue destined for Iapon, of which was the Reuerend Lord, L. James Valent Bishop of Iapon of our societie. Father Gabriel Matos was Superiour of the other ten. In the other ship two and twenty of vs were carried for China, ten Portugals, three Italians, foure Germans, and besides my selfe, foure Belgians. Wee sayled prosperously, sauing that all Ours were Sea-sicke till wee came to the Canaries. There I know not how the ships parted companie. Wee sayled to the Torrid Zone pleasantly appointing set and distinct houres for taking care of the sicke, for Sermons, the Masse (almost daily) Cases of Conscience, Mathematicall disciplines, exercise of the China Language, &c. About the Line we were infested with Feuers, all saue one, and five died; lastly, I and my brother Philip were sicke, and kept our beds fifty dayes, insomuch as I receiued Vnction likely 50 in few houres to die. Wee passed the Cape on Saint James his Day, and a few dayes after (hauing hitherto had no tempest) were three nights together horribly tossed. The Captaine of our ship also died, and scarcely could another succeed in peace.

60 After five moneths and a halfe sayling, wee came to Goa. The Saint Mauro came thither a moneth after vs, one of our Societie (an Italian) being dead. The Admirall a fortnight after that, arriued with disgrace, for that hauing fallen in companie with sixe English ships, hee chose rather with eighty thousand pieces of money which they call Patacas, to redeeme the fight, then to fight it out with victorie or death. For which cause the Admirall and some other Officers are deprived and sent backe to the King in bonds to be punished, or to render accounts of their fact. A few dayes after, my brother falls sicke and dieth. The rest follow their studies at Goa, till affaires of China and Iapon bee more quieted. For howsoeuer I had left the China businesse quiet, and imagined still the same, yet they which aspire now to their helpe must propound crosses and martyrdom to themselves.

At Nankin Christianitie thrived well and in other our houses. Thence arose the beginning of euill. A chiefe Iudge in the third Tribunall named Xin, a great Idolater, fought to chase

Christianitie out of the Kingdome, and therefore opposed Ours by putting vp many Petitions fraught with calumnies, which he sent secretly to the King. But after often petitioning obtrayning no rescript, he employeth others & useth bribes, getting to his party the chief President of the Third Tribunal, to which Court belongs the knowledge of forren affaires, and of Religion. He also petitions the King, but with such effect, that the King makes no answer (which with the Chinois is a denyall) and at last he writes to the King, that according to his Office he will send them out of the Kingdome, such excepted as remained in the Royall Citie. This he did, but the Magistrates of those Cities where Ours resided dissembled the matter, except that Nanquin aduersarie, which apprehended two Priests and a Brother, their Pupils, Seruants, and some new Conuerts, but durst not send them away before the Kings answer. Meane while he exercised them all in diuers Courts about nine moneths space, and some were often whipped after their cruell manner; one or two died in prison by force of the torments. Many of the Ethnikes fauoured Ours; but the Christian Magistrates Paulus, Michael, Leo did maruellously bestirre themselues. Nor did any Conuert apostatise, but beyond the China pusillanimities were both constant and cheerfull in their sufferings.

At last our Nanquin aduersarie bribing the Eunuchs with ten thousand pieces of Gold extorted from the King that Ours should be sent backe to their owne, but not (which he sought) their death. Ours therefore honorably dismissed from Pequin, came to Canton. Those of Nanquin were sent away with shame, and two were carried in Cages to Canton. In other residences they were more gently vsed, and all continued in the Kingdome but two of Pequin and two of Nanquin. After this the Pequin Magistrate was depriued and sent home with dishonour: he of Nanquin also fell sicke, and lost his onely daughter, which the Chinois esteeme a great euill; for which cause in great rage he burned a certaine Idoll to which hee had commended that his daughter. Ours adorned a new seat or residence in Xansi. Father Felicianus à Sylua a Portugall, his carkasse hauing lien foure yeeres in the Coffin, kept at home after the China fashion, was opened and found entire with his garments. The skie suddenly ouercast was calmed on the shutting of the Coffin; a horrible thing to the Chinois, which are very scrupulous to open Graues. His body was buried in the fields, and is reported to worke miracles, and to be frequented of the New Conuerts. I am called by my Superiours with all speed, and there is hope that all things will bee amended.

Now for the Iaponian Church. Daifu, after that noble victorie which he obtained against Fideiori and Zaca, is dead; in the glorie whereof his sonne obtained the Empire without tumult. The Church had quiet a yeere and halfe; but by the indiscreet zeale of some Religious at Nangasacke, the sore brake out againe. Foure men, a Dominican, Austinian, Franciscan, and Jesuite, haue beene martyred, other two continued in prison. Twenty in all Iapon haue died for the Faith, others haue beene exiled and punished, the story whereof is not vnlike to those which I left in Europe comprehended in foure Bookes of Iaponian triumphs, which I hope ere this haue seene the light. I looke for other intelligence within these two moneths, which I will leaue in Latine before I goe for the next ships.

In India things remayne in the wonted state. At Bazain was an vnwonted tempest, whereupon Processions were made in all India. Two Comets were seene at the same time, one foureene dayes after the other: the later directed his course to the North, and still is seene whiles I write these things the twentieth of December, beginning to appeare the eleuenth of November, 1618.

Extracts out of TRIGAVTIVS his Martyrologe, or Fine Bookes of Christian Triumphs among the Iaponians, before mentioned.

THE Iaponian State being oppressed, He is Emperour which possesseth the Imperiall Provinces called Tenca (or Tensa) a name receiued of the Chinois, of whom the Iaponian Islands are a Colonie (by the Chinois called Iepuen, the beginning of the Sunne, by themselves Gupon or Nitpon) and that which the Chinois call Thienhia, that is, Whatsoeuer is vnder Heauen, the Iaponians terme Tenca, expressed with the same characters, howsoeuer differing in pronunciation. Taicosama died An. 1598. and left for his Heire a childe called Fideyori. Daifusama King of Quanto with others were appointed his Tutors or Protectors, which quarrelling for themselues, A. 1600. Daifusama getting the better, entituled himselfe Xogun or Cubosama. He left Fideyori in the most famous Fort of Iapon, with a tolerable reuenue. This continued till the yeere 1614. He removed the Imperiall seat from Miaco to Surunga the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome of Fuchu, and built there a Castle to keepe his treasure: his Sonne*, destined to the Inheritance, he placed at Tendo (or Edoo) and married him to the Neece of Nabunanga, which was next Emperour before Taicosama, and Aunt to Fideyori, being Sister to his Mother. This Fideyori being now growne in yeeres at his Castle of Ozaca, Daifusama fearing that he might interuert the Inheritance from his Sonne, deuised trickes first, which being eluded brake forth into open warre.

He had set Fideyori on worke to build a sumptuous Temple in the Suburbs of Miaco, in which Daibut (that is, a great Idoll or Colosse of gilded Brasse, his thumbe a spanne compasse and the rest proportionable,) should be worshipped. His Father Taicosama had before built at great expence this Temple, but the fire had consumed it, and the Sonne was incited to renew it by him, which sought by that meanes to exhaust his Treasures, the sinewes of warre. This Temple at the eighth Moone (which is our September) was to be dedicated by three thousand Priests thither assembled with great pompe, the Emperour meane while intending to seize on Ozaca. To this end hee had sent for Ichinocam the Gouvernour of the Citie and wonne him to his part. But at his returne vpon suspicion he was forced to quit the Towne, and the Emperours intents made knowne, and that Dedication deferred. The Emperour came before Ozaca with a great Armie of two hundred thousand, of which he lost thirtie thousand in the Siege, and was forced to depart with dissembled Conditions of Peace, in Ianuarie 1615. This lasted but few moneths, and hee returned with another Armie as great as the former. Fideyori is also reported to haue two hundred thousand in his armie. Sacay was burned, and in two Battels Fideyori had the better. In the third the Emperour was so out of hope that hee thought there to haue ended his dayes, and spake to some to dispatch him, if they saw no meanes for him to escape his Enemies hands. But Samandonus the Generall seeing the Victorie sure, sent for Fideyori that hee should come to haue the honour thereof, who in youthfull hast neglecting his old Captaines, they enraged at this seeming contempt, and perhaps corrupted by Cubosamas money, set fire on the Castle. This forced Fideyori backe to saue his Mother, Wife, and what he could from the flames, preferring safetie before honour. But hee lost both, with himselfe together, no man yet knowing what became of him. Ozaca was quite destroyed in Iuly 1615. and the Emperour returned Victorious to Surunga, and magnified his Idols which had done him this Honour for his zealous persecution of Christians. But in March 1616. this Tryumph was turned to his Funerall. Hee was buried in his Castle Cuno, where his Treasure was kept. One of his Sonnes hee would not see, his other sonne succeeded, who is thought not likely to containe the mutable Iaponian spirits in order: Two other sonnes he left, of which hee gaue order, that if they would not otherwise bee ordered they should lose their Heads. Some hopes by his death befell the Christians of more libertie, and they haue since performed their holies, but secretly, least they should seeme to insult on the Dead. For in pretence of wrongs by Portugall Merchants, and Contempts of his Imperiall Edicts, and of Death, and the reports of worshipping some executed Christian Malefactors (at whose death some kneeling had commended them to Christ, which was thus Paganly misconstrued) hee had exiled many, and done many to diuers kindes both of tortures and death; which our Author handles at large in fise * Bookes, where they which please may both read and see in Pictures their diuersified passions: which also from Captaine Saris, Captaine Cocke and others, wee haue in part before deliuered, with another Cause inciting the Emperour thereto, namely Iesuiticall hypocrisie, who vnder pretence of Conuerting soules, had become Factors and Agents for the Portugall Merchants. But we shall giue you further and later Iaponian intelligence from our owne Countrymen.

A Letter concerning later Occurrents in Iapon from Master R. COCKE to Captaine SARIS, written at FIRANDO in Iapon, the 31. of December. 1622.

Captayne SARIS:

I Haue written you two former Letters to one effect, the one dated the Fourteenth ultimo, sent by a Scotchman called Iohn Portis, in the Ship Moone. And the other kept till the Twentieth ditto, and sent per Master Iohn Munden, in the ship Bull. In both which Letters, I wrote you at large as time then offered, vnto the which I referre me, not doubting, but one of them will come to your hands, if not both.

Since which time I am informed of the greatest Conspiracie that euer was heard of in Iapon, pretended against the person of Shonga Samma, the Emperour of Iapon now raigning, the Factors being such great personages, that it is thought the Emperour dare not meddle with them, but winke at it and make Peace with them. Nine of them being named as followeth, viz.

Cangano Egen Dono, the Emperours kinsman, and of the greatest reuenues in Iapon, per Annum 200. Mangocas. (Which Master G. Saris calculated at 1875000. pounds sterling money: and so of the rest proportionably.)

Shimaszu Dono, King of Xaxica and Liqueas, most feared of any Prince in Iapon, for the strength of his Countries and valiantnesse of his Souldiers, his reuenues more then per annum 100. Mangocas,

Micanano Camy Dono, Sonne to this Emperours eldest Brother, called by the same name, a valiant man, but disinherited by Ogosho Samma his Father, because hee had lost his Nose by too much much Venerie, and Shougofama his brother (now Emperour) Constituted in his place: this mans reuenues rated at 70. Mangocas.

Massamonedas Dono, King of Osheu, per annum 70. Mangocas.

Mengamy Dono, King of , per annum 35. Mangocas.

Yechew Dono, King of Cocora, per annum 34. Mangocas.

Catto Samma Dono, King of I. O. per annum 30. Mangocas.

Nancobo Dono, High Priest or Bonse of Edo, and second to the Daire in Church matters, and Tutor to this Emperour Shonga Samma, per annum 001. Mangoco.

Codgsque Dono, Secretarie to Ogosho Samma when you were in Iapon, then had 3. Mangocas, but aduanced per Shougo Samma, per annum to 015. Mangocas.

Osaca.

Euery Mangoca is 10000. Gocas, and each Gaca is 100. Gantas of Rice, and each Ganta may be some three Ale pintes in England, for it is aboute three Wine pintes as I haue scene it proued per an English wine pinte in Iapon. And this King * (or Tono) of Firando, hath but six Mangocas, as I thinke you doe remember, yet is esteemed as much as the greatest Earledome in England, hee being stinted at foure thousand Souldiers or men at Armes, two thousand to keepe his owne Countrey, and two thousand to serue the Emperour at demand, but is able to set out many thousands more if need require.

And it is now some fixe or seuen yeere past, that Calsa Samma this Emperours second Brother, (who is married to Massamonedas Daughter) was vpon suspition disinherited by his Brother, and shauen a Pagan Bonse or Monke, and Confined into a Pagan Monasterie, with gaurds set about him. Attending euer since when the Emperour his brother would command him to cut his belly, but yet liuing.

Thus much I thought good to aduise you of the present state of Iapon, much altered from that it was at your being heere; and for the rest, I hope to tell you by word of mouth at my returne into England, which I hope to doe the next yeere, God sparing me life and libertie.

Master Edmond Sayer departed from hence towards Edo, the tenth day of this moneth of December; as the Hollanders did the like, to carry Presents to the Emperour: and wee haue newes that they arriued at Osaca tenne dayes past. And now this Ship the Elizabeth being ready to depart towards Bantam, and so I thinke from thence for England, I thought it good to write you these few lines of Aduise; and so end with my heartie Commendations to your selfe, not forgetting all the rest of our friends and acquaintance.

A Note of the Vnicornes Companie in China.

Although wee haue referred China relations to another Tome, yet because in Captayne Prings former relations, mention is made of the Vnicorne wracked by foule weather on the dangerous shores of China; I thought good to mention thus much heere. I spake with Master Roberts the Master of the Ship, also with Master Pickering another of the companie: which both told me, that their Ship being lost, the Companie saued themselves and with part of the goods went a shore. The rude Chinois would haue assaulted and rifled them, but they stood to their defence, till an Officer or Magistrate came and relieued them from the vulgar: after which they found both just dealing and kind vsage. They were permitted to buy for their money two Vessels with all necessarie prouisions for their departure, and one part of the Companie went to Iapon, the other (as I remember) to Malacca. If thou hast no compleater storie (of those, the onely English-men which I know to haue been on land in China) I must excuse my selfe by their promises of perfecter Relations, which whiles I expected, I was lesse inquisitiue then otherwise I would haue beene. They sayled me, and as I heare, are returned to the Indies: and I, if I seeme to sayle heere, shall in the next Tome repay thee with vse.

CHAP. III.

A Letter touching Iapon with the Gouvernement, Affaires and later Occurrents there, written to me by Master ARTHUR HATCH Minister, lately returned thence.

Salutem in authore salutis.

Worthy SIR:

Aving promised to impart vnto you some obseruations of those Countries where I haue trauelled, especially of Iapon, I was loath either to breake my promise, or in the least respect frustrate your expectation. Late performance is better then none; but the multiplicite of my businesse hath beene the occasion of my late writing vnto you, which I hope you will excuse; and being now called into the Countrey, and so barred from conference with you, I know not how or in what

what manner fully to accomplish your desire; and therefore I intend at this time to make relation vnto you of some particular passages onely, vntill I heare farther from you, but if I may stand you in any stead for the furtherance of your intended purpose, I would intreat you to acquaint me with your request, and you shall finde me most ready and willing to the vtermost of my slender power to accomplish it.

The Countrey of Japon is very large and spacious, consisting of seuerall Ilands and pettie Provinces; it is Mountainous and craggie, full of Rockes and stonie places, so that the third part of this Empire is not inhabited or manured; neither indeed doth it afford that accommodation for Inhabitants which is needfull, or that farness and conueniencie for the growth of Corne, Fruit, and small grayne as is requisite; which causeth the people to select the choyest and plainest parts and places of the land both to till and dwell in. The Climate is temperate and healthie not much pestred with infectious or obnoxious ayres, but very subiect to fierce windes, tempestuous stormes, and terrible Earthquakes, insomuch that both Ships, in the harbour haue beene ouer-set, and driuen a shore by the furie of the one, and Houses on the land disioynted and shaken to pieces by the fearefull trembling of the other.

It is gouerned by an Emperour who hath threescore and fise Kings vnder his command; they haue but small and pettie Kingdomes, yet all of them challenge and assume to themselves that Royall state and dignitie, which may well become the persons of farre more famous Princes. There are but fise of the Emperours priuie Councell, who commonly are such, that for Wisdome, Policie, and carefull vigilancie in managing the State affaires, in preventing of Treasons and Rebellions, in executing of Iustice and continuing of peace and quietnesse may bee compared with many, nay most in Christendome. No man may make knowne any cause vnto the Emperour himselfe, either by word of mouth or petition, but euery one must acquaint the Councell with his cause, and if they approue it, the Emperour shall know of it, if not, you must be content to haue it drowned in obliuion. The Emperour liues in great Royaltie and seldome goes abroad either to Hawke or Hunt without a thousand followers at least to attend him: he hath but one Wife, and it is generally reported that hee keepes companie with no other, but her onely; and if it bee true as it is thought, hee may in that respect be tearmed the Phoenix of all those parts of the world: as for those within his owne Dominions they are so farre either from imitating or following him, that one is scarcely contented with a hundred women, and they are so shamelesse in that kinde, that they will boast of it, and account it a glory vnto them to make relation of the multitude of women which they haue had the vse of. Consuetudo peccandi tollit sensum peccati. This Emperour hath abundance of Silver and Gold, and not onely his Coffers but whole Store-houses are cramm'd with coyne; hee hath some balls of Gold which were brought to his Court from Ozechya Castle of that waight and magnitude, that fiftene or sixtene men are scarcely able to beare one of them.

All Riuers doe in a kinde of thankfull remuneration returne their waters to the Sea, because they tooke them from thence, but the Princes of Japon doe cleane contrarie, for they receiue nothing from the Emperour, and yet they giue all to the Emperour, for they doe even impoverish themselves, by enriching him by presents; nay, they strue and contend who may giue the greatest and chiefeest Present. And each of those seuerall Princes must alwayes bee either himselfe in person, or his Brother, eldest Sonne, or the chiefe Nobleman within his Realme at the Emperours Court; the reason of it is not well knowne, but it is pretended, that it is done to keepe the seuerall Kingdomes in quiet, and free from tumults, treasons and rebellions. The Emperour doth ordinarily requite his Princes presents after this manner: hee giues them a Feather for a Goose, some few Kerrimoones or Coates, for Gold, Silver or other precious and rare commodities; and that they may not grow rich, and of sufficient abilitie to make head against him, he suffers not their Fleeces to grow, but sheares them off, by raising Taxes on them for the building of Castles, and the repairing of Fortifications, and yet they are not suffered to repair their owne, or any way to fortifie themselves.

Ozechya is the most famous Castle that the Emperour hath, or that is within the Empire; it is of an extraordinarie bignesse and compassed round with three seuerall walls; the Castle of Edo is likewise walled and moated, hauing some few Ordnance on it; at Crates and Falkata there are likewise Castles both walled and moated, the circumference of each of them is neere about two mile. The chiefe Noble-men of those Kingdomes haue Houses within the Castle walls to come and liue there, either at the Kings or their owne pleasures, within each of those Castles there is a Storehouse kept ordinarily full of Rice, which may serue for their prouision at all occasions and needs. At Falkata there is a Wood of Pine trees neere about three mile square, which is all the Summer time swept and kept so cleane, that you shall hardly see any small twig bough, or leafe vnder the Trees, and the trees stand so close together, that you may solace and recreate your selfe there at all houres of the day without any hurt or heat of the Sunne. In the midst of it there is a great Pagod or Church very richly adorned with gilded Images, and all sorts of curious carued workes.

The people are generally Courteous, affable and full of Compliments, they are very punctu-

all in the entertayning of Strangers, and they will assoone lose a limbe as omit one Ceremonie in welcomming their friend; they vse to giue and receiue the emptie Cup at one the others hands, and before the Master of the house begins to drinke, hee will proffer the Cup to euery one of his Guests, making shew to haue them to begin though it bee farre from his intention; they feed not much vpon varietie; for Fish, Rootes and Rice are their common junkates, and if they chance to kill a Hen, Ducke or Pigge, which is but seldome, they will not like Charles eate it alone, but their friends shall be surely partakers of it. Their ordinary drinke is Water, and that is made most times hot, in the same pot where they seeth their Rice, that so it may receiue some thicknesse and substance from the Rice. They haue strong Wine and Rack distill'd of Rice, of which they will sometimes drinke largely, especially at their Feasts and meetings, and being moued to anger or wrath in the heate of their Drinke, you may assoone periwade Tygres to patience and quietnesse as them, so obstinate and wilfull they are in the furie of their impatience. Their Lawes are very strict and full of seueritie, affeording no other kinde of punishment but either Death or Banishment: Murther, Theft, Treason, or the violation of any of the Emperours Proclamations or Edicts, are punished with death; so is Adulterie also if it bee knowne and the parties pursued, but the Deuill their master in those actions hath taught them such cleanly conueyances, that seldome or neuer are they apprehended; they proceed both in Controuerfies and criminall causes according to the verdict of the produced witnesses, and the Sentence being once past, they will not reuoake or mitigate the seueritie of it, but if the parties attached haue deserued death they shall surely haue it, and for the manner, they are either Beheaded or Crucified; hee kneeles downe on his knees and then comes the Executioner behind him and cuts off his head with a Catan or their Countreie-sword, and his head being off, the young Caualleers trie their weapons on his limbes, and proue whether they can cut off an Arme or Leg at a blow; the other haue their armes and legges spread abroad on a Crosse, which done, they set the Crosse vpright in the ground, and then comes one either with a Lance or Speare and runnes the partie through the bodie, where hee hangs vntill he rots off, no man being suffered to take him downe.

Euery one may change his Name three times, when he is a childe, when he is a young-man, and when he is old; some change their names more often, euery one as hee pleaseth may make choise of his owne name, and they are commonly named either by the King, or else by some Noble or Great man with whom they are chiefly in fauour.

They haue the vse of Writing and Printing, and haue had the space of many yeeres, no man knowes certainly how long. They haue seuen sorts of Letters, each single letter seruing for a word, and many of them in their placing serue for fixe or seuen; and each Alphabet hath eight and fortie Letters, and yet with all these letters they are not able to write our Christian names; they haue not the true pronounciation of H. B. T. and some other letter, and a Chinesse if his life lay on it, cannot truly pronounce D.

They obserue no Sabbath, but certaine Feast dayes according to the Moone, as the first of the Moone, the 15. or 28.; on these dayes they goe to the Church, visit the Sepulchers of the dead, and vse many foolish and apish Ceremonies, which time will not permit me now to relate.

The ninth day of the Moone throughout the yeere they hold for accursed, and therefore in that day they will not begin or vndertake any worke of consequence and importance.

They strictly obserue a Fast on that day of the moneth, in which their Father or Mother dyed, which they doe so precisely keepe, that they will not touch or eate any thing that hath blood.

Kind Sir, if I haue not in this satisfied you according to your expectation, yet I will assure you it is according as the time and my wayward affaires will now permit me; I would intreat to heare from you, and Godwilling as I haue leasure I will more fully declare vnto you my particular obseruations of Iapon, in the meane time I will pray for your health and good successe in all your affaires and godly enterprises.

Extracts of Master CASAR FREDERIKE his eightene yeeres Indian Obseruations.

N the yeere of our Lord God 1563, I Cesar Fredericke being in Venice, and very desirous to see the East parts of the World, tooke my journey to Alepo, and there I acquainted my selfe with Merchants of Armenia, and Moares, that were merchants, and consoorted to goe with them to Ormus, and wee departed from Alepo, and in two dayes journey and a halfe, we came to a Citie called Br. (Thence to Babylon or Bagdet, and so to Sasera and Ormus.)

Ormus

Ormus hath a Moore King of the race of the Persians, who is created and made King by the Captaine of the Castle, in the name of the King of Portugall. At the creation of this King I was there, and saw the ceremonies that they vse in it, which are as followeth. The old King being dead, the Captaine of the Portugals chuseth another of the bloud Royall, and maketh this election in the Castle with great Ceremonies, and when hee is elected, the Captaine sweareth him to be true and faithfull to the King of Portugall, as his Lord and Gouvernour, and then he giueth him the Scepter regall. After this with great feasting and pompe, and with great company, he is brought into the royall Palace in the Citie. This King keepeth a good traine, and hath sufficient reuenues to maintayne himselfe without troubling of any, because the Captaine of the Castle doth maintayne and defend his right, and when that the Captaine and he ride together, he is honoured as a King, yet he cannot ride abroad with his traine, without the consent of the Captaine first had: it behooueth them to doe this, and it is necessarie, because of the great trade that is in this Citie: their proper language is the Persian tongue. There I shipped my selfe to goe for Goa, a Citie in the Indies, in which passage the first Citie that you come to in the Indies, is called Diu, and is situate in a little Iland in the Kingdome of Cambaia, which is the greatest strength that the Portugals haue in all the Indies, yet a small Citie, but of great trade, because there they lade very many great ships for the straights of Mecca and Ormuz with marchandise, and these ships belong to the Moores and Christians, but the Moores cannot trade neither saile into those seas without the licence of the Vice-roy of the King of Portugall, otherwise they are taken and made good prizes. The merchandise that they lade these ships withall commeth from Cambaietta a Port in the Kingdome of Cambaia, which they bring from thence in small barks, because there can no great shippes come thither, by reason of the sholdnesse of the water thereabouts, and these sholdes are an hundred or fourescore miles about in a straight or gulfe, which they call Macareo, which is as much to say, as a race of a tide, because the waters there run out of that place without measure, so that there is no place like to it, vnlesse it be in the Kingdome of Pegu, where there is another Macareo, where the waters run out with more force then these doe. Cambaietta is situate on the seas side, and is a very faire Citie. The time that I was there, the Citie was in great calamitie and scarcenesse, so that I haue seene the men of the country that were Gentiles take their children, their sonnes and their daughters, and haue desired the Portugals to buy them, and I haue seene them solde for eight or ten Larins a piece, which may bee of our money ten shillings or thirteene shillings foure pence. For all this, if I had not seene it, I could not haue beleueed that there should bee such a trade at Cambaietta as there is: for in the time of euery new Moone and euery full Moone, the small barks (innumerable) come in and out, for at those times of the Moone the tides and waters are higher then at other times they be. These barks be laden with all sorts of spices, with silke of China, with Sandols, with Elephants teeth, Veluets of Vercini, great quantitie of Pannina, which commeth from Mecca, Chickinos which be pieces of gold worth seuen shillings a piece sterling, with money, and with diuers sorts of other merchandise. Also these barks lade out, as it were, an infinite quantitie of cloth made of Bumbast of all sortes, as white stamped and painted, with great quantitie of Indico, dried ginger and conserued, Myrabolans drie and condite, Boras in paste, great store of Sugar, great quantitie of Cotton, abundance of Opium, Assa Fetida, Puchio, with many other sorts of drugges, Turbants made in Diu, great stones like to Corneolacs, Granats, Agats, Diaspry, Calcidonij, Hematists and some kinde of naturall Diamonds.

During the time I dwelt in Cambaietta, I saw very maruellous things: there were an infinite number of Artificers that made Bracelets called Mannij, or bracelets of Elephants teeth, of diuers colours, for the women of the Gentiles, which haue their armes full decked with them. And in this occupation there are spent euery yeere many thousands of crownes: the reason whereof is this, that when there dieth any whatsoever of their kindred, then in signe and token of mourning and sorrow, they breake all their bracelets from their armes, and presently they goe and buy new againe, because that they had rather bee without their meat then without their bracelets.

There come euery yeere to Chaul from Cochin, & from Cananor ten or fifteen great ships laden with great Nuts cured, and with Sugar made of the selfe same Nuts called Giagra: the tree whereon these Nuts doe grow is called the Palmer tree, and thorow out all the Indies, and especially from this place to Goa, there is great abundance of them, and it is like to the Date tree. In the whole world there is not a tree more profitable and of more goodnesse then this tree is, neither doe men reape so much benefit of any other tree as they doe of this, there is not any part of it but serueth for some vse, and none of it is worthy to be burnt. With the timber of this tree they make Ships without the mixture of any other tree, and with the leaues thereof they make Sayles, and with the fruit thereof, which bee a kinde of Nuts, they make Wine, and of the wine they make Sugar and Placetto, which Wine they gather in the spring of the yeere: out of the middle of the tree where continually there goeth or runneth out white liquor like vnto water, in that time of the yeere they put a vessell vnder euery tree, and euery eue ing and morning they take it away full, and then distilling it with fire it maketh a very strong liquor: and then they put it into Buts, with a quantity of Zibibo, white or blacke and in short time it is made a perfect Wine. After this they make of the Nuts great store of Oyle: of the tree they make great quantitie of boords and quarters for buildings. Of the barke of this tree they make Cables, Ropes, and other furniture for ships, and, as they say, these Ropes be better then they that are made of Hempe. They make of the Bowes, Bedsteds, after the Indies fashion, and Scauasches for merchandise. The leaues they cut very small, and weaue them, and so make Sayles of them, for all manner of shipping, or else very fine Mats. And then the first rinde of the Nut they stampe, and make thereof perfect Ockam to calke ships, great and small: and of the hard barke thereof they make Spooones and other vessels for meate, in such wise that there is no part thereof throwne away, or cast to the fire. When these Mats be Greene they are full of an excellent sweet water to drinke: and if a man bee thirsty, with the liquor of one of the Mats he may satisfie himselfe: and as this Nut ripeneth, the liquor thereof turneth all to kernell.

In the yeere of our Lord 1567. I went from Goa to Bezeneger the chiefe Citie of the Kingdom of Narsinga eight dayes iourney from Goa, within the Land, in the companie of two other Merchants which carried with them three hundred Arabian Horses to that King: because the Horses of that Countrie are of a small stature: and at the going out of Goa the Horses pay custome, two and forty Pagodies for euery Horse, which Pagody may be of sterling money fixe shillings eight pence, they be pieces of gold of that value. So that the Arabian Horses are of great value in those Countries, as 300. 400. 500. and to 1000. Duckets a Horse.

A very good sale for horses.

Bezeneger. Idalcan. Xamaluc. &c.

A most vnkind and wicked treason against their Prince: this they haue for giuing credite to strangers, rather then to their owne native people.

The Citie of Bezeneger was sacked in the yeere 1565. by foure Kings of the Moors, which were of great power and might: the names of these foure Kings were these following the first was called *Dialcan, the second Zamaluc, the third Cotamaluc, and the fourth Viridy: and yet these foure Kings were not able to overcome this Citie and the King of Bezeneger, but by treason. This King of Bezeneger was a Gentile, and had, amongst all other of his Captaines, two which were notable, and they were Moors: and these two Captaines had either of them in charge threescore and ten or fourescore thousand men. These two Captaines being of one Religion with the foure Kings which were Moors, wrought meanes with them to betray their owne King into their hands. The King of Bezeneger esteemed not the force of the foure Kings his enemies, but went out of his Citie to wage battell with them in the fields; and when the Armies were ioyned, the battell lasted but a while, not the space of foure houres, because the two traiterous Captaines, in the chiefe of the fight, with their companies turned their faces against their King, and made such disorder in his Armie, that as astonied they set themselves to flight. Thirty yeeres was this Kingdome gouerned by three brethren which were Tyrants, the which keeping the rightfull King in prison, it was their vse euery yeere once to shew him to the people, and they at their pleasures ruled as they listed. These brethren were three Captaines belonging to the father of the King they kept in prison, which when he died, left his sonne very young, and then they tooke the gouernment to themselves. The chiefe of these three was called Ramaragio, and sate in the Royall Throne, and was called the King: the second was called Temiragio, and he tooke the gouernment on him: the third was called Bengatre, and he was Captaine generall of the Armie. These three brethren were in this battell, in the which the chiefe of the last were neuer heard of quicke nor dead. Onely Temiragio fled in the battell, hauing lost one of his eyes. When the newes came to the Citie of the overthrow in the battell, the wiues and children of these three Tyrants, with their lawfull King (kept prisoner) fled away, spoyled as they were, and the foure Kings of the Moors entred the Citie Bezeneger with great triumph, and there they remained fixe moneths, searching vnder houses and in all places for money and other things that were hidden, and then they departed to their owne Kingdomes, because they were not able to maintayne such a Kingdome as that was, so farre distant from their owne Countrie.

The sacking of the Citie.

Policy to entrap men.

When the Kings were departed from Bezeneger, this Temiragio returned to the Citie, and then beganne for to repopulate it, and sent word to Goa to the Merchants, if they had any Horses, to bring them to him, and he would pay well for them, and for this cause the aforesaid two Merchants that I went in companie withall, carried those Horses that they had to Bezeneger. Also this Tyrant made an order or law, that if any Merchant had any of the Horses that were taken in the aforesaid battell or warres, although they were of his owne marke, that he would giue as much for them as they would: and beside he gaue generall safe conduct to all that should bring them. When by this meanes hee saw that there were great store of Horses brought thither vnto him, he gaue the Merchants faire words, vntill such time as he saw they could bring no more. Then hee licenced the Merchants to depart, without giuing them any thing for their Horses, which when the poore men saw, they were desperate, and as it were mad with sorrow and grieve.

I rested in Bezeneger seuen moneths, although in one moneth I might haue discharged all my businesse, for it was necessarie to rest there vntill the wayes were cleere of Theeues, which at that time ranged vp and downe. And in the time I rested there, I saw many strange and beastly deeds

deeds done by the Gentiles. First, when there is any Noble man or woman dead, they burne their bodies : and if a married man die, his wife must burne herselfe aliue, for the loue of her husband, and with the body of her husband : so that when any man dyeth, his wife will take a moneths leaue, two or three, or as shee will, to burne herselfe in, and that day being come, wherein she ought to be burnt, that morning she goeth out of her house very early, either on Horsebacke or on an Elephant, or else is borne by eight men on a small stage : in one of these orders shee goeth, being apparelled like to a Bride, carried round about the Citie, with her haire downe about her shoulders, garnished with Iewels and Flowers, according to the estate of the partie, and they goe with as great ioy as Brides doe in Venice to their Nuptials : she carrieth in her left hand a looking-glasse, and in her right hand an arrow, and singeth through the Citie as she passeth, and saith, that she goeth to sleepe with her deere spouse and husband. Shee is accompanied with her kindred and friends vntill it be one or two of the clocke in the afternoone, then they goe out of the Citie, and going along the Riuer side called Nigondin, which runneth vnder the walls of the Citie, vntill they come vnto a place where they vse to make this burning of Women, being widdowes, there is prepared in this place a great square Caue, with a little pinnacle hard by it, foure or fise steps vp : the foresaid Caue is full of dryed wood. The woman being come thither, accompanied with a great number of people which come to see the thing, then they make ready a great banquet, and she that shall bee burned eateth with as great ioy and gladnesse, as though it were her Wedding day : and the feast being ended, then they goe to dancing and singing a certaine time, according as she will. After this, the woman of her owne accord, commandeth them to make the fire in the square Caue where the drie wood is, and when it is kindled, they come and certifie her thereof, then presently she leaueth the feast, and taketh the neereft kinsman of her husband by the hand, and they both goe together to the banke of the foresaid Riuer, where she putteth off all her iewels and all her clothes, and giueth them to her parents or kinsfolke, and couering herselfe with a cloth, because shee will not bee seene of the people being naked, she throweth herselfe into the Riuer, saying : O wretches, wash away your sinnes. Comming out of the water, she rowleth herselfe into a yellow cloth of foureene braces long : and againe she taketh her husbands kinsman by the hand, and they goe both together vp to the pinnacle of the square Caue wherein the fire is made. When shee is on the pinnacle, she talketh and reasoneth with the people, recommending vnto them her children and kindred. Before the pinnacle they vse to set a Mat, because they shall not see the fiercenesse of the fire, yet there are many that will haue them plucked away, shewing therein an heart not fearefull, and that they are not affraid of that sight. When this silly woman hath reasoned with the people a good while to her content, there is another woman that taketh a pot with oyle, and sprinkleth it ouer her head, and with the same shee annointeth all her body, and afterwards throweth the pot into the fornace, and both the woman and the pot goe together into the fire, and presently the people that are round about the fornace throw after her into the caue great pieces of wood, so by this meanes, with the fire and with the blowes that shee hath with the wood throwen after her, she is quickly dead, and after this there groweth such sorrow and such lamentation among the people, that all their mirth is turned into howling and weeping, in such wise, that a man could scarce beare the hearing of it. I haue seene many burnt in this manner, because my house was neere to the gate where they goe out to the place of burning : and when there dyeth any Great man, his Wife with all his Slaues with whom hee hath had carnall copulation, burne themselues together with him. Also in this Kingdome I haue seene amongst the base sort of people this vse and order, that the man being dead, hee is carried to the place where they will make his sepulcher, and setting him as it were vpright, then commeth his wife before him on her knees, casting her armes about his necke, with imbracing and clasping him, vntill such time as the Masons haue made a wall round about them, and when the wall is as high as their neckes, there commeth a man behind the woman and strangleth her : then when shee is dead, the workmen finish the wall ouer their heads, and so they lie buried both together.

In the yeere of our Lord God 1567. for the ill successe that the people of Bezeneger had, in that their Citie was sacked by the foure Kings, the King with his Court went to dwell in a Castle eight dayes iourney vp in the land from Bezeneger, called Penegonde. Also sixe dayes iourney from Bezeneger, is the place where they get Diamants : I was not there, but it was told me that it is a great place, compassed with a wall, and that they sell the earth within the wall, for so much a squadron, and the limits are set how deepe or how low they shall digge. Those Diamants that are of a certaine size and bigger then that size are all for the King, it is many yeeres agoe, since they got any there, for the troubles that haue beene in that Kingdome. The first cause of this trouble was, because the sonne of this Temeragio had put to death the lawfull King which hee had in Prison, for which cause the Barons and Noblemen in that Kingdome would not acknowledge him to be their King, and by this meanes there are many Kings, and great diuision in that Kingdome, and the Citie of Bezeneger is not altogether destroyed, yet the houses stand still, but emptie, and there is dwelling in them nothing, as is reported, but Tygres and other wild beasts. The circuit of this Citie is foure and twentie miles about, and within the walls are certaine Mountainer. The houses stand walled with earth, and plaine, all sauing the three Palaces of the three tyrane Brethren, and the Pagades which are Idoll houses: these are made with Lime and fine Maible. I haue seene many Kings Courts, and yet haue I seene none in greatnesse like to this of Bezeneger, I say, for the order of his Palace, for it hath nine Gates or Ports. First when you go into the place where the King did lodge, there are five great ports or gates: these are kept with Captaines and Souldiers: then within these there are foure lesser gates, which are kept with Porters. Without the first Gate there is a little porch, where there is a Captaine with five and twentie Souldiers, that keepeth watch & ward night and day: and within that another with the like guard, where thorow they come to a very faire Court, and at the end of that Court there is another porch as the first, with the like guard, and within that another Court. And in this wise are the first five Gates guarded and kept with those Captaines: and then the lesser Gates within are kept with a guard of Porters: which gates stand open the greatest part of the night, because the custome of the Gentiles is to doe their businesse, and make their feasts in the night, rather then by day. The Cittie is very safe from Theeues, for the Portugall Merchants sleepe in the streets, or vnder Porches, for the great heat which is there, and yet they neuer had any harme in the night. At the end of two moneths, I determined to go for Goa in the company of two other Portugall Merchants, which were making ready to depart, with two Palanchines or little Litters, which are very commodious for the way, with eight Falchines which are men hired to carry the Palanchines, eight for a palanchine, foure at a time: they carry them as we vse to carry Barrowes. And I bought me two Bullocks, one of them to ride on, and the other to carry my victuals and prouision, for in that Countrey men ride on bullocks with pannels, as wee terme them, girths and bridles, and they haue a very good commodious pace. From Bezeneger to Goa in Summer it is eight daies iourney, but we went in the midst of Winter, in the month of Iuly, and were fiftene dayes comming to Ancola on the Sea coast, so in eight dayes I had lost my two Bullocks: for he that carried my victuals was weake and could not goe, the other, when I came vnto a Riuer where was a little bridge to passe ouer, I put my Bullocke to swimming, and in the midst of the Riuer there was a little Island, vnto the which my bullocke went, and finding pasture, there hee remained still, and in no wise we could come to him: and so perforce, I was forced to leaue him, and at that time there was much raine, and I was forced to goe seven dayes a foot with great paines: and by great chance I met with Falchines by the way, whom I hired to carry my clothes and victuals. We had great trouble in our iourney, for that euery day we were taken Prisoners, by reason of the great dissention in that Kingdome: and euery morning at our departure we must pay reseat foure or five Pagies a man. And another trouble wee had as bad as this, that when as we came into a new Gouernours Country, as euery day we did, although they were all tributarie to the King of Bezeneger, yet euery one of them stamped a seuerall coyne of Copper, so that the money that wee tooke this day would not serue the next: at length, by the helpe of God, we came safe to Ancola, which is a Countrey of the Queen of Gargopam, tributarie to the King of Bezeneger. The Merchandize that went euery yeere from Goa to Bezeneger were Arabian Horses, Veluets, Damasques, and Sattens, Armes fine of Portugall, and pieces of China, Saffron and Bearters: and from Bezeneger they had in Turkie for their commodities, Jewels, and Pagodies which be Ducats of gold: the apparell that they vse in Bezeneger is Veluet, Satten, Damaske, Scarlet, or white Bumbast cloth, according to the estate of the person, with long Hats on their heads, called Colae, made of Veluet, Satten, Damaske, or Scarlet, girding themselves in stead of girdles with some fine white Bumbast cloth: they haue breeches after the order of the Turkes: they weare on their feet plaine high things called of them Aspergh, and at their eares they haue hanging great plentie of Gold.

Returning to my voyage, when we were together in Ancola, one of my companions that had nothing to lole, tooke a guide, and went to Goa, whither they goe in foure dayes, the other Portugall not being disposed to goe, carried in Ancola for that Winter. The Winter in those parts of the Indies beginneth the fifteenth of May, and lasteth vnto the end of October: and as we were in Ancola, there came another Merchant of Horses in a Palanchine, and two Portugall Souldiers which came from Zellan, and two carriers of Letters, which were Christians borne in the Indies: all these consoorted to goe to Goa together, and I determined to go with them, and caused a palanchine to be made for me very poorly of Canes; and in one of them Canes I hid priuily all the Jewels I had, and according to the order, I tooke eight Falchines to carie me: and one day about eleuen of the clocke we set forwards on our iourney, and about two of the clocke in the afternoone, as we passed a Mountaine, which diuideth the territorie of Ancola and Dialcan, I being a little behind my company, was assaulted by eight theeues, foure of them had swords and targets, and the other foure had bowes and arrowes. When the Falchines that carried me understood the cause of the assault, they let the Palanchine and me fall to the ground, and ranne away and left me alone, with my clothes wrapped about me: presently the theeues were on my necke and rifling me, they stripped me starke naked, and I fained my selfe sicke, because I would not leaue the Palanchine, and I had made me a little bed of my clothes: the theeues sought it very narrowly and subtilly, and found two Purses that I had, well bound vp together, wherein I had put my Copper money which I had changed for foure Pagodies in Ancola. The theeues thinking it had beene so many Ducats of gold, searched no further: then they threw all my clothes in a bush, and hied them away, and as God would haue it, at there departure there fell from them an hankercher, and when I saw it, I rose from my pallanchine or couch, and tooke it vp, and wrapped it together within my pallanchine. Then these my Falchines were of so good condition, that they returned to seeke me, whereas I thought I should not haue found so much goodnesse in them: because they were payed their money aforehand, as is the vse, I had thought to haue seene them no more. Before there comming I was determined to plucke the Cane wherein my Jewels were hidden, out of my couch, and to haue made me a walking staffe to carry in my 10 hand to Goa, thinking that I should haue gone thither on foot, but by the faithfulness of my Fal-chines, I was rid of that trouble, and so in foure dayes they carried me to Goa, in which time I made hard fare, for the theeues left me neither money, gold, nor siluer, and that which I did eate was giuen me of my men for Gods sake: and after at my comming to Goa I payed them for eue-ry thing royally that I had of them. From Goa I departed for Cochin, which is a voyage of three hundred miles, and betweene these two Cities are many holds of the Portugals, as Onor, Mangalar, Barzelor, and Cananor. The Hold or Fort that you shall haue from Goa and Cochin that belongeth to the Portugals, is called Onor, which is in the Kingdom of the Queen of Bartocella, which is tributarie to the King of Bezeneger: there is no trade there, but onely a charge with the Captaine and companie hee keepeth there. And passing this place, you shall come to ano-20 ther small Castle of the Portugals called Mangalar, and there is very small trade but onely for a little Rice: and from thence you goe to a little Fort called Barzelor, there they haue good store of Rice which is carried to Goa: and from thence you shall goe to a Citty called Cananor, which is a Harquebush shot distant from the chiefest Citty that the King of Cananor hath in his Kingdome being a King of the Gentiles: and hee and his are very naughtie and malicious people, alwayes hauing delight to bee in warres with the Portugals, and when they are in peace, it is for their interest to let their Merchandise passe: there goeth out of this Kingdom of Cananor, all the Cardamomum, great store of Pepper, Ginger, Honie, ships laden with great Nuts, great quantitie of Archa, which is a fruit of the bignesse of Nutmegs, which fruit they eate in all those parts of the Indies, and beyond the Indies, with the leafe of an Herbe which they call Bettell, the which is 30 like vnto our Iule leafe, but a little lesser and thinner: they eate it made in plaisters with the lime made of Oistershells, and throw the Indies they spend great quantitie of money in this composition, and it is vsed daily, which thing I would not haue beleued, if I had not seene it. The customers get great profit by these Herbes, for that they haue custome for them. When this people eate and chawe this in their mouthes, it maketh their spittle to be red like vnto blood, and they say, that it maketh a man to haue a very good stomacke and a very sweet breath, but sure

in my iudgement they eate it rather to fulfill their filthy lusts, and of a knauerie, for this Herbe is moist and hore, and maketh a verie strong expulsion. From Cananor you goe to Cranganor, which is another small Fort of the Portugals in the land of the King of Cranganor, which is ano-
40 ther King of the Gentiles, and a Countrey of small importance, and of an hundred and twentie miles, full of Theeues, being vnder the King of Calicut, a King also of the Gentiles, and a great e-nemie to the Portugals, which when he is alwaies in warres, he and his Countrey is the nest and resting for stranger Theeues, and those be called Moores of Carposa, because they weare on their heads long red Hats, and these Theeues part the spoiles that they take on the Sea with the King of Calicut, for he giueth leaue vnto all that will goe a roving, liberally to goe, in such wise, that all along that Coast there is such a number of Theeues, that there is no sailing in those Seas but with great ships and very well armed, or else they must goe in companie with the armie of the Portugals. From Cranganor to Cochin is fiftene miles.

Cochin is next vnto Goa, the chiefest place that the Portugals haue in the Indies, and there 50 is great trade of Spices, Drugges, and all other sorts of Merchandize for the Kingdome of Portugall, and there within the land is the Kingdome of Pepper, which Pepper the Portugals lade in their shippes by bulke, and not in Sackes: the Pepper that goeth for Portu-gall is not so good as that which goeth for Mecca, because that in times past the Officers of the King of Portugall made a contract with the King of Cochin, in the name of the King of Portu-gall, for the prices of Pepper, and by reason of that agreement between them at that time made, the price can neither rise nor fall, which is a verie low and base price, and for this cause the Melaines bring it to the Portugals, greene and full of filth. Cochin is two Cities, one of the Portu-gals, and another of the King of Cochin: that of the Portugals is situate neerest vnto the Sea, and that of the King of Cochin, is a mile and a halfe vp higher in the land, but they are 60 both set on the bankes of one Riuer which is verie great and of a good depth of water, which Riuer commeth out of the Mountaines of the King of the Pepper, which is a King of the Gentiles, in whose Kingdome are many Christians of Saint Thomas order: the King of Cochin is also a King of the Gentiles, and a great faithfull friend to the King of Portugall, and to those Portugals which are married, and are Citizens in the Citty of Cochin of the Portugals. And by this name of Portugals throughout all the Indies, they call all the Christians that come out of the West, whether they bee Italians, Frenchmen, or Almaines, and all they that marrie in Cochin doe get an Office according to the Trade he is of: this they haue by the great priuiledges which the Citizens haue of that Citie, because there are two principall commodities that they deale withall in that place, which are these. The great store of Silke that commeth from China, and the great store of Sugar which commeth from Bengala: the married Citizens pay not any custome for these two commodities: for all other commodities they pay foure per cento custome to the King of Cochin, rating their goods at their owne pleasure. Those which are not married and Strangers, pay in Cochin to the King of Portugall eight per cento of all manner of Merchandise.

Amochi and Nairi.

This King of Cochin is of a small power in respect of the other Kings of the Indies, for he can make but seuentie thousand men of Armes in his Campe: he hath a great number of Gentlemen which he calleth Amochi, and some are called Nairi: these two sorts of men esteeme not their liues any thing, so that it may bee for the honour of their King, they will thrust themselves forward in euery danger, although they know they shall die. These men goe naked from the girdle vpwards, with a cloth rolled about their thighes, going bare-footed, and hauing their haire very long and rolled vp together on the top of their heads, and alwayes they carrie their Bucklers or Targets with them and their Swords naked, these Nairi haue their wiues common amongst themselves, and when any of them goe into the house of any of these women, hee leaueeth his Sword and Target at the doore, and the time that he is there, there dare not any bee so hardie as to come into that house. The Kings children shall not inherite the Kingdome after their Father, because they hold this opinion, that perchance they were not begotten of the King their Father, but of some other man, therefore they accept for their King, one of the sonnes of the Kings sisters, or of some other woman of the blood Royall, for that they bee sure they are of the blood Royall.

Huge huge
Eares.

The Nairi and their Wiues vse for a brauerie to make great holes in their Eares, and so big and wide, that it is incredible, holding this opinion, that the greater the holes bee, the more Noble they esteeme themselves. I had leaue of one of them to measure the circumference of one of them with a threed, and within that circumference I put my arme vp to the shoulder, clothed as it was, so that in effect they are monstrous great. Thus they doe make them when they be little, for then they open the eare, and hang a piece of gold or lead thereat, and within the opening, in the hole they put a certaine leafe that they haue for that purpose, which maketh the hole so great.

Note the departing of the Coulam.

The ships euery yeere depart from Cochin to goe for Portugall, on the fifth day of December, or the fifth day of Ianuary. Now to follow my voyage for the Indies: From Cochin I went to Coulam, distant from Cochin seuentie and two miles, which Coulam is a small Fort of the King of Portugals, situate in the Kingdome of Coulam, which is a King of the Gentiles, and of small trade: at that place they lade onely halfe a ship of Pepper, and then she goeth to Cochin to take in the rest, and from thence to Cape Comori is seuentie and two miles, and there endeth the coast of the Indies: and alongst this Coast, neere to the water side, and also to Cape Comori, downe to the low land of Chilao, which is about two hundred miles, the people there are as it were all turned to the Christian Faith: there are also Churches of the Friers of Saint Pauls order, which Friers doe very much good in those places in turning the people, and in conuerting them, and take great paines in instructing them in the law of Christ.

Christians.

The order how they fish for Pearles.

The Sea that lyeth betweene the Coast which descendeth from Cape Comori, to the low land of Chilao, and the Iland Zeilan, they call The fishing of Pearles, which fishing they make euery yeere, beginning in March or Aprill, and it lasteth fiftie dayes, but they doe not fish euery yeere in one place, but one yeere in one place, and another yeere in another place of the same Sea. When the time of this fishing draweth neere, then they send very good Diuers, that goe to discouer where the greatest heapes of Oysters bee vnder water, and right against that place where greatest store of Oysters be, there they make or plant a Village with houses and a Bazaro, all of stone, which standeth as long as the fishing time lasteth, and it is furnished with all things necessarie, and now and then it is neere vnto places that are inhabited, and other times farre off, according to the place where they fish. The Fishermen are all Christians of the Countrey, and who so will may goe to fishing, paying a certaine dutie to the King of Portugall, and to the Churches of the Friers of Saint Paul, which are in that Coast. All the while that they are fishing, there are three or foure Fusts armed to defend the Fishermen from Routers. It was my chance to bee there one time in my passage, and I saw the order that they vsed in fishing, which is this. There are three or foure Barks that make consort together, which are like to our little Pilot boates, an a little lesse, there goe seven or eight men in a Boat: and I haue seene in a morning a great number of them goe out, and anker in fiftene or eightene fathom of water, which is the ordinarie depth of all that Coast. When they are at anker, they cast a rope into the Sea, and at the end of the rope, they make fast a great stone, and then there is ready a man that hath his nose and his eares well stopped, and annointed with Oyle, and a basket about dies, by reason

ledge of that

about his necke, or vnder his left arme, then hee goeth downe by the rope to the bottome of the Sea, and as fast as he can he filleth the basket, and when it is full, hee shaketh the rope, and his fellowes that are in the Barke hale him vp with the Basket: and in such wise they goe one by one vntill they haue laden their Barke with Oysters, and at euening they come to the Village, and then euery companie maketh their mount or heape of Oysters one distant from another, in such wise that you shall see a great long row of mounts or heapes of Oysters, and they are not touched vntill such time as the fishing be ended, and at the end of the fishing euery companie sitteth round about their mount or heape of Oysters, and fall to opening of them, which they may easily doe because they be dead, drie and brittle: and if euery oyster had pearles in them, it would bee a very good purchase, but there are very many that haue no pearles in them: when the fishing is ended, then they see whether it bee a good gathering or a bad: there are certaine expert in the Pearles, whom they call Chitini, which set and make the price of Pearles according to their caracks, beautie, and goodnesse, making foure sorts of them. The first sort be the round Pearles, and they be called Aia of Portugall, because the Portugals doe buy them. The second sort which are not round, are called Aia of Bengala. The third sort which are not so good as the second, they call Aia of Canara, that is to say, The Kingdome of Bezeneger. The fourth and last sort, which are the least and worst sort, are called Aia of Cambaia. Thus the price being set, there are Merchants of euery Countrey which are readie with their money in their hands, so that in few dayes all is bought vp at the prises set according to the goodnesse and caracks of the Pearles.

In this Sea of the fishing of Pearles, is an Iland called Manar, which is inhabited by Christians of the Countrey which first were Gentiles, and haue a small hold of the Portugals being situate ouer against Zeilan: and betweene these two Ilands there is a Channell, but not very bigge, and hath but a small depth therein: by reason whereof there cannot any great Ship passe that way, but small Ships, and with the increase of the water which is at the change, or the full of the Moone, and yet for all this they must vnlade them and put their goods into small vessels to lighten them before they can passe that way for feare of Sholdes that lie in the Channell, and after lade them into their ships to goe for the Indies, and this doe all small ships that passe that way, but those ships that goe for the Indies Eastwards, passe by the Coast of Coromandel, on the other side by the land of Chilao, which is betweene the firme land and the Iland Manar: From Cape Comori to the Iland Zeilan is one hundred and twentie miles ouerthwart.

Zeilan is an Iland, in my iudgement, a great deale bigger then Cyprus: on that side towards the Indies lying Westward is the Citie called Columbo, which is a hold of the Portugals, but without walls or enemies. It hath towards the Sea a free Port, the lawfull King of that Iland is in Columbo, and is turned Christian and maintained by the King of Portugall, being depriued of his Kingdome. The King of the Gentiles, to whom this Kingdome did belong, was called Madoni, which had two sonnes, the first named Barbinas the Prince; and the second Ragine. This King by the policie of his younger Sonne, was depriued of his Kingdome, who because hee had entised and done that which pleased the Armie and Souldiers, in despight of his Father and Brother being Prince, vsurped the Kingdome, and became a great Warriour. First, this Iland had three Kings; the King of Cotta with his conquered Prisoners; the King of Candia, which is a part of that Iland, and is so called by the name of Candia, which had a reasonable power, and was a great friend to the Portugals, which said that hee liued secretly a Christian; the third was the King of Gianisampatan. In thirteene yeeres that this Ragine gouerned this Iland, he became a great Tyrant.

In this Iland there groweth fine Sinamom, great store of Pepper, great store of Nuts and A-rochoe: there they make great store of Cairo to make Cordage: it bringeth forth great store of Christall Cats eyes, or Ochi de Gati, and they say that they finde there some Rubies, but I haue sold Rubies well there that I brought with me from Pegu. I was desirous to see how they gather the Sinamom, or take it from the tree that it groweth on, and so much the rather, because the time that I was there, was the season which they gather it in, which was in the moneth of Aprill, at which time the Portugals were in Armes, and in the field, with the King of the Countrey; yet I to satisfie my desire, although in great danger, tooke a guide with me and went into a Wood three miles from the Citie, in which wood was great store of Sinamom trees growing together among other wild trees; and this Sinamom tree is a small tree, and not very high, and hath leaues like to our Bay-tree. In the moneth of March or Aprill, when the sappe goeth vp to the top of the Tree, then they take the Sinamom from that tree in this wise. They cut the barke off the tree round about in length from knot to knot, or from ioynt to ioynt, aboue and below, and then easily with their hands they take it away, laying it in in the Sunne to drie, and in this wise it is gathered, and yet for all this the Tree dyeth not, but against the next yeere it will haue a new barke, and that which is gathered euery yeere is the best Sinamom: for that which groweth two or three yeeres is great, and not so good as the other is; and in these woods groweth much Pepper.

These Pearles are prised according to the Caracks which they weigh, euery carack is 4. Graines, and these men that prise them haue an Instrument of Copper with holes in it, which be made by degrees for to sort the Pearles withall.

A rare thing.

Negapatan.

From the Iland of Zeilan men vse to goe with small ships to Negapatan, within the firme land, and seuentie two miles off is a very great Citie, and very populous of Portugals and Christians of the Countrey, and part Gentiles: it is a Countrey of small trade.

Saint Thomas
or San Tome.
S. Thomas his Sepulcher.

From Negapatan following my voyage towards the East an hundred and fiftie miles, I found the House of blessed Saint Thomas, which is a Church of great deuotion, and greatly regarded of the Gentiles, for the great Miracles they haue heard to haue beene done by that blessed Apostle: neere vnto this Church the Portugals haue builded them a Citie in the Countrey subiect to the King of Bexeneger, which Citie although it bee not very great, yet in my iudgement it is the fairest in all that part of the Indies. It is a maruellous thing to them which haue not seene the lading and unlading of men and merchandize in Saint Tome as they doe: it is a place so dangerous, that a man cannot bee serued with small Barkes, neither can they doe their businesse with the Boates of the ships, because they would be beaten in a thousand pieces, but they make certaine Barkes (of purpose) high, which they call Masades, they be made of little boards; one board being sowed to another with small cordes, and in this order are they made. And when they are thus made, and the owners will embarke any thing in them, either men or goods, they lade them on land, and when they are laden, the Barke-men thrust the Boate with her lading into the streame, and with great speed they make hast all that they are able to row out against the huge waues of the Sea that are on that shore, vntill that they carrie them to the ships: and in like manner they lade these Masadies at the ships with merchandise and men. When they come neere the shore, the Bark-men leape out of the Barke into the Sea to keepe the Barke right that shce cast not thwart the shore, and being kept right, the Suffe of the Sea setteth her lading drie on land without any hurt or danger, and sometimes there are some of them that are ouerthrowen, but there can bee no great losse, because they lade but a little at a time. All the Merchandize they lade outwards, they emball it well with Oxe hides, so that if it take wet, it can haue no great harme.

In the Iland of Banda they
lade Nutmegs, for there they grow.

In my voyage, returning in the yeere of our Lord 1566. I went from Goa vnto Malacca, in a ship or Gallion of the King of Portugall, which went vnto Banda for to lade Nutmegs and Maces: from Goa to Malacca are one thousand eight hundred miles, wee passed without the Iland Zeilan, and went through the Channell of Nicubar, or else through the channell of Sombrero, which is by the middle of the Iland of Sumatra, called in old time Taprobana: and from Nicubar to Pegu, is as it were a rowe or chaine of an infinite number of Ilands, of which many are inhabited with wild people, and they call those Ilands the Ilands of Andemaon, and they call their people Sauage or wilde, because they eat one another: also these Ilands haue warre one with another, for they haue small Barkes, and with them they take one another, and so eat one another: and if by euill chance any Ship bee lost on those Ilands, as many haue beene, there is not one man of those ships lost there that escapeth vneaten or vnslaine. These people haue not any acquaintance with any other people, neither haue they trade with any, but liue onely of such Fruites as those Ilands yeeld: and if any Ship come neere vnto that place or Coast as they passe that way, as in my voyage it hapned as I came from Malacca through the channell of Sombrero, there came two of their Barkes neere vnto our Ship laden with Fruit, as with Monces which we call Adams Apples, with fresh Nuts, and with a fruit called Inani, which fruit is like to our Turneps, but is very sweet and good to eat: they would not come into the ship for any thing that wee could doe: neither would they take any money for their Fruit: but they would trucke for olde Shirts or pieces of old Linnen breeches: These ragges they let downe with a rope into their Barke vnto them, and looke what they thought those things to bee worth, so much fruit they would make fast to the rope and let vs hale it in: and it was told me that at sometimes a man shall haue for an old Shirt a good piece of Amber.

Sion or Siam.

Sion was the Imperiall seat, and a great Citie, but in the yeere of our Lord God 1567. it was staken by the King of Pegu, which King made a voyage or came by land foure moneths iourney with an Armie of men through his land, and the number of his Armie was a million and foure hundred thousand men of Warre: when he came to the Citie, hee gaue assault to it, and besieged it one and twentie moneths before he could winne it, with great losse of his people, this I know, for that I was in Pegu fixe moneths after his departure, and saw when that his Officers that were in Pegu, sent fixe hundred thousand men of warre to furnish the places of them that were slaine and lost in that assault: yet for all this, if there had not beene Treason against the Citie, it had not beene lost: for on a night there was one of the Gates set open, through the which with great trouble the King gate into the Citie, and became Gouvernour of Sion: and when the Emperour saw that hee was betrayed, and that his Enemie was in the Citie, he poisoned himselfe: and his Wiues and Children, Friends and Noblemen, that were not slaine in the first affront of the entrance into the Citie, were all carried Captiues into Pegu, where I was at the comming home of the King with his tryumphs and victorie, which comming home and returning from the warres was a goodly sight to behold, to see the Elephants come home in a square, square, laden with Gold; Siluer, Jewels, and with Noble men and women that were taken Prisoners in that Citie.

Now to returne to my Voyage: I departed from Malacca in a great Ship which went for Saint Tome, being a Citie situate on the Coast of Ceromandell: and because the Captaine of the Castles of Malacca had vnderstanding by aduise that the King of Assi would come with a great Armie and power of men against them, therefore vpon this hee would not giue licence that any Ships should depart: Wherefore in this Ship we departed from thence in the night, without making any prouision of our water: and we were in that Ship foure hundred and odde men: wee departed from thence with intention to goe to an Iland to take in water, but the winds were so contrarie that they would not suffer vs to fetch it, so that by this meanes wee were two and fortie dayes in the Sea as it were lost, and we were driuen too and fro, so that that the first Land that wee Discouered, was beyond Saint Tome, more then fve hundred miles which were the Mountaines of Zerzeline, neere vnto the Kingdome of Orisa, and so we came to Orisa with many Sicke, and more that were dead for want of water: and they that were Sicke in foure dayes died: and I for the space of a yeere after had my Throate so sore and hoarse, that I could neuer satisfie my thirst in drinking of water: I iudge the reason of my hoarsenesse to be with Sops that I wet in Vineger and Oyle, wherewith I sustained my selfe many dayes. There was not any want of Bread nor of Wine: but the Wines of that Countrie are so hot that being drunke without Water they will kill a man: neither are they able to drinke them: when we began to want water, I saw certaine *Moore*s that were officers in the ship, that solde a small dish full for a Duckat, after this I saw one that would haue giuen a barre of Pepper, which is two quintals and a halfe, for a little measure of water, and he could not haue it. Truly I belceue that I had died with my slaue, whom then I had to serue mee, which cost me very deare: but to prouide for the danger at hand, I solde my Slaue for halfe that he was worth, because that I would saue his drinke that he drunke, to serue my owne purpose, and to saue my life.

Orisa was a faire Kingdome and trusty, through the which a man might haue gone with gold in his hand without any danger at all, as long as the lawfull King reigned which was a Gentile, who continued in the Citie called Catecha, which was within the Land sixe dayes iourney. This King loued strangers marueilous well, especially merchants which had trafficke in and out of his Kingdome, in such wise that hee would take no Custome of them, neither any other grieuous thing. Onely the Ship that came thither payde a small thing according to her portage, and euery yeere in the Port of Orisa were laden fve and twentie or thirtie Ships great and small, with Rice and diuers sorts of fine white bumbast cloth, oyle of Zerzeline which they make of a seede, and it is very good to eate and to frye fish withall, great store of Butter, Lacca, long Pepper, Ginger, Mirabolans drie and condite, great store of cloth of Herbes, which is a kind of like which groweth amongst the woods without any labour of man, and when the bole thereof is growne round as bigge as an Orenge, then they take care onely to gather them. About sixteene yeeres past, this King with his Kingdome were destroyed by the King of Patane, which was also King of the greatest part of Bengala, and when he had got the Kingdome, he set custome there twentie pro cento, as Merchants paide in his Kingdome: but this Tyrant enioyed his Kingdome but a small time, but was conquered by another Tyrant, which was the great Mogol King of Agra, Delly, and of all Cambaja, without any resistance. I departed from Orisa to Bengala, to the harbour Piqueno, which is distant from Orisa towards the East an hundred and seuentie miles. They goe as it were rowing alongst the coast fiftie and foure miles, and then we enter into the riuer Ganges: from the mouth of this Riuer, to a City called Satagan, where the Merchants gather themselves together with their trade, are an hundred miles, which they rowe in eightene houres with the increase of the water: in which riuer it floweth and ebbeth as it doth in the Thames, and when the ebbing water is come, they are not able to rowe against it, by reason of the swiftnesse of the water, yet their barks be light and armed with Oares, like to Foisties, yet the cannot preuaile against that Streame, but for refuge must make them fast to the banke of the Riuer vntill the next flowing water, and they call these Barks Bazaras and Patnas: they rowe as well as a Galliot, or as well as euer I haue seene any. A good Tides rowing before you come to Satagan, you shall haue a place which is called Buttor, and from thence vpwards the Sips doe not goe, because that vpwards the Riuer is very Shallow, and little water. Euery yeere at Buttor they make and vnmake a Village, with Houses and Shops made of Straw, and with all things necessarie to their vses, and this Village standeth as long as the Ships ride there, and till they depart for the Indies, and when they depart, euerie man goeth to his plot of Houses, and there setteth fire on them, which thing made me to maruaile. For as I passed vp to Satagan, I saw this Village standing with a great number of people, with an infinite number of Ships and Bazars, and at my returne coming downe with my Captaine of the last Ship, for whom I carried, I was all amazed to see such a place so soone razed and burnt, and nothing left but the signe of the burnt Houses. The small Ships goe to Satagan, and there they lade.

Hunger in great extremitie.

IN the Port of Satagan euery yeere they lade thirtie or fure and thirtie ships great and small, with Rice, Cloth of Bombast of diuers sorts, Lacca, great abundance of Sugar, Mirabolans dried and preserved, long Pepper, Oyle of Zerzeline, and many other sorts of merchandise. The Citie of Satagan is a reasonable faire Citie for a Citie of the *Moore*s, abounding with all things, and was gouerned by the King of Patane, and now is subiect to the Great Mogol. I was in this Kingdome foure moneths, whereas many Merchants did buy or fraight boates for their benefits, and with these Barkes they goe vp and downe the Riuer of Ganges to Faires, buying their commodities with a great aduantage, because that euery day in the weeke they haue a Faire, now in one place, and now in another, and I also hired a Barke and went vp and downe the Riuer and did my businesse, and so in the night I saw many strange things. The Kingdome of Bengala in times past hath beene as it were in the power of *Moore*s, neuertheless there is great store of Gentiles among them: alwaies whereas I haue spoken of Gentiles, is to be vnderstood Idolaters, and whereas I speake of *Moore*s I meane *Mahomet*s Sect. Those people especially that be within the Land doe greatly worship the Riuer of Ganges: for when any is sicke, he is brought out of the Countrey to the banke of the Riuer, and there they make him a small Cottage of strawe, and euery day they wet him with that water, whereof there are many that die, and when they are dead, they make a heape of stickes and boughes and lay the dead bodie thereon, and putting fire thereunto, they let the bodie alone vntill it be halfe roasted, and then they take it off from the fire, and make an emptie Jarre fast about his necke, and so throw him into the Riuer. These things euery night as I passed vp and downe the Riuer I saw for the space of two moneths, as I passed to the Fayres to buy my commodities with the Merchants. And this is the cause that the Portugals will not drinke of the water of the Riuer Ganges, yet to the sight it is more perfect and clearer then the water of Nilus is. From the Port Piqueno I went to Cochin, and from Cochin to Malacca, from whence I departed for Pegu being eight hundred miles distant. That voyage is wont to bee made in fure and twentie or thirtie dayes, but we were foure moneths, and at the end of three moneths our ship was without victuals. The Pilot tolde vs that wee were by his Altitude not farre from a Citie called Tanasary, in the Kingdome of Pegu, and these his words were not true, but wee were (as it were) in the middle of many Ilands, and many vninhabited rockes, and there were also some Portugals that affirmed that they knew the Land, and knew also where the Citie of Tanasary was.

This Citie of right belongeth to the Kingdome of Sion, which is situate on a great Riuer side, which commeth out of the Kingdome of Sion: and where this Riuer runneth into the Sea, there is a Village called Mirgim, in whose Harbour euery yeere there lade some ships with Verzina, Nypa, and Benjamin, a few Cloues, Nutmegs and Maces which come from the coast of Sion, but the greatest marchandise there is Verzin and Nypa, which is an excellent Wine, which is made of the floure of a tree called Nyper. Whose liquor they distill, and so make an excellent drink cleare as Christall, good to the mouth, and better to the stomacke, and it hath an excellent gentle vertue, that if one were rotten with the French poxe, drinking good store of this, hee shall bee whole againe, and I haue seene it proued, because that when I was in Cochin, there was a friend of mine, whose nose began to drop away with that disease, and he was counselled of the Doctors of Physick that he should goe to Tanasary at the time of the new Wines, and that hee should drinke of the Nyper wine, night and day, as much as hee could before it was distilled, which at that time is most delicate, but after that it is distilled, it is more strong, and if you drinke much of it, it will fume into the head with drunkennesse. This man went thither, and did so, and I haue seene him after with a good colour and sound. This Wine is very much esteemed in the Indies, and for that it is brought so farre off, it is very deare: in Pegu ordinarily it is good cheape, because it is neerer to the place where they make it, and there is euery yeere great quantitie made thereof. And returning to my purpose, I say, being amongst these rockes, and farre from the Land which is ouer against Tanasary, with great scarcitie of victuals, and that by the saying of the Pilot and two Portugals, holding then firme that wee were in front of the aforesayde harbour, wee determined to goe thither with our boat and fetch victuals, and that the ship should stay for vs in a place assigned. Wee were twentie and eight persons in the boat that went for victuals, and on a day about twelue of the clocke wee went from the ship, assuring our selues to bee in the harbour before night in the aforesaid Port, wee rowed all that day, and a great part of the next night, and all the next day without finding harbour, or any signe of good land, and this came to passe through the euil counsell of the two Portugals that were with vs.

For wee had ouershot the harbour and left it behinde vs, in such wise that wee had lost the land inhabited, together with the ship, and wee eight and twentie men had no manner of victuall with vs in the boate, but it was the Lords will that one of the Mariners had brought a little Rice with him in the boat to barter away for some other thing, and it was not so much but that three or foure men would haue eaten it at a meale: I tooke the gouernment of this Rice, promising that by the helpe of God that Rice should be nourishment for vs vntill it pleased God to send vs to some place that was inhabited: and when I slept I put the Rice into my bosome because they should not rob it from me: we were nine dayes rowing alongst the coast, without finding any thing but Countries vninhabited, and desert Ilands, where if we had found but grasse it would haue seemed

Sugar vnto vs, but we could not finde any; yet we found a few leaues of a tree, and they were so hard that we could not chew them, we had water and wood sufficient, and as we rowed, we could go but by flowing water, for when it was ebbing water we made fast our Boar to the banke of one of those Ilands, and in those Ilands, and in these nine dayes that wee rowed, wee found a Caue or Nest of Tortoise eggs, wherein were 144. eggs, the which was a great helpe vnto vs: these eggs are as big as a Hens egge, and haue no shell about them but a tender skin, euery day we sod a Kettle full of those Eggs, with a handfull of Rice in the broth thereof: it pleased God that at the end of nine dayes we discovered certaine Fisher-men fishing with small Barkes, and we rowed towards them, with a good cheere, for I thinke there were neuer men more glad then we were, for wee were so sore afflicted with penurie, that wee could scarce stand on our legges. Yet according to the order that wee set for our Rice, when wee saw those Fisher-men, there was left sufficient for foure daies. The first Village that wee came to was in the Gulfe of Tauay, vnder the King of Pegu, whereas we found great store of victuals: then for two or three dayes after our arriual there, we would eate but little meate any of vs, and yet for all this, wee were at the point of death the most part of vs. From Tauay to Martauan in the Kingdome of Pegu, are seuentie two miles. We laded our Boat with victuals which were abundantly sufficient for sixe moneths, from whence wee departed for the Port and Citie of Martauan, where in short time we arriued, but we found not our ship there as we had thought we should, from whence presently we made out two barkes to goe to looke for her. And they found her in great calamitie, and need of water, being at an anchor with a contrary winde, which came very ill to passe, because that shee wanted her Boat a moneth, which should haue made her prouision of wood and water, the ship also by the grace of God arriued safely in the foresaid Port of Martauan.

WEe found in the Citie of Martauan ninety Portugals of Merchants and other base men, which had fallen at difference with the Rector or Gouvernour of the Citie, and all for this cause, that certaine vagabonds of the Portugals had slaine five Falchines of the King of Pegu, which chanced about a moneth after the King of Pegu was gone with a million and foure hundred thousand men to conquere the Kingdome of Siam. They haue for custome in this Countrie and Kingdome, the King being wherefoeuer his pleasure is to be out of this Kingdom, that euery fifteene dayes there goeth from Pegu a Carauan of Falchines, with euery one a basket on his head full of some Fruits or other delicacies of refreshings, and with cleane clothes: it chanced that this Carauan passing by Martauan, and resting themselues there a night, there happened betweene the Portugals and them words of despight, and from words to blowes, and because it was thought that the Portugals had the worse, the night following, when the Falchines were a sleepe with their companie, the Portugals went and cut off five of their heads. Now there is a law in Pegu, that whosoever killeth a man, he shall buy the shed blood with his money, according to the estate of the person that is slaine, but these Falchines being the seruants of the King, the Rectors durst not doe any thing in the matter, without the consent of the King, because it was necessary that the King should knowe of such a matter. When the King had knowledge thereof, he gaue commandement that the malefactors should be kept vntill his comming home, and then he would duely minister iustice, but the Captaine of the Portugals would not deliuer those men, but rather set himselfe with all the rest in Armes, and went euery day through the Citie marching with his Drumme and Ensignes displayed. For at that time the Citie was empty of men, by reason they were gone all to the warres and in businesse of the King: in the midst of this rumour wee came thither, and I thought it a strange thing to see the Portugals vse such insolency in another mans Citie.

From Martauan I departed to goe to the chiefest Citie in the Kingdome of Pegu, which is also called after the name of the Kingdome, which Voyage is made by Sea in three or foure dayes; they may goe also by Land, but it is better for him that hath merchandise to goe by Sea, and lesser charge. And in this Voyage you shall haue a Macareo, which is one of the most marvellous things in the world that Nature hath wrought, and I neuer saw any thing so hard to bee beleueed as this, to wit, the great encreasing and diminishing of the water there at one push or instant, and the horrible Earth-quake and great noise that the Macareo maketh where it commeth. Wee departed from Martauan in Barkes, which are like to our Pilot-Boats, with the encrease of the water, and they goe as swift as an Arrowe out of a Bowe, so long as the Tide runneth with them, and when the water is at the highest, then they draw themselues out of the channell towards some banke, and there they come to anchor, and when the water is diminished, then they rest on drie land: and when the Barkes rest drie, they are as high from the bottome of the channell, as as any house top is high from the ground. They let their Barkes lie so high for this respect, that if there should any ship rest or ride in the channell, with such force commeth in the water, that it would ouerthrowe Ship or Barke: yet for all this, that the Barkes be so farre out of the channel, and though the water hath lost her greatest strength and furie before it comes so high, yet they make fast their Prow to the streame, and oftentimes it maketh them very fearefull, and if the anchor did not hold her Prow vp by strength, shee would be ouer throwne and lost with men and goods.

goods. When the water beginneth to encrease, it maketh such a noise, and so great, that you would thinke it an Earthquake, and presently at the first it maketh three waues. So that the first washeth ouer the Barke, from stemme to sterne, the second is not so furious as the first, and the third raiseth the anchor, and then for the space of fixe houres while the water encrease, they rowe with such swiftnesse that you would thinke they did flie: in these tides there must be lost no iot of time, for if you arrive not at the stagions before the Tide bee spent, you must turne backe from whence you came. For there is no staying at any place but at these stagions, and there is more danger at one of these places then at another, as they bee higher and lower one then another. When as you returne from Pegu to Martawan, they goe but halfe the Tide at a time, because they will lay their Barks vp aloft on the bankes, for the reason aforesaid. I could neuer gather any reason of the noise that this water maketh in the encrease of the Tide, and in diminishing of the water. There is another Macareo in Cambaya, but that is nothing in comparison of this.

By the helpe of God we came safe to Pegu, which are two Cities, the old and the new, in the old Citie are the Merchant strangers, and Merchants of the Countie, for there are the greatest doings and the greatest trade. This Citie is not very great, but it hath very great Suburbs. Their houses be made with canes, and couered with leaves, or with straw, but the Merchants haue all one house or Magason, which house they call Godon, which is made of bricke, and there they put all their goods of any value, to saue them from the often mischances that there happen to houses made of such stufte. In the new Citie is the Palace of the King, and his abiding place with all his Barons and Nobles, and other Gentlemen; and in the time that I was there, they finished the building of the new Citie: it is a great Citie, very plaine and flat, and foure square, walled round about, and with Ditches that compasse the Walls about with water, in which Diches are many Crocodiles. It hath no Draw-bridges, yet it hath twenty Gates, five for euery square on the Walls, there are many places made for Centinels to watch, made of Wood and couered or gilt with Gold, the Streets thereof are the fairest that I haue seene, they are as straight as a line from one Gate to another, and standing at the one Gate you may discover to the other, and they are as broad as ten or twelue men may ride a-breast in them: and those Streets that be thwart are faire and large, these Streets, both on the one side and the other, are planted at the doores of the Houses with Nut trees of India, which make a very commodious shadow, the Houses be made of wood, and couered with a kind of tiles in forme of Cups, very necessary for their vse: the Kings Palace is in the middle of the Citie, made in forme of a walled Castle, with ditches full of water round about it, the Lodgings within are made of wood all ouer gilded, with fine pinacles, and very costly worke, couered with plates of gold. Truly it may be a Kings house: within the gate there is a faire large Court, from the one side to the other, wherein there are made places for the strongest and stoutest Elephants, hee hath foure that be white, a thing so rare, that a man shall hardly finde another King that hath any such, as if this King knowe any other that hath white Elephants, he sendeth for them as for a gift. The time that I was there, there were two brought out of a farre Countie, and that cost me something the sight of them, for that they command the Merchants to goe to see them, and then they must give somewhat to the men that bring them: the Brokers of the Merchants giue for euery man halfe a Duckert, which they call a Tansa, which amounteth to a great summe, for the number of Merchants that are in that Citie; and when they haue payd the aforesaid Tansa, they may chuse whether they will see them at that time or no, because that when they are in the Kings stall, euery man may see them that will: but at that time they must goe and see them, for it is the kings pleasure it should be so.

This King amongst all other his Titles, is called The King of the white Elephants, and it is reported, that if this King knew any other King that had any of these white Elephants, and would not send them vnto him, that he would hazard his whole Kingdome to conquire them. He esteemeth these white Elephants very deere, and they are had in great regard, and kept with very meet seruice, euery one of them is in a house, all gilded ouer, and they haue their meate giuen them in vessels of gluer and gold. There is one blacke Elephant, the greatest that hath beene seene, and he is kept according to his bignesse; he is nine cubits high, which is a marvellous thing. It is reported that this King hath foure thousand Elephants of warre, and all haue their teeth, and they vse to put on their two vppermost teeth sharpe pikes of Iron, and make them fast with rings, because these beasts fight and make battell with their teeth; hee hath also very many young Elephants that haue not their teeth sprouted forth: also this King hath a braue deuise in hunting to take these Elephants when he will, two miles from the Citie. He hath builded a faire Palace all gilded, and within it a faire Court, and within it and round about there are made an infinite number of places for men to stand to see this hunting: neere vnto this Palace is a mighty great Wood, through the which the Hunt-men of the King ride continually on the backes of the female Elephants, teaching them in this business. Euery Hunter carrieth out with him five or fixe of these females, and they lay that they anoint the secret place with a certaine composition that they haue, that when the wilde Elephant doeth

smell: hereunto, they follow the females and cannot leaue them: when the Hunters haue made prouision, and the Elephant is so entangled, they guide the females towards the Palace which is called Tambell, and this Palace hath a doore which doth open and shut with engines, before which doore there is a long straight way with trees on both the sides, which couereth the way in such wise, as it is like darkenesse in a corner: the wilde Elephant when he cometh to this way thinketh that hee is in the Woods. At the end of this darke way there is a great field: when the Hunters haue gotten this prey, when they first come to this field, they send presently to giue knowledge thereof to the Citie, and with all speed there goe out fifty or sixty men on horsebacke, and doe beset the field round about: in the great field then the females which are taught in this businesse goe directly to the mouth of the darke way, and when as the wilde Elephant is entred in there, the Hunters shoute and make a great noise, as much as is possible, to make the wilde Elephant enter in at the gate of that Palace, which is then open, and as soone as he is in, the gate is shut without any noise, and so the Hunters with the female Elephants and the wilde one are all in the Court together, and then within a small time the females withdraw themselves away one by one out of the Court, leauing the wilde Elephant alone: and when hee perceiueth that hee is left alone, hee is so mad that for two or three houres to see him, it is the greatest pleasure in the world: he weepeth, he singeth, he runneth, he iustleth, he thrusteth vnder the places where the people stand to see him, thinking to kill some of them, but the posts and timber is so strong and great that he cannot hurt any body, yet he oftentimes breaketh his teeth in the grates. At length when he is weary, and hath laboured his body that he is all wet with sweat, then he plucketh in his trunk into his mouth, and then he throweth out so much water out of his belly, that he sprinkleth it ouer the heads of the lookers on, to the vttermost of them, although it be very high: and then when they see him very weary, there goe certaine Officers into the Court with long sharpe canes in their hands, and pricke him that they make him to goe into one of the houses that are made alongst the Court for the same purpose: as there are many which are made long and narrow, that when the Elephant is in, hee cannot turne himselfe to goe backe againe. And it is requisite that these men should bee very wary and swift, for although their canes be long, yet the Elephant would kill them if they were not swift to saue themselves: at length when they haue gotten him into one of those houses, they stand ouer him in a loft, and get ropes vnder his belly and about his neck, & about his legs, and bind him fast, and so let him stand foure or fve dayes, and giue him neither meate nor drinke. At the end of these foure or fve dayes, they vnloose him, and put one of the females vnto him, and giue them meate and drink, and in eight dayes he is become tame. In my iudgement there is not a beast so intellectuall as are these Elephants, nor of more vnderstanding in all the world: for he will doe all things that his keeper sayth, so that he lacketh nothing but humane speech.

It is reported that the greatest strength that the King of Pegu hath, is in these Elephants, for when they goe to battell, they set on their backes a Castle of wood bound thereto, with bands vnder their bellies: and in euery Castle foure men very commodiously set to fight with Harquebusses, with Bowes and Arrowes, with Darts and Pikes, and other lancing weapons: and they say that the skinne of this Elephant is so hard, that an Harquebuss will not pierce it, vnlesse it be in the eye, temples, or some other tender place of his body. And besides this, they are of great strength, and haue a very excellent order in their battell, as I haue scene at their Feasts which they make in the yeere, in which Feasts the King makes Triumphs, which is a rare thing and worthie memorie, that in so barbarous a People there should bee such goodly orders as they haue in their Armies, which be distinct in squares of Elephants, of Horsemen, of Harquebusses and Pikemen, that truly the number of them are infinite: but their armour and weapons are very naught and weake, as well the one as the other: they haue very bad Pikes, their Swords are worse made, like long Knives without points, his Harquebusses are most excellent, and alwaies in his warres he hath eighty thousand Harquebusses, and the number of them encreaseth daily. Because the King will haue them shoot euery day at the Planke, and so by continuall exercise they become most excellent shot: also he hath great Ordnance made of very good metall; to conclude, there is not a King on the Earth that hath more power or strength then this King of Pegu, because hee hath twenty and sixe crowned Kings at his command. Hee can make in his Campe a million and an halfe of men of warre in the field against his Enemies. The state of his Kingdome, and maintenance of his Armie, is a thing incredible to consider, and the victuals that should maintayne such a number of people in the warres: but he that knoweth the nature and qualitie of that people, will easily beleue it. I haue scene with mine eyes, that those people and Souldiers haue eaten of all sorts of wilde beasts that are on the earth, whether it be very filthie or otherwise all serueth for their mouthes: yea, I haue scene them eate Scorpions and Serpents, also they feed of all kinde of herbes and grasse. So that if such a great Armie want not Water and Salt, they will maintayne themselves a long time in a bush with rootes, flowers, and leaues of trees, they carrie Rice with them for their Voyage, and that serueth them in stead of Comfits, it is so dainty vnto them.

minions, Gold and Siluer, he farre exceeds the power of the great Turke in treasure and strength. This King hath diuers Magasons full of treasure, as Gold, and Siluer, and euery day he encreaseth it more and more, and it is neuer diminished. Also hee is Lord of the Mines of Rubies, Saphirs, and Spinels. Neere vnto his Royall Palace there is an inestimable treasure whereof he maketh no account, for that it standeth in such a place that euery one may see it, and the place where this treasure is, is a great Court walled round about with walls of stone, with two gates which stand open euery day. And within this place or Court are foure gilded houses couered with Lead, and in euery one of these are certaine heathenish Idols of a very great valure. in the first house there is a Statue of the image of a Man of gold very great, and on his head a Crowne of gold beset with most rare Rubies and Saphires, and round about him are foure little children of gold. In the second house there is the Statue of a Man of siluer, that is set as it were sitting on heapes of money: whose stature in height, as he sitteth, is so high, that his highnesse exceeds the height of any one rooffe of an house; I measured his feet, and found that they were as long as all my body was in height, with a Crowne on his head like to the first. And in the third house there is a Statue of brasle of the same bignesse, with a like Crowne on his head. In the fourth and last house, there is a Statue of a Man as big as the other, which is made of Gansa, which is the metall they make their money of, and this metall is made of Copper and Lead mingled together. This Statue also hath a Crowne on his head like the first: this treasure being of such a value as it is, standeth in an open place that euery man at his pleasure may goe and see it: for the keepers thereof neuer forbid any man the sight thereof. I say as I haue said before, that this King euery yeere in his feasts triumpheth: and because it is worthie of the noting, I thinke it meet to write thereof, which is as followeth. The King rideth on a triumphant Cart or Wagon all gilded, which is drawne by sixteene goodly Horses: and this Cart is very high with a goodly Canopie ouer it, behind the Cart goe twenty of his Lords and Nobles, with euery one a rope in his hand made fast to the Cart for to hold it vpright that it fall not. The King sitteth in the middle of the Cart; and vpon the same Cart about the King stand foure of his Nobles most fauoured of him, and before this Cart wherein the King is, goeth all his Armie as aforesaid, and in the middle of his Armie goeth all his Nobilitie, round about the Cart, that are in his Dominions, a maruellous thing it is to see so many people, such riches and such good order in a People so barbarous as they be. This King of Pegu hath one principall wife which is kept in a Seralio, hee hath three hundred Concubines, of whom it is reported that he hath ninety children.

This King sitteth euery day in person to heare the suits of his Subiects, but he nor they neuer speake one to another, but by supplications made in this order. The King sitteth vp aloft in a great Hall, on a Tribunall seate, and lower vnder him sit all his Barons round about, then those that demand audience enter into a great Court before the King, and there set them downe on the ground forty paces distant from the Kings person, and amongst those people there is no difference in matters of audience before the King, but all alike, and there they sit with their supplications in their hands, which are made of long leaues of a tree, these leaues are three quarters of a yard long, and two fingers broad, which are written with a sharpe Iron made for the purpose, and in those leaues are their supplications written, and with their supplications, they haue in their hands a present or gift, according to the weightinesse of their matter. Then come the Secretaries downe to reade these supplications, taking them and reading them before the King, and if the King thinke it good to doe to them that fauour or iustice that they demand, then hee commandeth to take the presents out of their hands: but if he thinke their demand be not iust or according to right, he commandeth them away without taking of their gifts or presents.

In the Indies there is not any merchandise that is good to bring to Pegu, vntill it be at some times by chance to bring Opium of Cambai. and if hee bring money hee shall lose by it. Now the commodities that come from Saint Tome are the onely merchandise for that place, which is the great quantitie of Cloth made there, which they vse in Pegu, which Cloth is made of Bombast wouen and painted, so that the more that kinde of Cloth is washed, the more liuely they shew their colours, which is a rare thing, and there is made such account of this kinde of Cloth which is of so great importance, that a small bale of it will cost a thousand or two thousand duc-kets. Also from Saint Tome they lade great store of red yarne, of Bombast died with a root which they call Sasa, as aforesaid, which colour will neuer out. With which merchandise euery yeere there goeth a great ship from S. Tome to Pegu, of great importance, and they vsually depart from Saint Tome to Pegu the eleuenth or twelfth of September, and if shee stay vntill the twelfth, it is a great hap if shee returne not without making of her Voyage. Their vse was to depart the sixt of September, and then they made sure Voyages, and now because there is a great labour about that kinde of Cloth to bring it to perfection, and that it bee well dried, as also the greedinesse of the Captaine that would make an extraordinary gaine of his freight, thinking to haue the winde alwaies to serue their turne, they stay so long, that at sometimes the winde turneth. For in those parts the winds blowe firmly for certaine times, with the which they goe to Pegu with the wind in poope, and if they arriue not there before the winde change, and get ground to anchor, perforce they must returne backe againe: for that the gales of the winde blowe there for three or four moneths together in one place with great force. But if they get the coast and anchor there, then with great labour they may saue their Voyage. Also there goeth another great ship from Bengala euery yeere, laden with fine cloth of Bombast of all sorts, which arriue in the Harbour of Pegu, when the ship that commeth from Saint Tome departeth. The Harbour where these two ships arriue is called Cosmin. From Malaca to Martawan, which is a Port in Pegu, there come many small ships, and great, laden with Pepper, Sandolo, Procellan of China, Camfora, Bruneo, and other merchandise. The ships that come from Mecca enter into the Port of Pegu and Cirion, and those ships bring cloth of Wooll, Scarlets, Veluets, Opium, and Chickinos, by the which they lose, and they bring them because they haue no other thing that is good for Pegu: but they esteem not the losse of them, for that they make such great gaine of their commodities, that they carrie from thence out of that Kingdome. Also the King of Assi his ships come thither into the same Port laden with Pepper, from the coast of Saint Tome of Bengala, out of the Sea of Baya to Pegu are three hundred miles, and they goe it vp the Riuer in foure dayes, with the encreasing water, or with the flood, to a Citie called Cosmin, and there they discharge their ships, whither the Customers of Pegu come to take the note and markes of all the goods of euery man, and take the charge of the goods on them, and conuey them to Pegu, into the Kings house, wherein they make the Custome of the merchandise. When the Customers haue taken the charge of the goods, and put them into Barkes, the Rector of the Citie giueth licence to the Merchants to take barke, and goe vp to Pegu with their merchandise; and so three or foure of them take a Barke and goe vp to Pegu in companie. God deliuer euery man that he giue not a wrong note, and entrie, or thinke to steale any Custome: for if they doe, for the least trifle that is, he is vtterly vndone, for the King doeth take it for a most great affront to bee deceiued of his Custome; and therefore they make diligent searches, three times at the lading and unlading of the goods, and at the taking of them a land. In Pegu this search they make when they goe out of the ship for Diamonds, Pearles, and fine Cloth which taketh little roome: for because that all the Jewels that come into Pegu, and are not found of that Countrey, pay Custome, but Rubies, Saphyrs and Spinels pay no Custome in nor out: because they are found growing in that Countrey. All Merchants that meane to goe thorow the Indies, must carrie all manner of household stuffe with them which is necessary for a house, because that there is nor any lodging, nor Innes, nor Hosts, nor chamber roome in that Countrey, but the first thing a man doth when hee cometh to any Citie is to hyre a house, either by the yeere, or by the moneth, or as hee meanes to stay in those parts.

In Pegu their order is to hire their houses for sixe moneths. Now from Cosmin to the Citie of Pegu they goe in sixe houres with the flood, and if it be ebbing water, then they make fast their Boate to the Riuer side, and there tarric untill the water flowe againe. It is a very commodious and pleasant Voyage, hauing on both sides of the Riuer many great Villages, which they call Cities: in the which Hennes, Pigeons, Egges, Milke, Rice, and other things bee very good cheape. It is all plaine, and a goodly Countrey, and in eight dayes you may make your Voyage vp to Maccoe, distant from Pegu twelue miles, and there they discharge their goods, and lade them in Carts or Waines drawne with Oxen, and the Merchants are carried in a Closer which they call Deling, in the which a man shall be very well accommodated, with Cushions vnder his head, and couered for the defence of the Sunne and Raine, and there he may sleepe if he haue will thereunto: and his foure Falchines carrie him running away, changing two at one time, and two at another. The custome of Pegu and freight thither, may amount vnto twenty or twenty two per cento, and twenty three according as he hath more or lesse Polne from him that day they custome the goods. It is requisite that a man haue his eyes watchfull, and to bee careful, and to haue many friends, for when they custome in the great Hall of the King, there come many Gentlemen accompanied with a number of their slaues, and these Gentlemen haue no shame that their slaues robbe strangers: whether it be Cloth in shewing of it, or any other thing, they laugh at it. And although the Merchants helpe one another to keepe watch, and looke to their goods, they cannot looke thereto so narrowly but one or other will robbe something, either more or lesse, according as their merchandise is more or lesse: and yet on this day there is a worse thing then this: although you haue set so many eyes to looke there for your benefit, that you escape vnrobbed of the slaues, a man cannot choose but that hee must be robbed of the Officers of the Custome house. For paying the custome with the same goods oftentimes they take the best that you haue, and not by rate of euery sort as they ought to doe, by which meanes a man payeth more then his dutie. At length when the goods be dispatched out of the Customhouse in this order, the Merchant causeth them to be carried to his house, and may doe with them at his pleasure.

There are in Pegu eight Brokers of the Kings, which are called Tareghe, who are bound to sell all the merchandise which come to Pegu, at the common or the current price: then if the Merchants will sell their goods at that price, they sell them away, and the Brokers haue two in the hundred of euery sort of merchandise, and they are bound to make good the debts of those goods, because they bee sold by their hands or meanes, and on their words, and oftentimes the Merchant knoweth not to whom he giueth his goods, yet he cannot lose any thing thereby, for that the Broker is bound in any wise to pay him, and if the Merchant sell his goods without the consent of the Broker, yet neuertheless hee must pay him two per cento, and bee in danger of his money: but this is very seldome seene, because the Wife, Children and Slaues of the debtor are bound to the Creditor, and when his time is expired and payment not made, the creditor may take the debtor and carrie him home to his house, and shut him vp in a Magasin, whereby presently hee hath his money, and not being able to pay the creditor, he may take the Wife, Children, and Slaues of the debtor, and sell them, for so is the Law of that Kingdome. The currant money that is in this Citie, and throughout all this Kingdome is called Gansa or Ganza, which is made of Copper and Lead: It is not the money of the King, but euery man may stampe it that will, because it hath his iust partition or value: but they make many of them false, by putting ouermuch lead into them, and those will not passe, neither will any take them. With this money Ganza, you may buy Gold or Siluer, Rubies and Muske, and other things. For there is no other money currant amongst them. And Gold, Siluer and other Merchandize are at one time dearer then another, as all other things bee.

This Ganza goeth by weight of Byza, and this name of Byza goeth for the account of the weight, and commonly a Byza of a Ganza is worth (after our account) halfe a Ducker, little more or lesse: and albeit that Gold and Siluer is more or lesse in price, yet the Byza neuer changeth: euery Byza maketh a hundreth Ganza of weight, and so the number of the money is Byza. He that goeth to Pegu to buy Jewels, if hee will doe well, it behooueth him to bee a whole yeere there to doe his businesse. For if so be that he would returne with the Ship he came in, hee cannot doe any thing so conueniently for the breuitie of the time, because that when they custome their goods in Pegu that come from Saint Tome in their ships, it is as it were about Christmas: and when they haue customed their goods, then must they sell them for their credits sake for a moneth or two: and then at the beginning of March the ships depart. The Merchants that come from Saint Tome take for the payment of their goods, Gold and Siluer, which is neuer wanting there. And eight or ten dayes before their departure they are all satisfied: also they may haue Rubies in payment, but they make no account of them: and they that will Winter there for another yeere, it is needfull that they bee aduertized, that in the sale of their goods, they specifye in their bargaine, the terme of two or three moneths payment, and that their payment shall be in so many Ganza, and neither Gold nor Siluer: because that with the Ganza they may buy and sell euery thing with great aduantage. And how needfull is it to be aduertized, when they will recouer their payments, in what order they shall receiue their Ganza? Because he that is not experienced may doe himselfe great wrong in the weight of the Ganza, as also in the fallenesse of them: in the weight hee may bee greatly deceiued, because that from place to place it doth rise and fall greatly: and therefore when any will receiue money or make payment, hee must take a publike weigher of money, a day or two before he goe about his businesse, and giue him in payment for his labour two Byzas a moneth, and for this hee is bound to make good all your money, and to maintaine it for good, for that he receiue it and seales the bags with his seale: and when he hath receiued any store, then he causeth it to be brought into the Magasin of the Merchant, that is the owner of it.

That money is verie weightie, for fortie Byza is a strong Porters burthen; and also where the Merchant hath any payment to bee made for those goods which hee buyeth, the Common weigher of money that receiue his money must make the payment thereof. So that by this meanes, the Merchant with the charges of two Byzas a moneth, receiue and payeth out his money without losse or trouble. The Merchandizes that goe out of Pegu, are Gold, Siluer, Rubies, Saphires, Spinelles, great store of Benjamin, long Pepper, Lead, Lacca, Rice, Wine, some Sugar, yet there might be great store of Sugar made in the Countrey, for that they haue abundance of Canes, but they giue them to Eliphants to eate, and the people consume great store of them for food, and many more doe they consume in vaine things, as these following. In that Kingdome they spend many of these Sugar-canes in making of Houses and Tents which they call Varely for their Idols, which they call Pagodes, whereof there are great abundance, great and small, and these houses are made in forme of little Hills, like to Sugar-loaues or to Bels, and some of these houses are as high as a reasonable Steeple, at the foot they are verie large, some of them be in circuit a quarter of a mile. The said houses within are full of earth, and walled round about with Bricks and dirt in stead of lime, and without forme, from the top to the foot they make a couering for them with Sugar-canes, and plaister it with lime all ouer, for otherwise they would bee spoyled, by the great abundance of Raine that falleth in those Countries. Also they consume about these Varely or Idol-houses great store of lease-gold, for that they ouerlay all the tops of the houses with Gold, and some of them are couered with gold from the top to the foot: in couering whereof there is great store of Gold spent, for that euery ten yeeres they new ouerlay them with gold, from the top to the foot, so that with this vanitie they spend great abundance of Gold. For euery ten yeeres the raine doth consume the gold from these houses. And by this meanes they make gold dearer in Pegu then it would bee, if they consumed not so much much in this vanitie. Also it is a thing to bee noted in the buying of Jewels in Pegu, that he that hath no knowledge shall haue as good Jewels, and as good cheape, as hee that hath bene practised there a long time, which is a good order, and it is in this wise. There are in Pegu foure men of good reputation, which are called Tareghe, or Brokers of Jewels. These foure men haue all the Jewels or Rubies in their hands, and the Merchant that will buy commeth to one of these Tareghe and telleth him, that hee hath so much money to imploy in Rubies. For through the hands of these foure men passe all the Rubies: for they haue such quantitie, that they know not what to doe with them, but sell them at most vile and base prices. When the Merchant hath broken his mind to one of these Brokers or Tareghe, they carrie him home to one of their shops, although hee hath no knowledge in Jewels: and when the Jewellers perceiue that hee will employ a good round summe, they will make a bargaine, and if not, they let him alone. The vse generally of this Citie is this; that when any Merchant hath bought any great quantitie of Rubies, and hath agreed for them, hee carrieth them home to his house, let them bee of what value they will, he shall haue space to looke on them and peruse them two or three dayes: and if hee hath no knowledge in them, he shall alwayes haue many Merchants in that Citie that haue very good knowledge in Jewels: with whom hee may alwayes conferre and take counsell, and may shew them vnto whom he will; and if he finde that he hath not employed his money well, he may returne his Jewels backe to them whom he had them of, without any losse at all. Which thing is such a shame to the Tareghe to haue his Jewels returne, that he had rather beare a blow on the face then that it should bee thought that he sold them so deare to haue them returned. For these men haue alwayes great care that they affoord good penniworths, especially to those that haue no knowledge. This they doe because they would not lose their credite: and when those Merchants that haue knowledge in Jewels buy any, if they buy them deare, it is their owne faults and not the Brokers: yet it is good to haue knowledge in Jewels, by reason that it may somewhat ease the price. There is also a very good order which they haue in buying of Jewels, which is this: There are many Merchants that stand by at the making of the bargaine, and because they shall not vnderstand how the Jewels bee sold, the Broker and the Merchants haue their hands vnder a cloth, and by touching of fingers & nipping the joynts they know what is done, what is bidden, and what is asked. So that the standers by know not what is demanded for them, although it be for a thousand or ten thousand Duckets. For euery ioynt and euery finger hath his signification. For if the Merchants that stand by should vnderstand the bargaine, it would breed great controuersie amongst them. And at my being in Pegu in the month of August, in Anno 1569. hauing gotten well by my endeouour, I was desirous to see mine owne Countrey, and I thought it good to goe by the way of Saint Tome, but then I should saue vntill March.

In which journey I was counsailed, yea and fully resolved to goe by the way of Bengala, with a Ship there ready to depart for that voyage. And then wee departed from Pegu to Chatigan a great Harbour or Port, from whence there goe small ships to Cochin, before the Fleet departs for Portugall, in which ships I was fully determined to goe to Lisbon, and so to Venice. When I had thus resolved my selfe, I went a boord of the ship of Bengala, at which time it was the yeere of Touffon: concerning which Touffon you are to vnderstand that in the East Indies oftentimes, there are not stormes as in other Countreies; but enery ten or twelue yeeres there are such tempests and stormes, that it is a thing incredible, but to those that haue seene it, neither doe they know certainly what yeere they will come.

Vnfortunate are they that are at Sea in that yeere and time of the Touffon, because few there are that escape that danger. In this yeere it was our chance to bee at Sea with the like storme, but it happened well vnto vs, for that our ship was newly ouer-planked, and had not any thing in her saue victuall and ballasts, Silver and Gold, which from Pegu they carrie to Bengala, and no other kind of Merchandize. This Touffon or cruel storme endured three dayes and three nights: in which time it carried away our sayles, yerds, and rudder; and because the ship laboured in the Sea, wee cut our Mast ouer boord: which when we had done, shee laboured a great deale more then before, in such wise, that she was almost full with water that came ouer the highest part of her and so went downe: and for the space of three dayes and three nights, sixtie men did nothing but hale water out of her in this wise, twentie men in one place, and twentie men in another place, and twentie in a third place: and for all this storme, the ship was so good, that sheooke not one jot of water below through her sides, but all ranne downe through the hatch-ches, so that those sixtie men did nothing but cast the Sea into the Sea. And thus driving too and fro as the wind and Sea would, wee were in a darke night about foure of the clocke cast on a shoald: yet when it was day, we could neither see Land on one side nor other, and knew not where we were. And as it pleased the Diuine power, there came a great waue of the Sea, which draue vs beyond the shoald. And when wee felt the ship afloat, we rose vp as men reuiued, because the Sea was calme and smooth water, and then sounding we found twelue fathom water, and within a while after wee had but fixe fathom, and then presently wee came to anker with a small anker that was left vs at the sterne, for all our other were lost in the storme: and by and by the ship strooke a ground, and then wee did prop her that shee should not overthrow.

When it was day the ship was all drie, and wee found her a good mile from the Sea on drie land. This Touffon being ended, wee discovered an Iland not farre from vs, and we went from the ship on the sands to see what Iland it was: and wee found it a place inhabited, and, to my iudgement the fertilest Iland in all the world, the which is deuided into two parts by a channell which passeth betweene it, and with great trouble wee brought our ship into the same channell, which parteth the Iland at flowing water, and there we determined to stay fortie dayes to refresh vs. And when the people of the Iland saw the ship, and that we were comming a land: presently they made a place of Bazar or Market, with Shops right ouer against the ship with all manner of prouision of victuals to eate, which they brought downe in great abundance, and sold it so good cheape, that wee were amazed at the cheapnesse thereof. I bought many salted Kine there, for the prouision of the ship, for halfe a Larine a piece, which Larine may be twelue shillings sixe pence, being very good and fatte; and foure wilde Hogges ready dressed for a Larine; great fat Hennes for a Bizze a piece, which is at the most a Penie: and the people told vs that we were deceiued the halfe of our money, because we bought things so deare. Also a sacke of fine Rice for a thing of nothing, and consequently all other things for humane sustenance were there in such abundance, that it is a thing incredible but to them that haue seene it. This Iland is called Sondina belonging to the Kingdome of Bengala, distant one hundred and twentie miles from Chatigan, to which place we were bound. The people are Moores, and the King a very good man of a Moore King, for if he had bin a Tyrant as others bee, he might haue robbed vs of all, because the Portugall Captaine of Chatigan was in armes against the Rector of that place, and euery day there were some slaine, at which newes wee rested there with no small feare, keeping good warch and ward aboard euery night as the vse is, but the Gouvernour of the Towne did comfort vs, and bad vs that we should feare nothing, but that we should repose our selues securely without any danger, although the Portugals of Chatigan had slaine the Gouvernour of that Citie, and said that we were not culpable in that fact; and moreouer he did vs euery day what pleasure he could, which was a thing contrarie to our expectations considering that they and the people of Chatigan were both subiects to one King.

Wee departed from Sondina, and came to Chatigan the great Port of Bengala, at the same time when the Portugals had made peace and taken a truce with the Gouvernours of the Towne, with this condition that the chiefe Captaine of the Portugals with his ship should depart without any lading: for there were then at that time eighteen ships of Portugals great and small. This Captaine being a Gentleman and of good courage, was notwithstanding contented to depart to his greatest hinderance, rather then he would seeke to hinder so many of his friends as were there, as also because the time of the yeere was spent to goe to the Indies. The night before hee departed, euery ship that had any lading therein, put it aboard of the Captaine to helpe to ease his charge and to recompence his courtesies. In this time there came a messenger from the King of Rachim to this Portugall Captaine, who said in the behalfe of his King, that hee had heard of the courage and valour of him, desiring him gently that hee would vouchsafe to come with the ship into his Port, and comming thither he should be very well intreated. This Portugall went thither and was very well satisfied of this King.

This King of Rachim hath his seate in the middle coast betweene Bengala and Pegu, and the greatestemie he hath is the King of Pegu: which King of Pegu deuisech night and day how to make this King of Rachim his subiect, but by no meanes hee is able to doe it: because the King of Pegu hath no power or armie by Sea. And this King of Rachim may arme two hundred Gallies or Fusts by Sea, and by land hee hath certaine Sluces with the which when the King of Pegu pretendeth any harme towards him, hee may at his pleasure drowne a great part of the Countrey. So that by this meanes hee cutteth off the way whereby the King of Pegu should come with his power to hurt him.

Now to returne to my voyage, when I came to Ormuz, I found there Master Francis Berettin of Venice, and we freighted a Barke together to goe for Basora for seuentie Duckets, and with vs there went other Merchants, which did ease our freight, and very commodiously wee came to Basora, and there we stayed fortie dayes for providing a Carouan of Barks to goe to Babilon, because they vse not to goe two or three Barks at once, but fise and twentie or thirtie, because in the night they cannot goe, but must make them fast to the bankes of the Riuer, and then wee must make a very good and strong guard, and bee well provided of armour, for respect and safegard of our goods, because the number of Theeues is great that come to spoile and rob the Merchants.

And when we depart for Babilon wee goe a little with our sayle, and the voyage is eight and thirtie or fortie dayes long but we were fiftie dayes on it. When we came to Babilon we stayed there foure moneths, vntill the Carouan was readie to goe over the Wildernesse or Desert for Alepo; in this Citie we were fixe Merchants that accompanied together, fise Venetians and a Portugall, whose names were as followeth, Messer Florinasa with one of his kinsmen, Messer Andrea de Polo, the Portugall, and Master Francis Berettin and I, and so we furnished our selues with victuals victuals and Beanes for our horses for fortie dayes; and wee bought Horses and Mules, for that they be very good cheape there. I my selfe bought a Horse there for eleuen Akens, and sold him after in Alepo for thirtie Duckets. Also we bought a Tent which did vs very great pleasure: we had also amongst vs two and thirtie Camels laden with Merchandise: for the which wee paid two Duckets for euery Camels lading, and for euery ten Camels they made eleuen, for so is their vse and custome. We take also with vs three men to serue vs in the voyage, which are vsed to goe in those voyages for five Duckets a man, and are bound to serue vs to Alepo: so that we passed very well without any trouble: when the Camels cryed out to rest, our Pavilion was the first that was erected. The Carouan maketh but small iournies about twentie miles a day, and they set forwards euery morning before day two houres, and about two in the afternoone they sit downe. We had great good hap in our voyage, for that it rained: for which cause we neuer wanted water, but euery day found good water, so that wee could not take any hurt for want of water. Yet we carried a Camell laden alwaies with water for euery good respect that might chance in the Desert, so that we had no want neither of one thing nor other that was to be had in the Countrey. For we came very well furnished of euery thing, and euery day we eate fresh Mutton, because there came many Shepheards with vs with their flocks, who kept those sheepe that wee bought in Babilon, and euery Merchant marked his sheepe with his owne marke, and we gaue the shepheards a Medin, which is two pence of our money, for the keeping and feeding our sheepe on the way, and for killing of them. And beside the Medin they haue the Heads, the Skinnies, and the intrals of euery sheepe they kill. Wee fixe bought twentie sheepe, and when we came to Alepo we had seuen alieue of them. And in the Carouan they vse this order, that the Merchants doe lend flesh one to another, because they will not carrie raw flesh with them, but pleasure one another by lending one one day, and another another day.

From Babilon to Alepo is fortie daies iourney, of the which they make fixe and thirtie daies ouer the Wildernesse, in which fixe and thirtie dayes they neither see House, Trees nor people that inhabite it, but onely a Plaine, and no signe of any way in the world. The Pilots goe before, and the Carouan followeth after. And when they sit downe, all the Carouan vnladeth and sitteth downe, for they know the stations where the wells are. I say, in fixe and thirtie dayes we passe ouer the Wildernesse. For when we depart from Babilon two dayes wee passe by Villages inhabited vntill we haue passed the River Euphrates. And then within two dayes of Alepo wee haue villages inhabited. In this Carouan there goeth alway a Captaine that doth Iustice vnto all men: and euery night they keepe watch about the Carouan, and comming to Alepo we went to Tripoli, whereas Master Florin, and Master Andrea Polo, and I, with a Frier, went and hired a Barke to goe with vs to Ierusalem. Departing from Tripolie, wee arriued at Iaffa from which place in a day and a halfe we went to Ierusalem, and wee gaue order to our Barke to tarry for vs vntill our returne. Wee stayed in Ierusalem fourteene dayes, to visit those holy places: from whence we returned to Iaffa, and from Iaffa to Tripolie, and there we shipped our selues in a ship of Venice called the Bagazzana: And by the helpe of the Diuine power, we arriued safely in Venice the fifth of Nouember 1581. I will not bee vnmindfull to put them in remembrance, that haue a desire to goe into those parts, how they shall keepe their goods, and giue them to their heires at the time of their death, and how this may be done very securely. In all the Cities that the Portugals haue in the Indies, there is a House called the schoole of Santa misericordia commissaria; the Gouvernours whereof, if you giue them for their paines, will take a copie of your Will and Testament, which you must alwayes carrie about you; and chieffie when you goe into the Indies. In the Countrey of the Moores and Gentiles, in those voyages alwaies there goeth a Captaine to administer Iustice to all Christians of the Portugals. Also this Captaine hath authoritie to recover the goods of those Merchants that by chance die in those voyages, and they that haue not made their Wills and registred them in the asoresaid Schooles, the Captaines will consume their goods in such wise, that little or nothing will be left for their heires and friends. Also these goeth in these same voyages some Merchants that are Commissaries of the Schoole of Santa misericordia, that if any Merchant die and haue his Will made, and hath giuen order that the Schoole of Misericordia shall haue his goods and sell them, then they send the money by exchange to the Schoole of Misericordia in Lisbon, with that copie of his Testament, then from Lisbon they giue intelligence thereof, into what part of Christendome soeuer it be; and the heires of such a one comming thither, with testimoniall that they bee heires, they shall receive there the value of his goods: in such wise that they shall not lose any thing. But they that die in the Kingdome of Pegu lose the third part of their goods by ancient custome of the Countrey, that if any Christian dieth in the Kingdome of Pegu, the King and his Officers rest heires of a third of his goods, and there hath neuer beene any deceit or fraud vsed in this matter. I haue knowne many rich men that haue dwelled in Pegu, and in their age they haue desired to goe into their owne Countrey to die there, and haue departed with all their goods and substance without let or trouble.

In Pegu the fashion of their apparell is all one, as well the Nobleman, as the simple: the onely difference is in the fineness of the Cloth, which is cloth of Bombast one finer then another, and they weare their apparell in this wise: First, a white Bombast cloth which serueth for a shirt, then they gird another painted Bombast cloth, of fourteene braces, which they bind vp betwixt their legs, and on their heads they weare a small Tocke of three braces, made in guise of a Myter, and some goe without Tockes, and carrie (as it were) a Hiue on the heads, which doeth not passe the lower part of his care, when it is lifted vp: they goe all bare-footed, but the Noblemen neuer goe on foot, but are carried by men in a seate with great reputation, with a Hat made of the leaues of a tree to keepe him from the Raine and Sunne, or otherwise they ride on horsebacke with their feet bare in the stirrups. All sorts of women whatsoeuer they be, weare a smocke downe to the girdle, and from the girdle downewards to the foot they weare a cloth of three braces, open before, so straight that they cannot goe, but they must shew their secret as it were aloft, and in their going they faigne to hide it with their hand, but they cannot by reason of the straightnesse of their cloth. They say that this vse was inuented by a Queene to be an occasion that the sight thereof might remoue from men the vices against nature, which they are greatly giuen vnto: which sight should cause them to regard women the more. Also the women goe bare-footed, their armes laden with hoopess of Gold and Jewels: And their fingers full of precious Rings, with their haire rolled vp about their heads. Many of them weare a cloth about their shoulders in stead of a Cloake.

Nno 1579. on the thirteenth of December Gasparo Balbi a Jeweller of Venice travelled with the Carauan from Aleppo towards Bagdet and the East Indies: the first day came to Bebbe, the second to Saguir, the third to Bir, or Albir on the banke of Euphrates on the left hand, and there embarked their goods for Felugia. They stayed till the eleuenth of Ianuarie in cold and snowe to expect fure other Barkes. These Barkes of Albir are double keeled or botomed to preuent harmes. On the twelfth they came to Tellenini much afflicted with winde, snowe and cold. Thence to Matao Lantache on the right hand: and so on to Calatelnogin a dishabited Castle, to Zoxenia to Miserusi, to Blis (many dangerous shelues and trunks of trees are in that dayes way) to Meliolxara, to Chalagiabar, to Elaman, to Suriech, to Raccha, to Elamora, to Aman, to Anagia to Casabi, to Celibi, the ruinous Castle Zebebe, and the same day halfe an houre together vnder mountainous beetlebrowed ouerlookers threatening to fall on them, many stones whereof lying false in the water made it more dreadfull (the Mountaine is called Eltorestromit) and the next day came to two Falls or Precipices caused by the stones carried thither from that overhanging Hills ruines, so heightening the water, that the Fall was ten cubits, euery one there making his prayer for a good Voyage. At night they came to Elder on the right hand of the Riuer, anciently called Port of the Chaine, in which was a Turkish Saniak and Cadi, goodly men and fairer women then in the rest of those parts. Thence to Muachefir, to Elpisara, the Riuer Cabur falling into Euphrates (comming from Merdin) of reddish colour, to Rahabi, to Zoxosoldan, to Siara, to Gorur, and then vnder a Mountaine hollowed by the course of the water, called Carteron, minacing a downfall vpon vs, made the more fearefull by a threefold fissure and manifold ruines of stones; which passed in a quarter of an houre, they came to Sora a Castle neere to a great ruined Citie dishabited on the left hand seeming to them greater then Cairo; the Mariners affirmed that they had heard their Progenitors tell, that there had beene in it three hundred sixty and sixe Gates; it is called Elerfi, and rowing downe the streame with foure Oares from morning to noone, we hardly passed beyond one side thereof. Thence to Anga another ruined Citie, with many Mills, whereby it appeareth that Euphrates hath now a larger chanell then in those times. Next was Chaine, and neere it an Engine to throwe water into a chanell to water the fields; to Sema, to Carpilchelbi, to Fochelcurm, to Edir, to Rechtalmel, to Zasara, beyond which are straight passages, and a Sepulchre which they held in veneration, and each Mariner threw in a Bisket superstitiously to preuent Shipwracke: to Elcuxi, to Elmesetana, to Castle Anna, neere to which in Diana, Ahorise an Arabian Lord liueth; to the Ile Anatelbes; after dangerous passages to Beg-gian another Ile full of Date trees, to Cabin, to Sberie, to Zousa, to Giera, Germa, Benexi, Dulet-gidit, then to two Ilands namelesse being newly made by the Riuer, to Zibida, Vrasa, Fuochelbe-ra, Abnsabur, Adis (in which an Arabike Saniak keepeth to Zexirnatu, to Giuba, (residence of a Saniak) to Nausa, to En, neere to which is a boiling Fountaine of Pitch, wherewith the Inhabitants build their houses, daubing it on boughes cut from trees, so that they may seeme rather of Pitch then Wood, euery one taking what him pleaseth freely; and if the ouerflowing Euphrates should not carrie away the Pitch throwne into the field where it ariseth, they say there would be hills raised by it. Against the forcible streame of the Riuer is no rowing, or so difficult that that a Boat in Bir costing five and twenty Duckets in Eit or Felugia is not worth about five. Following their Voyage they came to Caragnol, the Inhabitants whereof speake Arabike, Turkish and Persian. To water their fields they vse abundance of skin-bottles (fastned to a chaine with cords) drawne vp by Oxen in a Mill (as in the Water-honse at London) which empty themselues into water-passages. These mens Religion is reputed a Gallimaufrey or Heresie. On the one and twentieth of Februarie they arriued at Felugia. On the foure and twentieth at Sunne-rising they passed a Bridge ouer a Streame which runneth when the water is high from Euphrates to Tigris, and came at noone to the ruines of a Citie called Sendia, and then halfe an houre after to the beginnings of old Babylon, and going along by the same, at night came to Nareisa, midway from Felugia to Bagdet, a place perilous for Robbers and Lions. Before Sun-rising next day we traueled againe alongst those ruines leauing them on the left hand, seeing pieces of great walls ruined, and one piece of the great Tower of Babylon, till comming to Mascadon they saw the Towers of Bagdet or new Babylon. From Felugia thither the soyle seemes good, yet neither is there Tree or greene Grasse, House or Castle: but Mushromes so good that the Moores eat them raw. They were nine and forty dayes from Bir to Bagdet by reason of the Winter.

The thirteenth of March, 1580. they departed from Bagdet towards Balsara, embarked in the Tigris, a Riuer seeming like Nilus, not so endangered with shelues and bodies of trees as Euphrates. At Elmaca the Riuer is diuided into two, one running after into Euphrates, the other to Balsara. The Inhabitants on the right hand are Arabs, on the left Gurgi. On the eighteenth they came to Cher. There are many Lions, and Arab Theeues. There are also many keepers of Oxen, Sheepe and Goats. Thence to Encaserami, where each Mariner cast in a Bisket for deuotion to a holy man there buried. Hitherto both in Euphrates and Tigris they had good aire; but there they began to haue an ill sent of the Riuer, very noisome, and they were in the night endangered with a kinde of whirlepoole, and were faine to call to their consorts which towed them out. The next day they came to Casale, a Saniaks residence, where the Persian Riuer Maroan disembogued. Heere the Tide was first encountred out of the Persian Gulfe. A little beyond at Ca-lactel they fasten their Barks when the Tide ariseth, which otherwise could force them backe. The Champaines are well inhabited. They entred Corno, and a little beyond encountred a piece of Euphrates ioyning with Tigris, where abide many Souldiers with a Saniak to preuent theeues, which by hundreds in a companie vse to robbe. Here the Riuer (which in some places had beene like Brent) was as large as Nilus, and well inhabited. At certaine times it is here so hote that many die thereof: and in this Voyage foure persons wearied with heate and trauell late downe to refresh themselues a while, and were overcome by a hote winde which strangled them all foure. The one and twentieth they arriued at Balsara.

The Authors Voyage from Balsara to Ormuz, Diu, Goa, Cochin, Cananor, Seilan, Negapatan, I omit, and will first welcome him to Saint Thome.

On the nine and twentieth of May, 1582. in the name of Christ wee set sayle, directing our Prow towards the North to auoide certaine shelues which are very perilous; we saw many Fishers, which tooke great store of fish, which they ate with Rice. All that night we sayled with a South winde Northerly. About three of the clocke the next morning we came to a place which is called the Seuen Pagods, vpon which are eight pleasant hillockes not very high, which are seuen leagues from Saint Thomas, right ouer against it, where wee arriued about noone the thirtieth of May, saluting it with three Peeces of Ordnance. The Citie of Saint Thomas is so called of the Reliques of that Saint, which are kept here with great veneration; it is situated in 13. degrees and a third part. The Front is towards the West, very strong by reason of the Blocke-houses, which are vpon the Port, along towards the Sea, this Port is so low that Elephants cannot enter in at it, for the Horses enter with not a little trouble. There are three Churches: one very faire, of Saint Thomas, which is well serued with Priests, the chiefe of them is a Vicar (for so they call him) who was sent thither by the Archbishop of Goa. There is another of Saint Francis, very wel serued with Capuchins: and another of Saint Iohn the Baptist, where the Fathers of Saint Paul of the Companie of Iesus, are in continuall prayer; to build this they had not so many transomes as were sufficient, when miraculously a great piece of timber was cast vp by the Sea, which seemed to be made by the line and measure of that Church. I was here when this piece of timber was cast vp; for one day going to Masse to the Church of our Lady, I saw great concourse of people running to the Sea-side, and I went also to see what was the matter, and saw this piece of timber cast vpon the shoare. Then the Church of Saint Iohn Baptist was finished, but because they wanted transomes to make the rooffe they couered it with straw. This was held for a great miracle, that so great a piece of timber should bee cast vp by the Sea, the point lay towards the Quire of the Church. Moreouer, when they sawed this piece of wood, they perceiued in the outside of it, as also within it a stinke of * Oase, so that they could not come neere * it: whereupon they iudged, that it was caused by the abundance of water, wherewith it was inuolued in the Sea, and that it came from some farre Countrie. But after a while they set it on end; and now it is so hard, that the Portugals may make vse of it. The foresaid Fathers of Saint Paul haue another Church in the Citie, dedicated to Our Lady, where they baptise the Gentiles, and exhort and instruct them them in matters of Faith. There is another Church called Our Lady of Light, which is served by Saint Thomas his Priests; but it is three miles out of the Towne. There is also another called Our Lady of the Mount, and another of the Crosse, here is also the Church of Mercy; out of the Towne there is one of Saint Lazarus, and many others well served. Saint Thomas is as faire a Citie as I saw any in that Countrie, and the houses ioyne one to the other, so to be able to succour one another. Without the Citie of Saint Thomas is another Citie environed with walls, made of earth, and inhabited with Gentiles Souldiers, whose Chieftaine is called Adicario, who hath power to execute iustice. They obserue the custome to burne their Dead in this Citie, as at Negapaton; but neere to this is a Citie called La Casta de gli Orefici, Goldsmiths rowe; they haue a custome when the Husband is dead, to make a pit in the earth, and there to place the dead corps crosse-legged; and on the other side set his liuing Wife in the same manner, and their kindred cast earth vpon her, pressing her downe, that shee may die also; and when they wiue, they marrie with their Comperes, as a Carpenter takes the daughter of a Carpenter, and so of others. The foresaid Inhabitants worship sometimes the figure of a Kow, and otherwhiles of a Serpent called Bittia di Cappella, whose biting is deadly, and it hath one part of the flesh from the middle inuerted towards the head.

The Bramins are wont to burne Kowes excrements, and with the ashes for deuotion meeting with the Gentiles to dawbe their forehead and nose; who so painted wash not that day for deuotion of the Kow. The men which are deuoted to the Pagod or Statue, after they haue liued a whole yeere after their will in carnall pleasures, are wont to take a Bowe and an Arrowe, and shoot their owne flesh aloft in the aire, which they slash off in morsels, and when they can continue no longer in this manner, they cut their owne throat, thus sacrificing their body to the Pagod. There are some also which are called Amocchi, who are a kinde of people called Chiani, and are not of those Gentiles of Saint Thomas, but of the Coast of Chiana, who being weary of liuing, set themselves in the way with a weapon in their hands, which they call a Crise, and kill as many as they meete with, till some body killeth them; and this they doe for the least anger they conceiue, as desperate men. These Gentiles are very different in their adoration, for some worship the image of a Man, some of a Kow, others of Serpents; others the Sunne, or the Moone, some a Tree or the Water, and other things. They are accustomed to celebrate many Feasts; but in the moneth of Septemb. I saw one: the people planted a tree in the ground like the Mast of a ship, with the Main-yard acrosse, vpon which Main-yard were two hooks fastned: and there are many which desire to free themselves from some trouble or misery, who make a vow to the Pagod, to hooke or ganch themselves; and for this there are some deputed that stand there, who seeing any that will ganch themselves for deuotion, they first make an offering, and then they loosen a cord and let downe the hookes, and with them they fasten the shoulders of him that will hooke himselfe, and then they hoise him vp aloft, making him turne his face to the Pagod, and salute it three times with his hands in suppliant wise before his breast, and make him play with a weapon, which hee carrieth in his hands while he is in drawing vp: and after a while they let him downe, and colour the tree with his blood, saying they doe it in reuerence to the Pagod; and then they let him downe, and put a rope thorow the holes which the hookes made, and fastning that cord to the Pagod, they draw him by little and little to the Statue by that cord; then the women of the Pagod conduct him to the Statue to reuerence it, and after this they take care to heale him if they can. And thus they doe by a vow or promise to the Pagod to obtaine any thing, or in sicknesse to recover health. They haue another Feast by night which dureth eight nights in a long street of the Citie full of lights on both sides, and three or foure persons take one another by the hands, who haue on their armes certaine baskets full of viands made of Rice and Milke, and then they runne and cast that meate behind them, which they say the Deuill eats who runnes behind them, and while they are in this motion they neuer looke behind them; for they say, if they doe, they shall suddenly die: and this is sufficient for the mad customes of this Countrie.

On the thirteenth of September, 1583. in the name of Iesus Christ, after wee had laded our merchandise, and payd our Customes, we went a shipboord; And hauing sailed vntill the three and twentieth of this moneth, we found our selues neere to Maccareo, it is very strange which is reported of the ebbings and flowings of the water, and certainly he which hath not seene them will scarcely beleuee them; Certaine Pilots goe from Marionan, as swift as an Arrow in the encreasing of the water, as long as the Floud lasteth, and the Tide being at the height, they turne out of the channell, and there ride; when the water is fallen on drie land, and the bore or ride comes as some great tree: and in such a time they oppose the Prow against it, and so expect the furie of the water, which resembleth the noise of a great Earthquake; so that maugre their strength and skill the Barke is washed from head to stearne, and with that violence is carried swiftly into the channell. After that, the winde blew from the South-west, and wee failed to the North-west, till the morning, when we found our selues at Bara, right ouer Negrais (they call so in their language the Hauen which goeth into Pegu) where wee discovered on the left side of the Riuer a Pagod or Varella all gilded ouer, which is seene as farre off by the vellels that come from the Maine, and especially when the Sunne shines, which makes it glister round about as farre as it is seene. And because the raine washeth it often and consumeth the gold, the men of that place often regild it, that the ships by the splendor thereof may haue this benefit, to know the Hauens: and they doe it for deuotion and reuerence to the place. Wee then all reioyced at that time, and made merrie; because we considered that if we had arriued there foure or fve dayes later we could not haue entred the Hauens by reason of the continual winds which blowe there with great furie. Then casting anchor, to expect the flood, so to shunne some Rockes which are vnder the water; we saw a place very curiously adorned with Bowers and a Church (where the Talipois reside, which are there as the Friers with vs) where the people of this Countrey assemble to pray. It is reported that in this place there are abundance of Tigres which deuoure the men and beasts of the Countrey. On the foure and twentieth of September, there came a little Barke neere vs called a Salangara, whereby the Captaine of our ship sent a Portugall with a present to the King, to giue him notice of our arriual, and the euening following wee drew neere to the Iland of Flies, so called of the multitudes of them there caused from the abundance of fish there salted, wherewith also we furnished our ship. In the meane time the ship went to Cosmi, to the Lord of the Countrey, who sent twenty Boats with eight Oares a piece, and a royall Almadie, which is a certaine long Barke, rowed with many Oares, and it beganne to put forth, and two dayes after the Lord of Cosmi came together with the ship, who presented our Moorsish Captaine with great faire Hennes, of a very good taste, and many Oranges, which growe in great quantitie in the Countrey. The said Lord was rowed in a Barke made very fantastically, it was of the length of a Foist; but so narrow that in the middle it seemed not to be above one pace ouer, at the head and stearne it was as narrow as our Gondolos; but it was very high, and there were more then an hundred Rowers, which rowe at the side with an hundred Oares like stickes, and they did obserue in their rowing to draw the water towards them altogether by reason of foure Trumpeters, which sound when they should rowe, and sit in the middle of the Barke; the Signior was in a high Cabbin made in the middle of the Boat covered after the manner of the middle part of a Gondolo, but greater, with a Port before to shut, and open as he pleaseth.

Now the fift of October we came to Cosmi, whose Territories on both sides are woody, and frequented with Parrots, Tigres, wilde Boares, Apes, and such like creatures. Cosmi is seated in 16. degrees and a third part, and hath the houses made of great Indian canes, and covered with straw, fronted towards the North-east, situate in a very fine place, but subiect to the raging of Tigres, which often enter into the Towne, and catch men and beasts, and deuoure them; but this they doe in the night, for they abide in the Woods all day.

Wee departed from Cosmi the sixe and twentieth of October, with a little Paro, which is to say, a voyage Barke, hauing committed our merchandise to the Guardian of the great Paro, and sayling down the Riuer, at euen we arriued at a Village on the left hand of the Riuer called Pain Perlon; and about three of the clocke the next morning at Marma Mala, and about the euening before a great Citie on the left hand of the Riuer called Iaccubet; and an houre after at another on the right side called Tegiar den. The morning following we came to a place called Balatin, where they make Pots and Iarres of excellent fine earth, and a little after we saw Dian a fertile Countrey, plentiful in timber both for Houses, Ships, and Barks, where they haue certaine vessels like Galeasses, which haue on both sides from head to sterne Cabbins with diuers merchandises, and in the middle in stead of the Mast there is a house like ours, so that within them they traffique for store of Muske, Benjamin, and diuers Jewels. On the nine and twentieth day we saw the Land of Bedogiamana, Lagapala, and Purdabai, and the euening wee came to a great Countrey called Gungiebui, where wee tarried with great feare of being assaulted by theues, who vnder the shew of friendship betray dispersed passengers; and in like manner we auoyded the danger of the multitude of Tigres, which in these parts assaile men, and destroy as many as they can get. For this cause we strengthened ourselues in the middle of the Riuer; yet they report, that the fiercenesse of this creature is such that he will prey in the water. The day following wee went in a narrow Riuer like our Brent by Padua, which is shadowed with Palme trees that growe in great abundance in both sides of the Riuer; there is the great Citie of Coilan, which is a league long on each side, which being a perfect square make twelue of our miles. After that, we came by another Citie called Tunaguedan, where are many Pagods and Statues; and at euening we arriued at Leungon a very faire Citie, seated in a pleasant Territory, replenished with Palme trees; parting from thence after wee had seene many buildings on both sides of the Riuer, about morning we came to a great populous Citie called Siluanfedi, and at euening before another called Moggio, where were infinite store of great and small vessels, all covered from head to sterne with straw, within which are the families of one house, so that they serue for conuenient habitations; they vse to drinke in them hot waters made of Rice, as strong as our Aghauita, these Barks sell fresh fish, and salted and dressed in diuers fashions, and other sorts of prouision, so that along that Riuer, to the mouth of the Sea, which is fresh water, they may saile without carrying any victuals, but only money to spend. The second of Nouember we came to the Citie of Dala, where besides other things are ten large roomes full of Elephants: which are kept there by diuers seruants of the King of Pegu. The day following we came to the faire Citie of Dogon, it is finely seated, and fronted towards the South west, and where they land are twenty long steps, as from the Pillar of Saint Marke to the Straw-bridge, the matter of them is strong and great pieces of timber, and there are great currents of water both at ebbe and fload, because it is a place neere Maccareo, which entreth and goeth out of the mouth of Sirian, which is a Sea-port: and alwaies when the water encreaseth, they goe vpon the Staires: and when it is ebbe, it discouers all about, and makes it a great way drie land. On both sides the Riuer, at the end of the banke, or at the staires, is a wooden Tigre, very great, and painted after the naturall colour of a Tigre; and there are two others in the midst of the staires, so farre one from another, that they seeme to share the staires equally. They stand with open mouth, shewing their teeth and tongue, with their claws lifted vp and stretched forth, prepared to assaile him that lookes on them. Concerning these they told mee a foolish belife which they haue, that they stand there to guard, for if any should be so bold to displease the Pagod, those Tigris should defend him, for he would giue them life. After we were landed we began to goe on the right hand in a large street about fifty paces broad, in which wee saw wooden houses gilded, and adorned with delicate gardens after their custome, wherein their Talapois, which are their Friars, dwell, and looke to the Pagod, or Varella of Dogon. The left side is furnished with Portals and Shops, very like the new Procuratia at Venice: and by this street they goe towards the Varella, for the space of a good mile straight forwards, either vnder painthouses, or in the open street, which is free to walke in. When we came at the Varella, we found a paire of staires of ninety steps, as long in my iudgement as the chancell of the Rialto at Venice. At the foot of the first staire are two Tigris, one at the right hand, and the other at the left, these are of stone, and stand in the same fashion that they doe on the shoare-side. The staires are diuided into three, the first is forty steps, the second thirty, and the third twenty, and at the top of each of them is a plaine spacious place. On the last step are Angels of stone, each with three Crowns one vpon the other; but so that that which is vndermost is the greatest, and that which is next lesser then that, yet greater then the vppermost, which is the least. They haue the right hand lifted vp, ready to giue the benediction, with two fingers stretched out. The other hand of the one is layd vpon the head of a Childe, and of the other vpon the head of an Ape: those Statues are all of stone. At the right hand is a Varella gilded in a round forme, made of stone, and as much in compasse as the streete before the Venetian Palace, if it were round: and the height may equall Saint Markes Bell-tower, not the top of it, but the little Pinnaces. At the left hand is a faire Hall carved and gilded within and without. And this is the place of deuotion, whither the people goe to heare the Talapois preach: the streete is greater then Saint Markes, at the least larger. And this is a place of great deuotion amongst them, and yeerely multitudes of people come by Sea and by Land. And when they celebrate a solemne Feast, the King in person goeth before them all, and with him the Queene, the Prince, and his other sonnes, with a great traine of Nobles and others, who goe to get a pardon. And on this day there is a great Mart where are all sorts of merchandises which are current in those Countries, which they frequent in great multitudes, which come thither not so much for deuotion as traffique, and wee may freely goe thither if wee will. Round about this and vpon another Varella were Apes running vp and downe, the great and small staires also are full of them. After wee had seene this, at the foot of the first staire when I went downe I turned my face to the left side, and with some Portugals which were in my companie found in a faire Hall a very large Bell, which we measured, and found to be seven paces and three hand bredths, and it is full of Letters from the top to the bottom, and so neere together that one toucheth the other, they are very well and neatly made: but there was no Nation that could vnderstand them, no not the men of Pegu, and they remember not whence, nor how it came thither. At the euening about one of the clocke at night wee went from this place, and about three we came among some Fishers Nets, which almost ship wrackt vs, as they did one of our companie, who being entangled in them went vnder them, and so was sunke, and this was through the negligence of some Fishers, who when they lay forth such Nets, ought to haue a barke with a light or fire, all the night to giue warning to Saylers, that they come not on that side. But praised be God, we freed our selues in the best manner we could, that day after the Sunne was vp wee arrived ouer against the mouth of Sirian, which is on the South side, where with some difficulty we landed, for the violence of the water drew vs into Maccareo. Sirian was an Imperiall Citie, where an Emperour resided, the Walls and Bulwarkes are ruined, by which one may see that it hath bene very strong, and almost impregnable: but Anno 1567. it was subdued by the King of Pegu, who to take it sent a million and an halfe of men: and after he had besieged it two yeeres with the losse of halfe a million of his men, he tooke it by treason. Which when the Emperour vnder stood, he poisoned himselfe, and the rest of his familie were carried away prisoners vpon Elephants, who returned in great numbers laden with Gold, Jewels, and other precious things: departing from Sirian we followed our Voyage, seeing many inhabited ted Townes called by diuers names. Finally we came to a place called Meccao, where we disembarked to goe by land to Pegu, being about twelue miles. Ouer against Meccao are certaine habitations where the King of Pegu was then for his disport, who causeth there beautifull gilded vessels to be made, besteming such a King. From Cosmi to Meccao we were eleuen dayes in our Voyage, sayling alwaies by Riuers of fresh water, which ebbe and flowe, and on both sides there are houses and habitations made vpon piles planted in the earth, so that the Tigres cannot molest the Inhabitants, they goe vp to them vpon Ladders made of light wood, which they draw vp. Some of the Inhabitants keepe Buffalos in their houses; for they say, that the Tigres will not come neere the places where these beasts are, by reason of their ill sauour: they are in these Countries of vnmeasurable greatnesse and thicknesse. For the Voyage of Saint Thomas to Pegu, it is good to carrie Bracelets, which they make of glasse in Saint Thomas, for with these better then with money you may buy victuals, and there in the Citie where you buy them they are sold at a lowe price, but if they are enamelled they sell them deare. The number of Pagods or Varelles which wee saw in this Voyage I write not, for they are innumerable, and in diuers shapes; but I onely say, that on the shoare where wee landed to goe to Dagon, which is made of large strong timbers, are two Statues, which resemble two Boyes from the head downewards, their faces after the likenesse of Devils with two wings. There are some Varelles gilded, and set in faire places, to which they come and offer Gold and other merchandise in great quantitie, to maintayne their gilding, for the raine spoiles it. About these Varelles are found tyed many Apes of that kinde which resemble Mountain-cats, which wee call Monkeyes; they keepe them very carefully, holding them to be creatures beloued of God, because they haue their hands and feet like humane creatures; and therefore their Woods are full of them, for they neuer take any, except for their Varelles and Statues.

Kings bounty.

There are two Cities of Pegu, the old and the new; in the former Strangers and Merchants inhabit, who are many, and vtter great store of merchandise, in this also is the Kings Nobles, and Gentlemen, and other people. The new is not very large, it was built by the father of the present King, on a sudden, in a very neat fashion and with wonderfull strength: The old is very ancient and reasonable great with many houses made of great canes, and many Magasins of brick to keepe wares in: and to speake of the old Citie of Pegu, as of the nobler, because of the Kings residence in it, and of all his Court, you must knowe that the Citie is pleasantly seated in the altitude of 16. degrees and a third part, it is enuironed with walls, and hath the forme of a perfect square, and in euery square are five gates: round about it are many ditches full of water, which continues all the yeere, and in them are many Crocodiles, which are put there, that if any will wade ouer these ditches they may be taken and killed.

After that I was provided of a good Druggerman and Interpreter, the noise of Trumpets was heard, which signified wee should see the King and haue audience of him, wee entred within the second gate, whereby they goe into the Court-yard, and the Interpreter and I cast our selues vpon our knees on the ground, and with our hands eleuated in humble wise, and making a shew three times before we rose of kissing the ground; and three other times we did thus before wee came neere to the place where the King sate with his Semini, prostrate on the earth (for no Christian, how neere soeuer to the King, nor Moorish Captaines, except of his Semini, come in that place so neere the King) I heard all his Speech, but vnderstood it not: I gaue the Emeralds to the Interpreter, who lifted them vp ouer his head, and againe made reuerence, of them called Rombee: and as soone as the King saw it, a Nagiran, that is to say, the Lord of his words, or Interpreter, making the like Rombee, tooke the Emeralds, and gaue them into the Kings hand, and then went out of his presence, who a little while after called him, commanding him as Lord of his words, that he should aske mee what Countriman I was, how many yeeres it was since I left my Countrie, and what was my name, and from what place I had brought those Emeralds, and I with the accustomed Rombee (for at euery word they speake they must make such an obeisance) answered that my name was Gaspas Balbi, that I had bene in my Voyage foure yeeres, and that I brought the Emeralds from Venice to giue his Maiestie, the fame of whose bountie, courtesie and greatnesse was spread ouer the world, and especially in our parts, to be the greatest King in the world; all this was written in their letters, and read by the Lord of his words to his Maiestie. He commanded to aske me in what parts Venice was seated, and what King gouerned it; and I told him that it was in the Kingdome of Italie, and that it was a Republike or free State, not gouerned by any King. When the King heard this, he greatly wondered; so that he began to laugh so exceedingly, that hee was ouercome of the cough, which made him that hee could hardly speake to his Great men. Lastly, hee demanded, if that King which last tooke Portugall were as great, and if Venice were warlike. To which I answered, that King Philip that had taken Portugall was the potentest King among the Christians, and that the Venetians were in league with him, but had no feare of any, yet sought friendship with all. And then I reported the ouerthrow which the Venetians gaue the Emperour of the Turkes. Ametbi, who at that time was at Mecca, confirmed this to be true of the defeat of the Turkish Armado. Then he gaue me a Cup of gold, and five pieces of China Damaske of diuers colours, and bad them tell me, that he gaue me these, and did not so pay me for my Emeralds, for which I should be contented of his publike Terreca, which are his Treasurers. This was holden for novelty with them that saw it, for it was not the Kings custome to present any thing to any. Moreouer, the King ordered that for the wares which I had brought, the Decagini should not make me pay any Taxe or Custome.

Store of Elephants.

The King nourisheth at his charges more then eight hundred domesticall Elephants of warre; but for wilde ones they may haue as many as they will, for the Woods are full of them. The Bufalos of this Countrie are of berettine colour, but so great, that they are like Elephants. There are other creatures as with vs, and many also of other kinds. When he goeth to his recreations solemnely, or in his Robes, foure white Elephants goe before him vested with Gold, hauing their teeth inclosed in a sheath wrought with Iewels. The King of Pegu hath great store of Artillarie of all sorts; but he wants men to manage them, he might make as many Gallies, Foists & Galleasses as he would, if he had men to gouerne them, and to make them, and therefore makes none: yet when he vndertakes any enterprize, he carries with him small Ordnance, which are gouerned by certaine Gunners, Moors of Bengala, of whom, as of strangers, he hath small confidence.

King of Anna or Anna his Rebellion.

The King of Anna, being subiect to the King of Pegu, and Brother to his Father, had a purpose to make himselfe Master of his Nephewes Kingdome, and to make himselfe King, because he was the ancients of the Royall branch; therefore at the Inauguration of the present King, he would not come to doe him homage as he ought, and as other Kings and Dukes his subiects did; he did not onely absent himselfe, but also kept backe the Present of Iewels which he was wont to giue, and restrained also the trade from his Countrie to Pegu, not suffering any Merchant to passe, but sought to conspire with his chiefe Courtiers against the King of Pegu, who as a good Nephew dissembled it, the said King of Anna being recommended to him from his Father before his death. Finally, the King of Pegu, willing to cleare himselfe of the ill will conceived against the King of Anna his Vncle, sent one of his household seruants to him, who was slaine by the King of Anna because of the warre, trusting that the Grandes of the Kingdome of Pegu would fauour his part, and reuolt from their naturall Lord, to set Him in his place. Therefore the King of Pegu proclaimed warre against Anna, and called to him his Bagnia and Semini, and gaue order to his Decagini, that as they came he should put them in prison; which being performed by the Decagini, the King ordained that the morning following they should make an eminent and spacious Scaffold, and cause all the Grandes to come vpon it, and then set fire to it, and burne them all aliue. But to shew that he did this with iustice, he sent another mandate, that he should doe nothing till he had an Olla or Letter written with his hand in letters of gold, and in the meane time he commanded him to retaine all the prisoners of the Grandes families vnto the women great with child, and those which were in their swadling clothes, and so he brought them all together vpon the said Scaffold; and the King sent the Letter that he should burne them, and the Decagini performed it, and burned them all, so that there was heard nothing but weepings, shriekings, cryings, and sobbings: for there were foure thousand in this number which were so burned great and small, for which execution were publike Guards placed by the King, and all of the old and new Citie were forced to assist them; I also went thither, and saw it with great compassion and grieve, that little children without any fault should suffer such martyrdom, and among others there was one of his chiefe Secretaries, who was last put in to be burned, yet was freed by the Kings order; but his legge was begunne to be burnt, so that he was lame.

And after followed this order from his Maiestie, that those other Captaines which remained should come to him, and he said to them, You haue seene what we haue done to Traitors, but be faithfull, and set in order all the people as you can, for I am a Captaine that warre iustly, going without any feare of not ouercomming: and so on a sudden, and within few dayes, he gathered together out of both the Cities more then three hundred thousand persons, and encamped without the Citie. Ten dayes after that I saw the King vpon an Elephant all ouer couered with Gold and Iewels, goe to the warre with great courage, with a Sword after our custome sent him by the Vice-roy of Goa, the hilt whereof was gilded: the said Vice-roy was called Don Luis de Zuia: he left the white Elephants in the Citie. After that, the King fell sicke of the small poxe, but when he was well, he encountered with the King of Anna, and they two fought body to body without any hinderance of the Armies; who being equally matched, as their vse is, combated brauely, as did also the Guard of this King with that of the other, and after the Kings had fought a while hand to hand, first with Harquebusses, then with Darts, and lastly with the Sword, the Elephant of the King of Pegu brake his right tooth with charging that of Anna, in which furie he so coupled with the other Elephant, that the King of Pegu killed the King of Anna, and he remained lightly wounded on one arme, and in the meane while his Elephant fell dead vnder him, and the King of Pegu mounted vpon that of Anna. But when the Armie of Anna saw their King dead, they ceased to fight, and demanded pardon of the King of Pegu, who with a ioyfull countenance praising their valour pardoned them all, and making a muster, found that of three hundred thousand which hee brought from Pegu, there died died in that battell more then 200000. and little lesse of those of Anna. After this victorie he ordered that Anna should be destroyed, and all the people made prisoners, among which was the Queene taken prisoner, who was sister of the King of Pegu, and confined, during her life in a large house with many royall attendants; but shee agreed neuer to goe forth. The rest of the Citizens were banished to live in Woods among Tigres, and other creatures, and this was because the King of Pegu could not finde the great treasure which the King of Anna had. This warre was in the beginning of the moneth of Aprill, when in that Countrey fall great store of raines, causing great cold in a place called Meccao; and the fourteenth day of Iuly, in sixe dayes he returned v unexpectedly to Pegu, not finding the Citie with those guards which his Maiestie had appointed, but at the request of the Prince his sonne he did no other iustice.

Anna dispeopled.

At this his arriuall he vnderstood, that when hee was at the warre, there was arriued vnder excuse to come to his fauour in the old Citie of Pegu the sonne of the Emperour of Silon (or Siam) with fifty Elephants of warre, and eight hundred Horses, besides Harquebussiers, Pikemen, and Souldiers with swords, who were sent rowards Anna by the great Brama; but instead of taking his way towards that coast he returned to Silon.

Warre betwixt Pegu and Siam, of which see Rimenta.

In the mean time was brought into Pegu the Elephant of the King of Anna, which was so much discontented, that all the day long he mourned, I my selfe saw him lament, and that hee would eate but very little; and this I saw in the lodging where the King of Pegu was wont to keepe his, where continually were two Semini, that prayed him to eate, and mourne no longer, but be merry, for he was come to serue a King greater then his own. Notwithstanding the said Elephant would not cease from teares, and alwaies in token of sorrow held down his trunk: and thus he continued the space of 15. dayes, and then he began to eate, to the Kings great content. With the teeth of the Kings Elephant which died in battell by command from his Maiestie were made certaine Pagods or Statues, which were layd vp to bee kept among the Pagods of gold and siluer. After the King made five other of Gonza, which was a maruellous thing to see, for sitting crosse-legged, they were as high as a strong man could fling a stone, and they were ingraued fairely and curiously: one toe of the foot was greater then a man, and the said Pagods were set in publike before the Palace, and bespangled with gold.

Gonza is a mixe metall of brasie and tin wherof they make money.

The warre of Anna being now finished, the King of Silon, who was subiect to the King of Pegu, sent one to his Maiestie to tell him, that it grieved him that a slaue had giuen answer to his sonne, whom he had sent to aide the King himselfe, and therefore now he made no more account of him, nor held him for his Lord; therefore the King Pegu sent forth a great Armie against Silon, vnder the conduct of the great Brama, who after he had lost many people through the heat, & through the great fortitude of Silon, could obtaine nothing of him but this, that if the King of Pegu would come to the campe he would reuerence him, but he would not yeeld himselfe to his inferior; and the King of Pegu answered, that he would haue his least slaue subdue his subiect. Although they kept a straight liege against Silon, yet the Citie stood it out manfully. It hath beene an Imperiall Citie; the houses are of timber, built high because of the ouerflowing of the Riuer. In Winter euery house hath a Boat to transport their people from one side of the Riuer to the other: there are many houses of poore people made vpon great planks with edifices of wood or great canes built on them, which they guide whither they will, to buy and sell any sort of merchandise, which is exercised by women, who when a ship comes to that place, doe not vnlade it; but goe themselues vpon these Rafts to negotiate, buy and sell. The people of Silon are Genites, as those of Pegu, they are white and beautifull; they feare not to bee overcome by the King of Pegu after this manner; for his father brought them to his obedience, going in person, and accompanied with eight hundred thousand men, neither had he taken it, if it had not beene by treason, by opening a Gate, there were many Portugals then taken prisoners, who were freed by the present King of Pegu with commendations for doing what the King of Silon commanded them. In the meane time there was a great fire kindled in a street of the Portugals in Pegu, by the diuersitie of winds which blew, it burned more then 3800. houses, and some Pagods, and praying places: and because it is a custome, that the King of Pegu in such cases proceeds against those which are authors of such a fire, there was searce made who kindled the fire, and he was certified, that it was in the house of a Portugall Pilot which brought vs to the Citie. The King made no shew of iudging this to haue beene for malice: but we were in continuall feare of burning, and so much the rather, because one of the Kings Diuiners told him, that if hee would haue the victorie of Silon, hee must burne a Citie, as his father did; and therefore we doubted that hee would destroy this old Citie of Pegu; but he was dissuaded from it by the Prince his sonne, who is very courteous and pleasant, and much delighted in discharging Harquebusses, and to shoot in Bowes, hee is of great stature, and browne, as his father; when he goes abroad he is carried vp in a Palamkin very pompously (as his other three little brothers are also) vnder a Cloth of state openly.

The Voyage of Master RALPH FITCH Merchant of London to Ormus, and so to Goa in the East India, to Cambaja, Ganges, Bengala; to Bacola, and Chonderi, to Pegu, to Iamabay in the Kingdome of Siam, and backe to Pegu, and from thence to Malaeca, Zelan, Cochin, and all the Coast of the East India: begun in the yeere of our Lord 1583. and ended 1591.

See Master Newbery his voyage to Ormus. sup. l. 9. c. 18. I had thought to have left out this voyage of Master Fitch, as being before published by Mr. Hakluyt but seeing none other of our English travellers have scene divers Countries here Discovered, for the better knowledge of him and them, I have added it here also.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1583. I Ralph Fitch of London Merchant, being desirous to see the Countries of the East India, in the companie of Master John Newbery Merchant (which had bene at Ormus once before) of William Leedes Jeweller, and James Storie Painter, being chiefly set forth by the right Worshipfull Sir Edward Osborne Knight, and Master Richard Staper Citizens and Merchants of London, did ship my selfe in a Ship of London called the Tigre, wherein we went for Tripolis in Syria: and from thence we tooke the way for Alepo, which we went in seven dayes with the Carouan. Being in Alepo and finding good companie, we went from thence to Birra, which is two dayes and a halfe travell with Camels.

Birra is a little Towne, but very plentifull of victuals: and neere to the wall of the Towne runneth the River Euphrates. Here wee bought a Boate and agreed with a Master and Barge-men, for to goe to Babilon. These Boates be but for one voyage: for the streame doth runne so fast downwards that they cannot returne. They carry you to a Towne which they call Felugia, and there you sell the Boat for a little money, for that which cost you fiftie at Birra, you sell there for seven or eight. From Birra to Felugia is sixteene dayes journey, it is not good that one Boat goe alone, for if it should chance to breake, you should have much ado to save your goods from the Arabians, which bee alwayes thereabouts robbing: and in the Night when your Boates be made fast, it is necessarie that you keepe good watch. For the Arabians that be Thieves, will come swimming and steale your goods and flee away, against which a Gunne is very good, for they doe feare it very much. In the River of Euphrates from Birra to Felugia, there bee certaine places where you pay Custome, for many Medines for a some of Camels lading, and certaine Railens and Sope, which is for the tonnes of Aborise, which is Lord of the Arabians and all that great Desart, and hath some Villages vpon the River. Felugia where you unlade your goods which come from Birra, is a little Village: from whence you goe to Babilon in a day.

Babilon is a Towne not very great but very populous, and of great traffique of Strangers, for that it is the way to Persia, Turkia, and Arabia: and from thence doe goe Carouans for these and other places. Here are great store of victuals, which come from Armenia downe the River of Tygris. They are brought vpon rafts made of Goat-skinnes blowne full of winde and bords layd vpon them: and thereupon they lade there goods, which are brought downe to Babilon, which being discharged they open their skinnies, and carrie them backe by Camels, to serue another time. Babilon in times past did belong to the Kingdome of Persia, but now is subiect to the Turke. Over against Babilon there is a very faire Village from whence you passe to Babilon vpon a long Bridge made of Boates, and tyed to a great Chayne of Iron, which is made fast on either side of the River. When any Boates are to passe vp or downe the River, they take away certaine of the Boates untill they be past.

The Tower of Babel is built on this side the River Tygris, towards Arabia from the Towne about seven or eight miles, which Tower is ruinated on all sides, and with the fall thereof hath made as it were a little Mountaine, so that it hath no shape at all: it was made of Bricks dried in the Sunne, and certaine Canes and leaues of the Palme tree layed betwixt the Bricks. There is no entrance to be scene to goe into it. It doth stand vpon a great Plaine, betwixt the Rivers of Euphrates and Tygris.

By the River Euphrates two dayes journey from Babilon, at a place called Ait, in a Field neere vnto it, is a strange thing to see: a mouth that doth continually throw forth against the ayre boyling Pitch with a filthy smoake: which Pitch doth runne abroad into a great field which is alwayes full thereof. The Moores say that it is the mouth of Hell. By reason of the great quantitie of it, the men of that Countrey doe pitch their Boats two or three inches thicke on the out-side, so that no water doth enter into them. Their Boates bee called Danec. When there is great store of water in Tygris, you may goe from Babilon to Basora in eight or nine dayes: if there be small store it will cost you the more dayes.

Basora in times past was vnder the Arabians, but now is subiect to the Turke. But some of them the Turke cannot subdue, for that they hold certaine Ilands in the River Euphrates, which the Turke cannot wiane of them. They be Thieves all and haue no settled dwelling, but remoue from from place to place with their Camels, Goates, and Horses, Wives and Children and all. They haue large blew Gownes, their Wives eares and noses are ringed very full of rings of Copper and Siluer, and they weare rings of Copper about their legs.

Basora standeth neere the Gulfe of Persia, and is a Towne of great trade of Spices and Drugs which come from Ormuz. Also there is great store of Wheat, Rice, and Dates growing thereabout, wherewith they serue Babylon and all the Countrey, Ormuz, and all the parts of India. I went from Basora to Ormuz downe the Gulfe of Persia, in a certaine ship made of bordses, and sowed together with Cayro, which is threed made of the huske of Cocoes, and certaine Canes or straw leaues sowed vpon the seames of the bordses, which is the cause that they leake very much. And so hauing Persia alwayes on the left hand, and the Coast of Arabia on the right hand wee passed many Ilands, and among others, the famous Iland Baharim, from whence come the best Pearles which be round and Orient.

Ormuz is an Iland in circuit about fife and twentie or thirtie miles, and is the dryest Iland in the world: for there is nothing growing in it but onely Salt; for their water, wood, or victuals, and all things necessary come out of Persia, which is about twelue miles from thence. All thereabout be very fruitfull, from whence all kind of victuals are sent vnto Ormuz. The Portugals haue a Castle * here which standeth neere vnto the sea, wherein there is a Captaine for the King of Portugall, hauing vnder him a conuenient number of Souldiers, whereof some part remaine in the Castle, and some in the Towne. In this Towne are Merchants of all Nations, and many Moores and Gentiles. Here is very great trade of all sorts of Spices, Drugs, Silke, cloth of Silke, fine Tapestry of Persia, great store of Pearles which come from the Ile of Baharim, and are the best Pearles of all others, and many Horses of Persia, which serue all India. They haue a Moore to their King which is chosen and gouerned by the Portugals. Their Women are very strangely attired, wearing on their Noses, Eares, Neckes, armes and legges, many rings set with Iewels, and lockes of Siluer and Gold in their eares, and a long barre of gold vpon the side of their Noses. Their Eares with the weight of their Iewels be worne so wide, that a man may thrust three of his fingers into them. Here very shortly after our arriuall wee were put in Prison, and had part of our goods taken from vs by the Captaine of the Castle, whose name was Don Mathias de Albuquerque; and from hence the eleuenth of October hee shipped vs and sent vs for Goa vnto the Vice-roy, which at that time was Don Francisco de Mascarenhas. The ship wherein wee were imbarcked for Goa belonged to the Captaine, and carried one hundred twentie and foure Horses in it. All Merchandize carried to Goa in a ship wherein are Horses, pay no Custome in Goa. The Horses pay custome, the goods pay nothing; but if you come in a ship which bringeth no Horses, you are then to pay eight in the hundred for your goods. The first Citie of India that wee arriued at vpon the fifth of Nouember, after wee had passed the Coast of Zindi, is called Diu, which standeth in an Iland in the Kingdome of Cambai, and is the strongest Towne that the Portugals haue in those parts. It is but little, but well stored with Merchandize; for here they lade many great ships with diuers commodities for the straights of Mecca, for Ormuz, and other places, and these be ships of the Moores and of Christians. But the Moores cannot passe, except they haue a Passport from the Portugals.

Cambaietta is the chiefe Citie of that Prouince, which is great and very populous, and fairely builded for a Towne of the Gentiles: but if there happen any Famine, the people will sell their Children for very little. The last King of Cambai was Sultan Badu, which was killed at the siege of Diu, and shortly after his Citie was taken by the great Mogor, which is the King of Agra and of Delli, which are fortie dayes journey from the Countrey of Cambai. Here the Women weare vpon their armes infinite numbers of rings made of Elephants teeth, wherein they take so much delight, that they had rather bee without their meat then without their Bracelets. Going from Diu wee come to Daman, the second Towne of the Portugals in the Countrey of Cambai, which is distant from Diu fortie leagues. Here is no trade but of Corne and Rice. They haue many Villages vnder them which they quietly possesse in time of Peace, but in time of Warre the enemy is master of them. From thence wee passed by Basaim, and from Basaim to Tana, at both which places is small trade but onely of Corne and Rice.

The tenth of Nouember, wee arriued at Chaul which standeth in the firme land. There bee two Townes, the one belonging to the Portugals, and the other to the Moores. That of the Portugals is neere to the Sea, and commandeth the Bay, and is walled round about. A little aboue that, is the Towne of the Moores which is gouerned by a Moore King called Xa-Maluco. Heere is great traffique for all sorts of Spices, and Drugges, Silke, and cloth of Silke, Sandales, Elephants teeth, and much China worke, and much Sugar which is made of the Nut called Gagara: the Tree is called the Palmer: which is the profitablest Tree in the world: it doth alwayes beare fruit, and doth yeeld Wine, Oyle, Sugar, Vineger, Cordes, Coles, of the leaues are made Thatch for the houses, Sayles for ships, Mats to sit or lie on: of the branches they make their Houses, and broomes to sweepe, of the Tree wood for ships. The wine doth issue out of the top of the tree. They cut a branch of a bough and binde it hard, and hang an earthen pot vpon it, which they emptie euery morning and euery evening, and still it and put in certaine dried Raisins, and it becommeth very strong Wine in short time. Hitherto many ships come from all parts of India, Ormus, and from Mexico: here bee many Moors and Gentiles. They haue a very strange order among them, they worship a Cow, and esteeme much of the Cowes dung to paint the walls of their houses. They will kill nothing not so much as a Louse: for they hold it a sinne to kill any thing. They eat no flesh, but live by Roots, and Rice, and Mlike. And when the husband dyeth his wife is burned with him, if shee be alive: if shee will not, her head is shaven, and then is neuer account made of her after. They say if they should bee buried, it were a great sinne, for of their bodies there would come many Wormes and other vermine, and when their bodies were consumed, those Wormes would lacke sustenance, which were a sinne, wherefore they will bee burned. In Cambaya they will kill nothing, nor haue any thing killed: in the Towne they haue Hospitals to keepe lame Dogs and Cats, and for Birds. They will giue meate to the Ants.

Goa is the most principall Citie which the Portugals haue in India, wherein the Vice-roy remaineth with his Court. It standeth in an Island, which may be five and twentie or thirtie miles about. It is a fine Citie, and for an Indian Towne very faire. The Island is very faire, full of Orchards and Gardens, and many Palmetrees, and hath some Villages. Here be many Merchants of all Nations. And the Fleet which cometh every yeere from Portugall, which be foure, five, or sixe great ships, cometh first hither. And they come for the most part in September, and remaine there fortie or fiftie dayes; and then goe to Cochin, where they lade their Pepper for Portugall. Oftentimes they lade one in Goa, the rest goe to Cochin, which is from Goa an hundred leagues Southward. Goa standeth in the Countrey of Hidalcu, who lyeth in the Countrey five or seuen dayes iourney. His chiefe Citie is called Bisapor. At our comming we were cast into Prison, and examined before the Iustice and demanded for Letter, and were charged to bee spies, but they could proue nothing by vs. Wee continued in Prison vntill the two and twentie of December, and then wee were set at libertie, putting in sureties for two thousand Duckets not to depart the Towne; which sureties Father Stephens an English Iesuite which wee found there, and another religious man a friend of his procured for vs. Our sureties name was Andreas Taborer, to whom we payd two thousand one hundred and fiftie Duckets, and still he demanded more: whereupon we made sute to the Vice-roy and Iustice to haue our money again, considering that they had had it in their hands neere five moneths and could proue nothing against vs. The Viceroy made vs a very sharpe answer, and said we should bee better sifted before it were long, and that they had further matter against vs.

Whereupon wee presently determined rather to seeke our liberties, then to bee in danger for ever to be Slaves in the Countrey, for it was told vs wee should haue the Scrapado. The fifth day of Aprill 1585. in the morning we ranne from thence. And being set ouer the River, we went two daies on foot not without feare, not knowing the way nor hauing any guide, for we durst trust none. One of the first Townes which we came vnto, is called Bellergan, where there is a great Market kept of Diamants, Rubies, Saphires, and many other soft Stones. From Bellergan wee went to Bisapor, which is a very great Towne where the King doth keepe his Court. He hath many Gentiles in his Court and they be great Idolaters. And they haue their Idols standing in the Woods, which they call Pagodes. Some bee like a Cow, some like a Monkie, some like Buffles, some like Peacockes, and some like the Diuell. Here bee very many Elephants which they goe to warre withall. Here they haue good store of Gold and Siluer: their houses are of stone very faire and high. From hence we went for Gulconda, the King whereof is called Cutup de lachach. Here, and in the Kingdome of Hidalcu, and in the Countrey of the King of Decan, be the Diamants found of the olde water. It is a very faire Towne, pleasant, with faire houses of Bricke and Timber, it aboundeth with great store of Fruits and fresh water. Here the men and the women doe goe with a cloth bound about their middles, without any more apparell. We found it here very hote.

The Winter beginneth here about the last of May. In these parts is a Port or Hauen called Masulipatan, which standeth eight dayes iourney from hence toward the Gulfe of Bengala, whether come many ships out of India, Pegu, and Sumatra, very richly laden with Pepper, Spices, and other commodities. The Countrey is very good and fruitfull. From thence I went to Seruidore, which is a fine Countrey, and the King is called, The King of Bread. The houses here bee all thatched and made of Lome. Here be many Moors and Gentiles, but there is small Religion among them. From thence I went to Bellaport, and so to Barrampore, which is in the Countrey of Zelabdim Echebar. In this place their money is made of a kind of Siluer round and thicke, to the value of twentie pence, which is very good siluer. It is marvellous great and a populous Countrey. In their Winter which is in Iune, Iuly, and August, there is no passing in the streets but with Horses, the waters bee so high. The houses are made of lome and thatched. Here is great store of Cotton-cloth made, and painted clothes of Cotton-wooll: here groweth great store of Corne and Rice. We found Marriages great store both in Towne and Villages in many places where wee passed, of Boyes of eight or ten yeeres, and Girles of five or sixe yeeres old. They both doe ride vpon one Horse very trimly decked, and are carried through the Towne

Towne with great piping and playing, and so returne home and eat of a Banquet made of Rice and Fruits, and there they dance the most part of the night, and so make an end of the marriage. They lie not together untill they bee ten yeeres old. They say they marrie their Children so young, because it is an order, that when the man dyeth, the woman must be burned with him: so that if the Father die, yet they may have a Father in law to helpe to bring vp the Children which be married: and also that they will not leaue their Sonnes without Wiues, nor their Daughters without Husbands.

From thence we went to Mandoway, which is a verie strong Towne. It was besieged twelue yeeres by Zelabdim Echebar, before hee could winne it. It standeth vpon a verie great high 10 Rocke as the most part of their Castles doe, and was of a very great circuit. From hence wee went to Ugini and Serringe, where we ouertooke the Ambassadour of Zelabdim Echebar with a maruellous great companie of men, Elephants, and Camels. Here is great trade of Cotton and Cloth made of Cotton, and great store of Drugs. From thence we went to Agra, passing many Riuer, which by reason of the raine were so swollen, that we waded and swamme oftentimes for our liues. Agra is a very great Citie and populous, built with stone, hauing faire and large streets, with a faire Riuer running by it, which falleth into the Gulfe of Bengala. It hath a faire Castle and a strong, with a very faire Ditch. Here bee many Moores and Gentiles, the King is called Zelabdim Echebar: the people for the most part call him The great Mogor. From thence we went for Fatepore, which is the place where the King kept his Court. The Towne is greater 20 then Agra, but the houses and streets bee not so faire. Here dwell many people both Moores and Gentiles. The King hath in Agra and Fatepore, as they doe credibly report, one thousand Elephants, thirtie thousand Horses, one thousand and foure hundred tame Deere, eight hundred Concubines: such store of Ounces, Tygres, Buffles, Cockes and Hawkes, that is very strange to see. He keepeth a great Court, which they call Dericcan. Agra and Fatepore are two very great Cities, either of them much greater then London, and very populous. Betweene Agra and Fatepore are twelue miles, and all the way is a Market of victuals and other things, as full as though a man were still in a Towne, and so many people as if a man were in a Market. They haue many fine Carts, and many of them carued and gilded with Gold, with two wheelles which bee drawne with two little Bulls about the bignesse of our great Dogs in England, and 30 they will runne with any Horse, and carrie two or three men in one of these Carts: they are couered with Silke or very fine cloth, and bee vsed here as our Coaches be in England. Hither is great resort of Merchants from Persia, and out of India, and very much Merchandize of Silke and Cloth, and of precious Stones, both Rubies, Diamants, and Pearles. The King is apparelled in a white Cabie made like a Shirt tyed with strings on the one side, and a little cloth on his head, coloured oftentimes with red or yellow. None come into his house but his Eunuches which keepe his women.

Here in Fatepore wee stayed all three untill the eight and twentieth of September 1585. and then Master Iohn Newberie tooke his iourney toward the Citie of Labor, determining from thence to goe for Persia, and then for Aleppo or Constantinople, whether hee could get soonest 40 passage vnto; and directed me to goe to for Bengala and for Pegn, and did promise me, if it pleased God, to meet me in Bengala within two yeeres with a ship out of England. I left William Leades the Jeweller, in seruice with the King Zelabdim Echebar in Fatepore, who did enterayne him verie well, and gaue him an House and fise Slaues, an Horse, and euery day fixe S. S. in money.

I went from Agra to Satagam in Bengala, in the companie of one hundred and fourescore Boates laden with Salt, Opium, Hinge, Lead, Carpets, and diuers other commodities downe the Riuer Iemena. The chiefe Merchants are Moores and Gentiles. In these Countries they haue many strange Ceremonies. The Bramenes which are their Priests, come to the water and haue a string about their necks made with great ceremonies, & lade vp water with both their hands, 50 and turne the string first with both their hands within, and then one arme after the other out. Though it be neuer so cold, they will wash themselves in cold water or in warme. These Gentiles will eate no Flesh, nor kill any thing. They liue with Rice, Butter, Milke, and Fruits. They pray in the water naked, and dresse their meat and eate it naked, and for their penance they lie flat vpon the earth, and rise vp and turne themselves about thirtie or fortie times, and vse to heaue vp their hands to the Sunne, and to kisse the earth, with their armes and legs stretched along out, and their right leg alwayes before the left. Euery time they lie downe, they make a score on the ground with their finger, to know when their stint is finished. The Bramenes marke themselves in the foreheads, eares, and throats, with a kind of yellow geare which they grind, and euery morning they doe it. And they haue some old men which goe in the streets with a 60 boxe of yellow Powder, and marke men on their heads and neckes as they meet them. And their wiues doe come by ten, twentie, and thirtie together, to the water side singing, and there doe wash themselves, and then vse their Ceremonies, and marke themselves in their foreheads and faces, and carrie some with them, and so depart singing. Their Daughters bee married, at, or before the age of ten yeeres. The men may haue seuen wiues. They be a kind of craftie people, worse then the Iemes. When they salute one another, they heaue vp their hands to their heads, and say, Rame, Rame.

From Agra I came to Prague, where the Riuer Iemena entrencheth into the mightie Riuer Ganges, and Iemena loseth his name. Ganges commeth out of the Northwest, and runneth East into the Gulfe of Bengala. In those parts there are many Tygres, and many Partridges and Turtle-doues, and much other Fowle. Here be many Beggars in these Countries which goe naked, and the people make great account of them: they call them Schesebe. Here I saw one which was a Monster among the rest. He would haue nothing vpon him, his beard was very long, and with the haire of his head hee couered his priuities. The nailes of some of his fingers were two inches long, for he would cut nothing from him, neither would he speake. He was accompanied with eight or ten, and they spake for him. When any man spake to him, he would lay his hand vpon his brest and bowe himselfe, but would not speake. Hee would not speake to the King. We went from Prague downe Ganges, the which is here very broad. Here is great store of fish of sundrie sorts, and of wild Fowle, as of Swannes, Geese, Cranes, and many other things. The Countrey is very fruitfull and populous. The men for the most part haue their faces shauen, and their heads very long, except some which be all shauen saue the crowne: and some of them are as though a man should set a dish on their heads, and shauie them round, all but the crowne. In this Riuer of Ganges are many Ilands. His water is very sweet and pleasant, and the Countrey adioyning very fruitfull.

From thence we went to Bannaras which is a great Towne, and great store of Cloth is made there of Cotton, and Shashes for the Moores. In this place they bee all Gentiles, and be the greatest Idolaters that euer I saw. To this Towne come the Gentiles on Pilgrimage out of farre Countries. Here alongst the waters side, bee very many faire houses, and in all of them, or for the most part they haue their Images standing, which bee euill fauoured, made of stone and wood, some like Lyons, Leopards, and Monkeys, some like Men and Women, and Peacocks, and some like the Diuell with foure armes & foure hands. They sit crosse legged, some with one thing in their hands, and some another, and by breake of day and before, there are men and women which come out of the Towne and wash themselves in Ganges. And there are diuers old men, which vpon places of earth made for the purpose, sit praying, and they giue the people three or foure strawes, which they take and hold them betweene their fingers when they wash themselves: and some sit to marke them in the forehead, and they haue in a cloth a little Rice, Barlie, or money, which, when they haue washed themselves, they giue to the old men which sit there praying. Afterwards they goe to diuers of their Images, and giue them of their Sacrifices. And when they giue, the old men say certaine prayers, and then is all holy. And in diuers places there standeth a kind of Image which in their language they call Ada. And they haue diuers great stones carued, whereon they powre water, & throw thereupon some Rice, Wheat, Barley, and some other things. This Ada hath foure hands with clawes. Moreover, they haue a great place made of Stone like to a Well with steps to goe downe; wherein the water standeth very foule and stinketh: for the great quantitie of Flowers, which continually they throw into it, doe make it stinke. There be alwayes many people in it: for they say when they wash themselves in it, that their sinnes be forgiven them, because God, as they say, did wash himselfe in that place. They gather vp the sand in the bottome of it, and say it is holy.

They neuer pray but in the water, and they wash themselves ouer head, and lade vp water with both their hands, and turne themselves about, and then they drinke a little of the water three times, and so goe to their Gods which stand in those houses. Some of them will wash a place which is their length, and then will pray vpon the earth with their armes and legges at length out, and will rise vp and lie down, and kisse the ground twentie or thirtie times, but they will not stirre their right foot. And some of them will make their Ceremonies with fiftene or sixteene pots little and great, and ring a little Bell when they make their mixtures ten or twelue times: and they make a circle of water round about their pots and pray, and diuers sit by them, and one that reacheth them their Pots: and they say diuers things ouer their pots many times, and when they haue done, they goe to their Gods, and strow their Sacrifices which they thinke are very holy, and marke many of them which sit by, in the forehead, which they take as a great gift. There come fiftie and sometime an hundred together, to wash them in this Well, and to offer to these Idols. They haue in some of these Houses their Idols standing, and one sitteth by them in warme weather with a fanne to blow winde vpon them. And when they see any companie comming, they ring a little Bell which hangeth by them, and many giue their almes, but especially those which come out of the Countrey. Many of them are blacke and haue clawes of brasse with long nayles, & some ride vpon Peacocks & other Fowles which bee euill fauoured, with long hawkes bills, and some like one thing and some another, but none with a good face. Among the rest there is one which they make great account of: for they say hee giueth them all things both food and apparell, and one sitteth alwayes by him with a fanne to make winde towards him.

Here some bee burned to ashes, some scortched in the fire and throwne into the water, and Dogs

- Dogs and Foxes doe presently eat them. The Wiues here doe burne with their Husbands when they die, if they will not, their heads be shaven, and neuer account is made of them afterward. The people goe all naked save a little cloth bound about their middle. Their women haue their neckes, armes and eares decked with rings of Siluer, Copper, Tinne, and with round hoopcs made of Iuorie, adorned with Amber stones, and with many Agats, and they are marked with a great spot of red in their foreheads, and a stroke of red vp to the crowne, and so it runneth three manner of wayes. In the Winter, which is our May, the men weare quilted Gownes of cotton like to our Mattraces and quilted Caps like to our great Grocers morters, with a slit to looke out at, and so tyed downe beneath their eares. If a man or a woman be sicke and like to die, they will lay him before their Idols all night, and that shall helpe him or make an end of him. And if he doe not mend that night, his friends will come and sit with him a little and crie, and afterwards will carrie him to the waters side, and set him vpon a little raft made of reeds, and so let him goe downe the Riuer. When they bee married the man and the woman come to the water side, and there is an old man which they call a Bramane, that is, a Priest, a Kow, and a Calfe, and a Kow with Calfe. Then the Man and the Woman, the Kow and Calfe, and the old man goe into the water together, and they giue the old man a white cloth of foure yards long, and a basket crosse-bound with diuers things in it: the cloth hee layeth vpon the backe of the Kow, and then he taketh the Kow by the end of the tayle, and sayeth certaine words: and shee hath a Copper or a Brasse pot full of water, and the man doeth hold his hand by the old mans hand, and the wiues hand by her husbands, and all haue the Kow by the tayle, and they powre water out of the pot vpon the Kowes tayle, and it runneth through all their hands, and they lade vp water with their hands, and then the old man doeth tye him and her together by their clothes. Which done, they goe round about the Kow and Calfe, and then they giue somewhat to the poore which be alwaies there, and to the Bramane or Priest they giue one Kow and Calfe, and afterward goe to diuers of their Idols and offer money, and liedowne flat vpon the ground and kisse it diuers times, and then goe their way. Their chiefe Idols be blacke and cuill-fauored, their mouthes monstrous, their eares gilded, and full of Jewels, their teeth and eyes of Gold, Siluer, and Glasse, some hauing one thing in their hands, and some another. You may not come into the houses where they stand, with your shooes on. They haue continually Lampes burning before them.
- From Bannaras I went to Patanaw downe the Riuer Ganges: where in the way wee passed many faire Townes, and a Countrie very fruitfull: and many very great Riuers doe enter into Ganges, and some of them as great as Ganges, which cause Ganges to be of a great bredth, and so broad that in the time of raine you cannot see from one side to the other. These Indians when they be scorched and throwne into the water, the men swimme with their faces downewards, the women with their faces vpwards, I thought they tyed something to them to cause them to doe so: but they say no. There bee very many Thieues in this Countrie, which bee like to the Arabians: for they haue no certaine abode, but are sometime in one place, and sometime in another. Here the women be so decked with Siluer and Copper, that it is strange to see, they vse no shooes by reason of the rings of Siluer and Copper which they weare on their toes. Here at Patanaw they finde Gold in this manner. They dig deepe pits in the earth, and wash the earth in great bolls, and therein they find the Gold, and they make the pits round about with bricke, that the earth fall not in. Patanaw is a very long and a great Towne. In times past it was a Kingdome, but now it is vnder Zelabdim Echebar the Great Mogor. The Men are tall and slender, and haue many old folkes among them: the Houses are simple, made of earth, and couered with straw, the Streets are very large. In this Towne there is a trade of Cotton, and cloth of Cotton, much Sugar, which they carrie from hence to Bengala and India, very much Opium, and other commodities. Hee that is chiefe here vnder the King, is called Tipperdas, and is of great account among the people. Here in Patanaw I saw a dissembling Prophet which sate vpon an Horse in the Market place, and made as though he slept, and many of the people came and touched his feet with their hands, and then kissed their hands. They tooke him for a great man, but sure he was a lasie lubber. I left him there sleeping. The people of these Countries be much giuen to such prating and dissembling hypocrites.
- From Patanaw I went to Tanda, which is in the Land of Gouren. It hath in times past beene a Kingdome, but now is subdued by Zelabdim Echebar. Great trade and traffique is here of Cotton, and of cloth of Cotton. The people goe naked with a little cloth bound about their waste. It standeth in the Countrie of Bengala. Here be many Tigres, wilde Buffes, and great store of wilde Fowle: they are very great Idolaters. Tanda standeth from the Riuer Ganges a league, because in times past, the Riuer flowing ouer the bankes in time of raine did drowne the Countrie and many Villages, and so they doe remaine. And the old way which the Riuer Ganges was wont to runne, remaineth drie, which is the occasion that the Citie doeth stand so farre from the water. From Agra downe the Riuer Iemena, and downe the Riuer Ganges, I was fife moneths comming to Bengala, but it may be sayled in much shorter time.
- I went from Bengala into the Countrie of Conche, which lieth fife and twenty dayes iourney ney Northwards from Tanda. The King is a Gentile, his name is Suckel Counse: his Countrie is great, and lieth not farre from Cauchin China; for they say they haue Pepper from thence. The Port is called Cacchegate. All the Countrie is set with Bambos or Canes made sharpe at both the ends and driuen into the earth, and they can let in the water and drowne the ground aboue knee deepe, so that Men nor Horses can passe. They poison all the waters if any warres bee. Here they haue much Silke and Muske, and cloth made of Cotton. The people haue eares which be maruelous great of a spanne long, which they draw out in length by deuices when they bee young. Here they be all Gentiles, and they will kill nothing. They haue Hospitals for Sheepe, Goats, Dogs, Cats, Birds, and for all other liuing creatures. When they be old and lame they keepe them vntill they die. If a man catch or buy any quicke thing in other places and bring it thither, they will giue him money for it, or other victuals, and keepe it in their Hospitals, or let it goe. They will giue meat to the Ants. Their small money is Almonds, which oftentimes they vse to eate.

From thence I returned to Hugeli, which is the place where the Portugals keepe in the Countrie of Bengala which standeth in 23. degrees of Northerly latitude, and standeth a league from Satagan: they call it Porto Piqueno. We went through the Wildernesse, because the right way was full of thieues, where we passed the Countrie of Genren, where we found but few Villages, but almost all Wildernesse, and saw many Buffes, Swine and Deere, Grasse longer then a man, and very many Tigres. Not farre from Porto Piqueno South-westward, standeth an Hauen which is called Angeli, in the Countrie of Orixa. It was a Kingdome of it selfe, and the King was a great friend to strangers. Afterwards it was taken by the King of Patan, which was their neighbour, but he did not enioy it long, but was taken by Zelabdim Echebar, which is King of Agra, Delli, and Cambaia. Orixa standeth fixe dayes journey from Satagan South-westward. In this place is very much Rice, and cloth made of Cotton, and great store of cloth which is made of Grasse, which they call Terna, it is like a Silke. They make good cloth of it which they send for India, and diuers other places. To this Hauen of Angeli come euery yeere many ships out of India, Negapatan, Samatra, Malacca, and diuers other places; and lade from thence great store of Rice, and much cloth of Cotton wooll, much Sugar, and long Pepper, great store of Butter and other victuals for India. Satagam is a faire Citie for a Citie of the Moors, and very plentifull of all things. Here in Bengala they haue euery day in one place or other a great Market which they call Chandean, and they haue many great Boats which they call Pericose, wherewithall they goe from place to place and buy Rice, and many other things: these Boats haue foure and twenty or fixe and twenty Oares to rowe them, they be great of burthen, but haue no couerture. Here the Gentiles haue the water of Ganges in great estimation, for hauing good water neere them, yet they will fetch the water of Ganges a great way off, and if they haue not sufficient to drinke, they will sprinkle a little on them, and then they thinke themselves well. From Satagam I trauelled by the Countrie of the King of Tippara or Porto Grande, with whom the Mogores or Mogen haue almost continuall warres. The Mogen which be of the Kingdome of Recon * and Rame, be stronger then the King of Tippara, so that Chatigan or Porto Grande is oftentimes vnder the King of Recon.

There is a Countrie foure dayes journey from Conche before mentioned, which is called Botanter, and the Citie Bottia, the King is called Dermain; the people whereof are very tall and strong, and there are Merchants which come out of China, and they say out of Musconia or Tartarie. And they come to buy Muske, Cambals, Agats, Silke, Pepper, and Saffron like the Saffron of Persia. The Countrie is very great, three moneths journey. There are very high Mountaines in this Countrie, and one of them so steepe, that when a man is fixe dayes journey off it he may see it perfectly. Vpon these Mountaines are people which haue eares of a spanne long: if their eares be not long they call them Apes. They say that when they bee vpon the Mountaines, they see ships in the Sea sayling to and fro; but they know not from whence they come, nor whither they goe. There are Merchants which come out of the East, they say, from vnder the Sunne, which is from China, which haue no beards, and they say there it is something warme. But those which come from the other side of the Mountaines, which is from the North, say there it is very cold. These Northerne Merchants are apparellled with woollen Cloth and Hats, white Hosen close, and Boots which bee of Musconia or Tartarie. They report that in their Countrie they haue very good Horses, but they bee little: some men haue foure, fiue, or fixe hundred Horses and Kine: they liue with Milke and Fleth. They cut the tayles of their Kine, and sell them very deare, for they be in great request, and much esteemed in those parts. The haire of them is a yard long, the rumpe is aboue a spanne long: they vse to hang them for brauerie vpon the heads of their Elephants: they be much vsed in Pegu and China: they buy and sell by scores vpon the ground. The people be very swift on foot.

From Chatigan in Bengala, I came to Bacola; the King whereof is a Gentile, a man very well disposed, and delighteth much to shoot in a Gunne. His Countrie is very great and fruitfull, and store of Rice, much Cotton cloth, and cloth of Silke. The Houses be very faire and high builded, the Streets large, the People naked, except a little cloth about their waste. The Women men weare great store of siluer hoopcs about their neckes and armes, and their legs are ringed with Siluer and Copper, and rings made of Elephants teeth.

From Bacola I went to Serrepore which standeth vpon the Riuer of Ganges, the King is called Chondery. They be all hereabout Rebels against the King Zelabdim Echebar: for here are so many Riuers and Ilands, that they flee from one to another, whereby his Horsemen cannot preuaile against them. Great store of Cotton cloth is made here.

Serrepore.

Sinnergan is a Towne fixe leagues from Serrepore, where there is the best and finest cloth made of Cotton that is in all India. The chiefe King of all these Countries is called Isacan, and he is chiefe of all the other Kings, and is a great friend to all Christians. The Houses here, as they be in the most part of India, are very little, and couered with straw, and haue a few mats round about the walls, and the doore to keepe out the Tigres and the Foxes. Many of the people are very rich. Here they will eate no flesh, nor kill no beast: they liue of Rice, Milke, and fruits. They goe with a little cloth before them, and all the rest of their body is naked. Great store of Cotten cloth goeth from hence, and much Rice, wherewith they serue all India, Ceylon, Pegu, Malacca, Sumatra, and many other places.

I went from Serrepore the eight and twentieth of Nouember, 1586. for Pegu in a small Ship or Foist of one Albert Caranillos, and so passing downe Ganges, and passing by the Iland of Sundiua, Porto Grande, or the Countrie of Tippera, the Kingdome of Recon and Magen, leauing them on our left side with a faire winde at North-west: our course was South and by East, which brought vs to the Barre of Negrais to Pegu: if any contrary winde had come, wee had throwne many of our things ouer boord: for we were so pestered with people and goods, that there were scant place to lie in. From Bengala to Pegu is ninety leagues. We entred the Barre of Negrais, which is a braue Barre, and hath foure fathomes water where it hath least. Three dayes after we came to Cosmin, which is a very pretie Towne, and standeth very pleasantly, very well furnished with all things. The people be very tall and well disposed; the women white, round faced, with little eyes: the houses are high built, set vpon great high posts, and they goe vp to them with long Ladders for feare of the Tigres which be very many. The Countrie is very frui full of all things. Here are very great Figs, Oranges, Coccoes, and other fruits. The Land is very high that we fall withall; but after we be entred the Barre, it is very lowe and full of Riuers, for they goe all to and fro in Boats, which they call Paroes, and keepe their houses with wife and children in them.

From the Barre of Negrais to the Citie of Pegu is ten dayes iourney by the Riuers. We went from Cosmin to Pegu in Paroes or Boats, and passing vp the Riuers wee came to Medon, which is a pretie Towne, where there be a wonderfull number of Paroes, for they keepe their Houses and Markets in them all vpon the water. They rowe to and fro, and haue all their merchandises in their Boats with a great Sombrero or Shadow ouer their heads to keepe the Sunne from them, which is as broad as a great Cart wheele made of the leaues of the Coco trees and Figge trees, and is very light.

Medon.

From Medon we went to Dela, which is a very faire Towne, and hath a faire Port into the Sea, from whence goe many ships to Malacca, Mecca, and many other places. Here are eigh- teen or twenty very great and long houses, where they tame and keepe many Elephants of the Kings: for there about in the Wildernesse they catch the wilde Elephants. It is a very fruitfull Countrie. From Dela wee went to Cirion, which is a good Towne, and hath a faire Port into the Sea, whither come many ships from Mecca, Malacca, and Sumatra, and from diuers other places. And there the ships stay and discharge, and send vp their goods in Paroes to Pegu.

Cirion.

From Cirion we went to Macao, which is a pretie Town, where we left our Boats and in the morning taking Delingeages, which are a kinde of Coaches made of cords and cloth quilted, and carried vpon a stang between three or foure men: we came to Pegu the same day. Pegu is a Citie very great, strong, and very faire, with walls of stone, and great ditches round about it. There are two Townes, the old Towne and the new. In the old Towne are all the Merchants strangers, and very many Merchants of the Countrie. All the goods are sold in the old Towne which is very great, and hath many suburbs round about it, and all the houses are made of Canes which they call Bambos, and be couered with straw. In your House you haue a Ware-house, which they call Godon, which is made of bricke, to put your goods in, for oftentimes they take fire and burne in an houre foure or fife hundred houses: so that if the Godon were not, you should bee in danger to haue all burned, if any winde should rise, at a trice. In the new Towne is the King, and all his Nobilitie and Gentry. It is a Citie very great and populous, and is made square and with very faire Walls, and a great Ditch round about it full of water with many Crocodiles in it: it hath twenty Gates, and they be made of stone, for euery square fife Gates. There are also many Turrets for Centinels to watch, made of wood, and gilded with Gold very faire. The Streets are the fairest that euer I saw, as straight as a line from one Gate to the other, and so broad, that ten or twelue men may ride afront thorow them. On both sides of them at euery mans doore is set a Palmer tree, which is the Nut-tree which make a very faire

The Kings house is in the middle of the Citie, and is walled and ditched round about: and the buildings within are made of wood very sumptuously gilded, and great workmanship is vpon the fore-front, which is likewise very costly gilded. And the house wherein his Pagode or Idoll standeth is couered with tiles of siluer, and all the walls are gilded with gold. Within the first Gate of the Kings house is a great large roome, on both sides whereof are houses made for the Kings Elephants, which bee maruellous great and faire, and are brought vnto warres and in seruice of the King. And among the rest hee hath foure white Elephants, which are very strange and rare: for there is none other King which hath them but hee if any other King hath one, hee will send vnto him for it. When any of these white Elephants are brought vnto the King, all the Merchants in the Citie are commanded to see them, and to giue him a present of halfe a Ducat, which doth come to a great summe: for that there are many Merchants in the Citie. After that you haue giuen your present you may come and see them at your pleasure, although they stand in the Kings house. This King in his Title is called the King of the white Elephants. If any other King haue one, and will not send it him, hee will make warre with him for it: for hee had rather lose a great part of his Kingdome, then not to conquer him. They doe very great seruice vnto these white Elephants; euery one of them standeth in an house gilded with gold, and they doe feed in vessels of siluer and gilt. One of them when hee doth goe to the Riuer to bee washed, as euery day they doe, goeth vnder a Canopie of cloth of gold or of silke carried ouer him by sixe or eight men, and eight or ten men goe before him playing on Drummes, Shawmes, or other Instruments: and when hee is washed and commeth out of the Riuer, there is a Gentleman which doth wash his feet in a siluer Basin: which is his office giuen him by the King. There is no such account made of any blacke Elephant, bee he neuer so great. And surely there bee wonderfull faire and great, and some bee nine cubits in height. And they doe report that the King hath about fve thousand Elephants of warre, besides many other which be not taught to fight.

This King hath a very large place wherein hee taketh the wilde Elephants. It standeth about a mile from Pegu, builded with a faire Court within, and is in a great Groue or Wood: and there be many Hunts-men, which goe into the Wildernesse with shee Elephants: for without the shee they are not to be taken. And they be taught for that purpose: and euery Hunter hath fve or sixe of them: and they say that they anoint the shee Elephants with a certaine ointment, which when the wilde Elephant doth smell, he will not leaue her. When they haue brought the wilde Elephant neere vnto the place, they send word vnto the Towne, and many Horsemen and footmen come out and cause the shee Elephant to enter into a straight way which doth goe to the Palace, and the shee and hee doe runne in: for it is like a Wood: and when they be in, the gate doth shut. Afterward they get out the female: and when the male seeth that he is left alone, he weepeth and crieth, and runneth against the walls, which be made of so strong trees, that some of them doe breake their teeth with running against them. Then they pricke him with sharpe canes, and cause him to goe into a strait house, and there they put a rope about his middle & about his feet, and let him stand there three or foure dayes without eating or drinking: and then they bring a female to him, with meate and drinke, and within few dayes he becommeth tame. The chiefe force of the King is in these Elephants. And when they goe into the warres they set a frame of wood vpon their backes, bound with great cords, wherein sit foure or sixe men, which fight with Gunnes, Bowes and Arrowes, Darts and other weapons. And they say that their skinnies are so thicke that a pellet of an Harquebussle will scarce pierce them, except it bee in some tender place. Their weapons be very bad. They haue Gunnes, but shoot very badly in them, Darts and Swords short without points.

The King keepeth a very great State: when hee sitteth abroad, as hee doth euery day twice, all his Noblemen which they call Shemmes, sit on each side, a good distance off, and a great guard without them. The Court yard is very great. If any man will speake with the King, hee is to kneele downe, to heaue vp his hands to his head, and to put his head to the ground three times, when hee entreteth, in the middle way, and when hee commeth neere to the King: and then hee sitteth downe and talketh with the King: if the King like well of him, hee sitteth neere him within three or foure paces: if hee thinke not well of him, hee sitteth further off. When hee goeth to warre, hee goeth very strong. At my being there hee went to Ochia in the Countie of Siam with three hundred thousand men, and fve thousand Elephants. Thirty thousand men were his Guard. These people doe eate Roots, Herbes, Leaues, Dogs, Cats, Rats, Serpents, and Snakes; they refuse almost nothing. When the King rideth abroad, he rideth with a great Guard, and many Noblemen, oftentimes vpon an Elephant with a fine Castle vpon him very fairely gilded with gold; and sometimes vpon a great frame like an Horf-liter, which hath a little house vpon it couered ouer head, but open on the sides, which is all gilded with gold, and set with many Rubies and Saphires, whereof hee hath infinite store in his Countie, and is carried vpon sixteen or eightene mens shoulders. This Coach in their Language is called Serrion. Very great feasting feasting and triumphing is many times before the King both of men and women. This King hath little force by Sea, because he hath but very few ships.

Hee hath houses full of Gold and Silver, and bringeth in often, but spendeth very little, and hath the Mines of Rubies and Saphires, and Spinellles. Neere vnto the Palace of the King, there is a Treasure wonderfull rich; the which because it is so precious doth not adcount of it, and it standeth open for all men to see in a great walled Court with two Gates, which bee alwayes open. There are foure Houses gilded very richly, and covered with Lead in euery one of them are Pagodes or Images of huge stature and great value. In the first is the Picture of a King in Gold with a Crowne of gold on his head, full of great Rubies and Saphires, and about him there stand foure Children of Gold. In the second house is the picture of a Man in Silver wonderfull great, as high as an house; his Foot is as long as a man, and hee is made sitting with a Crowne on his head very rich with Stones. In the third house is the picture of a Man greater then the other made of Brasse, with a rich Crowne on his head. In the fourth and last house doth stand another made of Brasse, greater then the other, with a Crowne also on his head very rich with Stones. In another Court not farre from this, stand foure other Pagodes or Idols, marvellous great of Copper, made in the same place where they doe stand; for they bee so great, that they be not to be remoued: they stand in foure Houses gilded very faire, and are themselves gilded all ouer saue their heads, and they shew like a blacke Marian. Their expences in gilding of their Images are wonderfull. The King hath one Wife and about three hundred Concubines, by which they say he hath fourescore or fiftiescore & ten Children. He sitteth in Iudgement almost euery day. They vse no speech, but giue vp their supplications written in the Leanes of a Tree with the point of an Iron bigger then a Bodkin. These Leanes are an elle long, and about two inches broad; they are also double. Hee which giueth his supplication, doth stand in a place a little distance off with a present. If his matter bee liked of, the King accepteth of his present, and granteth his request; if his sute be not liked of, hee returneth with his present; for the King will not take it.

In India there are few commodities which serue for Pegu, except Opium of Cambai, painted Cloth of Saint Thome, or of Masulipatan, and white cloth of Bengala, which is spent there in great quantitie. They bring thither also much Cotton, Yarned coloured with a Root which they call Saia, which will neuer lose his colour: it is very well sold here, and very much of it commeth yeerely to Pegu. By your money you lose much. The ships which come from Bengala, Saint Thome, and Masulipatan, come to the barre of Nigra and to Cosmin. To Martaban a port of the Sea in the Kingdome of Pegu, come many ships from Malacca laden with Sandell, Porcelanes, and other wares of China, and with Gumphora of Borneo, and Pepper from Acheu in Sumatra. To Cirion a Port of Pegu come ships from Mecca with Woollen cloth, Scarlets, Velluts, Opium, and such like. There are in Pegu eight Brokers, whom they call Targhe, which are bound to sell your goods at the price which they bee worth, and you giue them for their labour two in the hundred: and they be bound to make your debt good, because you sell your Merchandizes vpon their word. If the Broker pay you not at his day, you may take him home, and keepe him in your house: which is a great shame for him. And if hee pay you not presently, you may take his Wife and Children and his Slaues, and bind them at your doore, and see them in the Sunne; for that is the Law of the Countrey. Their current money in these parts is a kind of brasse which they call Gansa, wherewith you may buy Gold, Silver, Rubies, Muske, and all other things. The Gold and Silver is Merchandise, and is worth sometimes more, and sometimes lesse, as other wares bee. This brasse money doth goe by a weight which they call a Biza, and commonly this Biza after our account is worth about halfe a Crowne or somewhat lesse. The Merchandize which bee in Pegu, are Gold, Silver, Rubies, Saphires, Spinells, Muske, Benjamin or Frankincense, long Pepper, Tinne, Lead, Copper, Lacca whereof they make hard Waxe, Rice, & Wine made of Rice, and some Sugar.

The Elephants doe eat the Sugar Canes, or else they would make very much. And they consume many Canes likewise in making of their Varellaes or Idol Temples, which are in great number both great and small. They bee made round like a Sugar loafe, some are as high as a Church, very broad beneath, some a quarter of a mile in compasse: within they be all earth done about with stone. They consume in these Varellaes great quantitie of Gold; for that they bee all gilded aloft: and many of them from the top to the bottome: and euery ten or twelue yeeres they must be new gilded, because the raine consumeth off the Gold: for they stand open abroad. If they did not consume their gold in these vanities, it would bee very plentifull and good cheape in Pegu. About two dayes journey from Pegu, there is a Varelle or Pagode, which is the Pilgrimage of the Pegues: it is called Dogoune, and is of a wonderfull bignesse, and all gilded from the foot to the top. And there is an house by it, wherein the Tallipoies which are their Priests doe Preach. This house is five and fiftie paces in length, and hath three pawnes or walkes in it, and fortie great Pillars gilded, which stand betweene the walkes; and it is open on all sides with a number of small pillars, which bee likewise gilded: it is gilded with Gold, within and without. There are houses very faire round about for the Pilgrimes to lie in: and many goodly Houses for the the Tallipoies, to Preach in, which are full of Images both of men and women, which are all gilded over with Gold. It is the fairest place, as I suppose, that is in the world: it standeth very high, and there are foure wayes to it, which all along are set with Trees of fruits, in such wise that a man may goe in the shade about two miles in length. And when their Feast day is, a man can hardly passe by water or by land for the great presse of people; for they come from all places of the Kingdome of Pegu thither at their Feast.

In Pegu they have many Tallipoies or Priests, which Preach against all abuses. Many men resort vnto them. When they enter into their Kiack, that is to say, their holy place or Temple, at the doore there is a great Jarre of water with a Cocke or ladle in it, and there they wash their feet; and then they enter in, and lift vp their hands to their heads, first to their Preacher, and then to the Sunne, and so sit downe. The Tallipoies goe very strangely apparelled, with one Cambriline or thinne cloth next to their bodie of a browne colour, another of yellow, doubled many times vpon their shoulder: and those two bee girded to them with a broad Girdle: and they haue a Skinne of leather hanging on a string about their neckes, whereupon they sit, bare headed and bare footed; for none of them weareth Shooes; with their right armes bare, and a great broad Sombrero or shadow in their hands to defend them in the Summer from the Sunne, and in the Winter from the Raine. When the Tallipoies or Priests take their Orders, first they goe to Schoole vntill they bee twentie yeeres old or more, and then they come before a Tallipoie, appointed for that purpose, whom they call Rowli: hee is of the chiefeft and most learned, and hee opposeth them, and afterward examineth them many times, whether they will leaue their Friends, and the companie of all Women, and take vpon them the habite of a Tallipoie. If any be content, then he rideth vpon an Horse about the streets very richly apparelled, with Drums and Pipes, to shew that he leaueth the riches of the world to bee a Tallipoie. In few dayes after, he is carried vpon a thing like an Horflitter, which they call a Serion, vpon ten or twelue mens shoulders in the apparell of a Tallipoie, with Pipes and Drums, and many Tallipoies with him, and all his friends, and so they goe with him to his House, which standeth without the Towne, and there they leaue him. Euerie one of them hath his House, which is very little, set vpon sixe or eight Posts, and they goe vp to them with a Ladder of twelue or fourtene stauces. Their Houses bee for the most part by the high wayes side, and among the Trees, and in the Woods. And they goe with a great Pot made of wood or fine earth, and couered, tyed with a broad girdle vpon their shoulder, which commeth vnder their arme, wherewith they goe to begge their victuals which they eate, which is Rice, Fish, and Herbes. They demand nothing, but come to the doore, and the people presently doe giue them, some one thing, and some another: and they put all together in their Pot: for they say they must eate of their Almes, and therewith content themselves. They keepe their Feasts by the Moone: and when it is new Moone they keepe their greatest feast: and then the people send Rice and other things to that Kiack or Church of which they bee; and there all the Tallipoies doe meete which bee of that Church, and eate the victuals which are sent them. When the Tallipoies doe Preach, many of the people carrie them gifts into the pulpit where they sit and preach. And there is one which sitteth by them to take that which the people bring. It is deuided among them. They haue none other Ceremonies nor seruice that I could see, but onely Preaching.

I went from Pegu to Iamahy, which is in the Countrey of the Langerianes, whom wee call Langermes; it is five and twentie dayes iourney Northeast from Pegu. In which iourney I passed many fruitfull and pleasant Countries. The Countrey is very low, and hath many faire Riuer. The Houses are very bad, made of Canes, and couered with Straw. Here are many wilde Buffes, and Elephants. Iamahy is a very faire and great Towne, with faire houses of stone, well peopled, the streetes are very large, the men very well set and strong, with a cloth about them, bare headed and bare footed: for in all these Countries they weare no Shooes. The Women bee much fairer then those of Pegu. Heere in all these Countries they haue no Wheat. They make some cakes of Rice. Hither to Iamahy come many Merchants out of China, and bring great store of Muske, Gold, Silver, and many other things of China worke. Heere is great store of Victuals: they haue such plentie, that they will not milke the Buffes, as they doe in all other places. Heere is great store of Copper and Benjamin. In these Countries when the people bee sicke they make a vowe to offer meat vnto the Diuell, if they escape: and when they bee recovered they make a Banquet with many Pipes and Drums and other Instruments, and dauncing all the night, and their friends come and bring gifts, Cocos, Figges, Arrecaes, and other Fruits, and with great dauncing and reioycing they offer to the Diuell, and say, they giue the Diuell to eate, and driue him out. When they bee dauncing and playing they will cry and hallow very loud; and in this sort they say they driue him away. And when they be sicke a Tallipoie or two euery night doth sit by them and sing, to please the Diuell that hee should not hurt them. And if any die hee is carried vpon a great frame made like a Tower, with a couering all gilded with gold made of Canes, carried with fourtene or sixtene men, with Drums and Pipes and other instruments playing before him to a place out of the Towne and there is burned. He is accompanied with all his Friends and Neighbours, all men: and they giue to the Tallipoies or Priests many Mats and Cloth: and then they returne to the house and there make a Feast for two dayes: and then the Wife with all the neighbours hours Wiues and her friends, goe to the place where he was burned, and there they sit a certaine time and cry, and gather the peeces of bones which bee left vnburned and burie them, and then returne to their houses and make an end of all mourning. And the men and women which bee neere of kin doe shaue their heads, which they do not vse except it be for the death of a friend: for they much esteeme of their haire.

Caplan is the place where they finde the Rubies, Saphires, and the Spinelles: it standeth sixe dayes journey from Ana in the Kingdome of Pegu. There are many great high Hills out of which they digge them. None may goe to the Pits but onely those which digge them.

In Pegu, and in all the Countries of Ana, Langeiannes, Siam, and the Bramas, the men weare bunches or little round Balls in their priuie members: some of them weare two and some three. They cut the skinne and so put them in, one into one side and another into the other side; which they doe when they bee fiue and twentie or thirtie yeeres old, and at their pleasure they take one or more of them out as they thinke good. When they be married the Husband is for euery Child which his Wife hath, to put in one vntill hee come to three, and then no more: for they say the women doe desire them. They were inuented because they should not abuse the Male sexe. For in times past all those Countries were so giuen to that Villanie, that they were very scarce of people. It was also ordayned, that the Women should not haue past three cubites of Cloth in their nether clothes, which they bind about them; which are so strait, that when they goe in the streets, they shew one side of the legge bare about the knee. The bunches aforesaid bee of diuers sorts: the least be as bigge as a little Walnut, and very round: the greatest are as bigge as a little Hens egge: some are of Brasse, and some of Siluer: but those of siluer bee for the King and his Noblemen. These are gilded and made with great cunning, and ring like a little bell. There are some made of Lead, which they call Selmy, because they ring but little: and these be of lesser price for the poorer sort. The King sometimes taketh his out, and giueth them to his Noblemen as a great gift: and because hee hath vsed them, they esteeme them greatly. They will put one in, and heale vp the place in seuen or eight dayes.

The Bramas which bee of the Kings Countrey (for the King is a Brama) haue their legges or bellies, or some part of their body, as they thinke good themselues, made blacke with certaine things which they haue: they vse to pricke the skinne, and to put on it a kind of Anile or Blacking, which doth continue alwayes. And this is counted an Honour among them: but none may haue it but the Bramas which are of the Kings kindred.

These people weare no Beards: they pull out the haire on their faces with little pinsons made for that purpose. Some of them will let sixtene or twentie haire grow together, some in one place of his face and some in another, and pulleth out all the rest: for he carrieth his pinsons alwayes with him to pull the haire out as soone as they appeare. If they see a man with a beard they wonder at him. They haue their teeth blacked both men and women, for they say a Dog hath his teeth white, therefore they will blacke theirs.

The Pegues if they haue a sute in the law which is so doubtfull that they cannot well determine it, put two long Canes into the water where it is very deepe: and both the parties goe into the water by the poles, and there sit men to Iudge, and they both doe diue vnder the water, and he which remaineth longest vnder the water doth winne the sute.

The tenth of Ianuarie I went from Pegu to Malacca, passing by many of the Ports of Pegu, as Martauau, the Iland of Tani, from whence commeth great store of Tinne which serueth all India, the Ilands of Tanaseri, Iunfalaon, and many others; and so came to Malacca the eight of February, where the Portugals haue a Castle which standeth neere the Sea. And the Countrey fast without the Towne belongeth to the Malayos, which is a kind of proud people. They goe naked with a cloth about their middle, and a little roll of cloth about their heads. Hither come many ships from China, and from the Malucos, Banda, Timor, and from many other Ilands of the Ianas, which bring great store of Spices and Drugs, and Damants and other Jewels. The voyages into many of these Ilands belong vnto the Captaine of Malacca: so that none may goe thither without his licence: which yeeld him great summes of money euery yeere. The Portugals heere haue oftentimes warres with the King of Achem, which standeth in the Iland of Sumatra: from whence commeth great store of Pepper and other Spices euery yeere to Pegu and Mecca, within the Red Sea, and other places.

When the Portugals goe from Macao in China to Iapan, they carrie much white Silke, Gold, Muske, and Porcelanes: and they bring from thence nothing but Siluer. They haue a great Caracke which goeth thither euery yeere, and shee bringeth from thence euery yeere about sixe hundred thousand Crusadoes: and all this Siluer of Iapan, and two hundred thousand Crusadoes more in Siluer which they bring yeerely out of India, they imploy to their great aduantage in China: and they bring from thence Gold, Muske, Silke, Copper, Porcelanes, and many other things very costly and gilded. When the Portugals come to Canton in China to traffique, they must remaine there but certaine dayes: and when they come in at the Gate of the Citie, they must enter their names in a booke, and when they goe out at night they must put out their names. They may not lie in the Towne all night, but must lie in their Boats without the Towne.

And their dayes being expired, if any man remaine there, they are euill vled and imprisoned. A man may keepe as many Concubines as hee will, but one Wife onely. All the Chineans, Iaponians, and Cauchin Chineans doe write right downwards, and they doe write with a fine Pen-fill made of Dogs or Cats haire.

Laban is an Iland among the Ianas from whence come the Diamants of the New water. And they find them in the Rivers: for the King will not suffer them to digge the Rocke. Iamba is an Iland among the Ianas also, from whence come Diamants. And the King hath a masse of earth which is Gold; it groweth in the middle of a Riuer: and when the King doth lacke Gold, they cut part of the earth and melt it, whereof commeth Gold. This masse of earth doth appeare but once in a yeere; which is when the water is low: and this is in the moneth of Aprill.

Bima is an other Iland among the Ianas, where the Women trauell and labour as our men doe in England, and the Men keepe house and goe where they will.

The nine and twentieth of March 1588. I returned from Malacca to Martanan, and so to Pegu, where I remained the second time vntill the seuenteenth of September, and then I went to Cosmin, and there tooke shipping: and passing many dangers by reason of contrarie winds, it pleased God that wee arriued in Bengala, in Nouember following: where I stayed for want of passage vntill the third of Februarie 1589. and then I shipped my selfe for Cochin. In which Voyage wee endured great extremitie for lacke of fresh water: for the weather was extreame hot, and we were many Merchants and Passengers, and we had verie many calmes, and hot weather. Yet it pleased God that we arriued in Ceylon the sixth of March, where we staid five daies to water and to furnish our selues with other necessarie prouision. This Ceylon is a braue Iland, verie fruitfull and faire; but by reason of continuall Warres with the King thereof, all things are verie deare: for he will not suffer any thing to be brought to the Castle where the Portugals be: wherefore oftentimes they haue great want of victuals. Their prouision of victuals commeth out of Bengala euerie yeere. The King is called Rana, and is of great force; for hee commeth to Columbo, which is the place where the Portugals haue their Fort, with an hundred thousand men, and many Elephants. But they be naked people all of them; yet many of them bee good with their Pieces which be Muskets. When the King talketh with any man, hee standeth vpon one legge, and setteth the other foot vpon his knee with his Sword in his hand: it is not their order for the King to sit but to stand. His apparell is a fine painted cloth made of Cotton-wooll about his middle: his haire is long and bound vp with a little fine cloth about his head: all the rest of his bodie is naked. His Guard are a thousand men, which stand round about him, and hee in the middle; and when he marcheth, many of them goe before him, and the rest come after him. They are of the race of the Chingalayer, which they say are the best kind of all the Malabars. Their Eares are verie large; for the greater they are, the more Honourable they are accounted. Some of them are a spanne long. The Wood which they burne is Cinamon wood, and it smelleth verie sweet. There is great store of Rubies, Saphires, and Spinelles in this Iland: the best kinde of all bee here; but the King will not suffer the Inhabitants to digge for them, lest his Enemies should know of them, and make Warres against him, and so driue him out of his Countrey for them. They haue no Horses in all the Countrey. The Elephants bee not so great as those of Pegu, which bee monstrous huge: but they say all other Elephants doe feare them, and none dare fight with them, though they bee verie small. Their Women haue a cloth bound about them from their middle to their knee: and all the rest is bare. All of them bee Blacke and but little, both Men and Women. Their Houses are verie little, made of the branches of the Palmer or Coco-tree, and couered with the Leaues of the same tree.

The elcuenth of March wee sayled from Ceylon, and so doubled the Cape of Comori. Not farre from thence, betweene Ceylon and the maine land of Negapatan, they fish for Pearles. And there is fished euerie yeere verie much; which doe serue all India, Cambasa, and Bengala, it is not so orient as the Pearle of Baharin in the Gulfe of Persia. From Cape de Comori, wee passed by Coulam, which is a Fort of the Portugals: from whence commeth great store of Pepper, which commeth for Portugall: for oftentimes there ladeth one of the Carackes of Portugall. Thus passing the Coast we arriued in Cochin the two and twentieth of March, where wee found the weather warme, but scarcitie of Victuals: for here groweth neither Corne nor Rice: and the greatest part commeth from Bengala. They haue here very bad water, for the Riuer is farre off. This bad water causeth many of the people to bee like Lepers, and many of them haue their legges swollen as big as a man in the waste, and many of them are scant able to goe. These people here be Malabars, and of the race of the Naires of Calicut: and they differ much from the other Malabars. These haue their heads very full of haire, and bound vp with a string: and there doth appeare a bush without the band wherewith it is bound. The men be tall and strong, and good Archers with a long Bow and a long Arrow, which is their best weapon: yet there bee some Caluers among them, but they handle them badly.

Here groweth the Pepper; and it springeth vp by a Tree or a Pole, and is like our Iuie berry, but something longer like the Wheat-eare: and at the first the bunches are greene, and as they waxe ripe they cut them off and drie them. The leafe is much lesser then the Iuie leafe and thinner thinner. All the Inhabitants here have very little houses, couered with the leaues of the Coco-trees. The men be of a reasonable stature; the women little; all blacke, with a cloth bound about their middle hanging downe to their hammes: all the rest of their bodies be naked: they haue horrible great Eares with many rings set with Pearles and Stones in them. The King goeth incached, as they doe all; he doth not remaine in a place aboue five or sixe dayes: he hath many houses, but they be but little: his Guard is but small: he remoueth from one house to another according to their order. All the Pepper of Calicut and course Cinamom, groweth here in this Countrey. The best Cinamom doth come from Ceylon, and is pilled from fine young Trees. Here are verie many Palmer or Coco-trees, which is their chiefe food: for it is their meat and drinke: and yeeldeth many other necessarie things, as I haue declared before.

Blacke people.

40 The Naires which be vnder the King or Samorin, which bee Malabars, haue alwayes Warres with the Portugals. The King hath alwayes peace with them; but his people goe to the Sea to rob and steale. Their chiefe Captaine is called Cogi All; he hath three Castles vnder him. When the Portugals complaine to the King, he saith he doth not send them out: but hee consenteth that they goe. They range all the Coast from Ceylon to Goa, and goe by foure or five Parowes or Boates together; and haue in euery one of them fiftie or threescore men, and board presently. They doe much harme on that Coast, and take euery yeere many Foists and Boates of the Portugals. Many of these people bee Moores. This Kings Countrey beginneth twelue leagues from Cochín, and reacheth neere vnto Goa. I remained in Cochín vntill the second of Nouember, which was eight moneths; for that there was no passage that went away in all that time: 20 if I had come two dayes sooner I had found a passage presently. From Cochín I went to Goa, where I remained three dayes. From Cochín to Goa, is an hundred leagues. From Goa I went to Chaul, which is threescore leagues, where I remained three and twentie dayes: and there making my prouision of things necessarie for the Ship, from thence I departed to Ormus; where I stayed for a passage to Balsora fiftie dayes. From Goa to Ormus is foure hundred leagues.

Heere I thought good, before I make an end of this my Booke, to declare some things which India and the Countrey farther Eastward doe bring forth.

30 The Pepper groweth in many parts of India, especially about Cochín: and much of it doeth grow in the Fields among the bushes without any labour: and when it is ripe they goe and gather it. The Shrub is like vnto our Iuic-tree: and if it did not runne about some Tree or Pole, it would fall downe and rot. When they first gather it, it is Greene; and then they lay it in the Sunne, and it becometh blacke.

The Ginger groweth like vnto our Garlike, and the root is the Ginger: it is to bee found in many parts of India.

Ginger.

The Cloues doe come from the Iles of the Moluccoes, which bee diuers Ilands: their Tree is like to our Bay-tree.

Cloues.

The Nutmegs and Maces grow together, and come from the Iles of Banda: the tree is like to our Walnut-tree, but somewhat lesser.

Nutmegs and Maces.

40 The white Sandoll is wood very sweet and in great request among the Indians; for they grind it with a little water, and annoint their bodies therewith: it commeth from the Ile of Timor.

Camphora is a precious thing among the Indians, and is sold dearer then Gold. I thinke none of it commeth for Christendome. That which is compounded commeth from China: but that which groweth in Canes and is the best, commeth from the great Ile of Borneo.

Camphora.

Lignum Aloes commeth from Cauchinchina.

The Benjamin commeth out of the Countries of Siam and Iangomés.

The Long Pepper groweth in Bengala, in Pegu, and in the Ilands of the Ianas.

50 The Muske commeth out of Tartarie, and is made after this order, by report of the Merchants which bring it to Pegu to sell; In Tartarie there is a litle beast like vnto a yong Roe, which they take in snares, and beat him to death with the blood: after that they cut out the bones, and beat the flesh with the blood very small, and fill the skin with it: and hereof commeth the Muske.

Of the Amber they hold diuers opinions; but most men say it commeth out of the Sea, and that they finde it vpon the shores side.

The Diamants are found in diuers places, as in Bisnagar, in Agra, in Delli, and in the Ilands of the Ianas.

The best Pearles come from the Iland of Baharim in the Persian Sea, the worser from the Piscaria, neere the Ile of Ceylon, and from Aynam a great Iland on the Southermost Coast of China.

Spodium and many other kindes of Drugges come from Cambaia.

60 Now to returne to my Voyage; from Ormus I went to Balsora or Basora, and from Basora to Babilon: and wee passed the most part of the way by the strength of men by halling the Boat vp the Riuer with a long cord. From Babilon I came by land to Mosul, which standeth neere to Nimire, which is all ruinated and destroyed; it standeth fast by the Riner of Tigris. From Mosul I went to Merdin, which is in the Countrey of the Armenians; but now there dwell in that place a people which they call Cordies, or Curdi. From Merdin I went to Orfa, which is a very faire Towne, and it hath a goodly Fountaine full of Fish; where the Moores hold many great Ceremonies and opinions concerning Abraham: for they say hee did once dwell there. From thence I went to Bir, and so passed the Riuer of Euphrates. From Bir I went to Aleppo, where I stayed certaine moneths for companie; and then I went to Tripolis; where finding English shipping, I came with a prosperous voyage to London, where by Gods assistance I safely arriued the nine and twentieth of Aprill 1591. hauing beene eight yeeres out of my native Countrey.

Nicholas Pimenta, the Indian Visiter in his Letter to Claudius Aquanina the General of the Iesuites, relateth his visitation-Voyage from Goa in December 1597. To Cochín first, the occurrents wherein hee had certified by Letter in the Viceroyes ship or Caracke, which being richly laden was accidentally and irrecoverably fired, the Ordnance thundring Death and lightning manifold mischieues to the Rescuers. Hee sent from Cochín a Mission to Bengala, Francis Fernandes, and Dominicke Sosa; another to Pegu, Melchior Fonsera, and Andrew Bones. The effect whereof appeared in their letters. Fernandes writ from Siripur in Bengala, in Ianuarie 1599. the dangers of their Voyage by Malabar Pirats, a three dayes Tempest, the shelues of Ganges, before they arriued at Gullam, two hundred and ten miles vp that Riuer: where they left one of their Societie which could meanly write to teach that Schoole. Sosa indeuoured to learne the Bengalan Language and translated into it a tractate of Christian Religion, in which were confuted the Gentile and Mahumetan errors: to which was added a short Catechisme by way of Dialogue, which the Children frequenting the Schoole learned by heart, and taught the Seruants in their Families, with the signe of the Crosse and other things belonging to Christianitie. They perswaded them to erect an Hospitall, buying a house and household stuffe to that purpose, and reformed the courses of many which liued in Piracie, and loose lusts: and in October departed thence to the Great Port, sixe hundred miles from the Small Port or Porto Pequeno, not without dangers from Tigres and Theeues. In the midway in the Kingdome of Chandecan, where they stayed a moneth to reforme disorders by Lusts and Discord, and Baptised two hundred; The King gaue them a place to build a Church in, and monies to that purpose, with libertie to Preach the Gospell. In the Woods of that Kingdome great store of Waxe is made which is thence transported to other parts of India. At Siripur in December, they arriued and were receiued as Angels from Heauen, by reason the Bishop of Cochín had Excommunicated the new Captayne with his followers, from which Sentence they hoped the Iesuites would exempt them: and although wee were loth to intermeddle, yet could we not but giue answer to them. At Siripur the Gouvernour gaue vs leaue to Preach and assigned sixe hundred peeces of Gold for reuenue, and roome to build a Church, with promise of all necessaries. I send you two Boyes of Bengala to bee instructed in the Colledge, and next yeere will send two others as your Worship commanded. When we came to Chatigan wee learned that the King of Aracan was gone to the warre of Pegu. Thus farre Fernandes.

Father Baltasar Sequeira was Elected to the Peguan mission, which went to the Towne of Saint Thomas, thence to sayle with the first opportunitie with Father Iohn Costa for Pegu: but wee arriued at Saint Thomas before they were gone. We departed from Cochín, and in the way visited the new Church in the Kingdome of Porca; thence came to Coulam, and passed the rest of the way with great feare; for the King of Tranancor had certified vs, that the King of Madure was comming against him with seuentie thousand armed men, and many Elephants. But wee visited three and thirtie Churches in his Kingdome, and turned to the Promontorie Cori, and beyond that to the Fishing Coast euen to Turacurin. In the Towne Punicale, I met F. Henrie whom F. Xavier had there left two and fiftie yeeres before, still of able bodie, and daily writing in the Malabar language to illustrate the Christian Religion. Periapatan is the chiefe Citie of the Parauelines, where wee left a Residence of two Priests, which might passe as farre as Tripalacur, which two places by Cape Ramanancor are made farre distant by Sea, but by Land are neere each other. We passed that Cape and came to Talemanare at the entrance of the

He Manare, and hauing visited the Churches in that Iland, passed the Riuer and went by land to the Pearle-fishing.

Wee rested all night in the Tents of Fishermen, which with many lights round about prohibited the assaults of Elephants. But we saw nothing but Peacocks; and a Viper had conueyed herselfe into our stufte, which vseth to kill within seuen houres after her striking, which was espied. There come from the Regions about sixtie thousand into these Tents of Fishermen, bringing all their Families: Our Priests say Masse in the Churches erected on the shore, appease tumults and haue care of good order, without whom all that companie would bee dissolved. Wee passed from Manare not without great perill by tempest to Negapatan, where Father Francis Paer lieth buried, whom the Inhabitants worship as a Saint. Many Portugals dwell there, and many winter there, which come from the Coast of China, Bengala, Pegu, and Malaca. They buy a place for five hundred Duckets for a new Residence of ours.

The Naich of Tanioar desired a Church in his Port, and at Trangobar sixe miles from Negapatan another was begun. From hence wee went by land to Saint Thomas, traouelling twelue dayes in a pleasant Countrey, beautified with Groues and Streames, enriched with a fertile soile and wholesome eyre. But so prodigious and innumerable were their Idols, in many very faire Temples, and other lesse Oratories almost without number, that Superstition contended with Ambition; and the Colosses of their Idols were remoued from place to place in Chariots as high as steeples, by thousands of men setting their shoulders to the Wheelles. In our way wee saw Cidambaran the mother Citie of their Superstitions, furnished with gorgeous Temples. Their Brachmanes haue thirtie thousand Duckets reuenue, whereof but twelue thousand are now payed.

The Naichus of Gingi was come thither, in whose Dominion it standeth. Hee commanded that we should be brought to his Presence. Before vs two hundred Brachmanes went in a ranke to sprinkle the house with Holy water, and to preuent Sorcerie against the King, which they vse to doe euery day that the King first entreteth into any house. We found him lying on a silken Carpet leaning on two Cushions, in a long silken Garment, a great Chaine hanging from his necke, distinguished with many Pearles and Gemmes, all ouer his brest, his long haire tyed with a knot on the crowne, adorned with Pearles; some Princes and Brachmanes attended him. He entertained vs kindly, and maruelled much that wee chewed not the leaues of Betele which were offered vs, and dismissed vs with gifts of precious Clothes wrought with Gold, desiring a Priest of vs for his new Citie which hee was building. The next day wee went away, which we had not done, had any told vs of a strange Spectacle that day there to bee scene, which wee after came certainly to know.

There were twentie Priests which they call Iogues, which threw themselues from the highest pinnacle of the Temple for this cause. There is a Temple of Perimal, in which is worshipped an Ape called Hanimant, whom they report to haue bene a God, and for I know not what offence, with many other thousands of Gods (in like wise metamorphosed) to haue bene transformed into an Ape, and to haue ruled ouer all those Apes in that place. But hauing necessarie occasion to passe from Ramanancor to Ceilan, wanting shipping, hee leaped ouer the waters, and at euery leape made an Iland or hill of Sands, so making way for himselfe and his. They say it was his Tooth, which the Viceroy Constantine cast into the fire, notwithstanding the Ethnikes offer of three hundred thousand Duckets for the Redemption. These Ethnikes also fable, that a holy man at Cidambaran for penance sake kept his foot many yeeres nayled thorow with an Iron nayle; and when God forbad him that penance, hee refused and said he would neuer giue it ouer, till hee might see God dancing about him. At length God yeelded to him, and with the Sunne, Moone and Starres danced before that Saint, they playing on Instruments and dancing. From God, as he danced, fell a Gold chaine off his foot, whence Cidambaran receiued the name, signifying A Golden Chaine. Now at this time was a great Controuersie amongst these Gentiles, whether it were lawfull to place the Signe of Perimal (which is nothing but a Mast or Pole gilded, with an Ape at the foot) in the Temple of Cidambaran. Some refused, others by their Legats importunately vrged, and the Naichus of Gingi Decreed to erect it in the Temple, the Priests of the Temple which were the Treasurers, withstanding, and threatning if it were done to cast downe themselues from the top. The Brachmanes of the Temple sware to doe the like after they had buried the former, which yet after better aduise they performed not. About twentie had perished in that precipitation on that day of our departure; whereat the Naichus angrie, caused his Gunners to shoot at the rest, which killed two of them, the rest wandring in vncertaine places. A Woman also was so hote in this zealous quarrell that shee cut her owne throat. The Mast with the Ape was neuerthelesse erected.

Wee trauelled by the fauour of the Naichus and the Princes of Trinidad, and Salanaccha his Subiects, to Saint Thomas. This was the ancient Citie Meliapor, sometimes chiefe Citie of the Kingdome of Coromandel, now subiect to the Ragin or King of Vissanagor, (by the Portugals called Bisnaga, and by Writers termed Narsinga, of a King of that name) who of the Ethnikes in those parts is acknowledged with this portentuous Stile. of good Fortune, God of great Provinces, King of the greatest Kings, and God of Kings, Lord of all Horse-forces, Master of those which know not how to Speake, Emperour of three Emperours, Conqueror of all which hee seeith, and Keeper of all which hee hath overcome; Dreadfull to the eight Coasts of the world, the Vanquisher of Mahumetan Armies, Ruler of all Provinces which hee hath taken, Taker of the Spoiles and Riches of Ceilan; which farre exceedeth the most Valiant men, which cut off the head of the Invincible Viraulalan; Lord of the East, South, North, West, and of the Sea; Hunter of Elephants, which lieth and glorieth in virtue Militarie. Which titles of Honour enioyeth the most Warlike Vencatapadin, Ragin, Denamagan Ragel, which now raigneth and gouerneth this World. Hee now resideth in Chandegrin, and in times past rained farre and wide, from Cape Cori to the Kingdomes adjoyning to Gou, on the Coasts of both Seas, till Idalcen and others (as the Naichi before mentioned) shooke off his yoke. Hee was now embroiled in warre with the Naichus of Madure. I appointed Father Simon Sa Rector of the Colledge of Saint Thomas, to begin a Mission thither as soone as hee could. A Seminatie was erected at Meliapor, of the chiefe Children of the Badagades by the almes of Deuout men, and a Schoole of the Malabars adioyned, in which is taught the Tongue of Tamul (or vulgar) and the Badagan vsed by the Courtiers. Whiles a new Peguan mission was talked of, there came ships from Pegu which related the turbulent state of that Kingdome, and I will heere adioyne what I learned of credible persons which a long time had beene eye-witnesses of Pegues prosperitie and aduersitie.

Peguan losses.

THE King of Pegu, Father of the present, of the race of the Bramas, was the mightiest of all which haue rained in Pegu. For hee subdued twelue Kingdomes to his Empire viz. the Kingdome of Cauclan, whence come the best Saphires and Rubies; Ana, in which are Mines of Ciprian Brasse, Lead and Siluer; Bacan, in which are many Gold mines; Tangram, which abounds with Lead and Lac; Prom, which aboundeth also in Lead and Lac; Tangoma, stored with Copper, Muske, Pepper, Silke, Gold, Siluer; Lawran, where is store of Bejoine, enough to lade ships; the eight and ninth, are the Kingdomes of Trucen; whence many China wares are transported to vs; the tenth and eleuenth, are the Kingdomes of Cablan abounding in Gemmes, neere to the Kingdome of Aana, betwixt it and China. The twelfth, is the Kingdome of Sion (or Siam) which he subdued last, and in that Expedition is said to haue armed 1060000. men, taking one of ten with him to that warre. Hee rained fixe and thirtie yeeres in such affluence of all things, that one hundred Ships laden with Rice would not haue seemed to diminish the store. The plentie of Gemmes was such, that in one moneth a man might haue bestowed many talents of Gold thereon. Yet now there are scarcely found in all that Kingdome any men, but a few which with the King haue betaken themselues to the Castle, which with Women and Children are said not to exceed seuen thousand. For in late times they haue beene brought to such miserie and want, that they did eate Mans flesh and kept publike shambles thereof, Parents abstained not from their Children, and Children deuoured their Parents. The stronger by force preyed on the weaker, and if any were but skinn and bone, yet did they open their intrailles to fill their owne and sucked out their braines. The women went about the streets with knives to like butcherly purposes. The cause of this misery was this.

The former King being dead, his Sonne the second moneth of his Raigne hearing that the King of Ana his Vncle affected some change of State, and that fortie of his Grandes had conspired with him, committed those fortie and Burned them all, together with their Wiues, Children, Friends and Familiars, causing all that fled out of the fire to be Cut in peeces. This estranged his Subiects hearts, whereof hee had experience in the Warre against his Vncle, and therefore offered him single Combate vpon an Elephant, the suruior to possesse the Scepter. In this Combat, the King of Pegu slew his Vncle of Ana. But whiles hee was in that expedition, the King of Siam entred the Peguan Confines with an Armie as farre as a Towne called Satan, diuulging a rumour that hee came to ayde his Lord the King. This was much stomacked by the King of Pegu, who sent an Armie against him, commanding the Generall to bring him Captiue. But this Armie disposed it selfe, and neglecting the Kings command, returned to their homes. The King after his returne sent to the Siamite to come to him, who offered to continue his Tribute, but refused to come.

Two yeeres after, the Peguan with an Armie of nine hundred thousand men, marcheth against Siam and besiegeth it. The Siamite makes him faire offers, but protracted the time till the third moneth, that in the inundation which happeneth in March, the Kings Armie might be indamaged. That Riuer like Nilus (but in another moneth) vseth to couer one hundred and twentie miles circuit in ground, and so ouerwhelmed this Armie, that scarcely seuentie thousand of that great multitude returned to Martanan, and those without Horses and Elephants. The King of Pegu hauing once and againe made such Expeditions in vaine, at length hee sent his Brother the King of Tangoma with many Commanders; twise also hee sent his Sonne thither with a great Armie: which committed hostile spoyles, but yet euer returned with the losse of more then halfe their Armie: and his Sonne in the last Expedition was killed with shot of a Piece. Thus enraged and resolved to teunge, hee made great preparations three yeeres together, ther, and then thought to carrie with him all the Peguan to this warre. But of them, presenting the former dreadfull slaughters and losses to their mindes, some became Talapotes (Friers in their Ethnicisme) others hid themselves in Desarts, and Woods, and many sold themselves for Slaues. The King caused Ximibago his Vncle to search the publike Records, and to presse one halfe to the warres, he also proclaimed that all which in such a space had turned Talapotes should returne secular; the young should be compelled to the warres, the old to be exiled into the Region of the Bramas, whom also he after changed away for Horses. He ordained also that all the Peguan should be branded in the right hand, that euery mans name, Countrie and condition might be known. They seeing themselves thus opprobriously branded, Talapotes forced to returne Secular, and old men exchanged for Horses, began to rebell.

10 The Cosmians first set a King ouer them, against whom the King sent an Armie, which spoiled all the Countrie, and brought many Captiues, whom the King caused to be burned: and continuing his warre ypon them, forced by famine, they yeelded to his mercy, but he with exquisite torments slue them all. The next stage of his furie was the Kingdome of Ana, where hee commanded his sonne the Gouverneur to bring them all into the Kingdome of Pegu, now so destitute of Inhabitants; but the aire not agreeing, they brake out in pusses and diseases, which also infected the Natiues, that some with impatience of the torture threw themselves into the River. Some of the *Peguan*s in this time had with the Siamites help, brought the Castle of Murmulan into their possession, whom the King besieged a yere together. And the Siamites comming on them vnexpected, ouerthrew his Armie, killed his Horses and Elephants, slue and drowned many, tooke others: and so became Lords of all that Countrie, and many Peguan Peeres fled to them; whose wiues, children, and families the King after his manner destroyed yterly with fire, sword and water. And thus the whole tract from Pegu to Martauan and Murmulan, was brought to a Wilderness.

30 Whiles hee besieged Murmulan, hee sent for his sonne the Vice-roy of Prom, who imagined that it was to proclaime him Heire apparant, and so preferrd him to his elder brother the Prince of Ana; but when he came was sent to the siege of Murmulan, which he excusing was threatened by his father, and commanded presently to salute his brother, and bee gone thither. Hee returned to Prom, and rebelled against his father. In these broiles the Siamite taketh opportunitie, and marcheth against Pegu in haruest time. Some of their fruits were hastily inned, the rest burned by the Kings command. The Siamite layeth siege to Pegu, in which were then numbred an hundred and fifty thousand *Peguan*s, Bramans, and of other Nations; three thousand peeces of Ordnance, one thousand of them brasse. The siege continued from Ianuarie to April, 1596. By the helpe of some Portugals and Turkes, the Citie escaped, and the rumour of Portugals comming by the way of Camboia raised the siege, the Siamite fearing to lose his owne, whiles he sought to winne that which was anothers. But Famine succeeded with a worse siege, which made the forren Souldiers leaue the Citie, a few remayning which were fled from Tangu. The King hereupon commanded the King or Vice-roy of Tangu, to gather the haruest then ripe, and to imbarke it and the people for Pegu. Hee answered that hee would send halfe, and that he or his sonne would come. The King sends foure principall men to fetch him and the prouision by force. The Tanguan kills those Commissioners, possessed himselfe of the ships and Souldiers, and by Proclamation prohibiteth returne and aide to Pegu. Thus the famine encreased in the Citie, insomuch that they killed and did eate each other. The King caused the people to be numbred, and there finding seven thousand Siamites, caused them all to be slaine, and diuided the prouision to the rest, of which there were not of all ages and sexes about thirty thousand remayning.

40 The King of Prom held out three yeeres against his father, and then repenting, sent messengers that he would bring all the people of Prom, which were 50000. to the Citie. Hereupon the King pardoned him, and sent him presents. But his chiefe Counsellour which had set him on worke, fearing his head would be the price of his reconciliation, poisoned this young Prince, and aspiring to the Kingdome, was within seven dayes after killed by the Grandes, of whom euery weeke almost yeelded a rising Sunne setting in a bloody Cloude: insomuch that in two moneths space, of fifty thousand scarcely fifty men remained, which going to Pegu, left Prom to the habitation of wilde beasts. Many *Peguan*s yet remained in other Countries whither they had fled, as in Iangoma, Arracan, Siam. The Talipois perswaded the Iangoman, brother to the King of Pegu, to vsurpe the Kingdome, which he refused, pretending his Oath. They replied, that no Religion hindered, if he placed his brother in the Vabat, that is a Golden throne, to be adored of the people for a God. He also found out another trick, that his brother of Pegu was borne before his father was enthronized, himselfe after he was now King, begotten also of the old King of Pegu daughter, whereas the Kings mother was not a Kings daughter. The King is said to haue killed two hundred Eunuches, lest they should betray his huge treasures: it is also reported, that his father caused to be cast three hundred fixty sixe Combalengas of Gold (a great kinde of Gourde) which none knoweth where they be. He hath also fixty seven Idols of Gold adorned with Jewels of all sorts, foure Store-houses with great plenty of Lead, Lead, Brasse, Ordnance, without weight. This was then the state of the Kingdome of Pegu, brought to one Citie, and that almost destroyed.

The rest wee will supply out of the Epistle of Andrew Bones, and Francis Fernandes, Iesuites. This writes concerning Martauan, that it is a large Kingdome, but now desolate by the Siamites warre no lesse then Pegu. But two hundred thousands of the Inhabitants lurke in Woods and Mountaines. The King hath only two or three fortified Cities, not able to withstand the Siamite. The fertilitie of that Countrie is such, that it yeeldeth yeerely a threefold Haruest, and at what time of the yeere soeuer they sowe, the seeds come to ripenesse. Cochin and Malacca alone carrie from thence yeerely thirty ships laden with Graine. The Woods also abound with diuers Fruit-trees; the Herbes are almost all both odoriferous and medicinable. It is able to lade yeerely twenty of the greatest ships with Pitch and Timber. Their Fountaines, Riuer, wilde and tame Beasts, Mines of Gold, Siluer, Brasse, Iron, and Lead, also of Rubies and Gemmes, likewise their commodious Ports I omit: as also the temperature of the aire, and the hopes of conuerting the countrie, since frustrated.

Bones writeth, the eight and twentieth of March, 1600. that the King of Pegu beleagred with a straight siege by the Kings of Tangu and Arracan, deliuered himselfe (vnable to hold out any longer) to the King of Tangu, which caused his head and the Queenes also to bee cut off. The like he did to his sonne the Prince. After this he went to the Tower where the Kings treasure was kept, which was so much that scarcely sixe hundred Elephants and as many Horses were sufficient to carrie away the Gold and Gemmes onely. For I say nothing of the Siluer and other Metals, as things of no price. The King of Arracan then absent, hearing that the King of Tangu against his agreement with him had taken all this treasure for himselfe, and dismissed the Armie without his Knowledge, came thither with the aide of the Portugals to inuade Tangu. I went thither with Philip Brito, and in fiftene dayes arriued at Sirian, the chiefe Port in Pegu. It is a lamentable spectacle to see the bankes of the Riuer set with infinite fruit-bearing trees, now ouerwhelmed with ruines of gilded Temples, and noble edifices; the wayes and fields full of skulls and bones of wretched Peguans, killed or famished and cast into the Riuer, in such numbers that the multitude of carkasses prohibiteth the way and passage of any ship; to omit the burnings and massacres committed by this the cruellest of Tyrants that euer breathed.

The King of Arracan is now ending his businesse at the Tower of Macao, carrying thence the Siluer which the King of Tangu had left, exceeding three millions, besides many and rare pieces of brazen Ordnance remayning in that Castle. The Kings of Siam and Iangoma with great forces haue inuaded the King of Tangu to despoile him of his spoiles. The King of Arracan is yet Lord of Pegu, though not acknowledged by those which fled or hid themselves, and hath deliuered the Port of Sirian to Philip de Brito, that the Peguan fugitiues might haue refuge vnder Portugall protection. Brito is in hand with building the Fort, and is earnest for a Residence of our Society. The King of Siam in his way towards Tangu made irruption into the Kingdome of Martauan, but was twice repelled with losse; and hath therefore reenforced his Armie, withall commanding two of his Captaines for negligence and cowardise to bee drowned in Caldrons of scalding Oile, after which entring a third time hee hath subdued that Kingdome of Martauan. What after happened in Pegu and Siam, See before in Master Floris his Journall. Wee will retorne to Coromandel with Pimenta.

THE Towne of Saint Thomas is famous by the Cathedrall Church, the Apostles Sepulchre, his house in the little Hill, his martyrdome in the great Hill, and the miracle of the Crosse. Wee went thence to Gingi; the greatest Citie we haue sent in India, and bigger then any in Portugall, Lisbon excepted. In the midst thereof is a Castle like a Citie, high walled with great hewen stone and encompassed with a ditch full of water: in the middle of it is a Rocke framed into Bulwarkes and Turrets, and made impregnable. The Naicus shewed vs his golden stuffe, amongst which were two great Pots carried on their shoulders full of water for the King to drinke. The Iogues which had returned by land from Bengala, brought in such vessels water from Ganges for the Courtiers, they were encompassed with filthie base clothes, which they kissed as holy vessels notwithstanding. The Naicus appointed our lodging in the Tower, but the heat forced vs to the Groue (though consecrated to an Idoll) the Iogues ambitiously affecting applause by tolerating in the open Court the most intolerable Sun-beames, sometimes at noone (but sildome) interposing a thinne Vaile. Wee saw one of them, which being shut vp in Iron Cage had there made himselfe perpetuall prisoner, so walking with his head and feet out, that he neuer could sit nor lie downe. At the sides of the Caue hung forth an hundred Lampes, which at certaine times foure Iogues his attendants lighted. He ietted with great iollitie and glorie as if he gaue light to the world by his splendour.

The next day the inner part of the Castle was shewed vs, hauing no entrance but by the Gates which are perpetually guarded. In the Court the younger sort were exercised in Tilts. Wee saw much Ordnance, Powder, and Shot; a Spring also of cleare water. The Naicus had bene beene here kept by his Vncle, whom yet by helpe of his friends he forced to become in the ſame place his vnwilling ſucceſſour, hauing put out his eyes. He was guarded homeward with a thouſand armed men: in the Streete were ranked three hundred Elephants as it were fitted to the warre. At the Porch one entertained him with an Oration in his praife, a thing vſuall in their ſolemne pompes. Chriſtapanachus (that is his name) ſhewed vs another day his ſtore of Iewels, and gaue vs leaue in his new Citie, which hee called Chriſtapatama, to fixe a reſidence and erect a Church, two hundred pieces of gold being aſſigned to the Priſt thereof, his Letters Parents written in the Tamulan and Badagan Languages. This new Citie is ſeated in the Land Arungor, neere the mouth of the Riuer Velarius. Thence we came to the Riuer Colocam. Cholgana a great man receiued vs with great kindneſſe. Hee is old and ſeuere, and hath cauſed Crocodiles to bee put in his Riuer for his ſecuritie, charging them not to hurt his owne people. They neuertheleſſe killed a man, whereupon I knowe not by what arts hee tooke two of them which were the malefactors, and put chaines about their neckes, and caſt them into a miry place, there to bee ſtoned by the people, and to die of famine. One of theſe we ſaw.

Wee paſſed thence to Trangambaran, and thence to Taniaor, the walls whereof are built of hewen ſtone, and it is the ſeat of another Naichus, who had lately renounced the world and prepared himſelfe for death, accompanied in that deuotion by his ſeuenty wiues, all which were to be burned in the ſame fire with his carkaſſe. Hee had beſtowed ſiue thouſand pieces of gold in ſweet woods againſt that day. The Naichus of Madure is very ſuperſtitious, and reſigned his Palace to his Idol Chochanada, vpon the authoritie of a Priſt which ſaid the Idoll by night had bidden him tell the King, that hee or I muſt dwell in this houſe. Hee daily ſits in iudgement, a Bramene ſtanding by, which euer and anone whineth out the name of the Idoll Aranganassa; and when one is weary another ſucceedeth, and continueth that acclamation, though hee ſits fixe houres.

Simon Sa writes from Meliapor, the twentieth of Nouember, 1598. amongſt many other things of Paparagin, which in one houſe kept three hundred Brachmans, and gaue hospitalitie to the Pilgrims which went to, or came from Tripiti, a famous Idoll three miles from Chandegrin. They purge their ſinnes by waſhing their bodies and ſhauing their heads and beards. The Idoll is in a cold hill compaſſed with fertile valleyes abounding with fruits, which none dare touch. There are plenty of Apes, which are ſo tame, that they will take meate out of ones hand. The people take them for a Nation of gods which hold familiaritie with Perimal. They worſhip Perimal in many figures, of a Man, an Oxe, Horſe, Lion, Hog, Ducke, Cocke.

The Archbiſhop of Goa Alexius Menefius viſited the Diocelle of Angamala, the Archbiſhop there being dead: he cauſed their bookes to be purged from innumerable Nestorianiſmes, appointed eighty Pariſhes, kept a Synode, and tooke away thoſe things, which in their bookes were againſt the Pope.

Emanuel Carualius in his Letters from Malaca, in Ianuarie, 1599. writeth of an Embaſſage ſent thither from the King of Camboia to obtaine ſome of the Fathers of Saint Paul (ſo the leſuites are called in the Eaſt Indies) to bee ſent into his Kingdome. This Kingdome of Camboia hath Canci or Cochinchina on the North, Sion (or Siam) on the South, which alſo lieth in the miſt betwixt Pegu and Camboia, the Sea on the other ſide. It hath a Riuer which ouerfloweth yeerely. The Region is fertile, and hath alſo ſtore of Beioine and other merchandiſe. Within twenty yeeres laſt paſt this numerous people hath beene much diminished by warres with Siam. Beyond Camboia are the Laos, which inhabite on the Riuer ſides, and Lakes made by it. For the Riuer runneth twelue hundred miles, and the head thereof is not knowne by the Camboyans. The Laos which dwelt aboue on the Riuer twenty yeeres agoe, would needs come downe the Riuer with an Armie of two hundred thouſand men, which all periſhed, and the King of Camboia periſhed alſo in the battell. His ſonne by helpe of the Portugals expelled the Laos, which ten yeeres together infeſted the Countrey. They haue many Cities and Temples like the Chinois and Iaponians, with their Bonzos.

Emanuel de Veiga from Chandegrin, in September, 1599. writeth of his Voyage from Saint Thomas thither. The ſecond day at night they lay at Trimalur, where they ſaw their Idols ſolemne Proceſſion by night, carried into the ſtreet by eight Porters in a high Throne: the Image it ſelfe not aboue three ſpannes long clothed with an vpper garment of red ſilke, an inner ſhirt of linnen. An Elephant went before the pompe, conſecrated to the Idoll, carrying a white Banner on his backe; and after him three Oxen ſacred alſo thereto, on which ſate Drummers: after them Trumpetters and Pipers with diuerſified Inſtruments, ſtraight, crooked, great, ſmall. Theſe all made a confuſed ſound, without any obſeruatiſon of order and time. After theſe came 30. women-dancers, which haue deuoted themſelues to the Idols perpetuall ſeruice, which may not marrie, but prostitute themſelues for the moſt part, all goodly and richly arrayed, all carrying Lampes burning. And the Idoll came in the Rere with his Porters and Priſts, liuing on the reuenues of the Temple. The common people followed with lights. They paſſed foure ſtreets, and in their returne ſet the Idoll in a place erected with pillars with a ſtone rooſe, and all the companie compaſſed the Idoll three times, which done, they carried him to the Temple, where foure four Brachmanes entertained him, which bowed their heads to the Idoll; one of them bringing on his head a basket of boyled Rice for the Idols supper, attended with Fanners to scarre away Flies. When the meate was set downe, a Curtaine was drawne, lest any might see the Idoll eating, the Instruments sounding the while. Soone after the Curtaine was drawne againe, the Rice remoued, the Ministers gone in, and one comes forth which makes an Oration in his praise, and then all went into the Temple, where foure houres were spent in idle-idol-rites. The King of Bisnagar gaue vs leaue to erect a Church and make residence there, and was much delighted with the picture of Our Lady, and the things vttered by Father Ricius. This Father Francis Riccius writ at the same time of the great pleasure which the King tooke in beholding the Image of our Sauour, and of the blessed Virgin aduocata nostra, (these are his words) by whose intercession the King and Nobilitie became so kinde to vs to giue vs leaue to build a Church, erect Crollses, and conuert men, insomuch that fifty families were to giue place, and depart from the ground thereto assigned vs. The King of Bisnagar writ a Letter to Pimenta, beginning thus, The King of Kings and Great Lord, the Knight of Knights, Ouencatepati, that is, King after God, &c.

Letter of Cotignus. Alexander an English-Indian-Iesuite.

Greater eclips of wit then the Sunne. Perimals feasts and legend.

Melchior Cotignus his Letter of that Mission mentioneth Alexander an Englishmen a Brother of the Iesuiticall Order (Linschoten cap. 92. mentioneth Newbury, Fitch, and two other Englishmen imprisoned at Goa, where a Iesuite sought, in hope so to get the wealth of the Merchants in their hands, to bring them to their Order, whereto one was perswaded, a Painter, of which facultie they haue few in the Indies, and so made vse of him, hoping also to winne the rest, which after escaped: Fitches Voyage you haue before) He mentioneth also their superstitious opinion touching the Sunnes Eclipse, caused, as that of the Moone, when the Dragon (one of their constellations) biteth either of them; for which cause they all fast that day, crying out that the Dragon deuoureth the Sunne. At the Feast of Perimals marriage was such concourse of people, that that dayes offering amounted to two hundred thousand Ducats, the King, Queene and Courtiers being present. The Idoll was carried in a great triumphall Chariot drawne by ten thousand men, about midnight, a mile and an halfe. The Feast of Kowes was solemnized a moneth before, and all the wayes filled with them: for they hold Perimal to haue bene the sonne of a Kow. The rumour was that the King would warre vpon the Naichus of Tangaor called Astapanais, but his death preuented it, his three hundred Concubines being burned with him to honour his Exequies, willingly leaping into the flames. Three Tribes are the principall Inhabitants of Chandegrin, Bramenes, Raius, and Cietius, of which they say that Perimal brought forth the first out of his head, the second out of his breast, the third out of his bellie, the rest as baser vulgar from his feet. No maruell that they are all so apish from such originall.

CHAP. VIII.

JOHN HVIGHEN van Linschoten his Voyage to Goa, and obseruations of the East Indies, abbreviated.

Chap. 3. The manner and order vsed in the ships in their Indian Voyages.

Pon the eight of Aprill, being Good-friday, in the yeere of our Lord 1483. which commonly is the time when their ships set sayle within foure or fve dayes vnder or ouer, wee all together issued out out of the Riuer of Lisbon, and put to Sea, setting our course for the Ilands of Madera.

The ships are commonly charged with foure or fve hundred men at the least, sometimes more, sometimes lesse, as there are Souldiers and Saylers to be found. When they goe out they are but lightly laden, onely with certaine pipes of Wine and Oyle, and some small quantitie of merchandise, other thing they haue not in, but balast, and victuals for the companie, for that the most and greatest ware that is sent into India, are Rials of eight, because the principall Factors for Pepper doe euery yeere send a great quantitie of money, wherewith to buy Pepper, as also diuers particular Merchants, as being the least ware that men can carrie into India: for that in these Rials of eight they gaine at the least forty per cento: when the ships are out of the Riuer, and enter into the Sea, all their men are mustered, as well Saylers as Souldiers, and such as are found absent and left on land, being registred in the Bookes, are marked by the Purser, that at their returne they may talke with their Sureties, (for that euery man putteth in Sureties) and the goods of such as are absent, being found in the ship are presently brought forth and prised, and an Inuentorie being made, it is left to be disposed at the Capitaines pleasure. The like is done with their goods that die in the ship, but little of it commeth to the owners hands, imbezeled and priuily made away.

The Master and Pilot haue for their whole Voyage forth and home againe, each man an hundred and twenty Milreyes, euery Milrey being worth in Dutch money seuen Gilders, and receiue before hand, each man foure and twenty Milreyes, besides that they haue Chambers both vnder in the ship, and Cabbins about the hatches, as also Primage, and certaine tunnes freight. The like like have all the other Officers in the ship according to their degrees, and although they receive money in hand, yet it costeth them more in gifts before they get their places, which are given by favour and good will of the Pronoador.

The chiefe Boat-swain hath for his whole pay 50. Milreyes, and receiveth 10. in ready money. The Guardian, that is the quarter master, hath 1200. Reyes the moneth, and for fraught 2800. and receiveth 7. Milreyes in ready money. The Seto Pilot, which is the Masters mate, hath 1200. Reyes, which is three Duckets the moneth, and as much fraught as the quarter Master. Two Carpenters, and two Callafareh which helpe them, have each man foure Ducats a moneth, and 3900. Milreyes fraught. The Steward that giveth out their meate and drinke, and the Merinho, which is he that imprisoneth men aboard, and hath charge of all the Munition and Powder, with the deliivering forth of the same, hath each man a Milrey the moneth, and 2340. Reyes fraught, besides their Chambers and freedome of Custome, as also all other Officers, Saylers, Pikemen, Shot, &c. have every man after the rate, and every one that serveth in the ship. The Cooper hath three Duckets a moneth, and 3900. Reyes fraught. Two Servidores, those are they which hoise vp the Main-yard by a wheele, and let it downe againe with a wheele as neede is, have each man one Milrey the moneth, and 1800. Reyes fraught. Three and thirty Saylers have each man one Milrey the moneth, and 2800. Reyes fraught. Seven and thirty Rowers have each man 660. Reyes the moneth, and 1860. Reyes fraught, foure Pageants, which are Boyes, have with their fraught 443. Reyes the moneth, one master Gunner, and eight vnder him, have each man a different pay, some more, some lesse. The Surgeon likewise hath no certaine pay. The Factor and Purser have no pay but onely their Chambers, that is belowe vnder hatches, a Chamber of twenty pipes, for each man ten pipes, and above hatches each man his Cabbin to sleepe in, whereof they make great profit. These are all the Officers and other persons which sayle in the ship, which have for their portion every day in victuals, each man alike, as well the greatest as the least, a pound and three quarters of Bisket, halfe a Can of wine, a Can of water, an Aroba which is 32. pound of salt flesh the moneth, some dried Fish, Onions and Garleeke are eaten in the beginning of the Voyage, as being of small value; other provisions, as Sugar, Honie, Raisins, Prunes, Rice, and such like, are kept for those which are sicke: yet they get but little thereof, for that the Officers keepe it for themselves, and spend it at their pleasures, not letting much goe out of their fingers: as for the dressing of their meate, Weede, Ports, and Pannes, every man must make his owne provision: besides all this there is a Clarke and Steward for the Kings Souldiers that have their parts by themselves, as the Saylers have.

This is the order and manner of their Voyage when they sayle vnto the Indies, but when they returne againe, they have no more but each man a portion of Bisket and Water vntill they come to the Cape de Bona Esperance, and from thence home they must make their owne provisions. The Souldiers that are passengers have nothing else but free passage, that is roome for a Chest vnder hatches, and a place for their Bed in the Orloope, and may not come away without the Viceroyes passport, and yet they must have bene five yeeres Souldiers in the Indies before they can have licence, but the Slaues must pay fraught for their bodies, and custome to the King. The one and twentieth of September wee entred the River into the Road vnder the Land of Bardos.

Of the Towne and Iland of Goa, chiefe Citie of India.

The Citie of Goa, is the Metropolitan or chiefe Citie of all the Orientall Indies, where the Portugals have their traffique, where also the Vice-roy, the Arch-bishop, the Kings Counsell, and Chancerie have their residence, and from thence are all places in the Orientall Indies, governed and ruled. There is likewise the Staple for all Indian commodities, whither all sorts of Merchants doe resort, comming thither both to buy and sell, and out of Arabia, Armenia, Persia, Cambata, Bengala, Pegu, Sian, Malacca, Iana, Molacca, China, &c. The Citie and Iland of Goa lieth vnder 15. degrees, on the North side, and is distant from the Equinoctiall, (by the way that the Portugals ships doe come thither from Mossambique) foure hundred miles. It is an Iland wholly compassed about with a River, and is about three miles great, it lieth within the Coast of the Firme Land, so that the Iland, with the Sea coast of the Firme Land, doe both reach as farre each as other into the Sea. It is onely separated from the firme Land, by an arme of the Sea, or of the River, that runneth in by the North side of the Towne, and so round about the Iland to the South side, where it entreth againe into the Sea, and is in forme almost like a Halfe-moone. The River runneth euen vnto the Towne, and is indifferent broad, there are betweene the Firme Land and the Iland, certaine small Ilands that are all inhabited by the naturall borne Countymen, and on the other side of the Towne the River is there so small, that in Summer time, by wading to the knees in water, a man may passe it ouer on foot. On the which side the Iland hath a wall with certaine Bulwarkes, which the Portugals of late yeeres have caused to be made, to defend them from the Firme Land in time of warre, as it often hapneth, for it hath diuers times bene besieged by Dialcan or Hidalcan, at the mouth and the entrie of the River. On the North side lieth the Land of Bardos, which is high Land, vnder which Land the Portugals doe anchor anchor safely out of all danger, and there they haue a place to lade and unlade their wares. This Land of Bardcs is also vnder the Portugall subiection, and is full of Villages inhabited with people that are of the Firme Land, lying about it, called Canarijns, who for the most part are Christians, but obserue their owne manner of apparell, which is to goe all naked, their priue members onely couered. This Land is full of Indian Palme trees, whereon the Indian Nuts called Cocos doe growe, as also all the other Ilands lying in the Riuer. This Iland of Bardcs is separated from the Firme Land by a small Riuer, which is so little, that it cannot almost be discerned from the Firme Land. On the South side of the Iland of Goa, where the Riuer runneth againe into the Sea, there commeth euen out with the coast a Land called Salfette, which is also vnder the subiection of the Portugals, and is inhabited, and planted both with people and fruit, like the Land of Bardcs, and is likewise parted with a little Riuer from the Firme Land. Betweene this Land of Salfette, and the Iland of Goa, lie also some small Ilands, all full of Indian Palme trees, and by the mouth or issue of the Riuer, lieth an Iland which is called Goa Velha, that is old Goa, from whence there commeth no speciall thing, neither is it much inhabited. Those Lands of Bardcs and Salfette, are by the Kings of Portugall let out to farme, and the rents thereof are employed to the payment of the Arch-bishop, Cloisters, Priests, and other the Kings Officers, yeerely stipends, which is granted them by speciall Priuiledges and Patents from the King. The Iland is very hilly, and in some places so desert and rough, that on some sides men can hardly trauell ouer land (but with great labour) to the Towne of Goa. The Iland euen to the Sea side is full of Villages, and inhabited by the Canarijns, which are the naturall borne people of the Land, and doe altogether liue by working vpon the Land, and by their Palme trees. The Villages and dwellings of these Canarijns are most round about the Iland, and on the water sides, or by small Lakes, whereof there are some few within the Iland, and the cause why they dwell thus, is for that the Palme trees will not growe in any other place but on lowe ground, by the waters, specially in sandy ground: so that there are no Palme trees to be found on the high land within the Countrey vnlesse it be vpon sandy grounds on the Sea coast, or Riuer sides. On the East side of the Towne of Goa vpwards, into the Riuer, about three miles from the Towne of Bardcs, lieth a place where the Portugals ships doe anchor, the Riuer hath some creekes, and a ship of two hundred tunnes or thereabouts, may easily discharge before the Towne, but the Portugals great ships must discharge themselves at Bardcs: which being done, they may if they will freely goe and lie before the Towne. The Towne is well built with faire houses and streets, after the Portugall manner, but because of the heate they are somewhat lower. They commonly haue their Gardens and Orchards at the back-side of their houses, full of all kind of Indian fruits: as also the whole Iland through, they haue many pleasant Gardens and Farmes, with houses to play in, and trees of Indian fruits, whether they goe to sport themselves, and wherein the Indian women take great delight. The Towne hath in it all sorts of Cloysters and Churches as Lisbon hath, onely it wanteth Nunnes, for the men cannot get the women to trauell so farre, where they should be shut vp, and forsake Venus.

Inquisition.

Touching the Portugals iustice and ordinances, as well in worldly as spirituall causes, they are all one as they are in Portugall. They dwell in the Towne among all sorts of Nations, as Indians, Heathens, Moors, Iewes, Armenians, Gusarates, Benianes, Bramenes, and of all Indian Nations and People, which doe all dwell and traffique therein, euery man holding his owne Religion, without constraining any man to doe against his conscience, onely touching their ceremonies of burning the dead, and the living, of marrying and other superstitions, and deuillish inuentions, they are forbidden by the Arch-bishop to vse them openly, or in the Iland, but they may freely vse them vpon the Firme Land, and secretly in their houses, thereby to shunne and auoide all occasions of dislike that might be giuen to Christians, which are but newly baptised: but touching the worldly policy or good gouernment of the Countrey, and executing of iustice, as also for the ruling of the Townes-men in the Citie: it is common to them all, and they are vnder the Portugals law, and hee that is once christned, and is after found to vse any heathenish superstitions, is subiect to the Inquisition, whatsoeuer he be, or for any point of Religion whatsoeuer. The Iland hath nothing of it selfe to nourish it withall, but only some Cartell, Hennes, Goats, Doues, &c. but very few, because of the barrenesse and euill situation of the place, which is a most hilly, barren, and wilde Countrey, and full of waste ground: all their necessities, as Beasts, Hennes, Hogges, Egges, Milke, &c. come from Salfette and Bardcs, but most part out of the Firme Land, Corne, Rice, and other Graine: also Oyle, and all other necessities come from other Countries, and are brought in by the Riuer, as from Cambata on the North side, and from the coast of Malabar, and other places, as in the description of the coast we haue in part declared: of Wine called Wine of Palme trees, they haue enough, and so much that they haue to spare for other places. They haue but little fresh water, but onely one Well, called Banganyn, which standeth about a quarter of a mile without the Citie, wherewith the whole Towne is serued, which the slaues fetch in Pots and sell it in the Towne, and is very good to drinke: for water to dresse meate, wash, and doe other things withall, they commonly haue Wells within their houses: the Land of it selfe is very stony and drie, hauing a kind of red earth, so that some Italian Alchymists haue haue promised to get Copper and Gold out of the same, which neither the King nor Vice-roy would euer consent vnto, fearing lest the report of such treasure would bee occasion of greater trouble.

Mines dangerous.

THe Portugals in India, are many of them married with the natural born women of the Countrie, and the children proceeding of them are called Mestiços, that is, half-countrimen. These Mestiços are commonly of yellowish colour, notwithstanding there are many women among them, that are faire and well formed. The children of the Portugals, both boyes and girles, which are borne in India, are called Castiços, and are in all things like vnto the Portugals, only somewhat differing in colour, for they draw toward a yellow colour; the children of those Castiços are yellow, and altogether like the Mestiços, and the children of Mestiços are of colour and fashion like the naturall borne Countrimen or Decanijs of the Countrie, so that the posteritie of the Portugals, both men and women being in the third degree, doe seeme to be naturall Indians, both in colour and fashion. Their liuings and daily traffiques are to Bengala, Pegu, Malacca, Cambaia, China, and euery way, both North and South: also in Goa there is holden a daily assemblie or meeting together, as well of the Citizens and Inhabitants, as of all Nations throughout India, and of the Countries bordering on the same, which is like the meeting vpon the Burse in Antwerpe, yet differeth much from that, for that hither in Goa there come as well Gentlemen, as Merchants and others, and there are all kindes of Indian commodities to sell, so that in a manner it is like a Faire. This meeting is onely before noone, euery day in the yeere, except Sundayes and Holidayes: it beginneth in the morning at seuen of the clocke, and continueth till nine of the clocke, but not in the heate of the day, nor after noone, in the principall street of the Citie, named the Straight street, and is called the Leylon, which is as much to say, as an outroop: there are certaine Criers appointed by the Citie for the purpose, which haue of all things to be cried and sold: these goe all the time of the Leylon or Outroop, all behanged about with all sorts of gold chaines, all kinds of costly Jewels, Pearles, Rings, and Precious stones: likewise they haue running about them, many sorts of Captiues and Slaues, both men and women, young and old, which are daily sold there, as beasts are sold with vs, where euery one may chuse which liketh him best, euery one at a certaine price. There are also Arabian Horses, all kind of Spices and dried Drugs, sweet-Gummies, and such like things, fine and costly Couerlets, and many curious things, out of Cambaia, Sinde, Bengala, China, &c. and it is wonderfull to see in what sort many of them get their liuings, which euery day come thither to buy wares, and at another time sell them again. And when any man dieth, all his goods are brought thither and sold to the last peniworth, in the same outroop, whosoeuer they be, yea although they were the Vice-royes goods: and this is done to doe right and iustice vnto Orphans and Widowes; and that it may bee sold with the first, where euery man may see it, so that euery yeere there is great quantitie of ware sold within that Citie, for that there die many men within the Towne, by meanes of their disordered liuing, together with the hotnelle of the Countrie: the like assemblie is holden in all places of India, where the Portugals inhabite. There are some married Portugals that get their liuings by their slaues, both men and women, whereof some haue 12. some 20. and some 30. for it costeth them but little to keep them. These slaues for money do labor for such as haue need of their helpe, some fetch fresh water, and sell it for money about the streets: the women slaues make all sorts of confectures and conserues of Indian fruits, much fine needleworke, both cut and wrought workes, and then their masters send the fairest and the youngest of them well drest vp with their wares about the streets to sell the same, that by the neatnetle and beauty of the said women slaues, men might be moued to buy, which hapneth more for the affection they haue to the slaues, & to fulfill their pleasure with them, then for any desire to the conserues or needle-workes: for these slaues do neuer refuse them, but make their daily liuing thereby, and with the gaines that they by that meanes bring home, their masters may well keepe and maintayne them. There are others that vse exchanging of moneyes, and to buy money when it commeth, as time serueth to sell it again, for they buy the Rials of eight, when the ships come from Portugall, whereof some buy at the least ten or twelue hundred, and keepe them till the moneth of April, which is the time when the ships sayle to China, for then are the Rials of eight sought for to carrie thither, & are commonly worth fise and twenty or thirty in the hundred profit, and then they receiue for them a certaine money, which at the same time is brought from Ormuz, called Larryns, that come out of Persia, which they buy for eight or ten in the hundred profit, and keep them till the Portugals on the moneth of September come thither, and so deliuer them againe for twenty or fise and twenty in the hundred profit, in exchange for Rials of eight, as I said before, for they must haue these Larryns with them to Cochin, to buy Pepper and other wares, for that it is the best and most profitable money. There are yet other sorts of money called Pagods, Venetianers, and Santbones, which are gold, all which they doe likewise buy and sell, so that there are many that doe nothing else, and become rich, specially he that hath a good stocke. This exchange commeth most commonly from the Spiritualltie, who doe secretly vse it, by other mens meanes, without any let or hinderance. Some there are that liue vpon their rents which they haue by their Palme trees.

There

There are among them but two manner of people, that is, Married men, and Souldiers, for that all Young men vnmarried are named Souldiers, which is the best name that a man can haue; not that the Souldiers are any wayes bound or vnder the commandement and Regiment of any Captaine, which throughout India, is not vsed, but when the Portugals come into India out of Portugall, and are arriued there, euery man goeth where he thinketh best, although in Portugall euery mans name that goeth in the ship is written and registred, which is done in this sort: euery man is written vp, both his name and surname, with a note what pay they receiue of the King, whereof some beare the title of Fidalgo da Casa del Rey noſſas Senor, that is, a Gentleman of the Kings House, which is the chiefeſt title: there are others named Mozos Fidalgos, which is also an Honourable title, and they are commonly Gentlemens Sonnes, or by the Kings fauour aduanced thereunto: There are yet others that are named Caualliero Fidalgo, which is not so much as the other two, yet it is an Honourable title, and is the title of a Knight, who for some Valiant act by him done is made Knight, which they doe for a small matter: for that if he doe any Act to be accounted of, or be in a manner of such an action doing, presently he is of a Captaine or a Gentleman made a Knight, whereof they much boast themselves: and it is now growne so common among them, that very Cookes Boyes and others as meane as they, are made Knights: there are others also that are named Mozos da Camara, do Numero, e do Seruice, which is seruants to the King, some of his Chamber, some of his Accounts, and some for his Seruice, this is the first Title or Degree of credite, whereby through their good seruice they attaine vnto better, and are more glorious of their Titles, then of all the riches in the world. There are also that are named Eſcuderos Fidalgos, that is Esquires, which is likewise a degree of credit: Others are named Hommes honorados, which is men of Honour, and the poorest among them (which are not named by any title) are set downe for Souldiers, which are the common and Rascall sort: these are euery man paid their wages according to their Titles, and may each man in his qualitie (by long seruice, or some good action, but most by fauour) rise to higher degree; for that according to their Titles their seruice is rewarded. The Portugals which sayle for India, being thus registred and written downe, the said Register at their arriual there, is deliuered to be kept by one of the Kings Officers thereunto appointed, which euery three yeeres is likewise changed, as other Officers are, and is called the chiefe Clerke of the Matricola Generall.

Chap. 30.
Of the Portugals and Mestigos, their Houses, Curtesies, Narriages, and other Customs and manners of India.

THE Portugals, Mestigos, and Christians, keepe Worshipfull and bountifull Houses, hauing commonly (as it is said before) five, fixe, ten, twentie, some more, some lesse Slaues, both men and women, in their houses euery man according to his estate and qualitie, I meane Married men. They are very cleanly and sweet in all things belonging to their Houses, specially in their Linnen, for that euery day they change Shirts and Smockes both men and women, and their Slaues and Seruants likewise, with other things that they weare, which they doe because of the great heat in that Land. The Portugals are commonly serued with great grauitie, without any difference betweene the Gentleman and the common Citizen, Townesman or Souldier, and in their going, curtesies, and conuersations, common in all things: when they goe in the Streets they step very softly and slowly forwards, with a great pride and vaine-glorious maiestie, with a Slaue that carrieth a great Hat or vayle ouer their heads, to keepe the Sunne and Raine from them. Also when it raineth they commonly haue a Boy that beareth a Cloake of Scarlet or of some other Cloth after them, to cast ouer them: and if bee before Noone, he carrieth a Cushion for his Master to kneele on when he heareth Masse, and their Rapier is most commonly carried after them by a Boy, that it may not trouble them as they walke, nor hinder their Grauities. When they meet in the streets a good space before they come together, they begin with a great Befolas maos, to stoope with their bodies, and to thrust forth their foot to salute each other, with their Hats in their hands, almost touching the ground: likewise when they come into the Church where they haue Stooles readie, which their Slaues haue prepared for them: all that are by him that commeth in, doe stand vp, and with the same manner of bowing their bodies doe him great Reuerence, and if it chanceth that any doth him reuerence (as the manner is) and that hee to whom it is done doth not greatly esteeme thereof, so that he doth him not the like curtesie, they doe altogether for that cause goe after him, and cut his Hat in peeces, saying that he had disgraced the partie, wherein it is not for them to aske wherefore they should so doe, for it would bee the greatest shame and reproach in the world vnto them, if they should not reuenge so great an iniurie: and when they seeke to be reuenged of any man that hath shewen them discourtesie, or for any other cause whatsoeuer it bee, they assemble ten or twelue of their Friends, acquaintance or companions, and take him wherefoeuer they find him, and beat him so long together, that they leaue him for dead, or verie neare dead, or else cause him to be stabbed by their Slaues. But if they desire not to kill him, they baste him well about the ribbes and all his bodie ouer with a thicke Reed, as big as a mans legge, which is called Bambus, whereby for eight daies after and more he hath enough to doe to keepe his Bed, and sometime in that manner they leaue him for dead. This is their common common Custome, and is neuer looked vnto or once corrected. Also they vse long bagges of full of Sand, wherewith they will giue such blowes each vpon other, that therewith they will breake each others limbes, and for euer after make them lame.

When any man goeth to visit another in his House, although he which is visited bee one of the principall Gentlemen of the Citie, and the visitor but a simple Souldier, or some other man, it is the manner that hee which is visited commeth vnto the doore of his House, with his Hat in his hand, and with great curtesie to receiue him that commeth to visit him, and so leadeh him vp into his Hall or Chamber, wherein hee will speake with him, where he offereth him a Chaire to sit downe, and then he himselfe sitteth by him, then he asketh him what hee would haue, which hauing vnderstood hee bringeth him downe againe to the doore in the like sort, and so with a Besolas manos biddeth him farewell, and if hee should not doe so, or when he giueth him a Stoole, should giue him one vnlined, or one that is lesse or lower then that he taketh for himselfe, hee that visiteth him would take it in euill part, esteeming it a great scorne, and seeke to be reuenged on him for the same.

When they haue any Weddings and are married, whosoever they bee if they haue any wealth, all the Friends and Neighbours come together, euery man on Horsebacke, and hee that hath not a Horse will borrow one, and are euery man very costly Apparellled, at the least some fiftie or a hundreth Horses little more or lesse, as the person is of qualitie, and so they ride altogether in good order vnto the Church with their Seruants, and euery man his Hat for the Sunne, the Parents and Friends in the hinder part, and in the last row the Bridegroom betweene two of them, whom they call Gossops: after them followeth the Bride betweene two Commeres, each in their Pallamkin, which is most costly made, and after follow the Slaues both men and women going in Troupes, as if they ranne to Hunt, and so comming to the Church, and being Married according to the order vsed in the Church of Rome: they are in the same order brought home againe, and passing through the streets, the neighbours leaning vpon Indian Carpets looke out of the windowes, and throw Rose water vpon the Bride and Bridegroom, and other sweet smelling waters, with Roses and Sugar Comfets, or Corne. In the meane time their Slaues play vpon Shalmes and Trumpets most pleasant and melodious to heare, and coming to the House where the Bride and Bridegroom dwell, with great reuerence and courtesie bowing downe their bodies, they take their leaues of all the Companie, which are all on Horsebacke about the doore. And so the Bride, the Bridegroom and the Commeres, goe vp and sit with great grauitie in a Window, and then begin the Horsemen that led them to Church, in honour of the Married couple, one after the other to runne a course, the Gossops beginning first, and the rest following twice or thrice one after the other, with continuall playing on Shalmes, which are very common in India, for that he which is of any wealth hath them of his owne within his House. This being ended, they all passe before the window where the Bride & Bridegroom sit with a great reuerence, and so passe on all sauing the Gossops, for they goe vp to the Bride and Bridegroom, and bid God gine them Ioy; then is there some Comfets and Marchpane brought forth, to drinke a Cup of water withall, and after some courteous salutations and congratulations to the new Married couple, they take their leaues and depart: so there remaineth with the Bride and Bridegroom but three or foure of their nearest friends and kinsmen, for whom there is a Dinner prepared, with litle meat, yet very costly, which they passe ouer very lightly, and not many words, which done they presently bring the Bride to Bed, without any other Ceremonies or Charges, wherewith the Marriage is done and ended. Oftentimes it chanceth, that they goe to bed at the least two houres before Sun-setting, not hauing the patience to stay so long as wee doe in these Countries.

When a Child is to bee Christened, it is likewise in the same sort led to Church with Horses, and last of all commeth the Father alone, after whom followeth two men on Foot, the one with a great Siluer or Gilt vessell full of Bread baked like Cracklings, which in Portugall are called Rosquilhos, and in the middle a great Waxe candle, well made and gilded, thrust through with some peeces of money of Gold and Siluer, for an Offering to the Priest that baptiseth the Child, and all ouer strowed and couered with Roses: the other carrieth a great Siluer or gilt Saltfeller in one of his hands, and a Lampe of the same stuffe in his other hand, each with rich and costly Towels on their shoulders: after that followeth two Pallamkins, on the one side the Commere, on the other side the Midwife with the Child, couered with a costly Mantle, made for the purpose, and so the ceremonies of Baptisme being ended in the Church, it is againe in the like sort brought home, and being there, they haue the like manner of Musicke & Shalmes, running and leaping with their Horses before the window where the Commere sitteth, with the same Ceremonies as at the Wedding. This is the manner and custome of those that are Married and keepe House.

But concerning the Souldier that is vnmarried, thus it is. They goe in the Summer time into the Armado lying on the water, and being within the Townes and on the Land, they are verie stately apparellled, and goe verie grauelie along the streets with their Slaues or men hired for the purpose, that beare a Hat ouer them for the Sunne and Raine: for there are many Indians that are daily hired for the purpose, and haue twelue Basarcos the day, which is as much as two Stiuers or a Scoter, and they serue such as haue no slaues; and that will not keepe any to that end. The Souldiers dwell at least ten or twelue in a house, where they haue among them a slave or hired Indian or two which serueth them, and washeth their Shirts, and haue foure or five Stooles with a Table, and euerie man a Bed. Their meat is Rice sodden in water, with some salt Fish, or some other thing of small value (without Bread) and cleare Fountaine water for their drinke, wherewith they are well pleased. They haue amongst them all one or two good suites of Apparell, all of Silke as the manner is there, and when one goeth abroad, the other stay at home, for in the house they haue no need of Clothes, (but sit whosoeuer they be) in their Shirts and a paire of linnen Breeches, and so as it were naked by reason of the great heat, for if some of them haue occasion to goe out twentie times in one day, they must so often lend him their Apparell, and he must likewise put off his clothes, as often as he cometh home againe. Some Souldiers haue a Gentleman or Captaine to their friends which lendeth them money to apparell themselves withall, to the end when Summentime cometh, they may bee readie to goe with them in Fleet to Sea, as also to haue their friendship, by night and at other times to beare them companie, or to helpe them to be reuenged of any iniurie by them received, as I said before: for that he which in India hath most Souldiers to his friends, is most regarded and feared. So that to be short, in this manner they doe maintaine themselves in common, whereby they are able to come in presence of the best of the Countrey. Many and most of them haue their chiefe maintenance from the Portugals and Mestigos wiues, as also the Indian Christians wiues, which doe alwaies bestow liberall rewards and gifts vpon them to fulfill their vchaste and filthie desires, which they know very well how to accomplish, and secretly bring to passe. There are some likewise that get their liuing by their Friends, traouling for them from place to place with some wares and Merchandizes, and they are called Chattins. These doe giue ouer and leaue the office of a Souldier in the Fleet, and the Kings seruice: and now likewise they are all giuen to scraping and catching, as well the Vice-roy, Gouvernours, and others, as also the Church-men and Spiritualtie, little passing or esteeming the common profit or the seruice of the King, but onely their particular profit, making their account, that the time of their abode is but three yeeres: wherefore they say they will not doe otherwise then those that were before them did, but say that others which come after them shall take care for all: for that the King (say they) gaue them their Offices, thereby to pay them for their seruices in times past.

Chap. 31.
Of the manuer and Customes of Portugall and Mestigos women in India.

Their pride.

Their feeding.

THE Portugals, Mestigos, and Indian Christian women in India, are little seene abroad, but for the most part sit still within the house, and goe but seldome forth, vnlesse it bee to Church, or to visit their friends, which is likewise but verie little, and when they goe abroad, they are well provided not to be seene, for they are carried in a Pallankin couered with a Mat or other cloth, so that they cannot be seene. When they goe to Church, or to visit any friend, they put on very costly apparell, with bracelets of Gold, and Rings vpon their armes, all beset with costly Iewels & Pearles, & at their eares hang laces full of Iewels. Their clothes are of Damaske, Veluet, and cloth of Gold, for Silke is the worst thing they doe weare. Within the house they goe bare headed, with a Waistcoat called Bain, that from their shoulders couereth their navel, and is so fine that you may see all their body through it, and downwards they haue nothing but a painted cloth wrapped three or foure times about their bodies. These clothes are very faire, some of them being verie costly wrought with Loom-work, and diuers figures and flowers of all colours, all the rest of the body is naked without any hose, but onely bare-footed in a paire of Moiles or Pantofles, and the men in like sort. This is their manner in the House both old and young, rich and poore, none excepted, for they goe forth but very little, and then they are both couered and carried, and what they need abroad, that the Slaues both men and women doe fetch in. The Women eate no Bread or very little, nor yet the Slaues, not that they refuse it for the dearenesse or want of bread, (for they haue enough and great abundance) but they are so vsed to eate Rice, that they desire no other, which they seeth with water and eate it with some salt Fish, or a kind of salt fruit called Mangas, or with some other composition both of Fish and Flesh, with Potrage which they powre vpon it, and so eate it with their hands: for there they eate nothing with Spooones, and if they should see any man doe so, they would laugh at him. When they drinke they haue certaine pots made of blacke earth verie fine and thinne, much like those that wee vse in Holland for Flower-pots, hauing in the necke thereof a partition full of holes with a spout, (and these Cruses are called Gorgoletta;) to this end, that when they drinke, they may hold the pot on high, and touch it not with their mouthes, but the water running from the spout falleth into their mouthes, neuer spilling drop, which they doe for cleanness, because no man should put it to his mouth, and when any man cometh out of Portugall, and then beginneth to drinke after their manner, because he is not vsed to that kind of drinking, hee spilleth it in his bosome, wherein they take great pleasure and laugh at him, calling him Reynol, which is a name giuen in iest to such as newlie come from Portugall; and know not how to behaue themselves in such graue manner, and with such cereinonies as the Portugals vse there in India: so that at the first they are much whooped and cried at in the streets, vntill by vse and practice they haue learned the Indian manner, which they quicklie doe. The men are very ielalous of their Wiues, for they will neuer bring any man into their houses, how speciall a friend soeuer hee be, that shall see their Wiues or their Daughters, vnlesse it be some gossip or other married man with his wife in companie. When they will goe together to some place to sport and solace themselves, they are alwaies well guarded by their Slaues, both men and women, both for their safetie and seruice. If any man commeth to the doore to aske for the Master of the House, presently their Wiues and their Daughters runne to hide them, and so leaue the man to answer him that standeth at the doore: likewise they suffer no man to dwell within their houses, where the Women and Daughters be, how neere kinsman soeuer he bee vnto them, being once fifteene yeeres of age, nor their owne Sonnes, but haue certaine Chambers and places beneath, or besides their house where they lie, and may in no sort come among the women, and thither they send them their meat and other prouisions, for it hath oftentimes bene seene in those Countries, that the Nephew hath layne by his Aunt, and the Brother by the Brothers wife, and the Brother with his Sister: whereof I haue knowne some that haue been taken with the manner, and that both they and the woman haue bene slaine by the Husbands. The women are very Luxurious and vnchaste, for there are very few among them, although they be married, but they haue besides their husbands one or two of those that are called Soldiers, with whom they take their pleasures: which to effect, they vse all the flights and practises they can deuise, by sending out their Slaues and Baudes by night, and at extraordinary times, ouer Walls, Hedges, and Ditches, how narrowly soeuer they are kept and looked vnto. They haue likewise an Hearbe called Deutroa, which beareth a seed, whereof bruising out the sap, they put it into a Cup or other vessell, and giue it to their Husbands, either in meat or drinke, and presently therewith, the man is as though he were halfe out of his wits, and without feeling, or else drunke, doing nothing but laugh, and sometime it taketh him sleeping, whereby he lyeth like a dead man, so that in his presence they may doe what they will, and take their pleasure with their friends, and the husband neuer know of it. In which sort he continueth foure and twentie houres long, but if they wash his feet with cold water hee presently reuiueth, and knoweth nothing thereof, but thinketh hee had slept.

There are many men poysoned by their wiues, if once they be moued: for they know how to make a certaine Poyson or Venome, which shall kill the person that drinketh it, at what time or houre it pleaseth them: which poyson being prepared, they make it in such sort, that it will lie sixe yeeres in a mans body, and neuer doe him hurt, and then kill him, without missing halfe an houres time. They make it also for one, two, or three yeeres, moneths or dayes, as it pleaseth them best, as I haue scene it in many, and there it is very common. There are likewise many women brought to their ends by meanes of their Husbands, and slaine when soeuer they take them in Adulterie, or that they doe but once suspect them; which if they doe, presently they cut their throats, and bring three or foure witnesses to testifie that strange men entred into their houses by night, at vnaccustomed times, or else by day, and had their pleasures of their Wiues, or in other sort as they will deuise it; whereby they are presently discharged of the crime, according to the Lawes and Ordinances both of Spain and Portugall, and presently may marrie with another wife. This notwithstanding is no meanes to make the Women feare, or once to leaue their filthy pleasures, although there are euery yeere many women without number so dispatched and made away by their husbands, and it is so common with them, that no man thinketh it strange, or once wondereth thereat, because of the Custome. The Women also for their part say and flatly affirme, that there can be no better death then to die in that manner, saying that so they are sacrificed for Loue, which they thinke to be a great Honour vnto them.

The women are by nature very cleanly and neat, as well in their Houses as in Apparell, for that although all whatsoeuer shee putteth on her bodie euery day, is both white, cleane and fresh: yet they haue a manner euery day to wash themselves all the bodie ouer, from head to foot, and sometimes twice a day, in the morning and at euening: and as often as They ease themselves or make water, or else vse the companie of their Husbands, euery time they doe wash themselves, were it a hundreth times a day and a night: they are no great workers, but much delighted in sweet Hearbes, and in perfumes and Frankincense, and to rub their bodies and their foreheads with sweet Sanders and such like woods, which with water they doe steepe or breake in peeces: also the whole day long they doe nothing, but sit and chaw Leauces or Herbes, called Bettela, with Chaulke and a certaine Fruit called Arrequa, whereof in another place among Fruits and Herbes I will speake more. This Arrequa, some of it is so strong, that it maketh men almost drunke, and wholly out of sence, although in shew and in taste it is almost like Wood or Rootes: these three things they sit all the whole day chawing in their mouthes, like Oxen or Kine chawing the cudde: they let the sap goe downe into their throats, and spitt the rest out of their mouthes, whereby they make their mouthes so red and blackish that to such as know it not it is strange to see: all which, with their washing, Frankinsence, and rubbing with Sanders, they haue learned and receiued of the Indian Heathens, which haue had those Customes of long time, and yet till this day vse them: they say it preferueth the Teeth, and keepeth them sound, good for the mawe, and against a stinking mouth and euill breath, insomuch as they are so vsed to chew it, that wheresoeuer they goe or stand, they must alwaies haue of those Leaues caried with them, and the women Slaues doe likewise goe alwaies chaw-ing, and are so vsed thereunto, that they verilie thinke, that without it they can not liue, for their common worke is to sit all day, when their Husbands are out of doores, behind the Mat which hangeth at the window, alwaies chawing the herbe Bettelo, seeing those that passe by in the streets, and no man seeth them: but as any man passeth by which liketh them, and they will let them haue a sight, they lift vp the Mat, whereby they doe the passenger a great fauour, and with that manner of shewing themselves and casting lookes, they make their beginnings of Loue, which by their slavish women they bring to effect: to the which end they haue all di-uellish deuises that possible may bee inuented, for that both night and day they doe practise nothing else, but make it their onely worke, and to make nature more liuely to abound and moue them thereunto, they doe vse to cate those Bettelos, Arreguas and Chaulke, and in the night it standeth by their bed sides, this they cate, whole handfuls of Cloues, Pepper, Ginger, and a baked kind of meat called Chachunde, which is mixed and made of all kindes of Spices and Herbes, and such like meates, all to increase their leacherie.

And they are not content therewith, but giue their Husbands a thousand Herbes for the same purpose to cate, they not knowing thereof, thereby to fulfill their pleasures, and to satisfie their desires, which can not by any meanes bee satisfied. They are likewise much vsed to take their pleasures in Bathes, by swimming therein, which they can verie well doe, for there are verie few of them, but they would easilie swim ouer a Riuer of halfe a mile broad.

E Verie three yeeres there is a new Vice-roy sent into India, and sometime they stay longer, as it pleaseth the King, but verie few of them, he continueth in Goa. In the Hall of his Palace stand the Guard, and in the great Hall, where his Councell sit, are painted all the Viceroyes, that haue gouerned in India, since the first Discouerie and Conquest thereof, and as they new come, their Pictures are likewise placed there. These Viceroyes haue great reuenues, they may spend, giue, and keepe the Kings treasure, which is verie much, and doe with it what pleaseth them, for it is in their choise, hauing full and absolute power from the King, in such sort, that they gather and hoord vp a mightie quantitie of Treasure, for that besides their great allowance from the King, they haue great Presents and Gifts, bestowed vpon them. For it is the custome in those Countries, when any Viceroy cometh newly ouer, that all the Kings bordering about Goa, and that haue peace and friendship with the Portugals, doe then send their Ambassadors vnto him, to confirme their Leagues with great and rich Presents, therewith likewise to bid the Viceroy welcome, which amounteth to a great masse of Treasure: these Presents in this sort giuen, the Iesuites by their practises had obtained of the King, and for a time enioyed them at their pleasure (looking verie narrowly vnto them, that they might not be deceiued) vntill long time since, a Viceroy named Dan Luis de Taide Earle of Arongia came thither, and refused to let them haue them, saying that the King being in Portugall knew not what was giuen him in India, and that those Presents were giuen vnto the Viceroy and not to the King, and said the King had no power to giue them to the Iesuites: so that hee kept them for himselfe, which the Iesuites tooke in euill part, and said, the Viceroy was an Hereticke. Yet from his time ever since the Viceroyes haue vsed to keepe them for themselves. They say, and it is found to bee most true, that the first yeere of the Viceroyes time, he hath enough to doe to repaire and furnish his House, and to know the manners and customes of the Countries, without any further troubling of himselfe. The second yeere to gather Treasure, and to looke vnto his particular profits, for the which cause he came into India. The third and last yeere to prepare himselfe and set all things in order, that he bee not overtaken or surprised by the new Vice-roy when hee cometh, but that he may returne into Portugall with the goods which he had scraped together. The same is to bee vnderstood of all the Captaines in the Fortes, and of all other Officers in India.

IN the Towne and Iland of Goa, are resident manie Heathens, Moors, (which are Mahumetans) Jewes, and all strange Nations bordering thereabout, euerie one of them vsing seuerall customes and superstitions in Religion. The Moors cate all things except Swines flesh, and dying are buried like the Jewes; but the Heathens, as Decanys, Gusarates, and Canaras, and other Indians being dead, are burnt to ashes, and some Women being aliue are burned with them, that is, such as are Gentlemen or Noblemen, and the Wiues of the Bramenes, which are their Idolatrous Priests. Also for the Merchants, some of them cate all things, except Kowes, or Buffles flesh, which they esteeme to bee Holy. Others cate not any thing whatsoeuer, that hath either life or blood in it, as those of Gusarata, and the Banians of Cambaia, which obserue Py-

thagoras Law : most of them pray vnto the Sunne and Moone, yet they doe all acknowledge a God that made, created and ruleth all things, and that after this life there is another, wherein men shall be rewarded according to their workes. But they haue Idols and Images, which they call Pagodes, cut and formed most yglie, and like monstrous Diuels, to whom daily they offer, and say, that those Holy men haue beene liuing among them, whereof they tell so many Miracles, as it is wonderfull, and say, that they are intercessours betwene them and God. The Diuell oftentimes answereth them out of those Images, whom they likewise know, and doe him great honour by offering vnto him, to keep friendship with him, and that hee should not hurt them. They haue a Custome, when any Maide is to be married, and that they will honour their Pagode, for the more credit to the Bridegroom, they bring the Bride with great Triumph and Musicke before their Pagode, which is made with a Pinne of luorie bone, to whom the nearest friends and kinswomen of the Bride, together with the Bride doe goe, and by force make the Image to take the Brides maidenhead, so that the blood remaineth still vpon the Image, for a remembrance thereof, and then after other diuellish Superstitions and Ceremonies, hauing made their Offerings, they bring the Bride home, where shee is deliuered to the Bridegroom, hee being very ioyfull and proud, that their Pagode hath honoured him so much and ealed him of so much labour. They haue for the most part a custome to Pray vnto the first thing they meet withall in the Morning, and all that day after they pray vnto it, bee it Hog, or any other thing. And if in the morning they goe out, they chance at the first sight to see a Crow (whereof there are great numbers in India) they will not goe forth of their doores all that day, no nor for all the goods in the world, for they esteeme it an euill signe, and an unluckie day. They pray likewise to the New Moone, and when shee first appeareth, they fall vpon their knees, and salute her with great Deuotion. There are among them certaine people called Iogues, which are such as we call Hermits, & those doe they esteeme for Holie men, these men liue a verie strict life with great Abstinence, and make the common people beleue many strange things. They haue likewise many Southsayers and Witches, which vse Iugling, and trauell through out the Countie, hauing about them many liue Snakes, which they know how to bewitch, and being shut vp in little Baskets, they pull them out and make them dance, turne, and winde at the sound of a certaine Instrument, whereon they play, and speake vnto them. They wind them about their neckes, armes, and legges, kissing them, with a thousand other deuises, onely to get money. They are all for the most part verie skilfull in preparing of Poysons, wherewith they doe many strange things, and easilie poyson each other, their dwellings and Houses are verie little and low, couered with Straw, without windowes, and verie low and narrow doores, so that a man must almost creepe vpon his knees to goe in ; their Householdstuffe is Mats of straw, both to sit and lie vpon, their Tables, Table-clothes, and Napkins, are made of the great Indian Fig-leaues, they serue them not onely for Tables, Sheets, and other Linnen, but also for Dishes, wherein they put their meat, which you shall likewise see in the Grocers, and Pothecaries shops, to put and wrap in all things whatsoever they haue within their shops, (as wee doe in Paper.) They likewise ioyne them together in such sort, that they can put both Butter, Oyle, and such liquid stufes therein, and also whatsoever cometh to hand. To dresse their meat they haue certaine Earthen pots wherein they seeth Rice, and make holes in the ground, wherein they stampe it, or beat it with a wooden Pestell made for the purpose, and they are so miserable, that they buy the Rice in the Huskes, as it groweth on the ground, and some of them haue Rice sown behind their House to serue their necessarie vse. They vse to drinke out of a Copper kanne with a spout, whereby they let the water fall downe into their mouthes, and neuer touch the Pot with their lippes. Their Houses are commonly strawed with Kow-dung, which (they say) killeth Fleas. They are verie cleane on their Bodies, for euerie day they wash themselves all their bodie ouer, as often as they ease themselves or make water, both men and women, like the Moors and Mahometans. They wash themselves with the left hand, because they eate with the right hand, and vse no Spooones. They doe keepe and obserue their Ceremonies and Superstitions, with great deuotion, for they neuer goe forth without praying, when they trauell by the way. They haue on euery Hill, Cliffe, Hole, or Denne their Pagodes and Idols in most deuillish and deformed shapes, cut and hewed out of the stones and rockes, with their Furnaces hard by them, and a Cisterne not farre from them, which is alwaies full of water, and euery one that passeth by, washeth their feet therein, and so fall downe before their Idoll, some setting beforehim for an offering Fruits, Rice, Egges, Hennes, &c. as their deuotions serue, and then cometh the Bramene their Priest and taketh it away and eateth it, making the common people beleue that the Pagode hath eaten it.

When they will make a voyage to Sea, they vse at the least fourteene daies before they enter into their Ships, to make so great a noise with sounding of Trumpets, and to make Fires, that it may bee heard and scene both by night and day, the Ship being hanged about with Flagges, wherewith (they say) they feast their Pagode, that they may haue a good Voyage. The like doe they at their returne for a Thanksgiuing fourteene daies long & thus they vse to doe in all their Feasts, Affaires, Mariages, Childbirths, & at other times of the yeere, as Sowing, & Mowing, &c.

The Diuell neuer hinders the quantitie but the qualitie of Deuotion: for falsehood makes it his, whereof he is ambitious.

The Heathenish Indians that dwell in Goa are very rich Merchants, and traffique much, there is one street within the Towne, that is full of shops kept by those Heathenish Indians, that not onely sell all kinds of Silkes, Sattins, Damaskes, and curious workes of Porcelaine from China and other places, but all manner of wares of Veluet, Silke, Sattin and such like, brought out of Portngall, which by meanes of their Brokers they buy by the great, and sell them againe by the piece or elles, wherein they are very cunning, and naturally subtile. There is also another street, where the Benianes of Cambaia dwell, that haue all kinds of wares out of Cambaia, and all sorts of precious stones, and are very subtile and cunning to bore and make holes in all kinds of stones, Pearles, and Corrals: on the other side of the same street dwell other Heathens, which sell all sorts of Bedsteads, Stooles, and such like stufte, very cunningly couered ouer with Lacke, most pleasant to behold, and they can turne the Lacke into any colour that you will desire. There is also a street full of Gold and Siluer Smiths that are Heathens, which make all kind of workes, also diuers other Handicrafts men, as Copper-smiths, Carpenters, and such like Occupations, which are all Heathens, and euery one a street by themselves. There are likewise other Merchants that deale all by great, with Corne, Rice, and other Indian wares and merchandises, as Wood and such like. Some of them farme the Kings Rents and Reuenues, so that they are skilfull euery way to make their profits. There are also many Heathen Brokers, very cunning and subtile in buying and selling, and with their tongues to pleade on both sides.

There are in Goa many Heathen Physicians which obserue their grauities with Hats carried ouer them for the Sunne, like the Portugals, which no other Heathens doe, but onely Ambasadors, or some rich Merchants. These Heathen Physicians doe not onely cure their owne Nations and Countymen, but the Portugals also, for the Vice-roy himselfe, the Arch-bishop, and all the Monkes and Friers doe put more trust in them then in their owne Countymen, whereby they get great store of money, and are much honoured and esteemed. The Countymen in the Villages round about Goa, and such as labour and till the land are most Christians: but there is not much difference among them from the other Heathens, for that they can hardly leaue their Heathenish superstitions, which in part are permitted them, and is done to draw the other Heathens to bee christened, as also that otherwise they would hardly bee perswaded to continue in the Christian Faith. There is in every place of the street Exchangers of money, by them called Xaraffos, which are all Christian Jewes. They are very ready and expert in all manner of accounts, and in knowing of all sorts of money, without whose helpe men dare not receiue any money, because there is much counterfeit money abroad, which is hard to be knowne from the good, were it not for these Xaraffos, which can disterne it with halfe an eye. The Indian Heathens haue a custome, that no man may change nor alter Trade or Occupation, but must vsue his fathers Trade, and marrie mens daughters of the same Occupation, Trade, or dealing, which is so neerely looked vnto, that they are diuided and set apart, each Occupation by it selfe, as Countries and Nations are, and so they call one another: for if they speake to a man, they aske him of what Trade he is, whether he be a Goldsmith, Barber, Merchant, Grocer, Fisherman, or such like. They giue no household-stuffe with their daughters, but onely Jewels, and pay the charges of the Wedding. The Sonnes inherite all their goods.

THe times and seasons of the yeeres are as followeth. Winter beginneth on the last of Aprill, throughout the whole coast which is called India, from Cambaia to the Cape de Comorin, and commeth with a Westerne winde, which bloweth out of the Sea vpon the Coast: the beginning thereof is with thunder and lightning, and after that a stedfast and continuall raine, which lasteth night and day till the moneth of September, and then Winter endeth with thunder and lightning: and by reason of that continuall raine, it is called Winter, as also because at that time they cannot trauell on the Seas. But in warme weather, when fruit time commeth on, it is then right Summer: for the time, which in India is called Summer, because of the clearenesse and drinesse of the weather, is the colder and the wholsomer, and then there blowe East windes, so that the nights are then very coole, and somewhat sharpe; and then there are no speciall kindes of fruits in season, but such as growe continually all the yeere. Against the Winter commeth, euery man maketh his prouision of victuals, and all other necessities, like as in a ship that is to make a Voyage of five or sixe moneths; also all their ships are brought into the Riuer, and vnfurnished of tacklings, and euery thing being taken out of them they are couered with Mats, otherwise they would rot with the raine, which is so stedfast and continuall all the Winter, that many times diners houses by reason of the great moistnesse doe fall vnto the ground: and as soone as Winter beginneth, there driueth into the mouth of the Hauen great bankes and shoales of sands, which stop it vp, so that neither Ship nor Boat can either goe out or in: and the Sea both there and along the coast maketh so great a roaring and noise, that men can neither heare nor see: also the water of the Riuer of Goa which runneth about the Iland in Winter, by meanes of the land-waters that by the continuall raine falleth from the Hills, is cleane fresh water, and of a red colour, which in Summer is cleane contrarie and and like sea-water, by reason of the concourse it hath with the Sea. In the Moneth of September, when Winter endeth, the bankes of sand doe fleet and vade away out of the Riuer, so that not onely small ships may come in and goe out, but also the great Portugall ships of fixteene hundred tunnes may freely enter without a Pylor, for it is deepe enough, and without danger. In Winter it is a heauy and melancholike being there, for there is no other exercise to be vsed, but onely to sit in their shirts, with a paire of linnen breeches, and goe and passe the time away with their neighbours, in playing and such exercises, for that throughout the whole Towne there is no other doing. The women and Mesticos take great pleasure in the Winter time when it raineth, with their husbands and slaues to goe into the fields, or some Garden, whether they carrie good store of victuals, and there in their Gardens haue many Cesternes or Ponds of water, wherein they take their delights to swimme and to bathe themselves. In this time most of their Indian fruit is in season.

The Summer beginneth in September, and continueth till the last of Aprill, and is alwaies cleare skie and faire weather, without once or very little raining: Then all the ships are rigged and made ready to sayle for all places; as also the Kings Armie to keepe the Coast, and to conuoy Merchants, and then the East windes beginne to blowe from off the Land into the Seas, whereby they are called Terreinbos, that is to say, the Land winds. They blowe very pleasantly and coolly, although at the first, by changing of the weather they are very dangerous, and cause many great diseases, which doe commonly fall in India, by the changing of the time. These winds blowe alwaies in Summer, beginning at midnight, and continue till noone, but they neuer blowe aboue ten miles into the Sea, from off the coast, and presently after one of the clocke vntill midnight the West winde bloweth, which commeth out of the Sea into the Land, and is called Virafon. These winds are so sure and certaine at their times, as though men held them in their hands, whereby they make the Land very temperate, otherwise the heate would be vnmeasurable.

Constancy of winds.

It is likewise a strange thing that when it is Winter vpon the coast of India, that is from Diu to the Cape de Comorin, on the other side of the Cape de Comorin, on the coast called Choramandel, it is cleane contrary, so that there it is Summer, and yet they lie all vnder one height or degrees, and there is but seventy miles by land betweene both coasts, and in some places but twenty miles, and which is more, as men trauell ouer land from Cochin to Saint Thomas (which lieth on the same coast of Choramandel) and coming by the Hill of Ballagatte, where men must passe ouer to goe from the one coast vnto the other: on the one side of the Hill to the top thereof it is pleasant cleare sunne shining weather, and going downe on the other side there is raine, winde, thunder and lightning, as if the world should end and be consumed: which is to be vnderstood, that it changeth from the one side to the other, as the time falleth out, so that on the one side of the Hills it is Winter, and on the other side Summer: and it is not onely so in that place and Countrey, but also at Ormuz, on the coast of Arabia Felix by the Cape of Rosalgatte, where the ships lie, it is very still, cleare, and pleasant water, and faire Summer time; and turning about the Cape on the other side, it is raine and wind with great stormes and tempests, which with the times of the yeere doe likewise change on the other side, and so it is in many other places of the Orientall Countries.

Winter and Summer within few miles in the same height.

The sicknesses and diseases in Goa, and throughout India, which are common, come most with the changing of the times and the weather, as it is said before: there raigeth a sickness called Mordexyn, which stealeth vpon men, and handleth them in such sort, that it weakeneth a man, and maketh him cast out all that he hath in his body, and many times his life withall. This sickness is very common, and killeth many a man, whereof they hardly or neuer escape. The bloody Fluxe is there likewise very common and dangerous, as the Plague with vs. They haue many continuall Feuers, which are burning Agues, and consume mens bodies with extreme heate, whereby within foure or five dayes they are either whole or dead. This sickness is common and very dangerous, and hath no remedie for the Portugals but letting blood: but the Indians and Heathens doe cure themselves with herbes, as Sanders, and other such like ointments, wherewith the ease themselves. This sickness consumeth many Portugals euery yeere, some because they haue little to eat, and lesse to drinke of any meate or drinke that is nourishing, and vse much company of women, because that Land is naturall to prouoke them thereunto, as also the most part of the Souldiers by such meanes haue their liuing and their maintenance, which oftentimes costeth them both life and limme, for although men were of Iron or Steele, the vnchaste life of a woman, with her vnassatiabable lusts were able to grind him to powder, and sweepe him away like dust, which costeth many a mans life, as the Kings Hospitall can well beare witness, wherein they lodge, whensoever they are sicke, where euery yeere at the least there entred fife hundred liue men, and neuer come forth till they are dead, and they are onely Portugals, for no other sicke person may lodge therein, I meane such as are called white men, for the other Indians haue a Hospitall by themselves. In this Hospitall they are very well looked vnto by the Iesuites, and Gentlemen: whereof euery moneth one of the best is chosen and appointed, who personally is there by them, and giueth the sicke per-persons whatsoever they will desire, and sometimes spend more by foure or fūe hundred Duc-kets of their owne purses, then the Kings allowance reacheth vnto.

But returning to our matter of sicknesse, Pockes and Piles, with other secret diseases, they are in those Countries very common, and not hidden or concealed, for they thinke it no shame, more then to haue any other disease. They heale them with the root China: there are some that haue had them at the least three or foure times, and are not any thing at all shunned or disliked for the same, but dare both boast and bragge thereof. It is not any thing perilous for the body, insomuch that they had rather haue them, and feare them lesse then any of the foresaid diseases. The Plague hath neuer beene in India, neither is it knowne vnto the Indians, but poisoning, witchcraft, and such like, whereby some lose their healths, and some their liues, is their daily exercise, and very common with them. The stone grauell, and rupture raigneth much among them, specially among married men, by reason of the great quantitie of water that they drinke being given to all pleasure and riotousnesse, enioying all what their hearts desire, sitting alwaies with their bellies open in their shirts in a Gallerie, recreating themselves with the wind which cooleth them, sometimes hauing a slaue to scratch and pare their nayles and feet, another the head, the third holds a Fanne to drive away the Flies. This is the common vse for two houres after noone, where likewise they take an afternoones sleepe, and euer as they haue thirst, they bring him a dish of Conserues or other Comfets, that the water should not worke too much in his body, but taste the better. With such and the like exercises they doe passe the day till night comes on, so that commonly they haue all swollen bellies like Bacchus, whereby the Souldiers and other Indians call them Barrigois, that is, Bellies, or Great bellies.

The day both Summer and Winter is there all of a length, not much difference, onely in the change they haue about an houres difference. The Sun riseth at fixe, and setteth at fixe. When it is noone, commonly they haue the Sunne in the middle of the element iust ouer their heads, and it giueth no shadow, although it stretcheth somewhat out as the Sunne taketh his course. In Goa you may see both the Poles of the world, the North and South Starres stand not farre about the Horizon.

Chap. 36.
Of the Indians called Bra- menes, which are the Ministers of the Pa- gods, and Indi- an Idols, and of their manner of life.

THE Bramenes are the honestest and most esteemed Nation among all the Indian Heathens: for they doe alwaies serue in the chiefeest places about the King, as Receiuers, Stewards, 30 Ambassadors, and such like Offices. They are likewise the Priests and Ministers of the Pagods, or deuilish Idols. They are of great authoritie among the Indian people, for that the King doth nothing without their counsell and consent, and that they may bee knowne from other men; they weare vpon their naked bodie, from the shoulder crosse vnder the arme ouer their bodie downe to the girdle, or the cloth that is wrapped about their middle, three or foure strings like sealing threed, whereby they are knowne: which they neuer put off although it should cost them their liues, for their Profession and Religion will not permit it. They goe naked, sauing onely that they haue a cloth bound about their middles to hide their priue members. They weare sometimes when they goe abroad, a thinne cotton linnen Gowne called Cabaia, lightly cast ouer their shoulders, and hanging downe to the ground like some other In- 40 dians, as Benianes, Gusarates, and Decanys. Vpon their heads they weare a white cloth, wound twice or thrice about, therewith to hide their haire, which they neuer cut off, but weare it long and turned vp as the women doe. They haue most commonly round rings of gold hanging at their eares, as most of the Indians haue. They eate not any thing that hath life, but feed themselves with herbes and Rice, neither yet when they are sick will for any thing be let blood, but heale themselves by herbes and ointments, and by rubbing their bodies with Sanders, and such like sweet woods. In Goa and on the Sea coasts there are many Bramenes, which commonly doe maintayne themselves with selling of Spices and other Apothecarie ware, but it is not so cleane as others, but full of garbish and dust. They are very subtile in writing and casting accounts, whereby they make other simple Indians beleue what they will. 50

Touching the points of their Religion, wherein the common people beleue them to bee Prophets: whatsoever they first meet withall in the streets at their going forth, that doe they all the day after pray vnto. The women when they goe forth haue but one cloth about their bodies; which couereth their heads, and hangerh downe vnto their knees: all the rest of the body is naked. They haue rings through their noses, about their legs, toes, neckes, and armes, and vpon each hand seuen or eight rings or bracelets, some of siluer and gilt, if they be of wealth and abilitie: but the common people of glasse, which is the common wearing of all the Indian women. When the woman is seuen yeeres old, and the man nine yeeres, they doe marrie, but they come not together before the woman be strong enough to beare children. When the Bramenes die, all their friends assemble together, and make a hole in the ground, wherein they 60 throwe much wood and other things: and if the man bee of any account, they cast in sweet Sanders, and other Spices, with Rice, Corne, and such like, and much Oyle, because the fire should burne the stronger. Which done, they lay the dead Bramenes in it: then commeth his wife with musike and many of her neere friends all singing certaine praises in commendation of

of her husbands life, putting her in comfort, and encouraging her to follow her husband, and goe with him into the other world. Then shee taketh all her Jewels, and parteth them among her friends, and so with a cheerfull countenance, she leapeth into the fire, and is presently covered with Wood and Oyle: so shee is quickly dead, and with her Husbands body burned to ashes: and if it chance, as not very often it doth, that any woman refuseth to be burnt with her Husband, then they cut the haire cleane off from her head: and while she liueth she must neuer after weare any Jewels more, and from that time shee is despised, and accounted for a dishonest woman. These Bramenes obserue certaine Fasting dayes in the yeere, and that with so great abstinence, that they eate nothing all that day, and sometimes in three or foure dayes together. They haue their Pagodes and Idols, whose Ministers they are, whereof they tell and shew many Miracles, and say that those Pagodes haue beene men liuing vpon earth, and because of their Holie liues, and good Workes done here in this world, are for a reward thereof, become Holie men in the other world, as by their miracles, by the Diuell performed, hath beene manifested vnto them, and by their commandements their formes and shapes are made in the most vgly and deformed manner that possible may be deuiled. Such they Pray and Offer vnto, with many diuellish Superstitions, and stedfastly belecue that they are their Aduocates and Intercessors vnto God. They belecue also that there is a supream God aboue, which ruleth all things. and that mens soules are Immortall, and that they goe out of this world into the other, both Beasts and Men, and receiue reward according to their workes, as Pythagoras teacheth, whose Disciples they are.

The Gusarates and Banians, are of the Countrey of Cambaia: many of them dwell in Goa, Diu, Chaul, Cochin, and other places of India, because of their trade and traffique in Merchandise, which they vse much with all kindes of wares, as Corne, Cotton, Linnen, Anil, Rice, and other wares, specially all kind of precious Stones wherein they haue great skill. They are most subtil and expert in casting of Accounts and Writing, so that they doe not onely surpass and goe beyond all Jewes and other Nations thereabouts, but also the Portugals: and in this respect they haue no aduantage, for that they are very perfect in the trade of Merchandise, and very readie to deceiue men. They eate not any thing that hath Life or Blood in it, neither would they kill it for all the goods in the world, how small or vnnesseary soeuer it were, for that they stedfastly belecue, that euery living thing hath a Soule, and are next after Men to be accounted of, according to Pythagoras law, and know it must die: and sometimes they doe buy certaine Fowles or other Beasts of the Christians or Portugals, which they meant to haue killed, and when they haue bought them, they let them flee and runne away.

They haue a custome in Cambaia, in the High-wayes, and Woods, to set Pots with water, and to cast Corne and other Graine vpon the ground to feed Birds and Beasts withall: and throughout Cambaia they haue Hospitals to cure and heale all manner of Beasts and Birds therein whatsoeuer they ayle, and receiue them thither as if they were Men, and when they are healed, they let them flie or runne away whither they will, which among them is a worke of great Charitie, saying, it is done to their euen neighbours. And if they take a Flea or a Louse, they will not kill it, but take or put it into some hole or corner in the wall, and so let it goe, and you can doe them no greater iniurie then to kill it in their presence, for they will neuer leaue intreating and desiring with all curtesie not to kill it, and that man should not seeme to commit so great a sinne, as to take away the life of that, to whom God had giuen both Soule and Bodie: yea, and they will offer much money to a man to let it liue, and goe away. They eate no Radishes, Onions, Garlicke, nor any kind of Herbe that hath any colour of Red in it, nor Egges, for they thinke there is blood in them. They drinke not any Wine, nor vse any Vineger, but onely water. They are so dangerous of eating and drinking with other men which are not their Countymen, that they would rather starue to death then once to doe it. It happeneth oftentimes that they sayle in the Portugals ships from Goa to Cochin, to sell their Wares, and to traffique with the Portugals, and then they make their prouisions for so long time as they thinke to stay vpon the way, which they take aboard with them, and thereupon they feed. And if the time falleth out longer, then they made account of their water and prouision being all spent, as it happened when I sailed from Goa to Cochin, they had rather die for hunger and thirst then once to touch the Christians meat. They wash themselves before they eate, as the Bramenes doe, as also euerie time when they ease themselves or make water. They are of a yellow colour like the Bramenes, and somewhat whiter, and there are Women among them which are much whiter and clearer of Complection then the Portugall women. They are formed and made both in Face, Limbes, and in all other things like men of Europe, colour onely excepted. Their Apparell is a thinne white Gowne vpon their naked bodies, from the head to the feet, and made fast on the side vnder their armes, their Shooes of red leather, sharpe at the toes, and turning vp like hookes, their Beards shauen like the Turkes, sauing onely their Mouſtaches, they weare on their Heads a white cloth three or foure times wrapped about like the Bramenes, and vnder their haire a Starre vpon their foreheads, which they rub euery morning with a little white Sanders tempered with water, & three or foure graines of Rice among it, which the Bramenes; also doe as a superstitious Ceremonie of their Law. Their Bodies are commonly anoynted with Sanders and other sweet Woods, which they doe verie much vse, as also all the Indians. Their Women are apparelled like the Bramenes wiues, they eate like the Mahometans, and all other Indians vpon the ground. In their Houses or Assemblies they sit on the ground vpon Mats or Carpets, and alwayes leaue their Shooes without the doore, so that they are alwayes barefoot in their Houses: wherefore commonly the heeles of their shooes are neuer pulled vp, to saue labour of vntying or vndoing them, they haue a thousand other Heathenish superstitions which are not worth the rehearfall.

Chap. 38.
Of the Canaras and Decaniins.

Brutish and stinking holies

THe Canaras and Decaniins are of the Countrey of Decan, commonly called Ballagate, lying behind Goa: many of them dwell in Goa. Their Apparell is like the Gufurates and Benianes, except their Shooes, which they weare like Antiques with cut toes, and fastned about vpon their naked feet, which they call Alparcas. They weare their Beards and haire long, as it groweth without cutting, but onely turne it vp, and dresse it as the Benianes and Bramenes vse to doe, and are like them for colour, forme, and making. They eate all things except Kine, Hogges, and Buffles, Flesh and Fish. They account the Oxe, Kow or Buffle to bee Holie, which they haue commonly in the house with them, and they besmeere, stroke, and handle them with all the friendship in the world, and feed them with the same meat they vse to eate themselves, and when the Beasts ease themselves, they hold their hands vnder their tails and so throw the dung away. In the night time they sleepe with them in their Houses, and to conclude, vse them as if they were reasonable Creatures, whereby they thinke to doe God great seruice. In their Eating, sitting in the House, Washing, making Cleane, and other Ceremonies and Superstitions they are altogether like the Bramenes, Gufurates, and Banians. In their Marriages they contract each with other at seuen yeeres, and at eleuen or twelue yeeres they are married, and dwell together. When they are to bee married, they begin foureteene dayes before to make a great sound with Trumpets, Drummes, and Fires, which continueth day and night for all those foureteene dayes, with so great a noise of songs and Instruments, that men can neither heare, nor see: On the Wedding day, all the friends and kindred on both sides doe assemble together, and sit vpon the ground, round about a Fire, and goe seuen times about it uttering certaine words, whereby the Wedding is done. They giue their Daughters no Household-stuffe, but onely some Jewels, as Bracelets, Eare-rings, and such like of small value, wherewith their Husbands must be content, for the Daughters are no Heyres, but the Sonnes inherite all, but they keepe and maintaine their Daughters and Sisters till they marrie: when they die, they are likewise burnt, and some of their Wiues with them, but not so many as of the Bramenes. Every one of them followeth his Fathers occupation, and marrieth with the Daughters of such like Trades, which they name Kindreds. They haue their Fasting dayes, and Ceremonies like the Bramenes, for they are as the Laitie, and the Bramenes as the Spirituallie, the Ministers, Priests, and Prophets of their Idols. They hire and farme the Customes and Rents of the Portugals, and the Kings reuenues in the Land of Bardes, Salsette, and the Iland of Goa, so that oftentimes for any question or strife they must appeare in Law, where they alwayes come without Councill or Atturney, and know so well how to place their words, according to the Lawes of Portugall, not onely Temporall but Spirituall, that they are able to set downe, and shew where it standeth written, as well as any Counsellour could doe, and make their Petitions and Requests without any mans aduise, that the Portugals doe wonder at their readie wits, as I haue oftentimes found in them. When they are to take their Oathes to beare witnesse with any man, they are set within a Circle made of Ashes vpon the pavement where they stand, still laying a few Ashes on their bare Heads, holding one hand on their heads, the other on their breasts, and then in their owne speech sweare by their Pagode, that they will tell the Truth without dissimulation, whatsoeuer shall bee asked them, for that they certainly beleue they should be damned for euer, if as then they should not say the truth, but conceale it.

Chap. 39.
Of the Canariins and Corum-biins of India.

Rice grounds.

THe Canarijns and Corumbiins are the Countrimen, and such as deale with Tilling the Land, Fishing and such like labours. These are the most contemptible, and the miserablest people of all India, and liue very poorely, maintaining themselves with little meat. They eate all kind of things, except Kine, Oxen, Buffles, Hogges, and Hens flesh; their Religion is like the Decaniins and Canaras, for they are all of one Countrey and Custome, little differing: they goe naked, their priuie members onely couered with a cloth. The Women goe with a cloth bound about their middle beneath their nauels, and hanging downe to the middle of their thighes, and the other end thereof they cast ouer their shoulders, whereby halfe their breasts are couered. They are in a manner blacke, or of a darke browne colour, many of them are Christians, because their chiefe habitation and dwelling places are on the Sea-side, in the Countreies bordering vpon Goa, for that the Palme-trees doe grow vpon the Sea coasts, or vpon the banks by Riuer sides. The Rice is sowed vpon low ground, which in Winter time is couered with water, where, wherewith those Canarijns doe maintaine themselves: these bring Hennes, Fruit, Milke, Egges, and other such like wares into the Towne to sell. They dwell in little straw Houses, the doores whereof are so low, that men must creepe in and out, their household-stuffe is a Mat vpon the ground to sleepe vpon, and a Pit or hole in the ground to beat their Rice in, with a Pot or two to seeth it in, and so they liue and gaine so much as it is a wonder. For commonly their Houses are full of small Children, which crall and creepe about all naked, vntill they are seuen or eight yeares old, and then they couer their priuie members. When the women are readie to trauell with Child, they are commonly deliuered when they are all alone, and their Husbands in the fields, as it fortuneth vpon a time, as I and some other of my friends went to walke in the fields, and into the Villages where the Canarijns dwell, and hauing thirst, I went to one of the Canarijns houses to aske some water, therewith to refresh vs, and because I was very thirstie, I stooped downe and thrust my head in at the doore, asking for some water. where I espied a Woman alone within the house, tying her cloth fast about her middle, and before her hauing a wooden Trough (by the Portugals called Gamello) full of water, where shee stood and washed a Child, whereof as then she had newly beene deliuered without any helpe: which hauing washt, she laid it Naked on the ground vpon a great Indian Figge leafe, and desired me to stay and she would presently giue me water. When I vnderstood by her that she had as then newly beene deliuered of that Child without any helpe, I had no desire to drinke of her water, but went vnto another to aske water, and perceiued the same woman not long after going about her house, as if there had beene no such matter, and the Children are brought vp in that manner cleane naked, nothing done vnto them, but onely washed and made cleane in a litle cold water, and doe in that sort prosper and come vp as well as man would wish, or as any Child within these Countries can doe with all the tending they haue, and liue many times vntill they be a hundred yeares old, without any Head-ach, or Tooth-ach, or losing any of their Teeth. They weare onely a tucke of haire on the tops of their Heads, which they suffer to grow long: the rest of their haire is cut short, they are very expert in Swimming and Diuing, they row vp and downe the Riuer in Boates called Almadias, whereof some of them are hewen out of a peece of wood, and so narrow that a man can hardly sit in them, and it chanceth oftentimes that they turne ouer and ouer twice or thrice before they passe the Riuer, and then they leape out into the water and turne them vp, and so powring out the water they get into them againe. They are so miserable, that for a Penie they would indure to be Whipped, and they eate so litle, that it seemeth they liue by the Aire, they are likewise most of them leane, and weake of limbes, of litle strength and very Cowards, whereby the Portugals doe them great outrage and villanie, vsing them like Dogs and Beasts.

Childbirth.

In their Marriages and Deaths they obserue the manner of the Decarijns and Canaras, as also in their Religion and Ceremonies. When the Man is dead his body is burnt, and the Woman cuts her haire off, and breaketh all her Jewels, although they bee but few and small, for they are most of Glasse.

There are many Arabians and Abexijns in India. The Arabians obserue Mahometts Law, and the Abexijns, some are Mahometans, some Christians, after their manner, for they are of Prester Iohns land. The Abexijns that are Christians, haue on their Faces foure burnt markes in manner of a Crosse, one ouer their Nose in the middle of the forehead, betweene both their eies, on each of their Cheekes one, betweene their eyes and their eares, and one vnder their nether Lip downe to the chinne. These Abexijns and Arabians, such as are free doe serue in all India for Saylers and Sea-faring men. The Portugals (although they serue for Saylers in the Portugals Ships) that come into India, and haue neuer beene other in Portugall but Saylers, yet are they ashamed to liue in that order, and thinke it a great discredit vnto them, together with a great diminishing of their Authorities and estimations, which they account themselves to hold in India, so that they giue themselves out for Masters of ships, and by their Captaines are also called Pilots and chiefe Boatswaines, but not lower: for if they should descend but one step lower, it would be a great blot and blemish vnto them all their liues after, which they would not indure for any thing in the world. These Abexijns and Arabians, serue for small money, and being hired are verie lowly and subiect, so that oftentimes they are beaten and smitten, not as Slaues, but like Dogs, which they beare very patiently, not once speaking a word: they commonly haue their Wiues and Children with them in the ship wherein they are hired, which continually stay with them, what Voyage soeuer they make, and dresse their owne meat, which is Rice sodden in water with salt Fish among it. The cause why the Women faile in the ship, is, for that in Summer and not else, their ships goe to Sea, when they alwaies haue calme water and faire weather, with good windes: they haue commonly but one Portugall or two for Captaine, Master and Pilot, and they haue a chiefe Boatswaine, which is an Arabian, which they call Mocadon, and he is ruler of the Arabians and Abexijns, that are Sailers, whom he hath vnder his subiection, euen as if they were his Slaues or Subiects.

Pride of Portugall Saylers.

This Mocadon is hee that conditioneth and maketh bargaine with the owners of the Ship, to haue so many Sailers, and hee receiue the monethlie money for their wages, and accounteth with the Sailers particularly, but for gouernment of the ship hee hath not to doe, neither troubleth himselfe therewith. The ships when they saile, vse no Caske for water, because there is not any throughout all India, nor any made there, saue onely such as come out of Portugall, and vsed in the Portugall shippes: but in stead of Pipes they vse a great foure cornered wooden Cesterne, that standeth by the maine Mast, at the very foot thereof, vpon the keele of the ship, which is very well pitched, and made fast, wherein they lade as much water as they thinke will serue them for their Voyage. The Captaine, Master or Pilot, Marchants and Passengers, haue euerie man their meat by themselves, and their water in great Indian pots called Martauans.

people of Mosambique, led Caffares, &c stomes. See of these sup. 9. c. 12

THE Blacke people or Caffares of the Land of Mosambique, and all the Coast of Ethiopia, and within the land to the Cape de bona Speranza, goe all naked, although those of Mosambique, (that is the Women) doe a little couer themselves, which they doe by meanes of the daily conuersation they haue with the Portugals. Some haue all their bodies rased and seared with Irons, and all figured like rased Satten and Damaske, wherein they take great pride, thinking there are no fairer people then they in all the world, so that when they see any white people, that weare Apparell on their bodies, they laugh and mocke at them, thinking vs to bee Monsters and vgly people: and when they will make any diuellish forme and Picture, then they inuent one after the forme of a White man in his apparell. There are among them that file there Teeth as sharpe as Needles, which they likewise esteeme for a great ornament.

Note of Iesuites

There are some of them that are become Christians since the Portugals came thither, but there is no great paines taken about it in those Countries, because there is no profite to bee had, as also that it is an infectious and vnwholsome Countrey: And therefore the Iesuites are warie enough not to make any Houses or habitations therein, for they see no great profite to be reaped there for them, as they doe in India and the Ilands of Iapan, and in other places, where they find great quantities of Riches, with the sappe whereof they increase much and fill their Bee-hiues, therewith to satisfie their thirstie and insatiable desires.

A costly kinde of Chaine for Women to weare.

They haue a Custome among them, that when they goe to Warre against their enemies, if they winne the Battell, or ouerthrow each other, he that taketh or killeth most men, is holden and accounted for the best and brauest man among them, and much respected, and to witnesse the same before their Kings, of as many as they haue slaine or taken Prisoners, they cut off their priue members, that if they bee let goe againe, they may no more beget Children, which in proesse of time might mischiefe them, and then they drie them well, because they should not rot: which being so dried, they come before their Kings with great reuerence, in the presence of the principall men in the Village, and there take these members so dried one by one in their mouthes, and spit them on the ground at the Kings feet, which the King with great thanks accepteth, and the more to reward and recompence their Valour, causeth them all to be taken vp and giuen to them againe, for a signe and token of Honour, whereby euer after from that time forwards they are accounted as Knights, and they take all those members, wherewith the King hath thus honoured them, and tie them all vpon a string like a Bracelet or Chaine, and when they Marrie, or goe to any Wedding, or Feasts, the Bride or Wiues of those Knights doe weare that Chaine of mens members about their neckes, which among them is as great an Honour, as it is with vs, to weare the Golden Fleece.

From Mosambique great numbers of these Caffares are carried into India, and many times they sell a Man or Woman that is growne to their full strength, for two or three Duckets. When the Portugals ships put in there for fresh Water and other necessaries, then they are dearer. In time of Pouertie or Dearth the Fathers may sell their Children, as it happened in my time, that there was such a dearth, and scarcitie of Victuals in the firme land, and Countries bordering vpon Goa, that the men of India came to Goa (and other places where the Portugals are resident) to sell their Children in great numbers, and for small prices, to buy them victuals. I haue seene Boyes of eight or ten yeares, giuen in exchange for fise or sixe measures of Rice, and some for three or foure Duckets the peece, and some came with their Wiues and Children to offer themselves to bee Slaues, so that they might haue meate and drinke to nourish their bodies.

And because the Portugals haue Traffique in all places (as wee haue beene in many) it is the cause why so many are brought out of all Countries to be sold, for the Portugals doe make a liuing by buying and selling of them, as they doe with other wares.

Chap. 42.
Of the Malabares and Nayros in India, with their manners and custome.

THE Malabares, are those that dwell on the Sea-coast, betweene Goa, and the Cape de Cormorijn Southward from Goa, where the Pepper groweth. They haue a speech by themselves, and their Countrey is diuided into many Kingdomes, they goe all naked onely their priue members couered, the Women likewise haue but a cloth from their Nauell downe to their knees, all the rest is naked, they are strong of limbes, and verie arrogant and proud, of colour colour altogether blacke, yet verie smooth both of haire and skinne, which commonly they anoynt with Oyle, to make it shine; they weare their haire as long as it will grow, tyed on the top or crowne of their heads with a Lace, both men and women: the lappes of their Eares are open, and are so long that they hang downe to their shoulders, and the longer and wider they are, the more they are esteemed among them, and it is thought to be a beautie in them. Of Face, Bodie and Limbes, they are altogether like men of Europe, without any difference, but onely in colour, the men are commonly verie hairie, and rough vpon the brest, and on their bodies, and are the most Lecherous and vnchaste Nation in all the Orient, so that there are 10 verie few women Children among them, of seuen or eight yeeres old, that haue their Maiden-heads: They are verie readie to catch one from another, though it bee but for a small Penie.

In their Houses they are not verie curious, their houses and householdstufte, differeth not much from the Canarijns and Corumbijns of Goa. Their Idolatrie, Ceremonies and Superstitions, are like the Heathens. Of these Malabares there are two manner of people, the one is Noblemen or Gentlemen, called Nayros, which are Souldiers, that doe onely weare and handle 20 Armes, the other is the common people, called Polyas, and they may weare no Weapons, nor beare any Armes. The Nayros must in all places where they goe or stand, weare such Armes as are appointed for them, and alwayes be readie at the Kings commandement to doe him seruice, some of them doe alwayes beare a naked Rapier or Courtelas in their right hands, and a great Target in their left hand, those Targets are very great: and made of light wood, so that when 20 they will they can couer their whole bodies therewith; they are so well vsed thereunto, that they esteeme it nothing to beare them, and when they trauell on the way, they may be heard a great way off, for that they commonly make a great knocking with the Hilt of their Rapier against the Target, because they would be heard. There are some that carrie a Bow and a venemous Arrow vpon their shoulder, wherein they are verie expert, others carrie long Pikes, some Pieces, with the Match ready lighted, and wound about their armes, and haue the best Lockes that possible may be found in all Europe, which they know so well how to vse, that the Portugals can haue no aduantage against them. Wherefoeuer they goe, they must alwaies haue their Armes with them, both night and day. Not any of them are Married, nor may not marrie during their liues, but they may freely lie with the Nayros Daughters, or with any other that li-
 30 keth them, what women soeuer they be, yea though they be Married women. When the Nayro hath a desire thereunto, hee entreteth into a house where he thinketh good, and setteth his Armes in the street without the doore, and goeth in and dispatcheth his businesse, with the good Wife or the Daughter, the doore standing wide open, not fearing that any man should come in to let him; for whosoever passeth by, and seeth the Nayros armes standing at the doore, although it be the Goodman himselfe, hee goeth by, and letteth him make an end, and hauing done, he taketh his Armes and departeth thence, and then the Husband may come to the house without making any words, or once mouing question about it. In that manner they goe where they will, and no man may denie them. As these Nayros goe in the streets, they vse to crie Po, Po, which is to say, Take heed, looke to your selues, or I come, stand out of the way, for that the other 40 sort of people called Polyas, that are no Nayros, may not once touch or trouble one of them; for if any of the Polyas should stand still, and not giue them place, whereby he should chance to touch their bodies, he may freely thrust him through, and no man aske him why he did it. And when they are once touched by any Polyas, or by any other Nation except Nayros, they must (before they eate, or conuerse with other Nayros) wash and cleanse their bodies with great Ceremonies and Superstitions. Likewise they must not be touched by any Christian, or any other man. And when the Portugals came first into India, at Cochin it was concluded, (to pacifie the matter, and to keepe peace and quietnesse among them) that two men should be chosen, one for the Nayros, and the other for the Portugals, that should Fight bodie to bodie, and hee that should be ouerthrowne, that Nation should giue place vnto the other, this was done in the 50 presence of both Nations, and the Portugall ouercame the Nayro, whom he slew; whereupon it was agreed, that the Nayros should giue place vnto the Portugall, and stand aside vntill he be past wheresoeuer they meet. The Nayros weare the nailes of their hands very long, whereby they shew that they are Gentlemen, because the longnesse of the Nailes doth let and hinder men from working or doing any labour. They say likewise that they doe it, the better and faster to gripe a thing in their hands, and to hold their Rapiers, which some Portugals and Mesticos doe likewise vse, and hold the same opinion with the Nayros, whereof there are many in India, which let their Nailes grow for the same cause.

The principallest or chieftest of those Nayros, which are Leaders or Captaines of certaine numbers of Nayros, weare a Gold or Siluer bracelet, or Ring, about their armes, aboue their 60 elbowes: as also their Gouvernours, Ambassadours, and Kings, whereby they are knowne from other men, for otherwise they goe all naked. Also their Kings, Rulers, and other Captaines and Leaders, when they goe abroad, are guarded and accompanied by other Nayros. They are verie good and stout Souldiers, and will set vpon a man very fiercely, they are also verie full of reuenge, so that whensoeuer they fight against their Enemies either by water or by land, and that they chance to be thrust into the bodie with a Pike, they are not presently therewith content to lie downe, but if they cannot speedily plucke the Pike forth, they will not spare to pull it forth with both their hands, and draw it through their bodies, therewith to set vpon them that gaue them the wound, and to be reuenged on them.

The King may not Iudge nor execute those Nayros openly, for if they haue deserved Death, he causeth them by other Nayros to be put to death. The Daughters of the Nayros, may not haue the companie of any man, but onely of Nayros, although secretly they haue the company of many Portugals and Christians, but if the Nayros once perceiued it, or finde them in the deed doing, they might kill them without further question. In euery place where they dwell, they haue a Pit, or Well digged, wherein they doe hold water, which standeth openly in the way where euery man passeth by, wherein euery morning when they rise, they wash themselves all ouer, beginning first at the Foot and so rising vp to the Head, as well Men as Women, without being ashamed to be seene of such as goe by, or looke vpon them, and the King himselfe likewise: which water is so Greene, slimie and stinking, that a man can not chuse but stop his Nose as he goeth by it: and they certainly beleue, that whensoever they should forget to wash themselves in that water, that they should then be whollie vn-cleane and full of sinne: and this washing or making cleane, must not be done in any running water, but it must be in a place where the water standeth in a Pit or Well, and by their Bramenes conjured with many Words and Ceremonies, otherwise it were of no vertue but whollie vnprofitable, for their Idolatrous seruices. They are like the other Heathens, and are burned when they are Dead: their Sonnes may not be their Heyres, because they haue no Wiues, but vse all women, where and when they will, doubting which is their owne Sonne: for the Bramenes also haue the Kings wiues at their pleasures, and doe him great honour when it pleaseth them to lie with their Queene. Their heyres are their Sisters sonnes, for they say, although they doubt of their Fathers, yet they know their Sisters are the Mothers of them. Thus much touching the Nayros and Gentlemen or Souldiers.

The other common people of the Malabares, called Polias, are such as are the Countrey Husbandmen and Labourers, men of Occupations, Fishers, and such like: those are much contemned and despised, they liue miserably, and may weare no kind of Weapon, neither yet touch or bee conuersant with the Nayros, for as the Nayros goe on the streets, and they heare him call, they step aside, bowing their Armes, and stooping with their Heads downe to the ground, not daring so much as once looke vp before the Nayros be past: in other things they obserue the Customes of the other Indians, for that euery man followeth the Occupation of his Elders, and may not change it for any thing.

There are great numbers of Moores and Jewes in all places of India, as at Goa, Cochin, and within the Land. In their Houses and Apparell they follow the manner of the Land wherein they are resident: amongst the Indians they haue their Churches, Sinagogues and Mesquitas, wherein they vse all Ceremonies according to their Law: but in the places where the Portugals inhabite and gouerne, it is not permitted vnto them to vse them openly, neither to any Indian, although they haue their Families and dwelling Houses, and get their livings, and deale one with the other: but secretly in their Houses they may doe what they will, so that no man take offence thereat: without the Townes and where the Portugals haue no commandement, they may freely vse and exercise their Ceremonies and Superstitions, euery one as liketh him best, without any man to let or denie them: but if they bee found openly doing it in the Portugals Townes and Iurisdiccions, or that they haue any point of Christian ceremonies mingled among theirs, both men and women die for it, vnlesse they turne vnto the Christian Faith: they are most white of colour, like men of Europa, and haue many faire Women. There are many of them that came out of the Countrey of Palestina and Ierusalem thither, and speake ouer all the Exchange verie perfect and good Spanish.

The Moores likewise haue their Mesquitos, wherein they pray, and about the Church they haue many Sellers and Galleries, where they learne their Children their principles of Religion before they goe to Church: they wash their Feet, for the which purpose they haue alwayes a Cesterne with water standing without the Church, and leaue their Alparcos (which are their Shooes) standing at the Church doore before they goe in, and being in the Church they fall flat on the ground vpon their faces, and so with their armes and hands lifted vp, make many counterfeit faces. They are also Circumcised like the Jewes, and eate no Hogs flesh, and when they are dead they are buried. In their Churches they haue not any Images, but onely some Stones or round Pillers standing vpright with certaine Chaldean letters (out of their Alcaron) grauen vpon them. As I and a friend of mine chanced to goe out of the Towne, wee were desirous to see their Mahometicall Church, and their manner of Service, which was denied vs by the keeper of the doore, that bad vs put off our Shooes, but because we would not, hee said it was not lawfull for vs to enter in that sort into the Church: but to let vs see it, hee suffered vs to stand within the doore, and opened some of the windowes, that wee might see what was was within it: then the Portugall asked him for their God and their Saints which they vsed to pray vnto, because he saw the Church emptie, as I said before: then the Moore answered him, that They vsed not to pray to Stockes and Stones, but to the liuing God, which is in Heauen, and said, that the proud Portugall Christians, and the Heathens were all of one Religion, for that they pray to Images made of Wood and Stones, and giue them the Glorie which onely appertaineth to the liuing God: with the which answer the Portugall was so angrie, that hee began to chide, so that there had growne a great quarrell, had it not beene for me.

10 IN the Kingdome of Narsinga, or the Coast called Choramandel, there standeth a Pagode, that is very great, exceeding rich, and holden in great estimation, hauing many Pilgrimages & Visitations made vnto it from all the Countries bordering about it, where euery yeere they haue many Faires, Feasts, and Processions, and there they haue a Waggon or a Cart, which is so great and heauie, that three or foure Elephants can hardly draw it, and this brought soorth at Faires, Feasts, and Processions. At this Cart hang likewise many Cables or Ropes, whereat also all the Countrey people, both men and women of pure deuotion doe pull and hale. In the vpper part of this Cart standeth a Tabernacle or Seat, wherein sitteth the Idoll, and vnder it sit the Kings Wiues, which after their manner play on all Instruments, making a most sweet melodie, and in that sort is the Cart drawne forth, with great Deuotions and Processions: there are some of them, that of great zeale and pure deuotion doe cut peeces of flesh out of their bodies, and throw them downe before the Pagode: others lay themselues vnder the wheelles of the Cart, and let the Cart runne ouer them, whereby they are all crushed to peeces, and pressed to death, and they that thus die, are accounted for holy and deuout Martyrs, and from that time forwards are kept and preserued for great and holy Reliques, besides a thousand other such like beastly Superstitions, which they vse, as one of my Chamber fellowes, that had seene it shewed me, and it is also well knowne throughout all India.

Devils Martyrs.

Vpon a time I and certaine Portugals my friends, hauing licence from the Vice-roy were at a Banquet and meeting, about fise or fixe miles within the firme Land, and with vs wee had certaine Decaniys, and naturall borne Indians, that were acquainted with the Countrey, the chiefe cause of our going, was to see their manner of burning the dead Bramene, and his Wife with him being aliue, because we had beene aduertised, that such a thing was to bee done. And there among other strange deuises that we saw, we came into some Villages, and places inhabited by the Indians, where in the way, and at euerie Hill, stonie Rocke or hole, almost within a Pater noster length, we found a Carued Pagode, or rather Devils, and monsters in hellish shapes. At the last we came into a Village, where stood a great Church of stone, wherein wee entred, and found nothing in it but a great Table that hung in the middle of the Church, with the Image of a Pagode painted therein so mishaped and deformed, that more monstrous was neuer seene, for it had many Hornes, and long Teeth that hung out of his mouth downe to the knees, and beneath his nauell and belly, it had another such like face, with many hornes and tuskes. Vpon the head thereof stood a triple Crowned Myter, not much vnlike the Popes triple Crowne, so that in effect it seemed to bee a Monster, such as are described in the Apocalips. It hung before a Wall, which made a partition from another Chamber, in manner of a Quier, yet was it close made vp without windowes, or any place for light, in the middle whereof was a little narrow close doore, and on both sides of the doore, stood a small Furnace made within the wall, wherein were certaine holes or Lattices, thereby to let the smoke or saour of the fire to enter into that place, when any Offering should be made. Whereof we found some there, as Rice, Corne, Fruits, Hennes, and such like things, which the Indians daily offered, but there came so filthie a smoke and stinke out of the place, that whosoever went neere it, was almost ready to choke, the said place being all black, smeerie and foule therewith. Before this doore being shut, in the middle of the Church, there stood a Calfe of stone, whereon one of our companie leaped, and laughing, began to crie out, which the Bramene that kept the Church perceiuing, began to call and crie for helpe, so that presently many of the neighbours ranne thither, to see what the cause might be, but before the throng of people came, we dealt so well with the Bramene (acknowledging our fault, and saying it was vnadvisedly done) that he was well content, and the people went home againe. Then we desired the Bramene to open vs the doore that stood shut, which after much intreatie hee yeelded vnto, offering first to throw certaine Ashes vpon our foreheads, which we refused, so that before he would open vs the doore, we were forced to promise him that we would not enter further in, then to the doore.

The doore of their Sancta Sanctorum, or rather Diabolorum, being opened, it shewed within like a Lime-kill, being close vaulted round about, ouer the head without either hole or window to cast in light, but onely at the doore, neither was there any light in all the Church, but that which came in at the doore we entred by. Within the said Cell or Vault, there hung at the least one hundred burning Lamps, in the middle wherof stood a litle Altar, & couered ouer with cloth made of Cotton-wooll, and ouer that with pure Gold, vnder the which (as the Bramene told vs) sate the Pagode being of cleane Gold, of the bignesse of a Puppet or a Babie sold in lattice.

Faires: hard by the Church without the great doore, stood within the earth a great foure cornered or square Cesterne, hewed out of Free stone, with stayres on each side to goe downe into it, full of greene, filthie and stinking water, wherein they wash themselves when they meane to enter into the Church to pray. From thence wee went further, and still as we went, in euery place we found Pagodes hewed out of hard Stones, and standing in their holes, of such lively shapes and figures as we told you before. These stand in the wayes vnder certaine couertures, without the Churches, and haue hard by each of them a small Cesterne of water, cut out of the stone to wash their feet, with halfe an Indian Nut, that hath a handle and hangeth there to take vp water withall. And this is ordayned for Trauellers that passe by, who commonly at euery one of those Pagodes doe fall downe and make their Prayers, and wash their feet in those Cesternes. By the said Pagodes, commonly doe stand two little Furnaces, with a Calfe or Kow of stone, before the which they set their Offerings, which are of such things, as are to bee eaten, euery man as his Deuotion serueth, which they thinke the Pagode eateth in the Night, but it is taken away by the Bramene. We found in euery place such Offerings standing, but we had little desire once to taste thereof, it looked so filthily, and as we had sufficiently beholden their mishapen figures and monstrous Images, we returned againe into the Village, wherein we saw the stone Church, because the Bramene had aduertised vs, that the same day about Euening, the Pagode should be carried in Procession, to sport it selfe in the Fields, and to fetch a circuit, which we desired to see. And about the time which hee appointed, they rung a little Bell, which they had gotten of the Christians, wherewith all the people began to assemble, and tooke the Pagode out of his diabolicall Cell, which with great reuerence, they set in a Palamkin borne by the chiefe men of the Towne, all the rest with great deuotion following after, with their vsuall noyse and sound of Trumpets and other Instruments, wherewith they went a reasonable way round about a Field, and then brought him to the stone Cesterne, where washing him very cleane (although he were very filthie stinking) they carried him againe into his Cell, leaving him shut herein withall his Lampes, to make good cheere, and hauing made a foule smoake and stinke about him, and euery man left his Offering behind him, they went home to their houses, leauing the Bramene alone, who in stead of the Pagode, made good cheere at their costs with his Wife and Familie.

many young as Rats with vs.
Crows bold.

Great Rats.

There is ouer all India great store of Cattell, as Oxen, Kine, Sheepe, Hogges, Goates, Kids, and such like, and very good cheape, and in great abundance, although the flesh is not of so good a taste as that in Europe, which proceedeth from the heat of the Countrey, and therefore it is not much esteemed. A man may buy the best Kow in Goa, for five or sixe Par-dawes. Oxen are there little killed to eat, but are most kept to till the Land, all other things as Hogs, Sheepe and Goates, are sold after the rate. Mutton is little esteemed of, and not much vsed to be eaten, for it is forbidden to such as are sicke, and the Hogs flesh is much better and sounder, which is rather permitted vnto sicke persons then Mutton. There are Sheepe in that Countrey of fine quarters in quantitie, for that the tayle is as great, and hath as much flesh vpon it, as any of the quarters, there are many Buffles, but nothing good to bee eaten, vnlesse it be by poore people, but their Milke is very good, and is very well sold and ordinarily eaten, for you shall see the Slaues and Canariys in great numbers, all day going about the streets to sell the Milke of Buffles, and Goates, and excellent sweet Creame, and fresh Butter in small peeces. They make likewise some small white Cheeses, but they are very salt and drie: wilde Bores, some Hares, Conies, Harts, and Hindes are there also to be found, but not many Cockes, Capons, Pheasants, and Doves are there in great abundance and good cheape. In the Island of Goa and thereabout are Sparrowes, and some other small Birds, yet not many: but on the Coast of Cochin and Malabar, there are very few Sparrowes, nor any such like small birds. There are in India many Battes, and some of them so great, that it is incredible to tell. They doe great mischief to Trees, Fruits and Herbes, whereby the Canariys are constrained to set men to watch in their Trees, and yet they can hardly rid them away. The Indians eat them, and say they are as good meat as a Partridge.

There is a most wonderfull number of blacke Crows, which doe much hurt, and are so bold that oftentimes they come flying in at their windowes, and take the meat out of the dish, as it standeth vpon the Table, before them that are set downe to eate: and as I my selfe fate writing aboue in a Chamber of the house, the windowes being open, one of those Crows flew in at the window, and picked the Cotton out of mine Inke-horne, and blotted all the paper that lay on my Table, doe what I could to let him. They sit commonly vpon the Buffles backs, and pecke off their haire, so that you shall find very few Buffles that haue any haire vpon their backs, and therefore to auoyd the Crows they get themselves into Marishes, and warrie places, where they stand in the water vp to the neckes, otherwise they could neuer be rid of them. There are likewise great numbers of Rats, and some as bigge as young Pigges, so that the Cats dare not touch them. Sometimes they digge downe the Houses, for that they vndermine the walles and foundations through and through, whereby many times the houses fall downe and and are spoiled. There is another sort of Rats, that are little and reddish of haire. They are called sweet smelling Rats, for they haue a smell as if they were full of Muske.

Muske-rats:
such are in Virginia.
Ants hurtfull.

Of Ants or Pismires there is so great abundance throughout all India, and so noisome, that it is incredible to such as haue not seene it: for that men may set nothing whatsoever it be, that is to be eaten, or fatty, nor yet their clothes nor linnen, but you shall presently find at the least a thousand vpon it: and in the twinkling of an eye they will presently consume a loafe of bread: wherefore it is the manner throughout India, to make all the Cupboords wherein they keepe their victuals, and Chests, where their linnen and apparell lieth, with foure feet or pillars, and vnder euery foot or pillar a stone or wooden Cesterne full of water, and place the Cupboord or Chest in the middle of the roome, not neere the wall, whereby they cannot come at it, otherwise it would be spoiled, and if they doe neuer so little forget to powre water into the Cesternes, if it be but a Pater noster while, presently there will be so many Pismires crawling all ouer it, that it is wonderfull: so that it seemeth to be a curse or plague of God sent vpon that Countrey. There are some likewise that vse such Cesternes of water vnder their bedstead, because they would not be troubled with them as they lie in their Beds, and also vnder their Tables. Some men which keepe Canarie birds, or such small fowles (that are brought thither from Portugall, or out of Turkie and Persia for their pleasures) are forced to set them on a sticke or perch made for the purpose, with a Cesterne of water vnder it, otherwise it would presently be killed by the Pismires: and though it hangeth in the top of the house, yet they will come at it if it haue a string, to hold it by. The Souldiers and poore people that haue not the meanes to buy Cupboords, with Cesternes) put the bread and other victuals which they leaue (which is not ouermuch) in a cloth tied on knots, and hang it on a naile against the wall, and make a circle about it of Charcole, so that the Pismires cannot get ouer, nor come at it. There is another sort of Pismires which are almost a finger long, and reddish of colour: they runne into the fields, and doe great hurt to the herbes, fruits, and plants.

Great Ants.

Moths and wormes which creepe and eate through mens clothes, are there in great abundance, whereby men must vse no more clothes nor linnen in those Countreies then that he necessarily and daily weareth on his backe, otherwise they are presently moth-eaten and spoiled. They can hardly keepe any Paper or Bookes from wormes, which are like eare-wormes, but they doe often spoile and consume many Papers and euidences of great importance. There are also many Wall-lice. There is a kind of beast that flieth, twice as bigge as a Bee, and is called Baratta: These creatures also doe much hurt, and are commonly in Sugar, Honie, Butter, Oile, and all fat wares and sweet meates. Many of them likewise come into their Chests among their clothes and linnen, which they doe also spoile and spot. They are in great numbers and very hurtfull. There can be nothing so close shut or made fast, but they will get in and spoile it, for where they lie or be, they spot all things with their egges, which sticke as fast as sirop vpon a Paper, so that they may be esteemed as a plague like to the Pismires.

Wormes.

They are called Wall-lice, because they breed in Walls: but in true English they are called Midges, and in Latin, Cimices.

Within the Land there are also Tigres: other cruell beasts, as Lions, Beares, and such like there are few or none: but venomous beasts, as Snakes, Lizards, and such like there are many, for the Lizards will clime and creepe vpon the walls in their houses, and oftentimes fall vpon men, as they lie in their Beds and sleepe, and therefore many men that are of abilitie, doe hang Testers and Curtaines ouer and about their Beds. There are likewise many Chamelions, which are said to liue by the aire, but they are not hurtfull.

There are many Monkeys or Marmosets, that doe great hurt to the Palme trees, wherein the Indian Nut or Cocus doth growe. In those trees you shall commonly see certaine litle beasts, called Bichos de Palmeiras, that is, Beasts of the Palme trees: They are much like Ferrets, where-with men vse to hunt and catch Cunnies, and haue a taile like the Penner of an Ink-horne, and grayish speckled haire: they are pretie beasts to keepe and to passe the time withall. Parrots are there in great numbers, and flie abroad in the Woods. There commeth in India out of the Iland of Molucas beyond Malacca, a kind of birds, called Noyras: they are like Parrots, but they haue many red feathers, and speake like Parrots: they are worth in India twenty or thirtie Pardawes the piece: they are very faire to looke on, and speake sweetly: they claw or tickle men with their tongues vpon their heads and beards, and make them cleane at the roots, as also their eares and their teeth, so that they are very pleasant to keepe in a house, for that both in colour and beauty of feather they surpass all birds and Parrots whatsoever: but there could neuer yet be any of them brought liuing into Portugall, although they haue sought and vsed all the meanes they could to bring them for a Present to the King, which he greatly desireth: but they die vpon the way, for they are very delicate, and will hardly be brought vp.

Monkeys.

Elephants are in many places of India. In the Iland of Seylon there are also great numbers, which are esteemed the best and sensiblist of all the world, for wheresoever they meet with any other Elephants (the Indians report for a truth, that they haue tried it) those Elephants of other Countreies doe reuerence and honour to the Elephants of Seylon. The most seruice that they vse them for in India, is to draw their Pipes, Burs, Packes, and other goods, and to ship them,

them, all which they doe with Elephants. They are kept at the Kings charges, and he that needeth them, speaketh to their Keepers, and agreeth with them for a price to haue their labour: Then the Keeper getteth vpon the necke of the Elephant, and thrusteth his feet vnder his eares, hauing a hooke in his hand, which he sticketh on his head, where his stones lie, that is to say, aboue betweene both his eares, which is the cause, that they are so well able to rule them: and comming to the thing which they are to draw, they bind the Fat or Packe fast with a rope that he may feele the weight thereof, and then the Keeper speaketh vnto him: whereupon hee taketh the corde with his snout and windeth it about his teeth, and thrusteth the end into his mouth, and so draweth it hanging after him, whither they desire to haue it. If it be to be put into a Boat, then they bring the Boat close to the shoare of the Key, and the Elephant putteth it into the Boat himselfe, and with his snout gathereth stones together, which he layeth vnder the Fat, Pipe, or Packe, and with his teeth striketh and thrusteth the Packe or Vessell, to see if it lie fast or not. It will draw any great shot or other Iron worke, or metall being made fast vnto it, be it neuer so heauie. They draw Fusts, small Gallies, and other great Boats, as Caruels, and such like, as easily out of the water vpon the land, as if no man were in them: so that they serue their turnes there, euen as our Sleds or Carts with Horses doe heere, to carrie our wares and merchandises. Their meate is Rice and water, they sleepe like Kine, Oxen, Horses, and all foure-footed beasts, and bow their knees and all their members as other beasts doe. In Winter when it beginneth to raine, then they are vnquiet, and altogether mad, so that their Keepers cannot rule them, and then they are let some whither out of the Towne to a great tree, and there tied vnto it by the legs with a great Iron chaine, where they carrie him meate, and so he lieth in the open aire, as long as he is mad, which is from Aprill to September, all the Winter time when it raineth, and then he commeth to himselfe, and beginneth to serue againe as tamely, that a man may lie vnder his bellie, so you doe him no hurt: but he that hurteth him, he must take heed, for they neuer forget when any man doth them iniurie, vntill they be reuenged. They are very fearefull of a Rat or Mouse, and also of the Pismires, because they feare they would creepe into their snouts. They are likewise afraide of gun-shot and of fire, vnlesse by length of time they be vsed vnto them. When they haue the companie one of the other, the male Elephant standeth vpon the higher ground, and the female somewhat lower. As they goe along the way, although you see them not, you may heare them a farre off by the noise of their feet and clapping of their eares, which they continually vse. They are as swift in going almost as a Horse, and are very proude, and desirous of honour. When there is any great Feast or Holiday kept in Goa, with solemne Procession, commonly the Elephants goe with them, the young before, and the old behind, and are all painted vpon their bodies with the Armes and Crosses of Portugall, and haue euerie one fise or fixe Trumpetters or Players vpon the Shalmes, sitting vpon them that sound very pleasantly, wherewith they are as well pleased, and goe with as great grauitie, and in as good order, as if they were men. It happened in Goa, that an Elephant should draw a great Fust out of the water vnto the land, which Fust was so great and heauie, that he could not doe it alone, so that they must haue another to helpe him: whereupon the Keeper chid him, vsing many hard words, saying, that he was idle and weake, and that it would be an euermore shame for him, that they must fetch another to helpe him, wherewith the Elephant was so desperate, that hee thrust away his fellow (which was brought to helpe him) and beganne freshly againe to draw, with so great force, more then he was well able to doe, that with extreme labour he burst and fell downe starke dead in the place. At such time as I was to make my Voyage from Cochin to Portugall, the Rudder of our ship was out of order, so that it must of force be brought on land to make it fit againe, and so it was drawne to the Riuer side at the sterne of the Boat, which the Elephant should draw on land vpon two boords, that it might slide vp, and because it was heauie, (as the Rudder of a ship of foureteene hundred or sixteene hundred tunnes requirerh) as also that the Elephant was as yet but young, and not growne to his full strength, so that he could not draw it out alone, yet he did the best he could: but seeing he could not doe it, he fell on his fore-legs, and beganne to erie and weepe, that the teares ranne out of his eyes, and because many of vs stood vpon the shoare to behold this sight, the Keeper began to chide him, and with hard words to curse him, because he shamed him thus in prefence of so many men, not to be able to draw vp such a thing: but what strength or labour soeuer the Elephant vsed, he could not doe it alone, but when they brought another Elephant to helpe him, they both together drew it halfe out of the water, so that it lay partly vpon the boords. The first Elephant perceiuing that, with his head and teeth thrust the other Elephant away, and would haue no more helpe, but drew it out himselfe.

They are likewise very thankful & mindful of any good done vnto them. When new yeres day commeth, their keepers vse of common custome to aske new yeeres gifts of the Viceroy, the Archbishop, and other Gouvernours and Gentlemen, and then the Elephants come to the doore and bow their heads downe, and when any thing is giuen, they kneele on their knees with great lowlinesse, and thankfulness, for the good deedes so done vnto their keepers (which they thinke to be done vnto themselves.) They vse as they passe by such houses, to bow their heads at the dores, as also when they passe by the Church doores, and by Crosse, which their Masters teach them. They haue a custome that they goe often into the Market where hearbs are sold, as Reddish, Lettice, Coleworts, and such like stuffe, and those that are liberall to the Elephant, doe vse to throw something before him. Among the rest there was one hearbe wise which alwayes vsed to throw something of her wares before the Elephant. Now when the time came on that the Elephant groweth mad, as I said before, they vse to goe with them three or foure dayes, or a weeke about the streets before they binde them vp, (being as then but halfe mad) to aske something of euery bodie for the feeding of the mad Elephant in the winter time. And going thus about the streets, the Master is not able to rule him, for hee runneth about with his head downward, and by his roaring giueth the people warning to beware, and when he findeth or seeth no man, hee leapech and ouerthroweth whatsoeuer he meeteth withall, whereby hee maketh great sport and pastime, much like to the baiting of Oxen in Spain, which neuer ceaseth, vntill one, two, or more of them be slaine, the like rule is kept with the mad Elephant in India. It chanced in this running about that the Elephant ranne through the streetes, and in haste at vnawares came into the market, throwing downe all that was in his way, whereat euery man was abash, and leauing their ware, ranne to saue themselves from being ouer runne by the Elephant, and by meanes of the noyse and prease of people, they fell one ouer another, as in such cases is commonly seene. Among them was this woman, that alwayes vsed to giue the Elephant something to eate, which had a little childe in the market lying by her in a basket, and by the hastie rising vp and throng of the people, the woman ranne into a House, not hauing time to snatch vp her Child, and take it with her, and when the Elephant was alone in the Market place, where hee roared vp and downe, ouerthrowing all things that were before him, hee came by the Child (that as I said) lay still in the Market, and as euery man looked, specially the Mother, which cried out, and verily thought that the Elephant had taken it and cast it on his shoulder and spoyled it as he did all other things. He on the contrarie notwithstanding all his madnesse, being mindfull of the good will and liberality of the Childes Mother dayly vsed vnto him, tooke vp the Child handiomey and tenderly with his Snout, and laide it softly vpon a Stall by a Shop side, which done, he began againe to vse the same order of stamping, crying, and clapping as he had done at the first, to the great wondering of all that beheld it, specially to the ease and ioy of the Mother, that had recovered her Child sound and well againe.

THE Abada or Rhinoceros is not in India, but onely in Bengala, and Patane. They are lesse and lower then the Elephant. It hath a short horne vpon the nose, in the hinder part somewhat bigge, and toward the end sharper, of a browne blew, and whitish colour; it hath a snout like a Hog, and the skin vpon the vpper part of his body is all wrinckled, as if it were armed with Shields or Targets. It is a great enemy of the Elephant. Some thinke it is the right Vnicorne, because that as yet there hath no other bene found, but onely by heare-say, and by the Pictures of them. The Portugals and those of Bengala affirme, that by the Riuer Ganges in the Kingdome of Bengala, are many of these Rhinoceros, which when they will drinke, the other beasts stand and waite vpon them, till the Rhinoceros hath drunke, and thrust their horne into the water, for hee cannot drinke but his horne must be vnder the water, because it standeth so close vnto his nose, and muzzle: and then after him all the other beasts doe drinke. Their hornes in India are much esteemed and vsed against all venome, poyson, and many other diseases: likewise his teeth, clawes flesh, skin, and bloud, and his very dung and water and all whatsoeuer is about him, is much esteemed in India, and vsed for the curing of many diseases and sickneses, which is very good and most true, as I my selfe by experience haue found. But it is to bee vnderstood, that all Rhinoceros are not a like good, for there are some whose hornes are solde for one, two or three hundred Pardawes the piece, and there are others of the same colour and greynesse that are sold but for three or foure Pardawes, which the Indians know and can discerne. The cause is that some Rhinoceros, which are found in certaine places in the countrey of Bengala haue this vertue, by reason of the hearbs which that place onely yeeldeth and bringeth forth, which in other places is not so, and this estimation is not onely held of the horne, but of all other things in his whole bodie, as I said before. There are also by Malacca, Sion, and Bengala some Goates that are wilde, whose hornes are esteemed for the best hornes against poyson, and all venome that may be found: they are called Cabras de Mato, that is, wilde Goates.

FISH in India is very plentifull, and some very pleasant and sweete. Most of their fish is eaten with Rice, that they seeth in broth which they put vpon the Rice, and is somewhat sowre, as if it were sodden in Gooseberries, or vnripe Grapes, but it tasteth well, and is called Carril, which is their daily meate, the Rice is in steade of bread: there are also good Shads, Soales, and other sorts of fishes. The Crabs and Creuishes are very good and marueilous great, that it is a wonder to tell, and that which is more wonderfull, when the Moone is in the full, here with vs it is a common saying, that then Crabs and Creuishes are at the best, but there it is cleane contrarie: for with a full Moone they are empirie and out of season, and with a new Moone good and full. There are also

also Muskles and such like Shell-fishes of many sorts, Oysters very many, specially at Cochin; and from thence to the Cape de Comorijn. Fish in India is very good cheape; for that with the valew of a stiver of their money, a man may buy as much fish and Rice to it, as will serue five or six men for a good meale.

Sharkes Marking.

As our ship lay in the Riuer of Cochin, readie to sayle from thence to Portugall, it hapned that as wee were to hang on our Rudder, which as then was mended, the Master of the Ship, with foure or five Saylers, went with the boate to put it on, and another Sayler beeing made fast with a corde about his middle, and tied to the Ship, hung downe with halfe his bodie into the water to place the same vpon the hookes, and while hee hung in the water, there came one of those Hagens, and bit one of his legs, to the middle of his thigh, cleane off at a bit, notwithstanding that the Master strooke at him with an Oare, and as the poore man was putting downe his arme to feele his wound, the same fish at the second time for another bit did bite off his hand and arme about the elbow, and also a peece of his buttocke.

In the Riuer of Goa in winter time, when the mouth of the Riuer was shut vp, as commonly at that time it is, the fishermen tooke a Fish of a most wonderfull and strange forme, such as I think was neuer seene either in India, or in any other place, which for the strangeness thereof was presented to my Lord the Archbishop, the picture whereof by his commandement was painted, and for a wonder sent to the King of Spaine.

Monstrous fish

It was in bignesse as great as a middle sized dog, with a snout like a Hog, small eyes, no eares, but two holes where his eares should bee, it had foure feete like an Elephant, the tayle beginning somewhat vpon the backe broad, and then flat, and at the very end round and somewhat sharpe. It ranne along the Hall vpon the floore, and in euery place of the house snorting like a Hog. The whole bodie, head, tayle, and legs being couered with scales of a thumb breadth, harder then Iron, or Steele: Wee hewed and layd vpon them with weapons, as if men should beate vpon an Annull, and when we strooke vpon him, he rouled himselfe in a heape, head and feet altogether, so that hee lay like a round ball, we not being able to iudge where he closed himselfe together, neyther could we with any instrument or strength of hands open him againe, but letting him alone and not touching him, he opened himselfe and ranne away as I said before.

Hist. Ind. l. 7.
but somewhat differing.

A Ship sayling from Mosambique into India, hauing faire weather, a good sore winde, as much as the sayles might beare before the winde for the space of foureteene dayes together, directing their course towards the Equinoctiall line, euery day as they tooke the height of the Sunne, in steade of diminishing or lessening their degrees, according to the winde and course they had and helde, they found themselves still contrarie, and euery day further backwardes then they were.

At the last the chiefe Boteson whom they call the Masters mate, looking by chance ouer-board towards the beake-head of the ship, he espied a great broad taile of a Fish that had winded it selfe as it were about the beake head, the body thereof being vnder the keele, and the head vnder the Rudder, swimming in that manner, and drawing the shippe with her against the winde and their right course: whereby presently they knew the cause of their so going backwards: so that having at the last stricken long with stauies and other weapons vpon the fishes tayle, in the end they stroke it off, and theredy the Fish left the ship, after it had layen foureteene dayes vnder the same, drawing the ship with it against winde and weather: for which cause the Vice-roy in Goa caused it to be painted in his palace for a perpetuall memory, where I haue often reade it, with the day and time, and the name both of the Ship and Captaine.

There are by Malacca certaine fish shels found on the shoare, much like Scalop shels, so great and so heauie, that two strong men haue enough to doe with a Leauer to draw one of them after them. Within them there is a fish which they of Malacca doe eate. There were some of those shels in the ballast of the ship that came from Malacca, and kept companie with vs from the Iland of Saint Helena, to the Iland of Tercera, where the ship was cast away, and some of the shels taken out of her, which the Iesuites of Malacca had sent vnto Lisbon, to set in the wals of their Church and Cloyster, which they there had caused to bee made, and most sumptuously built. The like happened to a ship called Saint Peter that sayled from Cochin towards Portugall, that fell vpon a Sand, which at this day is called after the same ships name Saint Peters Sand, lying from Goa South South-east vnder 6. degrees vpon the South side, where it was cast away, but all the men saued themselves, and of the wood of the ship that was cast away, they made a small Barke or Caruell, wherewith they all arriued in India: and while they were busied about building of their ship, they found such great Crabs vpon that Sand, and in so great numbers, that they were constrained to make a sconce, and by good watch to defend themselves from them, for that they were of an vnreasonable greatnesse, so that whomsoever they got vnder their clawes, it cost him his life.

Great Crabs.

Of all Fruits, Trees, Plants, and common heerbs in India and first of a certaine fruit called Ananas.

Ananas is one of the best fruits, and of best taste in all India, but it is not a proper fruit of India, but a strange fruit, for it was first brought by the Portugals out of Brasill, so that at the first it was sold for a noueltie, at a Pardaw the peece, and sometimes more, but now there are so many growne in the Countrey, that they are very good cheape. The time when they are ripe is in Lent, for then they are best and sweetest of taste. They are as bigge as a Melon, and in forme like the head of a Distaffe, without like a Pine apple, but soft in cutting: of colour red and greenish: They growe about halfe a fathome high from the ground, not much more or lesse. The leaues are like the herbe that is brought out of Spaine, called Aloe, or Semper vna, because it is alwaies greene, and therefore it is hanged on the beames of houses) but somewhat smaller, and at the ends somewhat sharpe, as if they were cut out. When they eat them, they pull off the shell, and cut them into slices or pieces, as men desire to haue them drest. Some haue small kernels within them, like the kernels of Apples or Peares. They are of colour within like a Peach, that is ripe, and almost of the same taste, but in sweetnesse they surpass all fruits. The iuyce thereof is like sweet Must, or new Rensh Wine: a man can neuer satisfie himselfe therewith. It is very hot of nature, for if you let a Knife sticke in it but halfe an houre long, when you draw it forth againe, it will be halfe eaten vp, yet it doth no particular hurt, vnlesse a man should eat so much thereof, that hee forget vpon them. The sicke are forbidden to vse them.

are

I Aacas growe on great trees like Nut trees, and onely on the Sea shoares, that is to say, in such Countreies as border on the Seas, cleane contrarie vnto all other fruits, for they growe about the earth, vpon the trunks or bodies of the trees, and vpon the great thicke branches, but where the branches spread abroad, being small and full of leaues, there groweth none: they are as bigge as a great Melon, and much like it of fashion, although some of them are as great as a man can well lift vp, and outwardly are like the Ananas, but smother, and of a darke greene colour, the fruit within is in husks, like Chesnuts, but of another forme, and euery huske hath a Nut, which is halfe white, the rest yellowish, and sticketh to a mans hands like Honie, when it is in Bee-hiues among the Wax, and for roughnesse and in taste for sweetnesse not much vnlike. The fruit is on the outside like a Chesnut, and in forme or fashion like an Acorne, when the greene knob that groweth vnder it is taken away, and of that bignes and somewhat bigger: this fruit that is outmost being eaten, the rest is good to be roasted or sodden, and are not much vnlike in taste to the Chesnuts in Europa. There are of these huskes in euery Iacca an hundred and more, according to the greatnesse thereof. There are two sorts of them, the best are called Girasal, and the common and least esteemed, Chambasal, although in fashion and trees there is no difference, saue that the Girasals haue a sweeter taste.

M Angas groweth vpon trees like Iacca trees: they are as big as a great Peach, but somewhat long, and a little crooked, of colour cleere, greene, somewhat yellowish, and sometimes reddish: it hath within it a stone bigger then a Peach stone, but it is not good to be eaten: the Mangas is inwardly yellowish, but in cutting it is watrish, yet some not so much: they haue a very pleasant taste, better then a Peach, and like the Ananas, which is the best and the most profitable fruit in all India, for it yeeldeth a great quantitie for food and sustenance of the Countrey people, as Oliues doe in Spaine and Portugall: they are gathered when they are greene, and conserued, and for the most part salted in Pots, and commonly vsed to be eaten with Rice, sodden in pure water, the huske being whole, and so eaten with Salt Mangas, which is the continuall food for their slaves and common people, or else salt-dried fish in stead of Mangas, without Bread, for Rice is in diuers places in stead of Bread. These salted Mangas are in cutting like the white Spanish Oliues, and almost of the same taste, but somewhat sauiory and not so bitter, yet a little sowre, and are in so great abundance, that it is wonderfull: there are others that are salted and stuffed with small pieces of greene Ginger, and Garlecke sodden: those they call Mangas Recheadas or Machar: they are likewise much vsed, but not so common as the other, for they are costly and more esteemed: these are kept in Pots with Oyle and Vineger salted. The season when Mangas are ripe is in Lent, and continueth till the moneth of August.

C Aius Groweth on trees like Apple trees, and are of the bignes of a Peare, at one end by the stalke somewhat sharpe, and at the head thicker, of a yellowish colour, being ripe they are soft in handling: they growe very like Apples, for where the Apples haue a stalke, these Aius haue a Chesnut, as bigge as the fore-ioynt of a mans thumbe: they haue another colour and fashion then the Chesnuts of Iacca, and are better and more sauiorie to eat, but they must be roasted: within they are white like the Chesnuts of Europa, but haue thicker shells, which are of colour bluish and darke greene. When they are raw and vnrolled, you must not open them with your mouth, for as soone as you put them to your mouth, they make both your tongue and your lips to smart, whereby such as knowe it not are deceiued: wherefore you must open their shells with a Knife, or roste them, and then they will peelee. This fruit at the end where the stalke groweth, in the eating doth worke in a mans throat, and maketh it swell, yet it is of a fine taste, for it is moist and full of iuyce: they are commonly cut in round slices, and layd in a dish with Water or Wine, and Salt throwne vpon them.

Of Iambos.Summer and once in the same tree.

The trees whereon the Iambos doe grow are as great as Plum trees, and very like vnto them: it is an excellent and a very pleasant fruit to looke on, as big as an Apple: it hath a red colour and somewhat whitish, so cleare and pure, that it seemeth to be painted or made of Wax: it is very pleasant to eate, and smelleth like Rose water; it is white within, and in eating moist and waterish; it is a most dainty fruit, as well for beauty to the sight, as for the sweet saour and taste: it is a fruit that is neuer forbidden to any sick person, as other fruits are, but are freely given vnto sicke men to eate, that haue a desire thereunto, for it can doe no hurt. The blossoms are likewise very faire to the sight, and haue a sweet smell: they are red and somewhat whitish of colour. This tree beareth fruit three or foure times euery yeere, and which is more wonderfull, it hath commonly on the one side or halfe of the tree ripe Iambos, and the leaues fallen off, and on the other side or halfe it hath all the leaues, and beginneth againe to blossome, and when that side hath fruit, and that the leaues fall off, then the other side beginneth againe to haue leaues, and to blossome, and so it continueth all the yeere long: within they haue a stone as great (and very neere of the same fashion) as the fruit of the Cypresse tree.

Chap. 54.
Of the fruits
in India.

There is a fruit called Iangomas, which groweth on trees like Cherrie trees: they are in bignesse like small round Plummes of a darke red colour, they haue no stones in them, but some small kernels: they are of taste much like Plummes, whereof there are very many, but not much esteemed of.

There is another fruit called Carambolus, which hath eight corners, as big as a small Apple, sowre in eating, like vnripe Plummes, and most vsed to make Conserues.

There are yet other fruits, as Brindojns, Durindots, Iamboloens, Mangestains, and other such like fruits; but because they are of small account, I thinke it not requisite to write seuerally of them, but onely of two of them.

The barks of these trees are kept and brought ouer Sea hither, and are good to make Vinegar withall, as some Portugals haue done.

There is also a fruit that came out of the Spanish Indies, brought from beyond the Philippinas or Lusons to Malacca, and from thence to India, it is called Papaies, and is very like a Melon, as big as a mans fist, and will not growe, but alwaies two together, that is male and female: the male tree neuer yeeldeth any fruit, but onely the female; and when they are diuided, and set apart one from the other, then they yeeld no fruit at all. It is a tree of the height of a man, with great leaues. This fruit at the first for the strangenesse thereof was much esteemed, but now they account not of it. There are likewise in India some Fig trees of Portugall, although the fruit doth neuer come to good perfection. Oranges, Limons, Citrons, and such like fruit, are throughout all India, in great abundance, and for goodnesse and taste surpasseth those of Spaine. Grapes are not there to be found, but onely vpon some houses, as we haue them in Netherland: yet against Christmas and Lent, there are Raisins brought into Goa, by the Decanets and Indians out of the Firme Land, and from Ballagate, but they are not so good as those in Spaine, and very few they are, but for price as good cheape as other fruits. There are also in India many Melons, but not so good as those in Spaine, for that they must be eaten with Sugar, if you will haue any sweetnesse in them: but there is another sort like Melons, called Patcos or Angurias, or Melons of India, which are outwardly of a darke Greene colour, inwardly white with black kernels: they are very waterish and hard to bite, and so moist, that as a man eateth them, his mouth is full of water, but yet very sweet, and very cold and fresh meat, wherefore many of them are eaten after Dinner to coole men. Cucumbers and Radices are there in great numbers, also Coleworts, but not so good as in Europe, for the Coleworts neuer growe to their full growth, but are loose with their leaues open. They haue likewise some Sallet herbes, but very little: herbes whereof men make Pottage are not there to be had, nor many sweet smelling herbes nor flowers, as Roses, Lilies, Rosemarie, and such like sorts of flowers and plants there are none, yet they haue some few Roses, and a little Rosemarie, but of no great smell. The fields neuer haue any other flowers in them, but onely grasse, and that is in Winter when it raineth, for in Summer it is cleane burnt off with the exceeding heate of the Sunne. There is onely a kind of blossomes of trees, which growe all the yeere long, called Fulle, that smell very sweet: the women doe ordinarily throwe them among their linnen and apparell to make them sweet. They likewise make Collars or strings full of them, which they weare about their neckes, and strew them in their Beds, for they are very desirous of sweet saours, for other sorts of sweet flowers and herbes, whereof thousands are found in Europe, they are not in India to be had: so that when you tell them of the sweet flowers and herbes of these Countries, they wonder much thereat, and are very desirous of them.

Chap. 55.
Of the Indian Figs.

Indian Figs there are many and of diuers sorts, one better then the other, some small, some great, some thicke, some thinne, &c. but in generall they are all of one forme and colour, little more or lesse, but the trees are all one, and of the height of a man: the leaues are of a fathome long, and about three spannes broad, which the Turkes vse in stead of browne Paper, to put Pepper in. In the Tree there is no Wood, but it may rather bee called a Reede then a Tree. The bodie of the tree (I meane that which couereth the outward part when it beginneth somewhat to grow) is in a manner very like the inner part of a Siue made of haire, but in shew somewhat thicker, and is (as it were) the barke of it: but when you open it, it is full of leaues, closed and rowled vp together, of the height of halfe a mans length, and somewhat higher. These leaues doe open and spread abroad on the top of the Tree, and when those that are within the bodie doe in their time thrust themselves forth vpwordes out of the innermost part of the Tree, then doe the outmost leaues beginne to dry, and fall off, vntill the Tree bee come to his full growth, and the fruit to their perfect ripenesse. The bodie of the Tree may be 10 a spanne thicke at the most. The leaues haue in the middle of them a very thicke and gray veine which runneth cleane through them, and detideth them out of the middle of the leaues, which are in the innermost part of the Tree at their springing vp, there commeth forth a flowre, as bigge as an Estridge Egge, of colour russet, which in time groweth to be long, with a long stalke, and it is no Wood, but rather like a Colewort stalke: This stalke groweth full of figs, close one by the other, which at the first are in fashion like greene Beanes, when they are yet in the huskes, but after grow to halfe a spanne in length, and three or foure inches broad, as 20 thicke as Cucumbers, which stalke beareth at the least, some two hundred figges, little more or lesse, and grow as close together as Grapes: the clusters are so great as two men can scarcely beare vpon a staffe, they are cut off when they are but halfe ripe, that is to say, when they are as yet halfe greene, and halfe yellow, and hanged vp in their houses vpon beames, and so within foure or fve dayes they will be fully ripe and all yellow. The Tree or Plant yeeldeth but one bunch at a time, which being ripe, they cut the whole Tree downe to the ground, leaving only the root, out of the which presently groweth another, and within a moneth after beareth fruit, and so continueth all the yeere long, and neuer leaueth bearing: they are in all places in so great abundance, and so common throughout all India that it is wonderfull, being the greatest meate and sustenance of the Countrey: they are of a maruellous good taste: when they eate them, they pull off the shels. The most and commonest sort are by the Portugals called Figos doria, that is, Garden figges, those are somewhat thicke, there are others which are smaller, and thinne without, and are called Senorjns, which are of the 30 best sort: they smell well, and are very good of taste. Many kinds of them.

There is another sort called Cadoljns, which are likewise well esteemed, but the best of all are called Chincapolojns, and are most in the Countrey of Malabar: these are but a little yellow, but they continue commonly on the outside greene, and are small and long, with a speciall sweet smell, as if they were full of Rose Water. There are yet many sorts, some that are very great, about a span long, and in thicknesse correspondent: these grow much in Cananor, and in the Coast of Malabar, and are by the Portugals called Figges of Cananor: and by reason of the great quantitie thereof are dried, their shels being taken off, and so being dried are carried ouer all India to be sold. These when they are ripe are most roasted, for they are but seldome eaten raw, as other Figges are, they are somewhat harsh in swallowing, and inwardly red of colour, and being 40 roasted they are shaled or pilled like the others, and so cut in slices, which done, they cast some beaten Sinamon vpon them, steeping them in Wine, and then they taste better then roasted Quinces; they are cut vp in the middle, as all the other kind of Figges vse to be, and then boiled or fried in Sugar, which is a very daintie meat, and very common in India: to conclud, it is one of the best and necessariest fruits in all India, and one of the principallest sustenances of the common people, they are found in all places of the Indies and Orientall Countries. There are also found in Arabia, and are called Musa, as also in Ierusalem, Damasco, and Cairo, as I haue beene truly informed by credible persons, which daily trauell and traffique into India. And they doe beleue that this is the same fruit, which Adam did eate when he sinned first.

There grow in India many Iniamos and Batatas. These Iniamos, are as bigge as a yellow Root, but somewhat thicker and fuller of knots, and as thicke on the one place, as in the other, they 50 grow vnder the Earth like Earth Nuts, and of a Dun colour, and white within like Earth Nuts, but not so sweet.

The Batatas are somewhat red of colour, and of fashion almost like the Iniamos, but sweeter, of taste like an Earth Nut. These two fruits are very plentifull.

This is the most profitable tree of all India. The tree waxeth very high and straight, of the thicknesse of a small span little more or lesse, it hath no branches but in the vppermost part thereof, and in the top grow the leaues, which spread like vnto Date trees, and vnder the leaues close to the tree grow the Coquos together, commonly ten or twelue one close by another, but 60 you shall seldome find one of them growing alone by it selfe. The blossome of this fruit is very like the blossome of a Chestnut. The wood of the tree is very sappy like a Sponge, and is not firme, they doe not grow but on the Sea sides, or bankes of Rivers close by the strand, and in sandy grounds, for there groweth none within the Land. They haue no great Rootes, so that a man would thinke it were impossible for them to haue any fast hold within the Earth, and yet they they stand so fast and grow so high, that it maketh men feare to see men climbe vpon them, lest they should fall downe. The Canaryns climbe as nimbly, and as fast vpon them, as if they were Apes, for they make smal steps in the trees like staires, whereon they step, and so climbe vp, which the Portugals dare not venter: their planting is in this manner. They first plant the Coques or Nuts whereof the trees doe spring, and when they are about the height of a man, in winter time they plant them againe, and dung them with ashes, and in Summer time water them. They grow well about houses, because commonly there they haue good earth, and beeing well looked vnto & husbanded they yeeld fruit in few yeeres. Those trees are more abundant with them, then Olive trees in Spaine, or Willow trees in the Low Countreies. The profits they reape thereby are these.

The vses of the Wood.

First, the wood is very good for many things, although it be spongius and sappy, by reason of the length of it, for in the Islands of Maldina they make whole ships thereof, without any Iron naile in them, for they sow them together with the Cords that are made of the said Cocus, or Nut, the Ropes and Cables being likewise of the same tree, as also the Sailes which they make of the leaues, which leaues are called Olas. They serue likewise to make the Canaryns houses, and for Hats which they vse to carrie ouer their heads, for the Sunne or the raine; they make also Mats or Tents that lie ouer the Palamkins when it raineth, to couer the women when they are carried abroad, and such like things: they likewise make thereof very fine Hartes, that are much esteemed, and cost three or foure Pardawes the piece, which they weare in Summer for lightnesse. The Nuts are as great as an Elfridge Egge, some smaller, and some greater and are outwardly couered with a huske or shell, which as long as it groweth on the tree, is Greene without, like an Acorne with his huske or cup.

The hairie huske: Coards and Cables.

This huske being dry and pulled off, is haire like Hempe, whereof all the Coards and Cables that are vied throughout all India are made, as well vpon the Land as in the Ships. It is of colour very like the Ropes of Sparta in Spaine, they are very good, but they must bee kept in salt water, whereby they continue very long, but in fresh or

* The Indian Nuts are couered ouer with two sorts of huskes or shels, whereof the vttermost is hairie, and of it they make Cairo, that is, all their Cables and Ropes, and stop and make their shippes close with it in stead of Ocam or Tow, for that it keepeth the ships closer in salt water then our Ocam or Tow, because in salt water it closeth and shutteth it selfe closer together. Of the other they make not onely drinking Cups, in India, but here with vs also, for that the common people beleue there is a certaine vertue in them against stirring of the bodie, but it is not so.

raine water they doe presently rot, because they are not drest with Pitch, and Tarre as our ships are. The ship wherein I came out of India into Portugall, had no other Ropes nor Cables, nor any such kind of stufte, but such as were made of the Indian Cocus, called Cairo, which continued very good, sauing only that we were forced euery fourteene daies to wash our Cables in the Sea, whereby they serued vs as well as Cables of Hempe. The fruit when it is almost ripe is called Lanha, and within is full of water, and then it is white of colour, thinne and soft, and the longer the Cocus is on the tree, the more the water groweth and changeth into white, which is the meate of the Nut within, and tasteth much like a Hasel Nut, but somewhat sweeter. The Lanbos haue within them a good draught of water, which is very cleere, sweet, and coole to drinke. It is at the least halfe a Kan full, and when men walke abroad and are thirstie, they goe vnto the Canaryns, who presently with a great Knife in their hands come vp to the tree, and cut off as many Lanbos as a man desireth, selling them for a Basaruco, or two a piece, which they make verie readie and cleere to be drunke. The first shell that is ouer the inward fruit (which as the Nut is come to his full ripenesse, becommeth almost to be wood) is then but thinne and soft, and very pleasant to eate with Salt and doe taste almost like Artichokes, a man may drinke as much of this water as he will, for it will not hurt him, but is a very pleasant drinke; when the fruit is ripe, there is not so much water in it, and is white within, and somewhat thicker of substance, and then the water is not so good as it was before beeing Lanbos, for then it becommeth somewhat sowre.

Inner shell.

Vses of the shell.

These Cocus beeing yet in their huskes, may bee carried ouer the whole World, and not once hurt or bruised, and it happeneth oftentimes that by continuance of time, the water within the Cocus doth conuert, and congeale into a certaine kind of yellow Apple, which is very sauourie and sweet. The huske being taken off, the shell serueth for many vses, as to make Ladles with wooden handles, and also certaine little pots, which beeing fastned to a sticke, they doe therewith take and lade water out of their great pots, they make thereof also small vessels to beare Wine in when they walke into the fields, and a thousand other things. These shels are likewise burnt, and serue for coales for Goldsmiths, which are very good and excellent. Of the white of these Nuts in India they make pottage, and dresse meate withall, straying and pressing out the Milke, wherein with many other mixtures they seeth their Rice, and to bee short, they neuer dresse any Rice, which they call Carrizl, and is the sawce to their meate thereunto, but they put some of their Cocus Milke into it, else the Cocus is but little eaten, for there it is not esteemed of, but serueth for meate for the slaues, and poore people. They likewise breake the Cocus in pieces, and taking off the shell they dry the fruit or white meate that is within it, and it is carried in great quantities out of Malabar to Cambaya, and Ormus, and to the Northernne Coasts and quar-

quarters beyond Goa, as also to the Countrey of Ballagate, and Traffique much therewith. Of this white substance they make Oile, which they stampe in Cisternes like Oliues, and it maketh very good Oile, as well to eate as to burne, which is likewise very medicinable.

There are two sorts of Oile made of these Nuts, one out of the fresh or greene Nuts, stamped and mixed with warme water, which being pressed forth the Oile swimmieth about the water: this Oile is used to purge the maw and the guts, for it purgeth very gently, and without hurt some mixe therewith the iuyce of Thamarindes, and maketh thereof a very wholsome Medicine, the other Oile is prest out of the dried Cocus, which is called Copra, and is good also to purge the maw, and against the shrinking of the sinewes, as also for old aches and paines in the ioynts and limbes.

* This water being drunke, is very good against the heate of the Liuer and the Kidneyes, and clen- seth the yard from corruption and filthy matter.

This dried Cocus which is so carried abroad, is called Copra. When they desire to haue no Cocus or fruit thereof, they cut the blossomes of the Cocum away, and binde a round Pot with a narrow mouth, by them called Callao, fast vnto the Tree, and stop the same close round about with pot earth, so that neither Wind nor Aire can either enter in, or come forth, and in that sort the Pot in short space is full of water, which they call Sura, and is very pleasant to drinke like sweete Whay, and somewhat better.

The same water standing but one houre in the Sunne, is very good Vineger, and in India they haue none other. This Sura being distilled, is called Fula, or Nipe, and is as excellent Aqua vita, as any is made in Dort of their best Rhentish Wine, but this is of the finest kind of Distillation. The second Distillation thereof is called Vraca, which is very good Wine, and is the Wine of India, for they haue no other Wine. It is very hot and strong, yet the Indians drinke it as if it were water, and the Portugals vse it in this sort. They put it into Vessels, and to a Pipe of Vraca, they put three or foure Hands of Raisons that are brought for Merchandise into India from Ormuz, (euery Hand is twelue pounds) which being washed they put into the Vessell leauing the bung open, and the Pipe not being full, for if it were it would burst, by reason of the heat, because therewith it seetheth in the Pipe like water on the fire, and boyling so, it is stirred euery day for the space of fourteene or fifteene dayes, in which time the Vraca getteth as faire a red colour, as if it were Portugall Wine, and differeth not much in taste, but yet sweeter and hotter of it selfe, howbeit it is altogether as faire, and of as good a colour as their Portugall Wine, so that they can hardly bee discerned one from the other: this Wine is called Wine of Passa, or Raisons. With this Wine there is great Traffique vsed to Bengala, Malacca, China, and other places, and euery Pipe thereof costeth within Goa thirtie Pardawen the piece, little more or lesse. Of the aforesaid Sura they likewise make Sugar, which is called Iagra: they seeth the water, and set it in the Sunne, whereof it becommeth Sugar, but it is little esteemed beause it is of a browne colour, and for that they haue so great quantitie and abundance of white Sugar throughout all India. The innermost part of the tree or trunke is called Palmito, and is the pith or heart of the same trunke, which is much esteemed, and sent for a present vnto men of great account. It is as thin as Paper, and also white, and is as if it were pleated or prest together, as they vse to pleate and presse womens Huykes in the Low Countreyes: it is also long and slender, and hath sometimes fifty or fixty folds or pletes in it like a Paper-book

This the Indians vse for Paper and Bookes, which continueth in the same folds, whereon they write when it is greene, and so let it dry, and then it is impossible to get the Letters out againe, for it is printed therein with a kind of Iron Instrument: The Indians call it Olla, whereof all their Bookes, Writings, and Euidences are made, which they can scale, and shut vp as wee doe our Letters.

Those Ilands haue no other dealing or liuing, but with Cairo, whereof they make Ropes and Cables, and with the Copra, or the white substance of the Cocus, whereof Oile is made, so that they doe oftentimes come into India, when the ship and all the furniture, victuall and Merchandise is onely of those Palme-trees.

Duryoen is a fruit that only groweth in Malacca, and is so much commended by those which haue prooued the same, that there is no fruit in the World to be compared with it: for they affirme, that in taste and goodnesse it excelleth all kind of fruits, and yet when it is first opened, it smelleth like rotten Onions, but in the taste the sweetnesse and daintinesse thereof is tryed. It is as great as a Mellon, outwardly like the Iaacka, whereof I haue spoken, but somewhat sharper or pricking, and much like the huskes of Chesse-nuts. It hath within it certaine partitions like the Iaacka, wherein the fruit groweth, beeing of the greatnesse of a little Hennes Egge, and therein are the Nuts as great as Peach-stones. The fruit is for colour and taste like an excellent meate, much vsed in Spaine, called Mangiar Blanco, which is made of Hennes flesh, distilled with Sugar: The trees are like the Iaacka trees, the blossomes white, and somewhat yellowish: the leaues about halfe a span broad, somewhat sharpe at the end, within light greene, and without darke greene.

Chap. 58.

Of the tree Arbore de Rays, that is, root tree, and the Bambus, or reed of India. Ficus Indica secundum Clusium Fabricius Mor-dents a great traueiler which had dwelt some yeeres at Goa, told Clusius that some of these trees by reason of this multiplication contained a miles compass, & that the Indians made galleries and chambers by cutting part away, and that it yeelded an eccho, and he had seene sometime 800. or 1000. shadowed vnder one, able to receiue 3000. Quicquid West Indian Mangle is of the same or like kind and Lopes his African Enzanda. Reeds.

Here is a tree in India called Arbore de Rays, that is to say, a Tree of Roots: this tree is very wonderfull to behold, for that when it groweth first vp like all other trees, and spreadeth the branches: then the branches grow full of roots, and grow downwards againe towards the Earth, where they take root againe, and so are fast againe within the ground, and in length of time, the broader the tree is, and that the branches doe spread themselves, the more rootes doe hang vpon the branches, and seeme as farre off to be Cordes of Hempe, so that in the end the tree couereth a great piece of ground, and crosseth one root within the other like a Maze. I haue seene trees that haue containd at the least some thirty or fortie paces in compasse, and all out of the roots which came from aboue one of the branches, and were fast growne and had taken root againe within the Earth, and in time waxed so thicke, that it could not be discerned, which was the chiefe or principall trunk or bodie of the tree: in some places you may creepe betweene the roots, and the more the tree spreadeth, so much the more doe the roots spring out of the same branches, and still grow downe till they come to Earth, and there take roote againe within the ground, and still increase with rootes, that it is a wonder. This tree hath no fruit that is worth the eating, but a small kind of fruit like Oliues, and good for nothing but for Birds to eat.

There are in India other wonderfull and thicke trees, whereof shippes are made: there are trees by Cochin, that are called Angelina, whereof certayne Scutes or Skiffes called Tones are made: there are of those Tones that will lade in them at the least twentie or thirtie Pipes of water, and are cut out of one piece of Wood, without any piece or seame, or any ioyns: whereby men may well coniecture the thickenesse of the tree, and it is so strong and hard a Wood, that Iron in tract of time would bee consumed thereby, by reason of the hardnesse of the Wood. There are also ouer all India many Sugar-canes in all places, and in great numbers, but not much esteemed of: and all along the Coast of Malabare there are many thicke Reedes, specially on the Coast of Choramandell, which Reedes by the Indians are called Mambu, and by the Portugals Bambu: these Mambu haue a certaine matter within them, which is (as it were) the pith of it, such as Quills haue within them, which men take out when they make them Pens to write: the Indians call it Sacar Mambu, which is as much to say, as Sugar of Mambu, and is a very medicinable thing much esteemed, and much sought for by the Arabians, Peasants, and Moors, that call it Tabaxyr.

Those Reeds grow most in the Coast of Choramandell in Bisnagar, and Malacca in many places, and in great abundance: they grow very high, and are diuided in each ioynt one from another, at the least a span and a halfe, and rather more, and are as thicke as a mans legge about the knee: they doe commonly grow vpright, and most of them as high as the highest house in the Low-countrie: they bow them many times in growing, that they may bring them into a forme or fashion to serue for their Pallankins, wherein the Portugals and Indian Lords are carried, as I haue before: the leaues of those Reeds or Bambu grow wide one from another, and haue almost the fashion of an Oliue leafe.

Chap. 59.

Of the tree called Arbore Triste.

The tree called Arbore Triste, that is, the Sorrowfull Tree, is so called, because it neuer beareth blossomes but in the night time, and so it doth and continueth all the yeere long: it is a thing to bee wondred at: for that so soone as the Sunne setteth, there is not one blossome seene vpon the tree, but presently within halfe an houre after, there are as many blossomes vpon it, as the tree can beare: they are very pleasant to behold, and smell very sweet, and so soone as the day commeth on, and the Sunne is rising, presently all the blossomes fall off, and couer all the ground, so that there remaineth not one to bee seene vpon the tree: the leaues shut themselves close together, so that it seemeth as though it were dead, vntill Evening commeth againe, and then it beginneth to blossome as it did before: the tree is as great as a Plumme tree, and is commonly planted behind mens houses, in their Gardens for a pleasure, and for the sweet smell: it groweth very quickly vp, for that many young plants doe spring out of the roote, and as soone as those young plants bee about halfe a fadome high, they haue presently as many blossoms vpon them as the branches on the trees, & although they cut the tree downe to the ground, yet within lesse then halfe a yeere there wil branches spring out of the roote, and likewise if you breake a branch off from the tree and set it on the earth, it will presently take root and grow, and within few dayes after beareth blossomes: the blossomes are in a manner like Orange tree blossomes, the flowre being white, and in the bottome somewhat yellow and reddish, which in India they vse for Saffron, therewith to dresse their meates, and to die with all as we doe with our Saffron, but it is neither so good, nor of so pleasant a taste, yet it serueth there for want of the other.

Chap. 60.

Bettele.

Bettele is a leafe somewhat greater and longer out then Orange leaues, and is planted by stickes, whereupon it climeth like Iuie or Pepper, and so like vnto Pepper, that a farre off growing each by other they can hardly be discerned. It hath no other fruit but the leaues onely, it is much dresse and looked vnto, for that it is the daily bread of India. The leaues being gathered do continue long without withering, alwaies shewing fresh and Greene, and are sold by the dozen, and

and there is not any woman or man in all India, but that euery day eateth a dozen or two of the same leaues or more: not that they vse them for food, but after their meals tides, in the morning and all the day long, as likewise by night, and as they goe abroad in the streets, wheresoeuer they bee you shall see them with some of these leaues in their hands, which continually they are chawing. These leaues are not vied to bee eaten alone, but because of their bitternesse they are eaten with a certaine kind of fruit, which the Malabares and Portugalls call Arecca, the Gusurates and Decaniys, Suparij, and the Arabians Fauffel. This fruite groweth on trees like the Palme trees, that beare the Nut Cocus in India, but they are somewhat thinner, with leaues somewhat longer and smaller. The fruit is much like the fruit that groweth on Cypresse trees, or like a Nutmeg, though some of them are on the one side flat, and on the other side thicker, some being somewhat greater and very hard. They cut them in the middle with a knife, and so chaw them with Bettele, they are within full of veines, white, somewhat reddish. There is a kind of Arecca called Cechanijn, which are lesse, blacker, and very hard, yet are likewise vied with Bettele, and haue no taste but only of the Wood, and yet it moisteneth the mouth, and coloureth it with red and black, whereby it seemeth that the lippes and teeth are painted with blacke blood, which happeneth when the Arecca is not well dried. There is another sort, which in the eating or chawing being swallowed downe, maketh men light in the head, as if they had drunke wine all the day long, but that is soone past. They vse yet another mixture which they eate withall, that is to say, a cake or role made of a certaine wood or tree called Kaate, and then they anoint the Bettele leaues with chalke made of burnt oyster shels, which can doe no hurt in their bodies by reason of the small quantitie of it; all this being chawed together, and the Iuice swallowed downe into their bodies, for all the rest they spit forth; they say it is very good for the maw, and against a stinking breath, a soueraigne medecine for their teeth, and fastning of gummies, and very good against the Schorbuck, & it is most true that in India very few men are found with stinking breaths, or tooth aches, or troubled with the Schorbuck or any such diseases, and although they be neuer so old, they alwayes haue their teeth whole and sound, but their mouthes and teeth are still as if they were painted with black blood, as I said before, and neuer leaue spitting reddish spittle like blood. The Portugall women haue the like custome of eating these Bettele leaue, so that if they were but one day without eating their Bettele, they perswade themselues they could not liue: Yea, they set it in the night times by their beds heads, and when they cannot sleepe, they doe nothing else but chaw Bettele and spit it out againe. In the day time wheresoeuer they doe sit, goe, or stand, they are continually chawing thereof, like Oxen or Kine chawing their cud.

The Noblemen and Kings, wheresoeuer they goe, stand, or sit, haue alwaies a seruant by them, with a Silver Kettle in their hand full of Bettele and their mixtures, and when they will eat, giue them a leafe readie prepared. And when any Ambassadour cometh to speake with the King, although the King can vnderstand them well, yet it is their manner (to maintaine their estates) that the Ambassadour speaketh vnto them by an Interpreter, that standeth there in presence, which done, hee answereth againe by the same Interpreter. In the meane time the King lieth on a bed, or else sitteth on the ground vpon a Carpet, and his seruant standing by readie with the Bettele, which hee continually chaweth, and spitteth out the Iuice and remainder thereof into a Silver Bason; standing by him, or else holden by some one of his slaues or his wiues, and this is a great honour to the Ambassadour, especially if hee profereth him of the same Bettele that he himselfe doth eate.

The Herbe called Dutroa is very common in India, and groweth in euery field. The leafe thereof is sharpe at the end like the point of a Speare, and is indented on the edges like the leafe of Beares-claw, and about that bignesse, hauing in it many long threds or veines, it groweth without taste or moysture, and somewhat bitter and smelling like a Raddish. The flower or blossom of this Plant, is very like vnto the blossome of Rose-mary in colour: and out of this blossom groweth a bud, much like the bud of Popie, wherein are certaine small kernells like the kernells of Melons, which being stamped and put into any meat, wine, water, or any other drinke or composition, and eaten or drunke therewith, maketh a man in such case as if hee were foolish or out of his wits, so that hee doth nothing else but laugh, without any vnderstanding or sence once to perceiue any thing that is done in his presence. And sometime it maketh him sleepe as if hee were dead, in that sort he continueth for the space of twentie foure houres: but if his feet be washed with cold water, then hee cometh to himselfe againe before the twentie foure houres bee expired. There is yet another Herbe in India, called by the Portugalls Herba Sentida, or feeling Hearbe, the cause why it is called so, is for that if any man passeth by it and toucheth it, or throweth either Sand or any other thing vpon it, presently it becommeth as though it were withered, and closeth the leaues together and cometh not to it selfe, and to his first force againe as long as the man standeth by it: but presently when the man is gone and turneth his backe, it openeth the leaues againe, and becommeth stiffe and faire againe, as though they were newly growne: and touching it againe, it shutteth and becommeth withered as before, so that it is a pleasure to see it, and strange to bee obserued. Also there is a thing to be wondred at, and seemeth ynpossible to such as haue not seene it: and this it is, within the Towne and Iland of Goa, at the one end of the Towne, where the Kine, Oxen, Seepe, and all kind of Cattle are killed and slaine to be sold for meat for the Inhabitants, called Matanaquas; in that place there lie all the Hornes of the said beasts scattered and throwne about, as if they were altogether vnprofitable, because the Portugalls and Indians vse them not, and it is likewise a great dishonour and iniury to the Spaniards and Portugalls to haue any Hornes, or once to shew a Horne to each other, or to throw it before his doore, for reuenge of which act they would kill each other, and there is sharpe Iustice vsed, if any man doe offend in that sort, by shewing his neighbour the Horne, or naming it vnto him, for that thereby they meane he is a man that is made cookold by his wife. These hornes hauing layne there a certaine time, doe sticke fast in the earth (I meane the inner part of the horne) and there it taketh root as if it were a tree, as I my selfe haue seene and pulled forth many of them that had rootes of two or three spannes in length, which was neuer seene in any place of the World.

C. 62.

Pepper is of diuers sorts, that is to say, blacke, white, and Long-pepper is called Canarijn: the blacke is the commonest. Pepper groweth and is planted at the foot of another tree, and most part at the foot of the Tree called Arecca, or some such like Tree, and groweth vpon the tree like Bettele or Ine. The leaues of Pepper are like Orange leaues, but somewhat smaller, they are greene and sharpe at the ends, in chawing it biteth the tongue, and tasteth much like to Bettele, it growes in bunches like Grapes, but a great deale lesser and thinner, yet somewhat thicker then Gooseberries: they are alwayes greene till they begin to drie and to ripen, which is in December and Ianuary, for at that time they are gathered. The long Pepper groweth in Bengala, and some in the Iland of Iaua, and is another kind of tree: the long Pepper is of the length of a needle, or the tagge of a point, but somewhat thicker, and all of a like thicknesse: it is outwardly rugged, and of an ashe colour, and within somewhat white, with small seeds, but in taste and vse it is like the other blacke and white Pepper. The white Pepper (as I said) is like the black, both in taste and forme, yet it is accounted for better and stronger, and is not in so great quantitie as the black. The Pepper called Canarijn in the Countrey of Goa and Malabar, almost of the fashion of Panike: it is an ashe colour, and hollow within, with some small kernells, which in eating tasteth and heateth like other Pepper, yet it is vsed only by the poore people, and therefore is called Canarijn Pepper, that is to say, Countrey mens Pepper, or poore peoples Pepper: therefore it is neuer laden away, for it is very course and of a little value, neither would it bee able to raise the freight, and therefore is it left in the Countrey.

C. 63.
Cinamon.

Cinamon trees are as great as oliue trees, & some lesser, with leaues of Colmi like Bay leaues, but of fashion like Citron leaues, though somewhat smaller. They haue white blossomes, and a certaine fruit of the greatnesse of blacke Portugall Oliues, whereof also Oyle is made, which is vsed for many things. The tree hath two Barks, but the second Barke is the Cinamon, it is cut off in foure square peeces, and so laid to dry, at the first it is ashe colour, after as it beginneth to dry, it rolleth together of it selfe, and looketh of the colour as it commeth hither, which proceedeth of the heat of the Sun. The tree from whence the Barke is taken they let it stand, and within three years after it hath another Barke as it had before. These trees are in great abundance, for they grow of themselves without planting, in the open fields like bushes: the root of this tree yeeldeth a water which smelleth like Camphora, it is forbidden to bee drawne forth for spoyling the trees. The Cinamon that is not well dried is of ashe colour, and that which is ouermuch dried, blackish, but the best dried is reddish: there is much and excellent water distilled out of Cinamon while it is halfe greene, which is much vsed in India, and many times carried into Portugall and other places: it is very pleasant both to drinke and to smell, but very hot and strong: it is vsed against the Colicke and other diseases proceeding of cold, it is likewise good against stinking breath, and euill sauer of the mouth. There is likewise a water made of the blossomes of this tree, but not so good, nor so well esteemed as that of Cinamon it selfe. The places where Cinamon groweth, is most and best in the Iland of Seylon, wherein there is whole Woods full of Cinamon trees: in the coast of Malabar there groweth likewise great store, and some Woods of Cinamon, but not halfe so good, and lesser trees, the barke being grayer and thicker and of small vertue.

C. 64.
Ginger.

Ginger groweth in many places of India, yet the best and most carried abroad, is that which groweth in the Coast of Malabar: it groweth like thin and young Netherland Reedes of two or three spannes high, the Roote whereof is Ginger, being greene, it is much eaten in India for Sallets, as also sodden in Vineger, which they call Achar, as I said of Pepper, and other Fruits that are vsed in that manner throughout all India: the time when they are most gathered and begun to bee dried, is in December and Ianuarie: they drie it in this sort, that is, they couer it with pot-earth, which they do to stop & fil vp the holes, & therby to make it continue the fresher, for the Pot-earth preserueth it from wormes, without the which it is presently consumed by them: it is little esteemed in India, notwithstanding there is much shipped, as well to the Red Sea, as to Ormus, Arabia and Asia.

THe Trees whereon Cloues grow are like Bay Trees, the blossomes at the first white, then greene, and at last red and hard, which are the Cloues, and when the blossomes are greene, they haue the pleasantest smell in all the world. The Cloues grow very thicke together and in great numbers they are gathered and then dried, their right colour when they are drie is a darke yellow, and to giue them a blacke colour they are commonly smoked. The Cloues that stay on the Tree vngathered are thicke, and stay on till the next yeere, which are those that are called the Mother of Cloues. And in the place where the Trees stand, there groweth not any grasse or greene hearbe at all, but it is wholly drie, for that those Trees draw all the moisture vnto them. That which the Portugalls call Baston, or with vs the Stocke of the Cloue (and is the stalke whereby they hang on the trees) is gathered with the Cloues, and so they are mingled together: for that in Maluco they neuer garble their Cloues, but in India they are many times parted, though verie little: for they are most part sold and vsed with dust and stalkes, and altogether; but such as are to bee sent to Portugall are seuered and clenfed. The Cloues are so hotte of nature, that whensoever they are made cleane, and seperated from their garblish, if there chance to stand either tubbe or payle of water in the chamber where they cleanse them, or any other vessell with wine or any kind of moisture, it will within two daies at the furthest bee wholly soken out and dried vp, although it stand not neere them, by reason of the great heat of the Cloues that draw all moisture vnto them, as by experience I haue often scene. The same nature is in the vnspun Silke of China, so that whensoever the Silke lieth any where in a house vpon the flowre, that is to say, vpon boords, a foot or two aboue the ground, and that the flowre is sprinkled and couered with water, although it toucheth not the Silke, in the morning all that water will bee in the Silke, for that it draweth it all vnto it. And this trick the Indians oftentimes vse to make their Silke weigh heauie when they sell it, for it can neither be seene nor found in the Silke.

THe Nutmeg Tree is like a Peare Tree, or a Peach Tree, but that they are lesse, and it hath round leaues. These Trees grow in the Iland of Banda, not farre from Maluco, and also in the Ilands of Iana and Sunda, from whence they are carried to China and Malacca, and also into India and other places. The fruit is altogether like great round Peaches, the inward part whereof is the Nutmeg. This hath about it a hard shell like Wood, wherein the Nut lieth loose: and this wooden shell or huske is couered ouer with Nutmeg flower, which is called Mace, and ouer it is the fruit, which without is like the fruit of a Peach.

Cardamomum is a kind of spice, which they vse much in India to dresse with their meates, and commonly they haue it in their mouthes to chaw vpon. It is very good against a stinking breath and euill humours in the head, and serueth also for other thing in medicines: it groweth like other graines, and is very like to Panyke, but of a white colour drawing somewhat towardes yellow. The huskes are as great as the huskes of Panyke grains, but somewhat small: within there is about ten or twelue graines of berries, which is the Cardamomum. There are two sorts of Cardamomum, that is to say, great and small; most of it groweth in Calicut and Cananor, places on the Coast of Malabar: it is likewise in other places of Malabar, and in the Iland of Iaua, and from the Countries aforesaid it is most carried into other places, but little brought into Portugall, because of the great charges and long way: yet many times the Saylers and other Trauellers bring it. They seech no flesh in India, but commonly they put Cardamomum into the pot, it maketh the meate to haue as good a sauor and a taste as any of the other Spices of India.

Lack by the Malabares, Bengalers, and Decanys, is called Assy, by the Moors Lac; the Men of Pegu (where the best is found, and most trafficked withall) doe call it Treck, and deale much therewith by carrying it vnto the Iland of Sumatra (in time past called Taprobana) and there they exchange it for Pepper, and from thence it is carried to the Red Sea, to Persia and Arabia, whereupon the Arabians, Persians, and Turkes call it Lac Sumatra, that is, Lac of Sumatra, because it is brought from thence into their Countries. The manner how it is made is thus: in Pegu, and those places from whence it cometh, there are certaine very great Pismires with wings, which fly vp the trees that are there like Plum trees, and such other trees, out of the which trees comes a certaine gumme, which the Pismires sucke vp, and then they make the Lac round about the branches of the trees, as Bees make Honey and Waxe, and when it is full, the owners of the trees come, and breaking off the branches lay them to drie, and being drie the branches shrinke out, and the Lac remaineth behind like a Reed: sometimes the Wood breaketh within them, but the lesse Wood it hath within it the better it is: the peeces and crummes that fall fall vpon the ground, they melt them together, but that is not so good, for it hath filth and earth within it: it happeneth oftentimes that they finde the Pismires wings within the raw Lac. When the Lac is raw, as it commeth from the Tree, it is a darke red colour, but being refined and clenfed, they make it of all colours in India.

Benioin is a kinde of stufte, like Frankinsence and Myrrhe, but more esteemed, for it serueth for many medicines, and other things

As when they make Balles or peeces of Amber and Muske, they must alwaies haue Benioin with it to make it perfect, it groweth much in the Kingdome of Syau, in the Iland of Sumatra, in the Ilands of Iauas, and the Countrey of Malacca, they are high Trees full of branches, with leaues like Lemmon Tree leaues, with a thicke and high stemme or stocke in the middle, from whence proceedeth the Gumme, which is the Benioin. When the Tree is young, then it yeeldeth the best Benioin, which is blackish of colour, and of a very sweet smell, and is called Benioin de Boninas, that is to say, Benioin of the Flowers, because of the perfect smell. The second Benioin, is called Benioin Amendoado, that is, Benioin of Almondes, because it is mixed with pieces of white Benioin among the blacke, like to Almondes that are cut in pieces. This Benioin is not so good, because the white Benioin is of the old Trees.

Ca. 72.

Frankinsence groweth in Arabia, it is the Gumme that floweth out of the bodies of Trees, like Benioin.

Mirre by the Indians is called Bola, it groweth in the same that Benioin and Frankinsence doth, and commeth also out of Arabia Felix, but most out of the Countrey of Abexin from the inward parts of the Countrey, lying betweene Mosambique, and the red Sea, which is called Prester Iohns Land.

Ca. 74.

There are three sorts of Sanders, that is, white, yellow and red: the white and the yellow, which is the best, come most out of the Iland of Tymor, which lieth by Iana. This Iland hath whole woods and wildernesses of Sanders, both of white and yellow, and from thence it is carried throughout all India, and other Countries, and traffique much therewith: the red Sanders groweth most in the coast of Choramandel and Tanassarijn, which is in the Countrey of Pegu: the trees of Sanders are like Nut trees, and haue a certaine fruit vpon them like Cherries, at the first greene, and after blacke, but of no taste nor any thing worth, for it presently falleth off, onely the wood of the tree is accounted of, which is the Sanders.

Ca. 75.

Snakewood is most in the Iland of Seylon: it is a lowe Tree: the roote thereof being the Snake-wood, is of colour white, shewing somewhat yellow, very hard and bitter in taste, it is much vsed in India: they stampe and bruise it like Sanders, in water or wine, and so drinke it, it is very good and well proued against all burning Feauers: one ounce thereof bruised and mixed with water is good against all poison and sicknesse, as the collicke, wormes, and all filthy humors and coldnesse in the body, and specially against the sting of Snakes, whereof it hath the name: it was first found by meanes of a little beast called Quil, or Quirpele, which is of bignesse very like a Ferret (wherewith in those Countries they vse to driue Cunnies out of their holes, and so catch them) whereof in India they haue many in their houses, which they play withall to passe the time away, as also to kill their Mice and Rats, and to driue them away. This Beast by nature is a great enemy to the Snake, so that wheresoeuer she findeth any, she fighteth with them: and because it is often bitten by the Snake, it knoweth how to heale it selfe with this Snake-wood, whereof there is much in Seylon, where also are many of those Beasts, and great store of Snakes) so that if it be neuer so sore bitten, hauing eaten of this wood, it is presently healed, as if it had neuer beene hurt.

Ca. 76.

Lignum Aloes.

The Lignum Aloes which in India is called Calamba and Palo D'aguilla, is most in Malacca, in the Iland of Sumatra, Camboia, Sion, and the Countries bordering on the same: the trees are like Oliue trees, and somewhat greater: when it is cut off, it smelleth not so well, because it is greene, for the drier it is, the better it smelleth: the best and that which smelleth most is the innermost part of the wood: some of it is better then the rest, which the Indians doe presently know how to finde out: the best and finest is called Calamba, and the other Palo Daguilla. Now to know which is the best, you must vnderstand that the wood that is very heauie with blacke and browne veines, and which yeeldeth much Oyle or moistnesse (which is found by the fire) is the best, and the greater and thicker it is, the better it is, and hath the more vertue. Of this wood they make many costly things, and it hath a speciall and precious smell, so that it is greatly esteemed: specially the Calamba, which if it be good, is sold by weight against Siluer and Gold. The Palo Daguilla next after the Calamba is much accounted of. There is another kinde of Palo Daguilla, which is called Aquilla Brana, or wilde Aquilla, and is also much esteemed: for the Indians vse it therewith to burne the bodies of their Bramenes, and other men of account, when they are dead: and because it is costly, therefore it is a great honour to those that are burnt therewith, as it is to those that with vs are buried in Tombes of Marble stones: but it is not comparable to the other Palo Daguilla, nor the Calamba. The wilde Aguilla groweth most in the Island of Seylon, and on the coast of Choramandel, and the best Palo Daguilla, and Calamba groweth in Malacca. These costly woods are much vsed in India for Beades, and Crucifixes, which are holden in great reuerence.

The Author proceedeth in a large discourse of other Drugs, Gems and Indian occurrences which I haue omitted.

CHAP. IX.

Relation of Ormuz, and of the late taking thereof by the English and Persians.

§. I. A Relation of the Kings of Ormuz, and of the foundation of the Citie of Ormuz, taken out of a Chronicle which a King of the same Kingdome composed, called Pachaturunxa, written in Arabicke.

King Mahomet reigning in Aman, which is within Arabia felix: in the beginning of his reigne, desiring to amplifie his Kingdome and fame, assembled all the great men of his Kingdome, and said vnto them, how the Countries of the coast of Persia had beene his predecessours, and by negligence of some of them they were lost, disinhabited, and vnprofitable: that hee determined with the principall of his Kingdome that would follow him to goe thither in person, and with some of the common sort for to build some Cities and Townes in that Countrie, and that it might be cultivated, seeing it was a good Countrie. And so would his Kingdome and his fame be augmented, and that he would leaue for the gouernment of Arabia his Sonne, which was a man able to rule well. All condescending that his determination seemed them well, he commanded presently to prepare much people, many of the principalls following him, and departing from Aman, they came to Calciat, which is neere the Sea in the same Arabia. Hee thought good, and his also to build in that port a Citie, because it was a place disposed for them of the Countrie to traffique with the Ships that should passe that way: for the which his Sonne remained there with much people, putting in effect the determination of his Father and of his Counsell; and the Citie in time did so prosper, that at this day in the ruines it sheweth to haue beene a very great and noble Citie. After that King Mahomet had ordained the matters of Arabia and of Calciat, he embarked with the people he had for his company diuided in many ships, which hee caused to be made ready, and passed to the side of the coast of Persia, and arrived at the Cape of Iasquet, that is where Ormuz doth now stand, thirty leagues without the straight. And seeing that Countrie, and the disposition of it not conuenient to settle himselfe, iourneying along the coast, hee arrived at a Countrie which then was called Harmuz, which is neere to that which now is called Magostan, and Braami, which now at this day they call Cosfecca, it stands right against that which now is called Harmuz, in the coast of Persia. And the King with his contenting themselves with the Countrie, determined to settle themselves in it and to inhabit, and so they tooke in hand presently to build houses, and to husband the ground.

And because this King was very liberall, and fauoured much the poore people of the Countrie, and the husbandmen, and receiued strangers louingly, hee was well beloued generally of all that had notice of him. And the fame of his vertues spreading abroad, and his noblenesse through all the place round about, many people came vnto him to dwell vnder his defence and gouernment. This was the cause whereby this new Citie was much enobled. The fame of his vertues and goodnesse was spread abroad among all the Kings of that straight, as well of Persia as of other parts of Arabia, all of them sent to visit him with great presents, shewing the great contentment they had with his good neighbourhood. When this King saw himselfe prosper, and fauoured of all about him, and with many people, to purchase more the loue of all men, he commanded money to be coined, for there was none in the Countrey, which increased greatly the loue of all men toward him, and iointly the prosperity of his Countrie. For this benefit which hee did to all that Countrie, in the inuenting money for them, they called him generally Deranquis, which is to say, scale of money. After the Citie of Ormuz built in the coast of Persia, and prosperous with many people and riches, the King commanded his great men to goe through the Countries of Magostan, and euery one should take that which best liked him, for to cultivate, inhabite, and build in it diuers Townes. They did so, and every one tooke the cuntry that liked him best, and inhabited and husbanded it, and every one gaue his owne name to the Cuntry he tooke, of whom those Countries are nominated to this day. And because the Kings that succeeded Mabomet were mighty and good in their gouernment, they held the Cuntry in their successions, increasing alwaies in people and noblenesse. And their children that descended of them were such continually, that the Fathers in their life time gaue them the gouernment of the Kingdome, and they rested in their old age.

Cays.

It was the custome among these Kings, because the memory of their forefathers might not perish, when they came to the tenth generation, they began their denominations anew, the tenth following tooke the names of the ten before. In sort that the first of the number of the ten was to take the name of the founder; and so in order till the number of ten were ended. This order continued some yeeres, the reigne going by a direct line. Afterward this order and custome perished, because that one for couetousnesse of reigning did kill the other, and many were made blinde by others that would haue the gouernment of the Kingdome. But there is one great and notable thing in this Kingdome, that although there were many that reigned tyrannously, murdering the lawfull Kings, yet vnto this day there neuer reigned any that was not of the blood Royall. Onely Hormuz, being in the side of Persia, one that then reigned being dead, and hauing none of the blood royall in the Cuntry, the Goazill (which is the Gouverneur of the Kingdome) did make himselfe King. At this time a Sonne in law of the King deceased which was his Nephew, was with a great Armie of men of warre, by commandement of his Vncle, against the Iland and Citie of Cays. Newes were brought him how his Vncle was dead, and how the Goazill had made himselfe King; wherefore hee raised presently the siege from against Cays, and came with all the men he had to Ormuz: and as soone as he came he was receiued of all with great contentments and feasts, for they were very sorry to haue for their King a man that was not of the blood royall, wherefore with great feasts they tooke the Kings Nephew for their King. Which commanded presently to behead the Goazill which had made himselfe King, and all his associates and allies.

After that the direct line was broken in the succession of the Kingdome, there was no such good gouernment in the Kingdome, neither did the things thereof prosper, but went rather to decay and diminution, whereby there was not already so much resistance against their aduersaries, the warres of the neighbour Kings increasing, the King of Cherman chanced to come, which is within the land of Persia, with a great armie, and very puissant against Hormuz, for to destroy it. The King Cabadim which reigned at that time in Hormuz, not daring to abide the encounter and power of the King of Cherman, embarked himselfe with all the people hee could, and the Cuntry forsaken, withdrew himselfe to the Iland that is called Quexome, which is neere the Iland of Ormuz. And being in it a few daies, and thinking he was not safe in it, being somewhat too bigge, and in it he could not well defend himselfe, he passed then with his people to the Iland which now is called Hormuz, because it was closer, holding that in it he might defend himselfe from whatsoever enemies. This Iland was before desert, and had no more but a few poore Fishermen, and they called it Iarum, which is to say a Wood. For as the Iland is almost all of Salt, and the grounds almost all saltish, because some Riuer that run through it, which come from a Mountaine that is in the midst of it, are of the salt water, and by the sides of the water lieth the Salt white as Snow, and hee that is to passe the Riuer must step ouer the Salt. And the stones of the hill in some places are salt, which the shippes doe carrie for ballast vnto India. Notwithstanding about the Iland there grow some very thin Woods and Trees like Apple trees of Anafega, which beare a Fruite that the Portugals doe call small Apples, like the Apples of Anafega, which doe not eate well, for they are sustained and liue by the raine water. So that because the Iland is barren, and beareth nothing but that which I said: because it is so salt, they call it Iarum. Also because it was not inhabited, it was in times past smaller and closer then now it is, as euen to this day the Inhabitants doe shew the places where the Sea did reach. The King Cabadim landing now in this Iland, and determining to settle himselfe in it, began to build houses for himselfe and his to inhabit. They remedied themselves with that which they went to seeke in the Countries round about. And also because the King of Cherman returned to his owne Cuntry, they went from thence to maintaine the places which before they did possesse, cultivating them. And because the Citie built in the Iland of Iarum prospered, they made it the head of their Kingdome. Those which succeeded them named it Hormuz, which remaineth to this day, which was the name of the principall Citie which they had on the firme land, that the King of Geman destroyed and arruinated.

It is to be noted that this straight of Harmuz, some leagues within from Ormuz, is an Iland called Cays; in the which was built in times past a very rich and noble Citie, whereof at this day there is a remembrance among them of the Country, and now the Iland is desert, in the which appeare the memory of the old buildings that were in it. This Iland and Citie was very rich, populous, and very prosperous, because of the great resort of Ships that resorted from all parts of India, with great riches and great store of goods, and for the great concourte of people that from Persia and Arabia come to it to seeke such goods as came thither from India, bringing also very rich merchandise, in change of the which or for mony which they made of them they bought those that from India came thither. In sort that all the riches which now Hormuz hath, & all the traffick then the Island of Cays had, that which now is called Hormuz, being as I haue said vnhabited.

Persia

The Author here relateth the wars betwixt the King of Xiras, in behalfe of Cays against Ormuz; which I haue omitted. Island Baren.

The King of Hormuz seeing the euils that had befallen to him by meanes of the Goazil of Cays (which had prouoked the King of Xiras against him) he went against him with a great Armie, and besieging him some daies, and not being able to subdue him, he returned to Hormuz, because winter came on: and the next yeere he went against it, and tooke and sacked it, and left in it a Goazil made with his owne hand, with great store of people. The Goazil overcome had meanes to escape, and he fled in a Terrada to the Island of Baren: and made him strong againe in Baren, with the fauour of the Goazil of Baren, and returned againe against Cays, and craftily comming to a parley with the Goazil which the King of Hormuz had left there for safegard of the Citie, he tooke him and pulled out both his eyes, and posselt him ag aine of the Citie.

But Pachaturunxa succeeding in the Kingdome of Hormuz (which was the Author of this Chronicle, and reigned about 300. yeeres agbe, little more or lesse) brought it vnder his subiection, and from thence forward it remained subiect to the Kingdome of Hormuz. And presently this Pachaturunxa subdued the Island of Baren in punishment for the fauour that hee gaue to the Goazil of Cays: and so the Kings of Hormuz were prosperous, so that they subdued all the Islands that were in all the straight and all the Countrie along the coast of Arabia vnto Lassa and Catiffa, and others also on the side of Persia, whereby it was made a very great Kingdome and a rich and very prosperous: chiefly that all the traffick of Cays was passed to the Island, which now is called Hormuz: whereby Cays was vterly lost, as well in her buildings as in her riches, and now it is altogether destroyed and vnhabited, hauing beene the principall Island in all those parts. And Hormuz being a barren and vnhabited Island, and a Mountaine of Salt, is among the richest Countries of the India one of the richest, for the many and great merchandize that come to it from all places of India, and from all Arabia, and from all Persia, euen of the Mogores, and from Russia and Europe I saw Merchants in it, and from Venice. And so the Inhabiters of Hormuz doe say, that all the world is a ring, and Hormuz is the stone of it. Whereby it is commonly said, that the Custome-house of Hormuz is a channell of Siluer which alwayes runneth. The last yeere that I was in Hormuz, hauing continued there three yeeres, the Officers affirmed to mee that the Custome-house did yeeld 150000. Pardaos to the King of Portugall, besides that which is presumed the Moores and the Goazil did steale, which are Officers of the Custome-house. And although this Island yeeldeth no fruit, neither hath water nor victualls, yet it hath great abundance of flesh, bread, rice, and great store of fish, and many and good fruits, whereof it is prouided from many places, especially from Persia, &c.

§. II.

Relation of Ormuz businessse by Master W. PINDER.

A Briefe of some passages and accidents of a Voyage to the East Indie in the London, Captaine Andrew Shilling Commander of her, and three other Ships in the Company, namely the Hart, wherein Master Richard Bluh was Viceadmirall, the Roe Bucke Rere admirall, Master Richard Swan Master of her, and Christopher Browne Master of the Egell, being the fourth Ship, the five and twentieth of March 1620. These foure Ships set saile from the Downes the foure and twentieth of Aprill. All foure Ships got into Saldany Bay, whose latitude is 33. degrees 57. minutes, and 25. degrees, 48. minutes, to the Easterne of the Lizart in Cornwall, and it hath 2. degrees 27. minutes Westerly variation. The same day arriued Captaine Fitz-Harbord with the Exchange and Untie, who came from England in our Company with three Ships vnder his command, and left our company the fourth of Aprill: there was in the Bay an English Ship that came from Surat, named the Lyon, Captaine Widdall in her: also there were ten Dutch Ships, bound for Iaccatra.

M. Pinder had bin before in East Indies, with those ships which the Cōpany there tooke. He was now in this Persian business (as I remember) Master of the London. This I promise as a Preface to the larger Ormusian Relations following.

The thirtieth of Iune our Ships were watered, being the chiefe cause of putting into that Bay, but formerly there hath bin plenty of Oxen and Sheepe, to bin bought for small value, but by some abuse to the people, there is nothing to be had, except water: by some neglect, our continuance was vntil the 25. of Iuly, with much hassard and preiudice to our passage: so plying for Surat, with purpose to haue gone within the Island of S. Lawrence, we were forit to goe without the Island, being the first passage of any English without, to the coast of India: and the eight of October wee came to sight of certaine Islands, in latitude tenne degrees fiftie one minutes of North and longitude from the Cape of Good hope, Easterly fiftie five degrees 58. minutes, and variation thirteene degrees fiftie foure minutes Westerly. These Islands affords good reliefe, and are worth discouery, their owne Inhabitants report. From these Iles we ran with the coast of Indie, and first sight thereof was Mount Delin, which is the highest hill in India, our latitude at sight of it was 11. degrees 47. minutes longitude 56. degrees 51. minutes variation 15 degrees 43. minutes.

the tenth of October. The Coast of India is bold to runne with all dangers, sheweth it selfe from Cape Commeren, you may bee bold to runne all the Coast to Diu head in tenne fathom the darkeft night that may bee, and good anchoring off, to thirtie or fortie fathome depth from the Coast; and from September vntill Februarie, you may saile to and fro on that Coast, hauing the Land wind turnes at night, and Sea wind turnes at day, proued by many trials. The thirteenth of October, the Ship anchored in twelue fathoms, five leagues from the Coast, in the latitude 13. degrees Northerly, 14. minutes, longitude 58. degrees Easterly, 12. min. from Cape Bonassperanca the sixteenth, certaine Boats brought vs fish with some small store of fruit, and hence from the shoare riding then in the latitude, 13. degrees 33. minutes, and 14. degrees 44. variation so pling toward Surat: the seuen and twentieth we anchored some seuen mile and a halfe from Dabul, in eight fathome and a halfe depth, the Towne bearing East by North, by the Compasse. From this place we had good prouision for our men, who were most sickly, but God restored health in short time to them, the latitude of it is 17. degrees Northerly, 38. minutes Easterly. From Dabul, on the third of Nouember wee plied for Surat, and on the sixth, in latitude 19. degrees 51. minutes. Capt. Shilling sent the Hart and Egell toward Persia, for Cape Iasques being so appointed by the worshipfull Company. The ninth, the London and Row Buck arrived at the Port of Swally neere Surat, whose latitude is 21. degrees Northerly 16. minutes; there vnderstood we that the Portugall lay with a Fleet of Ships to surprise those that should come to Iasques in the Persian Gulfe, which to preuent we made all the hast that might be to strengthen our friends, and preuent their plot, and on the one and twentieth of Nouember, wee surprised one of their Ships of some two hundred and fiftie tun, who came from Arabia; this Ship wee manned landing all the Portugalls, and plied for Iasques, and on the fifth of December, we met the Hart and Egell forced from Iasques by the Portugall, and had turned off a Ship of theirs the which they tooke in their passage. Our forces vnited wee made hast to our Port, the which the fifteenth of December wee had sight of, and also of the Portugall Fleet, who assaulted vs the seuenteenth, but let them boast their entertainment, praise to the Lord he fought for vs, and if the firing of a Ship, that should haue fired them had taken effect, their glorious pride had beene quailed that day. Yet were we Commanders vnder God of the Rood, while hee sent to Ormuz to renew his forces, and on the twentieth came towards vs, and then thought by often waying and tiring our men, being not accustomed to those hot parts to bee master of vs; but one the eight and twentieth hee was taught a better lesson, with Gods guard, and vie of our Powder and Shot: which had it not failed vs, they had scarce any of them troubled Englishmen more; but I referre to them how they sped. Our Capt. Andrew Shilling receiued a mortall wound, the sixth shot that past this eight and twentieth, yet was valiant and spake cheerefull, with thankfulness to God the last minute of his life, which ended the sixth of Ianuarie. Hee was buried the ninth, and on the fourteenth we set saile for Surat from Iasques, whose latitude is twentie five degrees Northerly, twentie foure minutes, and eleuen degrees twentie minutes Northerly to the Wester of Damans meridian, some 18. degrees 40. minutes variation. On the seuen and twentieth of Ianuarie, wee tooke a Portugall in our returne, which on the first of Februarie we brought to Swalle, our Port of Surat and rebuilt her, sending the Portugalls to their homes. And on the fifth of Aprill, 1621. hauing laden the Hart and Row Buck to goe for England with foure saile, vnder the command of Captaine Blith wee put to Sea, the time being to late for the laden Shippes to goe for England, it was thought fit to goe for the Red Sea, there to stay vntill the next season, in which passage we met a Portugall Ship of two hundred and fiftie tunne laden with Rice and Cordige of bast, for to supply those wee formerly fought with. Also the seuenth of May we tooke another of one hundred tunne. With these two prizes the London and Andrew went for Cape Rosselgate, and the Hart and Row buck went for Mercera. Being neither of vs able to get into the Red Sea, the times so farre past, the Ships separated. As soone as the London came to Zor, where formerly I had been, there we made hast to prouide vs water, and put many Portugals on shore, many other with their Moores made their escape. Then plied we for Tewe, where the Arabs vsed vs courteously, so that from the seuenth of Iune to the ninth, wee had filled ninetie tunne of water: on the fourteenth came order from Muscat to the Arabs, to withstand our watering; with the Portugalls aide they did their best, some seuen or eight hundred of them with small Shot and Bow, and Arrowes, but the Lord fought our battell, so that but one of our men were lost, yet landed we daily with Brasse, Base, and small Shot, vntill all our Ships were watered, it standeth in the latitude 22. degrees Northerly fiftie minutes, and some twelue leagues within Cape Rosselgate, and hath twentie degrees five minutes variation, the coast bold from Rosselgate to it. On the two and twentieth of Iune, setting saile from thence for Zor, where wee made fall of the Rice taken, and after broke and burned the Ship by reason of her wants, to bring prouision of victuall for our men, and there daily watering on our guard, hauing newes ouer Land from the Hart and Row buck, to whom was returned answere, that they should meet vs at a braue Harbour some league within Rosselgate, it hath latitude 22. degrees Northerly 32. minutes, being by the chieft of our Fleet called Londons Hoope, it hath Wood and Water on the West side of the Bay, also multitude of fish) the eight of August the Hart & Row buck came to vs, and on the fifteenth, we all set saile for India to stop the Ports

Fight with the Portugalls.

Ports for entry of certaine Ships, their Prince hauing much wronged our Masters, promising them free passage through his Countrey with their goods, but when it came within it, he presently made bootie of it with his Souldiers; so Captaine Blith with the London and Primrose, one of the prizes formerly taken lay before the Harbour of Dabul, and Master Keridge in the Hart, Master Browne in the Roe Bucke, my selfe in the Andrew, so named, being the first Prize taken after the Death of Captaine Shilling, and with her the other were taken. These three last specified, lay before Chaul from the thirtieth of August, vntill the thirtieth of September, on which Night I was sent to goe for Surat in the Andrew, by order from Captaine Blith, and to aduertise Master Thomas Russell of our Passage he being Chiefe in the Factorie, and in my passage for Surat, I surprised a Ship of that Princes, which had formerly wronged our Masters, and carried her to Surat surrendring her to the chiefe Factor: there found I riding Captaine Weddall in the Jonas, Master Woodcocke in the Whale, Master Stephenson in the Dolphin, Master Beuerson in the Lyon, Master Johnson in the Rose, Master Danis in the Richard, a Pinnesse who had taken a prize from the Portugals the twentieth of October. The London, Hart, Roe Bucke, and Primrose, came to Swalle with a Prize by them taken. We continued there till the fixe and twentieth of November, at which time with nine sayle of Ships for Persia, and the Hart and Egell for England. The nine that went for Persia were vnder the Command of Captaine Blith, and Captaine Weddall, and on the three and twentieth of December we came to Custacke, some seuen and twenty leagues from Iasquis, and lyeth Latitude 26. degrees, 40. minutes. Ormuz in sight of it bearing West Northwest, by a Meridian Compasse some ten leagues from it. Our Persian Factors aduertised vs that after our Fight the former yeare, the Chiefeine of the Portugals had erected a Castle on Kishme, an Ile in sight of Ormuz, the which the Persian had layne siege vnto some seuen or eight moneths, and lost some eight or nine thousand men in siege of it. Wherefore he required our ayde in these Warres if we would haue our Masters goods from his Countrey, telling vs it was our Enemy as well as his; therefore if wee would haue our Masters goods or Trade with him, we must ayde him, and then we should haue the halfe bootie gotten by the Victorie, also great Priuiledges for the future good of our Masters. On these termes we Condescended and went for Kishme on the nineteenth of Ianuary from Custacke, and the three and twentieth Besieged it by Sea, and the Persian by Land with some of our ayde, so that on the nine & twentieth of Ianuary they came to Parley, and it was Concluded that they should part with Bag and Baggage; provided, they went not for Ormuz, onely their Commander to remaine as pledge. There were two of our people slaine at this seruice, the one at the surrender namely Master Baffin, there were some one thousand of all sorts in this Castle, and the Portugals with some Moores were sent away, but the Persian required certaine Moores which had reuolted from him as hee pretended. So those being deliuered him, though he had formerly promised them mercy, yet he put them all to death. This Castle had in it 17. Pieces of Ordnance, one Brasse Cannon Pedro, two Brasse Culuering, 2. Iron Demiculuering, 4. Brasse Sackers, 2. Iron Minion, 6. Iron Falken, therein left to English-men, to hold possession with the Persian in the behalfe of the English part.

On the fourth of February, we all set sayle for Combroon, which is on the mayne of Persia some three leagues within Ormuz. Then was sent the Portugall Commander of the aforesaid Castle by Master Beuerson in the Lyon for Surat, also Master Johnson in the Rose, Master Danis in the Richard, these went for Surat, and the London, Jonas, Whale, Dolphin with two Prizes, each some two hundred and fiftie or neere, these fixe stayed to waite the Persian, for his securer landing on Ormuz. On the ninth of February he landed, and with small losse got possession of the Towne, for the Portugals retired to their Castle, and then the Persian began presently to intrench, and gathered daily nearer the Castle, and with our helpes made Bulwarks for Ordnance, and Sconces for securing his men. With our Ordnance we galled their Ships, forcing them to hale close vnder the Castle, and on the 24. th with foure of our Boats fired one of their Gallions, the second of March sunke another, the 17. th of March there was made a Breach by blowing vp part of the Castle wall, so the Persian sought to enter but repulsed with losse and hurt of most of his best Souldiers. The 19. th one Gallion more sunke, and on the 20. th and 23. th two other Gallions sunke. The 27. th the Portugals desired parley, the which they had but no Conclusion, so that the second of Aprill another breach was made by blowing vp the wall neere the first, and the 14. th another Flanker blowne vp. Also the 18. th another breach, on which the Persian made all his Forces to assault, and possesst some part of the Castle. Then on the 21. th the Portugals being bestraited, proffered by Parley to deliuer the Castle to the English, if they would saue their liues, the which was granted & performed, and in the two ships of 250. Tunnes they were shipt some 2400. of them, and some 200. left vntill we had procured shipping for their transport, which was performed. The 22. th being possesst of the Castle, there were in it 53. Pieces of Ordnance mounted, 4. Brasse Cannon, 6. Brasse Demicannon, 16. Cannon Pedro of Brasse, 9 Brasse whole Culuering, 2. Demiculuering, 3. Iron Demiculuering, 10. brasse Basses, one Iron Minion, 1. whole Culuering of Iron, and 1. Iron Cannon Pedro; also there were 92. Brasse pieces of Ordnance more vnmounted, & 7. Brasse Bastels which they had landed out of their ships that we sunke. This Castle and Ordnance were left with the Persian, onely 10. Pieces of the 92. on the former, we tooke in our ships to make good what we had broken and spoyled out of our ships in their Service. I judge the Latitude 27. degrees 2. minuts, & Variation 16. deg. 34. min. So the first of September we left the Port, and on the 24. th arrived at Swalle, where we in the London laded, and so did the Jonas & Lyon for England; the time of our stay there was vntill the 30. th of December, there heard we of the sinking of three Caracks by the English and Dutch of the Port of Mosambique.

§. III.

Part of a Letter written to Sir I O H N W O S T E N H O L M E by T. W I L S O N
Chyrurgion; containyng many particulars of the Ormus warre and cause thereof; as also of the most most admirable taking of a Great Portugal Ship well manned, by a small English Pinnesse.

Right Worshipfull:

MY dutie remembred vnto you Sir, I am glad to heare of your good health and welfare, and shall be heartily glad to see you and all yours, the which I hope will be very shortly. Sir, I am very much bound vnto you, that I know not how I shall make requitall for the same, in that in my absence you haue shewed vnto me that kindnes for it which as at all other times I haue found you the best friend that I haue in the world, I doe giue you a thousand thanks, and will by Gods helpe make part requitall for the same, and I shall be ready at all times to doe any thing for you that in me lyeth, to the vttermost of my power or to any of yours. I would haue writ vnto you concerning our Voyage, but I cannot be so brieft as to send it in a Letter, but I make no doubt but you will heare more of the passages thereof, then I can certifie or at least wise haue heard already, for there were Letters sent out of Persia ouer land to the Company, concerning the taking of Kishme Castle and the Citie of Ormus with the Castle, with the spoiling of fise Ships and one great Galley, one ship burned and the rest sunke, the which I pray God may stand to the good liking of you all, for we had a terrible time in Ormus, hauing pestilentiall Feuers with sodaine deaths, and among the Portugals famine, and that terrible contagious heat that in my dayes I neuer felt the like, and such sentes of Dead bodies lying in the streets without heads being vnburned, and Cats & Dogs eating them, within Oast end was neuer the like scene, with infinite many Flies, and that the Persians would not let the dead bodies be buried. We had such mortalitie among our men, that we thought we should haue perished, all the ships before mentioned were they which fought with Captaine Shilling, we tooke their principall Commander prisoner, whose name was Ruy Frera with his Viceadmirall. This Ruy Frera did proffer vnto our Captaine that if he would let him goe, hee would giue him a thousand pound, although he had no money of his owne, yet he would procure it of the Clergie men, the which our Captaine refused, and sent him to Surrat in the Lyon to the President, giuing them strait command of his safe looking to. And when he came to Surrat, he in the Night made his escape with the Ship-boat for want of the better Watch keeping. He was a proper tall Gentleman, swarthie of colour, sterne of Countenance, few of words, and of an excellent spirit, he had liued here in India many yeares. Hee got Commission of their King for three seuerall Designes, the first was to haue sufficient Ships and Men with Munition, for the rooting out of the English out of India, the which he made no question to performe, and did begin with Captaine Shillings Fleet: but God bee thanked therein he fayled as it fell out to his great grieve and all our comforts. The second thing that he was to performe, was to erect a Castle vpon the Iland of Kishme, the which he did: for when we came thither he had scarce furnished it. Hee brought the frame thereof ready made in his Ships and got it a shore with great resistance, but so many as would not yeeld vnto him, hee put to the Sword, and so many as would serue him he allowed meanes. Now the place where this Castle was to be erected, was about certaine Wels of fresh water the which was for the vse of Ormus, because vpon that Iland there was none. Now for the building of this Castle they pulled downe a fine Towne with Churches and Tombes, onely for the Stones, some of which he burned and made Lime, and with the other he made the Castle wall of a great height and thicknesse, with halfe Moones and Flankers very artificially, which in fise moneths and a halfe hee had finished: a thing wonderfull in so short a time to be effected, and with a great deepe drie Moat round about. He had erected on the Castle 12. Pieces of great Ordnance, to the great annoyance of the Persian Armie, which had almost beleaguered it round; onely a small passage which they had towards the Sea, on either side of it beset with Pallesadoes for the better going to their Boates and Frigots in safetie, though scarce able without great perill. Hee meant to take the whole Iland of Kishme in their owne hands, being a very fruitfull place, abounding with all manner of Fruits, Beasts, and fresh Water, whereof the Iland of Ormus hath none. The Portugals when they were first situated in Ormus, did agree with the King of the Sea-coast vpon the mayne, which was a Kingdome of it selfe, and since hath beene Conquered of the Persians to pay to the aforesaid King certaine tributes or customes vpon euery head of Cattell, pots of Water and such like, which did yeerely amount mount vnto a great summe of money, which the Portugals haue not payed a long time, at least this thirtie yeares: and hauing been demanded it, since the English hath had trade heere in Persia, they haue refused to pay the same. Moreouer they haue gotten into their possession great quantitie of Silke, which they haue refused to pay also. For that reason the Persians would not let the Portugals haue Cattell nor refreshing from the mayne, (for it was Death vnto them that sold them any) which was the reason of building the Castle vpon the Iland of Kishme. Now the Portugals policie thought it was good to haue two strings to his bow, as this was one; the other was this at Muskat, a certaine place which the Portugals haue vpon Arabia. They made a great Feast and inuited the King of Arabia vnto the feast, and violently brought him away vnto Ormuz, and there made him King of the Iland, and allowed him certaine Customes ycerely for his maintenance. By this meanes they had Cattell and Water sufficient in great quantities, brought thither in Arabian Boates, with Fruits, Fish and all other things, which was euery day sold in the Market (by report) very plentifully. Likewise the Arabian Boats did fetch them water from Kishme, and were conducted with their Gallies and Frigots against the Persians. The King of Arabia was Prisoner in the Castle of Ormuz, vnto the Persian. The Portugals in these parts will not let any Commodity passe to and againe vpon the Seas, vnlesse it be first brought vnto Ormuz, and there to be Customed vpon losse thereof being taken by their Gallies or Frigots, whereof they haue heere great store that carrie pieces of Ordnance and other Munition: they trade to and fro in them and so are become Masters of the Seas in these parts. The Customes of Ormuz did yearly amount as I haue heard reported to a hundred thousand pounds, besides Rents and other Duties which they taxed the Inhabitants with. This Towne or Citie of Ormuz, was of great bignesse, the Houses all built of stone, and seemed a most famous thing to looke vpon from the ships with Steeples and Towres: they had faire and large Churches in it, strong & stately Buildings; the Castle of Ormuz was the fairest, largest and strongest that euer I saw. Towards the Towne it had three Walls one within another, and well furnished with great Ordnance of Brasse, as Cannon, Demicannon, Cannon-Pedro, whole Culuerings and Basiliskes of 22. foot long.

Now concerning the third thing which was about the fishing for Pearle, he had but little leisure, by reason of these turmoiles (and Warres in building of the Castle of Kishme, and the building of a Wall and a Moat about Ormuz, which was begun in seuerall places) he had burnt vp all the Boates both of the Persians and Arabians, by the reason they should not fish for Pearle, and burnt all the fishing Townes. Now they that had any Boats were forced to carrie them vp into the Countrey to hide them from the Portugals; but when the Persians were to goe ouer for Ormuz, the Arabians did voluntary (both they & their Boats to the quantitie of 400. Boats) carrie the Persian souldiers ouer to Ormuz, against the Portugals, which otherwaies had neuer got ouer; for the Arabians could wish all the Portugals throats cut by the reason of their great hindrances in burning of their Boats and Townes, and Slauery which they daily did sustaine.

I will certifie you concerning the wonderfull and strange manner of the Richards taking a Portugall ship that came from Bumbasse; she was a rich Prize laden with Elephants teeth, Turtle shels in Barrells, with Wax, Sea-horse teeth, and a certaine Gumme, the which I make no doubt but you haue heard already; the chiefe cause of her taking was John Filps, who had them be of good cheare being but thirteene Men and Boyes, and told them he would dismount their Piece presently (which they were a discharging) the which he did. Plying the two Pieces, it was his fortune to kill the chiefe Merchant, who was going to encourage his men to Fight: which the Gunner perceiuing, trauerssed another Piece of Ordnance against them: hee was no sooner espied by this Filps, but he made a shot at the Piece but mist it; the shot flew betweene the Gunners legs as he was going to giue fire; hee forthwith threw away his Linstocke like a man distract and full of feare, and told them it was their fortunes to be taken. But the Richard plied still both her Pieces, and comming neerer vnto them, this Filps stept vpon the Forecastle bidding them amaine, which they presently did and lowed all her sayles. So they called vnto them to bring aboard their Master, Merchant, Pilot and Boatswaine; they puld vp their Boat and did it, when they came aboard they were bound and and put into hold. There were two Merchants in this Ship, the one killed, and the other was he which came aboard, who confessed that the Elephants teeth which were in her cost 6000. pounds, at the first Penny in Bumbasse, which to be carried from Goa to Cambaia, would yeeld at the least 18000. pounds, besides eight Barrells of Turtle shels, which were the Merchants that was slaine, and that hee had in that ship of his owne 3000. pounds more which was in Wax, Sea-horse teeth, Gumme and Negroes. They sent the Boatswaine for the rest of the Portugals who brought fourteene more, which euery of them brought their Skreeteries and Keyes and presented them to Mr. Danis, who carefully layd them vp. These 14. Portugals remained in the Boat; they thought them to be all the Portugals.

This Filps or Phillips went aboard with three Men and three Boyes. They had no sooner entered the Ship and veered the Boat a sterne with the Portugals, but the Ship seemed to be full of people: there were in all of the Portugals seuentie fiue, of the Negroes, Men, Women and Children ninetie, likewise fortie Chaul men which were their Mariners, which strucke such an amazement among them being but seuen, that it daunted them much. This Phillips bidding them be of good courage for hee would lessen their number presently: the which hee in two houres time effected, he placed his men vpon the poope and halfe decke, with their Peeces pruned, and their Matches cockt, if they should resist: that done, hee went with his Sword and disarmed all the Portugals, and caused their weapons to be layd on the poope, which were thirty Muskets ready laden and pruned, forty Rapiers besides Swords and Poniards, sixty Powder pots matched and pruned, forty Pikes and Launces, fiftene great Chambers belonging to eight peecees of Ordnance ready pruned. Then he found great store of Musket shot which he brought vp also, he tooke the Chambers and opened them, and tooke out of euery of them a good quantitie of Powder, and in the roome thereof he put in Musket shot, and ramed them vp againe. This done, he bound them fast to the decke round about him and pruned them, and causes three Linslockes to be lighted, and with his small Shot standing by him; which the Portugals seeing, it stricke such amazement among them, that it made them to tremble, not knowing what they did determine. Hee giuing order vnto his small Shot, that if any should resist him, they should let flie as they thought fit: he steps forth into the waile, and called the Boat-swaine vnto him, demanding of him how many of his Countrymen there were in the shippe? Who said there were forty; so hee promised them to stay, if so be they would bee willing, and to doe their best indeauours, that he would aduance their meanes, and their aduentures, rather then to diminish any part thereof: which words greatly reuiued them, and they all said, they were willing. Then presently hee called the Blacks, to haile vp the Boat, placing two of his men with their Muskets bent to the Boat, that none of the Portugals which were therein should enter the ship. Which done, he drew his Sword, and commanded all the Portugals vpon their liues to auoide the shippe immediatly; which they did, and happie was hee which could get into the Boat first; for some lept into the water for feare. Besides those which they tooke into the Boat to them, there were other three which hid themselves in the shippe that they knew not of, being almost starued and durst not come forth in fight for feare.

Frigats how furnished.

When we came to Kishme Castle, where out of each shippe was carried Ordnance to batter against the Castle with Powder and Shot fitting, where our Gunners and others went to trie their valorous skill, when they had beene two dayes on shoare at that exercise, Master Bassin being then aboard, promised he would goe ashore to make a shot or two: this Philips got leaue of our Captaine for the like; and seeing their worke of battering, who finding their plat-forme of the one side hollow, resting vpon a Basket within the reuerse of the Peece, which at firing caused the Peece to deliuer contrary, which when hee had perceiued, caused the plat-forme to be new cast; and the planks layd firme, he loaded the Peece himsele, and placed it to his best leuell towards a peece of Ordnance vvhich lay on the Castle vvall, vvhich the Portugall vvas euen ready to giue fire vnto, for they vvere at that time a leauelling, he fired his Peece so leauelled, vvhich dismounted their Peece, split the carriage, and killed sixe men, vvhich the Captaine of the Castle vvas one; vvhich the Persians seeing, gaue a great shout, and happy vvas he that could come to embrace him first, vvhich vvas a great credit to our Captaine, and our English Nation. He made but two shots, by reason there vvas no more Shot on shoare. Master Bassin went on shoare vwith his Geometricall Instruments, for the taking the height and distance of the Castle vvall, for the better leauelling of his Peece to make his shot: but as he vvas about the same, he receiued a small shot from the Castle into his belly, vvhich he gaue three leapes, by report, and died immediatly.

When Ormuz was besieged, and the Persians had taken the Towne with small resistance, for they fled into the Castle, and we had brought our ships on the other side of the Iland without shot of the Castle, all our English Boats, as Barges and Skiffes did ouer night goe and lie within Musket shot of the Castle with all the Arabian Boats, to keepe that no Frigats of the Portugals should either come in or out, either for the bringing in of Souldiers or reliefe, or the carrying away of their treasure. The Arabians one night being very darke, went in close vnder the wall of the Castle, and brought out two of the Portugals Frigats; whereof our Captaine gat one, and Captaine Blithe the other; and fitted as followeth, thee had one Sacar of Brasse, one great Brasse peece, which went with Chambers, and would carrie a Demi-culuering shot of stone, one other small Brasse peece, two Iron Bases, and two of the ships Murtherers, thirty Muskets, Powder and Shot munition fitting, with foure and thirty Englishmen, whereof five were Trumpetters and one Drumme, where our Captaine placed this Philips Commander, they had fifty Blacks to rowe and trimme their Sailes. Likewise the Londons Frigat was so fitted. The Frigats all the day rode at an anchor without shot of the Castle, but at night they set their watch with a vollie of small Shot, Drumme and Trumpets, which the Portugals might easily heare and see, and as it grew darker, they went neerer the Castle, and the Arabian Boats with them. The Portugals at the first made as if they would come forth with the ships, which was but a shew, for we waited the time, but yet they came not. They rode a pretie distance from the wal, but still vnder command of the Castle, thinking we would haue come in to them. Within three dayes they got close vnder the wall: then our Commander thought fit, that the first businesse busineſſe ſhe that was to bee done, was for the deſtroying of thoſe ſhips, for feare of any others comming to ſuccour them: wherefore it was promiſed to our men, that they that would goe in our Barges for the firing of them, ſhould be royally rewarded for their paines. So certaine of them agreed, and got things ready that night with their fire-workes in each Barge, they went and boarded Ruy Frera his ſhip, & ſet her on fire which in leſſe then a quarter of an houre was all in a light flame. But in the firing of her in our Barge vnfortunatly hauing a quantitie of Powder in me of the Lockers, one of the fire-workes being flung againſt the ſhip ſtrucke againſt ſome Iron, and rebounded backe againe, and ſtrucke into his body that flung it, and tore out his ſtomacke that hee died withall, ſet the Powder in the Locker on fire, and blew one man cleane away, burning fixe others very ſhrewdly. They attempted the firing of another ſhip, hauing fixe of the Countrey Boats chained together, with Tarre, Occam, Biller of wood, ſpits, and other trumperie in them for the fire-workes, ſo to driue them thwart their Halſer; they went alſo with their Barges to caſt fire-workes into her, and one they caſt, but it fell off, being eſpied by the Portugals. They ſhot a ſmall ſhot thorow both the knees of one of the men in the Whales Barge, which is come home here in our ſhip. The Boats which were chained together were ſet on fire, and the Tide droue them cleane beſides the ſhip.

Shee had Iron peeces in her hold, and a great deale of Shot. There was alſo a Galley ſunke vnder the wall which had three peeces of Ordnance. Ruy Frera his Vice-admirall that was when they fought with Captaine Shilling was broke vp in Ormuz, ſhee proued ſo leake after the fight, her timbers ſerued for the building of Kiſhne Caſtle, &c.

At a conſultation in Swally Road, the fourteenth of Nouember, 1621. comiſſion was giuen by Maſter Thomas Raſtell Preſident, and the Counſell of the Merchants of Surat, to Richard Blithe, and Iohn Weddell bound for Iaſques (a Persian Port) with fiue good ſhips and foure Pinnaces (whereof the London, and Pinnace Shilling vnder Captaine Blithe; the Jonas, Whale, Dolphin, Lion, with their Pinnaces the Rose, Roberts, and Richard, vnder command of Captaine Weddell) to ſet ſayle with the ſoonest opportunitie towards Port Iaſques, and to keepe together in ſuch ſort as they ſhould thinke fitteſt for their defence againſt the common enemy; and ſeing the Portugals had diſturbed their trade by the ſlaughter, mayming and imprifoning of their men, and had made ſundry assaults againſt their ſhipping, that therefore it ſhould be lawfull to them to chaſe and ſurprize whatſoeuer veſſels per- taining to the Ports, and Subiects vnder the Vice-roy of Goa, thereof to be accountable, &c. And if they met with any of Decannee, Dabul, Chaul, or any Port belonging to the Samorin of Calcut, to arreſt them vpon account of iuſt pretences for goods robbed and ſpoiled &c. without imbezelling any part thereof, that full reſtitution may be made after ſatisfaction on their parts rendered: A fixt part of goods gotten from the Portugall to be diſtributed, and their per- ſons to bee reſerued priſoners; that in exchange our Countrey men by them miſerably captiued may be deliuered: to haſte their lading and diſpatch at Iaſques, if poſſible within thirty dayes:

and seeing the reinforced Enemy Ruy Frera with his Armada of fixe Galliones and other small Vessels are attending on the Persian coast, in likelihood to assault their Fleet, that therefore it should be lawfull not defensuely alone, but offensively to await all advantages, even in their owne Ports if there be apparance of performance approued by generall counsell warrantably to be vndertaken, &c.

In Costack Road, the fixe and twentieth of December, 1621. A consultation was holden aboard the Ionas, whereat were present John Weddell, Richard Blithe, Edward Monox, William Baffin, and many others. The Can or Duke of Xiras had by his Ministers desired the aide of their Ships against the common Enemy the Portugall. The Articles being translated into the Persian Tongue were dispeeded by Xareeah Gouvernour of the Prouince of Mogustan towards the said Duke who was then vpon the way towards Mina; the summe whereof followeth.

For so much as by severall conferences had with diuers and sundry of the Chan or Duke of Xiras his Ministers and chiefe Commanders in the present warres, we haue well obserued they are fully determined and resolved to require the aide of our ships and people in this intended Expedition for the vanquishing not onely the Portugall Armada, but likewise for the taking and surprizing of the Iland and Castle of Ormuz: and we are very confident they will vse their indeauours to inforce vs vnto the said seruice by imbarging our goods vpon the shoare: which we haue well vnderstood by the Governours refusall to furnish vs with Camels to bring our goods from Mina to the Port; Edward Monox late Agent propounded, whether they might vndertake that seruice or no. The proposition being well debated, and the Factors commision from Surat warranting to right themselves of the great losses and hinderances sustained by the Portugall, interrupting their peaceable Trade both in India and Persia, (the last yeeres attempt of Ruy Frera against Captaine Shillings Fleet at Iasques, to the losse of that worthie Commander, and other his Maiesties Subiects, being yet fresh) and for so much as the Persian now seeketh our aide (and in manner foreteth it) it is good to thinke on such conditions as may be for the publike benefit, and not to omit this opportunitie of a peaceable and profitable trade, the same to be sent vnto the Chan in these Articles.

First, In case God shall be pleased to deliuer the Iland and Castle of Ormuz into the hands of the Persian by our aide, the moitie of the spoile and purchase of both to remaine to the English, the other moitie to the Persian. Secondly, The Castle of Ormuz to be deliuered to the possession of the English, with all the Ordnance, Armes and Munition thereto belonging, and the Persian to build another for themselves at their owne charges. Thirdly, The Customes to bee equally diuided, the English to bee for euer Custome-free. Fourthly, That all Christian Captiues should be at the English disposing, the Musselmans at the Persian. Fifthly, The Persian to bee at halfe the ships charge for victuall, wages, weare and teare, and to furnish them at his charge with sufficient Powder and Shot. Diuers other Articles were concluded to be presented to the Chan; After his comming to Mina, Master Bell, and Master Monox, the eight of Ianuarie were sent to him and entertained with a sumptuous banquet: a great feast and triumph was also made for the ioyfull newes of the Kings taking in of a great Countrie in Arabia, and of Aweiza the chiefe Citie of that Countrie.

The next day the Duke sent his Visier accompanied with Sabandar Sultan and Xareeah with answer to the former Articles: The first was approued: For the second, the Castle should be equally possessed by both till the Kings pleasure were knowne. The third granted, provided onely, that the Kings and Dukes goods from India should also passe custom-free. To the fourth, they made reseruatiion of the two principall Captaines Ruy Frera Captaine of Kishm Castle, and Simon de Mela Captaine of the Castle of Ormuz, till the Kings pleasure knowne. Other Articles agreed on, and ordered also that no change of Religion should be admitted on either side; and charges of Powder and Shot to be diuided: The Duke and Master Bell signed, and presently the English goods were laden on the Dukes owne Camels on fire cost, which before no money could procure.

On the tenth we turned to Costack. We got aboard and acquainted the Commanders with the successe of our Iourney, which being diuulged and made known amongst the severall ships Companies, it seemes they consulted together with one voice to refuse the businesse; the Londons companie beginning, fifty or sixty appearing therein, Captaine Blithe taking much paines to suppress their disorder, and in the end preuayling with them, they promising to goe whither he would. The other ships in a day or two were in like opposition, alleaging it was no merchandizing businesse, nor were they hired for any such exploit, nor could hee tell whether it might not be a breach of the peace (said a fauourer of that Religion) till protests being made against each ships companie, what with feare to lose their wages, and promise of a moneths pay, they at last yeilded.

The nineteenth of Ianuarie we set sayle toward Ormuz, where we arriued the two and twentieth, and that night anchored in sight of the Towne, about two leagues from the Castle, in expectation that the Enemies Armada, consisting of fixe Gallions and some fiftene or twenty Frigats, would haue come forth to fight with vs. But they hailed so neere the Castle that wee could could not come at them. Which we perceiuing, and vnderstanding that our vowed Enemie Ruy Frera was in his new erected Castle of Kishme, the next day wee addressed our selues towards the said Castle, where we arriued in fit time to saue both the liues and reputations of the Portugals, not able long to hold out against the Persian siege, and willing rather to yeeld to vs. The first of February they yeelded both their persons and Castle after many meetings and treaties into our possession. The fourth, we set sayle towards Gombrone, where we were royally feasted by the Duke, who was discontent that Ruy Frera was not deliuered to him, nor some of the Moores, contrarie to my liking, especially for the Moores: the Duke dissembling his discontent, in regard of further need of our helpe at Ormuz, and after his feast vesting all the English present according to their qualitie.

Kishme Castle yeelded.

Gombrone.

10 The ninth of Februarie we set sayle towards Ormuz with about two hundred Persian Boats great and small with two Frigats in our companie, and in them five and twenty hundred or three thousand Persian Souldiers of all sorts, and anchored that night about two leagues from the Castle. The next day before noone the Persians were all landed, and marched in a confused manner towards the Citie, which they entred as farre as the Mydan or Market place without meeting resistance. Which Market place they found barricadoed against them, and defended with Shot and Pike of the Portugals. But the Persians soone made way, and the Portugals like so many sheepe tooke their heeles into their Castle. One Persian onely which first entred was slaine with a Pike, and he which slue him lost his head in the Market place, his heeles being too heavy to carrie it away. Some eight or ten more, found scattered in seuerall houses of the Ormuz besieged.

The Citie forsaken.

20 Citie, were in the same places executed. The Persian Generall named Einam culibeg at his first entrance into the Citie placed his Captaines and Souldiers in seuerall places of the Citie, and proclaimed vpon paine of death euery man to looke to his quarter, and none to fall on pillaging. Which some infringing were severely executed: he hanged some, cut off eares and noses of others, and others he bastonadoed euen for trifles. Yet within two or three dayes after shops and houses were broken open, and euery man wearied with carrying and recarrying spoiles all day, and sleeping so securely at night, that easily the Portugals in a sallie might haue slaine many. The same night we entred, I tooke possession of a very commodious house to settle a factorie there, which for conuenience of roomes I think exceeds any Factorie the Companie hath. But on the thirteenth it proued too 30 hot for me, being set on fire in the night by one of the Masters mates of the Whale with other his Consorts after I was in bed, carelessly with Candles romaging for pillage, and firing a roomie in which were goods giuen me by the Generall. But the winde fauoured vs, so that the house was not consumed. When I consider the strength of the Citie, and almost of euery house, being a little Castle, I cannot but maruell that the Portugall would so soone abandon the same. But it seemes they feared the Persian would haue intercepted their way to the Castle, or that the Moores their neighbours would haue betrayed them.

Strength of Ormuz.

The foure and twentieth of February our men by a stratagem of fire burned the Saint Pedro, quondam Admirall of Ruy Freras Fleet, which indangered all the rest, but the Tide carried her off to Sea; and her Reliques by the Arabs and other Countrie Boats were towed on shoare at Port. Admirall burned.

40 Gombrone, and some Iron Ordnance and Shot taken out of her burnt Carkasse. At this exploit the Duke much reioyced. The seuenteenth of March the Persians hauing placed aboue forty barels of Powder in a Mine which they had made vnder one of the Flankers of the Castle, fired the same, and blew vp the corner of the wall making a faire breach, where they gaue a fierce assault till nine at night. But the Portugals made a manfull defence, and with Powder pots, scalding Lead, and other fiery instruments did much hurt to the assailants, burning, scalding, stoning many. Sba Culibeg notwithstanding, with two hundred of his most resolute men get vp into one of the Flankers, which they maintayned at least three houres, but in the end were fired out, the Portugals bestowing Powder pots as liberally as if they had come from Hell mouth. The same day the Citie was set on fire in diuers places, as it was reported, by the

50 nerals command, for that the Arabs lurked therein, and could not be gotten forth to doe any seruice. Wee lay here foure or five thousand men in a barren land which yeelds nothing but Salt of it selfe, and I knowe not what policy the Generall had to send away all the Rice, and our prouision for victuall and water wholly to depend on the Continent, so that if a Fleet of Frigats had come, as was expected, they must haue famished in the land; the Countrie Boats not daring to aduenture to and from the Maine. The raine water in Cisternes abroad daily wasted and waxed barkish, no care being taken to fill therewith the Iarres and Cisternes whiles it is good, provided almost in euery house for that purpose. The Persians are ignorant of the art of warre, for they entred without feare or wit and lost with shame what they might haue maintayned with honour. Other defects I obserued in the very sinewes of warre, such that I cannot

They had not one scaling Ladder to helpe their entrance. Sould wee forsake them, they would soone be at a stand, and yet they haue broken Conditions with vs in seuerall things: and yet I feare when all is done, wee shall bee serued with reuerfions and what themselves please.

Portugals ships sunke.

Till the three and twentieth, our Ordnance from the shore so galled the Vice-admirall and Reere-admirall of Ruy Freras Fleet, that they and the Galley are all three sunke close vnder the Castle wall; and the last night the Admirall that came last from Goa, yeelded her broad side to the mercy of the water, hauing learned the same of her Consort who the night before shewed her the way, and so all the Portugall Armado are come to ruine: These two last Ships I thinke were voluntarily lost by the Captaines policy, to leaue the Portugals without meanes to escape the more manfully to fight it out. Some thinke they sunke by hurts receiued from sunken Rockes in haling them so neere to the Castle to be out of danger from our Ordnance; and others, by leakes from our Shot: how euer we saw the destruction of them that were designed instruments for ours; for which great mercy of the most High towards vs most sinfull men, his holy Name be euer praised and magnified.

Portugall Trea-
tie.

March the seuen and twentieth, newes was brought me that some of the Portugals were come out of the Castle to treat of Peace, whereupon I made my repaire vnto the Generalls Tent to vnderstand the truth of the businesse where I found our two Commanders sitting, by whose countenance I well perceiued that my comming was not very welcome vnto them. But to requite them before our departure, both they and I perceiued that neither of our being there was acceptable to the Persian. Yet there we sate almost an houre in expectation of the Portugals comming, which was purposely deferred in hope we would haue auoyded, but Night approaching, and the Persian perceiuing we purposed to stay the Messengers comming, at length he was brought in. Who entring rudely without any great complement, deliuered as extravagant a Speech or Message, yet with a kind of forced voyce as though he had been the prologue to some Play. The effect of his Speech was this: His Captaine had sent him to kisse the hands of the Generall, and to know how he did, (this was his Complement) and for what cause hee moued this Warre against him, for the Portugals were the Persians friends, and so had beene for many yeeres, and now for so small a matter, onely for a Well or two of Water that so great Warre should bee made, and the ancient League and friendship which had beene betwixt their King and the King of Persia, and the people of both Nations should bee extinguished. Besides, his Captaine nor the Inhabitants of Ormuz, was not to bee blamed for what Ruy Frera had acted at Kishme, yet were they willing so farre as might stand with the Honour of their King to purchase their Peace: which they need not doe either through feare or want, for they had within their Castle one thousand able men, and provisions both of Victuals and Water to serue them for many moneths. Besides, they expected daily new succours from Goa. And if the Persian did thinke to get the Castle by force, hee would find it a hard matter to accomplish: for they were resolved to Fight it out to the last man.

The later part of which speech being onely Portugall brauadoes, was not pleasing to the Persian. Wherefore the Generall willed him to declare the cause of his comming, to which hee answered, his Captaines desire was to know what the Persian would haue. To which the Persian replied he would haue their Castle, and that was it he came for. With which speech the Messenger was dismissed (without so much as being offered a cup of wine, had not I caused one to bee giuen him) but notwithstanding, what is here related, I cannot be perswaded but he came with a more substantial message then he deliuered, which he omitted by reason of our being there, whereunto he was formerly instructed by Sha Cullibeg, in whose house hee was at least an houre before he was brought to the Generall. Wherefore I feare some sinister dealing of the Persian, which in five dayes will bee discovered: the Portugall dismissed. Our Captaines by their Interpreters moued priuately their priuate businesse to the Generall, to which he gaue no great eare, but in conclusion his answer was, they would deferre that businesse till some other time: yet himselfe had written to them in great haste, that day to furnish him from the ships with a quantitie of powder, that night to attempt the blowing vp of the Castle: for their mines were all readie, and they wanted nothing but powder. Which request of his, our Captaines were so forward to consent vnto, that presently they brought on shoare foure and thirtie barrells of powder, for which their forwardnesse I feare the companie at home will giue them but little thanks.

Another trea-
tie.

The eight and twentieth dito. I went in companie of the Commanders to the Generalls Tent for that wee vnderstood two chiefe men of the Portugals were in Sha Cullibeg his house, where they had beene in conference with the Persian foure or fve houres; vnto which treatie none of vs were called, nor by any meanes made acquainted with it, which encreased our suspition of the Persians fraudulent dealing with vs. Wherefore comming vnto the Generall, wee made knowne our dislike of the manner of proceeding, for wee were partakers in this warre with you, wherein wee had hazarded our liues, ships, and Merchants goods: besides the hinderance wee sustaine by the the losse of our Monson : and as wee were partakers and associates with them in the vnderenterprise, wee ought likewise to be of Counsell with them in all treaties and proceedings, and therefore desired to know what they had done, or what they entented to doe, to which he answered they had done nothing, neither would he so much as drinke a cup of water without acquainting vs therewith; which was a prettie complement where all his actions shewed nothing lesse.

 But we must bee content to vndergoe all with patience, yet were it not for our Merchants and their goods that are in the countrie, and subiect to whatsoeuer they will impose vpon them, wee could remedie this businesse well enough, and bring the Persian nolens volens vnto another recko-10 ning: but we are tied from that, and therefore must of necessitie be subiect to accept the measure they please to lay vpon vs, which I feare will proue ynnecesary ill: yet they tell vs all things shall be to our owne content, but howsoeuer, it is vied and must now be seene. About noone this present day, seeing many pike and shot, all Arabs in the street, which formerly I haue not seene so armed, desiring to know the cause, at length I perceiued they were ranged on both sides the street, called the Mydan or Market place, where shortly after passed two Cavaliers of the Portu-gals, attended with their Pages and Seruants, to the number of sixe or eight, whereof one carried a faire Quintasol over the two Cavaliers, who were accompanied by Sha Cullabeg and other chiefe men of the Persians, and conducted to the house of Agariza of Dabul: whither though vn-for, or vninuited, I also addrested my selfe, where vnexpected, I found the Persian Generall ac-20 companied with other chiefe men, his Assistants and Counsell, into whose presence I entred my selfe. The Generall gaue mee a kind welcome, and caused mee to sit downe next vnto him, which I would not refuse, for that the Portugall should see our Nation was in grace and fauour with them, where being set, hauing done my dutie to the Persians first, I after saluted the Cavaliers which was required with like complement; with whom I had some discourse of matters nothing pertaining to the present occasion, for that I would not presume to talke of that, till the Persian himselfe did first minister the occasion: which was not before wee had eaten a Persian collation of Pilaw, &c. Which being done, the Generall demanded the Portugals what was their request or desire, to which they answered, the Captaine of the Castle had giuen them instructions in writing but his desire was they should propound the same vnto the Duke himselfe, if they might bee per-30 mitted to goe vnto him, who is now at Gombrone. To which the Generall replied, it was more then he durst doe without first acquainting the Duke therewith, by which I well perceiued they were onely delayes and distractions on both sides, and to gaine time for effecting their seuerall designes. Then the Portugals proceeded to their vsuall complayning against Ruy Frera, as if Ruy Frera as a priuate man and without order from the King his master had presumed to doe that which he had done, and to excuse themselues, demanded what reason or iustice it was to punish the Father for the Childrens offence: besides the matter in it selfe was small, onely for a Well of water or two, to which the Persian Generall replied againe, let the cause be what it would, they had moued warre against the King of Persia and his Subiects, for which their Castle of Ormuz must make satisfaction: wherefore if without more bloudshed they would surrender their Castle and come forth into the Citie, they should finde good quarter and bee well vsed; to which the 40 Portugals made answer, they had no Commission from their Captaine to treat of any such matter, with which they were dismissed. Notwithstanding the deniall was made to the Portugals request for going to the Chan, yet the same night they had License and were sent vnto him to treat their businesse with his Excellencie. The certaintie of the Treatie I had no meanes to know, yet what I heard reported shall be here inserted. First, their demand was that the Duke would vouchsafe to withdraw his Siege from their Castle and suffer them to enioy the same as in former times, in consideration whereof they would giue him two hundred thousand Tomans in hand, and also the rent annually they had in former times giuen to the King of Ormuz out of the reuenue of the Custome house; which as hath bene reported vnto mee is but one hundred and fortie thousand Rials of eight per annum, but some report, they offer the Chan besides the two hundred thousand 50 Tomans in hand, as much yeerely; and his demand was five hundred thousand Tomans in hand (which amounteth to 172413. pounds ten shillings seuen pence sterling, or thereabouts) the yeerely rent of two hundred thousand Tomans.

The second of Aprill, the Persian with the ayde of the English did blow vp two other Mines, with which was made a very faire and passable breach, wherein they might haue entred without any great difficultie: but there was no assault giuen thereunto at all. The passage of this businesse being well obserued, Captaine Weddell and my selfe made our repaire to the Persian Generall, to vnderstand his purpose and resolution; who to excuse the backwardnesse of his people in not assaulting the Breach, told vs it was very difficult and not to bee entred; of which we were contented to giue him the hearing, howbeit we were offered the contrarie, for that 60 an English youth who is seruant to the Master of the Jonas, more bold then any Persian, went vp the breach to the very top of the Castle wall: who told vs the way was as easie as to goe vp a paire of stayres, and spacious enough for many men to goe vp a brest. Wherefore wee demanded to know his resolution for further proceeding: who told vs within three dayes he would be fitted for another Mine, and I beleue it well; for his mining is for Gold, not to make breches

New breach

Bold Boy,

ches vnlesse it bee breach of promises vnto vs, which he can doe daily ; for of late they performe with vs in iust nothing, yet all this cannot warne vs to be circumspect to looke vnto our selues.

The greatest hurt the Portugall did vnto the Persian in assaulting the Castle was with Powderpots, wherewith many were scalded and burnt: for preuention whereof, the Chan hath now sent ouer store of Coates and Iackets made of Leather, which indeed are nothing so subiect to take fire as are their Callico Coats bumbasted with Cotton wooll. But as the English prouerbe is, The burnt Child dreads the fire, for notwithstanding their Leather coates, there was none so hardie to attempt the breach that is now made (albeit much more easier to enter then the last was) further then to pillage certaine balls of Bastas and other stufes which were fallen downe from the Baricado, the Portugals made for their defence against the Persians shot: in this aduenture one lost both his armes taken away with a great shot, by which meanes hee was faine to come backe againe without any Bastas or other Pillage.

The fifth of Aprill, newes was brought to the Generall of 100500. manes powder then arrived from Babrine. The twelfth ditto came a Portugall vnto the Persian Generall who escaped out of the Castle, and declared the great wants and weake estates the Souldiers were in generall, insomuch that daily did die six, seuen or eight of the Flux, which is chiefly occasioned through drinking their corrupt water. For the small quantitie of water which they haue in their Cesternes, is growne so brackish and salt, that it infects them all with the Flux, and besides the badnesse of it they are put to such strait allowance that many die with thirst. Besides for victuall, they haue onely Rice and salt Fish, two very good preparatiues to a Cup of good drinke if they had it. Notwithstanding all which the Persian deferres, yea I may say wasteth time in making new Mines, whereof hee hath no lesse then three in hand at this present, as if he would blow vp all the Castle wall round about before hee will make his entrie. The twelfth at night one of our Frigots namely the Londons, being appointed to her quarter for keeping in of the Portugall Frigots, that none of them should make escape riding single and alone by her selfe, the Portugals perceiuing it, sent off two of her Frigots which clapped her aboard but found her too hot for their handling, and therefore forsooke her; with what hurt to themselves I know not, but of the Londons men were slaine two outright, and seuen more hurt and wounded. And had not their blackes that rowed the Frigot forsaken them, they would haue put hard to haue surprised the surprisers.

Persian perfidie

The fourteenth Ditto, the Persian sprung another of his Mines wherewith a very enterable breach was made but no assault giuen, nor yet shew of entrie made: but the troth is, hee was forced to blow vp the Mine before his time. For the Portugall from within the Castle was come so neere vnto him, that hee was in doubt he would haue defeated the same before he could place his powder. The fifteene Ditto, came another fugitiue from the Castle who confirmed the report of the others who came from thence in like manner before, and with all how the two Frigots which fought with our single Frigot aboue mentioned, came from Muscate wherein was the deceased Don Francisco de Sosa, late Captaine of the Castle his sonne, who came purposely to fetch away his Mother and other women that are in the Castle. Those Moores in the Castle of Kishme who yeelded themselves into our hands vpon the instant request of the Generall, were (partly with their owne consent) deliuered vnto him, whom hee promised should haue pardon for the errour they had fallen into, to serue the Portugals against their owne King and Countrey, and that they should also be provided for and haue employment in the then intended expedition for Ormuz. Which promise of his both to them and vs in their behalves, hee seemed to ratifie by vsing some of the principals in our presence and gracing them by other seeming curtesies: notwithstanding all which, the next morning hee cut off eightie of their Heads, and those which he had made so fine in new Vests to the number of fise or sixe of the principall, he sent them ouer to Coombrone to the Duke, by him to receiue their fatall Sentence. Which was not long deferred, but they were made to drinke of the same Cup their fellowes had formerly drunken of. Meer Senadine who was the chiefe Captaine of them, was executed by the hands of Sherie Allie Governour of Mogustan, who had married his Daughter, which hee performed vpon his Father in law with as much willingnesse as if he had beene his mortall Enemie.

Second assault.

The seuenteenth Ditto, they sprung another Mine adioyning to the first Mine was sprung, wherein was placed about fixtie Barrels of Powder, which tooke not the effect which was expected, for it flew out at the side and carried part of the Wall out with it, but stricke nothing at all vp vpward, whereby the first breach was very little bettered, which was the thing the Persian aymed at, yet was it sufficient to giue him encouragement to make his second assault, which was done with at least two thousand Souldiers, who very resolutely ranne vp the breach into a part of a Bulwarke which they might wholly haue possessed that very instant, had they not at first made such haste to runne their resolution out of breath; insomuch that onely eight or ten Portugals and a few Negros, made them onely with their Rapiers to giue ground and to retire themselves vnto the very outward skirt of the Bulwarke, where they had not roome for fortie men men to stand in the face of their Enemie, yet there they barracadod themselves. Which before they could effect to their purpose, the Portugall plyed two or three Pieces of Ordnance from one of his Flankers that lay open vnto them, in such sort, that they sent some scores of them to carrie newes vnto their Prophet Mortus Ali, that more of his Disciples would shortly be with him. Which accordingly was effected and proceeded chiefly out of their owne ignorance and dastardly Cowardise; for had they not made their stand in that place, but entred pell-mell with the Portugals into the Castle, with the losse of halfe those men they lost that day, they might haue gayned the Victorie, and with much lesse paine vnto themselves, who from that 10 time the Mine was blowne vp (which was about nine of the clocke before Noone) the whole day stood flocking together in the Sunne without either meate or drinke, which was sufficient to haue killed halfe of them; notwithstanding the Portugals made very slender resistance. The most that was done was by the Negroes, whom the Portugals did beat forwards to throw powder Pots, with which many of the Persians were pittifully scalded and burnt. Had I not seene it, I should hardly haue beleueed that such had bene the grosse ignorance of the Persian, that hauing two breaches, the one not much inferiour to the other for his entrance, that he would apply all his Souldiers to the assault of the one and none at all to the other. Besides hauing provided at least eightie or a hundred scaling Ladders, neuer so much as brought one of them neere vnto the Castle walls. But such as their proceedings are, such is also like to be their suc-

20 cesse. For his Souldiers hang in a cluster vpon the breach iust as a swarme of Bees vpon a tree or bush that want a Hiue; or like a flocke of Sheepe at a gappe, where none is so hardie to enter, and the Portugals to put them out of that paine gleaneth away foure, fve, sixe, sometimes more at a shot; insomuch that I cannot but pittie them to see it.

The eighteenth Ditto, the Persian continued his assault but with more paines to himselfe then hurt vnto the Portugals. The last night two Captiue Negroes made signes vnto the Persian that they were desirous to come vnto them, so the Persians let downe ropes vnto them and so plucked them vp vnto them, who declared that the Captaine of the Castle had gotten a hurt on his head with a Stone, and how there were not about a hundred Souldiers in the Castle able to manage their Armes, their water growne scant and daily worse and worse, which also increa-30 sed mortalitie amongst them: how there is likewise difference among themselves, being of different opinions, some holding it best to aduenture their escape by Sea with those Frigots they haue, others are contrary minded, and hold it more honour to sell their liues at the dearest rate and defend their Castle so long as they may, and when they can no longer, then to put their Women and Children with all their treasure into a house, and blow them all vp with Gunpowder (that the Turkes should neither inioy their wealth nor abuse their Wiues) which done, they would thrust themselves pell-mell with the Persians, and so end their dayes.

Portugals
poore estate.

Desperate Counsels.

The nineteenth Ditto, at Euenbeing the third day the Persian that had lien resting himselfe in the breach, neuer offering to aduance himselfe, did then set forward, whereby he got himselfe better footing and possessed himselfe of all the Bulwarke, and forced the Portugall to forsake the same and retire himselfe further within the Castle: in which conflict many of the Portugals
40 were wounded and scalded with fire Pots, wherein the Persian is now as cunning as themselves, though many of them haue payed deare for their learning. In the said conflict were likewise foure Portugals slaine and their heads brought before the Generall to witnesse the same. Where- in all the Persians are very well seene; for I doe not thinke there is any Hangman in all Germa- nie that can goe beyond them in that Art; for he no sooner layeth hold on his enemie, but presently at one blow with his Sword, off goeth his head, and then with his Knife he thrusts a hole either in the Eare or through one of the Cheekes, and so thrusting his finger in at the mouth and out at the hole in the cheek, brings sometimes two, three, or foure of them before the Ge-50 nerall together, in such sort that not a Butcher in East-cheape could doe it better. But if (as commonly it happeneth) that these Heads of their Enemies so taken in the warres be sent to the view of the King or Chan, then are they no lesse cunning to flea off the skinne of the whole head and face and stuffe the same with Straw like a football, and so send them by whole sackfuls together. This night one of the Frigots that came from Muscat for the Donna Sosa, made her escape and got away, no doubt very richly freighted. Her consort was chased in againe, which was likewise going: that which escaped, being haled by the Arab Boates, that lay in wayte to intercept their going, vsed the Watchword vsuall betwixt the English and Arabs, which was onely Ingres Ingresses; which Watchword hath neuer bene changed nor once altered since our first attempting the businesse. Wherin both Persians & English are much to be blamed; for by the common vse of that one Watchword, the Portugals haue come to the knowledge of it, and haue made good vse of it to their owne benefites, which is their gayne and 60 our losse.

Frigot escapeth.

The twentieth Ditto at night, the other Frigot aboue mentioned offering to escape, was taken by the Londons men in her Frigot and Pinnace. She was sent to carry away the Almirante named Luis de Britto, a kinsman of the Viceroy of Goa, whom the Captaine of the Castle would not suffer to depart: wherefore the Portugals which were taken in her, being fearefull of the success of the Castle, and that it was not able long to hold out, for safetie of their owne lines being seuen persons, held it their best course to aduenture their escape in the said Frigor, and in the night stole her away, and were taken as aboue mentioned. The one and twentieth Ditto, the Persian made preparation and shew, as if at once they would make short worke to possesse themselves of the rest of the Castle; but where we expected to see them put the same in execution, I perceiued that they and the Portugals were in parley together, wherefore I addressed my selfe to know the cause of so sodaine an alteration; and as I was fitting my selfe to goe vnto the Persian Generall for that purpose, I incountred a Messenger from our English Commanders who sent me word, that a Boat from the Castle was gone with a Flag of truce aboard their Ships, and they desired my company aboard with them to vnderstand what the businesse was; and coming aboard the London, found two Portugals with Letters from the Captaine of the Castle and from the Almirante, contayning, viz.

T Here hath bene such antient friendship betwixt the Portugals and the English, that considering the Warres which at this present wee haue in this place, wee ought one to vnderstand the other, for it seemeth to me when I see the Mines are made by the Moores, that onely by your ayde Warre is made against me, with which one of my Bulwarkes is gotten from me; wherefore your Worships would bee pleased to doe me the fauour to bee a meane to make Peace betwixt me and those Moores, if the same shall stand with their and your good liking, provided it bee in that manner, that I lose not my credit, neither your selues leaue to gaine Honour in a Time so fauourable vnto you; Thus not else our Lord keepe you, &c.

Symon de Mela Perera.

T His Fort is so beset and oppressed, that the Moores require vs to deliuer the same up on Composition, the which wee will not doe by any meanes, for when wee shall bee forced to make Composition wee will call your Worships: for it is not reason we should treat with Moores where you are present. For wee hold it better to deliuer our innocent Women and other vnnecessarie people, to the rigour of our Weapons, then to the clemencie of the Moores, and for that the knowledge hereof should not bee wanting to your Worships, I haue written this besides what accompanieth the same from the Captaine, and for what else you desire to know, you may informe your selues from this Messenger, to whom you may giue the same credit as vnto my owne person, and so God keepe your Worships, &c. The first of May 1622.

De V.S. Luis de Brito Daretto.

English Clemencie to the Portugals.

The request of the Portugals contayned in their seuerall Letters on the other side, being had to consideration and commiseration had of them as Christians, it was resolued to giue them a comfortable answer vnto their demands; which in effect was as followeth, but want of time the businesse requiring expedition, would not permit to keepe Copie of the said answers which was first vnto the Captaine Simon de Melles, to giue him notice of the receipt of his Letter, and whereas the chiefe point therein was, that we would bee Terceras for them to procure them such conditions of agreement with the Persians, as that might be to the sauing of the liues of so many Christian soules as were with him in the Castle; our answer was, that such had bene our care to provide for them, that it was in our owne power to grant that request, which we were not onely ready to doe, but likewise to shew them any other curtesie, or performe any Christian dutie towards them that might any way tend to their good. Therefore aduised him to set downe his Demands, and send the same vnto vs with as much breuitie as was possible, and to the like purpose and effect was our answer vnto the Almirant his letter, with which the two Messengers were dispeeded in one of our owne Barges, who returned with another Letter both from the Captaine and Almirant, that viz. The necessitie of the businesse so requiring the Commanders and my selfe, would not lose so much time to write any other answer vnto the said Letters, least the Persian should take aduantage of the opportunitie, and sodainly presse in vpon them and put them all to the Sword: wherefore we addressed our selues vnto the Persian Generall, to be suiters vnto him in the distressed Christians behalfe, that hee would hold his promise with them of a faithfull Truce for two dayes, in which time wee might treat with them of such Conditions as should bee as well behouefull and beneficiall for the Persian as for our selues, and that there might be no more effusion of blood on either side. At length my selfe and a Persian Gentleman with me, was appointed to goe with the Portugals to the Castle, and to treat the businesse with the Captaine of the Castle, &c. And also they desired that our Vice-admirall (Master Woodcocke) might come along with vs. So with consent of the Generall we went all three of vs to the Castle gate, but were not admitted to goe in. Where wee met with Signior Luis de Brito the Almirant of the Portugals, accompanied with five or sixe Cavaliores but did not see the Captaine, for the truth is, the vnder Captaines and Souldiers had mutined against him and detayned him as Prisoner, so that all our Conference was onely with the Almirante, and his speech chiefly addressed vnto Master Woodcocke our Almirant or Vice-admirall.

Mutinie in the Castle.

Men

Meer Abel Hassan, and Pulot Beg were after sent to the Ship (where some had imbezled some treasure) to request their company & conference from the Chan. Comming on shoare to the English house, they began with a long speech, how kindly the Duke did take the seuerall seruices and helpes we had giuen them in this their warre, and how the same in his part should neither be forgotten, nor goe vnrewarded in a larger measure, then either he had promised, or was bound vnto. The next was to make knowne the Chans resolution to proceede both to the inuasion of Sware and Muscat, and therefore that they should not suffer the Portugals to depart vnto any of those places. The third and last part of his speech was most base and very dishonourable, tending to this purpose, that we should betray into their hands, after they were vnder our protection, the 10 Captaine, and five or sixe more of the principall of the Portugals, alleadging that it would be much to the Chans honour to haue them to present vnto the Sba Abbas; which vilde dishonorable motion; when I heard, I absented my selfe, hating my eares for being guilty of the hearing of the same; and much more the tongue that could vtter so odious a businesse; and for my farwell, told them, I would not be guiltie of such a thing for the house full of Gold.

Persidy and honesty.

The 23. Ditto, the Portugals (whose meere necessity and pittifull estate wherein they were; had forced them to surrender their Castle vpon any conditions, whereby they might haue any hope at all to saue their liues, which stood then in great hazard to be spoiled by the Persians) sent this morning to giue notice vnto vs, they were contented to put themselves into our hands, on condition that we should giue them means to be transported either for Muscat or India, which Portugals in Ormuz yeeld to the English.

20 was promised them and Captaine Blith with my selfe went as hostages into the Castle, to see the setting of them out, and the Persian promised that not one Souldier, or man of his, should enter the Castle till they were dispended and sent away, and how that onely three of them and three of vs, or our people should sit at the gate to see that they should carry nothing of valew with them: which on their parts was so neerely seene into, that most basely they searched and abused the very women. But the King of Ormuz together with his rich Vezier, their Treasure, women and seruants were all conueied ouer the wals or breach, and not an English man either called or suffered to see what they carried out with them: and not onely these, but all other Persians partialitie.

30 Moores and Banyans with their Treasure and best things, conueied forth the same way: yea, whole bales of goods, Chests, and Suppetas, with God knoweth what in them, carried ouer the breaches. And no sooner were the Gates open to passe out the Portugals, but there was at least fortie Persians here and there in the Castle, yea and some of the ruder sort of the English also, whose comming in I may iustly feare was cause the Persians came in with them, iudging themselves as worthy of that liberty as our people.

Rascall-rudenesse.

The 24. Ditto before noone, the Persians and English began to pillage in such sort that I was both grieved and ashamed to see it; but could deuise no remedie at all for it: the Persians driving out the sicke, maimed, and burnt Christians that were not able to helpe themselves, that made Pittifull pillaging.

40 my very heart to earne in my body to see it; and in the euening, the Chan in person came as it were in triumphing manner to see the Castle, and to view the great Ordnance, whereof there are neere vpon three hundred peeces of Brasse, the most of them Cannon, Demicanon, Culuarin and Demiculuarin, part whereof were Ordnance belonging to the Gallions, the rest belonging vnto the Castle; which purchase if wee can possesse, will be the greatest matter will fall to our share. This euening the Commanders and my selfe desiring to remaine in possession of the Good Ordnance in the Castle.

Church, whither wee had conueied some quantitie of Plate and money, for the better and safer keeping thereof from being imbezelled, our motion was vtterly denied by Pulot Beg, who told the Commanders in plaine tearmes, they might lye without the doores: whereat they grew in choler (as they had iust cause) and so we came all three of vs out of the Castle together: the Captaines went aboard their shippes, and my selfe to the Citie; but the Sea being vp, and want of a Boate staid me at the Castle wals till it was neere midnight: at which time came no lesse then sixtie Persians by their owne report, sent by the Chan to watch that no Arabs should come and conuey away any of the Ordnance that lieth vpon the Sea strand; but I feare if the

50 truth were knowne, their comming was to cut the poore Christians throats, that lay at the Sea side for want of Boates to carrie them away, if they had not found them to be guarded by the English; or else to see that wee should not conuey away any of the Ordnance aforesaid: our chiefe businesse this day was to see the poore Christians dispeeded out of the Castle, the greatest number of them so weakened with seuerall sorts of maladies, but chiefly with famine, and many so noysome both to themselves and others with their putrified wounds and scaldings with Gunpowder, and so pittifull were their seuerall complaints and cries, that it would haue moued a heart of stone to pittie them; yet such was the dogged nature of the Persians, that they droue them and hunted them out of the Castle like so many dogges, pillaging many of them to the very Persian inhumanity.

60 shirts. The 27. ditto at Euen, we licensed the Portugall to depart to the number of 2500. men, women, and children, to whom we gaue a passe to free them from molestation, in case they met with any of our ships at Sea; also our two priues the Robert and Shilling to passe them in, with victuals and water necessary to the voyage; and besides these, wee sent away vpwards a hundred persons maimed and sicke, that could not be dispeeded for want of shipping.

2600 persons sent away by the English.

The King of Ormus was poore, and liued chiefly vpon his 140000. exhibition from the King of Spaine, and some helpes from the Custome-house in reseruatiō of some pettie Customes. In romaging there amongst his Papers was found this Letter written by him to the King of Spaine; the translated Copie whereof I here present.

An excuse framed in behalfe of the Captain. You haue the story sup. l. 5. The storme was within their fearefull hearts.

Ormuz, an Iland of Salt without water.

All Captaines.

Kissme, or Quixome.

THe Letters which for three yeeres last past I haue written vnto your Maiestie, both by Sea and Land are as yet unanswered, which I daily expect; for the same doth much import this Kingdome of Ormus and seruice of your Maiestie, vnder whose protection I haue life and meanes thereof. In Iune last, 1620, arrived at this Fort the foure Galleons, of which is Captaine Generall Roy fiere Dandrada, who fitted himselfe with all things necessarye to goe and attend the comming of the English Ships at Iasques, which accordingly he did, of whose successe therein I shall not need to treat in particular, which is done by himselfe by this Post, who is sent at my charge and his; yet thus much I will say, this Gentleman laboured all that was possible to keepe the English from carrying away their silke, wherein hee performed the uttermost of his dutie, like a resolute and valiant Captaine: but by tempest and stormie weather his Ships were more separated then his enemies, by which occasion they had opportunitie to carry away their silke, which cost the life of their chiefe Commander, who was slaine in the fight, in which also died two of our Captaines.

By this occasion, and in the time, the Captaine Generall was incumbered with the English, the King of Persia commanded his Vassalls to send people into Arabia, to bring the same vnder his subiection, being without any to giue him impediment: Yet before they went I required the Captaine of this Fort, also the Veeder Dafazenda, to send some Frigats in fauour of the Arabs (who are your Maiesties Subiects) that might defend them: for without such ayde it was not possible for them to defend themselves: and for this effect came thither certain Xegues to demand succour, which was not granted them; but the most the Captaine did, was to enioyne mee to send a kinsman of the Queene my wife, whom presently I sent, spending therein more then I was able or had to spare: yet his going was to no effect for want of Frigats, which onely might hinder the Boates wherein the Persians passed ouer, for which cause this day the King of Persia is become Lord of Arabia; and I also feare that verie shortly hee will come against this Fort, because of all this Kingdome no more is left mee, save onely this Iland of Salt without water to drinke: for all things pertaining to the sustenance of mans life, come from such places as the King of Persia possesseth. The losse and overthrow of this Kingdome of Ormus proceedeth altogether from the Captaines your Maiestie placeth therein, who for their particular interest, are content to dissemble and consent that the Kingdome bee taken, without cost of bloud, or labour vnto the King of Persia his Ministers, and this is so apparent that I need not write thereof, but that which I will speake with truth is, if that your Maiestie bee pleased, that this Kingdome and Fort shall enioy either peace or meanes to subsist, you must send such Captaines as are no Merchants, because the Mariners which might serue in your Maiesties Nauie to keepe this streit, are all employed in the Captaines Ships and Frigats, which hee onely employeth in Trade of Merchandise, in which Ships serue likewise the Souldiers of the Fort, insomuch that many times it is left with very few. But so long as this continueth, there shall ever bee wanting both Mariners and Souldiers to your Nany, to defend and keepe this Iland from the power of the King of Persia, which at this day hath more then a thousand Boates, and is commander of this streit more then is your Maiestie, and all by the fault of those Captaines, which for twentie or siue and twentie yeeres past haue serued in this place. Those in former times contented themselves with the gaine of fortie or 50000. Cruzados for their three yeeres seruice, but now they are not contented with 200000. Likewise in former times they had onely two Shippes when most, but now they haue foure and as many Frigats, and there is nothing wanting vnto them; but it seemeth not iust, that to satisfie the couetousnesse of one, who aymeth at nothing but his owne profit, the weale publike should perill, and that euery one should haue but little that onely one may liue to inioy much. From hence is growne and groweth all the euills of this Kingdome, proceeding from such Ministers as are placed by your Maiestie, granting vnto them the command, which heretofore the Kings my predecessours euer held. But I am now brought so low, and such as are vnder mee, that we remaine altogether vnable to repaire the necessities that are daily offered, as appeareth by this of Arabia; by which your Maiestie will bee forced to make warre, and continuall warre by Sea against this enemy, for that by Land you haue no power to conquer him, who is not contented with the taking away the firme Land of this Kingdome altogether, with the Iles of Barem and Kishme, but further, in confidence of his great number of Boats, hauing none to resist him, hath taken from vs Arabia, which was the onely remedie of this Iland. Of the truth of what hath herein bene spoken, your Maiesties Ambassador Don Garcia de Sylua (God sending him well to your Maiestie) shall be a good witnesse, to whose report I referre mee, and to all others which goe from hence; God keepe your Maiesty. Ormuz the twelfth of February, 1621.

A Letter written from Ruy frera dandrada, and sent aboard the lonas, by one of his Captaines, named ALFONSO BORGEA, at our first arrivall nere the Castle of Keshme.

Courtesie is the daughter of Nobilitie, as ever it hath beene found in the English Caweleers, from which I inferre that in these occasions may be drawne the same example, whereby in Europe may bee made publike your valours, and unto his Maiestie may bee presented the great service unto him is done: that from the estimation thereof may arise to bee made a good peace and conformitie, which wee will all write into India to that effect, as ministers of the same, if it shall seeme good unto you. Therefore wee request you not to moue warre in fauour of the King of Persia, thereby to diminish the glory of your Nation, with which so many times they haue helped vs against the Moores, whereby wee gained Lisbone in the dayes of King Don Antonio the first, and afterwards King Don second, was aided by the Duke of Lancaster in the action of Castile: but if these obligations are small on your part, and that ours now may bee made greater, in which wee will remaine, if you will but suffer vs to prosecute our warre against the Persian, without your valorous spirits hindering what wee are able to sustaine, and thereby impeach the commerce in Spaine to the hindrance of both Nations, and to the damage both of Shippes and Merchants of which I doubt not, when his Maiesty shall bee aduised in what manner the English doe carry themselves, so that wee may reserve our dissensions for other voyages, in which by valorous contending may bee satisfied, those wrongs that cannot well bee remembered in such times as these are, and for that the same may with due interest and conformitie of both Nations English and Portugalls, I returne to put you in remembrance of the aboue written, which ought to be discoursed with good understanding, as a matter in which your Worships may amplifie and aduance the generositie of your Nation, and retaine vs as friends unto your affaires. giving vs motine to procure in acknowledgement of this benefit all peace and quietnesse, and if you shall disesteeme the same, the first wee hope for is no more then to provide our selues to die, defending that with Armes, we haue gotten by Armes, &c. the first of Febrary, 11. 1622.

VVE the Captaines, Souldiers, and Inhabitants of the Castle of Ormus, now in the possession of the English doe say and affirme for truth, that they the said English haue performed all what was promised by them, and more in giving vs shipping of their owne to transport vs for India with victualls and all things else necessary, and deliuered vs from the hands of the Turkes who sought our destruction, and also suffered vs freely to passe out of the Castle with our apparell and bedding, and needfull money in our pockets. And commanded our sicke and maymed people to be cured by their owne Surgeons, sending them daily food in great abundance, and would not suffer any of the Moores to hurt them in any case. In witnesse of the truth wee haue here under written our names: Ormus the seuenth of May, 1622.

A third Certificate.

LEt it bee graunted, that the warres and offences receiued therein prouoke a man to reuenge, notwithstanding wee cannot deny unto your Worships, and unto all the rest of your Company, how much we are indebted for the good intreatie shewed unto these which yeelded themselves unto you: and it shall for ever lue in our memories those benefits, for which when time and fortune shall minister occasion, wee will endeavour to shew our selues gratefull with other, no lesse tokens of loue due unto a Nation, which ever haue been so affectionated towards vs: and euill be to him that hath caused discord betwixt vs, for it evidently appeareth how greatly the English and Portugall Nations doe loue together, and it doth well appeare wee doe all of vs adore one onely God; for notwithstanding the warre, you doe vse so many principles by the which it is not greatly to bee marvelled at, that in you there are such good workes, and in vs such a thankfulness as may bee eternall, with a great desire that all discord may cease, and that wee may returne to the antient amitie in which I hope, and in the noble word and qualitie of your person and persons, and for that I will not bee further troublesome unto your Worships, both in curing and sustaining those poore people that are with you, I haue sent these foure Boates to fetch them away; and if it shall seeme good to your Worships, and the rest with you, to continue your former courtesies unto the end, in performing the word of Conquerours and Christians, as formerly you haue done, now at this present to giue them a guard, that they may come safe from the Moores; for that like yeelded people they haue neither Armour to defend themselves, nor yet strength to vse them, if you like noble Conquerours giue them not conuoy; in whose whose word I am confident: Thus as your servant in what your Worships wil command mee, I rest. Soar

Powlet Beg the chiefe Commissioner, when the English expected to haue receiued 1200. Tomanes pay, hee made them more in his debt, the fruit of some Mariners priuate discourse and imbezelling. The English returned demaunds of a greater summe due from the Persian in like case. At last three moneths pay was allowed, and they shifted off from their other demands, hee forthwith, hauing no power thereto without the Cans Order. It is said, that the Portugalls not onely kept the King bare, but tooke bribes of his substitutes in other Prouinces, to protect them from their lawfull King, whereby he was vsed more like a Portugall Slaue then an Arab King.

I haue heard that the English had for this seruice of the King of Persia 20000. pounds.

After our buinesse ended, our misery began, occasioned by the vn sufferable heat, and partly by the disorders of our owne people in drinking Rack, and vsing other exercises no lesse hurtfull: whereby grew such a mortalitie, that three fourths of our men were dangerously sicke, and many died so suddenly, that they feared the plague, whereof yet no tokens appeared. This extremitie lasted but fourteene daies, in which time fixe or seuen died euery day. After which it pleased God to stay it, and the rest recovered.

This Persian businesse hath inuited, and almost enforced mee to remember our noble Persian-English Sherlies, especially the present honourable Embassadour Sir Robert Sherly, Count and Knight of the Empire, and therein aduanced to many priuiledges: of whom so much hath before bene occasionally recited. I much desired to haue obtained some Relations from his Lordship: but hauing late acquaintance, and hee much and weightie businesse, which hee hath bene forced to attend farre from the Citie, I rather thought fit to insert what by his humanitie and conference, I learned onely at one dinner with him (not knowing that I would publish what I then receiued) then not to imbellish these discourses, with so illustrious an English Trauellers Name and Memory.

CHAP. X.

A brieue Memoriall of the Trauells of the Right Hon. Sir R. O. B. SHERLY

Knight, Count and Knight of the Sacred Empire, now Embassador from the Persian King to His Maiestie and other Christian Kings.

mongst our English Trauellers, I know not whether any haue merited more respect then the Honorable, I had almost said Heroike Gentlemen, Sir Anthony & Sir Robert Sherleys. And if the Argonauts of old, and Gracian Worthies, were worthily reputed Heroricall for European exploits in Asia: what may wee thinke of the Sherley-Brethren, which not from the neerer Gracian shoares, but from beyond the European World, Et penitus toto diuisis Orbe Britannis; haue not coasted a little way (as did those) but pierced the very bowells of the Asian Seas and Lands, vnto the Persian Centre: and that not by a combination of Princes, as those former; but (God directing their priuate Genius for publike benefit) to kindle a fire betwixt the two most puissant of both Asian and Mahumetan Princes, that by their diuision and diuersion of Turkish inuasions, Christian Princes, Countries, and States might bee indebted to their priuate vndertaking: Nor hath ten yeeres detained them at one Citie, or one voyage finished their worthy indeuours, as theirs at Troy and to Colchos; but about twentie yeeres together, all Turkie hath groaned, in which shee hath lost two millions of her vnholawed Children; remoter India, Mosconia, Africa hath felt the Sherlian working, Poland, Spaine, the Emperour and Pope haue admired and adorned the English Name of Sherley. These indeed, especially Sir Robert (the subiect of our present Discourse) I shall honour for that Diuina Palladis Arte, that Ulyssian twentie yeeres trauell, and getting both Troies Palladium and Achilles his Armour; as alio for Iasonian sowing the Dragons teeth indeed (beyond Poeticall Fables) whereby Mahumetans haue killed each others, whiles Christendome might haue gotten the Golden Fleece, the vsuall fruit of peace. Let mee admire such a Traueller, which trauels not of and for some vaine discourse, or priuate gaine or skill, but still trauelleth and is deliuered of the publike good, accounting his Countrey his Garden, Christendome his Orchard, the Vniuerse his Field, for this happy seed of publike beneficence. Who euer since the beginning of things and men, hath bene so often by Royall Employment sent Embassadour to so many Princes, so distant in place, so different in rites? Two Emperours Rudolph and Ferdinand, two Popes Clement and Paul, twice the King of Spaine, twice the Polonian, the Musconite also haue given him audience. And twice also (which I last mention, as most knowne and at home, though not the least for a borne subiect to be Embassadour to his Soueraigne) His Maiestie hath heard his Embassage from the remote Persian. I omit his employment from the Emperour Rudolph with the Persian, his annuall pay of 5000. duckets, besides other Imperiall graces. The mightie Ottoman, terror of the Christian World, quaketh of a Sherly-Feuer, & giues hopes of approaching fates. The preuailing Persian hath learned Sherleian Arts of War, and he which before knew not the vse of Ordnance, hath now 500. Peeces of Brasse, & 60000. Musketers; so that they which at hand with the Sword were before dreadfull to the Turkes, now also in remoter blowes and sulfurian Arts are growne terrible. Hence hath the present Abas won from the Turke seuen great Prouinces, from Derbent to Bagdat inclusiuely, and still hath his eyes, mouth, and hands open to search, swallow, and acquire more. In the renowned battell with Cigala Bassa, of 160000. 2000 20 onely remained to flee with the Generall, who yet would not remaine after that disaster, but by poyson preuented domestike shame: and there did our Noble Countryman receiue three wounds, as a triple testimony of his loue and seruice to Christendome. Great Abas, great by his Persian Inheritance, is now made greater by English Merchants, Mariners, Souldiers, which aduanced his conquest of Ormuz, expelling those Portugals which had denied the English trade in Persia, from Persian neighbourhood; and greatest by victories against the Great Ottoman, moued thereto, assisted and guided therein by the English Sherleys. And he againe hath gratified the Sherleyan name with competent reciprocall greatnesse; not in titles of Honor, and honorable employments alone, but in rewards, THIS MANS BREAD IS BAKED FOR SIXTIE YEERES, being the formall words of his Royall Charter to him (which he that vnderstandeth the Easterne phrase of 30 of daily bread in his pater noster, knows how to interpret) with an explication added of the allowance to Him and his Assignes for that space, whether he liueth himselfe, or leaueth it to others inioying. The Great Mogol (whom he commendeth for the goodnesse of his disposition, of his owne naturall inclination not bloody, but humane and bountifull; and for his yearly pay to his Army of 44. millions of Crowns) entertained him liberally, offered him the pay of 400. Horse if hee would serue him; which, had not fidelity and Persian confidence preuented, hee had accepted; the zeale whereof, in some harsh reflection of wordes spoken somewhat too liberally against his Master, by him with like liberty retorted, ecclipsed the Mogolls beneuolence towards him, which otherwise might haue bene worth 50000. pounds, and neuertheless was, in Elephants, huge massie Coines (inscribed, Consolation of Strangers) and other gifts, not lesse valuable then eight or 9000. pounds. 40
As for other Princes Reall and Royall acknowledgements of his loyall seruice to the Christian affaires, I omit. But his high valuation with the Emperour Rudolph, I could not passe by, I hauing seene the Originall Imperiall Charter vnder the Great Seale, and subscribed by the Emperour himselfe. I haue seene also the Originall Breue of Pope Paulus Quintus, sub annulo Piscatoris, wherein the said Pope doth constitute him Earle of the sacred Laterane Palace, and Chamberlaine, with power to legitimate Bastards, for which many thousands at Goa were suitors to him (such is the Portugall dissolutenesse in those parts) the Archbishop there hauing vnder his hand acknowledged the said Grant, besides the priuiledges (allowances also annexed of so much bread, flesh, fish, a crowne a day, &c.) But the Imperiall Grant (to me of more respect and validity) I haue here deliuered verbatim, translated out of the Originall Latine, that his noble and great worth might by 50 noblest and greatest testimony bee acknowledged: the rather because I haue seene the same Title giuen him by his Maiesty, in his Letters commendatory of the said Noble Count to other Princes, and subscribed with his Royall hand and name, Iacobus.

Marquesse of the holy Romane Empire, of Burgonie, and of the higher and lower Lusatia; Lord 60 of the Marches of Sclauonia, the Port of Naon and Salines, &c. To the Noble and of Vs entirely beloued Count Robert Sherley Knight and Earle of the sacred Palace of Laterane, of Our Cæsars Court, and Imperiall Consistorie. The assigned Embassador vnto Vs of the most Renowned Lord and Prince Abbas, King of Persia, the Medes and Armenia, Our Imperiall Grace, and all all happinesse. As the most resplendent beames of the Sunne, doe illuminate with their light the whole World, and refresh the same, giuing vigour and increase to the inferiour bodies: So the Emperour of the Romanes being placed in the height of dignitie by Almighty God (whose Maiestie as full of the light of honours and dignities is resplendent amongst all men) doth of himselfe spread farre and neere the beames of his bountie, especially vpon those who doe ennoble their owne worthy vertuous Race by excellent deserts of the Common-wealth and their Soueraignes: Therefore not only for this cause, that themselves may reioyce, hauing obtained by desert these honours from the Imperiall Maiestie, but that their Posteritie and others being allured and inflamed with these examples and beginnings, may apply their mindes to the most faire attempts of vertue and glory.

10 Whereupon, we by the appointment and prouidence of the most mightie God, being placed in this high top of Our Imperiall Throne, are desirous to obserue the worthy Ordinances of Our Predecessors, as well herein as in all other things, that We might entertaine with all fauour and clemencie, men excellent and famous for their vertue, and such as testifie their good will to Vs, and their singular loue and zeale towards the Sacred Empire, and Our noble houses of Austria and Burgundie.

20 Considering therefore the excellent parts of your mind, and wit wherewith you are endued. As first being born of such Parents, and such a race in England, who by birth themselves are noble, and besides, haue borne place and dignitie in that Kingdome: You haue from your Child-hood resolved not to degenerate from them, but by insisting and following their steps, and applying your selfe to the studie of vertue and honourable actions, that you might not only keepe and maintaine safe and sound your reputation at home, but by your owne actions and deserts, more and more adorne and aduance the same, which you haue so farre forth performed, that when you had serued by Sea and Land in sundry places for certaine yeeres, and had trauelled through many Kingdomes, and vndertooke with a couragious minde a Iourney into Persia, and together with your Brother Anthony Sherley, to the good of all Chistendome, encouraged that King to vndertake that Warre which he did against the Turke valiantly and resolutely, which very happily fell out for Vs in Our Hungarian Warre: and moreouer, since you with your said Brother Anthony haue procured and brought to passe, that the said King of Persia hath sent vnto Vs sundry Embassages, which partly the chiefe of Persia, partly your Brother and your selfe haue performed, and haue

30 vsed all the meanes to make a league, and procure Amitie betweene Vs and his Maiestie, and haue omitted nothing euen in your owne priuate thoughts and cares, whereby you might procure fit occasions for Our Warre from farre places: We haue thought you worthy for these commendable Seruices to bee graced by vs by some notable testimony of Our fauour, and Imperiall bountie, as We thinke may be an Ornament to your Kindred and Posteritie.

Therefore out of Our owne proper motion, out of Our owne certaine knowledge, with a deliberate minde, and out of the fulnesse of Our Imperiall Authoritie, We haue made, created, and ordained you the aboue named Robert Sherley a true and a lawfull Knight, and haue receiued you to the state, degree and honour of Knighthood, and haue adorned and inuested you with the Robes and Ensignes of the Girdle, Chaines, Rings, Spurres, and other Ornaments appertayning to the Order of Knighthood according to Our custome, as by the force of these presents, We doe make, create, nominate, appoint, receiue, inuest and adorne, girding you with the Sword of valour, and bestowing vpon you all Armes and Ornaments belonging to this Order, decreeing seriously and firmly by Our foresaid Imperiall Authoritie that euer hereafter you ought to bee esteemed, reputed, named, and honoured for a true and lawfull Knight. And that you may without the let and contradiction of any, in all exercises, actions and enterprises vse, possesse, and enioy Chaines, Sword, Spurres, Robes, Trappings, and what else soeuer Furniture belonging to Horses either all Gold or Gilt, also whatsoever Honours, Prerogatiues, Ensignes, Priuiledges, Freedomes, Favours, and Liberties which the rest of Our owne Knights, the Knights of the Roman Empire, as also the Knights of Hierusalem doe vse, possesse, and enioy in what manner soeuer either of right or custome, none whosoever forbidding the contrary.

And that you may be graced with some singular testimony of Our bountie, of Our foresaid proper motion, and out of the fulnesse of Our Imperiall Authoritie with deliberate aduise, and out of our owne knowledge We haue made, created, and ordained you Robert Sherley, Earle of the Sacred Palace of Laterane, of Our Cesars Court, and Imperiall Consistorie, and fauourably haue honoured you with the Title of an Earle Palatine, as by the force of these presents we doe make, create, erect, aduance, entitle you, and doe take, ascribe and entertaine you into the Order and Fellowship of other Earles Palatines.

60 Decreeing, and by this our Imperiall Patent, firmly ordaining that from this time henceforth so long as you shall liue, you shall be able to enioy, vse, and possesse all and singular Priuiledges, Favours, Rights, Immunities, Honours, Exemptions, Customes, and Liberties, which other Earles of Our Sacred Palace of Laterane heretofore haue vsed and enjoyed, or do vse by right or custome howsoeuer. Giuing and granting to you the said Robert Sherley full aauthoritie and power, by which you may and shall bee able throughout the whole Roman Empire, and what place place or Countrey else soever create and make publike Notaries or Registers, and ordinary Iudges, and to giue and grant the Office of Notarie or Register, and Iudge ordinarie to any persons who shall be meete and fit for the same (which we leaue to your owne conscience) and to inuest them, and euery one of them by the Pen and Penner according to the custome, in the aforesaid places. Provided that of the aforesaid publike Notaries, and Iudges ordinary by you to bee created, and of euery of them in the Name of vs, and the Sacred Romane Empire, and for the Romane Empire it selfe you take a corporall and personall Oath according to the custome in this manner. That they shall be true and faithfull vnto Vs, and to the Sacred Romane Empire, and to all Our Successors Emperours of the Romanes lawfully possessing the same, neither shall they bee present where Our danger is practised, but they shall defend and faithfully maintaine Our good and safety, and they shall auoid and put by as much as in them lyeth whatsoever may be to Our damage.

Moreover, they shall write all Instruments as well publike as priuate, Last Wils and Testaments, Enrolments, Legacies, all Decrees of Iudgement what-soeuer, and all and singular other things, which shall belong vnto them, or to any one of them to be made or written (according as the place of the said Offices shall require) iustly, sincerely and faithfully, all dissimulation, cunning, plotting, falshood, and deceit being set apart, also reade, make and pronounce the same, respecting neither hatred, money, gifts, or any passions or fauours.

Their writings which they ought to draw in publike forme, they shall write, reade, make, rehearse in faire Parchment, not in paper or sheetes torne and razed. They shall further to their power the causes of Hospitals, and of poore people, also see to Bridges and High-ways. They shall secretly, and faithfully keepe depositions and verdicts of witnesses, vntill they shall be published and approued, and they shall doe all and singular other things rightly, iustly, and sincerely, which shall any wayes appertaine to their Offices either of custome or right, and that these publike Notaries, or Registers and Iudges ordinarie to bee elected by you, may and shall bee able throughout the whole Romane Empire, and in all places and Countreyes else write, and publish Contracts, Decrees of Iudgements, Instruments, last Wils, also to insert Decrees and Authorities, in all Contracts whatsoever requiring the same, and to doe, publish, and exercise all other things which are knowne to belong and appertaine to the publike Office of a Notarie, or Register, or ordinary Iudge, decreeing that absolute credit be giuen to all Instruments, and writings to be written by these publike Notaries, or Registers, or Iudges ordinary, in Iudgement and without, Constitutions, Statutes, and whatsoever else shall make for the contrarie notwithstanding.

Moreover, we doe grant and giue to you, the aforesaid Robert Sherley full power, that you may and shall be able to legitimate Bastards of what kinde soeuer, Incestuous persons whether they be together or separated, and whosoever else of that sort, yea, though they bee Infants present or absent, already begotten or to be begotten of vnlawfull and disallowed coniunction, Males and Females, by what name soeuer they be called, whether the lawfull Sonnes be knowne or no, and no further inquirie made, whether their Parents bee liuing or dead (only the Children of great Princes, Earles and Barons excepted) and to restore them and euery one of them, to all and singular their Rights and Titles, and altogether to abolish the imputation of base birth by restoring and enabling them to all and their singular Rights of succession, Hereditaments of their Father and Mothers goods, though they died Intestate, also of their Kinsmen and Kinswomen, and to all Honours, Dignities, and all lawfull actions, as well by contract as by last Will bestowed, or howsoever else as well in Iudgement as without. Euen as if they had bene borne in lawfull Matrimonie, the obiection of Bastardie for euer resting; And we will that their legitimation made as aboue-said, may be held for good and lawfull, as well as it had bene performed with all Rites and Solemnities, the defect whereof wee will supply with our Imperiall Authoritie. Provided the legitimations of this kind bee not preiudiciall to the lawfull Sonnes and Heires, and those that are naturally and rightly borne; but those that are to be made legitimate, after they shal be legitimated, let them be thought and named; for so they ought to be named and held in all places as legitimate and lawfully borne of the House, Family, and Linage of their Parents, and that they may beare and carrie their Armes and Ensignes. Withall let them be made Noble if their Parents haue bene nobly borne. Notwithstanding certaine Lawes by which it is provided, that Naturals, Bastards and Incestuous persons, either ioyntly or seuerally or any other whosoever either already begotten, or to be gotten by vnlawfull copulation, neyther may, nor ought to be legitimated, naturall and children lawfully begotten remayning, or without the will and consent of the true and naturall Sonnes, or Kinsmen, or the Lords of their Land, and you may especially reade in the Authentike after what manner a child is naturalized. Et quibus modis Nat. efficitur sui per totum & q. Naturales li. de fado fuerit controuers. inter Domin. & Agnat. & L. Inhemus C. de emancipat liberorum & similibus alijs. Which Lawes and euery one of which willingly and expressly we will to be of no force. Yea notwithstanding in certaine of the aforesaid cases, the depositions of the Plaintiffes, and the last Wils of the dead, other Lawes, Statutes and Customes of other places, although they were such which ought to be expressed, or of which speciall mention here ought to be made. All which notwithstanding, and of their power being otherwise able to make of none effect, the premises onely in this case out of our owne knowledge, and the fulnesse of our Imperiall Authoritie we will wholly that they be of no force at all.

- Hereto moreouer, we doe giue and grant vnto the aforesaid Robert Sherley, that you may and shall be able to confirme assistants and ouer-seers, and the same againe vpon lawfull cause to depriue & displace. Moreouer, to restore such as are notoriously infamous as wel by Fact as by Law againe to their former credit, and from them to take away all note of Infamie as well alreadie imposed vpon them, or to be hereafter layed to their charge, so that afterward ahey may be accounted meete and fit to be preferred to all and singular lawfull actions. Besides, to adopt and ordaine Children, and to make, ordaine and to confirme them as adopted, and acknowledged for lawfull;
- 20 Moreouer, to make free children legitimate, or to be made legitimate, also those that be adopted, and to giue your consent to all Adoptions, Naturallizings, and Freedomes whatsoever, of all and euery one, as well Infants as young men. And also to giue them time and yeeres if they sue vnto you, and in euery thing hereunto appertayning to interpose your authoritie. Moreouer, to make seruants free, in what kind soeuer, with or without the allegation and alienations, or transactions of their necessary maintenance, and also herein to interpose your authoritie. Also to restore the lesser Churches, and Immunities to their former vse wholly, the one part hauing beene called before in question, and to grant the whole restitution vnto them againe, or to one of them: Notwithstanding a course of Law being obserued. These aforesaid premises shal not be prejudiced by any Lawes whatsoever, Constitutions, Decrees, Customes, Ordinances, Reformatiōs, Priuiledges, Exemptions, Fauours, and Prerogatiues, by what name soeuer they be called, or of what tenour and force soeuer they be, as well made all readie, as to be made hereafter, by vs, our Predecessours, our Successors, or by what Princes soeuer, Dukes, Marqueses, Earles, Vniuersities, or others of what kind or condition soeuer, vnder what clauses or expresse words soeuer, although such things and the like should come to passe, of which it should bee needful here to make mention word for word, to those that should attempt the contrary. From all and euery of which by our Imperiall Authoritie, and out of the fulnesse of our own proper motion, and out of our own knowledge aboue rehearsed, by these presents as farre forth as they may derogate from this Our Graunt and Patent, we will the force and vigour to be taken away. Wherefore it shall be lawfull for no man of what state, degree, ranke, condition, dignitie, or preeminence he shall be, to infringe or teare this
- 30 Graunt of Our Creation, Ereccion, Allowance, Gift, Patent, Decree, Pleasure, Priuiledge, and Fauour, or contradict it by any rash attempt whatsoever.

If any man shall presume to doe it, let him know that he shall incurre ipso facto Our heauie displeasure, and of the whole Empire. Moreouer, the punishment of fiftie Markes of pure Gold, halfe of which shall be confiscate to Our Imperiall Treasurie, and the rest to bee employed to his or their vses that haue had the wrong without release. By the testimonie of these Our Letters subscribed with Our owne hand, and confirmed with the putting to of our Imperiall Seale.

The Epitaphs on the Tombe of IACOB ALMANZOR the Saracenicall Emperour, vnder whose Reigne Spaine was subdued to the Moores, written by MAHOMET ALGAZELI a learned Arabian, and grauen in the foure stones of his sumptuous Monument.

The first Epitaph historicall.

Here lyeth buried the high and highly reuerenced King of most noble birth, famous race and linage, descended of eightie * and two Kings, Abulgalit Miramamolim, Iacob Almanzor who was worthily called the Conquerour, being neuer overcome; the famouslest of the Sonnes of Nasir Abu Malique, seeing hee wanne eightie and six battailes by Sea and by Land, and tooke fise Kings; subdued three parts of the World, Asia, Afrike and Europe, and gaue peace and tranquillitie to

- 60 his subjects, obseruing Iustice with benignitie and mercie. This is he that vsed Charitie and augmented his Religion hauing at his owne cost builded in his Kingdome fise hundred and six principall Mezquitas, eightie and two Hospitals with as many Royall Colledges, and endowed them with large and sumptuous Reuenues. This is he that married euery yeere at his charge a thousand Orphans, he that banished ignorance, and embraced Learning. Hee that gaue to all the World

The second Epitaph, Morall.

World examples of life in his sayings and sentences, and notable deeds of Armes. He who was our example of good and laudable customes. Hee that killed the hunger and thirst and nakednesse of his subiects with his large and liberall hands. Let immortall fame euer attend on this Sepulchre acknowledge him that lyeth therein for her King and Lord, seeing by him shee is made triumphant and victorious ouer all Ages. This great Monarch died continuing in his inuocation of the mercifull God the Creatour of Heauen and Earth without ceasing, so much as a moment vntill his last gaspe, imploring his incompreensible mercie and fearing his high Iustice. The third day of the Moone of Rageb, the night before Friday after the last Watch in the hundredth and second yeere of the Hixera. Praised bee God and blessed bee his most holy Name for euer. Amen.

10

O how great is the misery of men, which hath brought a King of so great power, Empire, and command to the estate wherein hee is at this present, who as yesterday was honoured, reuerenced, and beloued of his people, and is now forgotten and forsaken of them all, and remaineth solitarie in the darke Caues of the earth. He which was wont to bee clad in silke and cloth of gold and siluer, and to sleepe in the softest and sweetest beds curiously and richly decked and adorned, lieth heere buried in the hard Earth. He which vsed to goe perfumed with Muske and Amber and other excellent odours, now yeeldeth in his base estate a noy some and stinking smell. He that as yesterday did eate the choicest meates, and dranke the most delicate drinkes is heere become himselfe to be the meate of wretched and loathsome Wormes. O mortall men, let none put confidence in the delights of this life: take example of him that lyeth heere buried: who hauing possessed them, obserue how little while they continued. There is no confidence to be placed in any but in God and in things eternall: let these terrene transitorie worldly things to be forgotten for his loue and reuerence. Let vs follow good and holy workes which endure for euer, that with them through his grace and mercie we may obtaine that eternall life which endureth for euer and euer. Amen.

The third Epitaph, Political, and exemplary to Kings.

Here lieth buried the terrour and feare of the Moores, Christians and Gentiles, that ploughed vp the Sea, and made the Land euen and plaine. Hee that subdued the Nations of the World. The example and paterne of benignitie and mercie, and the right rule of executing Iustice severely for the chastisement of those which doe not liue vertuously as the Soueraigne God commanded. Here resteth that liberall hand, that was neuer shut or closed to any that sought the reliefe thereof. The protector of the poore; the father of the Orphans; the refuge of the Widdowes; the zeale of chastitie; the mirrour of honestie and shamefastnesse accompanied with Modestie; the paterne of Princes; the modell of gouernment; the picture of puritie and cleannesse; the type of Nobilitie; the preseruer of truth in his tongue; the banisher of lies, the true louer of Learning, he that hath left a liuing fame of himselfe for the future Ages; and a worthy example of such lasting memorie as time cannot consume, which hath consumed the great deeds and exploits of Kings, Princes and Emperours burying their memory in obliuion. O yee mortall men let vs pray to our Soueraigne God, that he vouchsafe to prosper and augment his memorie for example of the Kings to come, that by imitation of him they may gouerne their Common-weales in peace, directing vs also to his holy seruice, and filling vs with his grace. Amen.

The fourth Epitaph, Morally and naturally Theologicall.

Euen as gold is refined and purified in the Crucible, or placed on the fire which discouereth the finenesse therof among the flames: So a sinful man who preserues his patience in the persecutions of this life doth purifie & perfect himselfe therby. A man ought to consider that he was borne to suffer, and he may comfort himselfe in this, that all the trauels of this life shall haue an end with him at his death, and that only the good and holy workes are they which remayne for euer, being accepted and regarded of our Soueraigne God. O man, consider that he created thee for his seruice: and that thou vngratefully hast departed from him without recompence of amends. Behold, how lukewarme thy loue is towards him, and that of thy Creator towards thee is constant and true, hauing giuen thee thy being and accomplishment for his mercie. Consider with how high a prize he bought thee, and gaue thee meanes to saue thy selfe by vsing well thy libertie and freedome as he hath commended thee. And therefore doe I admonish thee that thou loose not the much for the little, the certaine for the vncertaine, for if so thou doe, thou wilt finde thy selfe deceiued. Consider how misery and pouertie consists not in the wanting of Parents, or kindred, or of temporall goods, but in the want of the fauour of God and of his benediction. Imploring therefore his mercie and grace, let vs humbly intreate him to grant vs the same, and hold vs with his hand. Amen.

CHAP. XII.

Master THOMAS CORYATES travels to, and Observations in Constantinople, and other places in the way thither, and his Journey thence to Aleppo, Damasco and Ierusalem.

10 WE haue already seene Master Thomas Coryate in his Indian peregrination. The beginning of which his Journy we could not then give you for want of that Intelligence which since is come to my hands, namely his owne Bookes; out of which I haue presented thee his Observations of Zante, Syo, and Constantinople, with some other places in his way to Ierusalem, from whence he pierced Persia and India. Hee set forth October the twentieth, Anno 1612. and Iauuarie the thirteenth arrived in Zante. Out of his large Iournall I haue briefly presented this,

Houfes in Zante.

- The houfes of this Towne are built with stone, such as is digged out of the Rockie side of the Mountaine. They are somewhat lower then I haue obserued in other Townes: their Roofes are somewhat flatte according to the forme of the Italian Building, with a prettie round stone inserted into the middle of the out-side, which maketh the House there somewhat like to the broad Thrumbe Caps, that some of the olde women of the West parts of
- 20 England, were wont to weare for some twentie yeeres since. Neither doth their manner of tiling differ from that of Italy, being made all hollow within side, which is vsed seuerally ouer all Italie, and many parts of France. I could see no glasse windowes in their houfes, but all Lattice made of Firre which I obserue to bee generally vsed amongst them. Which Lattice leaues in the Summer time they doe commonly take of, and then, seeing they are Greekes, and merrie Greekes too, they may be very properly said to keepe open houfes. Now concerning their lowe houfes, the reason why they build them so lowe is, because of the manifold Earthquakes which doe as much share this Iland as any other place in the World. The Earthquakes are so frequent with them, that sometimes they feele ten of them in a moneth. At the time of my being in the same there was a little feeling of an Earthquake, which was perceiued for some five or sixe dayes together. For which cause on Munday being the eleuenth of Iauuary, about tenne of the clocke in the morning there was a Procession about the Castle solemnized by the Greeks Priests that prayed to God to cease the Earthquake. Sometimes when it is any thing vehement, they vse to ring out the Bels of all their Churches. The motion of the Earth doth neuer last aboue a quarter of an houre at the most, when it continueth longest most commonly but two or three minutes; during which time it often falleth out to bee so violent, that people fearing least the houfes would fall downe then haue benee driuen out of doores, euen out of their naked beds, men in their shirts, women in their smockes, carrying their clothes with them, that they haue hastily caught vp, and haue at leisure put them on afterward. The time of the Earthquake is vncertaine, sometimes it commeth by day, and sometimes by night. The naturall cause of them is vnkowne vnto me:
- 40 though some of the Englishmen that dwelt in the Towne doe coniecture that it proceedeth from the hollow Canes and Cauernes that are in the bowels of the Earth. It is obserued, that their Earthquakes doe most commonly happen when there is a sudden calme in the Sea and quiet weather, and the winds which doe for the most part accompany it, or rather goe before it, and partly cause the same are West and by North and Westerly. Neither is this Iland only subiect to these Terremotes, but also the next Ile neere at hand called Cephalonia, which is more shaken with the same then Zante: which are the only two places of the whole Countrey thereabout, that are annoyed with Earthquakes. For neither Morea neere at hand, nor Arcadia, doe at any time feele these shakings, therefore the frequencie of those foresaid Earthquakes is the reason of the low building of the houfes which would the sooner fall downe with the forcible motion of the Earth, if they were very high. Howbeit as lowe as they are sometimes two or three hou-
- 50 ses haue fallen downe with the Earthquakes, being rooted out from the very foundations, and haue benee afterward reedified.

Earthquakes
oft and short.

Cephalonia.

- Now I will mention a matter of this Towne, which vnto most that shall read it will seeme almost incredible; that albeit it be no more then two miles and a halfe, or at the vttermost three miles in compasse, yet it should containe three and fortie Churches and Chappels. A thing so absolutely true that there is no contradiction to be made against it: only they are so little that a faire Towne Church of England, will make very neere halfe a score of them. These are the particular names of the totall number; first three in the Castle, Saint Francis, Saint Katharines, Saint Markes, Saint Maries in the Towne, in the Yard or Court of which before I came into any part
- 60 of the Church I saw a very remarkable Monument that shall not passe vnmentioned, the Sepulchre of Marcus Tullius Cicero and his Wife Terentia, but such an obscene and ignoble graue, that I could not but condole the misfortune of that famous and incomparable Orator, from the exhausted Fountaine of whose incomparable Learning, so many excellent Orators haue drawne liquor of Rhetoricall inuention, to the great garnishing and adorning of their polite lucubrations, Churches.

Ciceros Sepulchre.

ons. For it standeth sub dio. in the open Aire, without any Sepulchrate or Titularie stone, that might testifie to the Reader who lieth there; which cannot but strike a kinde of veneration into any man that hath any sparke of learning. But belike the Vrne wherein his ashes were laid may remaine there, though the Venetians haue robbed the place of the Monument, which I know to be very true, by a certaine ancient Inscription that I read in a stone in the Quadrangle of a Clarissimoes house adioyning to the Piazza of Saint Marke in Venice, which I haue mentioned in my former Booke, viz. Marco Tulli Cicero, haue & tu Terentia Antoniana. These foure Churches belong to the Italians, all the rest (being 39.) to the Greekes.

Wine, Oile, & Currans commodities of Zant.

Famous is this Citie ouer most part of Europe, Asia, and Africa for three principall Commodities which the Iland doth minister to the same, and the Citie again to many remote Countries, 10
Wine, Oile, and Currans.

Marriages.

I obserued a strange custome in this Iland the day of their Marriages: for whensoever any of the Kindred is married, all the day, all of the same consanguinity do hang out of their Windowes certaine Carpets, by which it is generally knowne in the Towne that such a one is married: and they hang out most commonly two Carpets in euery house. I haue obserued also a custome amongst their women which I neuer read or heard of amongst any other women. They ride on Asses astride; and that vpon Morocco Saddles, but all those that I saw ride were Gentlewomen of the better sort, attired in their Silkes or Damaskes, very seemely to behold, beeing attended by a Page that walketh along by their sides, many of them slaues that they bought with their money.

Caloieri not Priests, but Greeke Monks.

The first Caloieri that euer I saw were in this Towne of Zante, which are certaine Greeke Priests, whose names are deriued from these two Greeke words καλός and ιερός, that is, an honest or good Priest. They are such as haue vndertaken the Vow of single life. But there are other Priests among them that are suffered to marry, but hauing buried one Wife they may not matrimony. Their ordinarie fasting Dayes of the weeke are Wednesday and Friday, in which they will neither eat flesh nor any fish that hath any blood in it, also they obserue foure Lents euery yeere. And now we will follow our Author to Syo.

Syo.

Masticke Tree
described.

Out of Syo a great Tribute of twentie thousand Chicquins ariseth vnto the Grand Signior, out of a principall Commodity that this Iland yeeldeth, viz. Masticke, which groweth heere only of all the places of the World, the Tree that beareth it is a prettie kinde of shrub like vnto that Lentiscus, that groweth in some parts of France and Italie, this shrub groweth low by the ground and beareth crooked little boughes and leaues, they are not disperfed ouer the whole Iland, but grow only in one place of it some sixe miles from the Citie, the iuyce of it is white, and in the moneth of August they begin their Recolta, that is, their Masticke Haruest; the men that are set a worke about that businesse, cutting the barke of the Tree with their Iron Instruments, which are like Pix-axes, and it is almost three moneths before they end their Recolta, the Gum distilling incessantly for that space.

Cotton shrubs

Besides, there is another Commodity that they sell in this Iland, Cotton, which groweth very plentifully in sundry places of the same. The shrub or bush that beareth it is as low as the lowest sort of Vines, and there is a great multitude of plots of it neere to the Towne and in other parts of the Countrey. The downie or woolly substance which proceedeth from the Cod of the shrub doth yeeld that matter, of which the Ilanders doe make a certaine stuffe called Dimitie, and another called Scammatic.

Dimitie and Scammatic.

The day before we departed from Syo, I rode into the Countrey vpon an Ass (according to the custome of the Iland) being accompanied with some other of my Countreymen, whereof the chiefe was one Master Richard Southerne that had liued a prettie while in those parts, and vsed mee passing louingly in the Towne of Syo, also Master Robert Eldred, and Master Richard Lampin. We tooke our Iourney to a thing very famous and worthy to be scene by euery learned Traueller, if that bee true that the Inhabitants doe report of it. Namely, the Sepulchres of the Prince of all Poets Diuine Homer, my Master for many yeeres since

Homers Sepulchre.

A quo, seu fonte perenni Vatum Pieris ora rigantur aquis.

for indeed they doe confidently affirme, that hee was borne in this Iland, and buried heere also. Yet there are five Cities more doe challenge him as well as Syo, according to an old Distich in the Methologie of Greeke Poets that read long since

Εὗτα πόλεις ἱρίζουσι περὶ ῥίζαν Ὀμήρου Σμύρνα, Ῥόδος, Κολοφῶν, Σαλαμῖς, Χίος, Ἄρδος, Ἀδύνη.

But our sinister fortune was to goe too late out of the Towne that we could not possibly reach thither that night ouer the dangerous precipices and difficult passages of Rocks and home againe, for it was about some twelue miles to the place. But instead of going thither (whither if wee had gone wee could not haue scene any Monument at all, but only a Vineyard that yeeldeth excellent Wine, which was once a part of the possessions of that peerelesse Poet, and in which they say his bodie lieth interred) wee went to a goodly Monasterie called Emonia, which is by many degrees the fairest of the whole Iland: it is inhabited by Greeke Monks called Caloieri, which

which are in number two hundred, their reuenues are at the least five thousand Dollars by the yeere, which make a thousand pound Sterling. The Monasterie standeth vpon the side of an hill, and was built about sixe hundred yeeres since, by the Emperour Constantinus Monomachus; the Chappell is a very beautifull building, being built all round, and beautified with diuers faire Marble Pillars. There I saw the goodliest waxe Candle that euer I saw in my life, some eight foote high fastned to a wall, & so bigge as my middle, for I measured it with my girdle: the first Monke thereof was one Nicetas. I know not what kinde of learned men the Monkes of this place haue bin in former times, but now they are so vbleatned, that they can onely read in their owne Manuscript Greeke Bookes, but can neither vnderstand nor speake any learned Greeke, but the moderne; for I could not finde as much as one learned man of the whole two hundred. They haue a notable cistern of water in their Monastery which is alwaies full of water, to the end to serue their turne in time of necessitie, if they should be besieged by the enemy. This Monastery is famous for the Bels that are therein, in number foure, not for the greatnesse thereof, but that those Colouri onely of all the other Greekish Monkes of the whole Greekish territorie, are suffered to vse them. In this Island is the Cause of Sibilla Hellespontia, but the shortnesse of time bated mee of the opportunitie to see it. The whole Island is one hundred miles in compasse, and there are in it about eightie thousand soules.

Sibilla

- From this Towne I sailed in an English Ship, to the Troian shoare, where I landed Feb. 22. with foureteene English men more and a Leu or Druggerman, all well weaponed for feare of any hostile inuasion by the Turkes: by the way as we were going thither, we found a bare little plot of ground, not farre from the Sea, where their Oxen trode out wheate, according to the custome of most of these Asiaticke Countries; we walked towards the mouldor haue of Troy; but before we came thither we obserued diuers antiquities worthy the relation: first on the left hand of vs we left the ruines of a goodly Fortresse; then a hillocke which was built in a round forme; there remained onely the lower part of the wall, without doubt it was a very strong fortification before it was destroyed: afterward on the right hand of vs, wee saw a peece of a wall vnder the shoare hard by the Sea side, but the breadth, height, and length of it we did so exactly behold, because we were a prettie way distant from it: likewise we saw a great many round Marble Pillars standing vpright in the ground, and dispersed in diuers parts of the lower side of the Citie that lay neere to the Sea-shoare: these Pillars are most of gray Marble, but of no such notable bignesse as I saw afterward, most of them stood in the ground which was sowe with Wheate; which ground was so couered ouer with little broken stones, that I did very much maruell how it was possible that Corne should grow in that place; as for the Pillars, we beleued that as much of euery Pillar lay buried vnder the ground, as appeared aboue the ground. Once I was about to number these Pillars, but by reason that they were so extreemely scattered, I found an extreame difficultie in it, and could not doe it truely and exactly without a longer time then was limited me, but surely I thinke there were no lesse then one hundred of them, most of them were growne very rough and scabrous, which happened by the iniurie of all manner of weather in so long antiquitie of time; only one of them in a low plot of ground neere to the Sea, was passing smooth and plaine, like a sleeking stone, and the fairest for length and compasse that I could see in the whole number: neere vnto some of these Pillars there be foure or five goodly Marble Sepulchers of a great length, one of which I measured, and found it to be nine of my fecte long. These Tombes consist of one intire Marble stone, euen of white Marble; vpon euery corner of one whereof are foure round knobs, made in the forme of little pillowes, and the middle part riseth with a sharpe line, like vnto the sharpe part of a Costlet or breast plate; likewise there was another of white Marble, on the left side whereof the whole proportion of two hands (which I coniecture to haue bin the hands of some great Lady) were so curiously expressed, that it is impossible for Praxiteles or any other that was the most excellent caruer in the World to surpasse it. I finde Petrus Bellonius his obseruations of these Sepulchers to be very true; for that which hee writeth of them is very certaine, that they are excauated, that is, made hollow in the inside, in the forme of a Chest, & that the corners doe remaine whole and entire. I finde this to be true by my ocular experience: but most of these Sepulchers lye loosely vpon the ground, as hauing bin digged from the places where they were setled, ouer the bodies which lye vnderneath them: to what end I know not, onely I thinke that some imagining there might be treasure hid vnder them, might digge them vp in hope to finde some Gold or Siluer vnder these tombes: but whosoeuer doe digge vp the Sepulchers of dead men for gaine of treasure, I wish they may be as much frustrated of their hopes as he was that in the Citie of Babylon did digge vp the Monument of Ninoris, Queene of the Babylonians, and the wife of King Nebuchadnezer, in the outside of whose Tombe stone, there was written a certaine Epitaph, by some one or other that ment to delude the Reader, for though the Epitaph promised treasure to him that should digge vp the Monument, yet after he had rooted it vp from the ground, instead of treasure he found this memorable inscription; Nisi auri insatibilis cupiditate flagrasse, nunquam in defunctorum cadauera sanitam tuam exeruisse. It grieved me to the heart that I could not learne either by inscriptions, or any other meanes, whose Monuments

these

these were: for it is vaine to be induced by coniectures, to say they were these or these mens; onely I hope no man will taxe me of a rash opinion, if I beleue one of them might be the Monument of King Iliu, the enlarger of the Citie of Troy; for I remember that Homer saith in his eleuenth Aeneid, that Iliu was buried in the open, as this was; and that another of them might be the Monument of King Priamus, it is not altogether vnlikely, for Virgil writeth in his second Aeneid that King Priamus, after the late fatall destruction of the Citie, was slaine by Pyrhus the Sonne of Achilles, neere the Troian shoare: for thus saith he — iacet ingens litore truncus. Now though mercilesse Achilles persecuted the dead carcase of Hector with that barbarous crueltie, as to dragge him starke naked at a Carts taile, three times about the wals of the Citie: yet it is likely they would so much honour the old siluer haired King Priamus (especially since they had now fully satisfied their furie, both by burning of the Citie and massacring of all the most Noble Citizens, and with the rest their last King) as to couer his body with some royall monument be- seeming his regall state: pardon me (gentle reader) for this my coniecture. I affirme nothing certainly, onely I gesse, as another industrious traveller would doe, that hath or shall obserue the same things that I haue done; that one of those goodly Monuments might be the Sepulcher of King Priamus.

From the place where these Tombes lay, we went toward the haven or mould of Troy, which seemeth to haue bin a notable place in former times; for there remaine worthy steps of antiquity to this day, a little on this side the water wee saw a very delicate trough of white Marble, which whether it serued for women to wash cloathes in, or for any beasts (as horses) to drinke in, I know not, the mould was in former times a conuenient harbour for little vessels, as Carmisals Gallies, Frigates, but I doubt whether any great Ships could securely ride at anchor there; for the water is so shallow, that I think a vessell of any great burthen will quickly touch ground, although perhaps in those daies, when the Citie did flourish, the water neere the shoare might be much deeper then it is now, by reason of the continuall scouring and clesing of the channell. There remaine certaine memorable antiquities at this mould: certaine faire gray Marble Pillars, in number ten, that appeare aboue the water, being infixed in the ground; more then the halfe of them I beleue are buried in the water: all these stand somewhat neere together, almost in a rowe. It is likely that they were heretofore placed there to this end, that Barges, Boates, and such kinde of vessels as anchored there, might by the meanes of cables, or other ropes be staied or tied there-to. There also I saw a very stately and gallant ascent from the landing place vponwards towards the Citie, a faire kinde of pile built in the water, reaching vp at the least two butlengths (according to my opinion) till it ioyneth with the land, and made in the forme of a wall: It is so broade that I beleue three Carts might easily goe together side by side vpon it: it is greatly ruined and broken downe, the stones being dissipated and scattered a sunder; onely the foundation of a part of it that ioyneth almost to the land, remaineth very entire to this day, for as I walked vp from the water towards the land by chance, I cast mine eyes vpon the left side of the mould, and found it a very notable foundation: and to the end I might the more exactly view it, I leaped downe vpon the sand to suruey the same: that part of the pile consisteth of a faire and strong white stone, squared out very artificially, and of a great length and thicknesse. As you walke vp from this mould towards the Citie, you may see the stately Pallace of the King before you, standing in a direct line opposite to your face: by the consideration of which I did the better confirme that beliefe in my selfe, that the Pallace, which I will shortly speake of, might be the place of the Kings royall residence: for it was a very delicate passage for the King, either in a Chariot or a Horse backe from this mould through a stately faire streete, to his owne Pallace, distant but a little mile from the water: from this mould wee went to a standing poole but a little remote from the shoare, being I thinke well neere a mile in compasse: which I first thought to haue bin fresh water, but when I tasted it, I found it salt, and therefore I gather that this is nothing but the inundation of the Sea, when it doth sometimes excede his bankes: hard by one side of the Poole I saw a principall relique of antiquitie, a goodly grey Marble Pillar, the fairest that euer I saw in my life till then, lying on the ground, and broken in the very midst: it was three and thirty Geometricall foot long (for I measured it very exactly with a Carpenters rule of twelue inches) and five thicke: neere to the same Pillar there is a broken fragment of Marble, lying in the water, of the same colour and proportion with the former Pillar, whereby I know that it was part of the same Pillar: this was the very head of the Pillar, being wrought with such a kinde of worke as is vied about the heads of Pillars: this part was five foot long, so that the whole Pillar was eight and thirty foot long, being of one entire stone as I thinke, though it be now broken in three peeces, which came to passe by the violent fall thereof.

But a little from this goodly Pillar, which I haue now mentioned, there is another almost as great, lying on the ground, and so couered with Brambles and Briers, that I could not perfectly obserue the length of it. Againe, about a butt length further, there is one very memorable gray Marble Pillar more, lying on the ground, some thirty foot long, foure foot thicke, and broken in the midst. As we ascended higher from the Poole towards the Pillar, wee obserued a very lamentable mentable rubbish of stones intermingled here and there with a few little fragments of Bricks, and disperſed ouer thoſe fields that were once filled vp with houſes, ſo that I could not tread vp on any plot of ground from the mould, till I came to the Pallace, but I found round about me old broken ſtones; in ſome places whereof I ſaw greene Corne growing, whereof I did not a little wonder, becauſe I could not conceiue how they ſhould plough vp ſuch hard ſtony earth: on the left hand of vs, as we aſcended the ſide of the hill, we left the wall of the Citie, which by the ruines that remaine there to this day, ſeemeth to haue bin a moſt ſtately thing indeede. Some thinke it is at the leaſt thirty foot high, and of a great thickneſſe; it conſiſteth of faire and great aſhler ſtones of a white colour, being built with the ſame from the very foundation, till towards the top; and then are built againe vpon the ſame with certaine leſſe ſtones: ſo that the whole in one part conſiſteth of two kinde of ſtones, a great faire aſhler, and a little rough ſtone in another part of the aſhler onely: this wall runneth vp a great way into the Country, being in ſome places broken and interrupted.

In the outſide of this Wall, which wee left on the left hand, wee obſerued diuers faire buttrefſes, which were made for the ſtrengthening of the ſame, by whom thoſe wals were built: I am vncertaine, but this I haue read, that Ilius the fourth King of the Citie, who enlarged the ſame, built ſome part of the wals of the Citie; and that Laomedon finiſhed the ſame wals, which being by Hercules deſtroyed, King Priamus being reſtored into his Country, after he was carried away captiue into Greece, reedified them laſt of all: as we aſcended the hill, wee left a little on the left hand of vs the ruines of a faire and ſtately building, which ſeemed to be the Pallace of ſome eminent Noble man, or Gentleman of the Citie, a good part of the wall remained and was of a faire height, hauing in the outſide certaine faire peeces of white and red Marble curiouſly wrought, ſtanding in the very corner of the wall: not farre from that we found a prettie Well, hauing a white Marble Pillar, which I therefore mention, becauſe I haue read that Wells are very ſcarſe in this part of the Troian territory.

In our iourney to the Pallace, wee found certaine faire peeces of ſtone, as curiouſly carued and wrought with exquisite borders and workes as euer I ſaw. In one great peece, but broken, I found an inſcription, which what it ment I could not deuife, it was written in Latine characters, viz. the word Numinid: likewise after I found a ſtately peece of white Marble of ſome foure foot long, and two foot broad, on the which was a very ancient inſcription in Latine words written with capitall Letters, but they are ſuch exoticke characters, and ſo worne out with antiquitie, that neither I my ſelfe, nor any elſe of my whole Company could perfectly read it: againe, after that wee found the ruines of a ſtately building neere to this Towne, built in a round forme, which without all queſtion was a Temple, dedicated to one of their heathen Gods, and therefore wee coniectured it to be a Religious Houſe, becauſe the manner of the ſtructure thereof differed much from the forme of all the other buildings that we ſaw there: in the inſide a little vnder the higher part of the wall, we perceiued ſome ſiue or ſixe peeces of white Marble ſtanding round in a rowe, and very artificially wrought.

A little from this Temple wee found a vault in the ground, which I thinke in former times had bin a large thing, and of a goodly length, but now it is almoſt ſtopped vp. I with ſome few more of our Company entred this vault, and found it full of ordure and dung of Cattle. Againe a little aboue this we came into another vault built with faire free ſtone, and ſtately arched this vault, was of a goodly height and length, and diſtinguiſhed with many arches throughout the whole length thereof: all our company entered it at one end, and went forth at another: here alſo wee ſaw abundance of ordure wherewith the bottoome of the vault was filled from one end to the other; the reaſon of it is becauſe the poore Heardſmen doe oftentimes in the winter put their Cattle all the night in theſe places: after that wee ſaw two more vaults vnder the ground, but entred neither: being now come ſomething neere to the Pallace, wee left on the right hand a ruined Caſtle or Fortreſſe, built vpon a Mount, about the lower part whereof were ſundry arches; this Fort (forſo I take it to haue bin) was built round, and thoſe arches ſtand in a faire row round about the ſame, an ornament paſſing faire to the building when it was entire: a great part of the ground betwixt the mould and the Pallace is beſet with certaine Trees of diuers kindes, as Mulberry trees, Figge trees, Boxe trees, Oliue trees, Liue Oake trees, Almond trees, whereof ſome wee ſaw beare bloſſomes when wee were there: alſo it beareth Broome of a great height, and ſuch as yeeldeth a prettie kinde of ſent: the next thing of remarque that preſented it ſelfe vnto vs, immediately before wee entered the Pallace, was a certaine heape of ſtones vpon the top of a Mount neere to the foote of the Caſtle, and diſperſed about the ſides of the ſame Mount: theſe are free ſtones, many whereof preſented a blackiſh hewe, and were cunningly ſquared out, as our aſhler ſtones of England for building. I neuer ſaw fairer ſtones in my liſe to adorne the frontiſpice of any Pallace then theſe were, and being ſo neere vnto the Pallace, I am perſwaded they are the ruines of ſome part thereof.

Hauing now beheld theſe foreſaid ſquare ſtones, we approached neere to the foot of the Pallace

Let the Reader pardon this long deſcription of Troies Ruines (ſome digreſſions I haue cut off) for I would at once preſent Troy acted by a Troian ſpirit, which may both profit the ſtudiouſ anti-quarie, and ſerue to reſolue and thaw the moſt frozen ſpirit of ſeuere grauity, or ſtupideſt ſtoike; melting ſome delights, if not extorting laughter from him.

which I thinke was by the ancient Poets both Greeke and Latine called Pergamum, by which word, whether they vnderstood the principall Castle of the Citie, or the Palace wherein the ancient Kings kept their Court, I cannot certainly affirme. The whole Frontispice consisted of a most beautiful white stone, cut square like our Azure stones in England, the fairest for the breadth, length, and thicknesse that euer I saw; though now through Antiquitie of time the beautifull grace of the stone is somewhat diminished. The whole front of the Palace sauing a little at the top consisteth of such square stones. Euery stone hath in the middle part of the front thereof a certaine little hole, which to what end it serued I know not. This front for a piece of plaine stone Worke doth yeeld the fairest shew that euer I saw in any Palace in my life. And though I thinke it is as ancient as the Citie of Troy, yet to strangers that saile vpon the Channell neere at hand it presenteth such a faire white shew, that the first time I looked vpon it without the helpe of an Opticke Glasse, I thought it had beene some new Building raised within these few yeeres.

The front is beautified with three Arches, whereof that in the rundle (which I thinke serued for a Gate) is farre the fairest, the other two standing in the same row, each on each side of the middle Arch, are by halfe lesser then that in the middle, which for height and breadth is by many degrees, the most magnificent that euer I saw, fairer not only then the goodliest Palace Gate that euer presented it selfe to mine eyes till then, but also then the greatest Gate of any Church that euer I beheld, which doth argue the incomparable magnificence of the Palace, when it flourished in his glory. It is some fortie Geometricall foote broad, and fixe and thirtie foot high, but from the very top of the Frontispice from the ground, I take it to bee eightie foot high, for I tooke the Altitude and Latitude of it by a Mathematicall Instrument. Now in that I call it a Gate, you must conceiue (I meane) not the Instrument of a Gate which serueth to shut and open (for there remaines not the least step of any such thing) but a voide and open space which (as it is credible) was once furnished with a stately Gate, which Gate now it is probable, consisted of two leapes. Neither of those leapes if it were strengthened with great barres of Iron and Nailes correspondent to the proportion of such a Gate (as goodly Gates are now adayes) I beleeeue could hardly bee opened or shut without the maine strength of ten exceeding strong men. The most entire and solid piece of Worke that I saw standing amongst all the ruines of Troy, was this front of the Palace, which standeth so perfectly, that I could not perceiue the least blemish or cracke in the whole Frontispice sauing in the vpper part thereof, about the top which consisteth of Bricke, and is built in a bending forme. Besides, there is one little defect more for certaine stones of white Marble, which are pretily contriued in a row aboue the top of the Gate, and curiously wrought, are somewhat broken. At the corners of the middle Arch there are two pieces of white Marble very exquisitely carued with curious Borders and Workes expressed therein, the like also is in the further corner of the wall of this stone, from the which I brake of certaine stones to carrie with mee into my Countrey, and to reserue them in my safe custodie for memorable Antiquities while I liue at the top of the middle Arch, there are two prettie holes in which Bees doe breed honey at a certaine season of the yeere, as a certaine Turke that shewed vs these Antiquities did inforce vs. Halfe of the middle Arch is now stopped vp with the like kinde of great stones as are compacted into the Frontispice: and in the other halfe which is partly open, there remaines diuers confused heapes of the like stones. It happened that when wee had thoroughly satiated our eyes, with contemplation of these ancient ruines, the Chiefetaine of the company, a sworne Brother of mine, whom I haue often named before in this my Booke,

Master Robert Rugge obseruing that I had taken paines for some few houres in searching out the most notable Antiquities of this the worthiest part of Troy to yeeld mee some kinde of guerdon or renumeration for my paines, in a merrie humour drew his Sword out of his Scabbard, and ascending to one of those great stones that lye in the open part of this middle Gate Knighted mee, that kneeled vpon another stone on my right knee, by the name of the first English Knight of Troy, and at the Knighting of mee, pronounced those wittie Verses ex tempore.

Master Coryats
Knighthood.

Coryate no more, but now a Knight of Troy,

Odcombe no more, but henceforth Englands Joy.

Brave Bruce of our best English wits commended,

True Troiane from Aeneas race descended.

Rise top of wit, the honour of our Nation,

And to old Illium make a new Oration.

Two poore Turkes that stood but a little way from vs when hee drew his naked Sword, thought verily hee meant to haue cut off my head for some notorious villany that I had perpetrated. Those Verses I answered ex tempore, also our Musketeeres discharged two volleys of shot for ioy of my Knighthood.

His Verses.

Loe heere with prostrate knee I doe embrace

The gallant title of a Troiane Knight.

In Priams Court which time shall nere deface;

A grace unknowne to any Brittish Wight.

This noble Knighthood shall Fames Trumpe resound,

To Odcombes honour maugre Enuie fell,

O're famous Albion throughout that Island round,

Till that my mournfull friends shall ring my knell.

Withall I pronounced this extemporall Oration standing vpon a high stone at the entrance of the great Gate, calling my Countrimen my Commilitones, because I was at that time their Captaine and Leader next to the Chiefetaine. By Commilitones, I vnderstand fellow Souldiers, which terme Linie doth often vse in his feigned Orations, that hee bringeth Captaines in speaking to their Souldiers.

Master CORIAT'S Oration. Purus, putus CORIATVS.

Quintessence of CORIAT.

MY worthy Commilitones, that which in the whole race of my life heretofore I neither wished nor hoped for, much lesse expected, loe now by the decree and ordinance of the Fates hath most fortunately hapned vnto mee. I am arrined (with the rest of my deere Countrimen) after so many bitter stormes, and cruell conflicts of the winds, in the most renowned place of the whole World (only Gods sacred Citie of Ierusalem excepted) ancient Troy, old decayed Ilum, the Ladie or rather Queene of all Asia; yea the principall and most noble part thereof, is the most Noble place which our Brittish feete doe now tread vpon. Me thinks, we being conducted hither by our good Genius haue euen aspired to the eminent degree of happinesse which thousands of our Countrimen that haue passed alongst this Coast, being carried away with a prosperous gale of wind haue wished to attaine vnto, but haue bene frustrated of opportunity to enioy these noble ruines that you here see haue had the attractiue vertue like the Adamant or Loadstone to draw hither some of the most famous persons of the World to contemplate the same. Hither came the greatest and most victorious Monarch that euer lined Alexander the Great who hauing erected an Altar to the honour of Achilles from whose stocke he was lineally descended by his Mother Olympias, to the end to offer Sacrifice vpon it to his Ghost hard by his Tombe, which to this day remaines, hee pronounced him happie, for that after his death he had gotten so Noble a Poet as Homer to emblason and celebrate his inuincible courage. Hither came the Learned Emperour Adrian; Our Emperour Septimius Seuerus after he had destroyed Byzantium, his Sonne and Successour in the Empire Antonius Bassianus Caracalla with many thousand worthy Peeres (I dare confidently affirme) that from time to time to come hither to suruey these (that I may speake with the Prince of Latine Poets)

Campos ubi Troia fuit.

behold (my louing Commilitones) that lamentable rubbish of stones which hath bene honoured by the most elegant and singular Poets that euer handled Quill. This ruinous Palace which you see heere was the place without all question of the Royall Court of the most ancient Troiane Kings (as by the magnificence of these Arches, goodly squared stones and other remarkable steps of venerable antiquitie is very infallibly to be gathered) namely King Ilus, whom I take to be the first Founder thereof, Laomedon and his unfortunate Sonne Priamus the last Troiane King. There you see those loftie and stately walls, which though they were for thousands of yeeres since subuerted first by Hercules, and afterward by the hostile force of the warlike Græcians: yet you see the foundations thereof were not rooted vp from the ground, but that to this day most notable ruines thereof (observe I pray you with an exact and accurate view the thickenesse, the height of them, the goodlinesse of the squared stones) doe present themselves as wofull spectacles to all strangers, and are objects of sympathy and commiseration to the most Adamantine heart in the World: there you may see decayed Castles and Fortifications: there also in another place subterranean Crypts and Vaults, which I beleene, serued partly for Granaries and Magazines of Corne in the time of the decennall siege of the Citie, and partly to containe Cisternes of water for the publike vse of the Citizens. Beneath also you may see a great multitude of broken Marble Pillars standing vpon the ground, and dispersed ouer many parts of the old Citie. Cast your eyes againe vpon some other parts, where you may behold Greene Wheate growing amidst the old fragments of stones, and then remember the notable speech of the Poet Ouid, Iam seges est ubi Troia fuit, &c. by all these pitifull rudera, I find that memorable sentence of the Greeke Poet Heliod to be verified.

τὴν Ἰσθμὸν ὅπου ἦν ἡ Τροία Ζεὺς ὤλεσε πάντα.

That is, Thunder thumping Ioue can make the loftiest matters the most low and despicable! Alas (my Commilitones) can you behold these things with irrelenting and dry eyes; let mee tell you as the wandering Prince of Troy Noble Eneas told the Punicke Queene Dido in his Harangue vnto her concerning the destruction of this Citie

Quis talia fando

Myrmidonum, Dolopumue aut duri miles Vlysses,

Temperet à lachrymis?

Risum teneatis amici?

Certainly, the consideration of this grievous desolation may iustly draw both sorrow from the hearts and teares from the eyes of all such as are endued with a true instinct of humanitie, for what more Tragical example can you find in the whole Vniuersa of the inconstancie and mutabilitie of fortune then in this quondam gallant Citie? it flourished once in as great glorie as any Citie vpon the Earth did in her time, and her glorie was untainted and unstained for the space of three hundred yeeres wanting one, being gouerned by six potent Kings, the first of which being Dardanus, reigned sixe and thirty yeeres, Eriethonius, seuentie fine; Tros, sixtie; Ilus, a great amplifier and enlarger of the City 55. Laomedon sixe and thirtie. Priamus the last Prince fortie: in all which time Fortune shined as merrily vpon her as vpon any other Citie then extant in the world, sauing for the ten yeeres of Priamus, in which it was besieged by the Greekes. But at last after the reuolution and period of that ten yeeres siege, it suffered such a rufull demastation by the meanes of that fatall Horse of armed men, that was conueyed within the walls of the Citie, the mercilesse rage of the fire that was scattered euery where by the hostile hand, and carried to and fro by the wings of the wind, spoiling and depopulating all it met with all, that after that time neuer was there found any man that would reedifie any part thereof. This happened 1183. yeeres before the Incarnation of Christ, and 430. yeeres before the founding of Rome by Romulus, and in the time that Iephtha iudged Israel. The like elsewhere hath happened to many other ancient and noble Cities that now lie buried in their owne ruines: as to Niniue, Babylon, Tyrus, Carthage, Sanguntion, and Numantia in Spaine; Athens, Thebes, Lacedemon and Corinth in Greece; Ptolemais now called Acon in Syria, and diuers other notable Cities; none of which I beleene doe yeeld those stately ruines that you now behold in this part of the Troiane Territorie.

You may also obserue as in a cleere Looking-glasse one of the most pregnant examples of Luxurie, that euer was in the World in these confused heapes of stones, that lie before your eyes. For Adulterie was the principall cause of the ruines of this Citie, which is well knowne to all those that haue a superficial skill in Historie, by the remembrance whereof I will now take occasion to wish one charitable wish to the Metropolitane Citie of mine owne Countrie, and with the same as with an Epilogue conclude my speech, that as Luxurie destroyed this Citie of old Troy, to which most ardent petitions vpon my prostrate knee, I beseech the great Iehoua, which is the rewarder of Chastitie, and seuerer punisher of Incontinence, to avert the punishment from our new Troy, (for indeed London was in former times called Troynouant) which I thinke is as much polluted and contaminated with extrauagant lusts, as euer was this old Troy.

Felix quem faciunt aliena pericula contum.

Directly beyond this forelaid middle gate as you goe forward into the inward part of the Palace, there standeth another stately Arch, which (I thinke in former times was garnished with a Gate also: this Arch is almost as large as the greatest at comming into the Palace, likewise on each side of them both on the right hand and left hand, as you goe betwixt the middle Arch at the entrance of the Palace, and the opposite Arch which I haue last mentioned, there is another stately Arch which, I thinke, serued for an entrance into the same of the principall parts of the Palace. After this we saw another part of the Palace, which is very worthy the mention, tenne stately Arches standing in a row ioyntly together. These stand intire without any diminution or impayring, euen on the left hand of the Palace, and make a beautifull shew. These are foureene foot high, and ten foot and a halfe thicke, and are built with the like hard stone as the wals of the Citie. There are three Arches more about the same, halfe buried in the ground. Then at the very corners about the last of these three Arches there standeth the ruine of another most magnificent Arch raised to a very loftie height, but broken about the top, at which Arch there beganne the South wall of the Palace, betwixt that goodly Arch and another iust correspondent to the same in symmetry of workmanship. There are sixe more of a lesser quantitie, but much more ruined then the ten intire Arches that I haue already mentioned. Againe there ranne on in the same series of building betwixt the middle great arch, and another of the same quantitie, that standeth at the farther corner, sixe Arches more like the former, so that in that row there are twelue Arches, and three more of a very sumptuous and goodly Architecture, which when they all stood intire beautified with their seuerall ornaments, which are now abolished, presented to the beholder, without all doubt, a most stately shew. Againe, on the right hand of the Palace, but a little distant from the same, there remayneth the ruine of a very ancient Building, which wee coniectured to haue beene some Temple dedicated to the Ethnike Gods. From the Palace wee were conducted by our Turkish guides, to another old ruined Building some quarter of a mile off; very little whereof doth appeare about the ground, but if you descend into certaine Vaults vnder the ground, you may obserue many memorable ruines. Diuers stately Arches standing intirely, wonderfull thicke wals, arched roofes made by Geometrical worke, as (I suppose) without any Iron or Timber. The Turkes told vs that this was once a passing faire Palace, the other parts of the Building being cleane defaced and demolished, so that not so much as any little ruines thereof are left, the stones, Marble Pillers and other ornaments beeing carried away into other Countries. For diuers of these Troiane ruines haue beene transferred to many of the Neighbour Countries to serue for their publike and priuate Buildings, as to Constantinople, Lemnos, Lesbos, Natolia, Syo, and diuers other parts. Yea the Turkes from some part or other of the Troiane Territories doe daily carry away stones in their Gallies. Moreouer, they told vs that this Palace ser-ued for the Troian Queene to inhabite and keepe her Court in. Heere at this ruine they shewed vs a certaine Vault vnder the ground, wherein there was found great Treasure within these few yeeres, by certaine men that searched it out very diligently with Candles and Torches in their hands, and the same Treasure was put into the Coffers of the present Great Turke that liueth now, Sultan Achmet.

Having seene all these things, wee went towards the Sea-side to take Boat and to goe backe to our Ship, but betwixt the Palace and the Ship we obserued these three things worthy relation; first a stately Arch standing alone by it selfe, which heretofore serued for a Spring or Fountaine, but I could not see the least drop of water about the Arch, for the Spring is utterly dried vp, onely there is a Well neere to the same. Secondly, the ruines of a Wall that runneth vp into the Southerne part of the land, which is of such a marueilous thicknesse that vnto most of the readers it will seeme perhaps incredible. For it was at the least thirtie Geometrical foot thicke, for I measured it very exactly. The stones of which it was built were rough and hard, but a little further vp in the Countrey we obserued some other part of the same Wall to stand more intirely, and to be built with such goodly square Ashler stone as is in the great wall before mentioned. Thirdly, a ruined old Castle or Fortification erected vpon a Mount, a Fort of great strength and beaurie in ancient times: now it is onely a Shepheards habitation. We perceiuing that it was Inhabited by some people went into it, hoping to haue bought some Wine for the refreshing of our selues.

20 But when wee entred the same, in stead of people wee found onely the excrements of Cattell, and a place where some Shepheard or Heardsmen had reposed himselte. Also wee observed a very miserable rubbish of Stones that were dissipated and scattered ouer the face of the whole ground euery where within and without the Walles, after that I went to a plot of arable Ground, where I saw a Plough-man hold the Plough, and my selfe and one Master Francis Flyer did the like one after another, that if wee liue to be Old men we may say in our old age, we had once holden the Plough in the Troiane Territorie, especially in that part we saw the Citie stood. After this we saw Mount Ida, being by my estimation some two miles distant from that place, but we had not the opportunitie to goe so neere to it as to view it exactly. I wonder that the Epithets of Nemorosa should be giuen to it by the Poets, for I could perceiue no Tree at all growing about it, and doubt whether any grew vpon it in former times, by 30 reason of the rockie and stonie matter it consisteth of, wee onely discerned the loftie toppe of it called by the antient Poets, both Gargarus and Dyndima, vpon which Cybels Priests were called Idai, Dactyli, Galli, and Curetes, did celebrate their Sacrifices in honour of her, being the Mother of the Gods. I vnderstand that store of Turpentine doth grow vpon the Hill and the sides of it.

These notable things that I haue seen in Troy are so worthy the obseruation, that I would not for five hundred pounds but I had seene them, and had I not seene them now, I thinke I should haue taken a journey out of England of purpose to see the same. Therefore let me aduise all my Country-men that meane to trauell into the world for obseruation, to see this famous place in their Trauels, as being farre the most worthiest of all the ruined places in the world that are not Inhabited.

At last when wee came to the shoare side to enter our Boat before wee left the land, we ascended a little Mount situate hard by the Sea, which, it is likely to haue beene made by the Art of man and not by Nature, and that in the time of the tenne yeares Warres betwixt the Grecians and Troians. Another artificiall Mount of the same kind I obserued beyond that also. By whom (whether by the Grecians or by the Troians) and to what end they were raised, I doe not know. Onely I coniecture they were made by the Troians, to the end that from the same they might looke over the Walls, which I thinke were built alongst the Sea-coast, and so by Darts, Slings, Stones, Arrowes, and such other war-like Instruments to annoy the Greekes riding at Anchor neere to the shoare.

50 Besides the fruitfull Valley that I haue mentioned, which lyeth at the backside of the Promontorie Sygeum, through which runneth the Riuer Simois, there is another most fertile and delicious Valley, that lyeth by the Sea-side opposite to Tenedos, which I thinke is as pleasant and far a Valley as any in the world, being extended at the least a dozen miles in length alongst the Sea-coast, and some ten miles as I coniecture in breadth, the ground being as fruitfull to produce all manner of Commodities as any plot of ground vnder the Sunne, but by reason that the Inhabitants of the Countrey are oftentimes infested by Pirats and men of Warre, which take away from them what they list, they cannot find any secure place of habitation in all that tract: by meanes whereof it commeth to passe, that there are few dwelling Houses there; and so consequently the Coast is more vntilled and vnmanned then otherwise it would bee. Notwith-
60 standing there are diuers goodly plots of Corne, onely Wheat to be seene in sundry parts of the Valley neere to the Sea-side, but the other parts of the Valley further in the Countrey seeme vnto those that behold it a farre off vpon the Sea, to bee couered wholly with Wood, which consisteth especially of liue Oake-trees. By a liue Oake-tree, I meane a strange kind of Oake which groweth in diuers parts of Asia as well as heere, that differeth much from our English Oake, the body or trunke of it is much lesser then of our Forrest Oakes, that are but of an ordinarie size, also they are much lower then ours. As for the wood of this Tree it seemeth to be of an impenetrable hardnesse, such as no Axe can cleaue or deuide a sunder without a great deale of difficultie when it is dry, but being greene it is easily hewed downe. It beareth a kind of Fruit or Acorne somewhat differing from ours, which is called Valania, which serueth for diuers vses. For besides that, it feedeth and fatneth Hogges making the flesh eate passing sweetly, they canne their Leather with it, moreouer most of the Turkish Ships are made of this Wood, but it lyeth a long time in the water before they cleaue it and worke it for the Ship timber.

But me thinkes I heare some Troian complaine of another tedious ten-yeeres Siege: I will therefore abruptly breake off the rest, with his comming to Constantinople, Entertainment there, his Oration to the Lord Ambassadour, Sir Paul Pinder, and manifold kindneses from him, and other Constantinopolitan English: I will suddenly bring you in vpon him in a Franciscan Frierie, beholding a Superstitious Tragedie, which you shall heare from himselfe, with other Relations of that Citie.

Master CORYATS Constantinopolitan Observations abridged.

Self-whipping.
Penitentia penitenda. Herein we will allow the Popish Doctrine of merit. But these hypocrites which will doe Penance by others must goe to Heauen by proxie too.

Master Coryats Fortune: but it is fortun'd to proue a lie: the more the pitie, not for Oedombes sake so much and the Syrenicall crue, as for the curious diligence of many his obseruations, which might to the wisest haue proued profitable.

THE first of Aprill being Thursday, and the day immediatly before Good-friday, I with diuers of my COUNTRYMEN went about midnight to the Monastery of the Franciscan Friers, where within a little after I came thither, I obserued a very rigorous and austere kind of Discipline, whereof indeed I had often heard before that time, but neuer saw till then. Iust about the point of Midnight a little after Masse was begun, certaine fellowes prostrating themselves in the middle of the Quire of the Church, directly before the high Altar, Whipped themselves verely cruelly, and continued in the mercilesse punishment of themselves at the least an houre and a halfe. At the first I thought they had beene some of the Friers themselves but therein I erred, for they loue to spare their flesh though it be otherwise reported of them. There were of those some foure or fise and were indeed certaine Galley Slaues, that in lieu of the punishment which they did vndergoe for other men, that against Easter had confessed their sinnes, and were enioyned a certaine for their offences, were to be released from the Gallies. This I vnderstand to bee the Custome every yeere, that the richer sort of people hauing confessed their sinnes to the Priest, and thereupon required to performe such a Penance, doe procure these kind of Slaues vpon condition of Libertie to vndertake this punishment for them. The poore Villaines did endure such bitter chastisement which they inflicted vpon themselves, that I could scarce behold them with drie eyes: their Faces were couered with Canuasse vayles so that no man could perceiue any of them, and all the middle part of their backe was naked which they lashed with certaine Napkins, at the ends whereof were Sisters, and againe at the end of those Sisters were inclosed certaine litle sharp peeces of Iron, made like the straight part of the rowell of a Spurre, which at the very first blow that it layd vpon the skinnie did easily draw blood. They kept a certaine order in laying on their blowes, now on the right shoulder, & after ouer the left, in the space of a quarter of an houre, I saw one of them that dealt somewhat roughly with himselfe by redoubling his blowes a little faster then the rest, did fetch off all the skin from the middle part of his backe, which was a very dolefull and tragicall Spectacle, and when hee had very bitterly whipped himselfe, there came a certaine fellow with a Cloth in his hand steeped in Vineger, with which he wiped away the blood that it should not rankle. After which the Slave continued whipping of himselfe after a very terrible and cruell manner, but most of the rest fauoured themselves much more then this man did. Amongst diuers others Gentlemen of qualitie that came thither to behold this spectacle, the French Ambassadour presented himselfe with great Deuotion. This seuer Discipline being now ended, one of the Friers ascended the Pulpit and made a Sermon in the Italian Tongue concerning the Passion of Christ.

The Tuesday in the Easter weeke my Lord went to the Captaine Bashawes, and my selfe attended vpon him. At his returne from the Bashawes Palace, his Lordship espying a certaine Turkish Fortune-teller called Rama, Fishing vnder the wall of the Seraglio neere to a holy Well, the water whereof is good (He was Fortune-teller to the Grand Signior himselfe) one that was a kinsman of *Mahomet*s, for hee ware a Turbet of a very deepe green die. Vnto him my Lord sent me with Master Edward Cannock his Secretary and one of his Druggermen, to the end he should tell me my Fortune, whereupon he deliuered vnto me two Dice, and willed them to cast them vpon a certaine smooth greene Stone that lay before him, which when I had done, hee wrote with his Pen certaine Turkish Characters vpon the same stone, by vertue whereof he Prognosticated my Fortune and presaged to this effect, as the Druggerman interpreted his speech, viz. That I was a man desirous to Trauell into remote Regions, that according to my desire I should trauell farre, and should be in danger for my Religion sake, and should also escape that danger, after that I should come to a great Citie (perhaps he meant London) where many would flocke about about me to heare me Discourse of those things that I had seene and done in my Trauels. At last Master Secretary gaue him certaine Aspers for a gratuitie: hee said also that I should write a Booke of my Trauels, and publish it to the benefit of my Countrymen, and many thousands besides.

There is a Colledge of Turkish Monkes in Galata, that are called Daruises, neere to one of their publike Buriall places, who euery Tuesday and Friday (which is the Turkish Sabbath) doe performe the strangest exercise of Deuotion that euer I saw or heard of. It was my chance to see it the ninth of Aprill, with some other English-men that went thither to obserue the same, and therefore I will write a little of it according to mine owne experience. About halfe an Daruises, a kind of Turkish Friars.

Fashion of their Habite.

Mahometan Holies.

Daruises strange turnings.

The whole company of them being now seled in their places, and holding their Turkish manuscript Bookes in their hands, a certaine Singing-man sitting a part in an vpper roome began to sing certaine Hymnes, but with the most vnpleasant and harsh notes that euer I heard, exceedingly differing from our Christian Church singing, for the yelling and disorderly squeaking of them did euen grate mine eares. Whensoever hee pronounced the Name of Mahomet, all of them did cast downe their Heads to their knees. After hee had done, the Interpreter of the Law ascended into a Chaire, and read a certaine Turkish Booke for some halfe houre to the Assembly, which containd the Mahometane Doctrine, but when hee named him they fell prostrate vpon their Faces and kissed the ground. Almost a quarter of an houre before he had done, three Pipers sitting in the roome with the Singer, began to play vpon certaine long Pipes not vnlike Tabors, which yeelded a very ridiculous and foolish Musicke, and continued so very neere a quarter of an houre after the Clergie man had ended his Lecture: and with them there played another, that stricke with his hands a strange kind of Instrument made of Mettall, in the forme of a kind of Bason. Hauing played very neere a quarter of an houre, vpon a sodaine they sounded much louder then ordinarie, whereupon some five and twentie of the two and fiftie Daruises, suddainly rose vp bare legged and bare-footed, and casting aside their vpper Garment some of them hauing their their breasts all vncovered, they began by little and little to turne about the Interpreter of the Law turning gently in the middelt of them all, afterward they redoubled their force and turned with such incredible swiftnesse, that I could not chuse but admire it. Amongst the rest, there was one little Boy of some twelue yeares of age, that turning in a corner of the roome stricke no small admiration in all the Spectators that were Strangers. This turning they kept for the space of one whole houre at the least: during which time, sometimes they turned exceeding swiftly, sometimes very gently. After they had halfe done, the Singer in the vpper roome began to sing againe, at the pronounciation of some of whose words, the Daruises sodainly mumbled out certaine strange termes, with a most hideous kind of murmuring that did in a manner terrifie and astonish vs that were meere Strangers to these Ceremonies. This they did three or foure severall times with an acclamation of all the Turks that stood by. The forme of their Dauncing is as strange as the continuance of their swiftnesse, for sometimes they stretch out their Armes as farre as they can in length, sometimes they contract them in a lesser compasse, sometimes they hold them about their Heads, sometimes againe they performe certaine merry gestures, as if they were drawing a Bow and shooting forth an Arrow. Likewise some of them did continue turning during the whole time in one and the selfe same place, and others more forward from one corner to another. This exercise now driuing to an end, one of the Daruises beginneth some Prayer in Arabique, and continually turning about with with the rest of the Company, pronounceth it with a very audible voyce, and his Prayer being ended there is an vpsshot of this ridiculous and Ethnike deuotion for this time, after it had continued almost an houre and a halfe. The violence of their turning is so great, that I haue heard some of them haue fallen downe dead in the place, through the extremitie of their swift Circumgyration, and whosoeuer hee is that doth so, is esteemed for a Saint. These Feasts are like those Trietericall Orgia that were performed by the furious Myrmalores the Priests of Bacchus, to the honour of their drunken God, vpon the Mountaines of Cithaeron in Beotia.

These Daruises though they are Religious men haue no lands to maintaine them as the Christian Monasteries haue, but a certaine stipend payed them euery day, partly by the Grand Signior, and partly by certaine Bashawes, and it is esteemed for so Holy an order, that diuers Bashawes haue renounced their Dignitie and pompe of the world, and entred themselves into this Order for the better saluation of their soules. And at this day the Grand Signior hath a Brother of this Socitie that lieth in the Seraglia, whom he hath often intended to put to Death, according to the old principle of State that hath bene these many yeares obserued amongst the Turkish Emperours, but hee hath hapned to fall into some bitter Disease whensoever he hath thought vpon any such matter, which is the reason that he yet suffereth him to liue.

The twentieth of Aprill, there began a Fire in Constantinople about midnight, which was like to haue done much hurt, if it had not bene prevented by the care and industrie of the Captaine Bashaw. For hee came thither a little after it began with a great multitude of men to repress the furie of the flame as much as in them lay. Hee was so furious at that time, that with a certaine war-like Instrument called in the Turkish Tongue a Capoock, which is somewhat like a Mace, he stricke a Ianizarie that he saw rifling of a House, so fiercely vpon the head, that immediatly he fell downe dead in the place: and had done the like to some other Ianizaries that were the adherents of the other, in his enterprize of ransacking other mens goods, if they had not sodainly escaped by flight. For indeed it doth happen that Ianizaries doe of purpose set Houses on fire, euen to the great endangering of the Citie for prey and spoyle sake, especially the houses of Jewes. For which cause the Jewes within these few yeares, haue both made their Houses stronger then they were wont to be, and also haue made Vaults vnder their houses, into the which they may conueigh their Goods, whensoever there chanceth any sodaine Fire. At the time of this Fire there came the Bustan which is a great man of the Grand Signiors, with two thousand men out of the Seraglia, for the helping of the Bashaw. For indeed it behoued the Bashaw to looke to the maine chance for the quenching of the Fire, in the time of the Grand Signiors absence, least if there should haue bene any great hurt done, perhaps he might haue lost his Head after the Kings returne to the Citie, but the hurt was not so great as it was feared to haue bene, for there were not aboue fiftie Houses burnt. It is the Custome that whensoever any Fire riseth in the Citie, to Hang vp him in whose House it beginneth, as now a Cooke in whose house it began was Hanged presently after the Fire ceased. The like kinde of Fires and much more furious haue bene often seene in this Citie, as they are mentioned by the antient Historiographers, which haue wasted not only the priuate Houses of the Inhabitants, but also Temples, Statues, Pillers and other beautifull Ornaments of the Citie.

The one and twentieth of Aprill about fixe of the clocke at night, I saw the most resplendent and glittering shew that euer I did in my life. For the Turkes hanged all their Turkish Mosquies both of Constantinople and Galbata with Lampes; which stood in a very decent and comely order round about the circle of their slender Towers, where the Priest doth vse to call the people to Prayers at certaine houres limited with a very loude voyce. Some of these Towers haue two and some three Circles in them, each aboue another, the shew at the first hanging out of the Lampes seemed strange vnto me, that neuer had seene the like before; but about Mid-night when it was much darker, then when they were first hanged out, they yeilded a passing glorious and refulgent Spectacle, for it was my hap to see them againe. Aboue all the rest of the Towers those foure that belong to the Temple of Solyman the magnificent, made a most incomparable bright shew, for two of the foure being adorned with three Circles had three rowes of Lampes hanged out, and the other two with two Circles had two more; the Towers of which Temple made the brauest shew of all the Towers of the whole Citie. These Lampes hanged till foure of the clocke in the Morning, and were then taken downe. The occasion of the hanging out of them, was because that Night Mahomet was borne in the Citie of Medina in Arabia. These kind of Lampes they hang out at foure times of the yeare besides; as in the time of Ramazan, which is their Lent and lasteth thirtie dayes, during which time, it is not lawfull for any Turke to eat or drinke before Night, and then they vse to recompence their day Abstinence with their night Gluttonie. Also in that space Ianizaries commit insolencies against Christians, taking money from whomsoever they meet by the way. The second beginneth in December and lasteth three dayes, and is called Hodglar-byram, &c.

Mustapha, since this, twice Emperour, and thrice Religious or Daruise.

Great Fire,

Lampes.

The eight and twentieth of April, being Wednesday, about five of the clocke in the morning, my Lord and his Company (whereof my selfe was one) went into Adrinople street in Constantinople neere to the gate of Adrinople, to see the Grand Signior come into the Citie from Adrinople, whether hee went vpon the one and twentieth day of December last; the pompe of it was so gallant that I neuer saw the like in my life; neither doe I thinke that the like hath beene vsed amongst any Princes of the world saving these Musulmen, since the time of the triumphs of the Romane Emperours, when they went to the Capitol, after the conquering of some famous Countrey: the place where hence he came that morning is called Dome Baban, a place standing by it self in the Countrey some three miles from Constantinople; the people that attended vpon his person at that time, were said to amount to the number of 15000. First rode the Subbathaw of Constantinople and Galata, with one hundred men on horsebacke, and other seruants also they had which went a foot, carrying certaine Muskets in their hands. Next followed French Souldiers, a company of fugitiue Rogues, that to get a large pay somewhat more then they haue, either in their owne Countrey, or could get in the Low Countries, fled to Constantinople to bee entertained by the Grand Signior, of whom the greatest part of them doth receiue halfe a Doller a day for their pay: their Collonell rode with some twentie of his principall men, and all the rest to the number of one hundred with Muskets on foot; after them the Officers of the Arsenall a foot, with the chiefe of them a horsebacke, certaine of them carrying a Gallie with a man in it, a verie strange and ridiculous conceit: for indeede euerie one laughed heartily at it; after them came Squibsters, but how many in number I could not vnderstand; then came a great multitude of Gemiglandes all on foot, whereof one had a feather sticking in his flesh, euen in his face somewhat neere to his right eye: then a Coach couered with cloth of Gold, which serued for the Grand Signiors riding; wherein himselfe and his Sultana did vse to ride: then a Delee, that is a foole with a Bears skinne vpon his backe, then Chausers on horsebacke, with Brasse and Iron Maces in their hands, which they carried vpon their right shoulderts, these were in number 200. and their seruants a foot sixe hundred, and after them seuen Coaches, then came Ianizaries on foot foure thousand with Muskets; some of these weare Beares skinnies; and after them other Ianizaries on horsebacke, euerie one hauing a Speare in his hand, with a little Flag in the same; after them againe other kind of Ianizaries that weare leather Cappes, on the top of which were great white Ostriches feathers: then came certaine Horses driuen by men of purpose, that carried water in Leather Bottles for men to drinke in: then certaine Turkish Saints with verie long haire, and ragged clothes. Next followed a black Elephant, after them Ladies, hundred & twelue on horsebacke, with three hundred men attending on them, and the Mustie: then head Visiers, being eight or nine of the most principall of Turkie, with one hundred Chausers their attendants; then squeaking Musicke both Vocall and Instrumentall. The Daruises a foot vsing a ridiculous shooting and elevation of their voyce. Then some one hundred Pikemen a foot, who besides their Pikes carried also Bowes and Arrowes. Then Mahomets kinsmen a horsebacke, with greene Halberts. Then Vice Cadies on horsebacke, then Ladies againe; then nine goodly Horses of the Kings led by Chausers, verie richly adorned with Saddles and Horse clothes of great price, a meruellous rich Target, being hanged at the Pomell of the Saddle of each Horse made of massie beaten Gold, and garnished with varietie of precious Stones, each of these Horses is saide to be worth two hundred pound sterling. Next the Kings Grey-hounds, being ledde and clothed with coverings of Cloth of Gold: of these there were at the least one hundred. Then came Chausers on horsebacke, namely twentie to attend the Kings person, and had fiftie seruants more attending vpon them: then rode one with a Streamer of greene Taffata, wherein was an Arabian Inscription in very great Letters; this is said to haue beene vsed by Mahomet himselfe their Prophet, in his warres with Cosroes King of Persia and others also. Neere vnto this Ensigne, was carried another Ensigne (which is the common Standard that they vse in their warres, as heeretofore the Romans vsed the Eagle) that is the taile of the Horse fastened vpon the toppe of a long Staffe. Next went his Archers, called Solackes, with Bowes and Arrowes attired in fine linnen shirts that reached to the calfe of their legges and long sleeves curiously wrought with delicate seames of Needle Worke. Also they had coverings for their head (Hattes I cannot fitly call them) which consisted of Siluer fairely gilt, with long feathers, &c. The one and twentieth of May happened a terrible fire: three great fiers had fallen out betwixt the twentieth of April, and the one and twentieth of May.

Grasshoppers sometimes doe fall so thicke in Constantinople, and the Territories about the Citie in the Summer time, and that especially in Iune or Iuly, being brought in with an Easterne wind, that a man cannot passe in the streets of Constantinople or Galata, but hee shall euerie where tread vpon them. Also they flie so thicke vpon the tops of houses, that they doe euen couer the tiles: and in Medowes, Pastures, and vpon Hills, lie in such infinite and innumerable multitudes, that they seeme to couer the grasse, and in the high-ways horses that goe tread vpon them and kill them in their iourney; likewise vpon trees of all sorts, Vines, Corne, &c. they fall in such abundance, that sometimes they annoy and spoile great store of Fruit; besides they are much greater then ours are in the West parts of Europe.

- Butterflies great. to equivo. I observed in Constantinople in the moneth of May, certaine Butterflies as great as Reare-mise with foure wings, each whereof distinguished with a round spot made circularly, consisting of two colours Purple and Blacke, and two Hornes in their head made in the forme of branches of a Tree, they spawne thirtie or fortie Spawnes in a night.
- Sodomie. All the Turkes and others, that doe ride in Constantinople or Galata, doe couer the backe and buttocks of the Horse with a faire cloth. The Turkes are exceedingly giuen to Sodomie, and therefore diuers keep prettie boyes to abuse them by preposterous venerie. A Cock and Hen of Pheasants sold for sixtie Aspers, and Partridges for twentie Aspers a paire. Hawkes called Fawls cons so cheape, that a man may buy one young for twentie Aspers, being bred within five or sixe miles of the Citie.
- Cheapnesse.
- Fiery Flies. In the Moneth of May and Iuly, I observed euery euening in Constantinople about Ieuens of the clocke, certaine little Flies flying abroad in the aire with fiery tailes, which seemed to mee the first time that I saw them, certaine little sparkes of fire flying to and fro in the aire. Afterward hauing taken one of them and opened his bellie, I found a certaine bright and glistering sparke of fire in his taile, which I neuer saw before. These kinde of Flies doe much vse to flie abroad in the Summer time in Constantinople, onely in the euening, which a stranger that neuer saw them before, would take to be true flakes of fire. There are in the Turkish Empire two men of great authoritie, like the Lord Chancellors, called Cadileskeers, the one of Romalia, the other of Natolia; hee of Romalia hath the authoritie to remoue Cadys from their places in Romalia, and to substitute others in their roomes, the like hath hee of Natolia. Also they are to sit in the Dinan with the Visiers and Bashawes, to giue their verdict in cases of Iustice; without whose opinion and sentence nothing can be certainly determined.
- Cadileskeers.
- Cimices. The Turkes will not suffer these three things to be medled withall by a Christian or Iew, viz. his Religion, his Women, his Slaue. Those kind of Flies that troubled me in Italy, did in the night time as much infect mee in Constantinople, as being as familiar to Thrace as to Italy; I meane the Cimices, after that being once taken and bruised vpon the naile of a man, doth couer the whole naile with bloud and stinke. The Turke doth neuer at the saluting of his friend at any time of the day, or when hee drinketh to him at dinner or supper, put off his Turbant (as wee Christians doe our Hats one to another) but boweth his head and putteth his right hand vpon his brest, so that hee vtterly disliketh the fashion that is vsed amongst vs of putting off our Hattes, therefore when hee wisheth any ill to his Enemie, he prayeth God to send him no more rest then to a Christians Hat.
- Courtesie.
- Phlebotomie. The Turkes, as they shauie publikely in the streets, likewise they let bloud oftentimes in the streets, but so indiscreetly, that they suffer sometimes a man to bleed at the least two or three pounds of bloud, to the extreme weakning of their bodies; whereas few of our men suffer their Patient to bleed aboue halfe a pound. The true Musulman wil scarce kill a louse, if he find him in his apparell, but throwes him away, affirming, that it is contrary to the rules of charitie to kill him, or any thing else that hath life in it, except those things that they kill for their sustenance. And as for Birds that they see inclosed in a Cage, they will buy them for some money of the owner, and after let them flie out of the cage, for they thinke that there is iniurie done to them to debar them of their libertie. After the moneth of May, you shall scarce see till the end of September, any green grasse growing abroad in the Medowes or Fields, because after that time it is all scorched away with the heat of the Sunne. So it falleth out in most of those Easterne Countries, otherwise then it doth here in England.
- Superstition.
- Pride. The pride of the Turkish Visiers or Bashawes is so great, that when a Christian Ambassador doth either bring them or send them a Present of great worth, they haue not the honestie as to thanke him. Whensoever the Turkes or Greeks fall to buffets, they neither strike one another with their fists, but altogether with the palme of their hands, which I haue often obserued amongst them. In England onely our women, and those gentle doe carry Fannes in their hands made of Ostrich feathers, blacke, blue, red, yellow, &c. but no Gentlemen whatsoever; but here in Constantinople I haue obserued the contrary, that onely men, and those Turkes, Greekes, and Franks doe carry these kind of Fannes, and neuer any women that I could perceiue.
- Boxing.
- Fannes.
- Amis an English Iew. The seuenth of August being Saturday, my courteous friend Master William Pearce being desirous to gratifie mee in a matter for the which I had often before solicited him, inuited mee and Master William Ford, Preacher to our Nation, to the house of a certaine English Iew, called Amis, borne in the Groatched Friars in London, who hath two sisters more of his owne Iewish Religion, Commorant in Galata, who were likewise borne in the same place; to this mans house I say wee came, the foresaid day about nine of the clocke in the morning to see a matter, which in my former trauels I wished to haue scene, especially in Venice, but neuer till then had the opportunitie to attaine vnto, namely a circumcision. It was done in a priuate house, according to the custome of the Iewes resident in Constantinople, and not in a Synagogue as it is with the Iewes in other Countries. This foresaid Amis, for the loue hee bore to our English Nation, in the which hee liued till hee was thirtie yeeres of age, being at the time of my residence in Constantinople sixtie, as also for his good will sake, which hee bore to my foresaid friend Master William Pearce, receiued vs with
- Rites of Circumcision.

with very courteous entertainment, presenting vnto vs at a Table in a fine little roome where he placed vs, diuers delicate dishes and fruits with a cup of most excellent Wine, often welcoming vs with many heartie and wel-wishing speeches. While wee were at breakfast, diuers Jewes came into the roome, and sung certaine Hebrew Songs; after which the child was brought to his Father, who sate downe in a chaire, and placed the child being now eight dayes old in his lap. The whole company being desirous that we Christians should obserue their ceremonie, called vs to approach neere to the child. And when we came, a certaine other Jew drawing forth a little Instrument made not vnlike those smal Cissers that our Ladies and Gentlewomen doe much vse, did with the same cut off the Prepuce or fore-skinne of the child, and after a very strange manner vnused (I beleue) of the ancient Hebrewes, did put his mouth to the childs yard, and sucked vp the blood. All his Priuities (before hee came into the roome) were besprinkled with a kind of powder, which after the Circumciser had done his businesse, was blowed away by him, and another powder cast on immediately. After he had dispatched his worke, the same also after his worke was done, tooke a little strong Wine that was held in a Goblet by a fellow that stood neere him, and powred it into the childs mouth to comfort him in the midst of his paines, who cried out very bitterly. The paine being for the time very bitter indeed, though it will be (as they told me) cured in the space of foure and twentie houres. But those of any riper yeeres that are circumcised (as it too often cometh to passe, that Christians which turne Turkes) as at fortie or fiftie yeeres of age, doe suffer great paine for the space of a moneth, the Prepuce that was cut off was carried to the Mother, who keepeth it very precious as a thing of worth.

The twelfth of August being Thursday, the Turkes about eight of the clocke at night, illuminated the steeples of their Moskie, with abundance of Lampes ouer all Constantinople and Galata, (as they did vpon Mahomets birth day before mentioned by mee) as being the Eue of their first Sabbath in the Moneth or Moone of Regepf, by way of preparation for their great Feast of Ramazan, which followed afterward, which custome they obserue euery yeere vpon the foresaid day.

The eleuenth of September, some of the learned Turkes that were skilfull in their Law, obseruing that the contagion of the Plague was lately disperfed ouer diuers places of the Citie, had recourse to some of their Musulman Bookes, to the end they might informe themselves of some conuenient and discreet course to be taken for the preuention of the sicknesse, and finding in one of them, that some thirtie yeeres since there was made an Edict for the banishing of all the Dogs out of the Towne, as being principall Instruments of scattering the Plague, by reason of their free passing vp and downe from one house to another, they held it meet to imitate that example, and to doe the like. So that the matter being now propounded to the Grand Signior, it was at last determined, that the Dogges should be banished, and for the better performance of the matter, finally, they concluded thus, that euery Christian and Jew dwelling in Constantinople should by a day limited (vnder the paine of forfeiting foure Chiquins) present a Dogge to the Cadie, and taking of him a Teskeria (this is a Turkish word that signifieth a Certificate written vnder his hand) for a testimonie of performance of the same should afterward bring him to the water side, and see him imbarked for Saitan: for there were certaine vessels not much vnlike our lighters at London, assigned only for transporting the Dogges, the Naulum or passage being an Asper for euery Dogge: by meanes whereof it came to passe that within one weeke there were no lesse then twentie thousand Dogges euen a great Armie of them carried ouer to Saitan: and whereas the Citie did not yeeld Dogges enough for the seuerall Families of Christians and Jewes to present to the Cadie, those of Galata bought Dogges at a deere rate to transport them ouer to Constantinople, and to sell them there much deerer. Mungrels and masterlesse Curres that before strayed vp and downe the Citie, being now worth twenty or thirty Aspers. Now whereas the Grand Signior held it fit that they should be all killed when they came to the Saitanicall shoare, the Musie who is the Turkish Oracle, would not giue his consent to that, affirming, that it would be a very vncharitable action.

The twentieth of September, three of the Vifiers sonnes Rod vp and downe in the Citie in great pompe being accompanied with many Spabies mounted vpon their goodly Palfreyes that were richly furnished. And the same three were that day circumcised, the custome being such, that when the Sonnes of any eminent Turke is circumcised, a little before they performe the act vpon him, he rideth vp and downe the City with great solemnity with diuers Jewels of great prize in his Turbant, his long lock hanging downe behind his back artificially wouen and wrought in with curious pleites and tresses, and adorned with Diamonds and other sparkling stones of great value. Likewise they haue two long Pendants made of Gold Plate, that hang downe in the like manner ouer their backe. In their Turbant besides their Jewels they weare blacke Ostridge-feathers. Some of them weare vpper Vests of Cloth of Gold, and Cimeters by their sides with a maruellous rich handle and scabberd: their horses very lustie, worth sometimes a hundred pounds sterling a Horse, garnished with most rich Furniture, the forepart and hinder of the Saddle being of massie Silver Plate double gilded; the headstall of his Bridle and Pithell consisting of the like silver double gilded; a Horse-cloth couering all the buttockes of the Horse, worth perhaps some two hundred Dollers. Before the youths certaine Gemilands walke afoot, carrying certaine strange deuices of a prettie height in their hands, made partly of litle shreds of Paper, and partly of thinne Silver Plate with round Figures made in the forme of the World. Likewise neere to them goe certaine Flutes that yeeld a very ridiculous and squeaking Musicke with their Flutes. The Horsemen rode very orderly in their ranks, two and two together. After all this, returning to their Fathers House, they are feasted with much good cheere.

Fire workes.

This day did these youths present themselves to the Grand Signior to kisse his hand, who bestowed vpon each of them two vpper Vests of Cloth of Gold, two Jewels and two rich Goblets. The same day about seuen of the clocke at night, their Father the Visier made notable shewes vpon the water before the Grand Signior with fire-workes. For there were sixteene Boates that serued for the same purpose, wherein prettie Castles were contriued, the people in which skirmished together at the least an houre, spending such abundance of Powder in their fire-workes, that I neuer saw the like before, sending vp diuers of their flashes in the Aire, as high as the highest Steeple in Constantinople; a sight most notable to obserue so many Boats with their fire-workes encounter so long together, in which space there was no cessation or intermission, but that you should sometimes see foure, sometimes fixe fierie Steeples ascending into the Aire together with many burning lines passing too and fro vpon the water in diuers seuerall formes. Amongst the rest of these fire-workes I obserued some made vpon the very shoare it selfe with singular cunning resembling the shape of Cypresse-trees; a very pleasing and delectable object to behold.

Iewish feast of Tabernacles, nine dayes.

The twentieth of September being Munday, the Jewes of Constantinople and Galata, beganne their Feast of Tabernacles which lasted till the eight and twentieth of the same month, that is iust nine dayes in which they differ from the ancient Jewes who were commanded by Almighty God to spend only eight dayes in the celebration of their Feast. I talked with a Jew concerning the reason of this their difference, who told me that it was because being so farre from Ierusalem, as in Constantinople they did not altogether so certainly know the first day according to the course of the Moone, as those Jewes that liue in Ierusalem, and therefore for the better assurance of this matter, they adde a day to the number that God limited and appointed their forefathers, whereas the Jewes that liue in Ierusalem, and the parts of the Holy Land, neere thereabout, by the course of the Moone more certainly knowing the precise time of the beginning doe spend only eight dayes in their Feast and no more. Again, they do in another respect differ from Gods Institution. For he commanded only two dayes to bee more solemnely celebrated then the rest, that is, the first and the last, but they celebrate two at the beginning, and two also at the last. But as of the former two, the first day is the chiefest, being kept with more solemnitie then the second: so also of the two later, the last of all is more ceremoniously obserued then the former. In this space they are much giuen to holinesse, resting from all labour during the whole nine dayes, and they sometimes eate and drinke in their Tabernacles, which are made partly in their private Houses, or the corner of some Gallerie belonging thereto, at the least if they haue any, and partly neere to their Synagogues. They make the sides of their Tabernacles of Reeds of Bulrushes, and couer them at the top with Bayes. It was my hap to bee in one of them that was made neere to a Synagogue. Also the ninth day which was the last of their Feast about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, I was at their Lyturgie in one of their Synagogues, being admitted to sit downe among them. I find the irreuerence of the Jewes in Venice, & of those of Constantinople to be like in the seruice of God. They neither vncover nor kneele the whole time of their Prayer, sometimes they stand altogether, & sometimes they sit altogether. For some quarter of an houre after the beginning of the reading of their Law, they weare nothing ouer their backe, but their ordinary apparell, but then all of them put on their Ephod both men and children; which Ephod is made of the same white stuffe, as the Turkish Turbants are, these hang ouer their backs and reach downe to the middle part of their bodies, after a looser manner then I thinke the ancient Jewes were wont to weare them, for I read in the 2. Sam. the 6. Chapter, and 14. Verse, that King Dauid girt it about his middle when he danced before the Arke: but they hang it loose about their bodies. This Ephod many of them carried in a little scrip from their houses, and backe againe after the end of their Lyturgie. When they sat at their deuotion they vsed a most ridiculous and vnseemely gesture; for they alwayes mooued their bodies vp and downe very strangely, the head being in a continuall motion without any cessation. After that they moue their right side then their left, and lastly their forepart forward; which kind of wagging of their bodies by interchangeable turnes they vse during the whole time of their seruice.

The forme of their Synagogue is built foure square, hauing abundance of little Glasses hanging round about, that serue to containe Lampes, and some also of silver. The Priest beeing in the middle roome, which is made in the same forme as those of Venice. That I saw described in my former Booke bellowed like an Oxe with a very hideous and roaring exaltation of his voyce at their seruice, they sung in Hebrew (in which Language their whole Seruice is said) the nine and twentieth Psalme, though nothing at all pertinent to their Feast, at the vpper end of their Synagogue they haue three distinct places drawne ouer with branched Vel-

10 uet in the middle whereof was placed their Law, which consisted of tenne distinct pareels, each part containning the selfe same matter written therein that the other doe, beeing folded vp with two Siluer handles at the ends; at the top of each whereof is a Siluer Pomegranate, with many Bels hanging round about the same: within the which their Law is written in a Roll of Parchment. One of these parcells consisted of a goodly Plate of Siluer of no small price, all which tenne were carried in the middest of their Lyturgie round about the inside of the Synagogue, the Cochan (which is their Priest) being the Ringleader of the company, before whom diuers of the Iewes in a merrie manner went dancing as they also did that carried the said parcells. The Rose-water that was spirted by little young Iewes, out of Siluer Vessels vpon all those that carried about the Law was so much, that the Christian Spectators thought that they would haue halfe drowned them in Rose-water. The ceremonie was such at that time, that a little after our company departed thence, our Emperours Ambassadour came to see their fashions.

20 That day in which the Iewes by night should haue taken downe their Tabernacles, that is, the Munday being the eighth day, after the beginning of their Feast (which was wont to bee the last day) the Christians of the Countrey beganne to erect their Tabernacles or Paulions for their Vintage in all their Vineyards about Pera, and on both sides of the Bosphorus towards the blacke Sea, which Vintage lasted sixe dayes. In each of these dayes you might haue seene the greatest part of the way betwixt the farther end of Pera, and the Vineyards full of Horses that went to and fro from morning to night, to carrie away into the Towne the Grapes in certaine deepe wooden pots after they were cut in the Vineyard: likewise the owners of the Vineyards with their Families going and comming. And in these Paulions was much solace amongst the Christians for this time with good cheere, Musicke, &c. During the time of their Raccolta, whatsoever strangers came into their Vineyard might freely take as many Grapes as they were able to eate, which at another time they could not doe, for if before that they should be apprehended stealing Grapes in a Vineyard by any Ianizaries, and carried to the Sabbashaw of Galata, perhaps he might haue twentie or fortie blowes vpon the feet. Besides an imposition of a thousand Aspers. Of those Vineyards many belonged to Turkes, to whom it was lawfull to drinke Wine only at that time, while it was Must, but not else. I found not small recreation in 30 expatiating abroad sometimes in the time of their Vintage to their Vineyards, where for exercise sake I holpe the poore Greeks both to gather their Grapes and to stampe some of their wine.
 For in certaine Buts and other lesser Vessels they braised many of their Grapes in the Vineyards themselves, and afterward in their priuate houses finished the making of their Wine. Their vines grow not as in France and Germany, being vnderpropped, with little stalkes but rather as little small shrubs which grow so stiff, that they need not any stakes to support them.

40 The third of October being Sunday, my Lord being accompanied with the greatest part of our English Nation resident in Galata, ouer and aboue his owne retinue went to congratulate the Polonian Ambassadors prosperous arriual in Constantinople, who with much courtesie gaue him an Accoglienza speaking only in the Latine Tongue; and vsing sometimes in his discourse a certaine word that was neuer yet allowed by the Criticall censures of our time, namely Illustritas.

50 There happened one very memorable thing this Summer in Galata, which shall not escape my pen. A certaine Iew turned Turke, and after his conversion to that Religion, buying once an Aspers worth of Fruit of a certaine poore Turke, because he obserued that the Turke did not de-liuer him so much as did counteruaile his Asper, the Iewish Turke strooke the other about the face with some Instrument that he held in his hand, which gaue him such a sound blow that hee brake his face, insomuch that the blood ran verie swiftly downe his face: another Iew that well knew this foresaid Iewish Turke, and saw the blow given by him to the poore Turke, came to the Turke, and demanded of him why hee did so patiently suffer that man to abuse him so outrageously, encouraging him to giue him a blow, because otherwise euerie one that saw him put vp that wrong so lightly, would take him for a ranke coward. I do not at all regard this blow (quoth the poore Turke) because it is giuen mee by one that is late made a Musulman, and I will not dishearten him by giuing another for the same; but will as quietly take as much at his hands, as I haue already receiued, if hee thinke fit to strike mee once more: yea I tell the Iew (quoth hee) that I will giue thee leaue to draw as much blood from mee as hee hath done, without offering any reuenge at all, if thou also wilt turne Musulman: a notable example if it bee well considered.

60 The fourth of October, being Munday, the Turkish lent called Ramazan began which continueth till the fourth day of Nouember, at which time they hanged out Lamps about their Stree-ples, in the manner as they did twice before, that since the time of my arriual in Constantinople which burned till foure of the clocke in the morning, euen till that time when the Turke cryeth with a loud voice, &c. but it happened that their Lamps were hanged out much later this night then I haue obserued at other times. For before, they vied to hang them out about the closing of the Euening, euen about Sun-set. But this night they did not before midnight, which came to passe by reason that they could not see the Moone, notwithstanding the Grand Signior being aduertised by his expert Astronomers about ten of the clocke at night, that it was very likely the Moone was risen, though being darkened by clouds it did not shine, commanded that there should bee an expresse order giuen forthwith that they should hang forth their Lamps; whereupon within the space of two houres, the Steeples belonging to all the Moskie in Constantinople and Galata shined suddenly with Lamps, a shew indeed very glorious and refulgent, some of their Steeples hauing onely one row of Lampes, which contained some fiftie particulars; some three rowes which make a very beautifull shew, yea each of the foure Steeples belonging to the Moskee of Sultan Solymán, had not onely three distinct rowes of Lampes, which hanged about as many feuerall pertitions in each Tower; but also three subdiuided rowes or series that pertained to the said feuerall pertition, which Lampes were couered with certaine wooden Boxes to the end to keepe out the raine and the wind that they may not be blowne out; these Lampes were hanged out euery night. After the first, about the setting of the Sunne, before which time it was not law-full for any man to eat or drinke, only sick folke and little children excepted that are not circumcised. If in the space of this Ramaza any Turke should bee found drunke hee is punished with death, as it happened to one when I was in Constantinople, who by the expresse commandement of the Visier had hote burning Lead powred into his mouth and eares: and as for those that by reason of sicknesse haue beene constrained to violate this fast, looke how many dayes they haue eaten in the Ramazan, they are to fast as many afterwarde to recompence the same. This manner of fast betwixt sunne and sunne was instituted by Mahomet himselfe. Immediately after the Lampes are hanged out, and the Talisman bath cryed out, it is lawfull for people to eat, but not before: for though it bee not death for any one that shall bee found eating or drinking (saue onely for Wine, for that is death without redemption) yet there is a certaine seuerer punishment to bee inflicted vpon him.

Slutish Butter

There is great quantitie of Butter made in Turkie, but the most filthy and vnsauorie that is made in any other part of the world; for besides that it is defiled with many haire, it is also stained with many colours, as blue, redde, Greene, and all the other colours of the Raine-bow.
 It is made commonly in Moldania, Walachia, Mengrelia, and in some parts of Asia. Those that buy it in Constantinople refine it by setting it ouer the fire, and letting it settle, in melting whereof there is a most noysome and distastefull smell; then they poure out the cleere substance, and the eight part remaineth as a muddy foot, or settling in the bottome. This Butter, though it bee so filthy, yet they preferred it before the best Butter that any of our Christians doe bring to the Citie. Againe, whereas wee make our Butter in all parts of Christendome with churning, they neuer doe so, but in this manner they make it. They set the Creame ouer the fire, and so the grosse substance descendeth to the bottome, and the Butter swimmeth to the top, which they skimme with a Ladle, and after poure it into the Hide of a Buffallo or an Oxe. This being cold looketh rather like Grease then Butter. They bring it to Constantinople in Buffallo Hides, which when they transport from Galata to Constantinople, they throw it downe into the water and dragge it at a Boates taile through the Sea and before they put it out at the shoare of Constantinople, they dragge it also through a great deale of mud. One of these Hides is so great that when it is carried into the Citie eight men doe vsually carrie it vpon their backes by the helpe of Leuers and Ropes. The vse of this Butter is verie frequent, by reason of the abundance of Pillawe that is eaten in Constantinople, and in most places of Turkie.
 When they sell this Butter in their Shops, they hang it vp in the verie same Buffallo skinnies wherein they first brought it: and cut open the bellie, where they discouer the foresaid colours. Their Butter hath little Salt mingled with it, which is the cause of the ranke sauour thereof. Their Cheese likewise is brought in lesser skinnies, as of Goates and Sheepe to the Citie, not pressed as our Cheese is, but in crumbles. It is verie leane and drie, but fierie salt. But one Prison in all Constantinople, where there are but a few prisoners, because whensoever a man is committed to prison for any offence, hee is quickly brought to his triall.

Patriarch of Constantinople.

The seuenth of Ianuary, being Thursday, I went with a worthy Greeke, Michael Canacco to Timothew the Patriarch of Constantinople, whose house is in that part of Constantinople, which is called Phariaria, he is a man vnlearned and verie vnworthy of the place. When wee came to the doore of his Conclau, wee did put off our shooes, and leauing them without the doore went in to him; and sate vpon our tailes crosse-legged as the Turkes doe vpon certaine Carpets, without either Chaire, Stoole, or Forme to sit on, he himselfe sate in the like manner, clad in a black broad cloth Gowne that was furred, and a blacke habit of Say ouer his head like to the Coloires; his reuenue is one yeere with another at the least 6000. Chicquins. Neere to his house is a Church of the Greekes, in which the foresaid Greeke Michael shewed me a certaine piece of a blacke Marble Pillar some fise foot long, that he said was brought from Ierusalem, and that our Saviour was tied to the same when he was scourged. Hee told mee that the Greekes doe esteeme it so deere-ly, that though the Duke of Florence did offer foure thousand Chicquins for the same, they will

will not leaue it. It standeth in a corner of the Church, on the right hand as you goe into their Chancell.

On Saturday, being the ninth of Ianuary, was presented to my Lord, about five of the clocke in the afternoone, the strangest Bird that euer I saw in my life, a Pellican killed in the Sea by a seruant of our English Councel, Master Abbot with a Musket: it was white and much greater then any Bird that euer I saw before. His wings being stretched out were so long, that betwixt the extremitie of them both there was at the least nine foot distance, each wing contained forrie great feathers, which feathers yeelded so great a quill, that it was almost as great as an ordinarie finger: but the strangest thing in him was his beake, which yeelded two matters worthy the obseruation; first the length, which was not so little as a Geometricall foot, and a quarter long, the top of the vpper part of which bill was hooked like to the bill of an Eagle, and couered cleane ouer the lower parts of the beake. Secondly, the greatnesse of the jaw or chap in the lower part of the beake, being a kind of thinne fleshie substance, which indeed was so large that I saw a dogge of a prettie bignesse put within it, and it contained the whole bodie thereof. I heard that it would containe very neere a pecke of wheat, he is a great deuourer of fish, and hauing once got it within this jaw, his prey is certainly become his owne. Great plentie of these Birds are in the Propontis and Hellepont, and doe liue partly vpon the Land, and partly vpon the Sea, but most vpon the Sea.

A Pellican described:

In Constantinople, Peru, and Galata there are five thousand and seven hundred and fiftie Parishes, of the Turkes Turkish Muskies great and little seven hundred and seuentie: Karabassaries or Xenodochia foure hundred and eighteen; publike Fountaines or Wells six hundred and fiftie, priuate foure hundred and ninetie eight; Ouens or Bake-houses three hundred and eightie five; horse-mills five hundred and eightie three; Christian Churches an hundred and fiftie; Synagogues thirtie fixe; a hundred thousand Houses, and amongst them five thousand Shops. As for the Bird before mentioned, the Turkes say that when Mecca was building, these to helpe forward the worke brought stones in their bills, that serued for the building of the Walles of the Citie: the Grand Signior is of the company of the Archers, as most of the Sultans of the Ottoman Familie haue beene free of some company or other. His Father Mahomet was of the Company of the Ring-makers, those I meane that make Rings of the teeth of a certaine Sea-fish, which Rings are very commonly worne by the Turkes. They hold it a bad omen, when the Grand Signior on any occasion goeth out of Constantinople to meet in his way a Christian, for which onely fault one of Sir Thomas Glouers men, was taken and had so many blowes on his buttockes (his breeches betwixt) that he died thereof within few daies after. The Greekes that cannot pay their debts are deliuered to a Turk, who leads him with a chaine about his neck, the other end fastned to the Keepers middle to begge till he hath paid. Sometimes at the great Bayram, the Sultan, or Visier, or Bassas will pay halfe the debts.

Tale:

The Turkish Boyes that learne the first Alphabet, obserue the strangest custome that euer I saw, for sitting crosse-legged as their father doe, and holding their festers in their hands, they moue themselves vp and downe towards their booke that lieth before them, a motion so quaint that I could not chuse but laugh at them, and so did many other Christians beside my selfe. This I saw to be obserued by the Turkish boyes of Constantinople, Gallipoli and Syo, and I thinke it is vsed in all parts of the Turkish Dominion. I departed from Constantinople towards Ierusalem, in an English Ship, called the Great Defince, which about a month before came from Syo to Constantinople, which are at the least eighty leagues asunder, in the space of forty two houres, a thing that I name for the raritie thereof, because there are few Ships that performe it in so short a space, for the Ship in the which I went, being called the Samaritane, was almost fixe weekes performing it. I departed I say there hence, the one and twentieth of Ianuary being Friday, about eight of the clocke in the morning, in as tempestuous and extreame a season as euer I trauelled in my life, either by Land or water, for the snow which fell incessantly for the space of almost two dayes and two nights, bred such a rigid cold that some of vs were euen benumbed. Besides, the contrarie winds so crossed our passage, that we found it a very fastidious and tedious voyage. Notwithstanding the aduerse windes when we came within three or foure miles of Gallipoli, by tacking about and turning to windward, as they call it (those are nauticall words) by the which is meant sailing against the winde; with some kind of difficultie we entred into the Port. After we were come in, a certaine Jew that was in our Ship perceiuing that wee sailed so brauely against the winds, told me that the Englishmen by reason of their dexteritie in sailing, might bee not improperly called the fishes of the Sea: there we tarried three dayes, partly for the dispatch of our businesse with the Turkish Magistrates of the Towne, and partly by a thicke mist vpon the Sea, during which wee could not securely goe forward for feare of falling into shallow parts of the Sea. This Gallipoli is some ninetie leagues distant from Constantinople: there endeth the Propontis and beginneth the Hellepont.

The fourteenth of Februarie wee went ashore at Lesbos, now called Mitylene: it is very mountainous and rough. The Sheepe bare the coursest Wooll that euer I saw, like Goats haire. The people flocked about vs, many of them women, the vglyest sluts that euer I saw, sauing the Armenian trulls of Constantinople. Februarie eightene we came to Syo. On the twentieth sayling by the Sanyan Coast wee discerned Pathmos, and passed neere Cos the birthplace of Hippocrates. On the twentieth three, wee espied the tops of Ararat laid to bee eightie leagues within Land, and wee fourteene from shoare. On the twentieth foure we landed at Scanderone, infamous for the infectious aire caused by foggie clouds after Sun-set, and till nine in the morning hovering about the mountaines, and letting fall an ynwolsome dew, the waters being also pestiferous; which cause many to leaue their carkasses there to be deuoured of the Iackals, which scrape the out of their graues. I saw one, somewhat like a Mastiue Dog, but somewhat lesse, his taile as long as of a Foxe. They are therefore forced to fetch their water from a Fountaine sixe miles off. Scanderone hath about fortie Houses, the poorest Cotages that euer I saw, being but a few boards weakly compact and couered with Reeds. Our iourney thence to Scandarone is about fiftie sixe miles. The first day wee rode twelue; the second sixteene; the third sixteene; the fourth ten.

The Right Worshipfull Consull of the English Nation, Commorant in Aleppo, Master Bart. Hag-gar my worthy Countryman borne in Summerseishire at Welles, amongst other fauours rode with mee to the Vallie of Salt mentioned, 2. Sam. 8. 13. In the way wee seemed to see a Towne standing like an Iland in water, and when wee came thither found no waters, but a kind of shrub like wild withered Time, which couering the Mountaine made with the white sprigs a shew of water a farre off. The Villages in the way are inhabited with Bedwines. The Poole where the Salt is made is twentie miles long, and two broad, exceedingly frequented with plentie and variety of Fowle. The water continueth all the yeere sauing Iuly, August, September, at which time it is quite dried vp, beginning to walt (or to change into Salt) in Iuly; and then is there nothing but a hard massie Salt, which appeareth like hard Ice digged thence with Mattocks, heaped hillocks & carried to Giabbul a village, on Camels and Asses, and there custumed. It is as fine & excellent as any in the world. In Oct. it beginneth again to break out of certain Springs with much vehemency, & after one month inundateth the whole place. It yeelds 20000. dollars yearly to the Grand Signior. March, 15. 1613. I and my countryman Henry Allard of Kent, began our Pilgrimage a foot to the holy Citie of Ierusalem. The 26. in Damasco I saw Roses——— but wee haue trauelled with so many Travellers to Damasco, and thence to Ierusalem, and obserued so much on those parts, that I dare not to obtrude Master Coryats prolixitie on the patientest Reader. He was indeed a curious viewer of so much as his bodily eyes could comprehend, to which he added (not so faithfull intelligence of) his inquisitiue eares; for mysteries of State and Religion hee would bee a safe traveller, and free from suspicion. I confesse I found much pleasure in walking with him in his tenn dayes iourney to Damasco, and spending a little while to view his foure dayes view of Damasco, Abana and Pharphar flowing from the Hill on which, part of the Towne standeth, to the Houses whereof aboue one thousand Conduits of most pure waters are thence conueyed; the Darufes Monastery, garden and turnings; the buildings, of which the chiefe Moskee (before Saint Zacharies Temple) hath one thousand unglased Windowes, and as many Pillars as are dayes in the yeere, with fine brazen Gates, one fortie foot high; the Cloister, Bazestans Castle, and other Moskees, shady penthoused Streets, all superlatiue; ten Gates, 100000. Inhabitants, Fruits innumerable and delicious, victuals so cheap that at a Cookes, he and his companion dined well for three farthings a man, and all things conspiring to an earthly Paradise: for which cause it is said the Grand Signior may not reside there, least he should forfeit his hopes of a future Paradise: his further iourney to Iordans swift and sounding streame, to *Tabor*s Holies, Samarias Well, and the centre of Earthly sanctitie, Ierusalem; his companie of Armenians, with there Patriarch or Bishop, with a Crozier in his hand of an ordinary peece of Hasill, with a little crooke at the end of the same peece of Wood, with a Turbant of white and blue on his head; their cruell vsage by the Moors the Bedwine sluts painted under the nostrills and ringed on the right nostrill unto the spoyle of kissing, the Sugar loafed Houses, and other rarities, in as rare a stile of big-swolne strange-tired travelling words expressed: all this and the rest of Master Coryats long long iourney I dare not bither adde for feare you grow weary of him and mee. Yet I will adde a little of Ierusalem that yee may know hee was there. Hee entred it the twelfth of April, 1614. Besides the Holies obserued in Sandys, Sanderson, Timberley, Biddulph, and others, hee lay in the Temple on Palmesunday euen, in the upper Gallery, where hee was roused out of sleepe by the turbulent cries of the Greekes, who came forth of their Quire with a very clamorous noyse, hauing eleuen Banners of Silke and cloth of Gold carried before them, each of which had three Streamers, and on the top of the Staffe a gilded Crosse. A world of Lamps was carried before and behind them, men, women, children confusedly, crying, Kyrie eleeson. The next day the other Nations ioyned with them, displaying their Banners also, viz. the Armenians, Maronites, Iacobites, Cophites, and Abassines. The Armenians made the brauest shew. Their Patriarch wore a cope of cloth of Gold, a Miter of like cloth on his head beautified with many rich stones, with a Crucifix in his hand beset with Diamonds, Rubies, Amethysts, Sapphires, and other Stones of great worth; his Priests also sumptuously attired, wearing imbroidered Caps of Velvet and Sattin with Crosse on the tops. Some carried Olive boughes in their hands, with burning Waxe Candles therein, and one a branch of Palme-tree. Some of the Priests went before, the Patriarch backward perfuming him.
Some carried Drums on their shoulders, which others behinde them did strike vpon. The Cophites and Abassines had also certaine clappers of Brasse and Wood, which made strange Musicke. They continued four hours their circumgyration about the Sepulchre, which vociferations such as did amaze the beholders: the people ready to goe together by the eares for these holy branches.

- The eight and twentieth he went to visite Iordan, when they were some fiftene miles from Ierusalem in the way, the stones of that soile put together burne being kindled as wood, and the combustible matter in them being spent, are blacke and not consumed to ashes, the smell is like brimstone, as neere to Gomorha. Twenty of these fires were made on a hill. At Iordan all made great applause; men, women and children stripped themselves starke naked, having opinion that that water washeth away all their sinnes. It is very muddy, and he was up to the middle in mud neere the banks. There grow abundance of tamarikes of which they make wands which they carry into their Countries. The River there is scarcely one hundred 10 foot broad, but in the middle said to be twenty foot deepe. Halfe a mile beyond are the Arabian hills. They passed within halfe a mile of the Lake Asphaltitis, environed on both sides with high hills. On the hither side is the Pillar of Lots wife in Salt with her childe in her armes, and a pretty Dogge also in Salt by her, about a bow shot from the water. The Interpreter said his father fiftie yeere before, when some of his company had broken off a peece, saw it growne up againe miraculously as if it had not beene touched. He tooke notice of two things, the slow motion of the water, or rather none, standing like a quagmire; and the foggie, cloudie matter upon it, yeelding an unholosome smell. The Vallie which they passed is sterile as ever hee passed any Country, a chalkie soile utterly destitute of plants, not to be bettered by industry of man. The two 20 and twentieth of Aprill he went the third time into the Temple, in which were then assembled 1000. Armenians, as many as of all the other Nations, 2000. in all. Here was buying and selling in the Temple of girdles, garters, bread, &c. they then remaining there eight and forty houres; yea, they defiled it with their excrementes, and made it a metamorphosis of Ajax, and that not for want of necessarie places, which there were publike and common, but through meere beastlinesse in superlatiue degrees. Their meeting then is, with banners, flags, crucifixes, muscalle instruments, and fervent prayers to bring the holy Ghost from heaven in visible forme of fire. The Latins herein dissent from all the other sects, and count it an imposture. The other six companies meet on saturday at eleven of the clock and lock and bolt the doore of the Sepulcher. They walke round about till five of the clock in the afternoone without intermission, most of them carrying a bundle of white wax candle in their right hands, bound about with the holy thred or garters which have touched 30 holy places, about forty in a bundle lifted over their heads, innocating the holy Ghost, the Greekes crying κρίελεῖσθον, the rest in Arabian, with such stentorean outcries, for that six houres procession, thinking thereof with to pierce the heavens as hath not elsewhere beene heard. About three quarters of an houre after foure, the doore was unlocked, and the Patriarks of the Greekes & Armenians went in, with an Abassine. This last entred into the grotta and there in hugger mugger contriveth his businesse, and having bene there a quarter of an houre, cometh forth with his bundle of lights lighted, and leaping furiously forth is caught by the zealous people ravished with ioy at this appearance, the Priest in danger of stifling whiles each strives to light his candle first. All were kindled in a quarter of an houre. Ierusalem is but meanly peopled, there being scarce 10000. so few walking in the streets as except in Padua he hath not seene in any Citie. The soyle is stonie or rather chalkie, and fertile; it is plentifull of provisions, corne growing there in reasonable quantitie, but not so high, nor so thicke as in fruitfull places of England. Girdles & garters are there made and thence carried to all places. The ancient forme of building there, & in Samaria, of most of their streets
 40 is fornicato opere, with vaulted roofes. Betwixt April and October it seldome raineth. No lew may appeare neere the Sepulcher, for any Christian may stone him, or bring him to the Officer to be executed. 347 lamps ordinarily burne in the Temple (besides at Easter) thorow the yeere. Their woddren Keyes in this Country, and other his obseruations very very many I omit. His iourney from thence to Aleppo and thence into Mesopotamia, Persia, India, you have before related in his owne Epistles.

* He saw not this, but took the report of another, and seemeth by this childe and dog to be a falsehood in word or in deed.

CHAP. XIII.

Relations of the Travels of W. LITHGOW a Scot, in Candy, Greece, the Holy-land, Egypt, and other parts of the East.

- 50 VPon the fortieth day after my departure from Paris, I arriued at Rome, of the which I will memorize, some rarest things, and so proceede. This Citie of Rome, now extant, is not that old Rome, which Romulus founded; for after the Monarchy of the Romans had attained to the full height, the Gothes, a base and vnkowne 60 people, displaying their banner against this glorious and imperiall Citie, in the end razed, and subuerted their Pallaces, equalizing the wals with the ground. After the which detriment, and ouerthrow (the late subdued Romans, recouering their ruinous habitation) were inforced, to withdraw the situation of the Towne, a little more downward, neare the banks of Tiberis: And transported the stones, of these ransacked buildings, to reedifie their new dwelling places:

Hic ubi nunc Roma est, olim fuit ardua silua,

Tantaq, res paucis, pascua bobus erat.

Many haue wrote, of the singularities of old Rome, and I will also recite some decaied Monuments thereof, which I haue seene: The speciall obiect of Antiquitie I saw, being neuer a whit decaied

A briefe description of Rome.

Monuments of Antiquity.

decaied to this day, is the Templum omnium Deorum, but now, omnium sanctorum, builded in a rotundo, and open at the top, with a large round, like to the quire of the holy graue, And a pretty way from this, are the remainants of that ancient Amphitheatre beautified with great Columns, of a wonderfull bignesse and height; the reason why it was first deuised, the ghosts of the slaughtered Sabines may testifie. To be brieft, I saw the decaied house of worthy Cicero, the high Capitoll, the Pallace of cruell Nero, the Statues of Marcus Aurelius, Alexander, and his horse Bucephalus. The greene hill like vnto Mount Canallo, that was made of the Pottars shards at one time, which brought the tributarie Gold to this imperiall seat, the seuen hills whereon she stands, and their seuen Pyramides, the Castell Saint Angelo, which Adrian first founded, and their doubtfull transported Reliques from Ierusalem, with many other things I diligently remarked, some whereof were friuolous, some ambiguous, and some famous. Besides all these I saw one most sight-worthy-spectacle, which was the Library of the ancient Romans, being licenciated to enter with two Gentlemen, Sir William Kerre, and James Aughermty my Countrey-men, where when I was come, I beheld a word of old Bookes, the first whereof, was an infinite number of Greeke Bibles subcribed with the hands of these holy Fathers, who (as they say) translated them out of the Hebrew tongue.

The originall Copies (as they say) of famous Authors.

I saw also the Academies of Aristotle, wherein he treateth of the Soule, health, life, nature, and qualities of men, with the Medicaments of Galen, for the diseases and infirmities of man: The familiar Epistles of Cicero, the Aeneidos of Virgil, the Saphicke Verses of that Lesbian Sapho, the Workes of Ouid, Plinie, Plutarke, Titus Liuius, Horatius, Strabo, Plato, Homer, Terentius, Cato, Hippocrates, Iosephus, Pythagoras, Diodorus Siculus, Eusebius, Saint Augustine, Saint Ambrose, Saint Cyprian, Saint Gregory, and likewise the workes of other excellent Philosophers, Diuines, and Poets: all wrote with their owne hands, and sealed with their names, and manuall subscriptions. I saw also the forme of the first ancient Writing, which was vpon leaues of trees, cakes of lead, with their fingers on ashes, barks of trees, with strange figures, and vnknowne Letters, that was brought from Egypt: for the Egyptians first deuised the vse thereof, and the sight of infinitie Obligatorie Writings, of Emperours, Kings, and Princes, which I omit to relate, referring the same to the registred, by the next beholder.

The brasen Image of Saint Peter.

Bidding adew to my Company, and this Library, I longed to view the gorgeous Mosaicall worke of Saint Peters Church: The matter was no sooner conceiued, but I went to the doore, yet afraid to enter, because I was not accustomed, with the carriage, and ceremonies of such a Sanctum Sanctorum. But at the last, abandoning all scrupulositie, I came in boldly, and on my right hand, as I entred within the doore, I espied the portraied image of Saint Peter, erected of pure Brasse, and sitting on a brasen Chaire. The fashion of the people is this, entring the Church, they goe strait to this Idoll, and saluting with many crosses his senselesse body, kisse his feete, and euery one of his seuerall toes: next, they lay their heads vnder the soale of his right foot, and arising, rub their Beads on his hard costed belly: thus adoring that breathlesse masse of mettall, more then though it were a liuing creature.

The period of Time, after eight and twenty dayes abode, wishing my departure, I hardly escaped from the hunting of these bloud-sucking Inquilitors, of whom the most part were mine owne Countymen; for I may iustly affirme it, man hath no worser Enemie then his owne supposed friend. And the Italian saith in his Prouerbe; God keepe me from the hurt of my friends, for I know well how to keepe me from mine Enemies. From thence bound Eastward, I visited Naples, the commendation of which, I onely reuolue in this Verse:

Inclita Parthenope gignit Comitesq; Ducesq;

Among many other remarkeable things, neare to this Citie (as Lacus Auernus, Sibillae Caeue, Puteoli; the Sulphurean Mountaine, Capua and Cuma, where banished Aeneas from Troy, and Carthage arriued) I saw the Monument of *Virgil*s buriall.

Lady of Loretto returned, addressing my selfe to Venice for transportation. But by your leaue, let me lay down before your eyes, some notable illusions of Madonna di Loretta.

Four Roman Pilgrimes.

Before I came neere to Loretta, by ten miles, I ouertooke a Caroch, wherein were two Gentlemen of Rome, and their two Concubines: Who, when they espied me, saluted me kindly, enquiring of what Nation I was? whither I was bound? and what pleasure I had to trauell alone? After I had to these demands giuen satisfaction, they intreated me to come vp to the Caroch, but I thankfully refused, and would not, replying the way was faire, the weather seasonable, and my body vnwearied. At last they perceiuing my absolute refusall, presently dismounted on the ground, to recreate themselues in my company: and incontinently, the two yong vnmarried Dames, came forth also, and would by no perswasion of me, nor their familiars, mount againe; saying, They were all Pilgrimes, and bound to Loretta (for deuotions sake) in pilgrimage, and for the penance enioyned to them by their Father Confessor. Truly, so farre as I could iudge, their penance was small, being carried with horses, and the appearance of deuotion much lesse: for lodging at Rignati, after supper, each youth led captiue his dearest Darling to an vn sanctified bed, and left me to my accustomed repose.

When

When the morning Starre appeared, wee embraced the way marching toward Loretta, and these Vermilion Nymphs, to let me vnderstand they trauelled with a cheerefull stomacke, would oft run races, skipping like wanton Lambes on grassie Mountaines, and quenching their follies in a Sea of vnquenchable fantasies. Approaching neere the gate of the Village, they pulled off their shooes and stockings, walking bare-footed through the streeces, to this ten thousand times polluted Chappell, mumbling Pater nosters, and Aue Marias on their Beades. When they entered the Church, wherein the Chappell standeth, I stood at the entrie beholding many hundreds of bare-footed blinded bodies, creeping on their knees and hands: Thinking themselves not worthy to goe on foot to this idely supposed Nazareth House, like to this saying,

10 Lauretum nudis pedibus, plebs crebra frequentat, Quam mouet interius religionis amor.

Vnto this falsly patronized Chappell, they offer yeerely many rich gifts, amounting to an vnspeakable value, as Chaines, and Rings of Gold and Siluer, Rubies, Diamonds, silken Tapestries, and such like. The Iesuiticall and Poenitentiall Fathers receiue all, but who so inioy all, let Ca- mera reuerenda Romana, grant certification to this Loretan auariciousnesse, who fill their coffers twice in the yeere therewith. My foure Pilgrimes hauing performed their ceremoniall customes, came backe laughing, and asked why I did not enter? But I as vnwilling to shew them any further reason, demanded what the matter was? O (said the Italians) Inrando per il Cielo e l'adio Sa- cratissimo; This is the House wherein the Virgin Mary dwelt in Galile: and to the confirmation 20 of these words shewed me a Booke, out of which I extracted these Annotations.

This Chappell, they hold it to be the house, in which Mary was annunced by Gabriel, and wherein she conceived Iesus, by operation of the holy-Ghost. And in the meane time, that deuo-tion waxed scant, amongst the Christians of the Primitive Church, in the Holy Land: Many strangers tyrannizing ouer the territories of Canaan, as Heraclius, Costroes King of Persia, Sarazens, and Harancoue King of Egypt; it came to passe in the yeere of our Lord 1291. and in the time of Pope Nicholas the fourth, that it being shaken off the foundation, was transported miraculously by Angels in the night, from Nazareth in Galile, to Torsalto in Stauonia. And in the morning, Sheepheards comming to the place of pastorage, found this house, wherewith being astonished, they returned in haste, and told S. George Allesandro, the Prior of Torsalto, who in that meane 30 while was lying sicke. He being stricken in admiration with these newes, caused himselfe to be borne thither, and laid before the Altar, and falling in a maruellous trance, the Virgin Mary by a heauenly Vision appeared to him, saying after this manner:

Behold, thou hast often pierced the heauens, with inuocations for thy reliefe, and now I am come, not onely to restore thee to thy health, but also to certifie thee, that thou doubt nothing of this House; for it is boly in respect of me, the chaste immaculate Virgin, ordained before all eternitie, to be the Mother of the most High. It was in this Chamber my Mother Anna conceived me, nourished me, and brought me vp, in singing Psalmes, Hymns, & Praises to the glory of God: and also I kept in this roome the blessed infant Iesus, very God, and very Man, without any grienace or paine, brought him up with all diligent obseruation: And when cruell Herod sought the babes life, by the aduertisement of the Angell, I, and my hus-40 band Ioseph, who neuer knew my body, fled with him downe to Egypt. And after his passion, doath, and ascension to Heauen, to make a reconciliation of humane nature, with the Court Celestiall: I staid in this house with Iohn, and the other Disciples: who considering after my death, what high mysteries had bene done into it, consecrated and conuerted the same to a Temple, for a commemoration of Christs sufferings, the chiefe of Martyrs. Also that resplending Image thou seest, was made by S. Luke (my familiar) for eternizing the memory of my portraiture as I was a line, by the commandement of him, who doth all things, and shall conserue this sacred Image to the worlds end: That Crosse of Cedar, which standeth at the side of the little westerne window, was made by the Apostles: These Cinders in the Chimney touch not, because they are the fragments of the last fire I made on earth: And that Shelfe whereon my linnen cloathes, and prayer Bookes lay, Let no person come neere it; for all these places are sanctified and boly. Wherefore 50 my Son, I tell thee, Awake, and goe, recite the same which I haue told thee vnto others; and to confirme thy beliefe therein, the Queene of Heauen giueth thee freely thy health.

Frier Alexander, being rauished (say they) with this Vision, went and reported it to Nicholas Frangipano, Lord of that Country. And incontinently he sent this Prior and other foure Friers to Nazareth, whereby he might know the truth thereof, but in that journey they died. The Virgin Mary perceiuing their incredulitie, caused Angels the second time to transport the house ouer the gulfe of Venice, to a great wood neere by the Sea side, in the territory of Riginati. Which, when the Countrimen had found, and remarking the splendor of the illuminating Image, dispersed these newes abroad. And the Citizens of Riginati, hauing seene what great miracles were daily done, by the vertue of this Chappell, imposed to it this name, Madonna di Loretta. A little while after the 60 people resorting to it with rich gifts, there hanted in the wood many theeves, and cut-throates, who robd and murdered the Pilgrims. Which innocent spilt bloud, pricking her to the heart, shee made the Angels transport it the third time, & set it on the top of a little Mountain, belonging to two brethren in heritage: But they vpon a day quarrelling, & discording, about the vtility of the offerings to this house, the Angels did remoue it the fourth time, & placed it in a high broad way, where it standeth vnremoued to this day. This was confirmed by the Papall Authoritie to bee of an vndoubted truth, after a hundred and fiftie three yeeres deliberation. I haue added nothing to the Authors description, but onely collected these speciall Warrants.

I imbarqued at Ancona, in a Frigata; and by accident I heere encountred with a most courteous and discreet Gentleman *James Arthur, whose companie was to me most acceptable, wee arrived at Saint Markes place in Venice.

After foure and twentie dayes attendance, and expecting for passage, I imbarqued in a Carmoesalo, being bound to Zara Noua in Dalmatia.

Zara is the Capitall Citie of Dalmatia, called of old Iadara: the Inhabitants are gouerned by a Camarlingo, in the behalfe of Venice. The walls whereof, are strongly rampired with earth; surpassing the tops of the stone worke: and fortified also with high Bulwarkes, and planted Cannons on eleuated rampires of earth: which are aboue forrie Cubites higher then the walls and Bulwarkes, standing in the foure seuerall corners of the Citie.

From Zara I imbarqued in a small Frigot bound for Lefina, with five Slauonian Marriners, who sometimes sayled, and sometimes rowed with Oares: In our way wee passed by the Ile of Brazza, which is of no great quantitie, but fertile enough for the Inhabitants, and kept by a Gentleman of Venice. It lyeth in the mouth of the Gulfe Narento, that diuideh Dalmatia from Slauonia. Many conceiue in effect that these two Kingdomes are all one, but I hold the contrary opinion, both by experience and by antient Authors. Having passed Cape di Costa, which is the beginning of Slauonia. I saw vpon my right hand, a round Rocke of a great height, 20 in forme of a Pyramide.

A little beyond that Rocke, I saw the three Iles Tremiti: The chieft whereof is called Tencria, but they are vulgarly called the Iles of Diomedes, who was King of Etolia. They are right opposite to Mount Gargana, now called Saint Angelo, and distant from the maine land of Pulia in Italie about nine miles.

The poore Slauonians being fatigated in their hunger-staruing Boat, with extraordinary paines (for we had three dayes calme, which is not vsually seene in these Seas) were inforced to repose all night, at the barren Ile of Saint Andrew. This Ile is of Circuit foure miles but not inhabited: the excessive Raine that fell in the Euening made vs goe on shoar, to seeke the co- uerture of some Rocke; which found, wee lay all night on hard stones, and with hungry bellies: 30 for our prouision was spent. The breach of day giuing comfort to our distressed bodies, with fauourable windes at the Garbae penente, we set forward, and about midday wee arrived in the Port of Lefina, of which the Ile taketh the the name.

This Ile of Lefina is of Circuit, a hundred and fiftie miles, and is the biggest Iland in the A- driaticke Sea. It is exceeding fertile and yeeldeth all things plentifully, that is requisite for the sustenance of man. The Citie is vnwalled, and of no great quantitie, but they haue a strong fortresse, which defendeth the Towne, the Hauyn, and the vessels in the rode. The Gouverneur who was a Venetian, after he had enquired of my intended Voyage, most courteously inuited me three times to his Table, in the time of my five dayes staying there. And at the last meeting, he reported the storie of a maruellous mishapen Creature borne in the Iland, asking, if I would goe thither to see it: Wherewith (when I persitely vnderstood the matter) I was contented: The Gentleman honoured me also with his company, and a Horse to ride on, where when we came, the Captaine called for the Father of that Monster, to bring him forth before vs. Which vnna- 40 torall Child being brought, I was amazed in that sight, to behold the deformitie of Nature; for below the middle part there was but one Bodie, and aboue the middle there was two living Soules, each one seperated from another with seuerall members. Their heads were both of one bignesse, but different in Phisnomie: The belly of the one ioyned with the posterioir part of the other, and their faces looked both one way, as if the one had carried the other on his back, and often before our eyes, hee that was behind, would lay his hands about the necke of the formost. Their eyes were exceeding big, and their hands greater then an Infant of three times 50 their age. The excrements of both Creatures, issued forth at one place, and their thighs and legges of a great growth, not semblable to their Age, being but fixe and thirtie dayes old; and their feet were proportionably made like to the foot of a Camell, round, and clouen in the middest. They receiued their food with an insatiable desire, and continually mourned with a pitifull noise; that sorrowfull man told vs, that when the one slept, the other awaked, which was a strange disagreement in Nature. The Mother of them bought deerly that birth, with the losse of her owne life; and as her Husband reported, vspeakable was that torment shee endu- red, in that woful-wrestling paine. I was also informed afterwards, that this one or rather two- fold wretch liued but a short while.

I hired a Fisher-boat to goe ouer to Clissa, being twelue miles distant. This Ile of Clissa is of length twentie, and of circuit three score miles: It is beautified with two profitable Sea-ports, and vnder the Signiorie of Venice. Vpon the South-side of this Iland lyeth the Ile Pelausa.

Departing from thence in a Carmoesalo bound to Ragusa, wee sayled by the three Iles Brisca, 60 Placa, Placa, Igezi; And when we entred into the Gulfe of Catara, we fetched vp the sight of the Ile Melida, called of old Meligna. Before wee could attaine vnto the Hauen, wherein our purpose was to stay all night, we were assailed on a sodaine with a deadly storme: Insomuch, that euery swallowing waue threatened our death, and bred in our breasts an intermingled sorrow of feare and hope. The winds becomming calme, and our desired safetie enioyed, we set forward in the Gulfe of Catara, and sayled by the Ile Curzola. In this Iland I saw a walled Towne called Curzola, which hath two strong Fortresses to guard it. It is both commodious for the traffique of Merchandise they haue, and also for the fine Wood that groweth there, whereof the Venetian Ships and Gallies are made: An Iland no lesse delightfull then profitable; and the two Governours thereof, are changed euery eighteene moneths, by the State of Venice.

Melida.

Curzola.

10 It was of old called, Curcura, Melana, and of some Concira nigra, but by the Modernes, Curzola. Continuing our course, we passed by the Iles Sabionzello, Torquolla, and Casza Augusta, appertaining to the Republike of Ragusa. They are all three well inhabited, and fruitfull, yeelding Cornes, Wines, and certaine rare kindes of excellent Fruits. It is dangerous for great Vessels to comeneare their Coasts, because of the hidden shelues that lie off in the Sea, called Augustini, where diuers ships haue beene cast away in foule weather; vpon the second day after our loosing from Cliffa, we arriued at Ragusa.

Ragusa.

20 Ragusa is a Common-weale gouerned by Senators, and a Senate Counsell: It is wonderfull strong, and also well guarded, being scituate by the Sea-side, it hath a fine Hauen and many goodly shippes thereunto belonging. The greatest Traffique they haue, is with the Genueses. Their Territorie in the firme land is not much, in respect of the neighbouring Turkes, but they haue certaine commodious Ilands, which to them are profitable. And notwithstanding of the great strength and riches they possesse, yet for their better safeguard and liberty, they pay a yeerely tribute vnto the great Turke, amounting to fourteene thousand Chickenes of Gold: yea, and also they pay yeerely a tributarie pension vnto the Venetians, for the Iles reserued by them in the Adriaticall Gulfe. The most part of the ciuill Citizens, haue but the halfe of their heads bare, but the baser sort are all shauen.

30 This Citie is the Metropolitan of the Kingdome of Slauonia. Slauonia was first called Liburnia, next Iliria, of Ilirio the sonne of Cadmus: But lastly, named Slauonia, of certaine Slaues, that came from Sarmatia passing the Riuer Danubio, in the time of the Emperour Iustinian. So much as is called Slauonia, extendeth from the Riuer Arsa in the West, the Riuer Drino in the East, on the South bordereth with the Gulfe of Venice, and on the North with the Mountaines of Croatia: These Mountaines diuide also Ragusa from Bosna.

Slauonia.

The next two speciall Citie in that Kingdome, are Sabenica and Salona. The Slauonians are of a robust Nature, Martiall, and valiant fellowes, and a great helpe to maintaine the right and libertie of the Venetian state. From Ragusa I embarked in a Tartareta, loaden with Cornes, and bound to Corfu, being three hundred miles distant.

40 In all this way we found no Iland, but sayled along the maine land of the Ilirian shoare: hauing passed the Gulfe of Catara, and Capo di Fortuna, I saw Castellonovo, which is a strong Fortresse, scituate on the top of a Rocke: wherein one Barbarisso, the Captaine of Solyman, starued to death foure thousand Spaniards. Hauing left Iliria and Valona behind vs, wee sayled by Capo di Palone. This high land is the furthest part of the Gulfe of Venice, and opposite against Capo di Sancta Maria, in Pulia, each one in sight of another, and foure leagues distant. Continuing our Nauigation, we entred into the Sea Ionium, and sayled along the Coast of Epire, which was the famous Kingdome of the Epirotes. This is the first land of Greece, and vpon the fixt day after our deprtture from Ragusa, we arriued at Corfu.

50 Corfu is an Iland, no lesse beautifull then inuincible: it lyeth in the Sea Ionian, the Inhabitants are Greekes, and the Governours Venetians. This Ile was much honoured by Homer, for the pleasant Gardens of Alcino, which were in his time: it is of Circuit one hundred and twentie, and fiftie miles in bredth. The Citie Corfu, from which the Ile hath the name, is scituate at the foot of a Mountaine, whereupon are builded two strong Fortresses, and inuironed with a naturall Rocke: the one is called Fortezza noua, and the other Fortezza uechia: they are well gouerned and circumspectly kept, least by the instigation of the one Captaine, the other should commit some treasonable effects: and for the same purpose, the Governours of both Castles, at their Election, before the Senators of Venice are sworne; neither priuately nor openly to haue mutuall Conference; nor to write one to another for the space of two yeares, which is the time of their Gouernment. These Castles are madeffable and vnconquerable, if that the Keepers be loyall, and provided with Naturall and Martiall furniture. They are vulgarly called, The Ports of Christendome, by the Greekes; but more lustily, The strength of Venice: for if these Castles were taken by the Turkes, the Trade of the Plavina Merchants would bee of none account; yea, the very meane to nourish Venice it selfe.

Corfu.

Two strong Castles in the Ile Corfu.

60 From thence, I embarked in a Greekish Carmioesalo, with a great number of passengers, Greekes, Slauonians, Italians, Armenians and Iewes, that were all mindfull to Zante.

Biding farewell to Zante, I embarked in a Frigate going to Petrasso in Morea, which is called led Peloponnesus: and by the way in the Gulfe Lepanto (which diuiderh Etolia and Morea: the chiefest Citie in Etolia is called Lepanto: from thence Westward by the Sea-side, is Delphos, famous for the Oracle of Apollo) wee sayled by the Iles Echinidi, but by Moderne Writers, Curzolari: where the Christians obtained the Victorie against the Turkes, for there did they fight, after this manner.

The Battell
betweene the Christians and Turkes at Le-panto.

In the yeere 1571. and the sixth of October, Iohn Duke of Austria, Generall for the Spanish Gallies, Marco Antonio Colonna, for Pope Pio Quinto; and Sebastiano Veniero, for the Venetian Armie, conuened altogether in Largostolo at Cephalonia: hauing of all two hundred and eight Gallies, sixe Galliaffes, and five and twentie Frigots. After a most resolute deliberation, these three Generals went with a valiant courage to encounter with the Turkish Armado, on the Sunday morning the seuenth of October: who in the end through the helpe of Christ, obtrayned a glorious Victorie. In that Fight there was taken and Drowned one hundred and eightie of Turkish Gallies; and there escaped about the number of sixe hundred and fiftie Ships, Gallies, Galeotes, and other Vessels: there was fiftene thousand Turkes killed, and foure thousand taken Prisoners, and twelue thousand Christians deliuered from their slavish Bondage. In all, the Christians but loosed eleuen Gallies, and five thousand slaine. At their returne to Largostolo, after this victorious Battell, the three Generals diuided innumerable spoyles, to their well-deseruing Captaines and worthy Souldiers.

HONDIVS his Map of Morea.

After my arriual in Peterasso, the Metropolitan of Peloponnesus, I left the turmoiling dangers of the intricate Iles of the Ionean and Adriaticall Seas, and aduised to trauell in the firme Land of Greec, with a Carauan of Greekes that was bound for Athens. But before hee admitted me into his companie, he was wonderfull inquisitiue, for what cause I trauelled alone? and of what Nation I was? To whom I soberly excused, and discovered my selfe with modest answers. Which pacified his curiositie; but not his avaritious minde: for vnder a pretended protection he had of me, hee extorted the most part of my money from my purse, without any regard of Conscience.

In the first, second, and third daies Journeying, we had faire way, hard lodging, but good cheere, and kind entertainment for our money: But on the fourth day, when wee entered in the Hilly and barren Countrie of Arcadia; for a daies Iournie we had no Village, but saw abundance of Cartell without Keepers. In this Desart way, I beheld many singular Monuments, and ruinous Castles; whose names I knew not, because I had an ignorant Guide: But this I remember, amongst these Rockes my belly was pinched, and wearied was my bodie, with the climbing of fastidious Mountaines, which bred no small grieve to my breast. Yet notwithstanding of my distresse, the remembrance of these sweet seasoned Songs of Arcadian Shepherds, which pregnant Poets haue so well penned, did recreate my fatigated corps, with many sugred suppositions. These sterile bounds being past, we entered in the Easterne Plaine of Morea, called anciently Sparta, where, that sometimes famous Citie of Lacedemon flourished, but now sacked, and the lumps of ruines and memorie onely remaynes. Marching thus, wee left Modena, and Napoli on our right hand, toward the Sea side, and on the sixth day at night, we pitched our Tents, in the disinhabited Villages of Argo and Micene, from the which unhappie Helene was rauished. Heere I had the ground to be a Pillow, and the World-wide-fields to bee a Chamber, the whirling-windy-skies, to be a roose to my Winter-blasted lodging, and the humide vapours of cold Nocturna, to accompany the vnwished-for-bed of my repose.

Although Arcadia in former times was pleasant, yet it is now for the most part wast and disinhabited.

Lacedemon in Sparta.

In all this Countrie I could find nothing, to answer the famous Relations, given by ancient Authors, of the excellencie of that Land, but the name onely; the barbarousnesse of Turkes and Time, hauing defaced all the Monuments of Antiquitie: No shew of honour, no habitation of men in a honest fashion, nor possors of the Countrie in a Principallitie. But rather Prisoners shut vp in Prisons, or addicted slaves to cruell and tyrannicall Masters.

Departing from Argo, vpon the seventh day wee arrived at Athens: Athens is still inhabited, standing in the East part of Peloponnesus, neere to the Frontiers of Macedon: It was first called Cecropia, and lastly Athens of Minerva. This Citie was the Mother and Wel-spring of all Liberall Arts and Sciences, but now altogether decayed: The circuit of old Athens hath beene according to the fundamentall Walls yet extant about fixe Italian miles, but now of no great quantitie, nor many dwelling Houses therein. They haue abundance of all things, requisite for the sustenance of humane life, of which I had no small prooffe: for these Athenians or Greekes, exceeding kindly banqueted me foure daies, and furnisht mee with necessarie prouision for my Voyage to Creta. And also transported mee by Sea in a Brigandino freely to Serigo, being foure and fortie miles distant.

Athens. See of it my Pilgrimage l. 3 c. 14. Simdor Cabasidas writes that there are 70. Dialects of Moderne Greece, the worst of which is that of Athens. Kind Athenians Serigo is an Island in the Sea Cretico, It was anciently called Cythera. It is of circuit sixtie miles, hauing but one Castle called Capsallo: which is kept by a Venetian Captaine: here it is said that Venus did first inhabit, and I saw the ruines of her demolished Temple on the side of a Mountaine yet extant. A little more downward below this Temple of Venus, are the reliques of that Palace, wherein Menelaus did dwell, who was King of Sparta, and Lord of this Ile. The Greekes of the Ile told me there were wild Asses there, who had a stone in their heads, which was a souereigne remedie for the Falling-sicknesse, and good to make a woman be quickly deliuered of her birth.

Wild Asses.

The Ile of Candy was called Creta: It is a most famous and ancient Kingdome: By moderne Writers, it is called Queene of the Iles Mediterrane: It had of old a hundred Cities, whereof it had the name Hecatompolis, but now onely foure, Candia, Canea, Rethimos, and Scythia; the rest are but Villages and Bourges. It is of length, to wit, from Capo Ermico, in the West, called by Plinie, Frons arietis, and Capo Salomone in the East, two hundred and fortie miles, large threescore, and of circuite fixe hundred and fiftie miles. This is the chiefeft Dominion, belonging to the Venetian Republike: In euery one of these foure Cities there is a Gouvernour, and two Counsellors, sent from Venice euery two yeeres. The Countrey is diuided into foure parts, vnder the iurisdiction of the foure Cities, for the better administration of Iustice: and they haue a Generall, who commonly remayneth in the Citie of Candia (like to a Vice-roy) who deposeth or imposeth Magistrates, Capitaines, Souldiers, Officers, and others whatsoeuer, in the behalfe of Saint Marke, or Duke of Venice. The Venetians detaine continually a strong Guard, diuided in Companies, Squadrons, and Garrisons, in the Cities and Fortresses of the Island: which doe extend to the number of twelue thousand Souldiers kept, not only for the incursion of Turkes, but also for feare of the Cretans or Inhabitants, who would rather if they could (as some say) render to the Turke, then to liue vnder the subiection of Venice. This Ile produceth the best Maluofey, Muscadine, and Leaticke, that supposedly are in the World. It yeeldeth Orenge, Limons, Melons, Citrons Grenadiers, Adams Apples, Raisins, Oliues, Dates, Honey, Sugar, Vua di tre Volte, and all other kinds of fruit in abundance. But the most part of their Cornes are brought yeerely from Archipelago and Greece. This much of the Ile in generall; and now in respect of my travelling two times through the bounds of the whole Kingdome, which was neuer before achieved by any Traveller of Christendome; I will as briefly as I can in particular relate a few of these miseries indured by me in this Land, with the nature and qualitie of the people.

A description of Candie. See the Map. sup. pag. 1384.

This aforelaid Carabusa, is the principall Fortresse of Creta, being of it selfe invincible, and is not vnlike to the Castle of Dunbertan, which standeth at the mouth of Chyd; vpon which Ri-uer the most worthy renoumed, and anciently ennobled Citie of Lanerke is situated: For it is enuironed with a Rocke higher then the wals, and ioyneth with Capo Ermico: hauing learned of the Theeuish way, I had to Canea, I aduised to put my money in exchange, which the Captaine of that strength, very courteously performed; And would also haue diswaded mee from my purpose, but I by no perswasion of him would stay. From thence departing, scarcely was I aduanced twelue miles in my way, when I was beset on the skirt of a Rockie Mountaine, with three Greeke Renegadoes, and an Italian Bandido: who laying hands on me, beat me most cruelly, robbed me of all my clothes, and stripped me naked, vsing many inuectiue speeches. At last, the Ita- lian perceiuing I was a stranger, and could not speake the Cretan Tongue, began to aske mee in his owne Language, where was my money? To whom I soberly answered, I had no more then he saw, which was eightie Bagantines: But he not giuing credit to these words, searched all my clothes, and Budgeto, yet found nothing except my Linnen, and Letters of recommendation, I had from diuers Princes of Christendome: Which when he saw, did moue him to compassion, and earnestly entreated the other three Theeues to grant me mercie, and saue my life: A long deliberation being ended, they restored backe againe my Pilgrimes clothes, and Letters, but my blue Gowne and Bagantines they kept: Such also was their theeuish courtesie toward mee, that for my better safegard in the way, they gaue me a stamped piece of Clay, as a token to shew any of their companions, if I encountred with them; for they were about twentie Rascals of a confederate band, that lay in this Desert passage. Leauing them with many counterfeit thanks, I trauelled that day seuen and thirtie miles, and at night attained to the vnhappy Village of Pick- horno: where I could haue neither meate, drinke, lodging, nor any refreshment to my wearied bodie. These desperate Candiots thronged about mee gazing (as though astonished) to see mee both want companie, and their Language, and by their cruell lookes, they seemed to bee a barbarous and vnciuill people. For all these High-landers of Candie, are tyrannicall, bloud-thirstie, and de-ceitfull. The consideration of which, made me to shun their villanie, and priuately sought for a secure place of repose in a darke Caue by the Seaside; in which I lay till morning with a crazed bodie, and hungrie belly,

Vpon the appearing of the next Aurora I embraced my vknown way, and about midday came to Canea: Canea is the second Citie of Crete, exceeding populous, well walled, and fortified with Bulwarkes: It hath a large Castle, contayning ninety seuen Palaces, in which the Rector and other Venetian Gentlemen dwell. There lie continually in it seuen Companies of Souldiers, who keepe Centinell on the wals, guard the Gates, and Market places of the Cities:
Neither in this Towne nor Candia, may any Countrey Peasant enter with weapons (especially Harquebuzes) for that conceived feare they haue of Treason. Truly this Citie may equall in strength, either Zara in Dalmatia, or Luka, or Ligorne, both in Tuscania: for these foure Cities are so strong, that in all my trauels I neuer saw them matched. They are all well prouided with Artillery, and all necessary things for their defence, especially Luka, which continually re-serues in store prouision of victuals for twelue yeeres siege. Being here disappointed of transportation to Archipelago, I aduised to visit Candie: and in my way I saw the large Hauen of Suda, which hath no Towne or Village, saue onely a Castle, situated on a Rocke in the Sea, at the entry of the Bay: the bounds of that Harbour may receiue at one time aboue two thousand ships and Gallies, and is the onely Key of the Iland: for the which place, the King of Spaine hath oft offered an infinite deale of money to the Venetians, whereby his Nauie which sometimes resort in the Leuante, might haue access and reliefe; but they would neuer grant him his request.

Vpon the third dayes iourney from Canea, I came to Retimios: This Citie is somewhat ruinous, and vnwalled, but the Citizens haue newly builded a strong Fortresse, which defendeth them from the inuasion of Pirates: it standeth by the Sea side, and in the yeere 1597. it was miserably sacked, and burned with Turkes. Continuing my Voyage, I passed along the skirt of Mount Ida, accompanied with Greekes who could speake the Italian Tongue, on which, first they shewed me the Caue of King Minos, but some hold it to be the Sepulchre of Iupiter. That Grotto is of length eightie paces, and eight large: This Minos was said to be the Brother of Radaman- thius, and Sarpedon; who, after their succession to the Kingdome, established such equitable lawes, that by Poets they are feigned to be the Iudges of Hell. I saw also there, the place where Jupi- ter (as they say) was nourished by Amalthea, which by Greekes is recited, as well as Latine Poets.
Thirdly, they shewed me the Temple of Saturne, which is a worke to be admired, of such Antiquitie, and as yet vndecayed; who (say they) was the first King that inhabited there. And neere to it, is the demolished Temple of Matelia, hauing this superscription aboue the doore, yet to be seene Make cleane your feet, wash your head and enter. Fourthly, I saw the entrie to the Labyrinth of Dedalus, which I would gladly haue better viewed, but because wee had no Candlelight, we durst not enter: for there are many hollow places within it; so that if a man stumble, or fall, he can hardly be rescued: It is cut forth with many intricating wayes, on the face of a little hill, ioyning with Mount Ida.

Mount Ida is the highest Mountaine in Creta, and by the computation of Shepherds feete, amounteth to fixe miles of height: It is ouer-clad euen to the top with Cypresse trees, and good store of medicinable herbs: insomuch that the beasts which feed thereupon, haue their teeth gilded, like to the colour of Gold: It is said by some Historians, that no venemous animall can liue in this Ile; but I saw the contrarie: for I kild vpon one day two Serpents and a Viper: Wherefore many build vpon false reports, but experience teacheth men the truth. Descending from this Mountaine, I entred in a faire Plaine beautified with many Villages; in one of which I found a Grecian Bishop, who kindly presented me with Grapes of Maluasie, and other things, for it was in the time of their Vantage. To carrie these things hee had giuen mee, hee caused to make readie an Ass, and a Seruant, who went with mee to Candie, which was more then fiftene miles from his House. True it is, that the best sort of Greekes, in visiting other, doe not vse to come emptie handed, neither will they suffer a stranger to depart, without both gifts and Conuoy!

Candie is a large and famous Citie, situated on a Plaine by the Sea side, hauing a goodly Harbour for ships, and a faire Arsenall wherein are six and thirtie Gallies. It is exceeding strong, and daily guarded with two thousand Souldiers, and the Walls in compasse are about three leagues: Candie is distant from Venice thirteene thousand miles, from Constantinople seuen hundred, from Famagosta in Cyprus fixe hundred, from Alexandria in Egypt five hundred, and from the Citie of Ierusalem nine hundred miles. The Candians through all the Ile, make Mustars euery eighth day, before the Seriant Maiors, or Officers of the Generall, and are well prouided with all sorts of Armour; yea, and the most valorous people that hight the name of Greekes. It was told me by the Rector of Candie, that they may raise in Armes of the Inhabitants (not reckoning the Garrisons) about sixtie thousand men, all able for Warres, with fiftie foure Gallies, and twentie foure Gallies for the Sea. In all my trauels through this Realme, I neuer could see a Greeke come forth of his house vnarmed: and after such a martiall manner, that on his head hee weareth a bare Steele Cap; a Bow in his hand, a long Sword by his side, a broad Poynard ouerthwart his belly, and a round Target hanging at his Girdle. They are not costly in Apparell, for they weare but Linnen Clothes, and vse no Shooes, but Bootes of white Leather: by nature they are craftie and subtile, as Paul mentioneth, Titus 1. 12. Their Haruest is our Spring: for they manure the ground, and sow the Seed in October, which is reaped in March and April. Being frustrate of my intention at Candie, I was forced to returne to Canea, where I stayed five and twentie dayes before I could get passage, for I purposed to view Constantinople. I trauelled on foot in this Ile more then foure hundred miles, and vpon the fiftie day after my first coming to Carabusa, I embarked in a Fisher-boate that belonged to Milo, being a hundred miles distant, which had bene violently driuen thither with stormie weather.

Milo was called by Aristotle, Melada; and by others, Mimalida, Melos: And lastly, Milo; because of the fine Mil-stones that are got there, which are transported to Constantinople, Greece, and Natolia. This Ile is one of the Iles Cyclades, or Sporades, but more commonly Archipelago, or the Arch-Ilands, and standeth in the beginning of the Aegean Sea: The Inhabitants are Greekes, but slaues to the Turke, and so are all the fifty three Iles of the Cyclades, saue onely Timo, which holdeth of the Venetians.

From Milo I came to Zephano, an Ile of circuit about twentie miles: The Inhabitants are poore, yet kind people: There are an infinite number of Partridges within this Ile, of a reddish colour, and bigger then ours in Britaine: They are wild, and onely killed by small shot; but I haue seene in other Ilands flocks of them feeding in the fields, and vially kept by Children: Some others I haue seene in the streets of Villages, without any Keeper, euen as our Hens doe with vs. I saw Fountaines heere, that naturally yeeld fine Oyle which is the greatest advantage the Ilanders haue.

From thence I embarked, and arriued at Angusa, in Parir: This Ile is fortie miles long, and fixe miles broad: being plentifull enough in all necessary things for the vse of man: In Angusa I stayed sixteene dayes, stormested with Northerly winds; and in all that time I neuer came in bed: for my lodging was in a little Church without the Village, on hard stones; where I also had a fire, and dressed my meate. The Greekes visited me oftentimes, and intreated me about all things, I should not enter within the bounds of their Sanctuarie; because I was not of their Religion. These miserable Ilanders, are a kind of silly poore people; which in their behauiour, shewed the necessitie they had to liue, rather then any pleasure in their liuing. From thence I arriued in the Ile of Mecano, where I but onely dined, and so set forward to Zea. Symonides the Poet, and Eristato the excellent Physician, were borne in it. The next Ile of any note we touched at, was Timo: This Ile is vnder the Signorie of Venice, and was sometimes beautified with the Temple of Neptune. By Aristotle it was called Idrusa; of Demosthenes and Aeschines, Erusea: It hath an impregnable Castle, builded on the top of a high Rocke; so that the Turkes by no meanes can conquer it.

From this Ile I came to Palmosa, sometime Pathmos, which is a Mountaynous and barren Ile: It was heere that Saint Iohn wrote the Reuelation after hee was banished by Domitianus the Emperour. Thence I embarked to Nicaria, and sailed by the Ile Scyro; which of olde was the Signiory of Licomedes, and in the Habit of a Woman, was Achilles brought vp heere: who in that time, begot Pyrrhus vpon Deidamia, the Daughter of Licomedes, and where the crafty Klysses did discover this fatall Prince to Troy. As we fetched vp the sight of Nicaria, wee espied two Turkish Galliot, who gaue vs the Chace, and pursued vs straight vnto a Bay, betwixt two Mountaines, where we left the loaden Boat, and fled to the Rockes: But in our flying, the Master was taken, and other two old men; whom they made Captiues and Slaues: and also seized vpon the Boat, and all their goods: The number that escaped, were nine persons. This Ile Nicaria, was anciently called Doliche, and Ithiosa, and is somewhat barren; hauing no Sea-port at all: It was here, the Poets feigned, that Icarus the Sonne of Dedalus fell, when as hee tooke flight from Creta, with his borrowed wings, of whom it hath the name. Expecting certaine dayes here, in a Village called Laphantos, for passage to Sio, at last I found a Brigandino bound thither, that was come from the fruitfull Ile of Stalimene, of old Lemnons, wherein I embarked, and sailed by the Ile Samos, which is opposite to Caria, in Asia Minor: It is of circuit one hundred and sixtie, and of length fortie miles: It was of old named Drusfa, and Melanphilo, in which was Pythagoras the Philosopher, and Lycaon the excellent Musitioner borne.

As we left the Ile Veneco on our left hand, and entred the Gulfe betweene Sio and Eolida, there fell downe a deadly storme, at the Greco è Levante, which split our Mast, carrying Sailes and all ouer-boord: Whereupon euery man looked (as it were) with the stampe of death in his pale visage. The tempest continuing (our Boat not being able to keepe the Seas) wee were constrained to seeke into a Creeke betwixt two Rockes, for safetie of our liues; where, when wee entred, there was no likelihood of reliefe: for we had a shelfie shoare, and giuing ground to the Anchors, they came both home. The sorrowfull Master seeing nothing but shipwracke, tooke the Helme in hand, directing his course to rush vpon the face of a low Rocke, whereupon the Sea most fearefully broke. As wee touched, the Mariners contending who should first leape out, some fell ouerboord, and those that got Land, were pulled backe by the reciprocating waues: Neither in all this time durst I once moue; for they had formerly sworne, if I pressed to escape, before the rest were first forth, they would throw me head-long into the Sea: So being two wayes in danger of death, I patiently offered vp my Prayers to God.

At our first incounter with the Rockes (our fore-deckes, and Boates Gallerie being broke, and a great Lake made) the recoyling waues brought vs backe from the shelles a great way; which the poore Master perceiuing, and that there were seven men drowned, and eleuen persons alieue, cried with a loud voice: Be of good courage, take vp Oares, and row hastily; it may bee, before the Barke sinke, we shall attaine to yonder Caue. Euery man working for his owne deliuerance (as it pleased God) we got the same with good fortune: for no sooner were we disembarked, but the Boat immediately sunke. There was nothing saued but my Coffino, which I kept alwaies in my armes; for the which safetie of my things, the Greekes were in admiration. In this Caue, which was thirtie paces long, within the Mountaine, we abode three daies, without both meate and drinke: vpon the fourth day at morne, the tempest ceasing, there came Fisher-boates to relieue vs, who found the ten Greekes almost famished for lacke of food.

The dead men being found on shoare, we buried them; and I learned at that instant time, there were seuentene Boats cast away on the Coast of this Iland, and neuer a man saued: in this place the Greekes set vp a stone Crosse in the memoriall of such a wofull mischance, and mourned heauily, fasting and praying. I reioycing, and thanking God for my safetie (leauing them sorrowing for their friends and goods) tooke Iourney through the Iland to Sio: for so is the Citie called. In my way I past by an old Castle standing on a little Hill, named Gasbos, or Helias; where (as I was informed by two Greekes in my company) the Sepulchre of Homer was yet extant: for this is one of the seven Iles that contended for his birth: and I willing to see it, entreated them to accompany me thither; where, when we came, we descended by fixteene degrees into a darke Cell; and passing that, we entred in another foure squared Roome, in which I saw an ancient Tombe, whereon were ingrauen Greeke Letters, which we could not vnderstand for their Antiquitie; but whether it was this Tombe or not, I doe not know, but this they related.

The Women of the Citie Sio, are the most beautifull Dames, of all the Greekes in the World, and greatly giuen to Venerie: They are for the most part exceeding proud, and sumptuous in apparell, and commonly goe (euen Artificers Wiues) in Gownes of Sattin and Taffetay; yea of Cloth of Siluer and Gold, and are adorned with Precious Stones and Gemmes, and Iewels about their neckes and hands. Their Husbands are their Pandors, and when they see any stranger arriue, they will presently demand of him, if hee would haue a Mistris: and so they make Whoores of their owne wiues, and are contented for a little gaine, to weare Hornes: such are the base mindes of ignominious Cuckolds: After some certaine dayes attendance, I embarked in a Carmoesalo, bound for Nigroponti, which was forth of my way to Constantinople; but because I would galdly haue seene Macedonia, I followed that determination: In our way wee sayled by Mytelene, an Iland of olde called Isa: next Lesbos: and lastly Mytelene, of Milet the Sonne of Phaebus.

Nigroponti is separated from the firme Land of Thessalia, with a narrow channell; ouer the which in one part there is a bridge that passeth betweene the Ile and the mayne continent, and vnder it runneth a maruellous swift current or tyde: Within halfe a mile of the Bridge I saw a Marble columnne standing on the toppe of a little Rocke, whence (as the Ilanders tolde mee) Aristotle leaped in, and drowned himselfe, after that hee could not conceiue the reason why this Channell so ebbd and flowed. This Ile bringeth forth in abundance, all things requisite for humane life, and decored with many goodly Villages. From thence I arriued at a Towne in Macedonia, called Salonica, but of olde Thessalonica, where I staid fve daies, and was much made of by the Inhabitants: It is a Citie full of rich commodities, and is the principall place of Thessalie, which is a Prouince of Macedon, together with Achaia and Myrmedon, which are two Prouinces of the same. There is an Vniuersitie of Iewes here, who professe onely the Hebrew Tongue. About this Citie is the most fertile Countrey in all Greece.

Salonica

Iewish Vniuersity

Pernassus described

In Salonica I found a Germe bound for Tenedos, in the which I embarked: As we sailed along the Thessalonian Shoare, I saw the two topped Hill Pernassus, where it was said the nine Muses haunted: but as for the fountaine Helicon, I leaue that to be searched, and seene by the imagination of Poets; for if it had beene objected to my sight, like an insatiable drunkard, I should haue drunke vp the streames of Poesie, to haue enlarged my poore poetickall veine. The Mountaine it selfe is somewhat steepe and sterile, especially the two toppes, the one wherof is drie and sandie, signifying that Poets are alwayes poore and needie: The other top is barren and rockie, resembling the ingratitude of wretched and niggardly Patrons: the vale betweene the tops is pleasant and profitable, denoting the fruitfull and delightful soile, which painefull Poets, the Muses plowmen so industriously manure. A little more Eastward, as we fetcht vp the Coast of Achaia, the Master of the vessell shewed mee a ruinous Village and Castle; where hee said the admired Citie of Thebes had beene.

Thebes

Tenedos

Vpon the third day from Salonica, wee arriued in the Road of Tenedos, which is an Island in the Sea Pontus or Propontis: it hath a Citie called Tenedos, built by Tenes, which is a gallant place, hauing a Castle and a faire Hauen for all sorts of Vessells: it produceth good store of Wines, and the best supposed to be in all the Southeast parts of Europe.

In Tenedos I met by accident, two French Merchants of Marseills, intending for Constantinople, who had lost their Ship at Sio, when they were busie at venereall tilting with their new elected Mistresses, and so a second remedie were glad to come thither in a Turkish Carmoesalo. The like of this I haue seene fall out with Sea-faring men, Merchants and Passengers, who buy sometimes their too much folly with too deare repentance. They and I resolving to view Troy, did hire a Ianizarie to be our conductor & protector, & a Greeke to be our Interpreter. Where when we landed, we saw here & there many relicts of old walls, as we trauelled through these famous bounds. And as we were aduanced toward the East part of Troy, our Greeke brought vs to many Tombes which were mightie ruinous, and pointed vs particularly to the Tombes of Hector, Ajax, Achilles, Troilus, & many other valiant Champions, with the Tombes also of Hecuba, Cressida, and other Troiane Dames: Well I wote, I saw infinite old Sepulchres, but for their particular names and nomination of them I suspend, neither could I beleue my Interpreter, sich it is more then three thousand and odde yeeres agoe that Troy was destroyed: Hee shewed vs also the ruines of King Priams Palace, and where Anchises the father of Aeneas dwelt. At the North-east corner of Troy, which is in sight of the Castles of Hellesponte, there is a Gate yet standing, and a piece of a reasonable high Wall; vpon which I found three pieces of rusted mony, which afterwards I gaue to the two younger brethren of the Duke of Florence.

The Tombes of Troians

A description of Troy

Where the pride of Phrygia stood, it is a most delectable Plaine, abounding now in Cornes, Fruits, and Wines, and may be called the Garden of Natolia: yet not populous, for there are but only fve scattered Villages in all that bounds: The length of Troy hath been, as may be discerned, by the fundamentall Walls yet extant about twenty miles: the ruines of which are come to that Poeticall Prouerbe: Nunc seges est ubi Troia fuit.

Leaving the Fields of noble Ilium, we crossed the Riuer of Simois, and dined at a village named Extetash: I remember, discharging our couenant with the Ianizarie, who was not contented with the former condition, the Frenchmen making obstacle to pay that which I had giuen, the wrathful Ianizary belaboured them both with a cudgel, til the blood sprung from their heads, & compelled them to double his wages. This is one true note to a trauelier (wherof I had the ful experience afterward) that if he cannot make his own part good, he must alwaies at the first motion content these Raskalls; otherwise he will be constrained doubtlesse with strokes to pay twice as much: for they make no account of conscience, nor are ruled by the Law of compassion, neither regard they a Christian more then a dog: but whatsoever extortion or iniurie they vse against him, he must bee French like contented, bowing his head, and making a counterfeite shew of thanks, and happy too oftentimes, if so he escape. Hence we arriued at the Castles, called of old Sestos and Abydos, which are two Fortresses opposite to other, the one in Europe, the other in Asia, being a mile distant: They stand at the beginning of Hellesponte, and were also cognominate the Castles of Hero and Leander, which were erected in a commemoration of their admirable fidelitie in loue. But now they are commonly called the Castles of Gallipoly, yea, or rather the strength of Constantinople, betweene which no Ship may enter without knowledge of the Captains: And at their returne they must stay three dayes before they are permitted to goe through. Betwixt the Castles and Constantinople is about fortie leagues: Here I left the two Frenchmen with a Greeke Barbour, and embarked for Constantinople in a Turkish Frigate. The first place of any note I saw within these narrow Seas, was the ancient Citie of Gallipolis. After we had fetcht vp the famous Citie of Calcedon in Bithinia on our right hand; I beheld on our left, the prospect of that little world, the great Citie of Constantinople; which indeed yeeldeth such an outward splendor, to the amazed beholder, of goodly Churches, stately Towers, gallant Steeples, and other such things, whereof now the world make so great account, that the whole earth cannot equall it. Beholding these delectable objects, we entred into the channel of Bosphorus, which diuideth Perah from Constantinople. And arriuing at Tapanan, where all the Munition of the Great Turke lieth, I bade farewell to my company, and went to a lodging to refresh my selfe till morning.

Departing from Constantinople, I came to Cenchrea, being three hundred miles distant, where Saint Paul cut his haire, after his vow was performed, Act. 18. 18. from thence I went to Smyrna in Carmania, a famous Kingdome in Asia the Lesser: This Citie was one of the seuen Churches mentioned Rauelat. 2. 8. It is a goodly place, hauing a faire Hauen for Ships: They haue great traffike with all Nations, especially for the fine Silke, Cotten-wool, and dimmetie brought to it by the Country Peasants, which strangers buy from them. Truly neere vnto this Citie I saw such a long continuing Plaine, abounding in Corne, Wines, and all sorts of fruitfull herbage, and so infinitely peopled, that me thought Nature seemed with the peoples industrie to contend, the one by propagating creatures, the other by admirable agriculture. Thiatyra, now called Tiria, one also of the seuen Churches is not farre hence.

From this Citie I embarked in a Turkish Carmoesalo, bound for Rhodes. In our sayling along the Coast of Asia Minor, the first place of any note I saw, was the ruinous Citie of Ephesus; yet somewhat inhabited, and pleasantly adorned with Gardens, faire Fieldes, and greene Woods of Oliue trees, which on the Sea doe yeeld a delectable prospect: It was one of the seuen Churches, Rauel. 2. 1. Ouer-against this Citie is the Ile Lango, anciently called Cool, wherein the great Hippocrates was borne, and Appelles, the Painter most excellent. It is both fertile and populous, and of circuit about 80. miles. There is a kind of Serpent said to be in it so friendly vnto the Inhabitants, that when the men are sleeping vnder the shadow of Trees they come crawling, and will linke or claspe themselves about their neckes and bodies, without doing any harme, neither when they awake are the beasts afraid. And neere to Lango is the Ile Nixa, of old Strangoli; and by some called Dionisa and Naxos; an Iland both fruitfull and delightfull. As we sailed by the West part of the Ile, a Greeke Passenger shewed mee the place, where (as hee said) Ariadne was deceived of Theseus, which is not farre from the irriguate Plaine of Darmille. Continuing our Nauigation I saw a little Ile called Ephdosh, where the Turks told me, that al the Ilanders were naturally good swimmers, paying no more tribute to their Great Lord the Turke, saue only once in the yere, there are certaine men and women chosen by a Turkish Captaine, who must swim a whole league right out in the Sea, and go downe to the bottome of the waters to fetch thence some token they haue got ground: And if they shall happen to faile in this this, the Iland will bee reduced againe to pay him yeerely rent. This I saw with mine eyes, whiles wee being calmed, there came a man and two women swimming to vs more then a mile of way, carrying with them (drie about the water) baskets of Fruit to sell, the which made mee not a little to wonder. Contenting them for their ware, vpon the ninth day after our departure from Smyrna, wee arriued at the Citie of Rhodes, so called of the Iland wherein it standeth.

Rhodes lieth in the Carpathian Sea; It was of old called Ibrea, Telchino and Phinla: Plinie saith it was called Rhodes, because there were certaine Fields of Roses in it; for Rhodes in the Greeke tongue signifieth a Floure: Not farre from the Citie I saw the reliſts of that huge and admiredly-erected Idoll, named Collossus. This Ile of Rhodes was lost by the Maltazes, Anno Dom. 1522. and euer since is in the fruition of Turks: The Fortresse of Rhodes, and that Fortresse Famogostain Cyprus, are the two strongest Holds in all the Empire of the Great Turke.

After I had contented the Master for my fraught and victuals (who, as hee was an Infidell, yfed mee with an extraordinarie exaction) I found a Barke of the Archos purposed to Cyprus, with which I embarked, being foure hundred miles distant. Hauing past the Gulfe of Sattolia, we boorded close along the firme Land of fruitfull Pamphilia, and on the fifth day thereafter, we fetched vp the Coast of Cilicia, sustaining many great dangers, both of tempestuous stormes, and inuasions of damnable Pirats.

Twelue dayes was betweene Rhodes and Limisso in Cyprus: where arriued, I receiued more gracious demonstrations from the Ilanders, then I could hope for or wish; being far beyond my merit or expectation; onely contenting my curiositie with a quiet mind, I renderd thanks for my imbraced courtesies. The second day after my arriual, I tooke with me an Interpreter, and went to see Nicosia, which is placed in the midst of the Kingdome. But in my iourney thither, extream was the heat and thirst I endured; both in respect of the season, and also want of water: And although I had with mee sufficiencie of wine, yet durst I drinke none thereof, being so strong, and withall hath a taste of pitch; and that is, because they haue no Barrells, but great Iarres made of Earth, wherein there wine is put. Nicosia is the principall Citie of Cyprus, and is inuironed with Mountaines, like vnto Florence in Hetruria; wherein the Vizier Bashaw remaineth: The second is Famogusta, the chiefe strength and Sea-port in it: Selina, Lemisso, Paphos, and Fontana Morosa, are the other foure speciall Townes in the Iland.

This Ile of Cyprus is in length 210. and large sixtie, and of circuit 600. miles. In this Ile was Venus greatly honoured: It yeeldeth infinite Canes of Sugar, strong Wines, and Cotten-wooll, besides all other sorts of Fruit in abundance.

In my returne from Nicosia to Famogusta, with my Trenchman, wee encountered by the way with foure Turkes, who needs would haue my horse to ride vpon; which my Interpreter refused: But they in reuenge pulled mee by the heeles from the horse backe, beating me most pittifully, and left mee almost for dead. In this meane while my companion fled, and escaped the sceleratenesse of their hands; and if it had not beene for some compassionate Greekes, who by accident came by and relieued me, I had (doubtlesse) immediately perished. From Famogusta I embarked in a Germe, and arriued at Tripoly. Tripoly is a Citie in Siria, standing a mile from the marine side, neere to the foot of Mount Libanus: since it hath beene first founded it hath three times beene scituated and remoued in three sundrie places: First, it was ouerwhelmed with water: Secondly, it was sacked with Cursares, and Pirates: Thirdly, it is like now to bee ouer-throwne with new made Mountaines of Sand: There is no Hauen by many miles neere vnto it, but a dangerous rode, where often when Northerly windes blow, Ships are cast away. The great trafficke which now is at this place, was formerly at Scanderona, a little more Eastward; but by reason of the infectious aire (that corrupted the blood of strangers, proceeding of two high mountaines, who are supposed to bee a part of Mount Caucasus, which withhold the prospect of the Sunne from the In-dwellers, more then three houres in the morning: So that in my knowledge I haue knowne dye in one Shippe, and a moneths time twentie Mariners; for this cause) the Christian ships were glad to haue their commodities brought to Tripoly, which is a more holesome and conuenient place.

The daily Interrogation I had here, for a Carrauans departure to Aleppo was not to me a little fastidious, being mindfull to visit Babylon: In this my expectation I tooke purpose, with three Venetian Merchants to goe see the Cedars of Libanon, which was but a daies iourney thither. As we ascended vpon the Mountaine, our ignorant guide mistaking the way, brought vs into a labyrinth of dangers; insomuch that wrestling amongst intricate paths of Rocks: two of our Asses fell ouer a Banke and broke their necks: And if it had not beene for a Christian Maronite, who accidentally encountred with vs, in our wilsum wandring wee had beene miserably lost; both in regard of Rockes and heapes of Snow we passed; and also of great Torrents which fell downe with force from the steepe tops; wherein one of these Merchants was twice almost drowned. When wee arriued to the place where the Cedars grew, wee saw but twentie foure of all, growing after the manner of Oke trees, but a great deale taler, straighter, and greater, and the branches grow so straight out, as though they were kept by Art.

Although that in the daies of Salomon, this Mountaine was ouer-clad with Forrests of Cedars, yet now there are but only these, and nine miles Westward thence seuentene more. The nature of that Tree is alwaies green, yeelding an odoriferous smell, and an excellent kind of fruit like vnto Apples, but of a sweeter taste, and more holesome in digestion. The Rootes of some of these Cedars are almost destroyed by Shepherds, who haue made fires thereat, and holes wherein they sleepe; yet neuerthelesse they flourish greene aboue in the tops and branches. The length of this Mountaine is about fortie miles, reaching from the West to the East; and continually Summer and Winter, reserueth Snow on the tops. It is also beautified with all the ornaments of nature, as Herbage, Tillage, Pastorage, fructiferous Trees, fine Fountaines, good Cornes, and absolutely the best VVines that is bred on the earth. The Signior thereof is a Free-holder, by birth a Turke, and wil not acknowledge any superior, but the most part of the inhabited Villages are Christians, called Maronites or Nostranes, quasi Nazaritans, and are gouerned by their owne Patriarke. There are none at this day doe speake the Syriack * Tongue, saue onely these people of Mount Libanus; and in that Language the Alcoran of Mahomet is written. The kind Amaronite whom wee met, and tooke with vs for our best guide in descending from the Cedars, shewed vs many Caves and Holes in Rockes, where Coliers, religious Sirens and Amaronites abide: Amongst these austere cottages, I saw a faire tombe all of one stone, being seuenteen foot of length; which (as he said) was the Sepulchre of the valiant Ioshua, who conducted the people of Israel in the Land of Promise.

The Mahometans esteeme this to bee a holy place, and many resort to it in Pilgrimage, to offer vp their Satanicall praiers to Mahomet. I saw vpon this Mountaine a sort of Fruit called Amarza franchi: that is, the death of Christians; because when Italians, or others of Europe eat any quantitie thereof, thereof, they presently fall into the bloudie Fluxes, or else ingender some other pestilentious Feuer whereof they die. The Patriarke did most kindly entertaine vs at his house; so did also all the Amaronites of the other Villages, who met vs in our way before wee came to their Townes, and brought Presents with them of Bread, Wine, Figs, Oliues, Sallats, Capons, Egges, and such like as they could on a sudden prouide. About the Village of Eden, is the most fruitfull part of all Liba-nus, abounding in all sorts of delicious Fruits. True it is, the variety of these things, maketh the silly people thinke, the Garden of Eden was there. There are with this one, other two supposed places of the earthly Paradise: the one is by the Turkes, and some ignorant Georgians, holden to be at Damascus, for the beautie of faire fields, gardens, and excellent fruits there; especially for the tree called Mouslee, which they belecue hath grown there since the beginning of the world. 10 Indeede it is a rare and singular tree, for I saw it at Damascus, and others also of the same kinde, vpon Nylus in Egypt: The growth whereof is strange; for euery yeere in September it is cut downe hard by the roote, and in fve moneths the tree buddeth vp a pace againe, bringing forth leaues, floures, and fruit. The leafe thereof is of such a breadth, that three men may easily stand vnder the shadow of it, and the Apple is bigger then a Foot-ball. The third place by the Chel-faines, is thought to be in the East part of Mesopotamia, neere to the ioyning of Tygris and Euphrates.

This tree hath bearing but

After my returne to Tripoly, I departed thence Eastward, with a Carauan of Turkes to Aleppo, being ten daies iourney distant. In all this way (leauing Scanderon and Antiochia on our left hand) I saw nothing worthy remarking; saue onely a few scattered villages, and poore mise- 20
rable people, liuing in tents, and following their flockes, to whom I payed sundry Cassars:
who remoue their women, children, and cattell where so they finde fountaines, and good pastorage.

Aleppo.

Before my arriual in Aleppo, the Carauan of Babylon was from thence departed. I ioyned with a Carauan of Armenians and Turkes, that were well guarded with Ianifaries, and Souldiers; of whom some were to stay at Damascus by the way, and some mindefull to Ierusalem. And for my better safeguare (being alwayes alone, which by all was euer much admired) the Vize Consull tooke surety of the Captaine, that he should protect me safely from theeues, cut-throats, and the exactions of tributes by the way, deliuering mee freely into the hands of the Padre Guardiano at Ierusalem: which being done, I hired two Mulets from a Turke, one to ride vpon, and another to 30 carry my victuals; and so set forward with them. The number of our company were about nine hundred Armenians, Christian pilgrimes, men and women: sixe hundred Turkes, trafficking for their owne businesse: and one hundred Souldiers, three Schowffes, and six Ianifaries to keep them from inuasions.

The reposing of the Turkes.

Betweene Aleppo and Damascus, we had nine dayes iourney, in fve of which, we had pleasant trauelling, and good Canes to lodge in, that had beene builded for the support of Trauellers, and are well maintained: But when we passed Hamssek, which is a little more then mid-way, wee had dangerous trauelling, being oft assailed with Arabs, fatigated with rockie Mountaines, and sometimes in point of choaking for lacke of water. The confusion of this multitude, was not one- 40 ly grieuous in regard of the extreame heate, prouiding of victuals at poore villages, and scarcitie of water to fill our bottles, made of Boare skinnes, but also amongst narrow and stonie passages, thronging, we oft fell one ouer another, in great heapes; in danger to be smothered: yea, and oftentimes, wee that were Christians, had our bodies well beaten by our conducting Turkes. At our accustomed dismounting, to recreate our selues: and refresh the Beasts, I would often fetch a walke, to stretch my legs, that were stifled with a stumbling beast; wherewith the Turkes were mightily discontented, and in derision, would laugh and mocke me: for they cannot abide a man to walke in turnes, or stand to eate; their vsage being such, that when they come from the horse backe, presently sit downe on ground, folding their feete vnder them, when they repose, dine, and
sup. So doe also their Artizans and all the Turkes in the world sit alwaies crosse-legged, wrong- 50 fully abusing the commendable consuetude of the industrious Tailors. In their houses they haue no Bed to lye on, nor Chaires to sit on, nor Tables to eate on, but a bench made of boords, along the house side, of a foote height from the floore, spread ouer with a Carpet; whereon they vsually sit, eating, drinking, sleeping, resting, and doing of manuell exercises, all in one place.

Damascus.

They neuer vncloath themselves, when they goe to rest, neither haue they any bed-cloathes, saue onely a couerlet aboue them: I haue seene hundreds of them, after this manner, lye ranked like durtie swine in a beastly stie, or loathsome iades in a filthy stable. Vpon the ninth day (leauing Cotafa behinde vs on the Mountaines) wee entred in a pleasant plaine of three leagues in length, adorned with many villages, gardens, and riuers; and arriuing at Damascus, wee were all lodged (some in Chambers wanting beds, and others without, on hard stones) in a great Cane cal- 60 led Herammen, where we staid one day.

Damascus is the Capitall Citie of Syria, called by Turkes, Shamma, and is scituated on a faire plaine, and beautified with many riuers on each side (especially Pharpar and Abdenab) excellent Orchards, and all other naturall objects of elegancie: That for scituation, Artizans, all manner commo-

Commodities, and varietie of Fruits, in all the Asiaticall Prouinces it is not paraleld. By Turkes it is called, the Garden of Turkie.

Betweene Iacobs Bridge and Ierusalem, we had sixe dayes journey.

Aprill the tenth day, about ten of the clocke, (passing the Riuer Kyson) we arrived at Nazareth, and there reposed till the Euening, prouiding our selues of Victuals and Water. In this Towne dwelt Ioseph, and the Virgin Mary; and in which also our Sauour was brought vp. After we had dined, the Armenians arose, and went to a heape of Stones, the ruines of an old House, before the which they fell downe vpon their knees, praising God: and that ruinous lumpe (say they) was the House where Mary dwelt, when Gabriel saluted her, bringing the Annunciation of Saluation to the world. I am fully perswaded they carried away about fise thousand pounds weight, to keepe in a memoriall thereof. Then did I remember of the Chappell of Loretta, and told the Carauan, that I saw that House standing in Italie, which (as the Romanists say) was transported by the Angels. O, said he, wee Armenians can not beleue that, neither many other assertions of the Roman Church; for we certainly know by Christians, that haue from time to time dwelt here euer since, that this is both the place, & stones of the House. Let Papists coyne a new Law to themselves wee care not, for as they erre in this, so doe they in all, following meerly the traditions of men, they runne gallopping post to Hell. The Patriarch being informed by the laughing Carauan of these newes, asked mee in disdaine (thinking it had beene an Article of my Beliete) if I saw that House, or beleued that the Chappell of Loretta was such a thing: I answered, I did not beleue it, affirming it was onely but a deuillish inuention, to deceiue the blind-folded people, and to fill the Coffers of the Roman Priests.

Speeches of the Patriarch

In the time of our staying heere, the Emeere or Lord of the Towne, sent sixe Women, conducted by twelue of his Seruants, to an Armenian Prince, that was a Pilgrime in our companie, to be vsed by him and others, whom so he would elect to bee his fellow labourers: which indeed hee did kindly accept, and inuited me to that Feast; but I gaue him the refusall, little regarding such a frivolous commoditie. Hee, and some of the chiefeest Pilgrimes entertained them for the space of three houres, and sent them backe, giuing to their Conductors 15. Piasters, in a reward.

The villanie of Armenians.

Approaching to Mount Carmell, I beheld a farre off vpon the top of the Hill, the place where Elias ascended to Heauen, when hee left his Cloake behind him to Elizens his Disciple. This Mountaine is foure miles of length, lying South and North, the North end bordering with the Sea, neere to Acre, called antiently Ptolomais, and the South end ioyning with the borders of Samaria.

Mount Carmel.

Leauing Samaria on our left hand, we entred into a faire Plaine, adorned with fruitfull Trees, and all other ornaments that pleasant Fields afford, but no Village we saw. Marching thus, about the declining of the Sun from the Meridian, we came in sight of two hundred Pauillions, all pitched in rankes; yeelding the prospect of a little Citie, by a Brooke side of water: which being perceiued, the Captaine began to censure what they might bee; and immediatly there came riding towards vs sixe naked fellowes, well mounted on Arabian Geldings, who demanded what wee were, and whither we were bound; and if there were any Frankes of Christendome in our companie. To whom the Ianizaries replied, wee were purposed to Ierusalem, and that there was but one Frank with them: vpon the which they presently sought me, demanding Cassar, Cassar; and caused me perforce to pay seven Chickenes of Gold for my head, because (said they) our King is now resident in these Tents, he must pay therefore so much the more extraordinarie.

Cassar tributes

They returning backe to their Prince, with the malediction of a Pilgrimes purse, and wee marching on in our way, that day wee trauelled about three and fortie miles, and pitched at a Village called Adasb, where we found good Hearbs to eate, and abundance of water to drinke, and also to fill our emptied bottles. As wee lay downe to sleepe, after a hungry Supper on the hard ground, and our Guard watching vs; that same King of the Arabians, came a little before mid-night, with foure and twentie well Horsed Runagates, and naked Courtiers, being armed with Bowes and Arrowes, and halfe Pikes, pointed at both ends with hard Steele, and asked for the Carauan, who presently awoke, and went to salute him, laying his hand on his brest, bowed his head very low; which is the vsuall courtesie amongst the Insidels and Christians in these parts, for they neuer vncover their Heads to any man; and after some short parley, they fate all downe on the grasse. The Carauan presented his rude-like Maiestie with Water, Bread, Hearbs, Figges, Garlike, and such things as hee had. As they were thus merrie at this poore banquet, the awfull King tooke the oath of our Conductor, if there were any moe Frankes there then I; and he hauing sworne the truth, the King by a malignant informer, incontinently caused me to bee brought before him, and staring me in the face, asked my Interpreter where were my Companions? who replied, I had none. Then said he, tell that Dog, hee must acknowledge me with fise peeces of Gold more, otherwise (making a signe to his owne throat) I shall cut off his Head. The which I being informed, and knowing that by no condition, there was resistance against such a scelerate Prince, gaue it him presently with a halfe smiling countenance; which he remarking, told the rest it seemed I gaue it with a good heart; and to recompence my outward outward behaviour, hee drunke a great draught of water to me, thinking thereby, he had done me more honour, then all the Chickenes of gold I gaue him now, and in the morning; would doe him profit. Truly, this was one of the greatest Tributes I payed for one dayes journey, that I had in all my voyage in Asia. There are two Kings in Arabia, the one who liueth on Euphrates, the Desarts of Mesopotamia, sometimes in Arabia Felix, and in some parts of Siria. And the other, (which was the King to whom I payed this money) wandreth with his Tribes, Tents, and Bestiall, one while in Arabia, Petrea, and Deserta, and sometimes in the Holy Land, as hee findeth good Pastorage and fresh Fountaines. These two Kings are mortall enemies; and if by accident they meet, they fight most cruelly.

Sychar of old the chiefest Citie in Samarita, is now altogether ruined.

The next morning leauing Jacobs Well, and the Towne of Sychar, on our left hand; we marched through a part of the fields of Basan, and had exceeding pleasant traueilling; and at night wee pitched by Lydda on the fields: Lydda is not about ten miles from Cesaria.

A Massacre of Armenian Pilgrimes.

Aprill the thirteenth, before the breake of day, setting forward, scarcely were wee well advanced in our way, till we were beset with more then three hundred Arabs, who sent vs an unexpected shower of Arrowes, to the great annoyance of all our companie: for if it had not been that our Souldiers shot off their Gunnes on a sudden, surely wee had then miserably perished. But the nature of the Arabs is not vnlike to the Tackals: for when any of them heare the shot of a Harquebuss, they turne backe with such speed, as if the fiends of the infernall Court were broken loose vpon them. In that momentary conflict, on our side there were killed nine Women, five men, and about thirtie persons deadly wounded, which to our worthie Captaine bred no small grieve.

Proceeding in our journey, in the hilly Countrey of Idnea we entred; leauing Rhama on our right hand. Rhama is a Towne inhabited by Christians, Arabs, and Moors; not blacke Moors, as the Africans be, but they are called Mori, which are a kind of Egyptians, and not naturally blacke, but Sun-burnt with the parching heat. The whole Territorie of Canaan is inhabited with these Moors, some Turkes, ciuill Arabs, and a few Christians, and scattered Jewes. The Arabians are for the most part Thieves and Robbers, the Moors cruell and vnciuill, hating Christians to the death: the Turkes are the best of all the three, yet all sworn enemies to Christ. About two of the clocke in the afternoone wee arrived at Berab, called of old Beerseba, being eleuen miles distant from Ierusalem. Having a little reposed, we embraced our Mountainous way, as cheerfully as we could, for we were exceeding faint, and trauelled that day about three and fortie miles; whereby we might arrive at Ierusalem before the Gates were shut, sustaining drouth, heat, hunger, and not a few other inconueniences. At last we beheld the prospect of Ierusalem; which was not onely a contentment to my wearied body, but also being ravished with a kind of vnwonted reioycing, the teares gushed from my eyes for too much ioy. In this time the Armenians began to sing in their owne fashion, Psalmes to praise the Lord; and I also sung the hundred and third Psalme all the way, till we arrived nere the walls of the Citie, where we ceased from our singing for feare of the Turkes.

Aprill the fourteenth day, vpon Palme-sunday in the morning, we entred into Ierusalem, and at the Gate we were particularly searched, to the effect we carried in no furniture of Armes, nor Powder with vs, and the Armenians (notwithstanding they are Slaues to Turkes) behoued to render their weapons to the Keepers, such is the feare they haue of Christians. The Gates of the Citie are of Iron outwardly, and about each gate are Brasen Ordnance planted.

Aprill the fourteenth, on Palme-sunday after dinner, the Guardiano departed from Ierusalem to Bethphage, accompanied with twelue Friers, and many other Orientall Christian, which were come thither to that Festiuall time, but I by no meanes would goe, reposing my selfe till their returne. The ridiculous Ceremonie which that day they vse, is thus: In an Apish imitation of Christ, at the aforesaid Bethphage, there was an Assie brought to the Guardiano, whereupon hee mounted (being as it were, the greater Assie riding vpon the lesser) and came riding to Ierusalem, the people cutting downe boughes of Trees, and also dispoyling themselues almost to the skinge, bestrewed the way as he rode along, crying, Hosanna, Hosanna, the Sonne of David, blessed is hee that cometh in the Name of the Lord, vntill they came to the South gate of Sion, where hee dismounted. At night after Supper, the Guardiano knowing that I was a Protestant, and also some other Franches, made an Oration, saying; You Pilgrimes, who refuse to bee participant with vs in the Sacraments; nor will not adhere to the Processions and Ceremonies, which wee follow of the Roman Church, I would therefore intreat you (your libertie being heere as much as mine, whereby you may doe whatsoeuer seeme good in your owne eyes) onely to abstaine from scandalizing and mocking our Rites and ordinary Customes, which at this great Feast wee must performe. To the which we condescended and promised to giue no occasion of offence. In the conclusion of his long Exhortation, hee disclosed this admonition, saying; All of you Trauellers must in generall bee indued with these three worthy gifts, Faith, Patience, and Money; Faith, to beleue these thinges you shall see heere at Ierusalem; Patience, to indure the apparent iniuries of Infidels; and Money, to discharge all Tributes, and Costs, which heere (meaning in his owne Monasterie) and about this Citie must be defrayed.

Pilgrims then graces.

Earely vpon Tuesday morning* (being all of vs, both Friers and Pilgrimes, well mounted, Mulets laden for our prouision) we departed from the Citie with our Souldiers; and trauelled all that day through a barren and desert Countrey, till Sun-setting, where wee reposed by a standing Well, till an houre within night. In all this deformed Countrey, we saw neither house nor Village, for it is altogether Desartuous, and inhabited onely by wilde Beasts, and naked Arabians. Before we came neere to Sodomē and Gomorha, by seuen miles; (for so we behoued to passe by the East end of it, before we could arriue at that place of Jordan which we intended) wee I say incountred with such deepe sandie ground, that the Mulets were not able to carrie vs through, whereupon we all dismounted, wrestling, and wading about the middle part of our bodies, and sometimes falling in ouer our heads, we were in great danger of perishing. Euen in the midst of this turmoyling paine, (the night being darke) the vnwelcomed Arabs inui-
 10 roned, and inuaded vs with a storme of Arrowes, which they sent from the toppes of little hard Hills whereupon they stood, for knowing the aduantage of the ground, they tooke opportunitie to giue the more featefull assaults; yet they preuailed nothing (although they wounded some of our Souldiers) such was the resolute courage of our valourous defendants. True it is, that in all my trauels I was neuer so sore fatigated, nor fearefully endangered, as I was that Night.

A rare kind of Apples.

A little after mid-night, we left this troublesome way, and marched along the Lake of So-dome. This Lake is called Mare mortuum, the dead Sea, for of it selfe it is vnmoueable, such is 20 the stabilitie of the water. It is also called so, because if a Bird flie ouer it, shee presently falleth downe therein dead: and as Salomon reporteth of it, Wisd. 10. 7. it smoaketh continually; from whence proceed filthie vapours, which deforme the Fields, lying about for certaine miles, as it were blasted, scorched, and made vtterly barren. This Lake is eightie miles in length, and fixe in bredth. It breedeth nor reserueth no kind of Fishes, and if by the swelling of Jordan, any Fishes be carried to it, they immediatly die. Although Iosephus witnesseth, that in his time, there was an Apple grew vpon the bankes thereof, like to the colour of Gold; and within was rotten, and would consume to powder; yet I affirme now the contrary: for there is not such a thing, (whatsoeuer hath beene in his dayes) as either Trees, or Bushes, grow neere to Sodomē by many miles, such is the consummation of that pestiferous Gulfe. Diuers Authors haue reported, that nothing will sinke into it, of any reasonable weight, as Dead men, or Carkasses of 30 beasts; but by experience I approue the contrary, for it beareth nothing aboue at all; yea, not the weight of a Feather. The water it selfe is of a blackish colour, and at sometimes in the yeare, there are terrible shapes, and shoues of terrour in it, as I was informed at Iericho, which is the neereff Towne that bordereth thereupon.

About the breake of day on Tuesday morning, we past by the ruines of an old House, where (as they say) Saint Iohn the Baptist remained, when hee Baptized those that came from Ierusa- lem, and other Regions about, which is but the flight of an Arrow from Jordan. Approaching to the banke-side, we dismounted and vnclothed our selues, going in naked to the Riuer, wee washed vs to refresh our bodies. In this place as the Guardian said, was Christ Baptized of Saint Iohn, lying on the banke-side; whereupon are ingrauen Letters of Hebrew, Greeke, and 40 Latine, testifying the same thing: and may also bee so coniectured, in regard of the ancient Habitacle, of that precursor, which is not farre from thence.

This Riuer Jordan beginneth in Mount Libanus, of two Fountaines, Iere, and Dan, which run seperated till they come to the Lake Maronab; and hence it maketh one body, keeping his course through the Lake Genesareth, endeth in Sodomē. The Riuer Tigris at Rome, and Jordan are not much different in quantitie and colour, and not vnlike other in their courses: for Jor- dan falleth in the old Gomorab, and Tigris runneth through the new Sodomē. A historie of such euidence, as trauell taught me by experience: for it is the Priests confluence, which breeds in the Italians insolence. If I erre, I will beg indulgence of the Popes aureat magnificence. The water of Jordan hath beene transported to Venice in Barrels, for that puritie it hath; which will 50 reserue vnspoyled, both moneths and yeares, and the longer it is kept, it is the fresher; and to drinke it, is an excellent remedie for the Feuer quartan, and Quotidian.

After dinner we arose, and went to the House of Zachem: this was hee who sate vpon a Tree to see our Sauour as he passed by) the Walls whereof stand to this day. Ierico, is now a poore Village onely of nine dwelling Houses, inhabited by a kind of Arabs (which are in subiection vnder the Gouvernour of Ierusalem;) but I saw many ruinous lumpes of the walls, and demollishings of the old Towne. Heere I saw two most daintie kind of Fruits, the one was a little lesser then an Apple, but more round; whose colour was like to Gold without, and within it was white as snow, and sweet like Sugar. I would gladly haue eaten of them: but the Friers forbade me, saying; they were the onely pest of Death vnto a Stranger. The other Apple was like 60 to a greene Lemmon, long, and full of knots, of a reddish colour, like to a Mellone, being both delicate and wholsome, of which we did eate to sati fie the naturall appetite. From Ierico wee set forward in the way of the Wildernesse; our determination being such, as to view the Moun-taine whereon Christ fasted fortie dayes: where arriued, being late, wee durst not goe vp till Morning.

The Mountain in the Wildernesse, whereupon Christ fasted fortie dayes.

Morning. Wherefore wee pitched that Night by the Fountaine of Elizew; the water of which was of old, naturally bitter, but by the Prayers of that diuine Prophet, was restored to a sweet taste. It is also excellent in digestion, and will doe a man no harme: for I esteeme it to be the lightest Water the earth yeeldeth: hauing on the morrow filled a Boares skinne of it, to carrie with me to the Mountaine; I found it so light, that I had no weight nor paine in the bearing of it on my shoulders, notwithstanding, the way of it selfe was fastidious.

This Mountaine is called Quarantanim, or Quaranto, being of height by the computation of my painefull experience, aboue fixe miles, and groweth from the bottome still smaller and smaller, till that the top is couered with a little Chappell, not vnlike to the proportion of a Pyramede. There is no way to ascend vpon this Hill, saue one, which hath beene hewen out of the Rocke, by the industrie of men, experimented in Masonrie, (which was done at the cost of Queene Helen) going vp by the degrees of fise and fortie turnes. In all our Companie there were onely three Friers, foure Pilgrimes, and I, that durst attempt to climbe the Mountaine. After diuers dangers and narrow passages, hauing come to the top, wee entred into a Caue ioyning to the Chappell, where (say they) in this place did Christ fast, and heere it was, that hee rebuked Sathan. In our returne againe, wee had a most fearefull descending: for one Frier Laurenzo had fallen fise hundred fathomes ouer the Rocke, and broke his necke, if it had not beene for mee: who rashly and vnadvisedly endangered my owne life for his safetie, as my Patent vnder the great Seale of Ierusalem, beareth sufficient testimonie thereof. But wee will follow this our Pilgrime no further, in visiting these and the Egyptian Antiquities, nor relating the other perils of his Voyage.

CHAP. XIII.

Later Intelligence out of Turkie, touching the Resignation of MvsTapha, and the aduancing of AmvRATH a younger Brother of the lately Murthered OSMAN; with other later Occurrents.

Bashaw Daout, hauing married the Daughter of Mustaphas Mother, and taking some aduantage of the lenatie and tractable disposition of the Emperour, projected without controuersie, first to destroy the Brethren of Osman, then to make away Mustapha: and last of all, to intrude some Children of his owne, as if they had beene the saued and preserued stocke of the Othoman formerly: whereupon with the pernicious assent of his Mother in Law, he sendeth a secret Commission to the Capiaga or Mayor domo of the Seraglia, to remove the Brethren of Osman, and strangle them, which hee did without either the priuie of Mustapha the Emperour, or any other of the Vizeers and Bashawes. But as these instruments of Villanie were readie to carrie away the Prince in the tumult, and making a noyse, the Pages came in to their rescue, as emboldned by the Castiaraga, who long since grew jealous of Daout Bashawes ambition, and by this time saw apparant signes of perfidiousnesse.

The Pages thus set on worke, presently acquainted the Spahies and Ianizaries, with the accident, who as presently shewed themselves the seruants of the Empire, and so without further adoe or examination of the matter, killed the Capiaga, and hanged out his bodie for a Spectacle in the Hippodrome. But not thus satisfied, they returne in furie to the Court, and demand Iustice euen at the Emperour Mustaphas hand: hee againe disclaimes his consent, or at least out of his simplicitie maketh his Apologie, that if any thing were done by the name of an Emperour, it was enforced from him, and hee had much adoe to preserue himselfe: then they seeke and hunt after the Mother, who belag found, played a womans part, shed teares, wrung her hands, modeld out a dejected Countenance, and by some externall signes made an impression in them of her innocencie. Whereupon they repaire to the Vizeer, who at the first put them off, that it was a day of Councell; and to single them, bade them repaire to the Diuane. But they as it should seeme, outstript his policie by their owne experience, and told him plainly they would haue no sitting, till this Treason were both discovered, and punished: at last hee is degraded from the place, and one Huzin Bashaw comming from Egypt, admitted in his roome.

This Huzin Bashaw, was neither knowne to Constantinople, nor Constantinople vnto him; that is, the Courtiers did little looke for a harsh, barbarous, insolent, rich, and vntractable man; and he did lesse expect the brauerie, pleasures, popularitie, wantonnesse, and ease of a licentious Citie: But nature had quickly taught him a lesson of Corruption, and he begins a Pharaons flourish of greatnesse with the Death of Daout Bashaw, and insinuation into Mustaphas modestie, or if you will simplicitie; but of all other to make himselfe strong with the loue and good opinion of the Pages, and Capogies, hee hangeth many that were consenting to *Osman*s death.

In a word, for the first yeare hee proued a wonder in the Empire, and by his Wisedome, Courage, Courage, and Authority pacified such tumults, and fashioned such a government of peace and tranquility in seditious and outrageous times, that both Turks, Jewes, and Christians beganne to feare what a man he might proue, or Mustapha proued, though neuer so stupid by his Viuification.

Notwithstanding all this, such is the condition of greatnesse, that if it doe not Mole sua ruere: yet it may be watched by the eyes of other men, who may either confound by opposition, or supplant by deuises: thus had this man two great enemies, the Bashaw of Aleppo, who with open defiance acted a braue Scene of contestation, and the Bashaw Chigala Admirall of the gallies, who by crafty conueyance of businesse, lay still in the winde to take aduantage of his contrarious flights. With both these was Huzein Bashaw to deale: but such was his fortune, that the Bashaw of Aleppo, for all he had mustred a great Army in Armenia, was almost out of countenance, through the rarity of the businesse; for when he vnderstood, that the Souldiers laughed him to scorne, if he pretended for himselfe, or had any conceit to share the Othoman Empire, and that they of Constantinople thought him too dangerous, if he should attempt the remouing of Officers, or take vpon him to be so potent and wise, as to practise the reformation or alteration of the Government; he fairely and quietly dismissed the Army, and was contented to write his minde to the Dinan, or great Councell in the great City.

But the Admirall of the gallies went another way to work, having the sea open to his flights or retirings; and the Vizeers businesse was opened vnto him by such as he had imployed to watch his proceedings (by whose endeauours he had notice, that the Vizeer meant to destroy him; and either to strangle him in his Gally, or at the next Councell to surprise him, and send him to the seuen Towers) whereupon he acquaints the Emperour, his Mother, and the Mutty, with the coniuration, and that he projected the aduancing of Amurath, the second brother of Osman, and durst many times repine, that so great a burthen as the Turkish Empire should lie on so weake & vnable shoulders.

This neuer started Mustapha at all, but contrary to expectation hee acquaints Huzein Bashaw with the secret, and Huzein acquaints himselfe with the danger, so that being yet at liberty sends great store of Treasure to Gran Cayro, and as some haue it, retires himselfe against all expectation, to the country where hee had bin brought vp, and was fuller of Reeds and secret Caues to hide him, then other places: that is, presuming on his wealth and the peoples loue, he verily conceiued they would giue him leaue to liue a priuate life: yet doe others affirme, that hee was ouermatched and ouertaken, and so cast into the seuen Towers.

When Mustapha perceiued to what straights he was driven, and that all this coile was for the glory of Soueraignty: of which though he were possessed in the highest degree of Maiestie, yet far from security, in regard his two Nephewes liued of the direct Line of the Othoman Family, he resolved to cozen death, destruction and misfortune, by a voluntary submission and resignation of his Crowne. Whereupon he sent for his Mother, the Doctors of the Law, & some principall Officers, as the Teffierdy (or Treasurer) the Cadifelker (or chiefe Iudge) the Haga (or Captaine of the Ianizaries) and diuers others whom he had acquainted with his resolution, desiring to see his Nephew before he retired himselfe to the Prison, and so the Prince being presented vnto him, he only wished that he would take notice of his owne fortunes: that is, not to trust in any condition of man: not to be peremptory, or preiudicate in his owne opinion: to dissolue if it were possible that custome of strangling their brethren: to remember, that al Empires had their beginning, progression, and dissolution: to take heed of Flatterers and Parasites: and by no meanes to neglect the seruice of God, but make vse of true deuotion, in setting the Iewes before him, who lost their glorious estate, meerely through Idolatrie: and thus is Mustapha deposed, and Amurath *Osman*s brother aduanced: but herein consists the wonder, that all this was done without trouble, terror, shutting vp of a shop, disturbing the Merchant, rising a Iew, or tumult of the Ianizaries.

The King of Persia hath besieged a strong castle, within the Precinct of Arzerum, the old government of Abassa Bassa; whether this hath occasioned it, or that he and the Vizeer were one afraid of another, a peace is made betweene them, and the government of that Prouince giuen him during life: For defence whereof, he is directly marched thither: Pardon and Honours are confirmed from the Port, and what soeuer the Rebels would propound for themselves; And yet at this dishonourable agreement, this State doth reioyce, as at a great victory, and haue raised their hopes now of good successe against the Persian, yet there rests some doubt, because neither part will trust the other, but haue taken feneral waies, the Vizeer directly towards Babylon: Abassa to Afzeron, from whence little this yeere is expected, and few beleue that the Persian will sell all his conquest, for the noyse at first sight of their Armies.

From the Black Sea, hath come many aduises, that the Prince of the Tartars sent from hence, is beaten from the land, & that the Captain Bassa seeking once more to set him on shore, hath receiued a great scyle and losse, wherein the Prince was hurt, if not slaine: of the particulars we can haue no certainty but without doubt, the parties sent from hence haue receiued disgrace, & the Tartar hath discovered an Arcanum Imperij, posse Principem alibi quam Roma fieri, they neuer committed a greater error, though al be one confusion of error in government, then this, nor of which they will sooner & longer repent, that they would offer in these times, when the peace of Poland wauered, when all their forces were drawne into Asia to depose a young Prince who was well beloved of the people, to plant an old goutie decreped wretch, who the last yeere was by them deposed for insufficiency; and now the quarrell is on foot, they know not how to retire.

This Empire hath hereby lost or indangered one of the greatest honours and prerogatives; to give that Nation a Prince at the Pleasure of the Grand Signiour, whom now they not onely refuse, but dare oppose the Armies of the Port, and send insolent letters, that it is sufficient for these to governe Constantinople if they will not be quiet, but undertake to molest the Princes in possession; that they will esteeme themselves as free and as ancient, as the race of Ottoman: In conclusion, I am of opinion, there wil be found some way (though with shame) to recall their Order, and to confirme the present Prince, excusing the fault by misinformation, which for quietnes he may formally accept. There is not one word or mention of Bethlem Gabor, nor his designs, since the departure of his Embassadors: It is beleevued all things are quieter there, then is convenient for the quiet of other Christian Countries.

Nine gallies of Messina & 4. of Malta have met with five Pirat ships of Barbary entring into the Port of Tunis, and being favoured by a calme, sunke two of them in sight, & took the other three with 600. men in them; whom they have brought to Palermo. It is reported Sampson was Commander, who when hee must fall into Captivitie by two wounds, with his owne hands he ended his wretched life. These 13. Gallies ioyning with sixe of the great Dukes, within two dayes after went out againe, understanding of seven Cossacks more now they have opportunity to do any thing, if they have courage: for there are no Gallies of this Port in the Medeterranium to hinder them. Tis thought that these five Pirates are the same that were at Cyprus & Scandrone. The ninth day of this month, betweene 70. and 80. boats of the Cossacks, with fifty men apiece, Rowers and Souldiers (watching their opportunitie of the Captaine Bassas being ingaged in Tartary) entred the Bosphorus about breake of day, where dividing themselves, they sackt and burnt almost all the villages and houses of pleasure on both sides the River, as farre as the Castles, and within foure miles of this Citie: The principall places were Binkderry and Genneychoy, on the Grecian and Stenia, and on the Asian shore, where having made rich and great bootie, they staid till nine of the clock in the forenoone, and then all this Citie and the Suburbs having taken the alarm, the Grand Signiour came downe to the water side, the Chimacham to the water Port: Hally-bassa made himselfe Generall in this tumult, and having not one Gally ready for defence, they manned and armed all the Ships, Boats, Barges, & other small Wherryes, to the number of 4. or 500. with such people as they could either get to row, or hope to fight; & dispatched all the Horse and Foot in the Citie to the number of 10000. to defend the Coast from further spoile. Never was seene a greater feare and confusion: Now we expected that these poore theeves would presently have retired; but they seeing the Turkes Boats making towards them, drew themselves in to the middst of the channell, and not far above the Castles, and staid firme upon their Oares in Battalia in forme of a Cressant expecting the assault, the wind and current being against them. Hally-Bassa caused some shot to be made a far off, but they answered not with one Musket, but howred from one shoare to another without any shew of reitrait. Hereupon the Generall seeing their forme and resolution, thought it not fit to assaile them with such Boats as he had, but esteemed it wisdome enough to keepe them from further attempts, fearing if they had broken his Fleet of Boats (which was easily to be done) that they would venture downe to Constantinople, which was now empty of all defence. And these few Boates having first made great spoyle, lay the whole day untill Sun set, searing and braving the great and fearefull Citie of the world, and all the force it could make; and departed with their booty, with their Colours spread, unfought and almost unresisted. This small action and bold attempt, to affront so great an Empire, hath made a strange discovery; how much under the reputation, the terror and strength of this State now is; how weak and unprovided they are. But as the Oracles commanded them, first to set over against blind men: So it hath bin their fortune unto this day to have blind Enemies. Philip of Macedon had never projected, nor his Sonne Alaxander ever adventured with so small Forces, the huge enterprises of subduing the Easterne Empire, if they had not discovered the effeminate and faint courage of the Asiaticks, by the admirable reitrait of Xenophon, and swift incursion of Agesilaus great Armies, not daring to oppose the vertue of their small numbers. Sepe res maximæ ex parvis principijs oriuntur. How this attempt will be taken from the Poles, is a question. For hereby the Treaty of Peace is absolutely broken.

By the 24. wee made an end with her, and fetched * the money from her. September 15. we espied Land, being the Island of Ingano. Here the Current setting to the shoare, the Sunne our Admirall (her men being very weake) seemed in great danger. Sir Tho. Dale was aboard the Cloue, with the President Cap. Jordan: and it was concluded that wee should goe for Bantam. The South of Ingano is reasonable high and wooddie. On the Southwest is false sounding, one cast twentie; the next fourteene or fiftene fadome. It is safe to keepe farther off in fixe or in 5. degrees fiftie minutes. November 17. we espied the Land of Sumatra, the Southwest point: latitude 6. degrees 15. minutes long: from Cape of Good Hope 80. degrees 38. minutes. The 21. we entred Bantam Rode.

10 The next day arrived sixtie eight of the Suns men in their Skiffe, and a small Boat which they had built, having lost their Ship on the fiftieth split on the shoare. Yet it pleased God to save neere one hundred of our men, on whom the Cruell Inhabitants and Hunger made fresh assaults, so that some which had escaped, escaped not wounds or deaths. The weather was now calme and we could not set saile, as before wee might have done: Whereupon the President was willing to come to a parlie. I was shot in two places, and perswaded him to fight it out: but when I was gone downe hee sent the Master aboard the Angell (one of the Dutch Ships) to parly about yeelding, and order was presently giuen to shoot no more. At which time I was spoiled with Powder by a shot from the Admirall, our Master detained, and the President slaine with a shot thorow the bodie, after the Ship was yeelded, as I vnderstand. For the Master went aboard to giue vp the Ship, with condition that the Company should depart with their goods; which they promised: but after possession taken,

For mine owne part, before I vnderstood of any thing, the Ship was full of Hollanders, we hauing at that time eleuen men slaine, and thirtie three hurt, foure of which were dismembred. September 17. by reason of a broile raised among the Slaves we had two men slaine, and it was feared the Blacks would haue pulled down the Godowne and made pillage of all.

Our men in three Prawes returned to our Fleet. Nouember 22. as wee rode at Pellambam wee saw one Dutch Ship, and betwixt that and Pulo Pemon ten more: but whiles we sought to escape neere the shoare, a Boat from the first Ship came to vs, and said, that we were all friends. We being within Musket shot of two ships, must either go aboard or ashore: we did the first, but their Admirall bestowed vs aboard amongst their Ships, and tooke our Boat from vs. The 22. came in the Dragon, Beare, and Expedition, to our great grieve and their great reioicing, as Prizes taken at Tecco.

40 The thirtieth the Flying Hart brought newes, that Sir Tho. Dale was dead with many others, at which they greatly reioyced. December 4. came in a Boat with a Crosse saile, being a Ships Boat called the New Hound, their Ship being lost by fire through the Stewards Mates negligence in drawing Aquanita, 150. men lost, the rest in the boats escaping to Sumatra, where 15. were slain by the Blacks and others hurt. The 29. was a solemne Fast holden with prayer for the conquest they had of the English, with eating & drinking all the day long. January 17. came in a small Pinace from Iacatra, and the White Beare which had bin nine months comming from Holland, & had throwne nine men ouerboard alieue, besides two which saved them the labour, for conspiracy.

March 14. Cap. Robert Adams in the Bull came in, and went aboard the Admirall: and April 1. 1620. all the English prisoners at Iacatra were freed & set aboard the Bull. On the 21. the Dutch put the Indraught an old Ship on shoare, thinking to haue made a Bulwarke of her against Bantam, but she ouerthrowing on the side frustrated their hopes and cost. May 11. Cap. Adams by a Councell was made Admirall for the English over five Ships, and five Dutch Ships in company were to goe for Japan, and so for the Manillas. The 21. the Hope, the Bull and the Elisabeth departed from Iacatra for Japan, with two Dutch Ships, the Harlem & Hope in company. The 24. the Vrede arrived, which brought conditions of peace out of Holland; which on the 30. was proclaimed ashore and aboard of euery Shippe, with great triumph. The 24. we plied to and fro off the Bay of Manillas. The 26. the Dutch Hope met with a China Champan, and tooke her being come from the Bay of Tundo from a China Iunke bound for the Bay of Manillas, which the said Hope tooke on the 26. The 27. two Champans more taken, laden one with Rice, the other with Timber. The 31. two Boats more taken, and one burnt.

From the first of Feb. to the sixt we were turning vp frō the Ile Maruels, & the Caueita where the Spanish Ships ride; the Bay a very faire one, from 24. to six fathom: in the mid way take heed you come no neerer the shore on the South then ten fathoms, in respect of a steep Bank that lieth off the shoare: otherwise nothing in all the Bay is to be feared but one Rock, on the South side also, halfe a league of the Black point within the Oyster Rock. This Rock hath on it two fathoms water. At Caueita we found riding six or seven ships, and two of them great Gallions, but all vntinged. The eight we passed by the Towne of Caueita with our ships. The towne shot two Peeces at our Admirall, but could not reach her. Wee all anchored in the Rode halfe way betwixt Caueita, and the towne of Manillas, in seven and a halfe fathom ozie ground. Caueita lieth from Manillas South Southwest two leagues & a halfe by Sea, by Land about 3. From Caueita to Marauelle the Course is west southwest somewhat Southerly. On the north of Marauelle is good fresh water, but not much, deepe anchoring neere the shore: we went on shore thereon 240. but found no people.

After some time spent in watering, careening, discovering and other affaires, March 28. 1621. by order of a Councell, the Fleet was dispersed for better looking out for Iunkes comming from China with the Coast. I was appointed to the Ship Swan to goe with it, two Frigats and two Boats into the Bay of Pangasina to fire a ship there in building; but we found none such. April 13. all the ships went to Hart Bay to water. On the 18. we boarded a Iunke which proued of Japan, hauing the Emperours Passe, and Letters from Capt. Cokes and the Dutch Merchant. The same day the Harlem tooke a China Iunke, and carried her into Witters Island. May 26. The Dutch Frigate fought with a China Iunke, but could not take her; wherupon our Frigate went vp and tooke her; and the Dutch comming aboard after they had yeilded, killed, and made leap ouer-board to the quantitie of sixtie or seuentie, like bloody—— On the 30. the Dutch Frigate was in fight with another China Iunk and could not take her, hauing spent most of their powder: and met our Frigate and told them, which pursued her and the next day ouertooke her, and she yeilded to them: they put the men on shore. The Dutch set fire on the Iunk, which was one of their—— tricks Iun. 9. (there being no hopes of more Iunkes that yeere) it was concluded that wee should direct our course for the Streits of Piscadores, I would wish all from the Manilles to Macan or Piscadores to keepe it well vp to the West, and not to goe to the North to preuent shoalds.

On the 29. we entred the Harbour of Chaochie. It was agreed that foure Ships should goe to Firando: whither wee went Iuly 10. In September the Bull and Peppercorne were careened. Richard Short one of the Masters Mates of the Moone ranne the second time to the Portugalls. October the first, sixe more of the Peppercorne and Bull ranne to the Portugalls, which were pursued and taken, and foure executed. Two of the Elisabeths men stole a prau, with intent to runne to them also to Langasack. The eighteenth, the Peppercorne and the Moyen a Dutch Shippe went for the Coast of China, to lie there till the comming of the Fleet. Nouember the first, the three English Store-houses at Choochy were burned to the ground by negligence.

The 23. we put to Sea with all the Fleet: December the tenth they met with the Peppercorne and Moyen, which had beene sixe weekes on the Coast and taken nothing. They were now ten Ships. The twelfth, a Frigate was taken laden with Canuas to make sailes for the Fleet at Manillas. Ianuary the third, the Countrey people (before vnseene) killed foure of the Peppercornes men, in Witters Island where they were watering, through their owne securitie. For ten of ours might haue kept off one hundreth of them. Their Weapons are Bowes and Arrowes not poysoned.

The thirtieth wee went into the Bay where the Spaniards had foure great Ships, three small, and three Gallies, besides other small Frigots. Some Truce-parlies passed and some bickerings also to small purpose. Diuers Fugitiues came to vs from them. The Fleet obserued their opportunities, but little was done. April 18. 1622. 8. of the Moones men ran away with her Shallop to the Manillas. The Peppercorne tooke two or three small Iunkes, but little in them. May 6. at Loang Island we found 30. tuns of Red Wood, a China Iunke, a Portugall, and two or three Champans in the Riuer, which were fired, except the Wood. The 9. foure ships were sent to Macan, the rest to Piscadores to exchange Portugalls for our men, and to intercept Frigats. The 17. a Frigate of Macan was after long fight taken by our shallops, with 320. balls of goods. Iune 1. we had fight of three Frigats, which went in among the Islands for Macao, we not being able to hinder them. A Priest and others came aboard with a Flag of Truce to treat about their men. The 12. came in eleuen Dutch Ships to take in Macan, and neuer offered to speake with vs, but went directly as neere the Towne at they could, and sent presently small vessells to sound. They landed 1000. men on the 14. against Macan, & after mutuall shot were repelled, hauing lost six Caprains (as I heard) and and about 200. men, besides many hurt; and had they not gotten their Boats as they did, they had beene all, by their owne report, put to the sword. On the 17. we departed as it had beene agreed, and anchored vnder the Iles Ladrones all night. The next day we put to Sea betwixt the Iles Su-pattos and Neme. July 4. wee were close aboard the point of Langsacke. On the sixth M. Hatch the * Preacher came aboard. August 2. A Councell was called at the Dutch house by their Admirall, in which it was concluded to dissolue the two Fleets; each to beare their own adventures till they came to Iacatra. The 15. we had a Tyffon Southerly, and broke two Cables. The Dutch Moone and Hound droue ashore, the Moone litle hurt, the other bilged. The Peppercorne and Hailen, droue ashore at Firando without hurt. This Tyffon was so sore at Sea, that the Moyen cut ouer-bord her maine Mast, and threw out her Shallop: the Tro threw out 300. sackes of Rice, wet more, with her Powder, and was so leake shee was like to sinke. The Bantam lost her maine and misen Masts, threw ouer-bord 3. Pieces of Ordnance, 2. Anchors, a Shallop, 600. sackes of Rice, her Head and Gallerie all washt away, &c. October 9. the Dutch Moone and Hound, layd vp sunke. The 15. th we went out into the Road, being bound for Iambee. Till the first of Nouember we had no sight of the Sun to make obseruation. The 15. th we got into the road of Iambee. The rest I omit. May 28. they had sight of Saint Helena, and anchored next day in Chappell Bay. August 26. they arrived at Erith.

Anno 1623.

Thus haue you seene the Dutch dealings in the Indies with the English and Natives; agreeing to that which in the third, fourth, and fifth Bookes is more fully before deliuered: to which this is here added as later Intelligence, and containing relation both of the Manillas and of the English industry, cost and dangers sustained to maintaine termes of Peace according to the league and Conditions articulated betwixt them. Now for their correspondence to the English, thou mayst read in the following Relation, confirmed by the Oathes of diuers thence returned, published lately by the East Indian Societie and heere abridged, the worke swelling too much, and a little of such Discourse being more then enough.

CHAP. XVI.

The Dutch late proceedings at Amboyna, in cruell torturing and executing of diuers English-men: with other their like Acts to the Natives in Banda; published lately by the English-East-Indian Societie; heere much abbreviated.

After the fruitlesse issue of two seuerall Treaties: the first Anno 1613. in London; and the other Anno 1615. at the Hage in Holland, touching the differences betweene the English and Dutch in the East-Indies, at last by a third Treatie Anno 1619. in London, there was a full and solemne composition made of all the said differences, and a faire order set for the future proceeding of the Supposts of both Companies in the Indies; aswell in the course of their Trade and Commerce, as otherwise. Amongst sundry other points, it was agreed, that in regard of the great blood-shed and cost, pretended to bee bestowed by the Hollanders, in winning of the Trade of the Iles of the Molluccos, Banda, and Amboyna, from the Spaniards and Portugals, and in building of Forts for the continuall securing of the same, the said Hollanders therefore should enioy two third parts of that Trade, and the English the other third; and the charge of the Forts to bee maintained by taxes and impositions, to be leuied vpon the Merchandize. Wherefore, in consequence of this agreement, the English East India Company planted certaine Factories for their share of this Trade; some at the Molluccos, some at Banda, and some at Amboyna.

This Amboyna is an Iland lying neere Seran, of the Circuit of fortie leagues, and giueth name also to some other small Ilands adiacent. It beareth Cloues; for gathering and buying in whereof, the English Companie for their part had planted five seuerall Factories: the head and Reu-deuon of all, at the Towne of Amboyna; and therein first, Master George Muschampe, and afterward Master Gabriell Towerson, their Agents, with directions ouer the smaller Factories at Hitto and Larica, vpon the same Iland, and at Lobo and Cambello, vpon a point of their neighbouring Iland of Seran.

Amboyna described.

Vpon these Ilands of Amboyna, and the point of Seran, the Hollanders haue foure Forts; the chiefe of all is at the said Towne of Amboyna, and is very strong, hauing foure Points or Bulwarkes with their Curtaines, and vpon each of these Points fixe great Pieces of Ordnance mounted, most of them of Brasse. The one side of this Castle is washed by the Sea, and the other is diuided from the Land with a Ditch of foure or five fathome broad, very deepe, and euer filled with the Sea. The Garrison of this Castle consisteth of about two hundred Dutch Souldiers, and a Company of free Burgers. Besides these, there is alwayes a matter of three or foure hundred Mardikers (for so they vsually call the free Natives) in the Towne, ready to serue the Castle at an houres warning. There lye also in the Roade (for the most part) diuers good Ships of the Hollanders, as well for the guard of the place by Sea, as for the occasions of Traffique: this being the chiefe Rendezvous, as well for the Iland of Banda, as for the rest of Amboyna. Heere the English liued; not in the Castle, but vnder protection thereof, in a house of their owne in the Towne; holding themselves safe, as well in respect of the ancient bonds of Amitie betweene both Nations. as of the strict coniunction made by the late Treatie before mentioned.

Iaccatra (now Bacaria) seat of the Dutch Government in the Indies.

They continued heere some two yeares, conuersing and trading together with the Hollanders, by vertue of the said Treatie. In which time there fell out sundrie differences and debates betweene them; The English complayning that the Hollanders did not onely lauish away much money in Building, and vnnecessarie expences, vpon the Forts and other wise, and bring large and vntreasonable reckonings thereof to the common accompt; but also did, for their part, pay the Garrisons with victuals and cloath of Coremandell, which they put off to the Souldiers at three or foure times the value it cost them, yet would not allow of the English Companies part of the same charge, but onely in ready money; thereby drawing from the English (which ought to pay but one third part) more than two thirds of the whole true charge. Hereupon, and vpon the like occasions, grew some discontents and disputes, and the complaints were sent to Iaccatra, in the Iland of Iaua Maior, to the Councell of defence of both Nations there residing: who also, not agreeing vpon the points in difference, sent the same hither ouer into Europe, to bee decided by both Companies heere; or, in default of their agreement, by the Kings Maiestie, and the Lords the States Generall, according to an Article of the Treatie of the yeare 1619. on this behalfe. In the meane time, the discontent betweene the English and the Dutch, about these and other differences, continued and daily encreased, vntill at last there was a sword found, to cut in sunder that knot at once, which the tedious disputes of Amboyna and Iaccatra could not vntie. And this was vsed in manner as followeth.

Abel Price examined.

About the eleuenth of February 1622. Stilo veteri, a Iaponer Souldier of the Dutch in their Castle of Amboyna, walking in the night vpon the wall, came to the Centinell (being a Hollander) and there, amongst other talke, asked him some questions touching the strength of the Castle, and the people that were therein. It is heere to bee noted, that thiose Iaponers (of whom there is not thirty in all the Iland) did, for the most part, serue the Dutch as souldiers, yet were not of their trustie bands, alwaies lodged in the Castle, but vpon occasion called out of the Towne to assist in the Watch. This Iaponer aforesaid, was for his said conference with the Centinel, apprehended vpon suspicion of Treason, and put to the Torture. Thereby (as some of the Dutch affirmed) hee was brought to confesse himselfe, and sundry others of his Countrymen there, to haue contriued the taking of the Castle. Hereupon, other Iaponers were examined and tortured, as also a Portugall, the Guardian of the Slaues vnder the Dutch. During this examination, which continued three or foure dayes; some of the English men went too and from the Castle vpon their businesse, saw the Prisoners, heard of their tortures, and of the crime laid to their charge; but all this while suspected not, that this matter did any whit concerne themselves; hauing neuer had any conuersation with the Iaponers, nor with the Portugall aforesaid. At the same time there was one Abel Price, Chirurgion of the English, Prisoner in the Castle, for offering in his Drunkennesse to set a Dutch-mans house on fire. This fellow the Dutch tooke, and shewed him some of the Iaponers, whom they had first most grievously tortured, and told him, they had confessed the English to haue bene of their confederacie, for the taking of the Castle; and that if he would not confesse the same, they would vse him euen as they had done these Iaponers, and worse also. Hauing giuen him the torture, they soone made him confesse what euer they asked him. This was the fifteenth of February, 1622. Stilo veteri. Forthwith, about nine of the clocke the same Morning, they sent for Captaine Towersson, and the rest of the English that were in the Towne, to come to speake with the Gouvernour in the Castle: they all went, saue one that was left to keepe the House. Being come to the Gouvernour, he told Captaine Towersson, that himselfe and others of his Nation were accused of a Conspiracie to surprise the Castle, and therefore, vntill further triall, were to remaine Prisoners. Instantly also they attached him that was left at home in the house, tooke the Merchandize of the English Companie there into their owne custodie by Inuentorie, and seized all the Chests, Boxes, Bookes, Writings, and other things in the English house. Captaine Towersson was committed to his Chamber with a guard of Dutch Souldiers. Emanuel Tomson was kept Prisoner in the Castle, the rest, viz. John Beomont, Edward Collins, William Webber, Ephraim Ramsey, Timothy Johnson, John Fardo, and Robert Browne, were sent aboard the Hollanders ships then riding in Harbour, some to one ship, and some to another, and all made fast in Irons. The same day also the Gouvernour sent to the two other Factories in the same Iland, to apprehend the rest of the English there. So that Samuel Colson, John Clarke, George Sharrock, that were found in the Factorie at Hitto, and Edward Collins, William Webber, and John Sadler at Larica, were all brought Prisoners to Amboyna, the sixteenth of February. Vpon which day also John Powel, John Wetherall, and Thomas Ladbroke, were apprehended at Cambello, and John Beomont, William Grigs, and Ephraim Ramsey, at Lobo, and brought in Irons to Amboyna the twentieth of the same moneth.

In the meane time, the Gouvernour and Fiscall went to worke with the Prisoners that were already there: And first they sent for John Beomont, and Timothy Johnson, from aboard the Unicorne; who being come into the Castle, Beomont was left with a guard in the Hall, and Johnson was taken into into another roome. Where, by and by, Beomont heard him cry out very pitifully; then to be quiet for a little while, and then loud againe. After taste of the torture, Abel Price the Chirurgion, that first was examined and tortured (as is above remembred) was brought in to confront and accule him: But Johnson not yet confessing any thing, Price was quickly carried out, and Johnson brought againe to the torture, where Beomont heard him sometime cry aloud, then quiet againe, then roare afresh. At last, after he had been about an houre in this second examination, he was brought forth wailing and lamenting, all wet, and cruelly burnt in diuers parts of his body, and so laid aside in a by place of the Hall, with a souldier to watch him that he should speake with no body. Then was Emanuel Tomson brought to examination; not in the roome where Johnson had beene, but in another something farther from the Hall. Yet Beomont being in the Hall, heard him roare most lamentably, and many times. At last, after an houre & an halfe spent in torturing him, he was carried away into another roome another way, so that hee came not by Beomont through the Hall. Next was Beomont called in, and being demanded many things, all which he denied with deepe oathes and protestations, was made fast to be tortured; a cloth tyed about his necke, and two men ready with Iarres of water to be powred on his head. But yet for this time the Gouvernor bad loose him, he would spare him a day or two, because he was an Old man. This was all Saturdaies worke, the fiftenth of February aforesaid.

Emanuel Tomson examined.

Vpon Sunday the 16. of February, William Webber, Edward Collins, Ephraim Ramsey, and Robert Browne, were fetcht from aboard the Rotterdam, to be examined. At the same time came Samuel Colson, William Grigs, and John Clarke, George Sharrocke, & John Sadler, from Hitto and Larica; and were immediatly vpon their arriual, brought into the Castle-hall. Robert Browne Tailor was first called in, & being tormented with water, confessed all in order as the Fiscall asked him. Then was Edward Collins called in, and told, that those that were formerly examined, had confest him as accessory to the plot of taking the Castle. Which, when he denied with great oathes & execrations, they made his hands and feet fast to the Racke, bound a cloth about his throat, ready to be put to the torture of water. Thus prepared, he prayed to be respited, and he would confesse all. Being let downe, he againe vowed & protested his innocencie; yet said, that because he knew that they would by torture make him confesse any thing, though neuer so false, they should doe him a great fauour, to tell him what they would haue him say, and hee would speake it, to auoyd the torture. The Fiscall hereupon said; what, doe you mocke vs? and bad, Vp with him againe; and so gaue him the torment of water: which he not able long to endure, prayed to be let downe again to his confession. Then he deuised a little with himselfe, and told them, that about two moneths and a halfe before, himselfe, Tomson, Johnson, Browne, and Fardo, had plotted, with the helpe of the Iaponers, to surprize the Castle. Here he was interrupted by the Fiscall, and asked, whether Captaine Tower were not of that conspiracie. He answered, No. You lie, said the Fiscall; did not hee call you all to him, and tell you, that those daily abuses of the Dutch had caused him to thinke of a plot, and that hee wanted nothing but your consent and secrecie? Then said a Dutch Merchant, one John Loost that stood by, Did not you all swear vpon a Bible to bee secret to him? Collins answered with great oathes, that hee knew nothing of any such matter. Then they bade make him fast againe: whereupon he then said, All was true that they had spoken. Then the Fiscall asked him, whether the English in the rest of the Factories, were not consenting to this plot. Hee answered, No. The Fiscall then asked him, whether the President of the English at Iaccatra, or Mr. Welden Agent in Banda, were not plotters or priuie to this businesse. Againe he answered, No. Then the Fiscall asked him by what meanes the Iaponers should haue executed their purpose. Whereat, when Collins stood staggering and deuising of some probable fiction, the Fiscall holpe him, and said, Should not two Iaponers haue gone to each point of the Castle, and two to the Gouvernours Chamber doore; and when the hurly-burly had beene without, and the Gouvernour comming to see what was the matter, the Iaponers to haue killed him? Here one that stood by, said to the Fiscall, Doe not tell him what he should say, but let him speake of himselfe. Whereupon the Fiscall, without attending the answer to his former question; asked what the Iaponers should haue had for their reward. Collins answered, 1000. Ryals a peece. Lastly, he asked him, when this plot should haue bin effected. Whereunto although hee answered him nothing (not knowing what to deuise vpon the sodaine) yet he was dismissed, and very glad to come cleere of the torture, though with certain beleeve that he should die for this his Confession. Next, was Samuel Colson brought in, being newly arriued from Hitto, as is before touched, & was the same day brought to the torture, who, for feare of the paine wherewith he saw Collins come out, in such a case, that his eyes were almost blowne out of his head with the torment of water; chose rather to confesse all they asked him: and so was quickly dismissed, comming out weeping, lamenting, & protesting his innocencie. Then was John Clarke, that came with Colson from Hitto, fetcht in, and a litle after was heard (by the rest that were without in the Hall) to cry out amaine. They tortured him with water & with fire, by the space of 2. houres. The maner of his torture (as also of Johnsons & Tomsons) was as followeth: First, they hoised him vp by the hands with a cord on a large doore, where they made him fast vpon 2. staples of Iron; fixt on both sides, at the top of the doore posts, haling his hands one from the other as wide as they could stretch. Being thus made fast, his feet hung 2. foot from the ground, which also they stretcht asunder as farre

as they would retch, and so made them fast beneath vnto the doore-trees on each side. Then they bound a cloth about his necke and face so close, that little or no water could goe by. That done, They powred the water softly vpon his head vntill the cloth was full, vp to the mouth and nostrils, and somewhat higher; so that hee could not draw breath, but hee must withall sucke in the water: which being still continued to be powred in softly, forced all his inward parts, came out of his Nose, Eares, and Eyes, and often as it were stifling and choaking him, at length tooke away his breath, and brought him to a swoone or fainting. Then they tooke him quickly downe, and made him vomit vp the water. Being a little recouered, they triced him vp againe, and powred in the water as before, eftsfoones taking him downe as he seemed to be stifled. In this manner they handled him three or foure seuerall times with water, till his bodie was swolne twice or thrice as bigge as before, his cheekes like great Bladders, and his eies staring and strutting out beyond his forehead: yet all this hee bare, without confessing any thing; insomuch as the Fiscall and tormentors reuiled him, saying that he was a Deuill, and no man, or surely was a Witch, at least had some charme about him, or was enchanted, that he could beare so much. Wherefore they cut off his haire very short, as supposing he had some Witchcraft hidden therein. Afterwards they hoised him vp againe as before, and then burnt him with lighted Candles in the bottome of his feete, vntill the fat dropt out the Candles; yet then applyed they fresh lights vnto him. They burnt him also vnder the elbowes, & in the palmes of the hands; likewise vnder the arme-pits, vntil his inwards might be euidently seene. At last, when they saw he could of himselfe make no handsome confession, then they led him along with questions of particular circumstances, by themselves framed. Being thus wearied and ouercome by the torment; he answered, yea to whatsoeuer they asked: whereby they drew from him a bodie of a confession to this effect; to wit, That Captaine Towersson had vpon New-yeeres day last before, sworne all the English at Amboyna to bee secret and assistant to a plot that hee had projected, with the helpe of the Iaponers, to surprize the Castle, and to put the Gouernour and the rest of the Dutch to death.

Hauiug thus martyred this poore man, they sent him out by foure Blacks; who carried him betweene them to a Dungeon, where he lay five or six daies without any Chirurgion to dresse him, vntill (his flesh being putrified) great Maggots dropt and crept from him in a most lothsome and noysome manner. Thus they finished their Sabbath daies worke; and it growing now darke, sent the rest of the English (that came that day from Huto, and till then attended in the Hall) first to the Smiths shop, where they were loaden with Irons, and then to the same lothsome Dungeon where Clarke and the rest were, accompanied with the poore Iaponers, lying in the putrification of their tortures. The next morning being Munday the 17. of February, old Stile, William Grigs and John Fardo, with certaine Iaponers, were brought into the place of examination. The Iaponers were first cruelly tortured to accuse Grigs; which at last they did: and Grigs to auoid the like torture, confessed all that the Fiscall demanded. By and by the like also was done by John Fardo, and other Iaponers: but Fardo himselfe endured the torture of water, and at last confessed whatsoeuer the Fiscall asked him; and so was sent backe to Prison.

I haue no heart to proceed. In like manner John Beomont, George Sharrock, William Webber, Gabriell Towersson, John Wetherall, John Powle, Thomas Ladbuoke, Ephraim Ramsey, John Sadler, were examined by torture of the mind or bodie, or both. The Storie is fresh and lately printed, and long, to which I referre the Reader. Ten suffered, viz. Mon. Towersson, Colson, Thomson, Johnson, Wetherall, Clarke, Grigs, Fardo, Price, Browne; all protesting their innocencie.

They had prepared a Cloth of blacke Veluet for Captaine Towersson his bodie to fall vpon; which being stained and defaced with his blood, they afterwards put to the account of the English Company.

At the instant of the execution, there arose a great darknesse, with a sudden and violent gust of wind and tempest; whereby two of the Dutch ships, riding in the Harbour, were driuen from their Anchors, and with great labour and difficultie saued from the Rockes. Within a few dayes after, one William Dunckin, who had told the Gouernour, That Robert Browne the English Tailour, had a few moneths before told him, he hoped; that the English should haue as much to doe in the Castle of Amboyna, as the Dutch; This fellow comming vpon an Euening to the Graue where the English were buried, being all (saue Captaine Towersson) in one pit, fell downe vpon the Graue; and hauing lien there awhile, rose vp againe starke madde, and so continued two or three dayes together, and then died. Forthwith also fell a new sicknesse at Amboyna, which swept away about a thousand people, Dutch and Amboyner: in the space wherein, there vsually died not aboute thirtie at other Seasons. These signes were by the suruiuing English referred to the confident prediction of Emanuel Tomson aboue-named, and were by the *Amboyner*s interpreted as a token of the wrath of God for this barbarous tyrannie of the Hollanders.

The manifold testimonies of their innocencie by their owne writings before their death, deuout and deep protestations at their death; desire also to receiue the Sacrament to ratifie the same, and lastly the prooffe thereof by many reasons, with the Obiections answered; the Reader may at large see in the Booke set forth by the Company. Out of which for perfecting our Banda Relations, I haue added this.

But he could not see the thirtieth Article, which orders, that all disputes that cannot be decided by the Councell of defence, should be remitted into Europe; first, to the two Companies there; and in default of their agreement to the King and States. Why then was not this dispute so proceeded in? There is nothing in the former Articles, to limit the Councell of defence; and this generall Article appeareth to be added by way of ampliacion, to provide for that which was not particularly and expressely cared for in the former. Which is most plaine by the words of the explanation vpon this thirtieth Article, agreed vpon at the first, and subscribed by the Commissioners on both sides, Anno 1619. where this course of proceeding is expressely directed, not only in disputes about the meaning of the Articles, but also about any other matter happening in their common aboad. Since which also the Kings Maiestie hath, vpon a smaller occasion then the life of his Subiects, cleerely declared himselfe in the point of Souereigntie; That both Nations in the Indies should wholly lay aside al pretence therof. Which Declaration was sent to the Lords States General, & by them accepted before this bloudie butcherie was executed. But if it were granted, that the Hollanders are absolute Lords of their partners the English in those parts, without respect to the Treatie, yet at least the Hollanders in Amboyna, are bound to obserue the Lawes of the vnited Prouinces; for so saith this Authour himselfe. Doe these allow to begin the Processe at the torture, and to bring persons of honest fame to the Racke, vpon others confession made in the torture? Do their Lawes allow of the leading Interrogatories aboue mentioned, to direct the Prisoner what to say, to auoid the torture? Where, in the vnited Prouinces, is that drowning with water, in vse? or the torture with fire, vsed to Johnson, Tomson, and Clarke? or especially the splitting of their toes, and launcing of the brest, and putting in Gun-powder, and then firing the same, whereby the bodie is not left intire, neither for innocencie, nor execution? Clarke and Tomson were both faine to bee carried to their execution, though they were tortured many dayes before.

Lastly, their confessions were contradictory, apparantly false, and of things impossible to bee done, much lesse practised before by the said parties; and therefore ought not by their Law to haue beene beleueed, nor the Prisoners to haue beene condemned thereupon, without other sufficient Indicia, or euidence besides.

In the last place, this Author handleth the excesse of the torture whereof (hee taketh notice) there is much complaint in England; and saith, That the Lords States Generall take great care to enforme themselves of all the passages of this busines; and to that end haue desired to see all the Letters, Pieces, and Papers that concerne this Processe: by which it appeareth not, that there was any cruell torture vsed. But suppose the acts make no mention of them; is it any maruell that the Authors of this murtherous and tyrannous Processe, being themselves the persons that also formed the Acts would omit those things that made against them? It is to bee presumed also, that the Acts kept by their people at Poloway in Banda, haue omitted many things of their Processe, against the poore Polaroones, whom in August 1622. being about fixe monethes before this execution of the English, their Gouvernour there vsed in like sort, as the Gouvernour of Amboyna did the English, and gaue him a modell and precedent of this Processe; which it will not be amisse to relate briefly, because this Authour, in the next place alleageth the mercifull disposition of the Netherlands Nation in generall; to inferre thence, that it is therefore vnlikely, that their Gouvernour at Amboyna was so cruell, as is reported in England.

Polaroon one of the Ilands of Banda, was in possession of the English at the time of the Treatie, Anno 1619. and by the agreement was to remaine theirs. After the Treatie came vnto the Indies, the Hollanders forbore publishing thereof in the Ilands of Banda, vntill they had taken Polaroon. But, knowing that it must be restored againe, according to the Treatie, they first take all courses to make the Iland little or nothing worth: they demolish and deface the Buildings, transplant the Nutmeg-trees, plucking them vp by the Roots, and carrying them into their owne Ilands of Nera and of Poloway, there to be planted for themselves; and at last finde a meanes to dispeople the Iland, and so leaue it so, as the English might make no vse of it, worth their charge of keeping; and that vpon this occasion: There was a young man, the Sonne of an Orankey, or a Gentleman in Polaroon, that had committed Felonie; for which, by the Lawes of his Countrey, hee was to die. This fellow, to saue his life, fled to another Iland of Banda, called Rosfinging, and there turned Christian: but quickly vnderstanding, that that would not make him safe from punishment, hee went backe secretly to his owne Countrey of Polaroon; and, hauing lurked there a few dayes, tooke his passage for Nera, another Iland where the Dutch haue a Fort; and told the Dutch Gouvernour, that the Orankeyes of Polaroon had conspired to massacre the Dutch as well at Polaroon, as at Poloway, with helpe of the people of Seran, that should send ouer thirtie Curricuries for that purpose. Immediately vpon this Indicium of this Malefactor, certaine Prowes or Fisherboates of the Polaroones, that were fishing at Poloway, were seized, and the people made Prisoners. Command was sent by the Dutch Gouvernour to Polaroon, that the Orankeyes should come ouer to him, that there might be further inquisition made of this matter.

The Priest of the Polaroons and seuentie Orankeyes instantly tooke a Prow or small Vessell of their owne, and imbarcked themselves for Poloway. As they were at Sea, and yet out of the sight of the Dutch Castle, they were met by a Fisher-boat of Bandanexes, and told, how all the rest were apprehended; and that, if they went to Poloway, they were all but dead men. Neuerthelesse, the Priest and the rest, although they had space and meanes to haue escaped to Seran and other places safe enough from the Hollanders, yet were so confident of their innocencie, that they would needs to Poloway to purge themselves. Where, as soone as they were arrived, they were instantly carried Prisoners to the Castle: and withall the Gouernour, with a force of two hundred men, went presently for Polaroon; whence he fetched all the rest of the Orankeyes, and brought them Prisoners to the same Castle. As soone as they were come, they were presently brought to the torture of Water and fire, euen in the same sort as our people were afterward at Amboyna; onely herein differing, that of those of Poloway, two were so tortured, that they died in their tortures: the rest being one hundred sixtie two persons, were all vpon their owne forced confessions, condemned and executed. The Priest when he came to the place of execution, spake these words in the Mallayan Tongue: All yee, great and small, rich and poore, black and white, looke to it: we haue committed no fault. And when hee would haue spoken more, hee was taken by the hands and feet, laid along, and cut in two by the middle with a Sword. Forthwith, the Gouernour caused the wiues, children, and slaues of those of Polaroon, to be all carried out of the Iland, and distributed in other Ilands subiect to the Dutch; and so haue made a cleere Countrey for the English; where they may both plant and gather themselves destitute of the helpe of any of the Countrey people; without whom, neither the English nor Hollanders can maintaine their Trade in the Indies. And yet this is not heere recited, to the end thereby to charge the Neetherlands Nation with those cruell proceedings, but the persons themselves, that haue committed those barbarous Tyrannies: Who, if we shall beleue an Authour of their owne, are not of the best of that Nation. For the Maiores (as this Authour sayes) vse the Indies as a Tucht-house or Bridewell, to manage their unruly and vnthrifte children and kindred; whom when they cannot rule and order at home, they send to the Indies, where they are preferred to Offices and places of Gouernment. Yea, saith he, they preferre such to be Fiscals there, as neuer saw Studie nor Law. So that it is no maruell, that such persons proceed not with that Iustice and moderation as is vsed generally in the Low Countries, by the choice of the Nation there. And this agreeth well with the report of our Merchants of credit, that came lately from Amboyna; who auerre, that excepting the Gouernour himselfe, who is well stept in yeeres, of the rest of the Councell there, as well the Fiscall, as others, there was scarce any that had haire on their faces, yea, that most of them are lewd drunken debauched persons; and yet must be Iudges as well of our English, as the poore Indians there.

WE haue bin long enough perplexed with viewing Easterne Tragedies. Let vs now turne our Eyes Westward. And lest any should thinke that in hatred of the Dutch Name I haue published the last, or any of the former Relations of bad dealing with the English: I haue heere added this that may make for their Honour, an Act of Hostilitie against a knowne Enemy: as also euery where in this Worke I haue not wittingly omitted, either publike Act, Fleet, Voyage, or Victorie of theirs, which might honour their Nation (yea if I found any particular Act of kindnesse, or any kinder person to the English Name and Nation, I haue bene readie to mention the same) so farre as agreeth with our Historie. I cannot make the East Indian Dutch Case good, nor would I make the European bad, raising a Nationall quarrell (which God forbid, and which the Demill there sought) out of a personate.

CHAP. XVII.

A true description of the Bay Todos los Santos in Brasill, and taking the Towne Saluador by the Admirall Master IACOB

WILKINS 1624.

He Bay of Todos los Santos, in the Land of Brasill is situated vpon thirteene degrees of Southerly Latitude an hundred leagues above Pharnambuco. It is the place at which the Gouernour, the Bishop, and the Auditor Generall of all the Coasts of Brasill are resident. This place is most inhabited: it hath three Townes: the one is neere to the Barra, or comming in, and is called Villa vera, which is the first that was built in this Iurisdiction.

The second is the Towne called Saluador or Saujour, in English) builded by Thomas de Sosa, and and foure leagues thence Landwards in, lyeth the Village Paripe. It hath many Sugar-mills, although the Inhabitants get their livings for the most part by Cotton.

Within the Towne are five Churches and one Colledge of the Iesuits, of which are some eightie in the Towne. The Bay is some three leagues large, and stretched some fiftene Leagues Landwards in. It hath many small Islands which yeeld great store of Cotton. It is diuided into seuerall parts, and hath many branches in which the Inhabitants vie small Barkes.

The Bay is (when the water is reasonable high) in some places, tweloe, eightene, and twentie fathome deepe, and lyeth inwards North North-west. On the corner of it is a Castle built, which is called Saint Antonio, neere which lyeth a Banke which reacheth a league into the Sea Southeastward. When the wind bloweth very strong, the water maketh there great noyse: but there is no danger for the ships, seeing it is five or six fathome deepe, and the ground is sand. The corner on which Saint Antonio standeth, is but a league distant from the Towne. The high ships Land commonly rust against the great Church.

Now for the taking of the same by the Dutch, it is thus both related and in Picture also (here omitted) described.

The High and Mightie States, with the aduise of his Excellencie the Prince of Orange, erected a West India Company, and prepared a Nauie of aboute thirtie ships strong, of which Master Jacob Wilkins was chosen Admirall, and the Lord of Dort appointed to be Generall.

This Fleet put to Sea the two and twentieth of December, in the last yeere 1623. and the Island of Saint Vincent (which is one of the Islands of Cabo Verde) being appointed to bee the Rendezuous, all the ships of the Fleete met there, except that in which the Generall was, who came to Sierra Lione: And the Fleet hauing tarried there the space of five weekes, it departed on the fixe and twentieth day of March thence, and came on the eighth of May before the Bay of Todos los Santos, in which he might haue sailed the same night, but hee tarried, for good reasons and considerations, till it was day, and vsed this stratagem or policie, namely: hee put all the Souldiers on foure of the greatest and best shippes, and caused their Ensignes on the other still to bee displayed. The same day hee landed fiftene hundred men with two light Peeces called Dragons, who went in the night time into a small Wood which lyeth neere to the Towne.

And the Admirall commanded afterwards that foure ships should saile directly to the Towne and lie against the batterie, which they did, and came so neere to it that they touched ground; whereupon they shot very fiercely, both vpon the Towne and the batterie, from whence the Enemy answered them in the same tune, and shot amongst other, one of our Captaines named Gedulthaber. The Captaine Peter Freeckson of Enchuyssen behaued himselfe amongst the rest very valiantly, to the great admiration of all them that saw him: And all the others vsed likewise there best endeouours; but seeing that both the Ordnance of the Towne, and the battery played so cruelly vpon them, they resolued to land some men with their Boats to surprise the batterie, although it was defended by two hundred men, and to make the Ordnance vseruiceable. Which charge being vndertaken by the Viceadmirall Peter Petersson Heyn, hee went with eight Boates, or Sloopes (which were well furnished with Men, Muskets, Skeanes, Hammers, and Nails) directly to the battery, and as soone as our men mounted vpon the same, the enemies fled through the water to the Towne. Whereupon our Vice-Admirall hauing nayled the Ordnance vpon it, and cast it downe, hee returned againe with all his men to the ships without receiuing any damage by the Ordnance of the Towne which was continually displaid against him. Clayes Gerrisson Vos was not one of the least that shewed themselves valorous in this Enterprise.

The next day being the ninth of May, it was resolued that the Towne should bee assaulted on two sides, namely, from the ships by the Mariners, and out of the Wood by the Souldiers. But the Townesmen hauing had the night before an allarme or two giuen vnto them by reason of the Souldiers which were come into the Wood, as they learned, they fled all out of the Towne with the Archbishop, and in the morning when our forces thought to scale the wals of the Towne, there appeared an old man, who said that all the Burgers were runne away, and opened the gate: At which time Captaine Vogelsanck of Amsterdam marcht first into the Towne with his Companie, and the other following him, they beset the Market and other passages, and afterwards when they mistrusted no enemy they began to pillage, and euery one got rich prizes, or bootie of Gold Chaines, Duckets, Rials of eight, gilded and siluered Rapiers, Swords and Daggers, besides great store of rich apparell, of which there was such abundance, that euery Souldier is prouided with it, as if he were a Captaine: They found likewise at their arriual the Tables yet couered in the Cloyster, and many other places, and fell to the meate and drinke on them. But because no excesse should be committed, some hundred Pipes or Vessels of Wine were presently knockt in pieces.

All the houses were almost all as Palaces, and adorned and furnished with rich household-stuffe, of which euery one tooke as much as he could carrie. When the pillage was done there were many inferiour Souldiers that durst venture fortie and fiftie pieces of eight Rials, (which amount to foure shillings and six-pence) at a set or gaine. And there are many Officers, which haue gotten foureene thousand and fifteene thousand Guilders for their owne priuate bootie, and goe with Chaines of Gold about their necks, whereby it appeareth that a man may euen in one houre grow rich in those parts.

The Gouernour being with his Seruants and yet armed in his Palace, the Vice-Admirall caused him to lay his Armes downe, and tooke him as his Prisoner. Amongst the other booties and prizes that were found in the Church, there was a Crucifixe of Silver some foure foot long, with the Image of our Sauour being made of Gold, and was a foote and a halfe long.

When all the tumult was ceased, and all things were put in order, namely on the twelfth of May, a Preacher of Zealand gaue in the great Church the Almighty thanks for such a great Victory; and on the same day came the Lord of Dore into the Bay, when hee had wandred some five weekes about it.

And in the meane time was the Ship de Vos (or Fox in English) laden with foure hundred Chests of Sugar, besides great store of Tobacco, and Hydes, and being sent thence, the Shipper of it, namely, the valourous Claes Gerritsson Vos, arriued the five and twentieth of August, with the same in the Vnited Provinces, and brought this good tydings to his Countrey-men.

Euen before the departure of this Shipper, there arriued yet in the Bay afore mentioned, a small Ship that came with the Promedidor, (or Providor) of the Iesuites, with a great summe of money that was gathered for them that are of his Order; and hee being seized vpon, the money was presently made prize. On the Castles which the Enemie forsooke, were left five and fortie Pieces of Brasse. There was also presently order giuen for the demolishing of the Castle that was seated neere the Sea, and for the fortification of the Towne. The goods which are taken and the remainder of the Prizes, are to bee brought into the Lion-Countries with other Ships.

As soone as this tyding came into the Vnited Provinces, there were on a sodaine many Souldiers leauied to goe to the Bay afore mentioned, with a Fleet that lay readie for the same purpose, seeing that there are yet many other places to bee taken, besides rich Booties and Prizes.

There is also News of great preparations in Spaine to recouer this losse, as also, of another famous Act of the Hollanders commanded by L'Hermit, which are said to haue taken Lirma the chiefe Citie in Peru, and other places on the Peruan Coast: the old Enemy of the Spaniard, viz. the people of Chili being ioynd with the Dutch. If this bee true, it is likely to proue a Costly warre to the Spaniard, and Honourable to the Dutch. For as the Spanish Treasure hath long kept Europe in action, so Peru is their chiefe Mine, and Chili their most preuayling American Enemy, which hath not onely not lost, but gotten of them now above fiftie yeares together, not Cities and Forts alone, but Martall skill, Armes, and Horses, not fearing man to man to dare and entertaine the proudest. Besides, Chili it selfe is the richest Countrey for Gold, knowne in America.
